LONG DISTANCE helps one large wholesale house serve its 4,500 customers in Southern Michigan and builds business for the Company.

The General Sales Manager of that Company, comparing the work of a modern telephone salesman with that of one of the old school, writes:

> "In 124 days the telephone salesman called on 4,628 merchants, 4,522 of them by telephone, averaging 37 calls per day.

> "The old school salesman made 3,750 calls in 216 days, less than half of them by telephone, and averaged only 18 calls per day.

"The average daily sales of the man who sold by telephone were two and one-half times those of the member of the old school."

The telephone is quick, handy and a sure card of admittance. It builds business and good-will and lowers selling costs.

Mary's Rich Aunt Mattie

By CLARA DELAFIELD

The Trelawneys waited with some trepidation at the train. Neither of them had ever seen Mary's Aunt Matrie, who had written from California that she was coming to pay a visit to the newly married couple.

"She's supposed to be very cranky," said Mary, "And immensely rich. If she takes a fancy to us, John, our fortune's made. So you must be just as nice to her as ever you can be." "Look," said John, "there are the when they find out how much money Aunt Mattie's got they'll open their eyes. Here comes the train!"

The train came puffing into the sta tion. Among the last of the passengers to descend was a gray-haired old lady, carrying two enormous oblong parcels. "I bet a dollar that's Aunt Mattie!" get around the old harridan!"

Aunt Mattie?" they asked "You must speak louder. I'm just a little deaf," answered the old lady. "Aren't you Aunt Mattie? Aunt Mattie! Aunt Mattie!" they shouted

At length comprehension reached my niece and nephew?" she demanded. "Yes, come along!" they shouted, carried them to the house.

"This your house? I don't think much of it," sniffed Aunt Mattie as They pushed and pulled Aunt Mattie up into the best bedroom. Once Worst of all, Aunt Mattie was almost totally deaf, and therefore the conversation was more or less of a mono-

"Dear Aunt Mattie, won't you try some of this soup? I made it myself," said Mary.

"Drat your soup!" she screamed. "I didn't come here to be given thick soup at my time of life. I want some cold tinned tongue.' After vainly attempting to make

Aunt Mattie understand that there was no tongue, Mary, who was nearly crying, went out into the kitchen and came back with a dish of sliced ham. Aunt Mattie took a single glance at it and, with an indignant sniff, rose from the table. "You bring them things of mine down," she cried. "I ain't agoing to stay in a place where they don't know the difference between tongue and

With which she stalked out of the dining room. John and Mary looked at each other in consternation,

"Well, all I can say is, good riddance," John remarked. "I wouldn't have that old harridan in my house for a hundred dollars a week."

"Oh, John, what can we have done to vex her?" Mary sobbed. "Just wickedness-pure, plain wickedness," her husband answered.

A ring at the door bell startled them. Mary, hastily wiping the tears away, went out to open it, followed by her husband. Aunt Mattle was sitting in folded on her lap.

Outside they found the Harringtons, with a pleasant, gray-haired lady. "Have you, by any chance, got our Aunt Hattle here?" they asked.

"Your Aunt Hattie?" bellowed John, "Yes, she she well, she escaped from a-a nursing home this morning, and I-I think we took your Aunt Mattie by mistake. We'd been notified that poor Aunt Hattie was on her way here, and-

"Oh, Aunt Mattie!" sobbed Mary, falling into the old lady's surprised but motherly arms. She turned to Mrs. Harrington.

"I guess that must be your Aunt Mattie," she said. "Take her away. We don't want her, and we we didn't try to steal her-did we, John!"

Her Mistake.

The actress had been happily married three times but was compelled to sue her fourth for diverce. He had left the flat, also some old clothes and some of her old love letters. There she sat amid the litter and looked them over.

"I remain, Mrs. John Flubdub." Thus they were signed. She tossed the last one aside. "But I didn't remain Mrs. John Flubdub," she sighed.

LEGISLATIVE REPORT

The two outstanding problems confronting the legislature at this stage of the session are: First; how much money shall they appropriate for the various state institutions, departments, boards and other public purposes? Second; what taxation systems shall be devised to raise this revenue? Practically all the appropriation bills are now in and are being carefully Jan, 28. considered by the institutional committees of the house and senate. In this regard, the law-makers are from two to four weeks farther along than they were at this time two years ago.

During the first nine days of the Whittemore. session three times as many bills were introduced as during the corresponding period two years ago. Eighty-seven bills were introduced in the house, 55 in the senate, 142 in all as compared to 46 two years ago.

So far most of the real work is "I wonder whom they're waiting being done by individual members for," said Mary, "Oh, what does it and the numerous committees. Little is accomplished in the brief formal "We don't care," said John. "I guess sessions except to introduce bills. The solons continue to adjourn from Thursday until Tuesday of each week to allow the institutional committees to investigate the financial needs of the various state institutions and prepare recommendations.

Even more perplexing than the said John. "Come on, Mary, and let's matter of how much money to spend is the problem of how to raise the They went up to her. "Aren't you revenue. Benjamin Franklin's famous saying that "Nothing is sure except death and taxes" never was truer than today. Four more tax schemes were introduced during the week. Probably Green Will Never Know Why He Failed to Make a Firm Friend of Jones.

It was one night that Jones had given over to the whims of his wife and this particular evening she had picked out to visit the Greens on the hill. He ranged on the subject from colts to old mares and from pacers to trotters, and nags were delved into at great length, Histories were recited and the discourse fairly reeked with facts and

Jones for his wife's sake made a good play at being extremely interested and listened intently for several hours. After they had gone Green told his wife, "I guess I got him going. I recognized the odor of an equestrian about him as soon as he stepped through the door and I talked horses to him all the time. Pretty clever,

But on their way home Mrs. Jones remarked, "I wonder why Mr. Green persisted in talking horses? Evidently he does not know that you are not interested in animals of any kind." "I wonder myself why he tried to talk me deaf on that fool subject," mused Jones, as he stepped on the accelerator and shot his car over a railroad crossing, swearing softly that Green never could interest him in any deal now. "Unless he happened to get a whiff of that stable-smelling mange cure I'm putting on my scalp to keep my hair in and thought I was a riding master, or something," he added.

"A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's 'Court"

Adapted from Mark Twain's Story

This story of a Connecticut Yankee, endowed with a knowledge of present day science and invention and dropped into the court of King Arthur is one of the world's masterpieces. See the surprise and consternation caused by the magic of modern invention when viewed by the knights and fair ladies of this court famous in poetry and legend. A stupendous production picturing the pomp and splendor of the Medieval age, the golden age of romance, and the exciting and humorous adventures of a Yankee.
