CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMP

Here, you many mothers, housewives and cooks that think your lot a particularly hard one with family of four or five to cook, serve and wash dishes for, how would you like to be told you had 360,000 meals to prepare, serve and wash dishes afterward and that you had all of this to do in just thirty days? Well, that very thing has just happened to Captain Daniel O'Connell, Q. M. corps, when Brigadier General Moseley called him in and informed him that he would be the mess officer for the citizens' military training camp to be held at Camp Custer, Michigan, from August 1 to September 1, 1923.

You mothers with young boys 17 or 18 years old will realize better than anyone else what a job it is to feed 4,000 hungry youngsters who are out in the open air with plenty of physical exercise and will be inclined to sympathize with Captain O'Connell for being assigned a job as big as this. Don't waste your sympathy, however, for Captain O'Connell doesn't need it as he thrives on jobs like this. Instead of being the least bit annoyed over such an assignment his answer to General Moseley when given this job was the customary "Yes, sir; I hoped I would have 4,800 to feed.

As much as we hate statistics, it is thought you will get a clearer picture of what this job means if certain staple articles of food necessary to prepare these meals is expressed in terms with which we are familiar. It will require 65 tons of beef, 65 tons of bread, 72 tons of potatoes or other fresh vegetables, to say nothing of the numerous other articles required to feed these 4,000 hungry boys.

To be sure, Captain O'Connell will not have to do all of the work himself. He will merely be the directing head and will have the assistance of expert army cooks and mess sergeants to look after the actual preparation and serving of food.

The scheme is to divide the young men that attend the citizens' military training camp in companies of about 150 and serve them in a separate mess where they will have a trained mess sergeant in charge with two army cooks to cook and serve the food.

The young men attending the citizens' military training camp are required to work hard and play hard, and therefore the question of plenty of good wholesome well cooked food is a big one in the camp. As an indication of the benefit to the young men who attended the 1922 citizens' military training camp, the final physical examination showed that the average gain in weight per man who attended the camp during the month was five pounds.

The following persons have been named as assistant chairmen to secure Iosco county candidates for the citizens' military training camp at Camp Custer. Isadore Friedman Tawas City, John Winters, Oscoda, J. A. Carlson, East Tawas, Otto Rahl, Hale, Chas. Hinman, Alabaster.

Among some of the good features of the camp for this summer is a

Tawas City, Mich., May 25, 1923

With all the talk of the importance of teaching Americanism to immigrants, the discovery is made that there are scores of Washington school-rooms without a flag of any size. When the pupils recite the "Salute the Flag" they go through the motions of saluting the empty air, but it is no emptier than their own minds as to what they are really doing. How many really associate that exercise with the flags they see later waving over government buildings or private homes and business houses on special days? There is the woeful lack of public knowledge as to what proper respect for Old Glory requires, says the Indianapolis Star. If the simple rules regarding the flag's treatment were taught in school—perhaps they are in some rooms—there would be fewer flags used as table coverings on which to set the speaker's pitcher of water, so essential in enabling him to send up his glorious patriotic eagles.

City life is contributing more to the heroic characteristics of humanity than any other thing. If motorists continue to be reckless and to laugh at the law it will not be long before the man, woman or child who can summon the courage to cross a street during the rush hours will be a candidate for the honors paid only to heroes extraordinary. Much is said about the hardihood of the pioneers. After all, they had an easy time of it. All they had to do was to fight Indians and take a chance now and then, of getting scalped. The city dweller takes many chances every day of being injured by speed fiends who scorn the law, says the Kansas City Journal. It will not be long before the man who can cross the street without the slightest sense of fear, might intrepidly scale Mount Everest, defy death in an airplane or become a steeplejack.

The Industrial Association of San Francisco, Cal., has started a school of apprentices with some novel features. The boys have been divided into three classes and one class moves along behind the other. The first two weeks will be passed in school, after which they will be put to work as assistant helpers for four weeks, after which they will return to school, and so on during the term of their apprenticeship. In this manner of alternating the school and shop experience it is anticipated that from 12 to 18 months will be saved and the boys will be half-fledged plumbers in two and a half or three years instead of four. The apprentices will be paid for the time they are at work, but not for the time at school.

A STANDARD OF LIVING

"An ideal in the hearts of our friends is what we all try to live up to, and so when you say you believe in me you help me," wrote a wise woman the other day. We hear a good deal and say a good deal about standards of living, meaning generally standards expressed in terms of necessities, conveniences and comforts. But really no one lives by such standards, says the Milwaukee Journal. Rather we live by what we think we can do that in some way is worth while. And so long as we don't get an ingraining habit of mind so that we can't do a decent act without expecting that some one is going to praise it, it helps to hear now and then that some one thinks we are doing a fair job of living. As a star for wagon-hitching purposes, an ideal in the hearts of our friends is not merely a poetic thought, but a living reality that keeps souls and consciences alive and individuals carrying heavy burdens with a heart that is light.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

(© 1922, Harland H. Allen.)

