On land that has been tilled for 1,000 years in Europe, the yields average two to three times the crops on American farms. Becomes Purchasing Agent for Maxwell.

F. A. Wade, formerly purchasing agent of the Flanders Motor company, has been made general purchasing agent of the Maxwell Motor Co., Inc., with headquarters at the executive offices, Woodward avenue and Warren.

Mr. Wade has been associated with Walter E. Flanders for many years, having been with him originally at the Ford Motor company, then purchasing agent of the E.-F. company, and in succession the Studebaker corporation, and now of the big Maxwell concern.

In addition to being one of the most astute buyers in the business, Wade has a knack of being courteous to those who have goods to sell, whether he wants to buy those particular goods or not—a quality which makes him one of the most popular of all the men in this particular department of the automobile business.

Courtesy in the purchasing department is a quality Mr. Flanders has always insisted upon. He says any one can be courteous to the man to whom he is selling. A like attitude toward those who come to sell their wares is a less common characteristic. Having sold machinery on the road for several years himself, Mr. Flanders appreciates the position of the men who go to see the purchasing agent, and he believes that courtesy toward them results in good. He believes that the purchasing agent who is too busy to see or to be courteous to them is liable to remain in ignorance of many of the latest developments and therefore unable to buy advantageously.

The above is from the Detroit Times, and will come as a pleasing piece of news to Fred's many friends in this city. This advancement places Mr. Wade at the head of what is probably the greatest purchasing department in the country.

Circle Trip to New York and Return.

A personally conducted party will leave Detroit Friday, June 20th at 5:00 p. m., via D. & C. Boats to Buffalo, rail to Niagara Falls, Great Gorge Route to Lewiston, steamer to Toronto, steamer to Montreal, rail to Plattsburg, N. Y., steamer down Lake Champlain and through Lake George, rail to Albany, steamer to New York City, returning via rail to Buffalo and boat to Detroit. Round trip fare from Detroit $60, including rail and boat transportation, rooms at hotel, stateroom on steamers and Pullman berths, but does not include meals. For additional information see Detroit & Mackinac agents.

Submerging a Forest.

The trees which occupy the area of 164 square miles that was selected for the site of Gatun lake at Panama were left standing because it would have required an expenditure of about two million dollars to clear this large space. As a tree smother when its roots are covered with water for some time, thousands of the trees in the lake already are beginning to die, and it is probable that all of them will have decayed and floated down stream within a few years.

WILSON GRAIN CO., Tawas City.

Preachers All Come to Tawas City.

The May convention of the Alpena District Ministerial Association, composed of the pastors of all the protestant churches of Northeastern Michigan, met at the Baptist church Tuesday, May 13.

Rev. O. E. Moffet welcomed the visiting brethren in a short but appropriate address, which seemed to place, everybody in just the right mood for what followed.

Rev. W. T. Roberts, president, presided over the business session. It was largely thru Rev. Roberts that the association has become so potent in promoting harmony and co-operation among the churches and ministers of different denominations.

Rev. J. Turner, pastor of the Alpena Congregational church, delivered a thoughtful discourse on "The Spiritual Outlook." This was the chief topic of the day, and was opened for discussion by all the pastors. We give a synopsis of this very able address:

The horizon in nature is the place where the earth and sky seem to join, yet in reality do not join. The spiritual horizon is the spiritual outlook. The spiritual outlook is the bounds of spiritual observation, yet only the seeming bounds, for the line advances as we advance. Above the horizon of our spiritual life the outlook reveals:

1. A gradually growing spirit of tolerance.

2. A gradually growing spirit of co-operation.

3. A gradually growing spirit of effort, arising from a gradually deepening sense of individual effort.

We have come a long way. We have a long way to go to reach the perfection of development, the high standard of excellence which is the ultimate object of attainment. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God to the perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

The Baptist ladies then served dinner in the church dining, which many room pronounced the best part of the entire program.

After dinner Rev. J. B. Brown took the subject of "Denominational Unity." We give a synopsis, but one must get the thrilling incidents and anecdotes with which he illustrated to form an adequate conception of this address.

"There is a merging of churches in name and in form which has often been attempted and which invariably has failed. Purely external. One in name but in reality many."

June 9 Good Road Day.

