Satisfy Yourself.

It is not what people say about youit's what you are that counts. The one person in all this world whom you should aim to satisfy is yourself. You alone and other other expenses, but it stands know yourself. Other people know your outside appearance, your actions, you deeds. You, and you alone, know your motives, your ambitions, your thoughts,

Are you satisfied with yourself? It is your own fault if you are not. Are you satisfied that you are doing the best you can in your work, that you are making the most of your time? Are you confident that your conduct toward your family, your friends, your neighbors, your employer, cannot be improved?

Look yourself straight in the face this morning, in your mind's looking glass. Ask yourself whether it is what people say about you or what you are that hurts. Analyze your own conduct in all

Put yourself in the other fellow's place and try to see your actions through his eyes. Imagine that you are your employer instead of yourself. Answer honestly whether, if he knew as much about you as you know about yourself, he would discharge you or would raise your wages. If you do this conscientiously there are many things you will do differ- (standard time.)

Remember this, too: Other people's pinion of you is based on your opinion of yourself. Are you self-respecting? 7 Other people will respect you. Are you truthful? The world will believe you. Are you honest? Everyone will trust

But weigh yourself frequently. Weigh yourself earnestly. Be certain that your own opinion of yourself is justified. Be ston in the American Magazine.

The money he receives is by no means clear gain, for out of it must come taxes, clothing, wages for help at least for an actual income much larger. Many a city man with an income of $1500 a year would feel himself fortunate to have $640 remaining after paying the rent and bills for food and fuel for his family for a year. Of course the average of $640 means that a very large number of farmers make more than this amount annually, but even with this sum one need not envy the city worker with a greater number of dollars in his pocket. Those dollars have many places to go of which the farmer knows nothing. -Ex.

TAWAS CITY, MICH., Oct. 10, 1913

The ease with which crime can be committed and the criminal escape punishment is a serious reflection on the police and judicial department of our government. Hundreds'of crimes are committed every year in the United States, of which the perpetrators are never discovered, and hundreds more the truth of which would never be known but for the confession of the criminal when caught in some later depredation. The inefficiency of our machinery for apprehending the criminal and the laxity of our courts in dealing with him when caught is responsible in a great measure for the innumerable crimes which are daily chronicled in the public press.

The farmers who are complaining that the new tariff removes the tax on agricultural products should remember that the same tariff bill also removes the tax on agricultural machinery, thus benefiting them and making possible a reduction in the cost of raising and taking care of their products.

Secretary of State Bryan characterizes the new tariff law as "the best tariff law since the war." Better wait until you see siders walking insipid, suggests a rehow well it works out before vival of the bicycle. There is someeulogizing it too much, Bill.

Light Plant Runs Itself.

An automatic electric lighting plant. designed for private house use, is mounted on two cross girders for convenient portability, and comprises an oil engine, dynamo, automatic starting switch and water tank.

The small battery also supplied has a capacity much below that of the charging plant. The apparatus is so designed that while the battery is charged and not at work the engine is at rest, and it continues at rest while the lamps turned on are being fed sufficiently by the stored current.

But when the battery voltage falls below a certain point the automatic switch sets the machinery in motion. The starting current-quickly cut off by a time-limit circuit breaker-turns the dynamo, and this starts the engine, which runs as long as needed.

When the lessened use of current permits the battery to become sufficiently charged the switch stops the

and some portions of it were found to be too wet for raising ordinary crops.

Therefore the experts set willows out in the wet places, and there has been so smart a growth that the govern-

WOMAN TELLS HOW SHE OVER-CAME PROCRASTINATION.

Strict Mental Drill Enabled Her Learn Promptness and Intelligently Work to Accomplish Her

Daily Tasks, Of all my many bad habits, I think procrastination was the very worst I used to put things off and quiet my conscience with the easy excuse that another time would answer every purpose, or that, if circumstances had been easier, I would have done it in time enough. I had a startling realization of the strength of this bad habit one day when serious consequences had resulted: so I determined then and there with all the force of my will that I would break it up and rout my enemy, foot and horse. Little did I dream of what was before me. tried-God knows how I tried!-but the habit was victor more often than I, till at last one night after I had gone to bed almost in despair over my many defeats, like a flash came back to me the psychologic basis of habit making: that our habits are paths running through our brain. With that thought in mind I began intelligently to combat my foe. The rules I worked out for breaking my bad habits are these: Since good habits are as powerful as bad ones. I determined to replace my bad habit of procrastination by the good one of promptness. In fact, to let the old pathway disappear for lack of use and to develop a new one. That this new pathway might soon become strongly marked by much use, I made important engagements that must be carried out on the minute or not at all, plans in which an instant of delay would result so disastrously that I shuddered at the thought. I never allowed an exception. I set every ounce of will power I possesed against one slipback. If I said at night that I would get up the moment my watch said seven o'clock, I got ment that only 100 of the cuttings will up, even though the town clock had not yet struck the hour.

