POPULAR ENTERTAINERS WILL APPEAR HERE

Third Number of 20th Century Club's Lyceum Course Will be Given Tuesday Evening

Joseph Baldi, of the Youna-Baldi Company, which will appear here Tuesday evening, Jan. 20, on the Lyceum course, is one of the most popular piano-accordionists in America today. With Youna, who has become well known for his mastery of Japanese jugglery, an intensely interesting program is given one which is a distinct novelty and a great favorite with audiences everywhere.

Joseph Baldi is a native of Calosso, in northern Italy, near the French border. The piano-accordion which he plays is one of the most beautiful instruments of the kind in use today. It is pure white, trimmed in silver, and has 120 bass keys and 43 treble keys.

Mr. Baldi is a marked favorite with Lyceum audiences. During his tours of Redpath Chautauqua circuits he has been always enthusiastically received.

In his programs he uses both classical and popular numbers, interpreting them with skill and artistry upon his melodious instrument. The accordion was manufactured in Vienna about 1829 and soon became popular throughout Europe. It was a very simple affair, however, compared with the instrument used by Joseph Baldi. In recent years the accordion has become one of the most complicated of musical instruments.

In connection with the appearance of the Youna-Baldi Company on the Lyceum course here Tuesday evening, it is interesting to know where Youna acquired his extraordinary skill in jugglery.

At the age of six, Youna, an American boy, lived in Tokio. He was enormously interested in the spectacular performances of the Japanese acrobats and was especially impressed by their jugglery, to which he devoted himself diligently. In Japan, jugglery and tumbling are national arts. Intricate tricks, involving genuine skill and dexterity are handed down from generation to generation. Youna so perfected himself in what is known as "Japanese ancestral jugglery," that he is the peer of the most adroit natives.

Youna has traveled the world as a few performers. He has toured Asia, Africa, the South Seas and all of Europe. For five years he was featured as the American Orientalist with Otis Skinner in the magnificent spectacular drama "Kismet."

Together with Joseph Baldi, the second member of the company and a notable piano accordionist, a program of music and entertainment is presented that is unique, surprising and thoroughly enjoyable.

NOTICE
I am going south for the winter, and all accounts will be left at my residence in East Tawas with Mrs. James Daley, Jr., for collection.
The majority of these accounts are overdue and as a matter of fact when you send for a doctor or employ his service it is because you need him and expect him to come, and when he send you his bill it is because he needs your assistance and expects it.
Many of you have received notices of your account without giving the matter any consideration, and we hope now without making any further appeal, that an amicable settlement will be forthcoming.
Thank you all in advance, I remain as ever, Dr. A. Stealy.

Federal, State and Foreign Governments Investigating Discovery by Judge Widdis

The federal, state and some provincial governments of Canada are now experimenting with Widdisite, some properties of which were discovered by Judge A. Widdis, to determine its value as a conservator of liquids in soils. A large part of the earth's surface, including numerous desert regions and other sandy areas are barren or practically so, because of the loss of soil water by evaporation and percolation. In these districts the soil liquids either go up or down beyond the reach of plants. Widdisite holds them in place. Especially, it prevents loss by percolation.

Michigan has several million acres of sandy soil that is ill adapted for farming purposes because the soil leaches the water and the fertilizer applied to it. This is the trouble with our so called sand plains to be found on all sides of us. Nearly all districts on the face of the earth receive sufficient precipitation in the form of fog, snow or rain to sustain abundant vegetation if only it is conserved. The trouble arises from the fact that the moisture is wasted by evaporation or percolation.

Judge Widdis has found a natural conservator of soil liquids. When it is mixed with the soil in a proper manner it prevents the percolation of soil water and fertilizer. His tests made during the past summer prove conclusively that this material, which he has named Widdisite, will conserve moisture and liquid fertilizer in the lightest sandy soils so as to sustain a luxuriant growth of vegetation. He planted mangels, beets, carrots, radishes, onions and oats on test plots and his demonstrations made in Tawas City were observed by city, county, railway officials and others, who claim that there is absolutely no doubt concerning the great value of this material when used in the preparation of soil for seed beds. It has some value as a fertilizer and soil sweetener, but its greatest virtue lies in its power to absorb and hold soil liquids. It is found in enormous quantities in the western sections of the United States and Canada, and is as cheap as dirt in those parts. The nearest point to Michigan where it is found is South Dakota. If a low freight rate on this material can be had, the sandy land of Michigan, including the plains hereabouts can be made to flourish with vegetation.

