By the "Cat" House Route.

There was once a round dollar in the jeans of Farmer Jones, which tunefully jingled with a similar bunch of "bones." And farmer Jones that same plunk took and paid a debt he owed; and so it went a traveling on a debtor lightening road. It visited the editor, who sent it on to Gray who owed a bill to Jenkins, and he paid the same that day. And Jenkins bought goloshes for to keep his "tootsies" dry and the shoe man paid a grocer by the gentle name of Frye, now, Frye, who needed flour paid it over to the mill, which, wanting wheat for grinding, paid it back to Jones' "till." And thus it was Jones' dollar, after paying debts a score, went 'round the whole home circuit some more—and then some more. But one day from a 'cat house' in Chicago or Kay See, there came a whalin' booklet, most wondrous strange to see. It had a million pictures, it told a million tales, and it had for sale most everything, from nutmegs up to whales. It said the retail merchant was a robber in disguise, and it proved that Ananias was no longer prince of lies. And Jones, he read that volume and reveled in the same. He swallowed all it told him and he went against the game. He sent the same round dollar for a "skim milk" butter churn; he got it, and he found it wasn't worth a tinker's dern. The carpet for the parlor, the "all wool" suit for Bill—he found was three parts shoddy and the rest in good was nil. And the swell fall hat for Susie, couched in words so sweet and clear was—breathe the whisper gently—of a vintage yester-year. And so the good round dollar, and others of the same, went off the old home circuit against the "cat house" game. The butcher and the banker, the tax collector, too; the grocer and the miller, and others not a few, no longer saw the dollar on its debt removing way. It had joined the "cat" house profits—it had gone and gone to stay.—Manufacturer and Merchant.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Odell left last Monday for Richmond, Va., where they will make their future home. Mr. Odell has accepted a position as superintendent of a large poultry farm, a work for which he is peculiarly adapted and we bespeak success for him.

According to the reports a gang of sharpers are working through the state with a scheme to sell school boards a set of books on agriculture, claiming that they were required by the law recently enacted. The grafters ask a high price for the books and those in a position to know, say the books are not worth a fourth of the price asked. County superintendents have been notified to be on the look-out for them.

There are a few little things the patrons of rural routes can do that will greatly lessen the hardships of faithful mail carriers during cold winter months, when they are obliged to go out and cover their respective routes regardless of the weather conditions. The hardest thing the carrier has to contend with in winter is bad roads. Keep the roads clear from drifts so the carrier can reach you on time. Also keep the snow away from the boxes. Keep your name plainly printed on the box so he can read it. Don't put postage money in the box, but keep a supply of stamps on hand. Of course he gets paid for his work, but remember that he saves you much time and trouble to get your mail every day. Therefore show him every little favor you can. He will appreciate it.

Prince Louis of Battenberg contributes to the Woman's Home Companion for January the only signed article that he has given to any American publication—"Diplomacy—A New Field of Endeavor for the American Woman." Another notable article is "Why Do We Read?" by Jerome K. Jerome. "A Royal Love Match" tells how the Crown Prince of Germany won his bride. There are two lively Western stories, "The Princess and the Punter," by William McLeod Rame, and "The Trail of the Billy Doo," by William Wallace Cook, and two good Eastern love stories, the dainty "Wooing of Betty," by Zora Gale, and the strong "When Love and Duty Meet," by May Ellis Nichols. Philadelphia's "Shooters' Day" is elaborately illustrated with photographs, and "How Wall Street Celebrates New Year's" is another New Year specialty. The fashion household and architectural features are bright and timely as usual. Published by the Crowell Publishing Company, Springfield, Ohio; one dollar a year; ten cents a copy.