The plan to build a highway from Bay City to Cheboygan in one day—June 9—is receiving the united support of every city, village, township and county thru which the road is to pass. Enthusiastic citizens of Northeastern Michigan are pledging cash and work to make the task a success. It is estimated that more than 4,000 men will be engaged in the work, and that when the sun sets on the evening of Monday, June 9, there will be a good highway from Bay City to Cheboygan, in condition for any vehicle to drive with speed, safety and comfort.

State Highway Commissioner Rogers has made a trip over the entire line this week, and it is the intention of the builders to have every mile of the road built according to the state reward specifications.

The line will pass across Isosco county from Prescott to Whittemore, north to the Hemlock, thence east to this city, and from here thru Wilber to AuSable to Mikado, in Alcona county.

This gigantic undertaking can be traced directly to the result of the work done by the Northeastern Michigan Development Bureau, during its three years of activity. This is but one of the great benefits derived from united efforts to make Northeastern Michigan what it should be—the greatest section of a great state. This work has but just begun, and every man who has the love of home in his heart should unite in pushing this great work. The benefit to be derived from this enterprise will be vast to each and every community thru which it passes. Thousands of tourists will pass over this road to reach the summer resorts along the Huron Shore and the north. Our rich agricultural lands, with beautiful farm homes, will be brought to their notice as never before.

Let June 9, 1913, mark an epoch in the history of Michigan, especially Northeastern Michigan.

"Where there is no vision my people perish." "The entrance of my word gives light." "The law of the Lord is perfect, connecting the soul." Vision—Sight—Entrance into a Higher Life and God's Word were the points emphasized. It was a forceful and masterful discourse.

Rev. John Pearson offered resolutions in memory of Father Prescott. Many spoke feelingly in support of them.

Mr. Hood, in connection with this service, sang the lines of Tennyson's poem, "When I Have Crossed the Bar," which was well received.

Stay in Michigan.

The smash of the irrigation projects is a great lesson to Michigan farmers tempted to leave the fertile land of this state for the "reclaimed deserts" of the west.

It proves that fortunes have to be built on a safer foundation than the pretty pictures in a prospectus.

It proves that the press agents of the west have found no royal road to agricultural prosperity.

It proves that Dame Nature with the rains and the equable climate which she has given Michigan is a far safer proposition than the artificial ditches of an irrigation "paradise."

The desert was to be made to bloom like a rose; the trouble was that the leaves fell off at the first wind of adversity and only the thorns remained.

The story in the Press last night told how competent farmers on some of the best advertised of the projects are giving up the fight in despair. They have learned too late that the east and middle west, which they abandoned, is a pretty good place after all.

The moral of their failure is the folly of following the will of the wisp of publicity promoters to strange states and strange conditions.

The farmer trained to his work in conjunction with nature seldom is able to accommodate himself to a system that substitutes complicated dikes and cross dikes for the normal rainfall. While he is finding out how little he knows about irrigation, his crops are dying, his cattle starving, his family pinching on the necessities of life. In the meantime Landlord Uncle Sam keeps right on demanding his payments for the millions he has sunk in dams, wells and reservoirs.

"Stay in Michigan" is a slogan that has been repeated many times. It has a particularly comfortable ring now that time has poked a hole in the irrigation bubble.—Grand Rapids Press.

Your Attitude Toward Money.

Save and teach all you are interested in to save; thus pave the way for moral and material success.—Thomas Jefferson.

Do you think of money in terms of what it will buy or what it will earn? When a sum of money comes into your possession, do you at once figure on how to spend it or do you plan on putting it at work profitably to earn more money for you? A good many persons overlook the fact that when they spend a sum of money they give up the benefit of the earning power of that particular sum for all the rest of their lives. If the expenditure in question is worth that, all well and good, but if your better judgment tells you it is not, you would be wiser to save the money and let it earn more for you in a savings bank account or in some safe investment.

Do you ever stop to figure compound interest? Do you know how important a part it plays in the accumulation of wealth? Combined with frugality and sound investment, compound interest is the foundation upon which the majority of fortunes are built. It works silently but incessantly—Sundays, week days, holidays. It works while you sleep and while you play. At four per cent semi-annually compounded interest, any sum will double itself in approximately seventeen and a half years. In other words, suppose when your son is born you put $1,000 in a savings bank for him and just let it alone there. Forget it, if you wish, until the boy is ready to go to college. Then by the time he is eighteen years of age and ready to matriculate as a freshman, there is not just $1,000, but $2,000, waiting for him in the bank—enough to pay his way thru the whole four years college course. Or, if he does not want to go to college, the $2,000 would give him a good start in business or on a farm. In any case he would be fitted to start on a successful career in life.