Copies of the circular letter appearing below have been sent to the various agricultural departments of the United States and Canada and many agricultural experiment stations explaining the nature of the material and the methods of using it.

CIRCULAR LETTER
In Germany, Sweden and Denmark, clay is mixed with sand to promote the retention of water by soils. For several years I have experimented with a mineral, found in vast quantities in many of the dry sections of the Western United States and Canada, which, for commercial purposes, I have named Widdisite. It may be called a super-clay. It Continued on last page

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRDING KING

THE MOUNTAIN ASH

ANYBODY who knows anything at all about witches knows that a branch of the rowan tree—or, as it is more generally called, mountain ash—will keep those objectionable persons at a distance and act as a counter-charm to their sorcery. In some parts of the country the rowan is accounted equally efficacious against thieves. In Maine housewives stir their lye, in making soap, with a stick of rowan, in order that the soap may be hard and of good quality. And everywhere they will tell you that to beat a child with a rod of mountain ash stops its growth.

The superstition with regard to the mystic qualities of mountain ash has northern Europe as its country of origin and flourished there in the early days. In northern Europe it still lingers and from northern Europe we inherit it. Formerly in some parts of Ireland the villagers used to appear on May day bearing a hoop covered with marigolds and sprigs of mountain ash, within which hung two balls, one covered with gold paper and one with silver, to represent the sun and moon. The marigolds were, of course, to supplement the yellow ball, the sun. Which would indicate that anciently in Celtic mythology, at least, some connection was conceived to exist between the other decoration, the rowan, and the moon-goddess.

Be that as it may, it is reasonable to suppose that the rowan got its mystic reputation in Norse mythology—as it got its common English name—from the resemblance of its foliage to that of the true ash, the sacred tree of our Scandinavian forefathers—Igdrasil, the tree of life. One old name for the rowan was the "quicken tree"—quicken in the sense of to make alive—which would seem still further to connect the mountain ash with the sacred Igdrasil.

Through the Glad Eyes of a Woman

By Jane Doe

THE THINGS WE LOVE

WE LOVE TO HEAR—

Our baby singing to her elephants and cotton spools; and gurgling in her bath, and whinnying in her sleep like a little colt.

WE LOVE TO TAKE—

The two youngsters from next door to a theatre and give them a scrumptious tea afterwards.

WE LOVE TO MEET—

Our hubby when we are all dolled up for a downtown lunch, and we love to laugh when we shake hands like any correct and proper engaged couple.

WE LOVE TO LISTEN—

When he assures us (in parentheses) that our cooking beats all the cafe dishes ever prepared.

WE LOVE TO SAY—

Good-by to him at the street corner and see him grin when we tell him just what will happen if he is five seconds late home for dinner.

WE LOVE TO WALK—

Away and glow when we think what a nice man our husband is and how much nicer than anyone else's husband, and how nice he looks in that blue-and-white striped suit (which we chose).

WE LOVE TO BUY—

Our baby a little toy on our way home.

WE LOVE TO HAVE—

A birthday, to find if we have "guessed right" and see our husband's smile of pleasure when we haven't.

WE LOVE TO KISS—

Him twenty times a day and watch him pretend to be horribly bored when we ask him if he loves us as much as on our honeymoon.

WE LOVE TO TELL—

Him that though he may love us no longer, we love him better every day.

WE LOVE TO LET—

Him help us choose our hats even if we make the final choice ourselves.

WE LOVE TO BE—

Jelous of any pretty young thing who looks at our good-looking husband oftener than she should, and we love to see him glare when anyone stares at his good-looking wife.

WE LOVE TO LOVE—

With all the love that's in us the baby in our arms and the other baby who occasionally holds us in his arms, and we love to speculate which of us loves the others most.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR TROOPERS IN ALL STATES

MICHIGAN COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC SAFETY SEES SPREAD OF SYSTEM FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT

EXPLAINS TROOPERS DUTIES

State Police Earn Their Way By Returns to State Treasury

"I see a great future for state police organizations in the states which now have them. Further than that I predict that a great many other states will sooner or later have such organizations."

Harry H. Jackson, commissioner of the Michigan Department of Public Safety, of which the State Police are the principal unit, was asked the question, "What future do you see for such organizations as the Michigan State Police after completing a full year in the work?" and the above was his answer.

Commissioner Jackson was appointed to head the Michigan Department by Governor Groesbeck in October, 1923. He remained in command all through 1924. Although a man of long police experience, most of his life in fact, he had always served a local police department. At the time he became attached to the state organization he was head of the traffic division of the Detroit (Mich.) police department with the rank of inspector and the manner in which he handled the traffic situation in the city of Detroit had much to do with Governor A. J. Groesbeck selecting him to head the Department of Public Safety.

