The heavy rains of the past week made the unimproved roads nearly impassable. The state trunk line detour on the Meadow road was particularly bad and a number of automobiles were stuck in various places on this detour.

Those responsible for the upkeep of this road should see to it that the road is made more passable, as there are probably two or three months yet that it will be used in this manner and tourists will naturally get a bad impression if forced to pass over such a miserably bad road on their route through the county.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

The annual school meeting held at the high school building last Monday evening was remarkable in that the attendance was the largest in some years past. Fifty-six votes were cast in the election of members of the school board.

There were two vacancies to be filled this year, the terms of C. T. Prescott and John B. King having expired. Some opposition to the reelection of these gentlemen developed and a spirited contest resulted on the voting on the first ballot. Of the 56 votes cast Mr. Prescott received 26, John Myles 21, and the rest scattered.

Mr. Prescott was declared elected, but since the election the question has been raised as to the legality of the election as he received but a plurality and not a majority of the votes cast in case the contention is correct it will be the duty of the balance of the board to appoint a trustee to fill the vacancy until the next annual meeting.

Mr. King was reelected with a good majority. It was voted to raise by taxation the sum of $10,000 for the expense of the school during the coming year. This is $1,500 more than was raised last year and is the largest amount yet raised in any one year for the maintenance of the school.

MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION MEETING

The special meeting called for July 11th for the election of a new set of officers was attended by an unusual number of citizens, sixteen being the voting strength. The secretary being absent, the financial statement was read as follows:

Total	$46.30

Officers were elected as follows: President—A. A. Bigelow. Vice-Pres.—L. H. Braddock. Sec. and Treas.—L. H. Emerson. Committees will be named at a meeting to be called by the president. Those present were unanimous in desiring the growth of interest in the things that this organization stands for, and co-operation by those absent will bring courage to the few who use their best efforts to build a program of more interesting features than has been given before.

L. H. Emerson, Secretary.

WEIGHING AND MEASURING OF PUPILS

Quite a furore has been aroused in Michigan, as elsewhere, by recent articles in the Outlook in which C. K. Taylor asserted that weighing and measuring school children and grading them physically on that basis was a delusion. Mr. Taylor asserted that some children are naturally underweight and some are naturally overweight. He claimed therefore that these tests had no value, and as a result much work in this line stood to be discredited.

It is of course true, declares the Michigan Tuberculosis association, that some children are naturally underweight and some are naturally overweight and that hence the weight and height test is not an absolute index to good or bad health. But tests have a tremendous value none the less. The ideal way would be to have an adequate health examination of all school pupils, taking each individual case separately, but under present conditions that is not possible. There are very few schools where there is provision for such examination, and weighing and measuring pupils is the next best thing, for the present.

This system at least shows roughly which pupils need a physical examination most. The Detroit department of health thinks about ten per cent would fall in this group, and the emphasis of the school physician can then be concentrated on them. The system is inadequate, but it is better than nothing. What all persons who are interested in the health of the coming generation should work for is an adequate system of medical examination in the schools. But till that comes, the other test has a great practical value.

M. A. C. EXHIBITS TO COVER NEW PROBLEMS

Condensed agricultural exhibits covering timely problems of the Michigan farmer in all phases of his business, will be on display at the Michigan Agricultural college for the annual summer Farmers' day, Aug. 4.

Latest results of soil experimental work, seasonal farm crop topics, labor saving machinery, special livestock feeding and breeding information, and other topics of vital interest to the farmer will be illustrated in outdoor exhibits which are to be erected on the college campus near the general meeting ground.

Among the exhibits will be a special display of radio outfits illustrating the possibilities for farm use. Rapid growth of broadcasting service, both for crops and weather reports and for purely recreational programs has resulted in greatly increased interest among farmers in radio work, and the Farmers' day exhibit will aim to illustrate the possibilities of "wireless in the home."

In addition to the various special exhibits, will be a great livestock style revue, to be held during the afternoon program. Animals from the various college herds of cattle, horses, swine, sheep and poultry will be led past the assembled farmers in parade order. Specialists from the different departments will discuss the merits of the stock as the individuals are passing the stand.

