Tho'ts

What is your life worth in God's coin?

Happiness is not the end of life.

Character is.

Only what we have wrought into our character during life can we take away with us.

Sow a thought, reap an act;

Sow an act, reap a habit;

Sow a habit, reap a character;

Sow a character, reap a destiny.

A good character is, in all cases the fruit of personal exertion. It is not inherited from parents, it is not created by external advantages, it is not a necessary appendage of birth, wealth, talents or station; but it is the result of one's own endeavors.—Hawes.

WHAT IS THAT "LAST WORD"?

There is a whole lot of satisfaction in knowing that one has hit the nail square on the head, and it afforded the Herald editor a great deal of amusement to see how cleverly the two editors of the Gazette endeavored to mislead its readers in regard to our statement as to the authorship of a certain article, without once denying that the Herald man was right, or telling "who's who" in the Gazette office.

Now we have no desire for a controversy, especially with a lady, and we don't care a "tinker's darn" who is editor of the Gazette. As to the editor of the Herald any interested party has only to consult the sworn statements made to the postoffice department to find out who he is, or if that is not enough let them call at the Herald office and we will show them the necessary documents.

As to our "retraction" as the Gazette termed it, we might state that the article correcting the error of the previous week was written before Mr. Black's dramatic "demand" had been made, and the correction was made only in justice to the supervisors and not from any fear of Mr. Black, as we knew his "demand" was only a bluff. The editor never lived who did not make mistakes, nor was there ever one more ready to correct them than the editor of the Herald.

We also believe in always being polite to the ladies and will willingly accord to the lady editor of the Gazette the privilege of the "last word."

CAUCUSES AND CONVENTIONS

The call for the ward caucuses and city conventions to nominate city officials for the ensuing year have been issued in accordance with the new law setting an earlier date than heretofore.

The republican ward caucuses and convention will be held on Thursday evening, March 9. The first and second ward caucuses will be held at the court house and the third ward caucus at the city hall, where the city convention will also be held.

The democratic caucuses and convention will be held on Monday, March 13, all at the city hall. The first ward caucus will be held at 7 p. m., standard time, the second ward at 7:15, the third ward at 7:30, and the city convention at 8 o'clock.

SECOND ANNUAL TRI-COUNTY LINCOLN CLUB BANQUET

(By East Tawas Correspondent).

The second annual banquet of the Tri-County Lincoln club of Alcona, Oscoda and Iosco counties was held at the Holland Hotel, East Tawas, last Tuesday evening, Feb. 29. Over one hundred and forty members were present.

The city band welcomed the guests who arrived on the evening train and gave a number of selections within the hotel while friendly greetings were exchanged.

To the strains of "America First" played by the East Tawas orchestra the members took their places. The dining hall and entries were appropriately decorated with American flags, bunting and portraits of Lincoln. Red and white carnations graced the tables. While all enjoyed the sumptuous banquet to the fullest, music was furnished by the orchestra. The closing number, "America, I Love You," was given hearty applause, the strains of national airs, so appropriate to the occasion, pleasing all.

A short business session then followed, President C. A. Pinkerton of East Tawas presiding. Letters were read from George A. Loud from Washington, D. C., Judge Sharpe of West Branch, Carl E. Schmidt of Detroit and a telegram from George E. Lusk of Bay City, all regretting that they were unable to meet with the club, but wishing the club success and prosperity during the year 1916.

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year: Pres., F. F. Taylor of Tawas City; vice-pres., Iosco Co., C. A. Pinkerton, East Tawas; W. J. Robinson, Tawas City; A. J. Rodman, Wilber; A. B. Chrysler, Oscoda; secretary, Alex J. Bissland of Iosco; treasurer, J. G. Dimmick of East Tawas.

Toastmaster W. H. Sanborn of Harrisville then gave a few opening remarks and announced the first number of the program, "The Harrisville Male Quartette," which was very much enjoyed by all.

Hon. A. C. Carton of Lansing gave a short opening address which was followed by a vocal solo by Clyde E. Berube of East Tawas. Attorney O. H. Smith of Harrisville gave a short address on Abraham Lincoln. He stated that Lincoln was a man of decision something we need at Washington during these trying times.

Hon. E. B. Follette of Hale then gave a forceful address which was heartily applauded. In closing he prophesied that Hon. A. C. Carton would be the future governor of Michigan and that Hon. Grant Fellows would be elected to the supreme bench. The guests were then favored by a violin solo by Miss Ruth Deacon of Bay City, piano accompanist, Miss Cecil Bonney of East Tawas.

A short address by Edwin Goodwin of Mio was next on the program. He spoke on the preparedness of the American people. He stated that we need a man to lead this nation whose Americanism is unquestionable and whose word is as good as a gold bond. He said that in republican principles we find true Americanism, the kind that makes for great eternal Americans.