Of course, you might decide that you would get more benefit out of that thousand dollars by using it. Perhaps you might come to the conclusion that a summer's trip to Europe would pay good dividends in health and happiness and result in greater working efficiency. That would be all right if you felt reasonably sure that the probability of a larger income later on was strong enough to warrant your counting on it.

to provide for the future requirements of yourself and your family. It is a matter for each individual to decide. Doubtless the wisest plan is to choose the happy medium between spending and saving.

Pays to Teach Agriculture.

It pays to teach agriculture. According to a bulletin just issued by the United States bureau of education, the teacher of agriculture in the high school usually receives a considerably higher salary than the teacher of subjects. The most usual salary for male teachers in high schools in the United States is $70, but for teachers of agriculture in the group studied the most usual salary was $1,200.

"Lack of teachers," is the explanation offered by the authors of the bulletin to account for the relatively higher remuneration for those who teach agriculture. When the subject was first introduced into the schools a short summer course provided sufficient training, but with the extension of the work to include several years of careful high school study under scientific farming conditions, there has come a demand for trained agricultural teachers that has exhausted the supply. Furthermore, many of the states are giving aid to local high schools for agricultural instruction, so that these schools are able to pay better salaries for teachers of agriculture than for teachers of other branches.

Not only is it found that the average pay of special instructors in agriculture is higher than that of other teachers, but that teachers who are able to give such instruction in addition to regular work command better salaries than they otherwise would, and are more likely to be advanced to principalships than if they did not have the agriculture.—Bay City Times.

The Young Man and the Farm.

In an article entitled "The Penniless Farmer's Chance," in the current issue of Farm and Fireside, appears the following: "In spite of the cry that the high price of land is driving young farmers to some other occupation, there never was a time when an ambitious young country man had a better chance than right now. It is true that farm lands, implements, the cost of living and clothing are high, but there are some other things high on the other side of the sheet. Farm products are selling at a very high rate, farm labor is very scarce, and farm opportunities are multiplying every year.

"With the bare hands any young man can lay the foundation of a modest fortune in a short time, and do it under the most healthful and invigorating conditions. In other words, there was never such a demand for good tenants as there is at present—tenants, not farm hands. Of course there is a steady cry for farm hands, but a young man should seek a place as a tenant instead of as a laborer, for in the former there are chances that the country is just waking up to all over the land.

"Hundreds of middle-aged men in every county in the older part of the farming community are wanting to retire from active work either by moving off the farm or taking a young man into partnership with them. These men feel that they have earned a rest, yet there is no one to whom they can safely entrust their business.

"Their own sons have gone to the cities or are settled on farms of their own, and the hired men they are able to get are a vexation to the spirit in most instances. In despair the farmer sells out and invests the money in bonds or something else, to be rid of the care of the farm, and then moves to town. And right here is where the ambitious young man finds his chance."

"Tired out, weak, nervous men and women would feel ambitious, energetic, full of life and always have a good appetite if they would do the sensible thing for health—take Electric Bitters. Nothing better for the stomach, liver or kidneys. Thousands say they owe their lives to this wonderful home remedy. Mrs. O. Rhine-vault, of Vestal Center, N. Y., says: "I regard Electric Bitters as one of the greatest of gifts. I can never forget what it has done for me." Get a bottle yourself and see what a difference it will make in your health. Only 50c and $1.00. Recommended by J. M. Wuggazer & Co., Tawas City, and Jas. E. Dillon, East Tawas.

Wanted—A Recipe for Harmony.

Progressive republicans from ten states are assembled in Chicago to experiment after the methods of the celebrated Frankenstein. The original Frankenstein skillfully combined members and fragments of several individuals until he had completed the physical structure of a man. His creation was an anatomical wonder, but the final touch was lacking, for, while the inventor was able to inspire his creature with life, he could not equip it with a soul or a moral nature. This lack made of his freak a monstrous thing, more dangerous than a wild beast, and it became the bane of his life.

