A DISTRESSING FATALITY.

Howard McMurray Killed By Jumping from a Train in this City, Saturday Evening

At 7:20 last Saturday evening a most distressing fatal accident occurred at the D. & M. Station in this city, which resulted in the almost instant death of Howard McMurray, of East Tawas.

When the special train carrying the West Bay City high school, who had held their annual outing at Tawas Beach, pulled out of East Tawas at 7:15, the young man, in company with his friend David Sims, boarded the train to ride to this city. The train did not stop here and was running at a high rate of speed when passing this station. As the train passed the station the young man jumped, Sims escaping injury, but Howard struck on some cement boulders near the track receiving injuries which resulted in his death within 20 minutes. His skull was fractured in two places, his left shoulder and side were badly stove in and his back broken.

Among those waiting to take the regular evening passenger train was Dr. Schmallier, who reached the young man within two minutes. Dr. Crane soon arrived, but nothing could be done for him. Coroner Armstrong was notified and impeded a jury, and after viewing the remains adjourned the inquest to Tuesday evening, when a verdict is rendered in accordance to the facts as above stated.

Michigan First and Last.

Hon. C. F. Sawyer, of Cadillac, who has just returned from Portland, Oregon, has given a reporter the following interview:

"The West may be all right if one thinks so, but to anyone who has lived in Michigan all his life with its beautiful foliage and its invigorating atmosphere, the west is monotonously personified. There were many California pilgrims on the train with us returning from the winter's sojourn in that land and they almost went wild over the beautiful scenery as we passed through Iowa and Illinois, but not until we reached the orchards of western Michigan was the panorama perfect and the scenery complete. To pass through miles of apple orchards in full bloom is a scene which will impress itself on one's mind and memory, truly is enough to make one thankful he is a Wolverine."

The Home Merchant.

A full line of well kept retail stores is a great public convenience. It enables home people to make purchases and take the goods home the same day. It enables them to take their own time for inspection of goods, when they are not cut short by the hurry of a trip to some distant city.

Gail Hamilton, a well known writer of some years ago wrote a book called "Twelve Miles from a Lemon." It was a humorous description of the inconveniences one encounters in living in a place where the conveniences of retail business are not good.

People think of those things when picking out a resident town, and they hate to locate in a place lacking good water and lights and streets and sewers.

In order to get public conveniences of any kind, we have to tax ourselves. Even if it could be proved that one must occasionally pay a little more to buy goods at home, this tax necessary to get a good system of local shops is but slight compared with what we pay for other conveniences. But it does not cost more to buy at home.

A Counterfeit $2.00 Bill.

One of the best counterfeits of a $2 bill ever seen has made its appearance in Detroit, and the federal authorities are warning merchants to closely scrutinize every bill of this denomination reaching their hands. The counterfeit is known as a "photograph," and the way to detect it is to examine the edges and see if two pieces have not been glued together.

The Banking Habit.

As the total of bank deposits is a very good index of the prosperity of a state, or community, so the habit of keeping a bank account is a very good index of the prosperity of the individual. The man who once establishes this habit as a rule pays cash for the things, getting the lowest price on the goods and the best quality of goods for his money. He is apt to be a more careful buyer than the man who buys on credit and his custom is everywhere sought because of the fact that his business is cash. The real saving in dollars and cents, as well as the larger dividend in an increased self-respect and independence is all in favor of the habit of maintaining a bank account, even tho it be a small one.

The fact that a man may be in debt upon his farm or home is no argument against the keeping of a bank account. There are always times when he has some surplus money which is much safer in a bank than in his own home, notwithstanding the prejudice to the contrary and distrust of banks which is so common. Business men are generally large borrowers, yet no business man would think of undertaking to do business without a bank account, and it is just as essential to the farmer as to any other business man.

That the number of depositors in banks is yearly increasing is not only a sign of increased prosperity among the people of our state but also an indication of a gradual improvement in their business methods. With the advent of the postal savings bank the fear and distrust which are so commonly entertained of such institutions will be removed and those who are afraid of such financial institutions will have a depository for their money, which is guaranteed by the national government, at a small rate of interest. But the small account which they can check in their ordinary business transactions will be just as essential and the sooner the habit is formed the better for the individual and for the community in which he does business—Michigan Farmer.

