Another Pioneer Gone.

Nelson Stevens, a well-known and highly respected pioneer of this county, died at his home in Wilber, Thursday, July 21. The deceased was born in Jefferson county, New York, January 10, 1828. He came to Michigan with his parents in 1837, the family settling on a farm near where the village of Holly now stands, at that time a dense forest. Here young Stevens grew to manhood. He was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Dexter, in Livingston county who shared with him his joys and sorrows until her death in June 1897. He moved his family to this county in the spring of 1868. The family located on the farm in Wilber in 1876. Of the family of two sons and one daughter, only Milo, with whom he resided, and one grand daughter, Cleavey Shiverly, remains. The old gentleman had enjoyed his usual good death, when he complained of pains funeral was held Sunday and was largely attended.

"Bigger and Better Than Ever."

This common catch phrase in the advertising of county fairs will this year be made a fact in connection with the Iosco County Fair, in so far as it is in the power of the fair officials to make it so. They make the fair worth seeing regardless of what the people of the county may electors of Iosco county that I am a cando in the way of exhibits.

The first of I have always been a republican, and these to be contracted for is "Rollo have always been a resident of Iosco the Limit," one of the most sensational out door acts eyer staged, and one that has been featured at many Tawas City, Mich. state and other big fairs during the past two years. This act alone is worth all it will cost to attend the fair. The performances will be given each day of the fair. Other special features are being secured.

This is prospective the greatest year for agricultural crops our county has eyer known, and there should be sufficient interest in the development of our county that every farmer within its borders would make at least one exhibit at the fair. If this is done Iosco county will receive the greatest boost possible to give her.

Woman's Home Companion for August.

The August issue of the Woman's Home Companion is called "The Good Time Number," and it lives up to that title in every particular, giving ideas for summer enjoyment of every sort. The fiction is of the light, happy variety with, in most instances, the atmosphere of vacation days charmingly depicted. "Mlle. Mystic," a midsummer comedy by Anna Steese Richardson. will doubtless be acted in many gardens during the summer, and a remarkably timely article on the Outdoor Play, by Walter Prichard Eaton, will help in a large measure to make al fresco theatricals the popular thing during the summer.

The prize-winning answers to the "Which Girl Would You Love" contest appear in this month's issue, and among the attractive and practical articles are "How to Build a House-Boat," by Charles E. Searle; and an article about Queen Mary, by Philip Hume Forster; and a boy's vacation letters to his mother.

The regular departments are summery and happy, the fashions are particularly fetching and the cookery is cool to eyen read about. To the Republican Electors of Iosco sobriquet of 'Gumsuckers,' on account

They are used in small bouquets for the corsage, for the muff and in the vase with which the "electrics" (those convenient autos that women drive for tlemselves)

Besides these intimate uses they have invaded the realm of the florist for table decorations and the demand for them has grown so fast that one uns upon corners and small spaces

The fad grew out of a curious new kind of artificial flower material, made of a fabric which looks and feels like the living flower tissue. May Flowers

By FRANK H. SWEET

"Butterflies, rainbow and tinsel, with thought only for the present moment, pleasure to the eye and senses," murmured Miss Ratcliffe, more to herself than to the professor. There was no envy in her voice, no sarcasm, only just philosophic speculation with perhaps a little wonder. And in her eyes was the same expression as when an alyzing a new bug.

The professor regarded her admir ingly, respectfully. There was much the same look of impersonal wisdom in their eyes, and much the same network of fine, studious wrinkles gathering along the base of their brows. They had delved into the depths of knowledge beyond self, and were now exploring for exploration's sake. And both were comparatively young, with untaxed strength and untried fields

But as the professor's gaze followed hers through the window to the butterflies and tinsel, there was an unusual wistfulness in his eyes. Miss Ratcliffe's profile was Grecian, without flaw. The professor never felt any scholastic diffidence in her presence, but was always calm and self-contained, as when immersed in his studes. But as his gaze followed her's out to the gayly-dressed girls swinging about the May pole, something very like longing showed in his eyes.

"They are very happy," he said; very happy, and joyous, and bright

"Yes, very happy," assented Miss Ratcliffe, "and very joyous and brightcolored, like butterflies. But they are young ladies now, and Miss Charlton is 20, I believe. The butterflies are irresponsible, however, and meaningless joy is their mission. But some of them have unusual ability, as Miss Charlton; and precious time is consumed in arranging tableaux and romping and swinging around a pole like herself, by working in a factory." "Yes," regretfully, "she is a girl of I deplore the scene out there. Life is not long enough to learn all that every one ought to know, and with Miss Charlton's abilities the idle hours could be made to yield a vast store of knowledge for either personal satisfaction or an extra means toward a livelihood."

"Sometimes I have felt lately that our lives may have lacked some of this color and idleness, and-and fun,' the voice was still gentle. "Of course we could not change our lives, even should we desire; but I-I think a ittle color added might make us hap-

"I have not felt that way at all," reurned Miss Ratcliffe, thoughtfully. 'Moreover, I feel that, as head of the school, Prof. West, you ought to go out and speak to the girls. They all have a strange liking for you, and would listen to no one else. It is a crucial time in their lives, and no better opportunity could be had than to advise them now, while they are dancing and singing around the pole, covered with their May flowers. Really, it, is a duty with you, professor." Prof. West rose reluctantly, an unnistakable color now in his face. "Well, if you really think so, Miss Ratcliffe," he said. "I-I-of course the school comes first.' As he crossed the lawn, the whirl ing girls paused for a moment to catch their breath. Then they caught sight of the handsome, strongly-built figure coming loward them, and several of the girls started forward. Miss Charlton alone did not advance. She was standing by herself a little to one side.