Plans are being made by the college authorities to handle a crowd of more than 3,000 farmers and their families for the day.

"RETAIN THE LOVERS' LANES"

Sentiment in Thousands of Hearts Pleads That They May Never Become Great Highways.

A little gray cottage stands on a hilltop. Below the hill runs the cross road. There is not much travel on the road—it serves to connect two highways.

Oftentimes the crossroad takes its way close to the foot of some deeply wooded knoll and sometimes it goes over a creek, quivering under its icy cover. Then the two ends of the road meet by means of a little bridge, where the hoofbeats of the horse echo loud and the sound of the motor becomes a giant dynamo. Sometimes the crossroad is overarched with trees, as it is below the gray cottage, and the summer sunlight only filters through in patches—such a compelling, mysterious intimacy as there is to the crossroad then.

The young folks call the crossroad "lovers' lane." The old folks used to call it "lovers' lane" when they were young and drove under the arched branches or jingled over the road in sleighs, while the round moon laid the shadows of the black branches meeting overhead in etchings on the snow.

"Lovers' lane"—every county owns one. There was a lovers' lane in Sangamon county, Illinois, and Abe Lincoln walked along it with Am Rutledge in the '30s—soldiers sang about "lovers' lane"—may all the little crossroads that now are lovers' lanes never, never become arterial highways!—Chicago Daily News.

EASY TO TELL HIS THOUGHTS

Little Peculiarities of Theodore Vail Revealed Much to Friends and Business Associates.

There was nothing eccentric about Theodore N. Vail, but he had certain little peculiarities of manner. From his biographer, Albert Bigelow Paine, we learn that for one thing he was absent-minded.

Once, says Mr. Paine, when Mr. Vail was starting on one of his many trips to the Pacific coast and had invited his niece to accompany him he turned to her abruptly at the moment of departure: "Well, good-by, Kate," he said, "I'm sorry you're not coming with me."

Her prompt reply that she was going both startled and amused him.

His thoughts seemed always to require some sort of physical outlet. When listening to anyone he had a habit of making small pencil drawings—curlicues, geometrical shapes and letters carefully shaded. They showed that he was interested in what was being said. When he was not interested he would pull out a handkerchief and fold and refold it on his knee down to the smallest subdivision. Those who knew him could easily tell when he was not enjoying a situation, for then the handkerchief would invariably appear, and the folding continue until the suffering ended.—Youth's Companion.

Scottish Gardeners Valued.

Scottish gardeners are being exported to all parts of the world. A notable instance of the value in which the Scottish gardener is held, is the engagement by a United States millionaire, of a Scotsman for his private grounds, at a salary of $5,000 a year. Not many years ago the man was getting a few dollars a quarter in London. One of the superintendents in a London park can record several instances of his men from across the border getting very high salaries for private establishments on this side of the Atlantic. There is one gardener of Scottish origin in a South London park who says he has "mown the grass" in most corners of South America. A high percentage of the gardeners in London public parks are Scots, and more than one supervisor boast of his clan.

LEGION HOSPITAL FOR TB'S IS LIKE A FINE BIG CLUB

AN EVENING FIRE-SIDE SESSION AT LEGION TUBERCULAR HOSPITAL.

"More like a club than a hospital" is the frequent remark of visitors at the American Legion hospital for tubercular patients near Battle Creek. Every effort is made by the hospital staff, all of whom are American Legion members, to keep the surroundings cheerful so that the recovery of patients may be hastened.

The veterans who are now in the hospital are suffering from varying degrees of infection. Some are very ill indeed. Others need simply rest and skilful watching and diet. For these men especially, the Legion has made efforts to keep the hospital even brighter and more interesting at home.

This Legion hospital is the only one of its kind in the United States—a hospital for veteran tubercular patients only, and conducted entirely by ex-service men.

One of the hospital's warmest admirers is Senator Townsend of Michigan. He helped in the move to send many government cases there.

Before the end of the summer the hospital will have a capacity of 400 men.