The progressive republicans in fact and the progressive republicans in pretense are getting together for an attempt at hybridizing the republican progressives and the republican standpatters into one amiable, intelligent and harmonious whole, on a basis that will please all parties.

The reorganized party, in order to please all the elements in itself, must have a platform of rare and curious workmanship which will read to the stand-patter like an unwavering adherence to the old regime which went into the discard, and which will be equally pleasing to those ardent progressives who were unable to break into the game in other states as convincingly as they did in Michigan, California, Idaho, Washington and Minnesota. This recalls the story of the dog which had the habit of meeting a stranger with savage growls while he would wag his tail industriously. A nervous friend of the owner was treed by the dog as he came into the yard, and the owner came to the rescue greatly amused by his friend's misunderstanding of the animal. "He won't bite you; he's just having a little fun with you. Can't you see that he is wagging his tail all the time?" The nervous caller remarked that this assurance of the owner was very comforting.

"But," he inquired, "how is a perfect stranger to the dog to know which end of him to believe?" The contention between the fabricators of the new party will be interesting, if not amusing, for one faction will try to suppress the standpat growl and quicken the wagging of the tail, while the other will wish to make the growl fiercer than before and cut the tail off at its root. It is quite certain that the new party must be remodeled upon the most discreet lines of compromise, for otherwise both factions may lose members to the party that is already in power. Politicians who are more bent upon crowding up to the pie counter than upon legislating for the public welfare are always drawn by magnetic attraction to the organization that is in power.—Detroit News.

Beautiful Service.

Hold on—don't let this story escape you: There appeared in the public prints the other day, quite obscurely and in a corner, the statement that Mrs. Minnie Hart has taken on herself the loving labor of planting flowers and shrubs in the barren New York Potter's Field on Hart's island, where sleep 180,000 of the city's nameless, forgotten poor awaiting the dawn of the Endless Morning. Beautiful service, the thought of a White Soul, one that makes us better, tenderer, just to read, and talk and think about, isn't it? And how gently it points the way to the Forgotten Fields where opportunities for such services lie waiting the waking of other tender hearts! Why, come to think of it, there is limitless room on every hand for countless kind deeds—deeds that outshine ancient lineage, high position and all the other things that fade.—Selected.

About Birds.

BY L. H. BELKNAP.

The warblers form a group of very interesting birds. There are in all about forty different species that visit Michigan. They have slender, pointed bills which they use in probing flowers and bark crevices for insects. As plant lice form the greater part of their food, the good that they do is incommensurate.

Nearly every bird lover gets along well finding out the names of the other of the Michigan birds, but when they come to the warblers their troubles commence. It seems hard to get near them for observation. However, some of the more common ones are easily recognizable after a few observations.

Their name is a misnomer, as, except for the ovenbird and water thrushes, they are not good singers. The following warblers are our most common and characteristic:

The Yellow Warbler—This is the yellowest of all our birds and is called the yellow summer bird. It arrives early in May and is to be found everywhere in garden, orchard, woods and swamps. The male has chestnut streaks on the sides, and the female duller and without the streaks. Prof. Barrows says that the yellow warbler is constantly victimized by the cowbird, which lays its eggs in the yellow warbler's nest. It then is forced to hatch the eggs of this parasite. However, it has been found in many instances that this interesting little creature has built a cover over the cowbird's eggs and then laid its own eggs again. In a few cases it has been found to build a second cover, making a three-storied nest. The food of this warbler consists of insects and spiders. Its song is described as a sharp, vigorous "che-wee, che-wee, che-wee."

The myrtle warbler is recognized by the yellow patches on its crown, sides and rump, and the large white spots on the outer tail feathers. It is also streaked with white and black below. It gets its name from the fact that it is very fond of the wax-myrtle or bayberry, which it feeds upon during migration on the Atlantic Coast. It nests in Northern Michigan, and perhaps a few nest in this county. They are the only ones of the warblers that travel in large flocks, and sometimes a small woodland is alive with them as they stop to feed on insects. This bird is small and nimble and catches insects too small for other birds. In fact, the largest insect that it catches is the common house-fly. Seton Thompson describes its song as "phee, phee, phee, phee-phee, phee-phee, phee-phee, the first part being uttered very rapidly, and the last with deliberation."

