PIONEER RESIDENT OF

SHERMAN DIES SUNDAY

Andrew P. Sherman passed away at his home in Sherman Sunday morning at 3 o'clock at the age of 73 years, four months and 24 days.

The deceased was born at Posen, Poland, on November 7, 1855. At the age of 17 years he came to America and started to work as a laborer for the railroad at Howell, Mich., which line of work he followed for 14 years. In the year 1885 he went to Tawas City where he was married to Miss Gertrude Jordan on January 19, 1886 and to this union six children were born. They moved to Black River, where they lived for six months, then moving to Sherman where they took up a homestead. Here Mr. Povelock lived until his death.

He had been failing in health for about six months. He had an attack of the flu in the early part of last fall from which he never fully recovered, but was able to be up and around all winter. Following a sudden change to the worse Wednesday a doctor was called, and little hope was held out for his recovery and the end came peacefully.

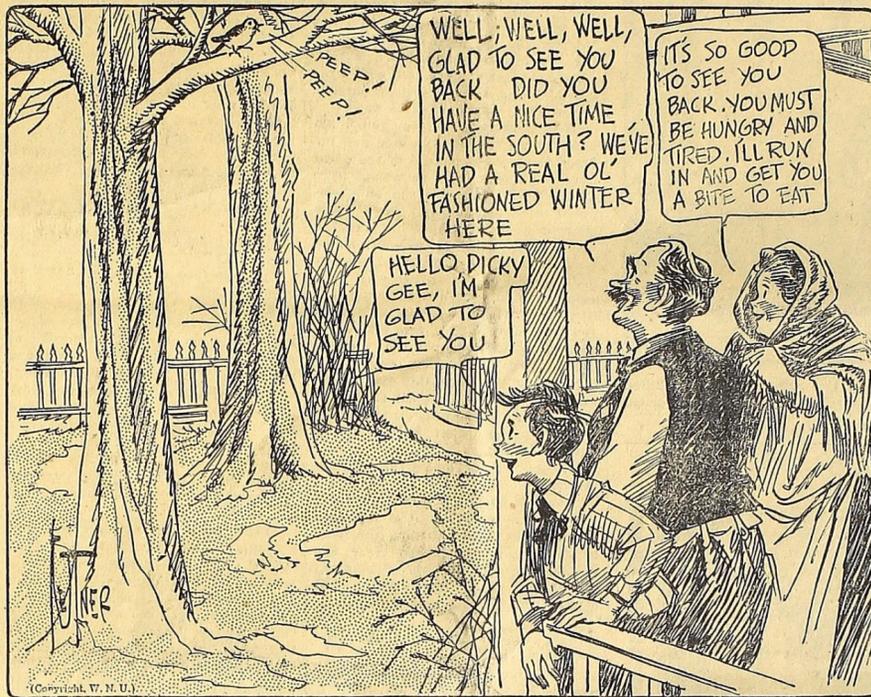

He leaves to mourn his loss: his wife, six children, Sim, John, Matt and Lucille at home, Kate of Detroit and Mrs. George Hennings of Twining; also four grandchildren, one sister and two brothers in Poland besides a large number of other relatives and a host of friends.

The funeral was held at Whittemore from the St. James church Wednesday morning, Rev. F. Phillips of Omer officiating. Burial in the Catholic cemetery at Whittemore.

SCHOOL NOTES

High School

The high school received this week the "U. of M. Special." This consists of a beautiful twenty-eight page paper containing about three hundred cuts of buildings, campus scenes, instructors, President Clarence Cook Little, and members of the Board of Regents of the University of Michigan. It also contains many articles which should be of interest to every high school student of the state. This paper is certainly a valuable contribution to our library table.

Commencement will come Thursday evening June 14. Mr. E. E. Gallup, Supervisor of Agricultural Education for Michigan, will give the address. The Valedictory, Salutatory and Prophecy will be given by members of the class.

Baseball practice has been postponed for the time. We think that snowball is a more appropriate sport at present.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

We are practicing on the play, "Good English Comes to Town," which will be given at the next Parent-Teachers meeting. Those pupils who are taking part are: Ila Sims, Dora Mark, Lulu Robinson, Evelyn Frank, Albert Zollweg, Robert Hamilton, Louis Frank, Clifford Boomer, Martin Zollweg, and Jack Mark.