MAIN BUSINESS OF THE DAY

WHEN MESS CALL SOUNDS AT AMERICAN LEGION HOSPITAL

When a person is suffering from tuberculosis, there are three great necessities—air, food and sleep. When the patients are former husky young men, put accents on the food. That is what the American Legion does at its tubercular hospital near Battle Creek.

The bed-patients are fed in their rooms of course, but the boys who are still on their feet meet in the dining room for their three squares. No expense is spared to have the food extra-good, and plenty of it. Many cases are recorded of patients gaining 20 pounds within six weeks.

One of the members of the hospital board is Major John Emery of Grand Rapids, past national commander of the American Legion.

Uncommon Sense By JOHN BLAKE

YOUR WORK

BY LAZINESS, procrastination, or by pretending to be stupider than you are, you can get quite a good deal of your work done for you—for a while.

If the man above you is quick and competent, he will frequently get so disgusted with you that he will snatch a job out of your hands, and do it himself.

No competent executive will do that, but you can count all the competent executives of your acquaintance on the fingers of one hand.

It will save you a good deal of trouble to have the hard job taken away from you. You can devote your time to doing the easy jobs at your leisure, and in your own way.

You will probably congratulate yourself on having a boss that is so skilful—so much abler than you—that he can do all the hard work.

But the congratulation will be short-lived. In about a year's time you will discover that you can't do anything but the easy jobs—which are the poorly paid ones, because you never gave your mind any exercise doing the hard ones.

All the opportunities for growth and for progress were in those jobs that were taken out of your hands. Maybe the boss who took 'em away from you didn't need the mental exercise, but the point is that he got it, and you didn't. By letting him take it away you got just as much out of the game as a ball player would whose captain played his position every time there was a critical stage in the game.

No matter what kind of work you have, a time is coming when it is going to become suddenly difficult. The importance of a certain task will increase tremendously owing to unexpected circumstances.

That is the time that is going to take your measure. If you tackle that harder job and go through with it, the chances are that you will do it well. It is presumed that you have the training.

If you stand aside and let the man above you step in, you might as well make your mind that you are going to work for the same or less wages for the rest of your days.

For you have repudiated the chance to grow. You have proved yourself a coward.

Some day we may write about the boss who deprives himself of competent help by insisting on doing everybody's work for them. But today we are writing about you.

WITTY IRISHMAN AT CHAUTAUQUA

DR. ALEXANDER CAIRNS

A 100% American of Irish extraction, with all of the wit and pugnaciousness of his forefathers, is Dr. Alexander Cairns who will deliver his celebrated lecture, "The Goose That Lays the Golden Eggs," on the fourth night of our Chautauqua. The ingredients that go to make up this famous address are said to be equal parts of the Irish love of fun, American enthusiasm and English matter-of-factness flavored with the tabasco sauce of Spanish impetuosity. To hear this forestal orator is to get a fresh grip on life and to more clearly understand and profit by the opportunities that come to every man and woman every day. Dr. Cairns is a preacher, unlike any other preacher you ever heard. He is the type of preacher who calls the press reporters of the great metropolitan dailies from New York to Newark, N. J., to get material for full-page write-ups and illustrations for their publications. —adv

Chairman Haggerty, a former president of the Michigan Agricultural Society, has been a member of the fair board for years. When the fair came under the jurisdiction of the state, Mr. Haggerty was one of the first men named to the board by the governor.

Oscar Webber, prominent Detroit merchant, Thomas E. Newton, a former fair president and well known packer, Charles T. Prescott, Tawas City, and Clarke L. Brody, of Lansing, are associated with Mr. Haggerty on the executive committee.

The function of this committee is to advise and counsel with G. W. Dickinson, secretary-manager of the state fair, and much of the fair's success can be attributed to the support these men have given the fair executive.

Mr. Haggerty was president from 1916 until 1921, succeeding D. D. Aitken of Flint, in that capacity. Mr. Webber's appointment to the board in 1921 for four years is attributed to his ability as a shrewd business man and the fact he is one of Michigan's best known pure bred livestock breeders. He heads the Michigan Art Institute, which has been an interesting part of the annual expositions since its origin.