Next followed a stirring address by Herman Dehnke, prosecuting attorney from Harrisville. Mr. Dehnke said he was glad to see so many there, glad they were there and not somewhere else, the Tawas City jail for instance. He spoke of the necessity of these meetings and discussions, that we must not, however, reflect on an illustrious past but do our duty in solving the problems of the day unselfishly as the heroes of the past. He stated that the country was looking for men with backbone, that the republican defeat in 1912 was not due to the fact that people had lost confidence in the principles of the party but through the work of those who with selfish desires labored for the good of a few. He said that the welfare of the nation depended upon the party asserting their convictions so vigorously that the independent voter will be convinced. We should take the same stand Lincoln would take in these matters and try to eliminate profit and put patriotism first. He finished with a prayer that instead of coining money to the misery of our fellow men, let a spirit or brotherhood be felt throughout the country.

Attorney Edwin Rawden of Lansing next gave an address in which he spoke of East Tawas, the city that was home to him, where his truest friends resided and that he would be ever worthy of such friendship. He spoke of the history of the party and said that if they remain true to the principles it has always stood for, there will be no danger for the future America.

The guests were next favored by an instrumental selection. Piano, four-hand by Mrs. S. C. Mitchell and Miss Mary Gardner of East Tawas.

Mr. Jas. H. McGilivray, deputy state game warden, of Oscoda then gave a short but interesting and profitable talk. He said that we should not look upon the superficial flaws and mistakes of the republican party of the past and present but upon the whole structure that the standard and quality of the present membership of the party and of this Lincoln club were more to be proud of than the illustrious past.

A humorous monologue in Dutch dialect was then given by Arthur Wyman of East Tawas, which was heartily applauded. Mr. Wyman finished with original songs—parodies of popular pieces.

An address by Albert W. Black was then announced followed by an applause almost deafening, so hearty and (Continued on page five).

M. A. C. MARKET BULLETIN, FEB. 21, 1916

Act No. 91, Public Acts 1915: Section 6. The director of markets shall publish bulletins setting forth market conditions and prices as far as possible and advising as to the available supplies of products, the approved methods of standards and grades and best means of marketing. He may at his discretion publish the names of producers, distributors and consumers, and advices as to marketing.

The State Market Director desires to advise that in anticipation of the bean crop of 1916, that the crop of 1915 will be cleaned up before new beans are available and none of the crop left over to affect the prices of the crop of 1916.

There will be no beans imported, as under war conditions it is impossible and the prices are higher abroad than here. Michigan had higher priced beans last year than in other parts of the United States because of organization.

The future of the bean market as a consideration for planting in 1916 under these circumstances is most promising. The higher prices prevailing in Michigan this year promises to bring Idaho, New York and California into line with adequate prices through market commissions in these states.

The unfortunate experience of speculators in beans last year together with the growing sentiment against future selling by the legitimate elevator trade, which is reinforced by the growers' organization, is adverse to the making of a price on the growing crop.

One of the largest buyers has said that with adequate organization, beans, even with a large crop, need never go below $2.50 per bushel basis to the farmer. To maintain adequate market prices, the organization has tightly gotten together last year should be maintained.

The advice of the most eminent plant pathologists is that under normal weather conditions, a crop of beans normally free from disease can be expected when the best seed obtainable is planted.

James N. McBride, State Market Director.

NEWSPAPER IS INDEX

Town is Judged by Study of Issues of Paper Which Its People Read.

"Show me some copies of the paper published in your town and I will tell you some facts about it and your people."

The man who said that was an active business man, who was considering an expansive proposition. The information he wanted was all in issues of a weekly newspaper.

He wanted to know about the stocks of goods carried by the merchants, to judge of their business capacity by the style and amount of advertising they employed—the paper would show him.

He wanted to know something of the social activities of the town which the paper would show him.

He wanted to know something of the pursuits of the people in the town and the condition of the surrounding country. The paper would show him.

He would scan those papers carefully and would be able to give the information as he had stated.

He would judge of the business prospects from the advertising columns of prospective selling possibilities by the local happenings, of the tastes and intelligence of the people by the reading matter it gave its readers, alert and whether they were a progressive, alert or an easy going and comparatively inactive sort.

Your paper tells the story fully to the active, observing business man, who never saw your town or its people.

If the town merchants are not all represented in its columns it would spell "Little business" a bad knock for the town. If the local columns showed a scarcity of news and little of the social life it would spell in glaring letters "Nothing doing." If there was a lack of high class up-to-date reading matter on the liveliest topics of the times, it would spell for him ".....?"

The investigation would end and the town be passed over as not worth considering.

So then the weekly paper is for fifty-two times a year showing people who do not reside in the town just how to judge if it is a business and social center.

