An exceedingly pretty wedding occured at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John King, on Wednesday evening last, at eight o'clock, when their daughter, Miss De Etta Mae King became the bride of Mr. George Edwards. The beautiful and impressive marriage service of the Episcopal church was read by Archdeacon Leonard J. Christler, of the Milk River Valley Mission Field. The home was prettily decorated with ground pine and red poppies, the officating clergyman and the wedding party standing beneath a bower of red and green during statements to many of our patrons asking the ceremony. Mendelsohn's wedding march was played by Mrs. J. Flaherty. Australian Ranchers. The squatters in Queensland Australia, are the equivalent of the ranchers in Canada and the United States. They opened up the country and generally acquired enormous holdings, and, after a few years of hardship, lived like princes. Of course, during the droughts they suffer, but on the whole they are a well-to-do class of highly intelligent, well-educated men. The largest station in Queensland is Warenda, 500 square miles. Some of the large stations carry immense flocks of 150,000 to 200,000 sheep, and in good seasons their profits are enormous. One pastoral company in Queensland owns 600,000 sheep. The ordinary sheep station carries from 20,000 to 40,000 sheep.

Fitness of Useful and Ornamental Articles in Room Must Be First Consideration.

The true method of making a room beautiful is to make all the necessary and useful things in it beautiful; so much is this true that it becomes almost impossible to design a really beautiful room that is to have no useful work done in it or natural life lived in it. An architect called upon to design a room in which nothing more earnest is to be done than to gossip over afternoou teas has a sad

For a room must always derive its dignity or meanness from, and reflect somewhat, the character' and kind of occupation which is carried on in it. For instance, the studio of art artist, the study of a man of letters, the workshop of a carpenter, or the kitchen of a farmhouse, each in its position and degree, derives at dignity and interest from the work done in it. And the things in the room bear some relation to that work, and will be the furniture and surroundings natural to it; as the bench and tools in the carpenter's shop; the easels and canvases in the studio; the books and papers in the study; and the bright pans and crockery in the kitchen. All these lend a sense of active, useful, human life to the room, which rewhich no regular useful life is lived. Some people want to live according to a set of rules that somebody may frame for them. The true way is to let life be controlled by principle. The man who does that has no need of rules.

With affairs in eastern Europe more than usually unsettled, with Germany insisting on putting her finger in the Morrocon pie, and with that stormy petrel Castro once more in Venezuela peace taking her departure.

It is said that the different departments of the federal government are to be conducted in a more business-like way with a view to greater efficiency and economy. Most people will think it high time and can probably point out many ways in which the new method may be applied with benefit to the public which has to pay the bills.

The doctrine that government land belongs to the people and should be retained for their benefit and not for speculators and trusts is that of justice and common sense. The increasing pressure of public opinion will probably result in a more thorough acceptance of that doctrine to the disappointment of some plethoric multi-millionaires.

If it is true that the dreadnaughts are to give way to a smaller, cheaper and more effective fighting ship it ought to bring relief to the weary taxpayers already staggering under their burden. But such relief is not very probable for British, German and other governments will likely build many more of them. That means that in the long run the expense account will work out about the

With a strong candidate for the democratic nomination in Governor Harmon, she has also a putative candidate in former Secretary of the Interior Garfield, a progressive who may be put forward to split the republican vote and possibly defeat Taft for renomination. Some magazines are exploiting the wonderful precocity of some children, and the parents of these children have been airing their methods by which they have enabled the children at the tender age of ten or twelve to absorb as much, or eyen more, wisdom and knowledge as the average person can do in twice that number of years. It is all very entertaining and interesting, no doubt, but in all there is some danger of the dove of probability the methods if generally applied would end in failure. The very rare instances of precocious minds that keep their strength and elasticity to mature years only go to show that the "Admirable" Crichton's and Lord Macauley's are very few and far between. Usually these phenomonal youthful minds degenerate into learned dunces. Anyway the great majority of people will continue to prefer that children shall be children to enjoy life in childish manner and develop naturally along mental and physical lines, and not at the early age of ten talk like old men of seventy.

The Need of a Weekly Rest.

Whether for good or ill the popular view of Sunday has changed considerably I should feel myself in heaven beforein recent years. And yet the best interests of people demand that one day in Maria; and if it isn't Maria, it's Gerseven shall be differentiated from the rest. Apart from the moral question involved it is certain that the man who works seven days in the week is physically and mentally burning the candle of life at both ends.

