NORTHERN MICHIGAN EL DOR-ADO FOR MANY.

It has been thoroughly demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of all who have investigated the subject that the one place to seek wealth and happiness is right here in Northern Michigan, where land is plenty and cheap, and what counts more than anything else is that its quality is superior to that found in almost any other section. There are thousands of acres of good land in this section that are lying idle for want of a farmer to tenant to till it, that would yield of the staple crops above the average of the state. As an instance of the richness and productiveness of the soil of Northern Michigan it may be stated that five years ago Guy Cole went on a wild stump forty in Emmet county. The first season he cleared and cropped five acres; the succeeding seasons he increased the average under cultivation until in 1914 he had thirty-five acres in crops. The past season he raised twenty-three tons of hay, 667 bushels of oats, 800 bushels of potatoes and 400 bushels of corn. Although this record is a most excellent one it is no better than any young man of intelligence can do in Emmet county, or any other place in Northern Michigan, provided he has the grit and determination to succeed. Talking about corn, there is Will Cetas, on section 36, in Redmond township. He went in for little "squaw" corn, planted three feet each way. It yielded two bushels to the shock of 64 hills. It was planted the last day of May and was ripe the first day of September. If you are good in "figgers" you can easily demonstrate that it is away ahead of and are conservative.

This is an expression used by financial men generally to designate banks having a surplus as large or larger than their Capital.

A bank is usually considered in good condition if it has a surplus one fourth as great as its capital. On this basis we should have a surplus of $25,000.00. Judge' then the supreme safety of this Bank with its surplus of $125,000.00, five times the required proportion.

Such instances as these speak for themselves. It is not necessary that the residents of this great country continually act as a publicity agent while at home. Everyone here is, or should be, already well acquainted with the facts. But when one takes a trip to some point a greater or less distance from this region then he should put his boosting stock in trade to the front and use it volubly and unremittingly. There is no boosting likep ersonal boosting. Neither is there any variety of boosting so convincing as that which is based upon actual figures. The person who lives in Northern Michigan has something Fraser, in the American Review of about which to talk, and he may do so with the full knowledge that exaggeration is not called for, and he does not have to resort to extremes occasionally called into play for making certain communities look attractive. The Fatal Sleighride. T'was in the month of February On a Friday night, We all went for a sleigh ride, The moon was shining bright. We picked up two of our neighbors

As we went on our way; Of course we had a lot of room For we had a two horse sleigh. We got along the road real well, As well as you all know, Until we came to the second hill And the sleigh began to slew. The driver pulled upon the reins To hold the horses' flight, The sleigh went over the embankment And we all went out of sight. One of the girls was under the sleigh And two were in the snow, And where the driver landed Is more than we all know. One of the boys he lost his hat, The other lost his sense; But both of them were lucky enough in a southwesterly direction about 100 To stop at the wire fence. And when we got together Now what do you suppose, The girls had lost all of their powder And the boys tore some of their clothes. The girls got up and started Along the slippery road; The boys picked up the sleigh box And got it in the road. The boys picked up the blankets And started on their way, Until they caught up to the girls And got them in the sleigh. We telephoned for the doctor; They said he went to town, His friend said why he wasn't there Was because he took old John. Of course we had a dandy time Even if we took a spill; Next time we go for a sleigh ride We'll watch those slippery hills.

We started for our home again The moon still shone real bright And never will we forget