Automobiles and Economy.

Jesse A. Gregg, of St Paul, told the delegates at the convention of the American Steel and Heavy Hardware Association in Detroit that if it were not for the automobile a horse would be worth $1,000. A Chicago statistician has gone Mr. Gregg one better and figured it out what the automobile is saving. In addition to keeping down the price of horses and mules, the Chicagoan says the automobiles in the United States are doing the work of 5,000,000 horses.

Those 5,000,000 horses would eat 2,500,000 bushels of grain each day, or 912,500,000 a year. At the present price of oats that would amount to about $1,000,000 a day. Those horses would consume 50,000 tons of hay each 24 hours, or 18,250,000 tons a year. The value of all the hay and grain they would consume would be $547,500,000 a year. It would require 37,375,000 acres of land to produce the food those horses would eat, or an area approximately the same as that of Iowa.

In other words, the automobile not only is saving us about $2,000,000 a day on horse feed, but it is keeping down the cost of food for the drivers by making it possible to turn the hay and oat fields into wheat and potato fields. So, after all, the automobile does not seem to be the economic waste some have supposed.—Ex.

A STUDY OF NAPOLEON.

Mental Changes of the Fiery Corsican Shown by His Chirography.

Interesting and exhaustive studies have been made in France of Napoleon's chirography. When a young man Napoleon did not have a bad hand, although, like some other great men, he could never learn to spell. When he was an artillery officer his writing was simple and legible, as his life was simple and direct. But when the Corsican Captain Bonaparte distinguished himself at the siege of Toulon and became the French General Bonaparte his writing took on what has been called "a furious illegibility."

Curiously enough, from that time there seems to have been a gradual degeneration until, profoundly discouraged and utterly humiliated, he scratched an undecipherable, misspelled scrawl of submission to the prince regent on July 14, 1815.

It is said that this change from a simple to a confused writing began at a certain date—namely, with a report, skillfully garbled, of the part he took in what Carlyle called the "whiff of grapeshot" that spoke from the steps of St. Roch on the 13th Vendemiaire (Oct. 5, 1795).

The culminating eccentricity of his tortuous strokes of the pen was exhibited in the letter P. This showed plainly the mental changes of the man who would unhesitatingly declare war against the first comer, who would divorce the wife he loved, who would propose a kingdom of Haiti for Louis XVIII., who would freeze nearly a million men upon the steppes of Russia. This letter P became of strange and abnormal form. It was excessively developed. For twenty years the great general used this extravagant and, according to the investigators, accusing letter, especially noticeable in his later unroyal signature, NP.—Harper's Weekly.

FORETOLD BY DREAMS.

Two Remarkable Cases in Which Sleep Warnings Came True.

"I dreamed that the ship was in a heavy sea, that a big wave came over her bows, pressed down upon her, and then she rolled over on her starboard side and disappeared."

This is not an extract from a story. It is evidence, given on oath, during the inquiry at London into the mysterious disappearance of the Waratah, the vessel which, on her second voyage, mysteriously disappeared in July, 1909, and has never been heard of since. And so impressed was the passenger with the vision that he left the vessel at Durban, from which point she continued on her ill fated voyage. Thus one more was added to the extraordinary coincidences in which dreams have figured.

The third Lord Waterford was able to verify a story of an extraordinary dream coming true. Talking one day with the landlord of the inn in the village close to Curraghmore, a man rushed up and said there had been a murder on the hills. "Then it must be the little one," said the landlord, at which Lord Waterford, not unnaturally, became very suspicious. The landlord proceeded to explain that in the night he dreamed that two men had come to the inn and that the taller of the two had murdered the shorter with a very curious knife.

He told his dream to his wife, who laughed at him. But, in his horror, the men he had seen while asleep came to the inn, and one used the curious knife to cut up his food. They left, and soon afterward news of the murder arrived. Search was made for a tall man answering to the landlord's description, and one was quickly arrested. In prison he confessed he had murdered his short companion.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Cowboy's Handkerchief.

