For the first time in the history of the beet sugar industry in the United States, Michigan is in the top place as compared with the other states of the union. This year the production in Michigan is over 260 million pounds of granulated sugar, as against 212 millions last year. Colorado has been in the first rank for several years, but Michigan and California will be the leaders in 1911, with Michigan in column one. The past year has been the most successful and prosperous recorded in the sugar beet and the beet sugar line.
Herman Lange died very unexpectedly Wednesday evening March 8th, at his residence in this city from rheumatism of the heart. While feeling unwell for a couple of weeks, he had continued his work at the D. & M. shops until last Saturday night. About five o'clock that afternoon he was taken with a severe attack of rheumatism and grew steadily worse to the end. The deceased was about 37 years of age, and is survived by the widow and three children. The funeral will be held from the Zion Lutheran church Sunday afternoon.
The board of county canvassers were in session Wednesday canvassing the vote cast at the recent primary election for the nomination of circuit judge for the 23rd judicial circuit. The job was not a very arduous one, as the total number of votes cast in the county were only 181. Oscoda township cast the heaviest vote, a total of 21, while the third ward of East Tawas cast the smallest, only one man having sufficient interest to go to the polls. The entire vote was cast for Hon. Main J. Connine, who has been unanimously renominated and will be re-elected without opposition.

A newspaper may say a thousand nice things about a man and business; how he is decorating his windows, getting his new goods, expanding his business, etc., and the editor will never hear a word of thanks. But let the paper speak, even unintentionally, in a manner not complimentary, and the paper catches what Sherman said war was.—St. Ignace Republican News.
Your home paper is really a tireless letter writer, if nothing more. Week after week we prepare this printed letter for those living here and for those moved to some other locality, telling of deaths, births, marriages, the coming and going of people, of business efforts and progress, accidents, crops improvements, meetings, etc. In fact everything of importance and interest. If you should undertake to write a letter to an absent friend every week telling him all the news, you would get a faint idea of the task of preparing a newspaper. Many of our townspeople recognize this and take pleasure in giving us items of news. It helps us and is much appreciated.
There is nothing like the pure fresh air and sunlight to give vigor to the body and mind. Many persons make a great mistake in remaining indoors and broiling themselves to death all winter beside the red hot kitchen stove. They are mortally afraid of catching cold. The parents imagine that it is their duty to keep the children in the house continually as soon as the frost sears the leaves, and to see that the doors and windows are closed and next to air tight, day and night. The parents want healthy and robust children; but they employ entirely the wrong method. Let the children and everybody else, have all the life-giving ozone of the out-door air possible. The country people have this inestimable advantage over city people and they ought to be wise enough to make the best use of it. The fresh air is just as necessary in winter as it is in summer.

Do you know that of all the minor ailments colds are by far the most dangerous? It is not the cold itself that you need to fear, but the serious diseases that it often leads to. Most of these are known as germ diseases. Pneumonia and consumption are among them. Why not take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and cure your cold while you can? For sale by all dealers.

Attacks School Principal.
A severe attack on school principal, Chas. B. Allen, of Sylvania, Ga., is thus told by him. "For more than three years," he writes, "I suffered indescribable torture from rheumatism, liver and stomach trouble and diseased kidneys. All remedies failed till I used Electric Bitters, but four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me completely." Such results are common. Thousands bless them for curing stomach trouble, female complaints, kidney disorders, biliousness, and for new health and vigor. Try them. Only 50c at J. M. Wuggazer & Co.'s and Jas. E. Dillon's.