ADVERTISING CITIES

If the retailers of smaller towns and cities were as progressive as the retailers of the larger cities, the former would understand why the public is drawn to the latter to do its trading. Everywhere cities of from 25,000 population up are raising funds of many thousands of dollars with which to advertise themselves in papers, magazines and trade publications. The business men of the smaller communities could just as profitably put on an advertising campaign through their local papers. Thirteen well-written page ads, exploiting the advantages of a town will work wonders for business men—and when one considers the small cost of thirteen page ads., in a local paper, it is not easily understood why the business men of the smaller towns don't use them.

COUNTERFEIT BILLS IN MICH.

Grand Rapids Banks Authority for the Statement—Stop, Look, Measure.

Five dollar counterfeit bills are reported from Grand Rapids. This particular bunch first appeared in the upper peninsula and are now flooding the lower part of the state. They are a good imitation of the original except that they are a quarter of an inch longer than the legal tender. The check letter "C" with numerals 1791 appears on each note.

The trouble here is that it will be very easy to fool us as we are too busy looking after the nickles and dimes to take time to measure up the $5 bills. We were taught in all our old copy books that if we would look after ourselves but seems that from now on we are obliged to look after them also or get fleeced. Verily life is becoming exceedingly strenuous on all sides.

NOW A COUNTY CHARGE.

The closing days of Uncle John Weed's life is not one that can be looked upon as an example for our young men. Last Sunday Poor Master Henry Selle took the old man to a family near Twining, who will care for him at the expense of the county. Uncle John for many years has lived in Whitney township, having lately been assisted by the county from month to month. Finally he became almost helpless and Mr. Selle concluded it would be unsafe for him to be alone. Uncle John has lived here and hereabout for the past 50 years, and is perhaps the oldest settler here today. He is 86 years old.—AuGres Enterprise.

TAWAS CITY, MICH., MAR. 3, 1916

ELBERT BEDE SAYS:

When a base ball player gets married it's hard to get him away from the home plate.

From the noise some people make getting onto the water wagon one would think it were a band wagon. If styles keep going in the direction they have started, man may again be able to hide behind woman's skirts.

A man should never be considered qualified for the diplomatic service until he has been married several years. Gas pipes are being made out of old newspapers. That is dangerous, for the papers may continue in the habit of spreading it.

It is no wonder that there seems so little interest in good roads when so many of us take so little interest in the way we are going.

Those who get out and vote for the winning administration think such display of patriotism should be rewarded with a public office.

Someone has suggested that we buy Mexico. We are willing to let those hunt trouts who wish to, but we refuse to buy any for ourselves.

The girl graduate who feels that she is qualified to run the earth may a few years later find herself pretty busy keeping from being run too much by one man.

Heaven most likely is not the place a lot of folks say it is, at a lot of those who think they know what it is like, will never be able to say "I told you so."

There are just as many witches now as there were in the old days, and just as many of us men fall under their spell but we lead them to the altar instead of the stake.

"OBSERVER" WRITES OF HOME-MADE SIGNS

Far be it from me to intentionally offend anyone, but it seems I just must say something about some of the "home-made" signs all of us have seen some place or another at one time or another: "No Smoking Allowed," "By Underware Here," "Speshal Sail on Hosery," "Please Don't Ask for Credit," and a score of others.

Few are the business men or women who do not know how to spell these ordinary words—but they do it through carelessness. They seem to think that nobody cares how a word or message is spelled, so long as it conveys the meaning. But they most certainly are mistaken. I well know the impression I form of a business house the minute I see such a sign in the place, and I feel sure that I am neither radical nor fanatical in such matters, but that the average man and woman are given the same impression.

In writing these articles for your editor, I have no desire to advertise his business. That is neither his purpose nor mine, but in this instance I am compelled to say that a printing office is the place to have signs printed. It is a part of the printing business to be both accurate and neat in its productions, and surely any sign that is going to stare the public in the face should have these qualities.

The average business house is well supplied with attractive signs supplied it by wholesale houses. They are of all shapes, sizes and colors—and they are models of accuracy and neatness. Perhaps it is because of these perfect specimens that the crude, misspelled, home-made sign with its backward "s" and "n" are so noticeable. There are times, of course, when so few of one certain sign or placard are wanted that it would not pay to have them furnished by a printer and one is compelled to print them by hand or not have them at all. In such instances, attention should be given that every word is spelled correctly and that there are no "up-side-down" or "backward" letters in it. They are unclean for and I truly believe they injure the business house displaying them.

WAYS OF USING RICE

Nutritious and Easily Digested Cereal Serves Many Purposes in the Diet—Recipes for Cooking.