"Have you ever wondered why the cowboy pictures by painters who have made a study of western life depict the man of the plains with his red bandanna halfway down on his chest instead of fitting snugly around his neck?" queried a ranch owner of California.

"I'll tell you. When a cowboy starts on a long ride over the plains one of his principal annoyances is having to wipe dust from his eyes. His heavy gauntlets make it impossible to use his hands, and he ties his handkerchief loosely around his neck and when occasion requires uses it to clear his eyes. It is the most convenient place to carry the handkerchief while riding a horse."—Washington Post.

They Help the Justices.

Each United States supreme court justice has a body servant assigned to him, and this servant is a sore trial to many. The body servants, now called "messengers," descend from justice to justice. Several are old men. Their usual attitude toward their particular justices is that of tutor toward pupil. They dictate in all matters of etiquette and are generally bothersome. But there's no getting rid of them. They're an institution having precedent.—San Francisco Argonaut.

TAWAS CITY, MICH., June 16, 1911

That is a spurious gentility that loves to disport itself in broadcloth but which is ashamed to be seen in fustian and overalls.

The most beautiful thing in the world is a good deed, and the most beautiful life is that which is filled with good and unselfish acts.

Graduation exercises are now mostly over and for a year at least all the vexed problems of life have been settled by the graduates.

Some people can serve their country better in prison than at liberty. To set them free would defeat the ends of justice and encourage crime.

To regard work as distasteful drudgery is a mistake. All honest work, however lowly, is ennobling, uplifting and one of the greatest of blessings.

To be convulsed with sobs and grief when reading the pathetic story of some imaginary hero or heroine in a novel, and yet in actual life to do nothing to relieve the needs of the poor or dry the tear of the mourner, is nothing but rapid sentimentalism.

Senatorial Courtesy" has received some hard jolts recently. Perhaps that is just as well, for if the courtesy has been abused in order to defeat progressive legislation or to hinder probing where it was much needed the sooner it is ended the better.

That is a foolish man who, because it is not in him to do great things, refuses to do the little things that are within his power. In truth, mankind is more blessed by the every day common things of the average man than by the dazzling genius or great acts of a few individuals.

One might be more sanguine of the efficacy of the Supreme Court decisions against the trusts if Wall street would only take the decision more seriously. As it is, Wall street seems rather to enjoy the situation. Yet, after all, these decisions may be bringing nearer the much desired end.

The only effective way of dealing with dandelions and bad habits is to kill them. Some people do nothing but let them grow, others lop off the tops, which results in a temporary improvement only, but others go down to the very roots and pull them up. It means hard work but it is thorough, and best of all it brings it's reward.

By the way almost every congressional speaker quotes the Bible or refers to it when making speeches in the Senate or House, one almost expects to see their heads encircled by a halo. So far as the speakers themselves are concerned, such quotations may be for effect only, but it shows the influence of the Bible and its position in human thought.

There are churches that would stand better in public estimation and do more effective work if they would not let the money of rich members cover a multitude of sins. While God is no respecter of persons, not unoften the church is, because it condones offenses by wealthy parishioners it would not tolerate in poor members. A little more of the attitude Jesus displayed towards the rich Pharisees would give a new tone to the church and strengthen it.

That many thousands of babies die every year because of impure milk is notorious. For this "slaughter of the innocents" careless parents, dishonest milk dealers and the supineness of pure food inspectors are chiefly responsible. Human nature is sometimes a strange thing. People will weep copiously over the Bible story of the massacre of the infants in Bethlehem who contribute to kill many times more children than were found in the old Judean village.

It is significant that when great combinations of capital are faced with an investigation as to their business methods almost invariably they exclaim that any such action will mean a lowering of wages. That is a club designed to prevent enquiry. As a rule dividends could be lowered and still mean large profits.

but such reduction no trust magnate will voluntarily agree to. If any reduction is imperative it is so much easier to take it out of the wages. But generally the threat is a threat and nothing more, even if the enquiry is made.