Arthur Koepke has been absent this week.
Martin Kasischke and John Hoshbach visited our room this week.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

Those neither absent nor tardy for the past month were George Cholger, Ray Cox, Norma Kasischke, Annie Metcalf, Marvin Mallon, Nelda Mueller, Albert and Mildred Quick, Agnes Roach, Charles Wright, Otilia Ziehl, Doris Brugger, Bobby Mark, Richard King, Vera and Albertina Herman, Billy Roach, Allen Rouiller, George Tuttle, Norton Ulman, Walter Wegner, and Arthur Ziehl.

The fifth grade won the spelling contest last week.

We have been having a vegetable contest for hygiene work. We found that the onion is the most popular vegetable.

MY FAVORITE STORIES

What the Yellow Light Meant

IT WAS in the days when a peep-show was among the attractions of every village fair in England. Standing beside the entrance, the showman was reciting his usual speech explaining the picture being shown within. Among the spectators, all with eyes glued to the tiny apertures outside, was a small and inquisitive boy.

"You now see before you," announced the showman in loud and impressive tones, "a picture of the great London Express. This marvelous train makes the phenomenal run from terminal to terminal in only three and a quarter hours. This record-breaking run is made with only one brief stop for the taking on of water. The great train then proceeds on her way without further interruption until her destination is reached. In the picture, if you will look closely, you will see a red light. This red light is a warning light, signifying possible danger. If the red light is seen this swift train must slow down to ascertain the peril."

The small boy's voice interrupted: "But, Mister, what is the yellow light?" It piped.

The entertainer looked at him severely.

"There is no yellow light in the picture. There is, as I said, a red light—the danger signal warning the train to stop until the tracks are clear. She will then proceed with her phenomenal run and in exactly three and a half hours will reach her destination."

Once more the plaintive voice of the youngster broke into his recital: "But I don't see what the yellow light is for!"

The showman fixed him with a glare. "I have already stated that no yellow light is shown in this picture. I have explained that the danger signal, the red light, is placed there to prevent any accident to this magnificent fast train in her phenomenal run."

"But I don't understand yet about the yellow light," piped the small voice, seemingly almost in tears.

The showman was exasperated almost beyond words.

"Will some one remove this boy?" he demanded. "I have repeated that no yellow light appears in the picture."

The small boy was protestingly removed and the showman petulantly placed his own eye at the aperture whence the diminutive patron had been forcibly removed.

Only for a second did he gaze through the peep-hole. Then, in a terrific voice he shouted wildly: "My God—the show's on fire!"

The Untrustworthy Britisher

TODAY'S offering has been doing yeoman service for years now, but I claim its very popularity attests its intrinsic worth.

An Irishman stranded at Southampton, applied for a job on a ship bound for American ports, hoping to work his passage back to New York where he lived. The skipper agreed to sign him on provided he could produce a written recommendation testifying to his honesty and good character. The applicant hunted up an obliging boarding-house keeper, who wrote the required paper for him, and, on the strength of this he temporarily was enrolled as one of the ship's company.

Just as the craft was preparing to sail a Britisher presented himself before the master asking for a place in the crew. As the ship was short-handed and time-pressed, this man was accepted without the formality which had marked the employing of the first green hand.

Two days out from port the Irishman and the Englishman were scrubbing decks, each equipped with a pail and a swab. There was a head sea on. Suddenly a big comber broke over the bow. The drenched Irishman was buffeted about and slammed against a rail, still clinging, however, to his broom and bucket, but his fellow worker fared worse. He was carried overboard and vanished instantly. Dripping, the survivor made his way to the bridge where the skipper stood. "Captain! Say, captain!" he called up.

"What is it?"

"You remember that d—n Britisher you took on without any references? Well, he's gone off and took one of your buckets with him."

Great American Educator

Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, an American educator, was born at Billerica, Mass., in 1804. She was for a time connected with the school of Amos Bronson Alcott, in Boston, of which she wrote an account entitled "A Record of Mr Alcott's School," but later she came under the influence of Friedrich Froebel and was one of the most active in introducing the kindergarten system into the United States. The educator died in 1894.