In 1911 and 1912, Thomas E. Newton was president of the fair. Mr. Newton is the member in charge of the new coliseum. Charles T. Prescott was elected to the fair board in 1918. Governor Groesbeck appointed him again in 1921 for three years. He is in charge of the horse department.

Clarke L. Brody, manager of the Michigan farm bureau, is serving a two-year term on the fair board. He will head the agricultural department this year.

AMBROSE WYRICK AND ASSISTING ARTISTS AT THE CHAUTAUQUA

To those who have heard Ambrose Wyrick, nationally known tenor, it is only necessary to say that he will appear on the third day's Chautauqua program, at both the afternoon concert and the evening musical prelude. To those who have not heard him we want to say that Ambrose Wyrick is one of those wholesome singers of the John McCormack type, who, whether he is singing a song from grand opera, or a simple, little ballad, puts a certain something into it which makes it different—fills it with life, meaning and delight. When it is announced that Mr. Wyrick will be supported by two superb artists, Ethel Murray, noted English 'cellist, whose concerts abroad and in this country have endeared her to the music-loving public; and Earl James Judie, concert pianist, a crowded tent may be anticipated. Our Chautauqua committee takes particular pride in presenting this artist company. —adv

LENA

LENA or Lina, as it is frequently spelled, is one of the most conflicting of feminine names. Etymologists find it derived from the same source as Helen and also discover it through the evolution of Charlotte. Who shall say which is correct? It is not difficult to understand how Lena or Lina came to be a contraction of Helena, but preference is generally given to the theory that Lina is the correct form and that its real source is identical with the great Karl of the Franks who was the forefather of the feminine Charlotte. Charlotte of Savoy, who married Louis XI, introduced her name to French royalty, whence it traveled quickly to Germany. There it changed form, becoming first Lettchen, then Caroline, and finally Lina. Meanwhile Charlotte d'Albret of France, who was given in marriage into the House of Tremouille, was responsible for the brave Lady Derby carrying it into England. The queen of George III, bringing the name from Germany, established in England the popularity of the diminutive Lina. The Spanish make Lola from the contracted form of Charlotte or Carlota, as they call her, and the French have an equivalent Lolotte, Caroline, the form from which our own Lina is probably most often derived, was popular in Germany and was brought to England by the wife of George II, who gave it vogue among the nobility. The lovely mysterious lapis lazuli is the talismanic stone assigned to Lena. It promises her freedom from danger and disease; indeed, it is said to be a cure for fevers. Friday is her lucky day and 5 her lucky number. The morning glory of contentment is her flower.

The Siren's Voice

By CHARLES E. BAXTER

Every morning at half-past five, when his wife shook him by the shoulder, Tim McCullough grunted, rolled over, sat up in bed, and then, with a mumbled curse, began to dress. He wolfed down half-a-dozen flapjacks and two thick rashers, drained an enormous cup of coffee, and set off for the mills across the flats, cursing and muttering as the siren called him to work. McCullough had worked in the mills since he was a boy, and he had always lived in the company cottage where his wife and he had reared and sent into the world nine sturdy children. "Get up! get up! The risin' whistle's blown!" shouted Kitty in his ear. Tim grunted and rolled over. Kitty began pounding him. "Get up, you hulk, you useless loomp av a man! Ye'll be fired, Tim, if ye don't hurry!" Tim rolled over again and grinned at her from among the bedclothes. "I'm through w' the mill," he announced briefly. "That letter that come yesterday was from the lawyer, telling me that me uncle Mick's dead and left me three thousand dollars."