This has always been true. In the height of the great French revolution when its leaders declared that everything savoring of religion should be destroyed, the observance of Sunday was officially abolished and one day in ten was substituted as a day of rest and enjoyment. A very few years sufficed to show that the change was injuriously affecting individual life and consequently national life, and a return to the kindlier seventh day resulted.

reasons a seventh day rest or recreation was needful in bygone days, when the business and social life was not so strenuous, how much more needful is it at the present time when life is at a killing pace resulting, in an increasing degree, in nervous and other ailments.

In truth so far from letting work intrude on our Sundays there is really need of greater rest and more holidays if due for true economy and conservation of

The Way To Treat Old Women.

In the August Woman's Home Companion, Margaret E. Sangster writes of youth and old age, Following is an ex-

"I hold firmly to the belief that few of us need to grow old unless we choose. Every decade has its advantages and pleasures, its dignities and privileges.

We grow old only if we let ourselves rust, if we lose our sympathy with the young and cease to be interested in the current history of the globe. When a woman no longer needs to give her time and attention to her children, she should sieze firmly upon another interest, and in its selection she should be guided by her own tendencies rather than by the wishes of her family and friends. Nothing is more distasteful than dictation to a woman who feels herself on a precise egality with those around her, but finds herself gently pushed in a direction which may not appeal to her. 'Mother would better not accept this invitation.' Mother cannot think of going on a shopping excursion by herself.' If friends are coming to dine with mother, Ellen or Nora or Melissa must be at home to be sure that no mistakes are made, that the dinner is perfectly served and the house precisely as it ought to be. " 'If I could ever be left to myself for a single day,' a woman once said to me, hand; but if it isn't Katherine, it's trude; and if they are all going away, they arrange, without consulting me, to have Cousin Mary or Aunt Sophia come for a causal visit, just as if I did not see through the whole transparency. I shall run away some day and give them a chance to play hide-and-seek.' "The restlessness of girlhood is unlike the restlessness of later life, but for both there might be a cure in a little wholesome neglect on the part of anxious dear ones. To the aassiduous and tenderly zealous young people who are unremitting in their waiting upon and offering relief to people who are frankly old and do not mind it, I recommend tact and the thoughtful consideration of two aspects of the case. One is that experi-If for physical and other beneficent ence counts for something as an asset, and the other that youth is steadily marching on toward age, so that it may be as well for the young to, mentally, put themselves in the place of the old.'

DAINTY HOUSE ROBES

ELEGANCE MARKS EVEN THE MOST SIMPLE NEGLIGEES.

Kimono Bodice Style Generally Affected-Pretty Yoke Effects-Modest and Inexpensive Garments For Home Wear.

The simplest negligees now have a certain elegance of form. The old loose, blousy styles that gave every woman something of a vulgar look are set aside for little adjusted effects, some of which, even in the most modest textures, suggest tea gowns. Dainty costumes called "house robes" are made in high-waisted Empire style, some band trimming outlining neck and sleeves, forming the belt and going down the front. These are made to a great degree in kimono bodice style, but very often the sleeves are cut separately, two deep shoulder plaits hiding the join at the armhole. There are any number of pretty yoke effects, with the fullness drawn in to the waist with a cord and tassel or ribbon, and without exception the most dainty of the long negligees have open necks and loose elbow sleeves.

This is because such house ments are primarily for comfort and resting moments, for unless the lounging gown is of a very elegant and coquettish sort it is never supposed to be worn outside of the bedroom.

The dressing jackets, or house sacques as they are sometimes called, permit more license with house wear. Provided they are in good materials, and prettily and becomingly made, the busy woman may wear them to breakfast and luncheon, and for the young matron to whom corsets and closer garments are irksome, such sacques, worn with skirts drawn into the waist with shirring, provide quite modest and inexpensive home garments.

A visit to any big shop will reveal carloads of the simple textures used for these restful things-lawns, dimities, batistes, dotted muslins, bordered challies, crinkled cotton crepes, imitation Japanese crepes, wash silk, checked and plain, etc. With such dainty tub materials as dimity and batiste and dotted muslin, very pretty and belts of a pretty contrasting ribbon contribute to further elegance. Still some of the most useful gowns and sacques are made of plain white or figured lawn, with only a band of plain for trimming. Here colors, pale blue, pink, yellow or apple green, will be put on white or black and white. A gown in strict kimono style, being a negligee pure and simple, always shows the plain contrasting band, and on a dainty muslin of some sort a wash ribbon often makes it.