SELECTING THE KITCHEN TABLE

The first requirement of a kitchen table is that it be solid. The next, that it be the proper height. Not just so many-inches from the floor, but conveniently high for the person who uses it most. It should have one or two drawers for cutlery, and may have an under-sung shelf.
The next problem is the matter of a top. For serving purposes the primary consideration is that the table top be impervious to heat. Hot dishes must be set on it, so a glass top would be likely to break, a painted top would be likely to blister.

The preparing table must be one that will clean easily, one that will resist moisture, and not stain with grease.

If, as in most kitchens, one table is to serve both purposes, the selection of a top should be a matter for extreme care.

The wooden top: Its principal advantages are cheapness, and the fact that fewer dishes are broken upon it. Its disadvantages are that it must be constantly scrubbed, that it absorbs water, gets stained and full of grease spots. Modern sanitation is slowly but surely driving out the wooden-topped kitchen table.

Oilcloth: This is a cheap cover, wears fairly well, and cleans easily. But it won't stand heat at all, and gets cut up by the use of knives.

Zinc covers are favored by some women. They are good wearing, but tarnish with acids and alkalis, so do not make the best place to lay out food.

The galvanized iron table is in many respects the best all-around kitchen table. It never wears out, is not affected by heat, does not stain or absorb grease. But in spite of that it is not the easiest table to clean.

The enamel-topped kitchen table has been steadily growing in popularity for a number of years. Its chief drawbacks in the past have been a liability to chip, and to blister with heat. Enamel, however, has been much perfected lately by enterprising manufacturers. If you can get one that is dependably guaranteed against chipping, even when you screw on the food grinder, and one that will stand the heat, it will, no doubt, give you more satisfaction than any other type of kitchen table.

An old Scotswoman was told that her minister used notes, but would not believe it. Said one: "Gang into the gallery an' see." She did so and saw the written sermon. After the luckless preacher had concluded his reading on the last page he said: "But I will not enlarge." The old woman called out from her lofty position: "Ye canna, ye canna, for your paper's give out!"

The Fog on That Day in '87

By MYRA CURTIS LANE

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)
"You see, a fog's different. Everything's different then. People are different. And maybe some day there'll be another fog like there was that day in '87."

The old man had been drinking or drugging himself, but Bryant, who was always interested in a human story, leaned forward to hear.

"I don't know as there's much to it, except it's a—sort of symbol of life."
What did this broken-down old man know about symbols? It was the man Bryant was studying; he did not care anything about his story.

It appeared that he had been a shipping clerk somewhere along the water front, and all his life he had wanted to travel in strange countries.
He used to see the ships come in from his window—tramps, old sailing schooners, manned by swarthy, gesticulating men. Then he would travel in imagination through tropic seas,
and land on palm-fringed shores, pass through old, crumbling cities filled with color and incident and life.

Always he cherished that idea, and it took so strong a hold on him that at length he managed to save up seven hundred dollars to start on his adventures.

Of course there was the girl—but which girl? None of the girls he knew had mind or bent for anything like that. They wanted the gay life of Broadway, which then centered about Madison Square, gay little dinners, theaters, fun.

There was one girl, a waitress in the cheap restaurant he used to patronize. She was a tall girl with flut-ty, yellow hair, and kind eyes, haughty, aloof; better game in hand
than the twelve-dollar clerk. He admired her; she was only tolerant in a friendly way. He had dreamed of making her the companion of the adventure, but he saw that hope was impossible. Well, he would go alone.

He would find his companion in the tropics, a dark girl, with raven hair and flashing eyes. . . .
A big ship was in from Honduras.
He could get passage for forty dollars.
He stood near the quay, watching her unload. Huge bunches of green bananas were slung ashore.

Then the fog came down. It crept in from the sea, shrouding everything in a clammy mist. He did not know the way back to the office, he could see nothing—nothing but the fog.

Out of the fog appeared the face of a girl. She came groping toward him.
It was the waitress of the cafe.
"Oh, please can you tell me where I am?" she begged. Then she recognized him and gave him a little nod.

He took her gently by the arm.
"Anice, you're coming with me to Central America," he said.

He saw her eyes dilate; he was mesmerizing her by the intensity of his will. For of a sudden he knew as surely as he had ever known anything in his life that this was the one girl for him.