Ginseng in Commerce

Nearly all ginseng grown in this country is shipped to China for medicinal use. The industry depends entirely on the Oriental market. Ginseng is consumed in negligible quantities by the Chinese in this country and the plant has practically no value in the United States or in other countries outside of China.

MORE THAN WAGES

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

CYRENA WARE had stepped into Cottrell's on her way home to look at a rack of new gingham. She needed a fresh gown to wear to her work and gingham was so satisfactory. There was one of green-and-white check with white pique trimmings, smart and serviceable. She was just taking a peep at the price tag when she heard her name mentioned by some one who was standing hidden behind an adjoining rack of late spring bargains.

"It's a shame, his letting her work the way she does."

"But, my dear, he can't earn enough to keep her and the child," returned another voice.

"He had no business to get married, then."

"Well, I am terribly sorry for the poor thing."

Cyrena's face glowed and her dark eyes flashed. She bit her lip until it hurt. She had recognized both voices; they were those of two neighbors who were always most cordial to her. Yet here they were discussing her in a public place. She was tempted to show herself to them and challenge them, but, after all, they were neighbors. One had to live beside one's neighbors a long time. Better never to let them know she had heard anything, better to steal away secretly if she could and ignore the matter afterward.

There was a rack of coats near and Cyrena made her way to it unobserved. The only saleswoman visible was busy with the two women who had been discussing her and her affairs. From rack to rack she moved cautiously until she was well out of their way. A moment later she was in the street walking rapidly homeward. It came to her regretfully that the dress she had wanted so much probably would not be there when she again had time to go after it.

Cyrena Ware was thirty, a tall, well-proportioned woman with the color of health in her cheeks, the light of vigor in her eyes and the redundant grace of strength in her easy movement. Plainly, a trifle shabbily dressed, she still managed to present an appearance of style and feminine charm. She had been married nine years and had worked seven in the same office. During that time her pay had been increased twice. She was now nearing $30 a week with her brains and hands. Her husband with his hands alone had never earned more than $18 and for some time now he had been out of employment.

Those women, Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Taylor, had, Cyrena knew, voiced the common opinion of all who knew her. It did seem strange to them, she supposed. They had husbands who "brought home the bacon," in vulgar parlance, and all they had to do was to cook it. Mrs. Taylor had been "terribly sorry for her," Cyrena winced. The pity had hit her harder than the criticism. She did not want pity. She wanted to be let alone to do the best she knew how.

Her thoughts were troubled and her heart heavy. It was spring and she was tired. Junior had just got over the measles and Albert's leg had been hurting him again. Then, too, the work at the office had been unusually heavy. Cyrena felt old and depressed.

Birds were singing and daffodils glowing in Bennett park through which she passed as the shortest way home. She sat down to rest a moment on a convenient bench, to look at the flowers and listen to the birds and get back to normal if she could. She would not go home with a long face.

Suddenly she realized that it was not so much what her two neighbors had said as what had been gathering in her own consciousness for days that disturbed her. It was spring and she wanted to be about a woman's business of cleaning, settling her home to rights. She wanted flowers, green grass, a little car, maybe. Above all, she wanted to stay at home. Her business air was all pretense. At heart she was a mere woman who loved domesticity, longed to be provided for and protected. It was not her desire to go forth and earn wages for the three of them. But Albert could not do it, and they had to live. She had known all about the bad leg before she married him. Yet it had made no difference. She loved him.

There was a rustle and a young pair took the bench behind her. The young man put his arm about the girl's shoulders, she inclined her head toward him, he looked into her face. They were as unaware of Cyrena as if she had not existed. In their low, happy voices they were talking. She heard the word "love" repeated again and again.

It brought back to her her own courtship. She and Albert had come to this very park to talk over the future, make plans, explore each other's hearts. How happy they had been! No, she did not regret it. She would rather be wage earner for Albert than the petted darling of a rich man like John Hess who had wanted to marry her at the same time Albert had. She had chosen Albert because she loved him. And their love had lasted. She might feel worn and a bit discouraged some times, but her heart had not changed. She might be pitted, have to hear her husband criticized, but she could not help that. She knew that Albert did the best he could, that she did the best she could and that nobody could do better in their places.

