Civilization Traced in Coins.

Man first had an opportunity to call "heads or tails" more than 2,200 years ago, when the practice of stamping a head on coins was instituted by the Greeks, with the likeness of Alexander the Great. Some of these ancient Greek coins are valuable as art objects alone, the embossing being of rare workmanship and surpassing anything to be seen on the coinage of today. It is naturally an example of the great height which Greek culture reached in that day.

The course of civilization, in fact, can easily be traced in these coins. The Roman coinage, some of which bears the head of Nero, is not equal in beauty to that of the Greek, but nevertheless shows a high quality of art. But the money of the succeeding "Dark Ages" is crude in the extreme, and even the English ten-cent piece of 1000 A, D, is childishly primitive in comperison.

Irish Settled in Iceland.

It was only in 1918 that the long constitutional controversy between Iceland and the Danish government resuited in the recognition of that island as a free and sovereign state in association with Denmark, under one and the same king, and once more "the hermit of me Atlantic," as it has been called, is free to pursue its way in accord with those early days when colonists from Norway and Ireland established a commonwealth which lasted more than four centuries.

The Irish of the Twelfth century were not the first of their race to find a home in Iceland, for the first setplace to exercise their vocation .-Christian Science Monitor.

Altogether Too Suggestive.

DIBELL-ALFORD

Leon E. Alford, an East Tawas boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Alford of this city, was married last Wednesday, August 23, to Miss Clara Dibell of Ashtabula, Ohio. The ceremony took place at the bride's home at Ashtabula, Rev. Dr. Morley of the Presbyterian church of that city officiat-

The bride was gowned in white silk crepe de chine and carried asters, the color scheme being pink, white and lavender. The bride was a teacher in the high school of the Ashtabula Harbor special schools. Rev. Morley, who performed the ceremony, was also teacher in the same institution.

Mrs. Ed. Alford of this city, mother of the groom, attended the wedding. The young couple left for Detroit where they visited with relatives, and on Saturday last they arrived in East

Tawas for a visit at the groom's home in this city They will later leave for Vermilion, Mich., where Leon is employed in the Coast Guard service. The well wishes of many Tawas friends are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Alford for a bright and prosperous wedded life.