The Value of School Libraries.
BY ELSIE MUSOLF.
"What is the value of a school library?" is a question very often broached in school meetings. Most everybody has a different opinion as to the answer. Some say "I don't think there is any use for a school library. The pupils have their books and a teacher to explain things, and what more could they want? What is the use of the extra expense?" Others say, "Why should pupils read fiction in school? We send them there to study." Then again, "We pay the teachers to teach the children. Then what is the use of a school library?"
Only narrow-minded men give answers such as these. But what is the value of the school library? Is it of no value to the pupils? Stop and consider a minute and see if you can think of any good use. Most likely you will start something about the teacher being paid for telling the pupils what they need to know.
This is true of course. But don't you think the scholars would think school an awful drudgery if they had no interesting books in their school? Why do so many country lads hate school and quit as soon as possible? It must be that they do not find their work interesting, and who could, with nothing interesting to look forward to?
Of course, the scholars must not neglect their studies to read, so some kind of penalty must be provided for failing. But after they have studied they should be encouraged to read.
Very much care should be taken in selecting these books. Wild West stories and the like will never do. The stories should be both intellectual and interesting. These libraries should not only consist of fiction, but should also have good reference books. Don't you think a pupil will find his schooling more interesting if there are books wherein he can look up facts regarding the lesson or story he is reading? I think you will agree with me in this instance.
A few years ago country schools were almost all without libraries; but, thanks to the teachers, they are beginning to see the value of them. They get them in various ways. Sometimes the school boards are kind enough to furnish them, but often the teachers give entertainments, socials and other things in order to secure them. There are traveling libraries also that are of great help to the schools.
It will not be long before all schools will have libraries. Then probably more girls and boys can be persuaded to stay in school; for, at the present time every vocation requires an education in order that individuals can compete with one another in their every day life.
If you have trouble in getting rid of your cold you may know that you are not treating it properly. There is no reason why a cold should hang on for weeks and it will not if you take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For sale by all dealers.

Liberty is not the right to do as we please but the right to do right.

It is not the burden of today that crushes a man but the piling of tomorrow's burden upon that of today.

The season for baseball is at hand and it will be necessary for lovers of the game to furnish up their knowledge of baseball vernacular.

No one has a right to think of a future heaven for himself who does not try to make this world heaven-like for his fellows. Heaven is not for selfish people.

By far the greater part of the government revenues of every nation is spent for army and navy purposes to show other countries how greatly they are loved and trusted.

The best attitude we can display towards the discordant sounds and disagreeable sights in this world is not that of disgust and shrinking, but a disposition to remedy them.

It may seem a contradiction of terms, but it is a fact that the only enjoyment some people take is in being miserable. They take untold pleasure in recounting their aches and pains and in complaining about everything under the sun.

The advocates of women suffrage may "point with pride" to the influence of women as seen in the results of the recent elections in Seattle. The power which they there exerted will doubtless stimulate their efforts throughout the country for possession of the franchise.

Mr. Baer, the coal baron and railroad magnate who achieved notoriety during the great coal strike by his assertion that men such as he have a divine right to control business matters and the relations between capital and labor, is naturally very much put out that the railroads are not permitted to raise freight rates.

In dealing with most people who are in poverty it is not so much charity that is needed as a wise helping to a higher social and moral life. One great trouble with many poor people is their apathy which leads them to be content to exist rather than to live. To create a healthy discontent with their condition and awaken some ambition is oftentimes the most needful thing, as frequently it is also the most difficult thing to do.

In some sections of the country spring has come and in others it is dawning. It will now be in order for the enthusiasts for a national flower to begin their annual movement in behalf of their favorite flowers. The golden-rod, rose, clover, laurel, arbutus, and many others that beautify meadows, woods and roadside all have their merits and their earnest champions, but the country is so large and the climate so diverse that a national choice seems impossible. The nearest approach is the choice of a flower for each state, and that several of the states have already made.

The doing away with the double standard in morals and putting men and women upon the same level rests very largely with women themselves. So long as they condone evil in men and receive them socially into their good graces while they condemn and ostracize an erring woman, even though she may sincerely repent of her course, just so long will the double standard prevail. That this distinction as to the treatment of men and women exists to a very large extent no one can question. Self respect, fairness, and the spirit of love and forgiveness should combine to produce an equalization as to morals.

Whatever may be the disappointment by the railroads in the refusal of the Commerce Court to allow them to raise freight rates, there is no question as to the satisfaction of the shippers and the public generally. It may be taken for granted that the court thoroughly studied the question in all its bearings and that the decision will work no hardship to the roads. To be sure the railroads make a loud protest but there is no sign that any railroad president has lost a night's sleep over the matter. As to the statement some railroad officials make that extensions and improvements will have to be postponed the public may take it for granted that such work will be made as conditions demand.

Russia in its treatment of the Jews within her borders continues to show that with all the veneer of civilization upon the surface there is a good deal of savage barbarism in her character. If Russia were as vulnerable to attack and as weak as are some small nations probably the more civilized nations would in the interest of humanity interfere and put an end to the persecution just as this nation did with Spain in the matter of Cuba.