Running down one's town does not call for any brains or ability. It is easily done. Refuse to help any project for its advancement and criticise those who do and question their motives. Stand habitually on the street corners and complain how dead the town is. Refuse to take the local papers, growl that the business men are slow, and send away to mail order houses for everything wanted—from a cook stove or buggy to a packet of needles. Such methods will kill a town as dead as a door nail provided there are enough kickers engaged in the disreputable business.

Now is the time to help realize the dream of the "City Beautiful." It is something in which every citizen can do his part by keeping his own premises clean. Tidiness and good taste are catching and the good example one man sets is likely to be followed by his neighbor. But even if it is not he has the reward which comes from knowing that his own effort has contributed to making his town a better place to live in. In civic and other improvements there is sometimes a tendency to wait upon official action or the work of some to be appointed committee. But perhaps best results usually flow from intelligent private action. More than one city in our land has been transformed in external appearance because of the good taste, industry and enthusiasm of some one man whose example at last became contagious.

The plan of the British government to pay members of parliament a salary of $2,000 a year reminds us that time has well nigh brought about the realization of the old Chartist demands. In its day, some sixty-five years ago, Chartism was regarded as extremely revolutionary and its leaders were branded as dangerous demagogues. Yet of the five points of the charter—vote by ballot, annual parliaments, no-property qualification for members of parliament, payment of members of parliament, and equal electoral districts—vote by ballot and no-property qualification have long since been granted. Every redistribution of seats has been in the direction of equal electoral districts, payment of members is practically assured, and the government proposes to reduce the term of parliament from seven years to three.

In this near realization of all the old points one can see how political advancement keeps pace with the growing powers of the people. Not only in England, but in every country, there is a shifting of political power and responsibilities from the few to the many, and all this means a truer form of representative government.

Two Men—A Comparison.
When George Washington took leave of his army it was to go into honorable retirement from which he was again called to serve his country, first as President of the Constitutional Convention and then as President of the United States. Diaz recently bade farewell to his army to go into exile after serving as President of Mexico many years.

In courage, ability and service to his country, there was something in common between Washington and Diaz. But Washington was much the greater man, nobly unselfish, and unaffected by the power of office. Diaz might have remained honored and loved in his native land if he had shown the same unselfishness, but unfortunately, office and the power it brings evolved a lust for arbitrary rule which led to his downfall. Washington could move with events and in all things his country was first. Diaz in his latter years was unprogressive and he put himself before his country.

One man died full of honors and his name is imperishable, while the other man, in spite of the acknowledged good he has done Mexico, closes his years in defeat and exile.

VERY CHIC WALKING COSTUME

Mulberry Colored Cloth After This Design Makes Very Attractive Dress.
In mulberry-colored cloth this would look exceedingly well. The smart skirt has a group of plaits at each side, which are well pressed and taped; the back and front are made in panels, which are connected at sides by narrow straps cut in with them, which are fastened by buckles.
The semi-fitting coat has the right side taken over to left in a point where it is fastened by a buckle. Black and white striped silk forms the long roll collar; Russian braid is arranged simply on the fronts; the cuffs are trimmed to match.

Hat of chip to match trimmed with masses of flowers.
Materials required: Seven yards cloth 48 inches wide, one-half yard silk, one-half dozen yards Russian braid, three buckles, four and one-half yards silk for lining coat.