"What'll ye be doin' with it, Tim?" asked Kitty in awe, as they sat over their breakfast longer than they had ever sat before. "I've arranged to buy th' cottage, and we'll raise pigs and fowls and garden truck," he answered. "There goes th' siren, Tim. Ye'll be late—" Kitty began, and then realized her blunder. "I hope ye'll coom out all right," she said doubtfully. The pig did not materialize, because a city ordinance forbade the keeping of pigs, but the chickens did. Tim was a fowl fancier. He bought Rhode Island Reds, put up his own houses, and inside of six months Kitty was selling her eggs by the dozen to all the neighbors. In fact it soon looked as if the new venture would bring in almost as much as the mills had done. "Cock-a-doodle-do!" mimicked Tim, leaning over the fence and surveying his prize cockerel, strutting in all the glory of roosterdom. "I guess we're somewhat alike, us two, my beauty! Jest loafin' round in the sunshine, and don't care a snap for nobody nor nothing. Kitty, woman," he shouted, "coom and look at Sullivan here and see if ye've ever seen the like. He cost me ten berries, Sullivan did. I guess that means fifty eggs a day next summer."

Kitty looked at Sullivan and sniffed. She had not been too happy since Tim left the mills. It was all very well for him to revel in his freedom, but where did she come in? She hated the extra work of making mast for the chickens; and then, who wants an able-bodied man of sixty round the house all day, smoking his pipe and interfering? "If ye'd stuck to the mills, Tim," she said, "I guess we'd be better off still." Tim scratched his head. The fact was, he did not know what to do with himself most of the day. He missed the constant company of his companions, the din and clangor of the mill; life was growing stale and unprofitable. And somehow he had not got along so well with Kitty since he had been home all day. Suddenly an immense resolution came to him. He climbed over the fence of the chicken yard and looked cautiously about him. Nobody was in sight, except a group of busy hens at the far end of the enclosure, and—Sullivan, preening his feathers in the sunlight.

"Sullivan, come here! Cluck, cluck, cluck, Sullivan, old boy!" he called. Sullivan, insulted at being spoken to as if he were a hen, flapped his wings contemptuously and crowed. Tim leaped at him and Sullivan side-stepped and crowed derision. Tim chased him into a corner of the yard, through the group of startled hens, and finally cornered him as he was making a desperate effort to break through a half-inch hole in the wire fencing. "Ah, ye beauty!" he said, picking him up in his arms and feeling his plump body. Five minutes later Kitty screamed as Tim flung an inanimate lump upon the table. "Tis Sullivan, and I've been thinking he'll make a good pot-pie for Sunday," Tim said. "And hold your tongue, woman!"

Every morning at half-past five, when his wife shakes him by the shoulder, Tim McCullough grunts, rolls over, sits up in bed, and then, with a mumbled curse, begins to dress as the siren blows. "I was a fool to kill Sullivan!" he grumbles. "I'm thinking I'll quit th' mill and start to raisin' chickens agin' next summer." But you can't have it both ways, can you? Holland's Old Roads.

In Holland good brick roads over a hundred years old are common, according to a writer in the American City, and some have even passed the double century mark. The brick used were vitrified, as are paving brick today. B. E. Stevenson, in his "Spell of Holland," says: "For brick, brick, brick are everywhere—overhead and underfoot, on edge in the roadway and piled into great walls and massive towers. It would almost seem that the Dutch had dug away most of the ground beneath their feet in order to convert it into paving and building materials."

SWALLOWS

Swallows live almost wholly on insect food. All the members of the swallow family have long pointed wings, small feet and short broad, deeply-cleft bills. The bill when open makes an excellent scoop for gathering in insects.

Their flight is swift and graceful. No other bird can turn so quickly in the air. They are almost the only bird that can catch the swiftly flying dragon flies.

Swallows have been called "the light cavalry of the bird army." They keep the small winged insects from becoming a nuisance. Forty per cent of their food consists of flies, 16 per cent beetles, 15 per cent stink bugs and leaf hoppers, 10 per cent ants and 4 per cent dragon flies.

Most of the ants are caught in the latter part of July and August when the large female winged ants leave their nest, each prepared to found a colony of her own.

The swallows keep the air clean of swarms of black midges, black flies, and gnats of various kinds. They also eat a great many mosquitoes.

In catching insects swallows fly through the air with their bills open. Their saliva is sticky and insects stick to it just as flies stick to fly paper. When a number of insects are caught, they are rolled into a pellet and swallowed.