"The success of the State Police organizations in the states that now have them assures their future, in my opinion," said Commissioner Jackson, "and the successes already obtained and those of the future, will lead other states to fall into line and adopt such law enforcing agencies. As time goes on and situations develop in states that do not have a State Police force, similar to situations which have been met and conquered by State Police forces, strict law enforcement advocates will realize how their states can profit as others did and urge the passage of necessary laws creating the organization of State Police units."

Force Earns Its Way

"If properly managed, a State Police force can be made to be almost self sustaining. That could be made possible by having a large portion of the fines collected in State Police convictions and perhaps some of the other fees collected in the work revert back to the operation of the force. And in connection with this question I want to stress upon a saving that is made to the counties through the State Police. In Michigan, and I suppose it is the same in most other states, the counties allow their sheriff's department certain amounts each year for hiring special deputies and other such assistance as he may need. A State Police organization does, to a large extent, relieve that burden because a most important part of the work is close cooperation with the local officers, particularly the county officers whose territory is wide."

Commissioner Jackson said that his department has sent out a number of bulletins to the sheriff's departments in every county in the state informing them that the State Police is at their disposal and advising where the nearest State Police post is located and how it can be reached in the shortest possible time, day or night.

Duties Are Numerous

The Michigan force is composed of about 180 men, 150 of whom are in uniform, the others doing plain clothes work, handling investigations, etc., in which a uniform would endanger the results.

In addition to doing general police work the Michigan State Police do traffic work, conduct inspections of oil entering the state, transfer of prisoners from state institution to state institution, assist in investigations of suspected arson cases, and have the supervision of men paroled from prison.

The Department of Public Safety is divided into several divisions. One is the State Police, and others are the fire marshal's division, bureau of identification and the detective bureau, all manned by state policemen. The fire marshal's division until a few years ago was a separate department of state government. About two years ago the bureau of identification was organized and the detective bureau was started during Commissioner Jackson's regime. The oil inspection work comes under the fire marshal's division and the supervision of paroled men is a part of the State Police division.

Since the adoption of the prohibition amendment, its enforcement has fallen to a great extent into the hands of the State Police in states having such organizations.

WOULD MAKE DESERTS AND PARCHED LANDS BLOOM

is of volcanic origin, carries upwards of fifty per cent of alumina and possesses very much greater absorptive powers than ordinary clay, which is of granitic or feldspathic origin.

Samples of it, which varied chemically and physically within narrow limits, show that it has remarkable properties.

It is a reversible colloid. It will absorb more than three times its weight of water.

It will expand, in water, from seven to ten times its bulk when dry.

Land may be treated with it in one, two or three ways:

1st. It may be mixed, in powder form, with top soil to a depth of not less than eight inches in districts where evaporation is not excessive. This may be done, satisfactorily, with the use of a seed drill and a harrow or by spreading it upon the surface, and plowing it under. A quantity of this material equal in weight to about two or three per cent of the weight of the top eight inches of soil treated, should be used. This requires from ten to fourteen tons per acre, according to the weight of the soil. Very good results have followed its use in this way in raising vegetables upon light, sandy, porous soil, in Michigan. Beets have trebled in size than those grown upon adjacent untreated check plots of like kind of soil.

As it absorbs water it expands, and while expanding, it closes the soil pores and stops percolation of water it cannot absorb, to a very large extent. Thus, it makes irrigation water go further and farther.

2nd. A furrow, say ten inches deep, may be plowed and, on the bottom may be placed a layer of this mineral, in powder form, one-third-second of an inch in thickness and this covered by the next furrow. By treating each furrow in this way a continuous layer will be established under the plowed area. Or, an emulsion, of the consistency of medium thick cream, may be made by mixing this material in powder or rock form, with water and this poured on the bottom of each furrow. An even distribution can be had by the latter than by the former method. Subsequent plowing should be shallower than this plowing, so as to leave the layer permanently in position. Seemingly, a layer so established will do duty for many years. This treatment requires from 3 1/2 to 4 1/2 tons per acre.

Water that reaches the layer of powder will cause it to swell in thickness to one-quarter or one-third of an inch.

However established, the layer will effectually, though not entirely, prevent percolation of water and liquid fertilizer. But the water that goes through it will be returned above it by what seems to be osmosis, set up by the layer and the differing densities of the water above and that below it, under the influence of evaporation and the consumption of the upper water by the roots above the layer.

