Herbert Leon Cope.

Mr. Cope can hardly be labelled. He is not merely an entertainer, nor does he claim to be a lecturer. He is really both in one. Every entertainment is a lecture and there is a serious purpose back of all his fun. Mr. Cope's style is peculiarly his own. He has the rare faculty of being extremely funny without insinuation or vulgarity, or descending to the province of the buffoon. With a delightful contrast of the sublime and the ludicrous, he develops rare entertainment out of the absurdities, inconsistencies and excesses of human nature, taking his models from life. His lecture-entertainments are a resistless medley of unadulterated fun, solid common sense, classic beauty and magnetic pathos, all tinged with the philosophy and religion of life. During the past two seasons Mr. Cope has filled engagements in four hundred and twenty-three different cities and towns, and during the summer months he appeared at seventeen of the leading Chautauquas. The demand for return engagements by Mr. Cope excels anything we have known in the entertainment line. He has given as high as nine return engagements to practically the same audience. It is this continued demand for return dates that has given him his sobriquet, "Maker of the Smile That Won't Come Off." His record with us indicates a popularity unequalled by any lecturer or entertainer now appearing before American audiences.

Mr. Cope will appear at the Congregational church in this city, on Thursday evening, March 24.

Motives For Diverting Primary School Fund.

It is the custom among certain metropolitan sheets just now to charge all sorts of paccadillos and every financial trouble which the state or any school district may have to the primary school fund, says the Gladwin Record, edited by Senator Foster. The state is short of money. It is pointed out that if specific taxes were used for the defraying of state expenses instead of for schools there would be money to spare in the state treasury. The cat in the bag that these people conceal is the fact that this course would obviate the necessity of state officials giving account to the people of their doings with public money. How nice this would be for extravagant state officials and the Glaziers of the future!

To create prejudice against the primary school fund these people are constantly telling of large hoards accumulated by school districts for which the districts have no use. An instance of this kind was recently reported from Gladwin county and published in every daily in the state. It was said that a district treasurer was recklessly loaning primary school funds to the people of his district.

An investigation showed that this particular school district had a bonded indebtedness, and thriftily undertook to create a sinking fund to take care of the same when it should become due. At a school district meeting the treasurer was authorized to loan the money on real estate mortgage to certain parties, and did so, at a rate of interest which paid the interest on the bonds. Now, the district had no authority to make loans on mortgages, so that the whole action was unlawful. But one cannot help commending the good sense of the district in providing for its indebtedness. Their lack of knowledge of law is to be deplored, but no one will grow enthusiastic over the wisdom of the law which condemns the school district for what it did.

Sales of delinquent tax lands and state tax homestead lands have put large sums in the school treasuries of Gladwin county. Had it not been for this it is doubtful if any school district would have had any surplus funds. An auditor sent out by the department of public instruction found one school treasurer a defaulter. This district had received large sums of money from delinquent tax lands. Yet we do not know that this is any argument why school districts should be deprived of any money raised for school purposes.

The opponents of our primary school system all have some sinister object in view in their efforts to divert primary school funds to the payment of state expenses. Most of them either have pet schemes for the state to finance, or else have greedy hands wide open to catch the droppings from the state treasury.

Agriculture in Michigan Schools.

Many of the states have introduced, or are debating the policy of introducing, agriculture into the schools, and many prominent educators are awaiting the outcome of this new turn of popular education with bated breath. The step is one which it is hard to value rightly at this early stage, and many claim wonderful things for this new idea of agriculture in the common schools, while the other faction generally claim that the pendulum has swung to the extreme. There are very sound arguments on either side and it would take a prophetic look into the future twenty years to tell what will be the exact outcome. One thing that almost everybody is agreed on is that agriculture, if it be taught at all, should be taught in the rural schools.

Michigan has entered upon the policy of introducing a course of agriculture into the high school, and six of them are giving the work this year. The course covers agricultural botany in the ninth grade, crops and horticulture in the tenth grade, live stock and soils in the eleventh grade and animal breeding and feeding and farm management in the twelfth grade. Two of these schools are giving the work in the ninth, tenth and eleventh grades. The average number of students taking the agricultural studies in the six schools is thirty-two, the highest number of students in any school being forty-six, the lowest twenty-five. In character, the study is divided about equally between text-book work and field and laboratory practice. Actual experiments and observations are made in each of the subjects studied. Each of these schools employ a special instructor for the subject of agriculture, who has received his training at the Michigan Agricultural College. The salaries paid range from seven hundred to nine hundred dollars. In each case the instructor teaches one or two subjects in the regular high school course. The added expense for laboratory facilities and material does not exceed fifty dollars a year. In each case special books on the various agricultural subjects are provided in the school libraries.

In addition to the regular work of the pupils, a special course is arranged during the winter months for the farmers of the surrounding country. Courses are presented by the regular instructors in the high school, supplemented by lectures by members of the faculty of the agricultural college. Some of these schools have been established three years and they are giving every satisfaction in the vicinities where they are located. At first some of the farmers in the communities were against the work, but after they saw what was being accomplished they became ardent advocates of it.