There are few food materials which serve more purposes than rice. It is used as a breakfast cereal, as a thickening for soups, as a vegetable, as an ingredient of "made dishes," in which it may appear in combination with meat, fish, eggs, cheese, or vegetables, and sweetened and flavored in various ways as a dessert. The office of Home Economics of the department has been studying the food value of rice prepared in various ways, and housekeepers can perhaps use it with better understanding of its advantages if they consider some of the results of these studies.

In and of itself, rice is a mild and pleasant-flavored cereal, when properly cooked, furnishes the body with an abundance of easily digested starch, and this explains why orientals can use it as the "staff of life" instead of bread, and why it may be substituted for wheat or corn or oatmeal as a breakfast cereal. Many persons think it also may be substituted for potatoes as a mild-flavored vegetable. This is a natural supposition, since a portion of cooked rice furnishes the body with about the same quantity of energy-producing starch as a portion of potatoes. Potatoes, however, like most vegetables, differ from cereal foods in the character and combination of the mineral matters and acids they contain, which play an important part in nourishing the body and keeping it in good working order. This means that they are not exactly substitutes for one another, and that the common custom of providing fruits and vegetables as we generally do as a part of meals made up to a considerable extent of foods prepared from cereal grains is a commendable one. It follows that when rice is used like the potato as the principal starchy food of the meal, one should be careful to use fruits and vegetables generously—a custom which is in accord with the traditions of good housekeepers.

Ideas differ as to what is the best way of cooking rice, but probably the most generally accepted standard is to have all the grains distinct. Rice cooked in this way is often described as "southern style," although it is not means confined to the Southern States. It may be prepared as follows: To a quart of rapidly boiling water, containing two level teaspoonfuls of salt, a cupful of thoroughly washed rice is added so slowly that the boiling is not stopped. No stirring is permitted, the rice being kept from sticking to the kettle by the rapid boiling. About 20 minutes' cooking is needed. When the rice is soft, the water is poured off and it is covered with a cloth and placed on a warm part of the stove so that its grains will swell. Some cooks, before covering the rice with a cloth, turn it into a strainer and pour over it about a quart of hot water to remove the starchy material on the outside of the grain.

The water poured off from the cooked rice contains a certain amount of food material, principally starch, and this may be boiled down and used in making soup. It will thicken the soup as would cornstarch or flour. Another way to prevent waste is to cook rice in a double boiler in only so much water as it will absorb while softening. When so cooked about three cupfuls of water and one level teaspoonful of salt are allowed for a cupful of rice. If the rice is not stirred while it is cooking, it will be not unattractive in appearance, although the grains will not be absolutely dry and separate. A more savory dish may be made by substituting meat broth and strained tomato juice or the water.

The food value of boiled rice may be increased by using milk instead of water in preparing it. This has no special advantage in families where milk must be economically used, but where there is a large amount of skim milk which might otherwise be thrown away it is worth considering. If rice is cooked in an uncovered double boiler it can be made to absorb at least six times its volume of skim milk. By this means the protein of the dish is greatly increased. In the following recipe the amount of protein supplied by the skim milk is equal to more than that in a pound of round of beef without bone.

Rice Cooked in Skim Milk
1 cupful of rice, 6 cupfuls of skim milk, 3 teaspoonfuls of salt.
Wash the rice thoroughly. Cook in an uncovered double boiler till all the milk is absorbed, which will take at least an hour. This nutritious dish can be made savory as well by adding to the ingredients one-fourth level teaspoonful of curry powder and a few grains of cayenne. Eaten with butter or gravy, it is very palatable when served with meat or in a similar way. If one prefers, the rice can be made savory by seasoning with a few drops of onion juice, celery salt, and paprika, or a little cayenne pepper, if it is liked, or with grated cheese.

Dangers of Draft

Drafts feel best when we are hot and perspiring, just when they are most dangerous, and the result is neuralgia, stiff neck, sore muscles or sometimes an attack of rheumatism. In such cases apply Sloan's Liniment. It stimulates circulation to the sore and painful part. The blood flows freely and in a short time the stiffness and pain leaves. Those suffering from neuralgia or neuralgic headache will find one or two applications of Sloan's Liniment will give grateful relief. The agonizing pain gives way to a tingling sensation of comfort and warmth and quiet rest and sleep is possible. Good for neuritis too. Price 25c at your druggist. adv-1

GEORGE ENGLE SETS VALUE ON TANLAC

Would Not Take $100 And Be Back Where He Was Before Using Medicine.

Declaring that Tanlac, the premier preparation, had completely relieved him of stomach trouble and also improved his health, George Engle, of Union City, recently said that he would not take $100 for the medicine, and be back where he was before using it. This is the statement he made:

"I think that Tanlac is the finest medicine in the world. I used it for stomach trouble and found complete relief in a short time. It is the first medicine I have ever found that would help me. My stomach got all out of order following an attack of grippe, and I suffered from sour stomach, indigestion and other disorders.

