HAS MANY SULPHUR SPRINGS Oklahoma Has Wonderful Supply of Sparkling Water Impregnated With Health-Giving Minerals.

In southern Oklahoma not far from the Texas boundary, a group of 30 healing springs, all of cold sparkling water, were set apart by congress in 1904 under the title of the Platt national park. Most of them are sulphur springs; others are impregnated with bromides and other mineral salts.

Many thousands yearly visit the bordering city of Sulphur to drink these waters; many camp in or near the reservation; the bottled waters bring relief to thousands at home.

All these Platt springs, like those at Hot Springs, Ark., were known to the Indians many generations before the coming of the white settler.

According to a Chickasaw legend, two warriors competed for the hand of Deerfoot, a chieftain's daughter.
 Both were killed by jumping off a cliff. Then Deerfoot also jumped and killed herself. The chief on the hilltop cried so many briny tears that, according to Indian tradition, they filtered down through the cliff and mingled with the spring water, to which they imparted remedial qualities.

KIDDIES SIX
 By Will M. Maupin
 HIS FATE

LITTLE Willie Walt-a-Bit Intended well to mind.
 But, somehow, always managed it To be a bit behind.
 "In a minute," he would say When time came to cease his play.

Little Willie Walt-a-Bit
 Grew to be a man;
 But he loved to sit and sit Scheming out some plan.
 "In a minute," he would say,
 "I will get to work straightaway."

Mr. William Walt-a-Bit Neared St. Peter's Gate, But, alas, he managed it So that he was late.
 "Wait a minute!" shouted he;
 But St. Peter turned the key.

William Walt-a-Bit was sent To the nether clime, Where without his own intent He arrived on time.
 Now he mourns his torrid fate,
 For his master will not wait.

STATE FAIR TRIP INTERESTS BOYS

YOUNGSTERS EAGERLY AWAIT JOURNEY TO DETROIT FOR 10-DAY DEMONSTRATION.

HUNDREDS OF CHILDREN WILL ATTEND SCHOOLS

Everywhere in Michigan boys who won in the county competitions for free trips to the Michigan State Fair, Detroit, September 10 to 19, are preparing for their participation in the Boys' State Fair school of the seventy-third annual exposition.

Back of the boys' state fair school is the hope of building permanently in the minds of Michigan's future soil tillers what the Michigan State Fair is and, hopes to accomplish.

The county eighth grade examinations for the trip to the fair this year included questions concerning state trunk line railroads, facts about Michigan which cannot be found in books, knowledge of crop rotations warfare against weeds, insects and various other questions. Twenty questions made up the examinations.

Boys who win scholarships at the state fair all are from the rural districts. They come to the state fair at the expense of the exposition which includes transportation and living costs during the visit here.

Upon entering the school, each boy is subjected to a physical examination to determine whether or not he is strong enough to withstand the severe 10-day course.

The 10-day course includes lectures by stock judges, inspection tours through all departments and visits about Detroit. Entertainment is provided to relieve the monotony of strenuous schooling. The school superintendent is E. T. Cameron, of Lansing.

Besides the school, the Michigan State Fair also sponsors a course in conjunction with the Michigan Agricultural college, in which 150 boys and 150 girls participate. The youngsters are brought to the fair in relays of 30 every two days. When facilities permit, the entire group will be allowed to remain throughout the fair.
 All expenses of these children are defrayed by the fair.

Forrest A. Lord, of Mt. Clemens, a member of the board of managers, heads the department of which R. A.
 Turner, of Lansing, state club leader, is superintendent.

THE DEVIL-FISH IN DEMAND Delicacy, Dried and Fresh, in All Sizes, Never Missing From the Stores of Manhattan.

The devil-fish tribe, big and small, dried and fresh, are never missing from the stores of the Italian, Greek, Spanish, Turko and Mongol colonies of Manhattan. They range in size from the small squid to the giant cuttlefish. The cuttlefish can also always be obtained, from one year's end to another, pickled and canned in its own ink.

Sun-dried oysters are always obtainable at Mongol stores throughout the country. They never use canned oysters. The bivalves are sold on rattan, and circled (after drying) for hanging up in stores.

Lobsters' tails, sun-dried, are a great delicacy with the Greeks, and are imported regularly. A caviar is imported from the Hellenes and all along the Asia Minor seaboard. It is the roe of the baskra which is salted down, mild-cured and sun-dried to a firm compactness which makes the article almost as hard as wood. Then it is steeped in and given an effective coating of beeswax. This will preserve it for years and the slightly fragrant beeswax film will hold its faint honeylike odor for as long.
 This is the real original Turkish caviar.

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS
 "ELECTRICITY"

IN SEEKING the derivation of this word, one might be pardoned for supposing that it had something to do with the ancient word for lightning or even for steel or iron, because these substances have become connected in our minds with the substance itself. But "electricity" is one of those words which might be termed "natural errors," for it has its origin in the Greek word for amber—elektron. In fact, a literal translation of it would be "the quality of being like amber."