The popular method of committing suicide is to get in the way of a speed maniac. That insures appropriate newspaper mention.

MACHINES NOW DIGGING COAL

Inventions Have Wrought Great Changes in the Methods of Bringing "Black Diamonds" to Surface.

With the rapid development of labor-saving methods, the coal miner, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, is being transformed into a keen-eyed operator of a powerful machine which not only mines and loads the coal, but does it in a safer and more economical manner; safer, because the coal is broken down without the use of explosives which tend to shatter the roof and make it dangerous; and more economical, because it produces more lump coal and fewer fines, and does it more rapidly.

One machine developed for this work consists of an undercutting frame with cutter chain and a shearing frame on each side of the machine. In the undercutting frame is a conveyor. There is provided a powerful ram which breaks down the coal onto the conveyor. This ram can be directed at any height of the coal face.

The machine is mounted in a pan and fed forward by means of a steel rope. When the cut has been made, the machine is pulled back in the pan by means of a rope; then this rope is hooked over a sheave on the forward side of the machine and the eye fastened to a jack at the face of the opposite rib. By this means the machine is pulled sideways the width of the cut. This requires about three minutes. The machine is then ready to take another cut.

The machine can be used in combination with a movable storage hopper provided with a loading conveyor. By this system the machine operates continuously during the time the loaded mine car is being removed and replaced by an empty one.

NEW YORKERS' LATEST SLANG

Word "Quaint" Has Found Much Favor Among Those Who Affect The Artistic Life.

"Quaint" is the latest word of the world that must have a new and uncommon adjective. It has quite outmoded "amusing" in the slang of the studios and among those who affect the artistic life. The dictionary meaning of the word—"combining an antique appearance with a pleasing oddity, fancifulness, or whimsicalness"—has been quite submerged in the passing craze for its use. When the governor's daughter in "The Tavern" said to the vagabond, "You are the quaintest man I ever knew" she did not really mean what the dictionary says the word means. She was admiring his powers of deduction. But the "latest" word had been worked into the speech and that was the desired thing. The tone always used in connection with "quaint" is patronizing, whether it is applied to a human being, a picture, or what not. The user invariably tries to give the impression that the object thus passed upon could have been done ever so much better if he, or she, had had a hand in making it. To be "quaint" nowadays is to be ever so slightly damned.—New York Herald.

Human Factor Counts.

Lord Teignmouth, in a letter to the London Times, writes: "In the controversy between the advocates of battle or surface ships and admirers of the submarine, one factor, and that a very important one, has been altogether ignored—namely, the human factor. Ships are built to carry human beings; and, as far as present statistics enable one to judge, no submersible vessel has yet been constructed in which men can live for more than a few weeks, continuously, without deteriorating, mentally and physically, owing to the abnormal conditions prevailing on board. Man is an adaptable creature, and possibly, in the course of a century or so, a race of human beings may be evolved which can exist, comfortably, without fresh air, exercise or change of scene. In the meantime, surface ships will be voted the most habitable. Doctor Johnson must surely have had a U-boat in mind when he declared that 'being in a ship is being in jail, with the chance of being drowned.'"

Fur Industry.

Up to within a century of the present time, raw furs were one of the most important products of this country, commercially speaking. Immense quantities of them were exported to Europe, where they were dressed, dyed and manufactured into garments. This natural resource has been largely destroyed by the killing off of our fur-bearing animals. At the present time we are largely dependent upon foreign countries for supplies of skins.

Within recent years a great fur-dyeing and manufacturing industry has been built up in the United States, employing 18,000 operatives. We now import annually raw skins valued at $68,000,000, and of dressed skins only $4,000,000 worth.

Community Cars in Japan.

The community motorcar, owned jointly by 200 would-be motorists, is the latest thing in Japan. Fifty-five American cars have been sold by a recently organized Japanese company to 11,000 owners, each of whom paid $10 for his share in one of the cars. In return for his $10 the owner received a year's interest in the car. The year is divided into days and hours, and the specific time is allotted for each stockholder to ride. The hours have been so arranged that four people go riding with the driver during each period.