Much of this material is of a pure colloidal character and is lighter than water. Water passing through the layer takes some of it and, thus, becomes lighter than the water above.

In this way I account for what seems to be osmotic action. Capillarity alone may cause this movement.

A hole, here and there, should be punched through the layer to provide air for plants that thrust their roots beneath it, and to drain away excess water.

3rd. This material in powder, emulsive or lump form, may be disposed about the roots of trees or shrubs; or placed in inches near them; or placed in plant hills.

Do not care to sell Widdisite to general public until I know more of its reactions and value, in the region of various kinds of soil. Experiments conducted in the past have given very satisfactory results, but those carried on in pots, side, have been disappointing. Seemingly, the use of pots, prevents proper aeration of plants and permits excessive evaporation. However, many interesting experiments may be conducted, in small receptacles.

It has some value as a fertilizer and as sweetener of acid soils but chief value lies in its ability to absorb liquids and prevent their loss by percolation.

By eating the soil to "cake" a layer of evaporation is checked some-

Woman Bemoans Fact of Lack of Chivalry

Chivalry once flourished in this land of ours, but, alas, now it is dead as an Egyptian mummy. It is a lost art—so lost, indeed, that were a man to be observed practicing its rites in this age his friends would tap their foreheads significantly and sadly remark that "poor John is evidently not quite as he should be."

See the crowd dashing after the early morning trains and cars, enjoining a woman writer in London answers. Do the present-day men stand on one side and help the women on? Oh, dear no! The scene is more like a football match or a free fight, from which the distressed damsel emerges with her hat over one eye, half her hairpins lost and a couple of ribs broken in her umbrella.

The modern "lord of creation" differs tremendously from the knights of old.

On arriving at the office, when his typist apologizes for being five minutes late owing to some calamity in the house circle, does he sweetly say: "Oh, don't mention it!"

No, he snaps out, "There's no excuse for you, Miss Smith, you're not a victim of the morning after the night before."

He reaches home in the evening and when his wife desires to unburden herself on the subject of her household worries he insists on taking the floor and holding forth on the lack of appreciation of his great business abilities shown by the managing director.

When the baby cries in the small cold hours of the morning, does he hop out of bed and gently soothe him back to slumber again? Oh, no! He sleepily grunts "What's a woman good for if she can't keep one small kid quiet?"

As a lover, too, the modern young man is sadly lacking. His ancestor of a few generations ago would have fought a duel to death to win a smile from his adored one; but the suitor of today becomes a sulky bear if his lady-love keeps him waiting for five minutes, although he knows only too well gold medals have never been awarded to the fair sex for punctuality.

No, the age of chivalry is dead; but we Twentieth century women have slaughtered it ourselves, so its no use grousing. Through reaching out for votes and equal rights with men we have toppled off those pedestals on which we used to be enthroned.

No longer can we shroud ourselves in a veil of romance and mystery—we've torn it to bits on the golf course and the football field.

Yet sometimes—bend your head and let one modern woman whisper a secret—I'd like to creep back to my deserted pedestal.

Willing to Oblige

One of the best stories of mistresses and maid is reported to come from Miss Margaret Bondfield, the prominent labor member of the British parliament. A new maid, raw and fresh from a country village, caused her mistress much worry because she did not know how to answer when spoken to, and never addressed people in the right way. At last, having endured the girl's awkwardness as long as possible, the mistress said to her one day: "Oh, Mary, I do wish you would call me 'mum.'"

Mary looked astonished. For a long time she turned the question over in her slow-working mind; then at length she spoke: "I couldn't do that," she said, "I really couldn't."

"Why not?" asked her mistress patiently. "Why can't you call me 'mum'?"

"Well, you see," hesitated Mary, "that's what I call my mother. But" with a sudden flash of joy—"I'll call you 'auntie' if you like."

Why Man Fails

If a man had the persistency of the housefly, the driving power of the chigger and the ability of the mosquito to dodge the avenging hand he could succeed as a politician, a profiteer and a bigamist.—Louisville Times.

But preventing evaporation is not an outstanding characteristic of this material; hence the need, in sections where evaporation is excessive, of impregnating the soil, with this material, to a level as far below the hot surface as is practicable; and hence, the greater chance of survival, in hot districts, of deeply rooting plants.

There are only a few areas, in this country that receive an annual rainfall of less than two inches. Two inches of rain over an acre weighs 180 tons—enough to mature several crops, if conserved. Evaporation and percolation are the wasters of water in dry areas.