Certainly every man should be diligent in business, but it should be shown in important things and not in those that are trivial. For a business man to spend time and energy over matters of no account and neglect those that should be diligently looked after is about as foolish as spending a lot of time searching the floor for stray pins when he could buy a whole package for a few cents. Yet that is just what many men do and then they wonder why they are not successful.

"The good old world 'gentleman,'" which stands for good breeding and a lot of other virtues, is not infrequently misused. Some time ago over the entrance to a place in which a dog was to kill so many rats in a given number of minutes, it was written, "None but gentlemen admitted." A few days since in Milwaukee, policemen had been placed in front of shady resorts, and couples seeking to enter were warned away. The keepers of the resorts took the lesson and the night after the police were withdrawn, the sign, "For gentlemen only" was conspicuously displayed in the windows of many of the places. Some people's idea of what constitutes a gentleman evidently needs to be radically changed.

Every community has its shirkers, jerkers and workers. The shirkers carefully abstain from doing anything to help the town and systematically oppose every project designed to benefit it. They are fossils and back numbers with which any place may well dispense. The jerkers usually are enthusiastic for awhile over any new idea, but the enthusiasm soon dies out and fails when it is most needed. The workers deal with every project for improvement on its merits, and when it commends itself to their judgment they push it with all their might and intelligently until it becomes an accomplished fact. Ever alert to the best interests of their town, and imbued with true local patriotism they are untiring in their efforts to promote its welfare, and the result is seen in growth and prosperity. It is up to every man in this and every town to decide as to the class he will join, and whether he will be a detriment or a valuable asset in the community.

Two Views as to Insanity

Is insanity increasing? Some say it is while others assert that the increase is more apparent than real, and probably they are right.

For instance, they tell us that by virtue of the greater care given the insane the mortality among them is not so great; also that insane people are not discharged so readily from asylums as they used to be, more care being taken to assure that their reason has returned before they are sent home.

It is also said that because in former days many feeble-minded and insane were kept home instead of being sent to institutions as now, they were not enumerated as lunatics.

Doubtless there is considerable truth in these statements and they ought to have a quieting effect upon nervous people who are filled with dire forebodings as to the future sanity of the human race.

USE OLD FINERIES

LACE WAISTS AND SILK SKIRTS FOR NEW BLOUSES.

Practical Woman Can Make Good Use of Ancient Materials—Every thing Can Go Into Bodice Nowadays.

The woman who has old lace waists on hand, or a skirt or two in figured or plain silk, may now find use for these dilapidated fineries. A little study of the shop models in both elegant and practical blouses for winter wear will demonstrate how these ancient materials can be used up, for everything can go into a bodice nowadays, and velling one stuff with another is the madness of the moment.

Granted there must be a little good lace for the yoke and sleeve bottoms, all the rest that goes into a corsage, made after the present styles, may be patched to any extent. As for silk, all that is necessary is for it to be of a rich color, for the sheen of red, blue, orange, or violet must be visible through the covering of velling, marquisette or chiffon. A summer foulard in black and white—since these materials wash like rags—would be invaluable, for this combination is stylish under a velling of any sort in any color.

The velled waists, especially if they have three-quarter sleeves, are shown principally for dressy uses, but the style is too useful for the home dress-maker to ignore when making over old textures, and if trimmings and models are sufficiently simple, such designs are suitable for the plainest tailor gowns.

The velled bodice with lace under part, commonly begins with a complete blouse made with a high stock of an all-over lace. A plain or patterned silk, or a Persian gauze foundation, which is very stylish, will stop at the line where the jumper is to cover it and be filled in there with a stock in appropriate materials. The jumper, which is of gauzy velling in the dress color, is the easiest thing in the world to make. The kimono model is the favorite for this over-blouse, and is fitted with one or more Gibson pleats at the shoulders, or else tucked back and front, or across the shoulders only. One strikingly effective device with such waists is a broad band of some rich trimming going around the foundation at the bust point, and showing richly through the thin outer material. Narrow velvet ribbon, or plain satin bands, trims the white stocks and undersleeves of these bodices effectively, while the blouse itself may have quite another trimming.

Persian silk and Indian cottons in a blur of rich color shape the more practical waists, those intended strictly for the plainer tailor gowns; but when these gaudy textures are velled with something else, they at once become things for dressy use.