The Heart of a Princess

By ELLA SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.

It was all over and she was back in the palace. She had been only vaguely conscious all the time of the ceremony in the historic cathedral. She saw it now as in a picture; the galleries packed with ladies in their robes of nobility, the crowd of famous men and women in the pews.

She recalled the face of the bishop primate as he pronounced them man and wife; then there was the plait gold band which she felt on her finger with a strange sense of fear and hope in her heart.

She remembered the drive back through the crowded streets lined with soldiers, the cheers of the mob. And she had heard a woman cry as the state coach stopped for a moment. "Isn't she sad-looking! Poor thing, they can't pick and choose like us, can they?"

She hoped the prince at her side had not heard. She had glanced at him, but he had only sat stiff in his uniform, and she had turned her head away and tried to blink back the tears.

Then had followed the state banquet. She remembered the tiny morsel of salmon on a gold plate and the bubbles in the champagne. She had hardly eaten. There had been speeches afterward. Somehow she had felt immeasurably far from her husband.

They were going away to spend the honeymoon in his castle. Even a princess wears ordinary traveling gowns instead of silk and gold. Her maid had put the dress on the bed of the room that she was leaving forever. The princess put on her gown. In the next room one of her ladies said:

"I wonder if she cares." The princess heard her and remembered distinguished kings and queens, her ancestors, and the stories about their unhappiness that had never appeared in history books. She sighed. That was one of the limitations that went with her position. The woman in the street had expressed it very well. She had hardly met anybody; and yet she had fancied herself in love three times.

The first time was at seventeen when the heir of a neighboring country was sent over to meet her. Everybody knew why he had come and had pretended not to. She had fallen in love with him perhaps because he was the first man she had ever talked to as an equal. He had stayed three weeks and then asked for the hand of her elder sister. She was so glad she had never shown him by the least sign how she felt. The marriage had been unhappy; she had been so glad she had not married him.

The second was a boy who was attached to the court. They were both the same age—eighteen. He had kissed her—once in a dark part of the grand corridor. She had been thrilled and terrified; but one of the ladies had suspected, and the next day he was given a position in a distant colony. She had thought of him for weeks and then gradually forgotten him. And he was married now and had no doubt forgotten her.

And the third—for the first time the princess smiled. The third was a young and distinguished author, whose books both she and her mother liked, and they had met at the house of a duchess. It had all been arranged, and that love affair lasted ten seconds, while the author was walking toward her from the door. He was thrillingly handsome, and she thought of his last book, "Wayward Souls," and her heart began to beat. And then he stood still like a fool and called her "Your Highness," and appeared not to know what to do with his hands and feet.

Very firmly the princess put all these memories aside and went out into her reception room.

One of her ladies asked her something and she nodded in a mechanical way and stood still beside the window, waiting. Then she heard the whirr of the elevator and the opening of the gate, and a man's soft step along the carpeted hall. And in that instant she knew that she was in the hands of an irrevocable destiny, and she felt numb and unable to move hand or foot.

Then he had come to her side. They were alone and she raised her eyes to his with a look of dread and wonder in them. And he had folded her in his arms, and she lay there feeling a sudden inexplicable joy as she listened to what he was saying.

"You're sure—you're sure?" she asked.

"For all my life," he answered, and their lips met. "But I wasn't sure either—I hardly dared to believe."

"And it's true," said the princess, laying her head upon his shoulder just an instant; because they had never been alone together before, and they only had two minutes before going away.

British Shipbuilders Active.

Exporting ships played a large part in the activities of England's shipyards last year, according to the National Business. Thirty-eight per cent of the tonnage constructed was for foreign owners. The total construction in British yards in 1921 was 1,538,000 tons. The tonnage launched in American yards was about 1,000,000, and in German yards, 500,000. Germany's figure compares favorably with her prewar construction, and included 40 vessels between 4,000 and 7,000 tons, 13 between 7,000 and 10,000, and one around 14,000 tons.