The growth of the school system in Michigan has been simply an evolution. In the early days the school-houses were the traditional little red-room buildings, and these were equipped on a small scale for a limited number of subjects to be taught. The growth has been of more school-buildings of the same type, rather than of additions and improvements of the initial houses. This has been simply continued by force of circumstances as the population increased, until now there is a wooden, one or two room building in at least every district.

One of the changes coming into vogue is consolidation. There are now at least four consolidated schools in the state, and a number that will be consolidated this year. The greatest benefit will come, I believe, under the "township unit system" which means that each township will constitute one district, with one board of education, a central high school of twelve grades, as many primary schools as are needed at properly located points in the township, expert supervision and better housing and equipment.

The consolidation of two or more districts in isolated instances may be of some value, but if we are to obtain adequate results the consolidation should at least go far enough to put one high school within reach of every township. For instance, in one Michigan county there is a township composed of ten school districts with something like three hundred and fifty pupils on the school census. Of this number ninety are between the ages of fourteen and eighteen, or high school age, and about forty of these ninety are able to attend such a school. The others are either pursuing an indifferent course offered as an extra in the nearest primary school or are not attending school at all. The particular conditions are typical of the state in general, and the most pitiable part of it is that which the parents of the forty are able to send their children away from home to school, the lack of ability to do so on the part of parents of the other fifty, who are equally as bright and should be given privileges that are equal, closes the door of opportunity to them.

Prof. Walter H. French, who holds the chair of agricultural education at the Michigan Agricultural College, in referring to the above-mentioned township said, "The remedy for the conditions now existing, it seems to me, is to unite the whole territory of that township into one school district and establish near or at the center of the township a school for the lower grades and also a high school for the instruction of all children above the sixth grade, and construct an adequate building. Then discontinue the use of all the present school-buildings except four, which are conveniently located toward the corners of the township, and in these instruction for the younger children, or those below the sixth grade, could be given by one teacher, and these pupils when they have passed the sixth grade would go to the central school.

This plan would reduce the cost of transportation to the minimum, and through consolidation, not simply of territory, but of interest of the people and of the products of taxation, the people of that township would accomplish the thorough practical training of all the children of the township almost at their own doors."

Many are objecting to the abandonment of the old school-building, claiming that it will raise the taxes too high to sell the old houses and erect a new one; others will add to oppose the reformation because of the seeming great expense of hauling the children to the central school. There are good arguments on both sides of these questions and local conditions have much to do with determining them.—E. B. Reid in Farm and Fireside.

Possibly your separator is old and out-of-date; capacity too small; repair bills large; won't skim clean, or is one of the "cheap kind," and has the "mail order goods distemper." Don't worry along under such conditions. Time's too valuable, cream too expensive. Come in and see the 1910 Model that won GRAND PRIZE at Seattle. Learn the liberal allowance we make on old separators and you won't use your old machine a day longer.

Cheboygan's Offer.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the North-eastern Michigan Development Bureau held at Alpena last Monday, Cheboygan made a strong play to take the headquarters of the North-eastern Michigan Development Bureau away from Bay City. Cheboygan was one of the counties which showed some jealousy when Bay City was selected, and it has put up a stiff proposition which must be met by Bay City if the bureau is to have its office there. The Cheboygan offer is that it will furnish, free of charge for one year, a commodious office, heat, light, gas and telephone service, will supply legal advice on all matters pertaining to the bureau free of charge, and will give outright, the necessary furniture, including typewriter, desks chairs and everything necessary to equip the office in a modern and comfortable manner.

The committee has accepted the offer, conditionally. The motion to accept was made by Frank Buell, of Bay City, and the condition provided is that unless Bay City makes just as liberal an offer the Cheboygan proposition will be accepted.

The executive committee appointed Secretary T. F. Marston, of Bay City, manager of the bureau. O. F. Barnes, of Crawford, was appointed treasurer in place of R. Hanson, of Grayling, who resigned because his business would call him out of the state a large part of the time. An auditing committee was appointed as follows: H. A. Savage, Saginaw; J. Burt Kiely, Roscommon, and W. G. MacEdwards, Bay City.

"The business men of Bay City will have to meet Cheboygan's offer if they want to keep the bureau headquarters here," declared Manager Marston. "The work of the bureau is important, and it is a good thing for any city to be known as its headquarters. I hope the business men of Bay City are fully awake to the importance of keeping it here."

Next Fall's Fair.

The directors of the Agricultural Society met last Saturday and set the dates for the next annual fair for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, September 27th, 28th and 29. This is two weeks later than the fair has been held for the past few years, and it is believed that it will give the farmers a better opportunity to make exhibits as their harvest will have been about completed.

The executive committee were instructed to issue their membership tickets at once and to make a thorough canvass of the county, thus being able to have an idea of what money they will be able to expend in making the fair of more than ordinary interest this year by the securing of special attractions. The people of the county will be urged to purchase tickets in advance and assist in making the next fair an assured success. There is no valid reason why the people of the county should not unite and assist the association in this way. It is only the small of a dollar to each one of you but it will give the fair association the guarantee that you want to see it a success and allow the officers to go ahead and arrange a program which will be worth going to see.

The premium list was slightly increased from last year and the executive committee were authorized to complete further arrangements.

James Leonard, who was elected secretary at the annual meeting, declined to serve and the directors re-elected Charles T. Prescott, who has given that position careful attention for a number of years.