"I began to use Tanlac and soon was in good condition again. I feel better in every way and am not troubled with my stomach any more at all. I eat well and sleep fine. I can't praise Tanlac enough."

Tanlac is proving of exceptional value in all cases of stomach and liver trouble, as well as being a powerful tonic for general run-down system.

Tanlac may be obtained in Tawas City and in East Tawas from James E. Dillon.—Advertisement.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S LIFE STORY AS HE TOLD IT

(This is a continuation of Charlie Chaplin's life story. It was written by Harry C. Carr, who recently achieved fame as a war correspondent for the Los Angeles Times. No contribution to "movie" literature has so much interested among film "fans" as this simple, straightforward account of the life history of the world's most famous comedian.—Editor.)

CHAPTER V.

The end of it was that Chaplin was finally allowed to direct his own scenarios. No American picture director understood his peculiar style of comedy well enough to work out the stuff. In another chapter I will tell about Chaplin's work and his methods as a director.

Chaplin's first big hit as a director of his own work was "Dough and Dynamite." This was started as a part of the scenario afterward known as the "Pangs of Love." In his rather aimless way of directing without any scenario, Chaplin and Mr. Conklin began working up a play in which both he and Conklin were in love with the landlady of a boarding house and stuck hatpins into each other through a curtain to interrupt one another's courtship. They decided that they both ought to be workmen of some kind and decided upon being bakers. As part of the play they worked up a scene in a bake shop. This turned out to be so funny that they finally changed the whole idea and made two different scenarios.

As a director-actor at the Keystone, Chaplin had the reputation of being the most generous star in the movie business. Every comedian was allowed to grab all the laughs he could get.

Becomes the Rage.

His work began making a tremendous impression. Everyone began talking about the new funny man. People who never went to the movies before were drawn by the accounts of the new comedian.

Naturally, the other movie companies took notice, and Chaplin got several big offers. One from the Essanay was so big that he did not feel justified in refusing. When his contract expired with the Keystone, he changed companies. He went with the understanding that he was to have full swing in his work; direct all his own scenarios and do pretty much as he pleased.

The first of the Essanay work was done in Chicago. His first Essanay film was "His New Job." After that he put on a two-reeler, "His Night Out." Chaplin then insisted on moving back to California. The picture conditions didn't suit him in the middle West. On returning to the coast, he went to the Essanay studio at Niles.

In a separate chapter there will be an account of his adventures at this rural studio. He produced "The Tramp" at Niles. This is regarded in some ways as the most remarkable step forward ever made in moving-picture comedy.

By this time a perfect storm of fame had struck Chaplin. To tell the truth, it seemed to scare more than anything else. He used to say to his intimate friends: "I can't understand all this stuff. I am just a little nickel comedian trying to make people laugh. They act as though I were the king of England." Chaplin even to this day is much alarmed over being so famous. He says his reputation can't last.

But he began to suffer the penalties of the great. He was asked to speak at banquets; to lead parades; to referee prize fights. When the baseball season opened, it was announced that Chaplin would throw the first ball.

Charlie's Chicago Censor.

Charlie was pursued like a wounded hare by all kinds of people with all kinds of business propositions. If half the life insurance agents who were on his trail could be gathered into an army, there wouldn't be any danger of a war with Germany. Real estate agents wanted him to buy houses. Inventors wanted him to take stock in their discoveries. About a million people wrote him letters. Many of them were mash letters. One young lady in Chicago undertook the job of censoring all his work. Every day of her life she wrote Chaplin a letter, commenting critically on some of his latest films. Sometimes she complimented them; sometimes she roasted them unmercifully.

Chaplin has about as much business system as a chicken. When his friends came to see him at his hotel they found him sitting helplessly drinking pipe after pipe of letters. Finally one of his friends prevailed on him to hire a secretary. Wherefore a severe young man with glasses now opens Charlie's mash letters.

One sort of pest scared Chaplin to death. This was the auto agent. They wanted him to get into the cars; to be photographed in their cars; and to write endorsements of their cars. But Charlie was adamant. He wouldn't listen to any of them. He told them he had an aversion to cars on principle and when he retired he was going to have an old white horse and buggy and a ranch. The truth is Charlie had once been bitten by the automobile bug.

While he was with the Keystone, Chaplin fell for the blandishments of an auto agent and came out one day nervously driving a runabout. He had some weird experiences with that car. He never could learn how the thing worked. He knew how it started, but he never could remember—at least in times of emergency—what you did when you wanted the thing to stop.

Auto Advice at $75 Per Lesson.