HERE WITH AFGHAN BEAUTY

Red-Haired Huntress Arrives From Aala in Company of Retired British Army Officer.

When the White Star liner Adriatic arrived here recently from a tour of Mediterranean ports there was on board one Percival M. Fielding, a retired army captain of London, and Tazidah the beautiful, said a recent issue of the New York Tribune.

It was in the hills of Afghanistan that the captain first met Tazidah. She was chasing a gazelle over the snow-covered hills. Her red hair streamed behind her in the breeze. Her easy grace attracted the attention of the captain.

Later he came to know her better. He gave her sweetmeats. From that time on they were inseparable. Before long it was a common sight at the inn to see the captain smoking his pipe with one hand and stroking Tazidah's lovely red hair with the other. When the captain left the hills of Afghanistan Tazidah went with him.

Tazidah had unusually large feet, but in her own country no one ever thought of them in any other than an admiring way. They were hunters, those people, and Tazidah was a huntress. Her feet were of invaluable service to her in pursuing gazelles. Being as they were, big and flat, they acted as snowshoes. They had been big from the day of her birth, and were looked upon by her countrymen as a rare inheritance.

Tazidah stood on deck, rejoicing in the sloppy weather. To be sure, the snow was more diluted than that to which she had been accustomed. But it was snow, and that was the main thing. She yearned for the sight of a gazelle.

"Are you going to enter in the dog show?" some one asked the captain.

"I don't think so," he replied. "But she's a rare dog and fast on her feet. Eh? Oh, she's an Afghan gazelle hound."

STUCK TO HIS RESOLUTION

The late Marquis Okuma of Japan, while talking with a group of politicians shortly before his death, was asked by one of them who, in his opinion, was the most dreadful man in the world, and his reply was: "One from whom you have received favors." The great statesman of Waseda, when young, was never able to excel in handwriting, try as he might, though he was remarkably good at brain work. Ashamed of this, with characteristic stubbornness he determined that he would never again take up a brush to write. Once Kei Nakamura, prominent scholar of Chinese literature, to try this resolution of Okuma's, called a boy and said: "Go and ask Okuma how to write the Chinese character 'Shoku.'" The boy came up to Okuma and did as he was told. To help him Okuma took out brush and ink and a sheet of paper, and he almost began setting the letter down, when he suddenly recollected his resolution.

Immediately he dropped his brush on the floor, took the boy near the fire and showed him how to write the character in the ashes with a poker.

Money in Street Music.

Never were so many bands in London streets as now. Some are, or supposed to be, formed of unemployed; others, perhaps, spring from a pure desire to make our lives melodious. This music seems to be profitable. At Marlborough Street police court a member of a street band charged with obstruction was said to be making more than £7 ($35) a week. From a Musicians' union comes the comment that this is no uncommon sum; and that street musicians have been known to refuse places in a theater orchestra. As they would earn there from £8 10s ($17.50) to £4 14s ($23.50), they have reason.—London Times Weekly.

Gorgeous Turkish Wedding.

A Cressus-like wedding on which $50,000 was spent was celebrated in Stambul recently, despite the general poverty of the present-day Turks. The bridegroom, an Albanian Turk, made a big fortune after the armistice by selling opium. He hired 48 houses for the wedding guests, who were entertained sumptuously for a week. A hundred motorcars and 800 open carriages followed the bride's closed and captained carriage to a large school building, which he had rented and decorated for extravagant festivities. Each table provided for 300 guests and was loaded with Turkish delicacies. The wedding presents, it is said, were worth $80,000.

New Shantung Coal Field.

A newly discovered coal field is reported in Shantung province, which is said to contain an immense quantity of smokeless coal, according to the Compressed Air magazine. Whatever your feeling concerning the value of any car, you owe it to yourself to know the Essex. Match it against any car you know. Ask the opinion of any owner. Then drive the Essex and what others have said will have a real meaning to you.

And then, too, you will know why the Essex so seldom requires service attention. You will know why the performance is unusual and owners are so outspoken in their endorsement.