The black and white warbler is about the size of the canary, and is streaked and spotted everywhere with black and white, with a white stripe thru the middle of the crown. Because of the fact that it creeps along limbs of trees it is called the black and white creeper, and that is the name that it is commonly known by. Its habits are a combination of those of the woodpecker, nut-hatch, chickadee and warbler. It places its nest on the ground and generally under some shelter.

The black-throated blue warbler has the upper parts of blue, the throat, breast and sides clear black, and the belly pure white. These birds are most often found in swamps or damp woods, where they may be found at low elevations. It builds a very pretty nest of leaves, fibrous bark and roots, which it covers externally, very often, with birch bark. Its food consists of insects.

The magnolia warbler has a rich yellow rump and upper parts, the latter streaked with black. It also has a dark tail, with a streak of white across it. There seems quite a difference of opinion as to its song. One writer describes it this way: "She knew she was right; yes, she knew she was right." Like the rest of the warblers, it is a great insect eater. Reed says that this is the least timid of the warblers, and that often he had one or more of them follow him along the whole length of a piece of woods, apparently out of curiosity.

The ovenbird has a crown of orange brown, bordered by black. Its back is olive and its breast spotted. This bird is found in the open woodlands. It is also called the "teacher," from its song, "teacher, teacher, teacher." The ovenbird builds a beautiful nest of leaves, bark and grasses arched over the top, leaving a very small opening, hence being in the shape of an oven, it gets its name ovenbird. Besides the song just mentioned it has another delightful carol which it utters from higher in the air as it descends on motionless wings, dropping like a stone into the woods as it finishes its last notes.

Must Remove Noxious Weeds.

It is within the power of highway commissioners to compel landowners to remove noxious weeds from their premises, according to an opinion given by Attorney-General Grant Fellows.

The question was brought up by Joseph Detzler, highway commissioner at Vanderbilt. Detzler set out to enforce the law requiring that harmful weeds be killed. He discovered that some expense was attached to the operation. This expense, he stated in a letter to the attorney-general, the property owners refused to put themselves to. Under the ruling made by the chief of the state's advisory department, Detzler may clear away the weeds and chalk up the bill against the land owners.

Has Signed 303 Bills.

A dispatch from Lansing says: Three hundred and three of the acts passed by the 1913 legislature have so far been signed by Gov. Ferris.

The greater number of these will not go into effect until August 15, 90 days following the date of final adjournment of the legislature.

Some 435 bills were put thru by the house and senate in its four months of law-making. Of these 242 were house bills and 193 were senate bills. Gov. Ferris must still sign 132. His signature must be attached within five days following May 15.

How to Make Dwarf Trees.

How gardeners manage to grow miniature pines, firs and oaks in flower pots for half a century has always been more or less of a secret. It is the result, chiefly of skillful, long-continued, root-pruning. They aim first and last at the seat of vigorous growth, endeavoring to weaken it just as far as possible without destroying the life of the tree. They begin with the young plant, say a seedling of a cedar or hemlock, when only two or three inches high, and cut off its tap-roots as soon as it has other rootlets enough to live upon, and replant it in a shallow earthen pot or pan.

The end of the tap-root is generally made to rest on the bottom of the pan, or on a flat stone within it. Alluvial clay is then put into the pot, much of it in bits the size of beans, and just enough in kind and quantity to furnish a scanty nourishment to the plant. Just enough of water, light and heat is given to keep it alive, but not enough to excite a vigorous habit. Gardeners usually pride themselves on the shape of their miniature trees, and they use strings, wires and pegs, and various other mechanical devices, to promote symmetry of habit, or to fashion their pets into odd fancy figures. Thus, by using very shallow pots, the development of the tap-roots is impossible, and by using poor soil and little of it, and little water, rapid growth is prevented. Then, too, the top and side roots, which are within easy reach of the gardener, are shortened by means of a pruning knife, or are seared with a hot iron. In this manner the little tree is headed off on every side and is allowed to grow just enough to live and look healthy. Accordingly, each new set of leaves becomes more and more stunted, the buds and rootlets are diminished in proportion, and at length a balance is established between every part of the tree, making it a dwarf in all respects. In some species this end is reached in three or four years, while in others ten or fifteen years are required.