One day while he was parading the boulevards with his vehicle, Chaplin came to the intersection of two crowded streets. The traffic cop majestically gave the signal for the car to stop. Charlie reached for the thingamajig and pulled the wrong lever. The car bounded blithely forward. The cop waved his club and that was all he did before the auto struck him amidships and mopped up the floor with him. They picked up the fragments of the officer of the law. They also picked up Chaplin and took him to the police station, where they advised him to learn how to manage his car and charged him $75 for the advice.

Another time, Charlie was driving in through the big front gate at the Keystone and got too near one of the posts. He had been used to sailing small boats. When a small boat gets too near the wharf the thing to do is to drop the tiller and fend off by pushing against the wharf. Charlie thought this ought to apply equally well to a car. So when he saw he was going to bump the gate, he dropped the steering wheel and tried to push off from the post. The results were sensational and startling. Another time, Charlie's car was on the side of a hill. It started to roll down and Charlie tried to stop it by grabbing the hind wheels. Results equally startling and sensational.

When Chaplin discovered that new tires for his motor cost $75 each, his soul called "Enough!" and he returned to street cars. Since then he has been a mighty poor prospect for an auto agent.

(The next installment of this interesting biography will be run in an early issue. Watch for it.)

LINCOLN CLUB BANQUET

heavy that Mr. Black tried several times to begin before he could make himself heard. Mr. Black had chosen for his topic "The Powers of the Press," but owing to the lateness of the hour and limited time could only touch upon a few facts. He first spoke of the sentiment expressed on the cover of the program "Die where I may—I want it said of me by those who know me best that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower, where I thought a flower would grow." He spoke of Judge M. J. Connine who was present at the banquet a year ago, of his deep love for the man and how much he owed to him for his kindness and instruction. He spoke of the errors of the press, that the newspaper was a force—a force all most always for the good. Speaking of articles lately published concerning the recent trouble he said that the editor of the paper is not to be blamed but the parties who have misstated and misquoted facts. In regard to an article published of late in a Detroit paper stating that Judge Connine was the friend of all struggling young lawyers and that Mr. Black owed his success to him—that he, Mr. Black, was helped by friendly hunches of Judge Connine—Mr. Black declared the statement to be utterly false. He acknowledged his indebtedness to Judge Connine, but that anyone who knew the Judge would know the statements were written by those who had the ruination of this Lincoln club at heart. In regard to those who said the club was organized by him—he stated that it was an insult to the intelligence of those present to say that he organized alone such an organization. He said that a newspaper should give an accurate account of safe, sane news. Mr. Black said he could feel right toward all who had tried to ruin his character because he felt rich in having the real, true, loyal friendship of an almost united Lincoln club and in closing he asked each member to be true and loyal to the memory of Main J. Connine.

Arthur Appin of East Tawas next entertained the company with a bass solo, "From Thy Lowest Depths, O Sea." Amid a thundering applause Hon. Grant Fellows began the address of the evening. He spoke of the two parties, republican and progressive, stating how they resembled each other. He said there had been no quarrel about principles but it was a quarrel among men and that the result was a democratic president, democratic governor, democratic county officers. He said it was about time we should get together and ask no questions. Mr. Fellows said that we should go into this campaign of 1916 as plain everyday republicans. He said there is no fixed policy at Washington and that republican principles and policy are needed to get them out of the hole. On the subject of preparedness he said we need a navy strong enough to keep foreign armies out of our country but that the preparedness of our nation rests in the patriotism of American people. As far as President Wilson having kept us out of war he denied that fact—that there was no room for us in the war—but that we had become entangled with foreign affairs. He said that all petty jealousies should be set aside and these two parties should unite for the good of the nation. He gave a stirring account of Lincoln's life stating that he was the means of cementing this nation together under one flag. In closing he said that we should help carry the burdens of our fellow men, help them to climb, taking an example from Lincoln—the most self-made man the world has ever known—who carried the burdens of all.

The members then rose to their feet and all joined in singing "America," after which the guests left for their homes looking forward to a successful year and a meeting together in 1917.

"How pretty!" exclaimed Ruth.
"Yet, it's pretty now, but there is one thing about wash dresses that I don't like," went on Maude, "and that is the fact that they always fade a little every time they are washed and when it comes time to mend them the new patches always look so different from the old dress that it spoils everything."
"Well, why not avoid that?" protested Ruth, "all you have to do is to keep a generous piece of the goods like your dress, and have it washed every time the dress is washed then it will all fade alike, so that when you are ready to do your mending you will have material just like the dress."
"What a fine idea!" declared Maude, "I'm going to get two yards more of this gingham next time I go to the store, and carry out your suggestion."

Hints Worth Trying
To use the embroidered front of an old waist—You can make a pretty fancy apron in a few minutes from the embroidered front of an old shirt-waist. First, cut out close to the armholes and seam, and hand; then double in exact center from top to bottom, curve out the top, round the bottom, and edge with lace, use ribbon for your hand and strings.
To remove the squeak from shoes—Place a small amount of water in a pan and put the soles of the shoes in water for twenty minutes. Remove them and you will find not only the squeak gone but the shoes soft and pliable.
To renew shoe lacings—When the metal tip ends off your shoelace, wind the end firmly and closely with black thread and sew. You will have a tip as good as the one that came off.