After a time, as I gained my victor-A New Yorker who says he is chain- les, I devised all kinds of things as a test of my growing power of promptness; things that were not at all necessary, such as completing a book in a certain time, arriving on a specified corner at a definite moment, or reaching an appointment one minute before the appointed hour. Thus I practiced my new habit every possible opportunity. After many trials I observed that my will was having an easier time than before, until, in the course of a year and a half, promptness was so much second nature to me that I never thought of procrastination.—Lucia Bosley, in the American Magazine.

ALMOST "CUT IT OUT"

By A. F. BONNEY.

With elbows wide spread on the top rail of the yard fence, hands under clean-shaven chin, he smoked lazily on his "paper pipe." His big spurs hung idle on the high heels of his boots, the empty pistol scabbard clung to his lithe hip. The scabbard was decorated for the owner of it had artistic taste and talent, while he lacked the language to express the idea in such words: he had "just fixed it up to look nice," he said. It had been a lazy day for him, one of the few which had come into his life, and he reflected morosely on the extreme comfort of a life of toilless ease. From the fine elevation of a man of leisure he surveyed those of his own craft as they worried the sullen cattle past the place, their explosive English toned down in deference to the divinity that ruled there, and the "company." For once he was aloof from his own kind, a guest of the

There was a consideration which added to the habitual scowl on his brow, the inevitable return to the saddle; the weary night guard, the frenzied chase after the stamping herd. The retribution for a few days of ease he saw looming in the tomorrow, a whole perspective of tomorrows, in fact, and unconsciously the smoke of his cigarette oozing from lips and nostrils was mixed and blended with his one persistent soliloquy:

"Aw, cut it out!" His savage glance now took in for the first time the girl, who was watching him with amused interest. It gave him a queer, not unpleasant sensation. and conscious of height, weight and a certain savage beauty of head, he drew himself up, taking a pull at his neglected smoke.

The most of the herd was now past the house, and the girl and the owner's son went out through the calves were being branded. As they | him into the river. passed the taciturn one the owner's son said, pleasantly:

"This is all very novel and interesting to us, while constant repetition has, I presume, made it monotonous to

After deep thought the man deftly rolled another smoke, and started to answer, when his eyes met those of the girl, deep, blue eyes, which laughed out from a pink and white face framed in a tangle of golden curls, the bewildering combination shaded by a flower-bedecked summer hat. His heart struck his throat, and setting his teeth in his inoffensive cigarette he growled: "Aw, cut it out!"

And then there came a distant yell, mingled with the sound of pounding hoofs, and turning to look he saw a maddened steer charging down on the two, the bright crimson of the girl's sash a focus for his murderous efforts.

The sullen-eyed man spat out the roll of paper his teeth held and, sweeping his big hat from his head, sprang for the fence, which he cleared at a bound, feeling for his gun as he landed on the other side, to give vent to an untranslatable snarl of rage as his hand groped over the empty scabbard. The steer was within a few feet of the glaring red thing now, never pausing at the sight of so common a thing as a cowboy, until with a savage "Aw, cut it out!" the man hurled himself on the one hand and a horn with the other. As the muzzle of the brute was driven into the sand there came the cracking of pistol shot; but the bullets, spent from long flight, only angered the brute the more.

Then: "Aw, cut-" and merciful oblivion cut it out for him.

He lay for a long time dimly conscious of life, not remembering and not caring, only wondering a little regarding his surroundings. Something very like his mother's hand was smoothing his brow, while his nostrils took in a perfume new to the desert He was not breathing easily, while there was a strange roaring in his ears, through which he heard words of lavish praise he could not understand nor apply, then, all in a flash, his mind cleared and he opened his eyes, his lips moving silently with: "Aw cut it out!"

The ranch owner stood over him twisting his hands together.

"My boy!" he cried, "you saved their lives. You did, by Jove! And Equine Ingratitude.