Widdisite eliminates percolation, as a waster of water, when used in the light sandy soil of Michigan.

I filed two applications for patents upon the use of this material in Canada and two in the United States. One patent has been issued; others will be, I think.

If you care to make some experiments with this material and will tell me about them, write me to this effect and I will send you five pounds of it, in powder form, free of charge, postage prepaid.

Our efforts may result in making the deserts and other thirsty lands bloom, with or without, irrigation dams and ditches. If we succeed, we will be entitled to some credit.

ALBERT WIDDIS.

DECLARED MOSQUITO THEIR WORST ENEMY

Report of Lewis and Clark Astonished President.

President Jefferson was astonished at the report made to him by Captains Lewis and Clark.

He had sent them 120 years ago to lead an exploring party up the Missouri river and across the Rocky mountains to the Pacific.

What amazed the President was the thing which they reported as the most formidable foe met in that thrilling survey, says Girard in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Lewis and Clark with their wild west hunters and guides traversed a thousand miles where no whites had gone before. They met hostile Sioux, swarms of deadly rattlesnakes and were the first white men to meet grizzly bears, which the Indians feared very much.

The explorers also faced hunger, steep and high mountains, treacherous river rapids, extreme cold—and Stefansson says Montana is colder than the North pole.

But almost the smallest thing these adventurous men encountered was the worst—the mosquito. This tiniest foe was hardest to combat and gave trouble more dreaded than Indians, rattlers and grizzlies.

Our city sportsmen invade the Canadian north woods every summer. Wolves live there, but nobody fears them. But no fisherman returns without a tale of hardship imposed by myriads of little flies.

Home from his long wandering through Africa, Colonel Roosevelt, as David Livingstone and Henry M. Stanley had found out before, said the deadliest enemy of man was not the lion, not the fierce rhino, not the wild elephant, not the gorilla, but the tsetse fly.

Rarely have lions in Africa made a village move. An army of ants will often do it. We are reminded of these great dangers in small packages when we read Doctor Krusen's vacation warnings.

What does he designate as the deadliest thing you will meet? Not a locomotive, although grade crossings are bad enough. Not autos, because they are thicker in town than in the country.

Not rattlesnakes, even if our Pennsylvania mountains secure thousands of them. Upon what, then, does Doctor Krusen hoist the red signal?

A bite so small that 3,000 of them could nestle on the head of a pin. The unseen and unseeable typhoid "bug," which thrives even in apparently the clearest waters, is the enemy you must avoid on a vacation.

Every autumn sees a mild increase in typhoid cases in big cities. Filtered water has practically banished the disease from Philadelphia.

But "vacation typhoid" has become a definite affliction. It comes from two causes: Drinking unfiltered and impregnated water, and as often from swimming in creeks and rivers.

Yes, the "old swimming hole" has become responsible every summer for hundreds of cases of typhoid. The lad who joyfully plunges in doesn't dream he faces more danger than if he had actually invaded a camp of Indians depleted in his favorite thriller.

Altogether Unflattering

Representative Royal Johnson of South Dakota said in the course of a witty speech at a Washington banquet.

"In the Black hills of South Dakota there is a mine with a peculiar name—a name that has a beautiful story attached to it.

"A prospector and his wife were strolling in the hills one day when the woman tripped over a stone. The stone, dislodged by her dainty foot, rolled forward five or six yards. When it stopped the prospector noticed a little thread of yellow running across it. It was gold. A gold mine had been discovered.

"When it came to the naming of the new gold mine, the prospector's wife said:

"Will you name it after me?"

"Yes," said the prospector, "I will name it in your honor, my love."

"And from that day to this, gentlemen, one of the richest gold mines in the West has been known as 'The Terror.'"

Powerful Boilers

Boilers built as strong as cannon and capable of holding a working steam pressure of 1,200 pounds to the square inch—about five times as much as that used in an ordinary locomotive and three times the amount employed in the average commercial power station—are being installed for an east-west company. The boiler drum is 34 feet long, and the walls, of solid steel, are four inches thick. Smokestacks for the plant will be higher than the Bunker Hill monument, and their interior diameter large enough to permit a street car being lowered from the top to the bottom without touching the sides.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

New View Point

John Dos Passos, the youthful novelist, said at a Greenwich Village dance:

"The old were to blame for the war, and they are to blame for all our post-war mess."

"Respect for old age is silly unless it is the old age of a good and wise person. Old age in itself is not a thing to be respected. Why, is there a man or woman alive so foolish as to respect old age in an egg?"—Exchange.