She began to feel rested and cooled and she arose. As she passed the lovers they continued unaware of her. She sighed and smiled at their sweet foolishness. Bless them and their springtime wooing, the dear young things!

Two blocks farther on Cyrena came to her own dull street and dull high house where she had an apartment. She climbed to her own door.

The door flew open magically and her little boy rushed into her arms.

"Mumsey! Forty kisses!"

Behind him Albert was smiling upon her his gentle, dear smile.

"There's my girl!" He moved forward with his pathetic limp to kiss her.

"Hurry, Mumsey, hurry!" urged Junior.

Cyrena went to her own room. Her bedroom slippers and a negligee lay over the bed placed there by a loving hand. She bathed, put on the loose things and came forth, rosy and refreshed. Junior led her to the table.

"I helped daddy!" Junior cried proudly.

Cyrena sat back and looked at the dainty bountiful meal. Fried chicken, a crisp green salad, fragrant coffee. She gasped a little at the extravagance of it.

"It looks like a—holiday feast," she said meeting her husband's fine eyes with her tenderest smile.

"It is a celebration," Albert said quietly. "I've got a job, Cyrena—a real head-and-hands job this time. Came right out of a clear sky today. Forty dollars a week to begin with. It looks, Cyrena, as if—as if you and I would have to change works." The pride and satisfaction in his dear face brought tears to Cyrena's eyes.

Rising she went around the table to him and laid her cheek against his. He clung to her hands. Cyrena did not attempt to speak.

After a moment she returned to her place.

"Well, Junior," she said brightly, "do you suppose you and I will get along together with this housekeeping business as well as you and daddy always have?"

Junior looked with fond eyes at his father. Then as fondly at his mother. "Gee, You're a great couple," he said earnestly.

Huge Appetites Only Normal in Children

Huge appetites are natural to growing children, and should not be curbed. In vigorous boys and girls who are very active the appetite seems unlimited. After eating what appears to be a fair-sized meal when they return from school they are ready two hours later for another meal even larger than their fathers and mothers can eat. Many parents wonder whether such appetites are normal and they become seriously concerned about the large amounts of food their children are eating. The studies which have been made of adolescent boys and girls during recent years show clearly that huge appetites are normal to growing children.

There was a time thirty years ago when it was customary to estimate that a child required half as much energy as a man. The fallacy of this view was revealed through the study of the boys in a boarding school who were found to eat like hard-working men rather than like half men. The man of ordinary size who does sedentary work does not require nearly so much food as the vigorous adolescent boy does.

Children who are endowed at birth with good constitutions and stable nervous systems are put in jeopardy by neglect of their nutritional needs. After an inadequate breakfast and lunch, boys and girls are so hungry when they return from school that they cannot wait for dinner, so they fill their stomachs with bread and butter or a hastily prepared sandwich or two such a short time before the evening meal that they have no appetite left for it.

The unsatisfactory breakfast and lunch in so many homes has done much to promote the serving of mid-morning lunch in schools. Most of the criticisms one hears against the lunch are not well founded. Many healthy children who are actually hungry by mid-morning would not be so if they were given an adequate breakfast and influenced by the right home routine to eat it.

Every child should eat a wholesome, nourishing breakfast. This may well consist of fruit of some kind, a hot cereal, bread and butter and a glass of milk.

The lunch, if served at home, should include a small serving of meat and at least one hot vegetable. If the child has eaten a satisfactory breakfast and a hearty lunch, then a simple supper is best, consisting of substantial foods which are not difficult to digest and which will not disturb the sleep.—McCall's Magazine.

PRUNING PEACHES QUITE IMPORTANT

Tree Bears Its Fruit on New Wood Only.

Rapid developments are being made in the research work on pruning the peach. Experiments show that pruning is not a "cure-all" for all the ills of peach production. Nevertheless, pruning is one of the important orchard operations and should be done carefully, states G. Woolsey, University of Arkansas college of agriculture extension service.

The peach bears its fruit on new wood only, and therefore pruning should be done with this in view. The young peach tree should be cut back to about 18 to 20 inches at the time of setting. This causes the peach tree to be low and open head in shape. Heading back at this point causes a number of small branches to shoot out below the cut. Three, four or five of these lateral branches should be selected as the main scaffold branches the following year, and the remaining ones should be removed. The lateral branches should likewise be cut back about one-third to one-half of their growth.