NEW CEMENT PLANT FOR THE NORTHWEST.
Portland cement is now being manufactured at the head of the Great Lakes. The new plant, located at Duluth, is known as Mill No. 7 of the Universal Portland Cement Co., a part of the U. S. Steel corporation. The daily capacity of the new plant is 4,000 barrels.
Materials used in manufacture are blast furnace slag from the Minnesota Steel Co. plant at Duluth and limestone quarried at Calcite, Michigan.
These raw materials, after being ground to a powder and mixed in the proper proportions, are burned to a hard clinker. After storage for ten days the clinker is crushed and ground, in which form it is known as Universal Portland cement.
Heretofore the cement used in the Northwest has been supplied largely from plants in Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Michigan. Now the new plant at Duluth will supply not only a large part of Minnesota's own needs but will also ship its product into the Dakotas, Montana, Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan.
The growth of the Portland cement industry in the United States has been little short of phenomenal. Twenty years ago the total annual output in the country was 1,500,000 barrels. The 1916 production is estimated at 95,000,000 barrels.
This great increase has been absorbed by the ever widening fields into which the use of cement enters. Chief of these in recent years has been the concrete road, street and alley pavement, a considerable mileage of which has been built in the Northwest. Fine examples of this type of pavement are on Superior Boulevard, Minneapolis, and Commonwealth Ave., Duluth. It is generally agreed among highway engineers and other experts on road building that the concrete pavement for country roads and city streets and alleys more nearly approaches the ideal than any other type of pavement, particularly in its ability to withstand the wear and tear of automobile traffic. Wayne county, (Detroit) Michigan, and Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, have adopted this type of pavement as standard, the former having already laid 128 miles and the latter 86 miles.
Other large outlets for cement are fireproof building construction, railroad track elevation and such massive government work as the locks and dams at Sault Ste Marie. The farmer too is alive to the advantages of permanent construction and has become a large user of cement for farm structures, including silos, barns, milkhouses, feeding floors, septic tanks, corn cribs and many others.

MOTOR MAID MARIAN

By HOPE AINSLEE.

The morning was fresh and fragrant with the odor of ripening fruit. General Malvery sighed as he realized that he could no longer take his daily drive through the glorious country roads. His only son had joined the army and gone to the front and without Bobby to drive the car to the station and return home with it the general found his motor useless. He wished he had been able to run the car himself. The Indian mutiny of long ago had robbed him of his right arm.
A few minutes later he looked up with a smile. "The women are coming forward in this crisis with great spirit," he said. "Here is a young girl advertising for a position as chauffeur and gardener. Says she would like to take the place of a son who has gone to fight for his country." The general looked up wonderingly at his wife.
"That young lady would be a treasure. Is the salary too awfully large?" Mrs. Malvery questioned hopefully.
"She asks no salary, bless her," replied the general. "She asks only housing and feeding."
"We will write today," Mrs. Malvery said promptly, her eyes shining.
So it was that General Malvery and his wife became the possessor of a "motor maid," as Marion Wells chose to designate her calling.
"My brother has gone to the front," she told her employers while she, too, tried to hide the tragedy in her brave smile. "He is all the family I have. Life was intolerable without occupation."
She was a slim, pale girl whose eyes shone with determination and hope. Otherwise Marian Wells had nothing to compel admiration. Her hands, too, were slim and white. The marvel was that they were so useful a pair of hands. She handled the garden tools no less skillfully than she managed the wheel of General Malvery's motor.

Marian had been shown the portrait of Bobby Malvery and, as all women did, she had freely expressed her admiration for the clean-cut, debonair private in the Irish Guards.
"My brother, also, is in the Irish Guards," she said. "It would be strange if Dudley and your son should be fighting side by side."
There was no opportunity to write and ask, for it was not a day later that news reached the Malvery home from the front. The two men had fought side by side, or rather Bobby Malvery had fallen exhausted from wounds and it was Dudley Wells who had gone out under heavy fire to drag his comrade back to the trenches. Now both men were coming home wounded but cheerful.