Sloane Gordon, the magazine writer, once lived in Hamilton, O. When the flood rolled over half that state Gordon was handy to Hamilton and thought he'd go there and help. One day, enthusiastically rowing about the streets of Hamilton in a skiff, he heard a whinny from an old gray horse, which had crawled on the roof of a house caught in the waters.

"That horse," said Mr. Gordon. tears starting to his eyes, "is hungry." So he rowed for two miles until he found a bag of oats. Then he rowed the two miles back, slowly this time, because it was upstream. When he came in sight the old gray horse shouted in rejoicing. It is very difficult to climb the roof of a house which is teetering in a flood. But Gordon did it. He fixed a nosebag of oats on the snuffing nose of the whingate to the corall near by, where some nying veteran. Then the horse kicked

"Why, Walter," protested Edna, half amused and wholly amazed, "Billy and I have been brought up like brother and sister, and had never been separated until he went west a few years ago. I couldn't get up the least sentiment for him even if I didn't care for you."

"But you are not brother and sister, and I tell you frankly it maddens me to see him appropriate you as a matter of course, and I will not permit you to drive with him as frequently as you do.

Further argument followed, but Walter was peremptory in reiterating his commands. He left the city that night on a business trip, and in his absence Edna made her plans quietly and unalterably.

As she sat alone in her boudoir, pondering over the estrangement, she heard the patter of little steps in the hall, and she lifted her head expectantly. Lillian had been spending the day with her father.

DISTRIBUTE COST OF ROADS

Let Money Spent Be Levied Upon Assessed Valuation of State-New York Plan Favored.

Country roads should be built and maintained from the funds of the general public. No public road is of purely local importance; no community nor industry but is in some degree dependent upon the efficiency of all highways. Since the development of automobiles, more than half the traffic on the average country road is purely city traffic. Why should townships, for instance, be made to bear their equal share for road expense regardless of wealth and resources. when the roads to be built benefit neighboring communities and even distant cities as much, and sometimes more, than the immediate locality. Roads are the arteries and veins of

UNITED STATES GOOD ROADS

Estimated That Percentage of Improved Thoroughfares Gone Well Beyond Nine Per Cent.

In the past three years it is roughly estimated that the percentage of improved roads in the United States has gone well beyond 9 per cent. and possibly close to 10 per cent. It is estimated that if 20 per cent. of the public highways were improved-each highway being selected and improved with a view to the proportionate traffic upon it-a high degree of efficiency in highway transportation would be reached. It is figured that millions of dollars would be saved annually in the transportation of crops, the wear and tear on horses and vehicles, and in the minimizing of the waste in truck farming. Where roads are bad, the farmers frequently find it impossible to get their products to the shipping points and thus perishable products are wasted, perceptibly increasing the cost of living.

More British Doctors.

By a change in the by-laws of the Royal College of Physicians in London, made in December last, says the British Medical Journal (London), the number of persons entitled to use the title of "Doctor" in Great Britain has been largely increased, although, curiously enough, the number of qualified physicians remains precisely the same. The fact is that until this change all British physicians were not entitled to be called "Doctor." Only those who had received the doctorial degree from a university were so entitled. The Royal college gives diplomas to its graduates, but has no power to confer degrees. To the ordinary citizen, however, a physician is a "Doctor," degree or no degree; and the British apostles of red tape have been obliged to bow to the popular will. The Royal College of Physicians of London, by the alteration in its bylaws, has recognized this fact.

Time-Telling Inventions.

It seems that the invention of clocks and watches was not the fruit of a single discovery, but was really a slow growth, side by side with many other advances in civilization, and of course the earliest clocks and instruments were sun dials.

The invention of the sun dial is generally attributed to a Grecian astronomer who died about 547 B. C.

The dial was followed by the hourglass, and this by the water clock, which marked time by the escape of water through an orifice. These were introduced into Rome about 158 B. C., but are believed to have been in use in Chaldea and Egypt for a hundred years previous to that date.

In a "Higher" Grade.

That juvenile human nature remains pretty much the same always would seem freshly indicated by the quaint incident related in a famous author's recent reminiscenses of his childhood. The said author had an older brother whom he admired hugely, and whose society he desired to enjoy as much as might be. There came a time, however, when the older boy revolted against, the too frequent companionship of the younger, and thus gravely explained the grounds of his superiority:

"I play with boys who curse and