The following year, the second year after setting, the peach tree grows very rapidly. Pruning following this year should be a matter of cutting back about one-fourth of the new growth and in thinning out the undesirable branches that fill up the center of the tree. The tree at all times should be cut out in the center to admit the free circulation of air and to allow sunlight to penetrate all parts.

The third year peaches are inclined to come into bearing, although it is undesirable to allow them to fruit heavily. The first full crop will occur in the fourth season. Pruning, following the third growing season, should be done with this fact in view. The fruiting buds are borne usually in pairs along the new growth. The tips of the new growth are usually the last to form and, therefore, the buds are usually weak. The tree at this age should be pruned according to the growth. If a good heavy growth is made the previous season, the trees should be pruned accordingly.

Still Plenty of Apples Despite Tree Decrease

The number of apple trees in the United States has been declining since 1910, according to census figures. For each 100 trees in the country, in 1910, there were 70 and 64, respectively, in 1920 and 1925. This decrease in number of trees from 1910 to 1925 was around 79,000,000 out of a total of 217,000,000 trees reported in 1910.

This apparent large reduction in the total number of trees is less alarming than appears at first glance. Except in years of adverse weather conditions, there has been no shortage of apples, and the crop of 1926 was the largest produced in many years. In fact, commercial production of apples has been increasing, and it is believed that a large part of the reduction in the number of trees has taken place in scattered family orchards and in the less favorable commercial areas. In some areas production has increased because of the increased capacity of trees through an increase in age, through better selection of varieties and better orchard management.

Selection of Trees for Planting of Importance

The setting of the orchard, so far as the planting methods and the handling of the soil and the trees immediately after planting are concerned, is of prime importance. But there is another factor which, while perhaps it may be mentioned last, is a consideration which should occupy the attention of the orchardist very early. That factor is quality of the trees selected for planting.

It never pays to plant a poor, worthless tree.

Horticultural Facts

There are splendid opportunities for commercial growing of strawberries.

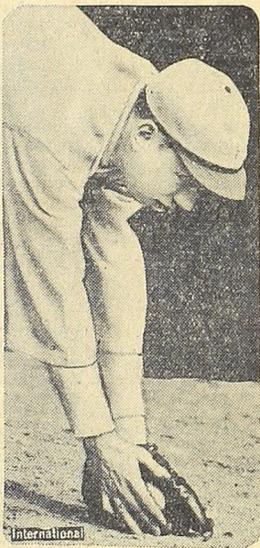

It is very difficult to do effective spraying without good spraying machinery.

It's a mistake to slash too freely into mature trees. A tree is a living thing. The main purpose of pruning is to keep down the height so that spraying and picking the fruit will be easier.

Where the grapevines are affected with scale insects, use the lime sulphur spray of one gallon lime sulphur to seven gallons of water.

While the methods of pruning all young, deciduous fruit trees are more or less similar, as the trees grow older their differences in general growth, shape and fruit characteristics become more pronounced, requiring greater study and care in order to meet their individual requirements and to serve better the economic needs of the grower.

"Benny Havens, Oh!"

Benny Havens Monument in Highland Union Cemetery

Benny Havens

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
From Nevada's hoary ridges, from stormy coasts of Maine,
From Lava Beds and Yellow Stone
the Story never waned;
Whenever duty called, they went,
their steps were never slow;
With "Alma Mater" on their lips and "Benny Havens, Oh!"

When this life's troubled sea is o'er and our last battle's through,
If God permits us mortals there
his blest domain to view,
Then we shall see in glory crowned, in proud celestial row
The friends we've known and loved so well at Benny Havens.
(Oh!)

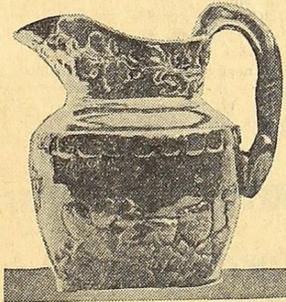

WHAT officer of the United States army from the merest "shave tail" up to a general with four stars on his shoulders has not heard that verse and for a brief moment been carried back to "Alma Mater," the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.? For one of the most picturesque and beloved traditions of that famous military school where tradition is so strong, centers around the name of Benny Havens.