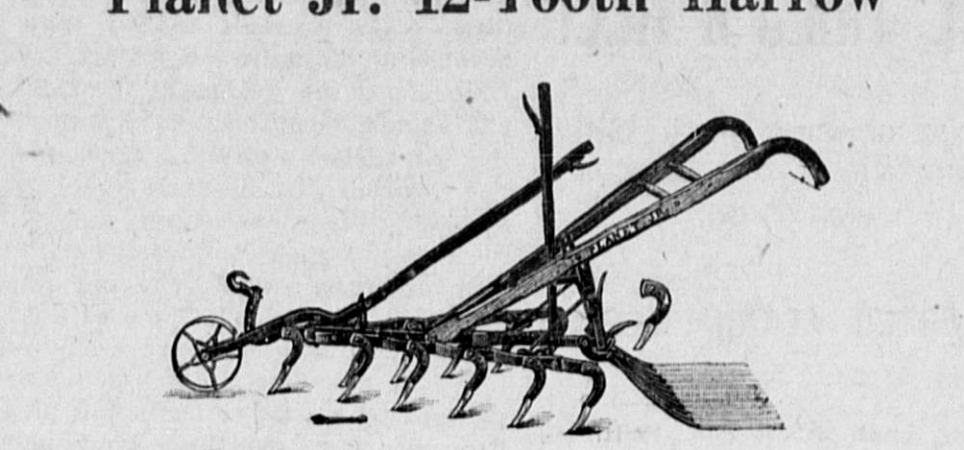

SOME USES FOR OLD HATS

Work Baskets and Bags May Easily Be Constructed From Discarded Headwear.
They may be converted into work baskets. Also bags.
The crown of an old felt hat makes a good foundation for a bag, having stability enough to withstand being poked into holes and not worn out easily.
Cover it with some pretty material, and it will look like some flimsy bag, while actually it will be as substantial as one made of leather.
More interesting even to fashion is the work basket made from an old straw hat.
Trim off the brim, line the inside of the crown with silk, bind it around the top edges and finish in any way your fancy and ingenuity may suggest.
The leghorn hat, turned upside down and supplied with a ribbon handle, makes a pretty basket to use when gathering flowers, or a holder for various articles, which may be hung up.
Such bags and baskets may be made into most acceptable articles for sale at the fairs and bazaars which will overtake one with the coming of the winter months.

APRON FOR EMBROIDERERS

Simple Article Is Made of Lawn or Dimity, Turned Up and Featherstitched Into Pockets.
A very simple apron for embroiderers is made of a big square of lawn or dimity, turned up about a third of its length and featherstitched into four pockets. Three of these hold embroidery pieces; the fourth is again featherstitched into five divisions, each for a separate color of silk. The hem on these pockets is lined with cotton flannel before being turned down and featherstitched, and is used as a needle case. The rest of the goods is hemmed all around and provided with ribbon drawing strings, so that it can be worn as an apron.
This is especially pretty in some light color, such as pink, with deeper pink embroidery and ribbons, or in white with some such dainty shade as baby blue or Nile green. The silk and ribbon should both be washable, so that the whole apron can go in the tub when necessary. It is a pretty gift to an embroiderer, and one that will come in handy during afternoon neighborhood calls, or in winter evenings spent at home.
To Cleanse Tatting.
Tatting can not be properly washed to look as good as new, for it is almost impossible to restore the picots to their natural shape. Soak the pieces in gasoline and while wet dust them with cornstarch. Wrap them in a clean towel and leave them for several hours. Beat the towel lightly, lift out the lace and shake it free of starch. Press the picots into shape and iron lightly on the wrong side.

PUFFED THEIR OWN WARES.

Authors in the Good Old Days Threw Bouquets at Themselves.

Authors in "the good old days" were not above writing their own puffs. Charles Reade wrote a long article on himself for Once a Week, in which he said:

It is impossible to speak too highly of "the Colster and the Hearth." It is one of the most scholarly and learned as well as one of the most artistic and beautiful works of fiction in any language. Read him. Resist yourself to the magic spell of his genius. The effect of "Foul Play" is perfectly marvelous. It leaves the stories of every other sensational novel writer far behind.

Nor was Balzac in France above praising his own works. "If you have not been born a story teller," he wrote in a review, "you will never obtain the popularity of M. de Balzac. And what a story teller! What verve and wit! How the world is dissected by this man! What passion and coolness!"

But the height of literary advertising in the first half of the last century was reached in the case of Eugene Sue's famous novel "The Wandering Jew." Every little while the daily installment in the newspaper in which it was appearing would be missing, and in its place would be an announcement that M. Sue was suffering from a slight indisposition and readers would be obliged to wait forty-eight hours for new developments of the narrative. So well did these methods succeed, says Mr. Tassin, that it was impossible to buy outright a copy of the journal, but instead copies were rented out at 10 sous for half an hour, the time thought necessary to read the installment. "And all the while Sue himself was industriously abetting the publishers by posing over-dressed and with spurs to his boots at the Cafe de Paris in an attitude of deepest abstraction, as if wondering what the next installment would be about."—Bookman.