BE KIND TO YOUR HORSE and all Dumb Creatures—it shows the Gentleman.

Clays, Shales, and Slate.

Clays are ultimately derived from the decay of older rocks, the finer particles being carried off by streams and deposited along channels, in lakes, or along parts of the seacoast or seabottom. In chemical composition the clays are made up essentially of silica and alumina, though nearly all contain more or less iron oxide and many contain lime, magnesia, alkali and sulphur, but usually in small percentages.

Shales are clays which have become hardened by pressure. The so-called "fire clays" of the "Coal Measures" are shales, as are many of the other "clays" of commerce.

Slates, so far as origin is concerned, are merely a form of shale in which a fine, even and parallel cleavage has been developed by pressure. In composition, therefore, they vary exactly as do the shales. Commercial considerations in the slate industry, however, give slate considerable local importance as Portland cement material. In preparing either roofing slate or mill stock for market there is enormous waste, so much material being lost in splitting, sawing, and dressing that only 10 to 25 per cent of the rock quarried reaches the market, the remaining 75 to 90 per cent going to the dump heap. Much of this slate waste is of proper composition for use, in combination with limestone, in a Portland cement mixture, and as it is a troublesome waste product, the refuse slate could be obtained at the cost of handling by a cement plant near a slate quarry. The waste slate would be serviceable enough, so far as chemical composition is concerned, and could be used in place of clay or shale in the cement mixture. To the cement manufacturer it would be worth as much as an equivalent amount of clay or shale, but no more.—Bulletin 522, U. S. Geological Survey.

Health a Factor in Success

The largest factor contributing to a man's success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowels are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. For constipation you will find nothing quite so good as Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. They are sold by all dealers.

There is a chemist in Paris who sold eggs at from $1 a dozen upward, and found plenty of customers for them. Knowing how strongly many people object to taking medicine in its natural form, he used to impregnate the eggs with drugs of various kinds. Persons suffering from insomnia could be supplied with anti-pyrexin eggs, influenza patients with quinine eggs and others with different varieties, according to their complaints.

T.C.H.S. put herself at the top of the league last Saturday by winning from E.T.H.S. on the home grounds. It was another of those close scored ones, and until the last man was put out in the ninth the result was an unknown quantity. T.C.H.S. scored all her runs in the fourth frame on two singles, a double, two bases on balls, two errors and five stolen bases. Enough to win any game. Errors and hits were responsible for the four East Tawas runs, but as their base-running ability was not of the best, they were unable to run in many at a time.

The work of both Moore and Halligan was good, especially with the bases jammed. Such pitching is not often seen in high school ball.

T.C.H.S. takes on Oscoda tomorrow on the home grounds. Let's all get out and cheer the boys on to another victory. Box score:

That Sea-Sick Feeling.
 Bill—I see it is said that in proportion to the number of passengers carried only about half as many persons lose their lives on seagoing vessels as on railroad trains.

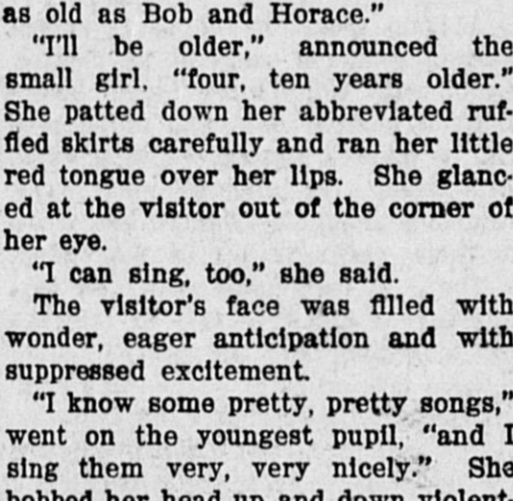

Jill—Perhaps. But just think of what other things the seagoers lose!