"He saved my life for you who love me," Bobby had written to his parents. Marian laughed softly when this was read to her. There were tears running unrestrainedly down the cheeks of the two women and the general buried himself in the depths of the daily paper.
Soon everyone in the Malvery house was dashing about preparing rooms and putting fresh flowers in vases.
The general stood on the railway platform, blowing his nose vigorously and trying to look unafected, when two stalwart men in khaki and bandages were swept into the embrace of Marian and Mrs. Malvery. No one said anything for a long moment. The general laid the arm the Indian mutiny had left him across the shoulders of his son. Bobby looked up and smiled into his father's eyes over his mother's head. Then the general offered his hand to that other hero who was Marian's brother. After that they all burst into speech at once. The tension was over.
Marian, in her neat brown uniform, led the way and stepped into the driver's seat of the car. She smiled softly at her brother as his eyes opened wide. He had not known that Marian was helping her country after this fashion. She told him the story as they spun along.
"There are not many girls like you," was all Dudley said.
And that, naturally, was the exact opinion Bobby Malvery held from the moment of his arrival home. General and Mrs. Malvery soon exchanged glances that suggested their having discussed a probability. Bobby had done with startling swiftness and energy that which from the first they had thought possible. He had fallen hopelessly in love with Marian as the "motor maid."

"I wonder whether I shall give the bride away or be best man," Dudley laughed one day while he was strolling with General and Mrs. Malvery about the fading gardens. Bobby and Marian had gone off together for a short spin through the twilight English lanes.
"You are to be my second son, Dudley," Mrs. Malvery smiled and laid her hand affectionately on his unbandaged arm.
"We have managed to pick up a rather jolly family," the old general chuckled happily.
Out in the motor car Bobby looked blissfully into the shining eyes of the girl whose slim fingers were guiding the car so firmly. His uninjured arm had slipped closely about her waist.
"We'll all be tremendously happy, my little 'motor maiden,'" he whispered, with his head against her shoulder.
And the car chugged contentedly on through the winding, fragrant lanes.

BRISTOL'S DIPHTHERIA REMEDY
As Used For Cuts, Wounds, Etc.

James Shivas, jr., while playing fell from a fence, his hand catching on a nail tearing a jagged hole nearly through the palm. Bristol's Diphtheria Remedy was poured into the wound and the bleeding stopped instantly. No other medicine was used and the wound healed without soreness or suppuration.
A team belonging to Archie Colby (now rural mail carrier), Tawas City, ran away dashing into a load of poles. The sharp end of a pole pierced the breast of one of the horses making a deep wound. Mr. Colby expected that the horse would have to be shot, but consented to try Bristol's Diphtheria Remedy. The Remedy was poured into the wound which stopped bleeding immediately. The wound began to heal from the bottom without soreness, and later when the horse was sold, the new owner could not find a scar where the wound was, and was inclined to be skeptical as to such an injury ever having occurred.
Mr. Bristol owned a flock of turkeys one of which was badly bitten by a dog, so that the entrails were exposed. After a few days the wound became so badly suppurated that the stench was terrible. The owner determined to test the efficacy of his Remedy first and filled the sore with the Remedy. This he did several times during the week following. When the turkeys were killed and dressed in the fall there was no means of telling which turkey was the injured one.

Talks With Screen-Struck Girls

Series Two. By Beatriz Michelena.

Copyright January, 1916 by Beatriz Michelena.

Beatriz Michelena

Following my warning in the last "talk" about having too receptive an ear for your friends' well intended prophecies, I may add the suggestion that you take all cheap advice on motion picture affairs "with a pinch of salt."

It is astonishing to note "the number of people who would seem to know more about motion pictures than about the particular line of business for which they are supposed to be qualified. It would almost appear that the more real experience one has in pictures, the less he or she knows about them. I am acquainted with one girl—she occasionally dresses my hair—who would willingly tell you more in fifteen minutes about motion pictures than I shall be able to impart in this entire series of "talks." And the surprising part of it is that she can dispense her information with so small an expenditure of thought. I have met a great many others exactly like her.

It is well that the "screen struck girl" realize that there is a rightful amount of misconception concerning motion picture acting, and that it is trying hard to pass muster as real information. It may be that the asking—yes, too often without the asking.

There are people who will assure you—as they have assured me—that motion picture directors everywhere spend a good part of their time tearing their hair because they cannot find enough actresses to fill their casts. This is altogether ridiculous. True, there is, and always will be room at the top for real ability coupled with ambition and a willingness to work and learn; but never for a minute, you girl who would succeed, figure on finding a place in pictures through the supposition that a dearth of talent in the profession will allow you to "squeeze" in. At the studio where I work there are two big drawers filled with applications on file, and a great many of the girls whose names are listed there will never "squeeze" in.

At the Fork in the Road

When you come to a fork in the road and one highway turns slightly to the left and the other slightly to the right, the roads are only a little way apart at first yet you know that eventually they lead to entirely different places.

So it is in your finances. When you first start to save there is not much difference in your situation, but eventually the saver's road leads to independence, even affluence, while the fork of the road taken by the non-saver ends in a blind trail.

Are you at the fork of the road today? Take the right road by opening a savings account here and begin travelling toward prosperity.