Our illustration displays a blouse of a simple all-over lace in a rich cream, covered with a kimono jumper of king's blue marquisette. A lace in blue and black encircles the round neck, with a stole drop at the front. The same lace edges the sleeves of the jumper and forms cuffs for the gathered undersleeves.

This bodice, like all the others, is adapted to simpler materials. If a gray dress on hand must be fitted out with a waist, use any colored silk—blue, old rose, violet, green or white—for the foundation, and then get a velling in the dress color for the top. Moire or silk in a matching color could be employed instead of the lace here used. A well-made waist in this style would be suited to a handsome tailor suit, and if liked the jumper part alone might be employed as a model for a collarless short-sleeved house effect. In fact, there is no end to the possibilities of this jumper, for it is adapted equally to plain and dressy uses.

In Filling Sachets.

Fill the tiny bags with a mixed powder of iris and heliotrope and add a few peppercorns, which will both preserve the perfumed powder and bring out its sweet scent.

DANCING SCHOOL

"It doesn't seem to me that that's a very good report card," Bobby's father said judiciously one evening after dinner. "Your history work is very poor and your deportment mark is disgraceful."

"Nobody's good in hist'ry," Bobby explained. "Even Mamie Kelly's mark is something fierce. It's that new teacher. She don't know yet who's the good ones that she has to mark high, and besides she's sore because she caught me whispering. Honest, everybody whispers in her room except Nellie Foster, and she doesn't 'cause she says she's always sorry afterward."

"I was mad that day 'cause Susie Herrick came up to our room. That's enough to make any feller mad. How'd that girl get up to our room for keeps when everybody knows she was always a whole year behind? They'd oughter made her a mid-year instead of sticking her into our room. Billy's awful sore at it."

"You've missed the point, Bobby. It's a question of marks, not of likes and dislikes."

"Well, nobody likes her. All anybody's got to do to it to remember back how stingy she always was with candy and things. Why, she never'd give a feller any, unless it was Jimmy. That's 'cause Jimmy's always at her house after school. He walks home from school with her every day and that makes me tired. We can't even get him to play indoor ball or go to a pickel show on account of him having dates. You see, he goes to dancing school where she goes. It makes me tired."

"This is the third time I've had to speak about your history mark."

"I guess it'll be some better now," Bobby assured his father. "We've got to the war now and it's real interesting. Was your father in the revolution or in the civil war?"

"The civil war."

"That's what I told Jimmy and he said I was away off. He said there ain't nobody living that was in the civil war. He's terrible in hist'ry."

"He must be a comfort to you."

"Who, Jimmy? I should say not. Sam's a lot better'n Jimmy. Me and Billy and Sam are getting up a swell crowd to go on a picnic next summer. We've ast three already. We got to have it early so's to get ahead of people's going away. You can't get Sam to talk about it, he's so crazy over dancing school. Did you ever go to dancing school?"

"Long ago. Do you think Bobby, that you would be helped any if you recited your history lesson to me before you went to school in the morning?"

Bobby's face fell. "Maybe," he said, dubiously. "If I have to."

"Of course, it would be very interesting to me," his father said, with deep irony. "But if you don't think you'd enjoy it we need not go to work at it yet."

"You'll have to study it a good deal harder for me than for your teacher," his father warned him. "And you've got to remember it from day to day." "I don't know about that," Bobby said. "I never do remember. Mamie Kelly's the only one that ever does."

"Don't you hate to be beaten by a girl?"

"She doesn't beat me in anything else. She's fierce in spelling and she ain't no good in arithmetic now that she goes to dancing school. It ain't the dancing that hurts; it's the standing around and talking with the fellers and not studying at home."

"I don't see that it makes an difference to you what Mamie Kelly does."

"It makes a lot of difference," Bobby assured him. "When she doesn't know her lesson teacher gets sore at all of us and that's the way I get low marks. Anyhow, it's one way. She says, 'Everything goes wrong this morning,' when she begins with Mamie Kelly and doesn't get anything but a lemon. Mamie Kelly doesn't mind what marks she gets. She's got a cinch."

"That depends on how you look at it."

"Well, her mother has her take music lessons and she can play some classy things. And then, of course, she goes to dancing school—everybody does. But she's almost as stingy as Susie Herrick."

"Maybe she isn't stingy when you know her better."