The design shown in our sketch is quite coquettish, the short kimono sleeves, square neck and vest effect of the front being lines that might be used for any pretty wash house dress. So if there is a skirt in the same goods, such a jacket might be seen by anybody during the day, for it is the loose jacket of one thing and the skirt of another that give the negligee look. All the materials named for wrapper use are feasible here, and a novel look could be obtained by having the sacque and skirt in a figured material and the banding in black and white sease germs from the system. That's stripe. I have several times told of the usefulness of black and white as a trimming, and where remnants in any color are bought it is invaluable.

$2,300 For One Fox Skin.

The pelt of a pure black fox is the highest priced fur on the market. The sum of $2,300 has been paid to a breeder of black foxes in Prince Edward Island for one medium sized, flawless skin of exceptional beauty and luster. The average prices per pelt, run from $300 to $500 according to color and quality.

The buisness of domesticating and breeding foxes has been carried on in this island for about twenty years; it is now past the experimental stages and promises to develop into a paying industry. In more than one instance the proceeds of a sale of pure black fox skin has paid off a farm mortgage.

The black fox is very rare. Its pelt is marketed at London where the available supply is offered at auction four times a year. At the sale in January, sale was 64.

The fox reaches full growth from eight to nine months. The fur is at its best in the months of December, January and Febuary, when the animal is from two to three years old. The highest degree of care must be exercised in taking off the skin. A drop of blood or the smallbreak or defect ruins the fur for com mercial purposes. To kill the fox it is smothered or chloroformed while confined in its hut or hollow log. - Daily Consular and Trade Report.

A SURVIVING LEADER OF THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG

it will be recalled, lost a leg at Gettysburg and with one chance in 500 to live he was carried to the hospital at Washington, where on Sunday after the battle he was visited by President Lincoln, who had heard of the general's great bravery

"Sickles," said Lincoln, "I couldn't help coming to see you as soon as I heard of your arrival. I want to tell you how pleased I am with the victory at Gettysburg. I hadn't a doubt our army would win, but I am full of gratitude just the same.

"*Now, I am in prophetic mood. The doctors say you have one chance in 500 to recover. I say you will get over this trouble, that you will outlive the war and will be able to serve your country in the years to

"My left hand was next to him." General Sickles said as he finished the story. "He folded it in both of his as he bade me good-by and good cheer. That was the last time I ever saw him alive.'

Lincoln's prophecy as to the future public services of General Sickles was fulfilled. The general has been active and useful in various public capacities since the close of the struggle and despite his eighty-six years is still strong and vigorous. He has served as minister to Holland and Mexico, sat one term in congress, presided over the New York state board of civil service commissioners and was sheriff of New York county. Going Away

Mrs. Minton was dusting her best cut glass bowl-the Browning club's wedding gift to her-when a bird alighted on the window sill and sang its sweet song. At the same moment, a girl walked past wearing a bunch of sweet peas in her belt. Mrs. Minton realized that she was homesick for the garden and the birds that had been hers every year of her life until this year, and she decided she would go see the garden and the birds and the dear own people she had not seen since her wedding day.

In the course of the day Mrs. Minton wavered several times in her intention, thinking of her husband; who would care for Jack during her absence? She found herself wiping a tear away at the vision she conjured up of her husband coming into the silent apartment to spend interminable, lonely evenings without her. Still, she could talk to him on the long distance telephone and she would only stay away two days at the most.

When Minton came home to dinner, his wife broached the subject that had been uppermost in her heart all day.

"Go by all means," Minton answered cheerfully. "I've been surprised that you've stuck it out as long as you have, Bess. It must be lonesome for you here. At home, there was always one or another dropping in to see you. When will you go?"

"But you will be lonely without me, dear," Mrs. Minton said tremulously, looking across the table with sweet, troubled eyes.

"Not a bit of it," Minton said reassuringly. "I'll look up some of my old friends that I haven't seen since I was married.'

There was a moment's silence, then Mrs. Minton said slowly: "I've heard people joke about husbands being anxious to have their wives go away so they might have a good time, but I'm not in the least jealous of you, Jack, made up my mind when we were married that I never, never would be jealous. While I'm away, I want you to go around and have a perfectly splendid time. You know I'm a woman of my word, and I mean what I say when I tell you I'm not jealous. You must go and see all your old friends, and the more you enjoy yourself the less regret I shall feel at leaving you alone."

"I'll have a great time," Minton laughed. "But don't look so tragic about it, Bess. Maybe I'll go out and maybe I'll stay at home. Whichever I do, you can be certain I'm thinking of you and wishing you back; yet, at the same time, hoping that you'll stay as long as you feel like it, and that you are enjoying yourself."