Who was Benny Havens? One of America's famous generals, a graduate of whom West Point is proud? A beloved teacher at the academy? Well, hardly! Sometime prior to 1832 Benny Havens came to West Point and occupied a one-story cottage a short distance west of where the old cadet hospital, now the nurses' quarters, stands. What his ancestry was or where he came from no one seems to know. But after all those things are relatively unimportant, for the beginnings of a tradition are frequently wrapped in a mist of obscurity, but a tradition is none the less dear on that account. In the early days of Benny's residence at the post he sold to the cadets ale, cakes and cider, and in the winter, buckwheat cakes and cider flip. Later on the cider flip became ale flip and still later something a bit stronger was added to his bill of fare. It was this "something" which led to Benny's undoing, for he was expelled from the reservation.

By this time Benny had become so attached to the corps of cadets and the cadets had become so attached to Benny that neither could think of allowing this expulsion to mean his retirement to the obscurity from which he had come. So he set up his little shop just off the post in what later became known as "The House by the River," a Mecca to which so many of West Point's famous sons made frequent, even if forbidden, pilgrimages. For slipping out of bounds to the hospitable fireside of Benny Havens, where food and drink could be illegally obtained, contrary to the rules and regulations which have always characterized the dignity and order of this severe academy, was one of the offenses for which a cadet could be "skinned" (today they call it "squilled," i. e. reported for one of the many breaches of regulations).

For instance, take the case of Cadet Armstrong Custer of Ohio about about the year 1861. Custer himself has recorded "my offenses against law and order were not great in enormity but what they lacked in magnitude they made up in number. The forbidden locality of Benny Havens possessed stronger attractions than the study and demonstration of a problem in Euclid." If you go to West Point today you can find in an old sheepskin bound volume the record of Custer's "skin sheet," bearing the list of offenses for which Cadet Custer was reported. In all there are 453 separate "skins" with a total of $12 demerits and many of them are for partaking of Benny's hospitality. Since a cadet is allowed 835 demerits before he is dismissed, Custer had only 23 more to go when he was graduated. So he came very nearly being denied his chance for fame and America came very nearly losing one of her most brilliant cavalry officers. But if Benny Havens had a part in this, it was by no means a unique case. Many another officer who later became famous could testify to a number of "skins" because they simply could not resist the charm of Benny Havens' hospitality.

"Benny Havens' character was many sided, kind to children, invariably courteous to women," so reads a sketch in "Bugle Notes," the handbook of the United States Corps of Cadets, or "the plebes' Bible," as it is called at West Point. "He was possessed of a terrible and ungovernable temper. There was an indefinable something about his personality, that bound his friends to him by inseparable ties. Virtues and qualities were his which helped to shape the lives of and give guidance to, as they rose to life's pinnacles, many whose names are now engraved on the pages of history."

For instance there was a certain cadet named Edgar Allan Poe. During the short stay of that erratic individual at the academy, (he was dismissed after being there about six months) Poe frequently visited Benny's place of business while it was still on the reservation and became devoted to him. The future poet often remarked that "Benny was the sole congenial soul in the entire God-forsaken place."

Benny lived to the ripe old age of eighty-eight years. Taps were sounded for him on May 29, 1877, and now he sleeps in the Highland Union cemetery on the banks of the river he loved so well. But West Point is rich in memories of Benny Havens. If you go there today they will show you the pitcher from which he served his famous cider flip. But most of all his fame is preserved in the song which has been carried literally around the world by West Pointers. That song was composed early in his career. It was written about 1833 when Lucius O'Brien of Maryland, a lieutenant in the Eighth infantry was visiting a friend, Riley A. Arnold, then a first classman. Together they spent many a congenial evening at Benny's place and, so the story goes, O'Brien and his friends composed a poem about Benny and set it to the tune of "The Wearing of the Green." It immediately became popular at West Point and for the next quarter of a century one of the first things a plebe did was to learn to sing "Benny Havens, Oh!" During the summer days of 1865 when day after day the steamers bearing home the veterans of the Civil war passed Benny's little cottage on the banks of the Hudson the bands would strike up one tune and Benny would hear hundreds of voices joining in the singing of:

Come fill your glasses, fellows, and stand up in a row
To singing sentimentally we're going for to go:
In the army there's sobriety, promotion's very slow
So we'll sing our reminiscences of Benny Havens, Oh!