"Better!" Bobby cried. "Better! I don't want to know her better. That's the only reason I don't want to go to dancing school."

"Are there any reasons why you do?"

"I should say so. Bushels."

"What, for instance?"

"Well—er—I do."

"Any others?"

"Yes, but—well, everybody goes and it's a lot of fun."

"So I've heard. How about that history?"

"Well, I'll recite to you every day. Honest, I'll have a better mark next time."

"Very well. When do you want to begin dancing school?"

"It doesn't make any difference," Bobby said with a tremble of eagerness in his voice. "But if you don't care, of course, the sooner the quicker to get your money's worth. I don't see the use of waiting till after Christmas, do you? Not that it makes any difference to me, of course, but could I begin next week?"

How we May Conserve the Riches Underfoot.

Farming in America has yet to be learned. The United States has been a nation of crop-growers, not farmers. When the country was new we found the soils fertile; we have drawn annually on the rich deposits of Nature. At first possibly this was a wise practice, at any rate it was inevitable. Thousands of farms are now so reduced in fertility that they are beginning to show it in decreased yields. Thousands of others are still worse off. Many a farmer makes a bare living, and every year his land gets poorer instead of richer. There is not a state in the Union that is an exception. Ohio, Alabama, Colorado, Illinois, Washington, every one of the richest states has learned, or is learning, that constant cropping will use up available plant-food.

In the past, men have gone "farther west," today they are going to the newly-irrigated lands, and to Canada. Soon there will be more new lands open.

But there are undiscovered riches within our own boundaries. It is cheaper to take possession of what is under our feet, rather than what is many miles away. It is time to learn farming. In the past our agriculture has been, in a sense, as much mining as farming, in that riches were being taken from the soil and nothing returned. No use lamenting that now. The riches were there, and our economic system—in fact, our common sense—led us to take them as rapidly as we could—until the realization came that the supply as we could—until the realization came that the supply was not inexhaustible. We know that now. What are we going to do about it?

In the Old World men know better than we how to farm. There are fields in the Old World that were old fields two thousand years ago, and they are far more fertile than even the best fields of America. Let us begin to learn soil-mining, then rather than soil-mining, of which we already know enough.

What constitutes soil fertility? All is not known about it yet. Some things, however, are known. Soils are living, growing, breathing things. We mean by this that "live," rich soils are living things. They are inhabited by millions of microscopic organisms commonly known as bacteria—distant cousins of the disease-producing bacteria, which are the black sheep of the family. The soil bacteria carry on beneficial and useful functions, and the more of these bacteria a soil has in it, the richer, the more productive it is. The fewer bacteria, the "deader" it is in every sense; the less possible it is to make a profit from it. There is absolutely no evasion of the law that a "rich soil is a living soil." Now we want to know how a living can be made.

First, get the water out of it, the stagnant water. Drain the land, if nature has not done it for you. Air is necessary to life. Then, if the soil seems to be sour, put lime on it. Carbonate of lime is the source of fertility. It promotes wonderful bacterial life in soil. It promotes fertility by stopping the waste of nitrogen.

Soils filled with carbonate of lime naturally tend toward an increase in fertility. What is carbonate of lime? It is the natural, unburned, ground limestone, made in imitation of the way nature made soils in the beginning. Nearly all soils have too little carbonate of lime in them to make maximum crops. The best farmers east of the Mississippi are all using lime today.

What else can we do to make a soil truly alive? Bacteria love lime, yes, and vegetable matter in the soils. Living soils have humus in them—humus being, practically, decaying vegetable matter. The more of this, the more bacteria, the more plant-food.

Manure makes land rich. Can you remember that? "Pshaw!" you exclaim, "my grandfather knew it, your father forgot it; you are beginning to learn it for yourself. Agricultural truth is as old as the pyramids. Indeed, the ancient peoples knew more than we about most things pertaining to soil-building. Our latest discoveries are only confirming what the ancients knew. Manures make land rich! This is the vital truth that needs to be impressed on the American farmer today.

Phosphorus added to the manure doubles its efficiency. "Hold on," you exclaim, "what is this phosphorus?" It is the vital element in bones, it is the true source of life in man, beast and herb. Director Thorne of the Ohio station proved that manures reinforced with phosphorus yielded double what they did without it. You buy "floats," or fine-ground Tennessee rock, mix that with your manure, or buy "acid phosphate," the same rock treated with sulphuric acid, and mix that with your manure. Either will about double the usefulness of the manure.