"Now," he said. "They're sailing at three. It's only necessary to walk on board. I have seven hundred dollars in my pocket!"—he always carried his roll about with him. "The captain can marry us. Come, Anice."

"You—you're mad," she gasped.
Nevertheless, she continued looking at him, and suddenly recognition seemed to come into her eyes—that this was the one man for her.

"We're not going back," he said.
"Neither you nor me. We'll take nothing with us, just our love for each other."

And he began talking of their future together under two palms, and of their home in some old, decaying city. "Will you come, Anice?" he asked.

"Yes," she breathed, and he bent toward her and kissed her. And she returned his kiss, and they held each other closely in the fog.

And then—the fog began to lift. A sea breeze came in, blowing it away.
Slowly the outlines of the buildings came into view. And now they saw each other, and slowly he saw that look of recognition fading out of the girl's eyes.

And some exultation was fading out of her heart, and, desperate to clutch
it, he took her by the arm. "Come, Anice," he said.

She hesitated—then wrenched herself away. "Why, you—you're mad,"
she said.

"She turned her back on him and hurried away to the restaurant. That afternoon he resigned his position and blew in his seven hundred dollars—he never knew how. And he never went to Honduras.

That was what the old man told Bryant. "But some day maybe there'll be another fog like that day in '87," he said. "People are different in a fog.
Maybe I'll find her then and she'll be different, too."

Chimp (coming from the dressing room)—You said you had shown me everything of interest about the university, you deceitful old thing.

Panzee (all worried)—But I did, Duckie.

Chimp—You didn't show me the zoo.
Panzee—These isn't any zoo, little girl.

Chimp—You mean old thing, I know there is. I heard Mary just say she saw a dancing Wham that was the cat's klookus, and Nell said, "That's nothing; I saw a bird with a pedal potency on him like a centipede."

CANNOT MASTER SHORTHAND

Men of Acknowledged Ability Have Failed in Efforts to Learn Even Simple Systems.

Lord Beaverbrook, speaking at the annual prize-giving of Pitman's school at the Royal Albert hall, says the London Morning Post, said that it was a curious fact that some men of great ability had failed in the attempt to learn shorthand.

He mentioned that Lord Carson was one example, and the present prime minister another. It was not a question of cleverness, or even of memory. Bonar Law possessed an extraordinary memory. When he first became leader of the conservative party, it was his habit on the occasion of any great set debate in the house of commons to dictate to his secretary the speech that he intended to make. He would read it through, and then go down to the house and repeat it with scarcely the alteration of a word. He would sometimes quote long mathematical calculations entirely from memory, yet he confessed to having striven very hard to learn shorthand, and without success.

T. M. Healy, now the governor general of the Irish Free State, used to make use of shorthand in the debates.—New York Tribune.

One of the most noted Bibles is the "Blood" Bible, the work of Frederick von Trenk. Confined in chains by Frederick the Great, as punishment for making love to the king's sister, the Princess Amelia, Trenk inscribed two hundred blank pages in his Bible with love sonnets in honor of the princess, every word being written in his own blood.

Chief Operator Helps to Keep Your Telephone Service Good

"Please give me Chief Operator"

How often have you spoken that phrase to "Central"?

Chief Operator is your immediate point of contact with the Telephone Company on service problems.

Your request to Chief Operator is cared for by a young woman especially trained to interpret your telephone needs and handle your inquiry. She helps solve your service problems.

It would be worth your while to visit your telephone exchange some day, between the hours of eight and five, and meet the Central office folks. Come alone or with a group of friends. Clubs and associations always are welcome.

You will find everyone alert to give you good service. You will have an interesting visit and it will be mutually advantageous for us to become acquainted. You will learn how, through co-operation, telephone service is kept at high standard.

"Shogun" is a Japanese term for great general, or commander in chief. For several centuries the shogun class exercised the real power in Japan, though nominally subject to the emperor. However, in 1867 a revolution restored the power of the emperor and the title of shogun was abolished the following year.

Profitless Occupation.

An Indian in the Punjab writes in ink in Arabic a verse from the Koran on a grain of polished rice. The verse is written by the projected and polished finger nail of the writer and the Arabic characters are so beautifully traced that one may read them with the naked eye. The artist, a middle-aged man, has been doing this kind of work for years.

To Clean Glass Vases.

Egg shells are not only useful to settle the coffee with but shaken round in the glass vases of summer time will help to keep them looking clean and sparkling—especially at the bottom where sediment collects.

Beehives Ventilated by Fans.

In the summer the beehive is especially cooled by ventilators, which consist of bees that do nothing but vibrate their wings with great exertion, thus circulating fresh air all through the hive.