CHORUS:
Oh! Benny Havens, Oh! Oh! Benny Havens, Oh!
We'll sing our reminiscences of Benny Havens, Oh!

To our kind old Alma Mater, our rock-bound Highland Home,
We'll cast many a fond regret as o'er life's sea we roam:
Until on our last battle field, the light of heaven shall glow,
We'll never fail to drink to her, and Benny Havens, Oh!

CHORUS:
"May the Army be augmented, may promotion be less slow
May our country in the hour of need be ready for the foe;
May we find a soldier's resting place beneath a soldier's blow
With room enough beside our graves for Benny Havens, Oh!"

Reminders of Pledges

Special cards for husbands and wives to remind them of their marriage vows are being issued by the Mothers' Union of England. They are of a size convenient for carrying in the pocket, and printed in silver on white. They record the date and place of the marriage and the name of the contracting parties, and they reproduce the essential portions of the marriage service which have reference to marital fidelity.

It is intended that each married couple should have two cards, one for retention by the husband and one by the wife.

The DAIRY

GARLIC FLAVORED MILK NOT WANTED

Precautions Needed to Keep Cows Away From Plant.

Garlic may have its place in the dietary, but that place does not include the milk supply. Most consumers, in fact, object seriously to milk tainted with its noisome odor and, ordinarily, only a few bottles of it need be left at their door to cause them to change dealers.

Because of this, the dairy department of the New Jersey agricultural experiment station, New Brunswick, has suggested that dairymen take special pains to keep their cattle from indulging in the pernicious weed which causes the trouble. It has been found that even a very little partaking of this member of the onion family will become evident in the milk given by the cow shortly afterwards. Where milk purifiers are available to the milk distributor it is possible to remove much of the garlic aroma, but since such devices are not in universal use, various precautions are needed to keep the cows from the garlic plant. This is especially difficult in the spring just after the herds are turned out to pasture.

One method of circumventing the difficulty is to turn the young stock out on pasture at least two weeks ahead of the milking herd. In this way the young animals eat off the weeds. When the milking herd does finally go to pasture it should be returned to the barn about noon every day for a few days and given a liberal feeding of hay. Several days may pass before it is safe to turn the herd out at night. After that the garlic has become more or less stunted in growth and the animals have lost their first tendency to eat everything that is green. In other words, they seem to become more particular in their eating.

Milk Powder for Calves Tried in Various Ways

Many dairymen have tried in various ways to make use of skim-milk powder in calf feeding. Maurice Baird, connected with Ohio State university, who has charge of a number of dairy calves now on feed, outlines this method:

Use whole milk until the calf is two months old. This should be followed by a dry feed mixture, 300 pounds each, corn and cob meal, and ground oats bran, and 100 pounds oil meal. Two to three pounds of this mixture is fed daily. Skim-milk powder is added to the feed so the calf will receive one and one-half pounds of the mixture. Feeding is made at morning and evening periods. The skim-milk powder is omitted when the calf reaches nine months. Mixed hay and a pound of dried beet pulp are used, and plenty of water is available at all times. Silage may be used, replacing the beet pulp. Plenty of salt is supplied. Clean stalls at all times, and these stalls when cleaned should be sprinkled with lime, after which a plentiful supply of bedding is applied.

"The eye of the master fatteneth his flock," is always a part of the scheme of animal feeding. Experiments with skim-milk powder diluted in water have caused calves to get off feed, and have affected digestion. Skim-milk powder is well supplied with minerals needed by the calves. The cost of feeding and raising a heifer is so great that only good stock should be considered. Stock from disease-free herds, kept and raised under sanitary conditions, is the most desirable.

Supplement Grass With Efficient Grain Feeds

The dairy farmer loses a great deal of money through turning milk cows out on pasture during the spring and summer months and not supplementing the grass with grain. True, the milk flow is very often stimulated to a marked degree as soon as the animals are turned out, but at a loss of body weight. Spring pasture is relatively high in protein and consequently we are interested in feeding a grain mixture that will keep the cows in good flesh and at the same time maintain their production. In this case a ration testing about 12 per cent protein should be used.

