Sign Your Name.

An admonition that is as old as news papers themselves, and one which seems never will be observed in all instances, is the signing of one's name when sending communications to a paper. We have repeatedly stated that all communications must be signed to receive attention in this office. Writing on this subject, an Ohio exchange says:

communications have been received without the names of the senders during the past week. In keeping with the general rule observed by newspapers no communication is published by the Transcript when the name of the writer is unknown to the publishers. The name must always accompany any contributed news, not that we would print the name of the author in every instance, but that we would have the name as evidence of good faith. Simply of the ninth yet to be played. signing, "A Transcript Reader," or some thing equal to that expression in vagueness, does not fill the bill,"

East Tawas vs. Alpena, Sept. DON'T 13, 1914.

Last Sunday the East Tawas team had as their visitor one of the strongest baseball teams on the Huron shore, namely,

The visitors have met, from all reports, some of the fastest teams around the state, and have made a good record, and Manager "Jennings" Butler was very desirous of having Alpena taste the brand of goods usually dished up by Mart. Scholar.

The Alpena team invaded our city during the early hours of the morning, leaving Alpena Saturday evening on the freight extra, south. The night ride seemed to have had its effects on the stages of the game it affected their playing and also their dispositions.

Shortly after Umpire Bergeron said, "Play ball," Cadorette of the East Tawas team, started on extended tour of the bases on a passed ball, but Dust of the Alpena team, who held the responsible position of manager, lawyer, and keeper of records at the third station for the visitors, made his plea to the umpires "that where he played ball the players were content with an advance of one

Manager Butler, after consulting with players and umpires, agreed with Alpena to make a rule of . It was at this time that the Alpena players consulted with each other, and came to the conclusion that errors were not going to win the game. They applied ginger, threw Moffet was called to the pastorate lief, but "Jennings B." did not take Mart, seriously, and let him pitch until the ninth round. "Bud" had the ball breaking in fine shape, and there is no doubt but what he would have cut the Alpena bombardment short. Joe got three strikes on the first man who faced him, but Guy let the third one go by, and the Alpena runner who had been populating second base at the end of Mart's, reign, took this opportunity of making a search for third base. He did not seem to recognize the bag, and continued homeward. He crossed the plate ahead of the ball, and whether or not The Transcript regrets that several scoring is a novelty to him, he refused to let this opportunity to get into the hall of fame slip by, and would not return to third base. Other Methods of Control Are Just as Efficacious.

Because I know you would pay no atention to it, and because I feel pretty sure your editor would think I was overstepping my bounds, I am not going to say you must not whip your child-but I am going to discuss this all-important subject with you. It is brought to my mind by an unmerciful "beating" I know a local child to have suffered this week-and because I presume there are many "kids" who have been flogged within the last few days, I am hoping no particular parent will think I am writing for his own benefit, for I am not. The subject of controlling children is as old as the world itself-and as far from solution now as at the beginning. shall ask, too, that you shall not place me as an "old maid" or "bachelor," who, having no children of their own,

'know best how to raise them." I have the same problems that confront every father and mother who reads this article. And, being as wholly helpless in the matter as you, I will have re-published an article that was sent to another paper, and let you draw your own conclusions, as I have done. The author of the article in question denounces the practice as barbarous, and quotes the story of the parent, who, after whipping his son, asked, "Now, do you know why I whipped you?" "Yes," answered the boy, "because you are bigger than I am."

"Spanking and whipping children," the writer continued, "diminishes whenever children reach the age when they begin to have a mind of their own. Their later offenses are often more disobedient, more deliberate, more serious, and more aggravating than when they were younger, and larger children are more responsible as individuals, but parents almost invariably are able to control themselves when their children reach an age over 12 or 14 years.

"The parent who is preoccupied, tired, or worried, is not in a condition to be a judge over a child who has done wrong, and when in such condition should not use the birch, or even scold too harshly. Often, though to save time or preyent any argument, cowardly blows are struck. Slapping, spanking, or whipping children, cannot be defended, and it is time the subjects were discussed from pulpit, press and school. Children cannot defend themselves, and those parents, teachers and others with a high standard of conduct should speak and write in strong terms, condemning such punishment."

I hope, now, you will get some benefit from the above. It does not tell us how to get around this ever present obstacle, but it does have a warning against a quick temper. We might at least give gentle persuasion a good long trial. Perhaps you already have tried persuasion and failed. But has the rod brought any better results? In my own experience it has not, and I do not believe a real punishment has ever remained in the mind of my progenies as long as a sensible, explanatory, talk.

What's In the Wind.

Among minor results of the war that give disappointment are the necessary postponement of the air flight across the Atlantic, and the yacht race for the American's cup. The former perhaps more than the latter, because of its novelty.

It is a very sporty idea, this promised attempt to see if man can fly across the ocean. It appeals intensely to the spirit of adventure, and offers a spectacular test of mechanism in a daring new field

But who knows what surprises in air flight the war itself may bring out? Quite early in the process of aviation the human imagination conceived the chance that earth's bravest battles would one day be fought in the clouds.