Manure, what is it worth, anyway? It is a lot of work to handle it. Will it pay? You ask this, and Thorne of Ohio and Hopkins of Illinois answer: "A ton of manure may be worth in general farm crop returns as much as four dollars." That is perhaps an extreme estimate. It is never worth less than two dollars. A horse makes at least twenty-five dollars' worth of manure in a year, and usually considerably more. A steer makes twenty dollars' worth, and a sheep two dollars' worth. You keep a good many, horses and sheep. Are you neglecting this, the best of all revenues? Best because it remains a permanent asset of fertility on your land. It makes your farm worth more.

"Oh, well don't worry, I haul the manure out every fall." You do, do you? Has it lain in the weather or in piles firing, all summer? Then, it has probably lost a little more than half its value. Then you have hauled it out in a wagon and with much disagreeable labor spread it imperfectly on the land. A few spots you have made too rich, so that the grain falls down; while other spots have gone untouched.

Now, to get the true value out of this manure, don't you know you ought to own a manure-spreader, haul out the manure as fast as it is made, and get it spread evenly over the land? A ton of manure thus spread is worth four tons left to lie in the yard until fall and imperfectly spread. For manure carries bacteria; manure carries life to the land.

A short, simple, true story. A man bought a sixty-acre field of poor soil. Its last corn crop was twenty bushels per acre. He drained it and let the water out. He sprinkled over it a little manure, and some phosphorus. Clover was sown. Clovers love bacteria and gather fertility. The clover grew. Corn after clover made forty-five bushels per acre. Again a light covering of manure, again a trifle of phosphorus, then clover-seed. Heavy clover resulted. On the clovered he raised sixty-five bushels of corn per acre; coming up, you see!

Still again manure, again a trifle of phosphorus, a few more drains. Then corn, eighty-five bushels per acre. Now alfalfa; the first crop harvested made two tons to the acre. This is the history of a representative field.—B. L. Frame in Farm and Fireside.

HE KEPT CHICKENS

It was Vantine who laid the trail of powder and applied the match. He did it last April when McQueen was explaining for the fiftieth time that the country place he had just purchased over in Michigan was without exception the greatest bargain and the prettiest spot on earth.

"You are going to keep chickens, of course?" suggested Vantine, in the tone which demands an affirmative answer.

"Why," said McQueen, who up to that minute hadn't thought anything about it at all, "why, yes, of course! We'll have our own fresh eggs. Of course, I am going to have the finest poultry yard in the state! Chickens! Well, I should say so!"

Before he moved his family over to the new home in May McQueen had invited everybody he knew to drop in any time during the summer for a weekend. Everybody was most deeply interested in McQueen's chicken yard, which he had been to busy to see about as yet. It seemed to him that his friends took a malicious delight in slapping him on the back and spreading the news.

"Hello!" they would say, jovially. "Poring over catalogues, I suppose, picking out your chickens and stuff? Why, didn't you know, Chester, that McQueen, here, has a huge chicken farm over in Michigan? Aw, you're just modest, McQueen—you know you have! Fresh eggs at every meal!"

In the face of all this McQueen was in nervously desperate straits when he landed with two friends in the country in June, and his wife, in response to his frantic inquiries, placidly said the chickens had come—at least, six hens had. No there weren't any eggs yet. Then she was startled to see her husband turn pale and apparently have some sort of a fit.

"But," he got out, finally, "Chester and Vantine haven't done a thing all the way across the lake but talk about the fresh eggs they are going to have and the fried chicken dinner I am to get up Sunday! Why, those hens have got to lay!"

"Now, Henry!" said his wife, awake at last to the emergency, "they'll never know the difference! I got real nice eggs from the grocer who sends a wagon around, and I've no doubt he can sell chickens, too!"

"Well, for goodness' sake, don't let the fellows know they're not from our place!" gasped McQueen, in agonized relief.

He explained the apparent paucity of hens to his friends by saying that he had sent back a lot that weren't satisfactory, and then he gave color to his fiction about his chicken yard by giving the man of all work lavish orders as to placing chicken wire.

McQueen, still nervous from his narrow escape resolved when he got back to town to buy and ship all the available live poultry, so he might breathe in peace. Vantine and Chester went back shouting praises of their chicken dinner and their breakfast omelets. Then the rush began. So many friends wanted to drop over to Michigan with McQueen that it looked as though he would have to issue checks.