Captain—A Jolly Game.

All choose partners but one child who represents the captain. The others, who are the crew, form in a line around the captain and, walking two and two, sing:

Oh, captain, we shall burn the boat
Or wicked pirates be
Or wicked pirates be
Take care or you shall see!

After the crew sings this twice they change partners, and the captain makes a rush to get a partner. The player left out then becomes the captain and the game goes on.

FEATS OF ARTISTS

Some Notable Achievements in Eleventh Hour Work.

ONE OF LANDSEER'S SPURTS.

The Masterpiece the Great Painter Produced in a Few Hours—Remarkable Records Made by Some of the Famous Masters of Music.

Some astounding feats in eleventh hour work, especially in the musical and artistic branches, have been achieved by the great artists of the world.

Sir Edwin Landseer had promised a picture for the spring exhibition of the British Institution in 1845, but on the day before the exhibition was to be opened all the hanging committee had received was an empty frame, which was duly hung in the position of honor.

As the prospect of receiving a picture for the frame seemed to the committee to be slight, a member thereof went to see the artist. He found Landseer standing in front of a bare canvas.

"That's the picture I promised," said the great man, pointing to the canvas. "I have not touched it yet, but I will send it to the institution tonight."

And he was as good as his word. A few hours later the completed picture was delivered and may be seen today in the National gallery. This wonderful work of half a dozen hours was none other than the universally admired "Cavalier's Pets."

Leander, the famous painter, is capable of remarkably rapid work. Upon seeing him leave his rooms early in the morning with a canvas on his back the neighbors of the great artist used to exclaim, "There goes Leander off to paint his daily picture." Although this may have been an exaggeration, it is a well known fact that on several occasions the academicians produced a large picture within a few hours.

Leander has a formidable rival in the matter of hasty work in Solomon Solomon. This artist painted an admirable life size portrait of Israel Zangwill within the period of five hours.

In the realm of music there may be cited many instances of extraordinarily quick work. Oscar Hammerstein's record of a comic opera in one act, words and music, composed in one night, is an example.

One of the most remarkable bits of orchestration ever written, the overture to "Otello," was scored by Rossini in only twenty-four hours.

Sir Arthur Sullivan composed the brilliant epilogue of the "Golden Legend" in the same space of time. He sat down at 9 o'clock one evening to compose the overture to "Iolanthe" and did not rise from his desk until the last note was written at 7 on the following morning, while the overture to "The Yeoman of the Guard" occupied him no more than twelve hours both to compose and score.

It is told of Donizetti that he wrote the instrumentation of an entire opera within thirty hours. On the morning in which Rossini's "Gazza Lutra" was to be produced not a single note of the overture had been written, and the manager was in despair. He sought out the indolent composer, locked him in one of the rooms of La Scala and declared he should have neither food nor freedom until the overture was completed. Rossini set to work with a will and to such purpose that the music was written and rehearsed before the evening performance.

Mozart was another genius who frequently needed the spur of eleventh hour work. Though at 1 in the morning not a note of the overture to "Don Giovanni" had been set down, yet Mozart finished it before he went to the breakfast table at his usual hour. During the long hours consumed by this task it is said that the musician's wife kept him awake by reading fairy stories to him.

One of the fastest composers that ever lived was Trotere, the writer of songs. Some of the composer's feats verge on the marvelous. It is said, for example, that he actually wrote the score of "In Old Madrid" and had dropped it into the letter box within eight minutes of the time he had taken up his pen. This would be remarkably merely as showing his dexterity and agility, to say nothing of the labor of the composition itself.

One of Schubert's friends tells a story indicating that composer's rapidity of workmanship. He had left Schubert absorbed in Goethe's ballad "The Erl King." On his return in a few minutes he found the musician swiftly putting on paper the notes inspired by the poem, and within an hour there had been composed that great song the world has admired ever since.—Edwin Tarrisse in Chicago Tribune.