And now that war is bringing this speculation to the test who can guess what surprises may be in store? Widespread already is the expectation that the army airmen have surprises up their sleeves. The confidence with which Germany, for instance, faces a hostile continent, is hard to understand on the basis of known land strength-so that if wonderful new engines of slaughter for use in the air may not be in the back of

It may even be that control of motor power in flight will, ere the war's end have been so well established that peaceful flight across the Atlantic would not have the content of surprise, and would, therefore, offer little tribute of

This, however, is all guess work. The only sure thing is that the try out across the water, to say nothing of the race for the cup, must await calmer times.

No Bread Famine in the United States This Year.

There will be no bread famine in the United States this year. The largest wheat crop in history has just been harvested, and according to the United States department of agriculture, the total production is approximately 911,-000,000 bushels-nearly 150,000,000 bushels more than any previous crop produced in the United States. We have at least 250,000,000 bushels of wheat which are not needed for consumption at home, or for seed. The surplus progoes to Europe, but under present conditions, caused by the European war, of industry. this cereal cannot cross the ocean, About 75,000,000 bushels have already been taken for export, but most of it is being held at the ports of departure.

Conditions across the water are not so encouraging. War/in Europe tends to prevent the shipment of wheat from surplus European countries to those which need imports-for example-from Russia to France, and a famine there seems inevitable.

TO ALL ENGAGED DAIRY BUSINESS

Making butter on the farm is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. Any housewife knows what it means of drudgery to make good butter, and what difficulties she encounters in her attempt to find a satisfactory market for her product. Her outlet is limited. The creamery has every large city on the continent within its reach. The creamery is plugging every day for the interests of the dairy farmer as well as for its own.

We are now in the midst of our third season and business is humming. Prices are good and the outlook fine. We are making nearly four times as much butter as we did in 1912. That also means that we are able to handle your cream to the very best advantage for you. Come and see us or ship us a can. We know we can please you.

We are selling the "Diabolo," a separator of the Highest Merit, at prices that you would pay for mail-order and other inferior machines.

What the Governors Like to Eat. Governor Dunne of Illinois, if asked what were his favorite dish, might say he did not know, but his daughter, Miss Eileen, would promptly say her distinguished father was fondest of the "Great American What-is-it." Miss Eileen, who, by the way, is private secretary to her mother, gives the following recipe for making her father's favorite dish:

Cold roast beef cut into small pieces Cover with stock of water. Add chopped small onion, carrot, parsley, celery and tomato. Let simmer for one hour and thicken with a little blended flour. Season with butter, pepper, salt and few drops of Worcestershire sauce. Brown with a little kitchen bouquet.

A Good Idea.

There is a new scheme which will prove very popular in rural communities should it become the custom. We have heard of one case in this vicinity. The city cousins coming to visit the country cousins on Sunday brought dinner with them, and invited the family to the picnic repast in the woods near by. This gave all an opportunity to enjoy a restful day, obviated the necessity o heating the house to cook a "company" dinner and then wash a lot of dishes. I was really an ideal arrangement al around, and would be appreciated if i should become the custom. -Buda (III.) Plaindealer.

The Men Behind the Plow.

The eleventh annual meeting of the National Farmers' Union was in session for three days at Fort Worth, Tex., last week. The delegates attending the meeting came from more than two-thirds of the states in the union, and every branch of agricultural endeavor was represented. The wheat farmer from the northwest, the corn farmer from the middle west, the tobacco farmer from the Virginias, and the cotton farmer from the sunny south-all held counsel together, and were united in their efforts to solve the grave problem which now confronts the American farmer. Coming, as they did, direct from the soil, with their hands brown from exposure and their minds attuned to the needs of the hour, there was no chance for dissention among Monday, September 14.—Aviator Gill their ranks, and there was a complete harmony and unity of thought and action, such as befit the class which feeds and clothes the world.

PRIZED HIS WIFE'S CRITICISM

Huxley Not Above Acknowledging the Value of Her Assistance-His Advice to Herbert Spencer.

Mrs. Thomas Henry Huxley, who died recently, was her husband's chief critic, and all his writings were submitted for her approval before they were seen by any other eye. To her judgment, says their son, was due the toning down of many a passage which erred by excess of vigor and the clearing up of phrases the public might have found obscure. Writing to her in 1868, he confesses that the editor of Macmillan's had brought him the proofs of the famous lecture on a "Piece of Chalk," and said, "There is one paragraph I can't make head or tail of." " looked to where his finger pointed, wrote Huxley, "and behold, it was the paragraph you objected to when I read you the lecture. I told him, and said I should confess, however set up it might make you."

An incident of the Huxleys' honevmoon was a visit from Herbert Spencer, desperately trying, as usual, to escape from his morbid condition. They were at Tenby, and their report of the place tempted him. "I had hoped to benefit by going out Since all Europe is in eruption, this dredging, and also by the pleasures of companionship. But I was disappointed. My state was such that I The yellow newspapers are getting had to shun society, being unable to bear more than a few minutes' conversation."