"Fresh eggs and real home-grown chickens sounds good to us," they would say, plaintively.

McQueen neglected his business hunting up material for his fatal chicken yard. He tried artfully to talk the virtues of lake bass and butcher's meat and breakfast bacon, while his hens were so busy getting acquainted with their new home that they did not attend to their duties, but everybody put up protesting hands.

"What!" they would exclaim. "No fish, no bacon for us. We came over here especially for fresh eggs and friend chicken! No steak, thank you."

So the McQueens squandered untold gold on the grocery boy and scoured the countryside for eggs. All of McQueen's week-ends resolved themselves into nightmares of showing determined guests about his chicken yard. He never got time to go anywhere else. All of Mrs. McQueen's midweeks were devoted to hunting up a fresh supply of eggs and chickens to feed to the week-end crowd. She couldn't have any of their own chickens killed, because they were supposed to lay eggs.

By fall McQueen had bought ten different kinds of food warranted to make hens lay and none of which did; had invested in six different brands of chickens, each warranted better than the last, none of which were; had spent a fortune on day labor and rolls of chicken wire and carpenters for the henhouse and paid so much money for eggs and frollers that his blood curdled to his toes when his wife showed him the bill.

"I kept count," she said. "We had just 30 eggs of our own all summer long from 250 hens. Now, what are you going to do with them this winter, when we go back to Chicago?"

TASTY DRESS FOR A GIRL

Navy Blue Serge is Most Attractive of Materials for Misses' Costumes.

No material is nicer for girls' costumes than navy blue serge. The one we show here is in a thick make of this. The skirt is a plain gored shape, turned up with a deep hem at foot. The semi-fitting Norfolk is cut three-quarter length, and has material straps taken over shoulders to lower edge back and front. They are left unsewn at waist, where a band is taken and fastened in front. Hat of coarse straw trimmed with black satin bows. Materials required: 6 yards 48 inches wide, 2 yards sateen for lining skirt, 4 yards silk for lining coat.

VELOUR HATS ARE POPULAR

Combine Softness of Plush Beaver With Smoothness of Felt—Variety of Shapes.

With a breezy jump into favor, the velour outing hats have come upon us. They combine a softness of the popular plush beaver with a smoothness of felt and have taken unto themselves shapes that are emphatically becoming to the wearers that have adopted them.

Some are of the Tyrolean shape that are different at least from round turbans and flange turbans on one side with attractive, piquant lines. Young girls, especially, look well in these shapes. A Rough Rider shape is another variation. Large, untrimmed and turned sharply up at the side, these hats fit in with tailored suits, raincoats or topcoats.

Colors are as varied as you wish. The soft greens, reddish browns, grays, white, if you can afford it, and practical black are much in evidence. Contrasting quills are the usual trimming, or gold and silver cords.

Velour hats are of such supple texture that they can be crushed flat and packed in a traveling case. The absence of trimming precludes the unattractive condition in which we generally find a packed hat.

Large crowns on these new shapes insure a good, reliable fit. They are worn quite far down, and are just as comfortable as they look.

So, if you are offered one of these jaunty shapes do not turn it down—except over your head.

SMART EFFECTS IN TIES

Persian Chiffon and Satin Ribbon Can Be Made to Produce Stunning Effects.

One of the smartest effects is made by cutting a nine-inch square of Persian chiffon, to which is stitched satin ribbon an inch and a half wide. The ribbon is sewed to the right side of chiffon a half inch from the edge, using a machine for greater security. The corners are mitred to form a square.

Each quarter of this square is then put into diagonal line side plait meeting at the center of square. This is easily managed by folding the square over in one direction, and then doubling in the opposite direction. The small square thus formed is plaited from the center out.

When the plaits are laid the square is caught at the central point and sewed to the back of a small four or six looped bow of satin ribbon to match border. The ends fall in graceful points.

Equally new but scarcely so attractive are bows and twisted ends of plain satin or silk, the ends of bow and the having a border of Persian silk or ribbon.

To Darn Stockings.

An ingenious woman darts all of her stockings over shoe trees. She says that as the stockings are held in the shapes in which they are worn, the darts are more comfortable to wear, as they conform to the shape of the foot.