Deep, but Dry.
"Lincoln, himself a superb writer," said a college professor, "could not stand tedious writing in others. He once condemned for its tediousness a Greek history, whereupon a diplomat took him to task.

"The author of that history, Mr. President," said the diplomat, "is one of the profoundest scholars of the age. Indeed, it may be doubted whether any man of our generation has plunged more deeply in the sacred fount of learning."

"Yes, or come up drier," said Lincoln.

We cannot control the evil tongues of others, but a good life enables us to despise them.—Cato.

A Few Words About Clean Milk.

By A. C. Anderson, Professor of Dairy Husbandry, of the M. A. C.

WITH our modern knowledge of the superior value of all dairy products as a source of human food there has naturally come an increased interest in the conditions surrounding the production of these food. Further, our better knowledge of the causes of many diseases and the manner of dissemination teach us more and more to associate pure foods with health, and impure foods with disease. Milk and milk products from the nature of their source and the agencies surrounding their manufacture and handling have been found favorable carriers for some of the very serious diseases common to the human family. Ignorance of these facts has caused a great deal of human suffering and the loss of much human life.

Much has been said and written regarding the production of clean milk. The different phases of the subject have been treated, and widely different sets of rules have been laid down for the dairyman to follow. Some of these rules have been extravagant and impractical, if not altogether impossible. Many of them, however, have been sane and feasible; all have been actuated by a wholesome desire to improve our food products and thus prevent the loss of human life through ignorance and neglect.

One of the essential factors in the production of clean milk is the dairyman himself. He should by nature be neat, tidy and clean. A sloven may live in a palace, and many a palace with its elaborate equipment is unkept, while often times the humble cottage with its simple, almost primitive, appointments is immaculate.

The matter of cleanliness is a good deal of a personal factor, and clean, healthy people are a necessity in the production of clean milk.

A clean, healthy cow in a clean, well-lighted, well-ventilated stable are also essentials. The light and ventilation are not so absolutely essential, but both are closely associated with the health of the cattle. Then, too, a dark stable is very apt to be dirty, and an unventilated one usually contains a surplus of odors injurious to milk.

It is surprising to see how many farmers and dairymen never groom their cows. A curry comb and brush used intelligently for a few minutes each day will keep a cow clean and respectable; her milk will suffer much less contamination, and she will be a source of pride and satisfaction to her keeper.

A stable with smooth walls and ceiling furnishes much less opportunity for the lodgment of dust and dirt and is much easier to clean and disinfect, but many very ordinary stables are kept clean. Cement floors are more sanitary than wooden ones and are also easier to clean. Stables where the spatters from the gutter are allowed to accumulate on the side walls, often forming a thickening crust from year to year, are entirely unsuited for producing a clean milk.

The spiders are ever active with their webs, and frequent, vigorous sweepings are necessary in order to prevent these webs from becoming dust laden and constant disseminators of dirt and germs.

Many valuable utensils are on the market intended for the help of the dairyman in keeping his cattle, his farm and his milk clean and wholesome. The very best equipment, however, will not furnish clean milk without an intelligent, vigorous operator to use it. While a very good grade of milk can be produced with very ordinary utensils, sufficient painstaking care must be exercised.

Aside from the factors named, the matter of temperatures is extremely important. Consignments of milk are frequently condemned with the command "Clean up" when the seat of the difficulty is not a matter of cleanliness, but a lack of proper management after being drawn. If milk is immediately aerated and cooled to a temperature of 50 degrees and then kept at that temperature, or below, one may know that if difficulties arise they are probably not due to temperature.

Watch For Sore Shoulders.
It is now that a little care will avoid much trouble later with sore shoulders. Cold water will toughen the horses' skin and remove all the salt and sweat from the hair on the shoulders. Adjust the collar and hames often, as the horses will fall in flesh with the spring work and leave them loose. Let the horses feel the refreshing rest of being free from the harness while eating. Work regular hours on a set amount each day, and the spring work will be accomplished with less hardship to both men and horses. Perhaps later we will cover our harness with steam or gasoline tractors and then we will not need to be so careful during the strenuous season.