HER MODEST OPINION

By JAMES JOLLY.
 The youngest pupil in the dancing class pouted a few times in front of the visitor, who rewarded her efforts with a beaming smile. Thus encouraged, the younger pupil climbed up on the chair beside the visitor and folded her plump hands in her white muslin lap.
 "Don't you think I dance very nicely?" she inquired, after a moment's silence. "Last year I came six, four, two, eleven times, but this year I come all the time."
 "How very nice," said the visitor enthusiastically. "And how do you like it?"
 "The youngest member's eyes danced. 'Oh, I love it, very much,' she confided, 'and I can dance very well now.' Her face clouded slightly. 'Bob won't dance with me, though. He doesn't like to.'"
 "That's very strange," said the visitor. "I wonder why?"
 "I don't know," replied the youngest pupil, shaking her head. "He says I haven't been coming long enough. He says next year he'll dance with me if I want him to."
 "That's something to look forward to, anyway," said the visitor encouragingly. "Which one is Bob?"
 The youngest pupil waved a hand in the direction of the group of boys, who were going through some exercises that were prescribed by the rules of no dancing school.
 "He's that one that's fighting with Horace," she said calmly. "Horace, he won't dance with me, either. He says I'm too little."
 "Well, time will cure that," said the visitor sympathetically.
 "Next year I'll be a big girl," the smallest pupil went on to explain. "I'm five now and next year I'll be twelve."
 "Indeed!" said the visitor, somewhat startled at this rapid flight of time. "And then I suppose you'll be as old as Bob and Horace."
 "I'll be older," announced the small girl, "four, ten years older."
 She patted down her abbreviated ruffled skirts carefully and ran her little red tongue over her lips. She glanced at the visitor out of the corner of her eye.
 "I can sing, too," she said.
 The visitor's face was filled with wonder, eager anticipation and with suppressed excitement.
 "I know some pretty, pretty songs," went on the youngest pupil, "and I sing them very, very nicely." She bobbed her head up and down violently two or three times in keen appreciation of her own accomplishments. "I would sing you one," she said, "but the dancing lady won't let me sing here. I did sing once and she said it was very nice, but she thought I better wait and sing when I got home. So now I wait."
 "That's very discreet of you, but it seems to me the dancing lady didn't show much appreciation of your vocal accomplishments."
 The songstress weighed this in her mind.
 "No," she replied, after a moment. "But then I think maybe she hasn't got any. She's a very nice lady," she concluded.
 For some reason the visitor coughed behind her handkerchief.
 "I don't doubt it," she agreed when she had slightly recovered from her cough. "It may be that she just lacks the artistic temperament. Some people are very materialistic, you know."
 "Yes, I know," agreed the youngest pupil courteously.
 The two companions sat watching the children dance for a few minutes.
 "How nicely the little girls dance," said the visitor presently. "Which one do you think dances the best?"
 The youngest pupil pondered silently, her head cocked on one side like a contemplative robin.
 "I know," she said after a while, "but I guess I'd better not tell."
 "Why not?" queried the visitor. "If you'll tell me, then I'll tell you which one I think is the best dancer."
 "I guess I better not," reaffirmed the small pupil. "But I'll tell you how she's dressed."
 "Do," urged the visitor.
 "She's got on a white dress," said the mite, smoothing down her dainty little frock tenderly, "and white shoes"—she held up first one foot and then the other and looked at them admiringly—"and pink ribbons on her hair." She gave her head a quick little turn and was rewarded by the vanishing view of the end of a big, pink bow. "But I guess I'd better not tell you her name."
 "I wish you would tell me," begged the visitor. "I won't tell a soul."
 "I guess I'd better not," reiterated the small pupil. She slipped down off her chair. "Now I guess I'll go ask Frank to dance with me. Sometimes, you know, he will."
 "I'm awfully sorry to have you go," said the visitor, "but I hope Frank will dance with you and that you'll have a nice time."
 "I think maybe he will," said the smallest pupil hopefully. "Most of the girls don't like to dance with him, so sometimes he dances with me." She stood looking around the hall for a moment. Then she turned impulsively and threw her arms around the visitor's neck.
 "I'll tell you who I think is the best dancer," she whispered. "Me."

HE DIDN'T STAY TO LAUGH

DURING THE DISCUSSION
 Mr. Spat—Now, if you'll just listen to me—
 Mrs. Spat—Oh, you can't convince me.
 Mr. Spat—Probably not, but if we're going to spend the rest of the night in argument I want my share of the time.

A DOUBTFUL THEORY

Chinner—I had to laugh at the ball game today. It always makes me laugh when anybody's caught napping.
 Miss Wearyone—Really? Then I'm afraid you'll be laughing at me in a few minutes.