The connection is far from apparent until we dig back into Greek history and find that the scientists of ancient Athens discovered that, by rubbing a piece of amber vigorously they were able to attract light objects with it. We now know that the force which we call "electricity" was generated by the rubbing of the amber, by the friction applied to its surface, but the Greeks were of the opinion that this was a quality inherent in the amber itself. While the existence of this force has been apparent in the form of lightning, magnets and the like, for countless centuries, it was only in very recent times that it was recognized as a distinct power, to be studied and catalogued and used for the benefit of mankind. The name applied to it, however, was the name given by the Greeks to the substance which manifested it.

Cleaning Big Bill

By HUBERT RAY

Joe and Giuseppe, which means the same thing, perched themselves fifty-seven feet above the thirty-ninth story of the Teerah building and looked down. From where they crouched they could see the whole checkerboard of the city spread out beneath them.

The parks appeared as little patches of vivid green, the houses and office buildings were as child's blocks; the cars were crawling centipedes, the pedestrians tiny dots that stained the whiteness of the intersecting streets and avenues.

Giuseppe adjusted the ropes about the plank.

"Here she goes, Joe!" he said. Joe stepped upon the boards and held the ropes tightly, while Giuseppe began playing them out from the perch on which he stood. Joe went slowly down and down.

The cornice and architectural embellishments of the Teerah Tower began to rise upward. Two pigeons flapped away, and Joe saw two nests with little white eggs in them within the angle formed by two stone projections.

"I s'pose they do lay eggs like the sparrers," reflected Joe. "Funny I never thought of it."

"Let 'er go, Giuseppe!" Joe called back.

Now an enormous sphere of dingy white began to raise itself to the level of Joe's vision; then there came into view a monstrous arm of steel, looking like a stunted flagpole. Another appeared. All round the whitish rim appeared posts of metal, disposed with varying slopes. And suddenly the face of the tower seemed to tremble as the thunderous boom of Big Bill, the Teerah clock, saluted the city below.

"Aw r!", Giuseppe," Joe called at the top of his voice.

Fastened to one side of the planks was a very long mop, a housewife's mop, such a one as a healthy giantess might have disported herself with in some Gargantuan apartment. It stood in a pall containing a mixture of cleaning fluid. Joe raised the mop in his arms and staggered forward. The handle of the mop struck the can, which overturned, tilting the planks. Joe grasped at nothing, felt himself falling, threw out his arms, and seized the great steel pole in front of him.

Next instant he was clinging with both arms around Big Bill's minute hand as it made its way past the hour.

Far underneath he could see the checkerboard of the city, overhead the sun blazing in the cloudless sky. His cries were unheard; the projecting cornice cut off sight and sound from Giuseppe.

Giuseppe, seated on his ledge, was wolfing down his dinner. Joe, he knew, was safe underneath; there was no reason why he should disturb himself until Joe called to be pulled up. Having eaten, he lay back and began dreaming of a girl in Palermo.

When Joe's nerves ceased to quiver and strain at the gooseflesh that contained them, he began to view the possibilities of the situation. The swinging planks had tilted downward, a rope had slipped somewhere; it was impossible to regain his place there. His weight upon the minute hand did not impede its movement in the least. It was moving steadily downward. Very soon it pointed to a quarter past the hour. Joe lay extended on its broad surface, holding on for life and death.

Several times he shouted again, but without the least result.

The minute hand crept on. Joe perceived with horror that he was moving head downward. He hung poised over the city vertically, his head at the VI, his feet about the center of the clock.

He clung madly to the hand through a period of all but unconsciousness. As his senses gradually returned, he became aware that he was shifting back to the horizontal. Soon he could ease the strain upon his aching arms. The minute hand pointed to a quarter before the hour.

Then a new horror assailed him. Underneath was the shorter pole of the hour hand. Measuring the space between them with his eyes, Joe saw that inexorably as they drew together he would be caught, crushed lifeless, flung to the checkerboard below.

Desperately he began to shift his grasp, inch by inch downward, until his feet rested on the two-foot projection about the base of the hour hand, at the center of the clock. He thought that if he could support himself on that, with only one arm extending round the minute hand, he might escape with the loss of a hand.

He closed his eyes. Already he seemed to feel the edge of the hour hand brush his wrist lightly. It was two minutes to twelve.

Suddenly a furious gust blew the tilted plank against the dial of the clock. And, poising himself on his stand, Joe leaped wildly toward the abyss—grasped the ropes, and clung to them.

"Giuseppe! Giuseppe!" he called. "Giuseppe! Giuseppe!" he called. Giuseppe awoke from dreams of warm Palermo. His head appeared. "You call, Joe? You finish de job?" he shouted.

"No, I've dropped my mop," Joe shouted back. "Pull her up! I've got to go for another, and I guess we're both out half-a-day's pay on this deal, Giuseppe!"