This loverlike speech caused Mrs. Minton to take heart.

The next day, before she left home, she pinned a tender little note on her husband's pillow, inserted a second in the book he was reading and slipped a third into the pocket of his house coat. Then she buried her face for a moment in the coat, and with one last, lingering look, left the house.

When seated in the elevated train her attention was attracted in two women who took seats near her. The elder, a woman in tan, observed as she sank into the seat nearest the Minton dined with his friends that evening, escorted his old sweetheart home, and then went on his way won-dering why every other woman seemed so unattractive compared with his wife. He let himself into the apartment with his latchkey, turned on the electric light and gasped at sight of a crumpled up little figure asleep on the lounge. In a moment, he was beside his wife.

"Bess, wake up! What's the matter? Are you sick?" Mrs. Minton opened two heavy, tear stained eyes. "I'm glad you've come, Jack," she said. "Have you had a good time?" "First class. But what-"

"With old friends?" Jack nodded his head. "But what

"Not any one you could ever care for more than you do for me?" "Of course not, Bess. But what foolish question to ask me! It almost sounds as if you were jeal-" "Now, you are foolish, dear, after my telling you that I never, never would be jealous. It was just that I-I couldn't bear to leave you alone,

> Nothing makes a hand more unnattractive than a glove that is too tight. Yet how often one sees women with their hands almost bursting from their gloves, so tightly are they squeezed

A too tight glove will make even a slender, graceful hand look commonplace and pudgy and a hand inclined to flesh almost repulsive. So in choosing gloves one should be very careful to get them large enough, and to have the patience to have them properly

If they are not fitted properly at first the tips of the fingers never work down and the hand is made ridiculous and dowdy by the pointed tips. If the fitting is properly done the gloves will not twist and wrinkle, and will actually wear longer than if hurried carelessly over the fingers for the first

If one has to put on gloves without the assistance of a fitter the hands should be warm and the gloves well powdered, then the fingers should be insinuated into their receptacles, and finally the thumb and the hand should be fitted, but not until the fingers have been carefully worked in. To remove the glove pull it over the hand and do not drag it by the finger tips, for this spoils the shape completely. After removing the gloves and turning them right side again they should have the stretchers used to restore the shape and should be sprinkled again with powdered French chalk.

Fresh gloves are a necessary adjunct to the toilet of the woman seeking daintiness, but when they are In the times of Alexander the Great cleaned they should be cleaned sevthe Macedonian phalanx was the in- eral days before they are to be worn, vincible military formation of the so that the fumes of gasoline, and no world. Automobilist, Slayer of Pet Dog, Gets Hot Shot From the Irate Joseph P. Sherer, while impersonatng Booker T. Washington at the Westminster Civic league's annual 'gridiron" dinner, told a humorous 'experience" while "automobile riding," which, he said, illustrates the sarcasm which a woman is capable of when occasion demands.

"We were going along at an awful ! speed," he said, speaking in negro dialect. "I didn't see the dog, but I heard his 'ki-yi,' so I ordered the chauffeur to stop. Going back, we found an irate lady standing over her dead dog-one of the ugliest dogs you

For the Goldfish.

For those who have goldfish: Allow sun to shine on them for a short time each day except real hot days. If fish become moldy or cloudy appearing, put into salt water-one teaspoon of salt to quart of water, later changing to weaker solution. This will restore frozen fish and fish which have become exhausted by remaining out of water. As long as gills are wet fish will live. I have revived one after it had been out of water at least four hours. Goldfish can stand temperature as cold as zero unless they have become acclimated to warm rooms. If waste from fish is white like twine string, do not feed so often. Always remove a sick or overfed fish and keep in separate dish so he will not cause sickness in others. The subject he pitched upon was "Ossian, or the Bards." It is still recollected in Paris as perhaps the grandest spectacle that had ever been exhibited there. The consequence was that the murder of the Duke d'Enghein was totally forgotten, and nothing but the new ballet was talked of .- Sir John Sinclair, Correspondence.

Enforcing Respect.

Judges' immunity from personal violence at the hands of unsuccessful litigants, which has been long secured by almost universal respect for the judiciary, seems to have been further secured in England in the seventeenth century by drastic punishment of assailants. One convicted of a felony hrew a brickbat at Chief Justice Richardson, narrowly missing him. The prisoner was promptly indicted, and his right hand amputated and fixed to the gibbet, on which he was immediately hanged in the presence of the court, 2 Dyer, 188b.-West's Docket.