During the late summer when the pastures are poor the protein of the grain mixture should be raised to about 16 per cent and silage can be added to supply the cow with succulence.

It is practically impossible to bring a cow back to high production in the fall when she has not been grazed during the summer months.

Feed for Calves

Give the calves access to the hay and fodder, allowing them to eat as much as they want. A grain mixture of half-ground corn and oats would be satisfactory. Oats and barley give a little too much crude fiber for the young calf. Feed the grain dry and until about four months old give them as much as they will eat up clean. From that age on limit the amount to not over three pounds per calf daily. Give water as soon as they seem to want it.

ENSEMBLE OF FAILLE OR MOIRE; PRINTED SILK FOR SPRING WEAR

SILK as a medium for the ensemble provides a new theme of interest to the world of fashion. The quaint silk prints which are so tremendously popular for ensemble costumes present only one phase of the subject. The latest silks to bring a new glory into the ensemble realm are the sort which yield handsomely to tailored treatments. Black and navy are outstanding, although lighter tones will figure later on. The various types include fine ribbed silks, moire, heavy crepe, faille-back satin and taffeta, too, if you please.

Advance models of silks such as just quoted leave no doubt in the jacket or coat with skirt. Some of the dressier models top a "dressmaker" styled one-piece frock with a matching coat.

The wardrobe which does not include one or several ensembles of printed silk will be the exception and not the rule this season. So if you have neglected to invest in a silk-print ensemble, "do it now," for sooner or later you will fall victim to the wiles of these captivating modes.

In the realm of sports and informal daytime costume there is simply no getting away from prints. For jackets and coats to be made of sprightly print instead of the customary plain bring mind that we are standing at the threshold of a new vogue of fascinating promise.

As to chic styling it is the coats for these ensembles which carry major honors. Skirts are usually regulation type, either circular cut or plaited in some attractive manner. Coats, however, run the gamut from types of simplest tailleur treatments like the one illustrated to models which show a cunning of detail which is simply thrilling.

When demure Mary Philbin, whose cinema artistry has brought her much fame, selected her spring ensemble, as posed in the picture, she decided on faille silk in a bright navy. Being tailored with utmost simplicity the handsome fabric and the beauty of its a note of fascinating interest into the theme of the ensemble.

The spring fashion parade will be, in consequence, largely a matter of gay print ensembles, the model in the picture being typical of the new trend. The print employed for this long coat and matching blouse belongs to the class of "picture" silks which are so highlighted by fashion this season. This particular silk is called "covered wagon"—which caption tells the story of its design.

The long coat ensemble, as shown here, vies with short-jacket versions. Some of the smartest models of the short-jacket type favor crepes with tiny repeat figures on dark backgrounds. The skirts, usually plaited, are topped with cunning jackets of tone coloring are made the paramount issue.

As said before, however, the types scale from simplest tailleur to most intricately designed modes. Coats are in many instances distinguished by soft lines and original neck treatments. Clever scarf ties, elegant sectional seam workings, capes, plaits, tufts, quilting and bows, some of them huge, give sprightly detail to silken costumes. When one stops to think that these ensemble silk coats make perfectly charming separate wraps, the idea of acquiring one of the new moire, taffeta or faille costume takes a very practical turn.

Not all silk ensembles consist of a diversified styling, with solid-toned crepe for the blouse.

Polka dots used in reverse coloring make stunning jacket ensembles. A navy dot on a white ground, for instance, is combined with a white dot on a navy ground. The interworking of the two presents infinite opportunity for original treatments.

"Twin prints" also furnish inspiration for clever fashioning. These prints are new on the fabric list. The same design is patterned on a sheer weave and on a heavy weave. The two are worked together, the latter fashioning the coat.

Therefore—

Bob, age four, does not take kindly to the economical ways of living. One morning he took all the chairs in the dining room and moved them into the living room, to build a house. When the task was almost completed, his mother arrived on the scene. She was horrified to see her new overstuffed furniture being misused.

She angrily said, "Bob, don't you know that is mother's company room and she doesn't allow you to mess it up like that?"

Looking around the room with a very sober face, Bob replied, "Well, I don't see any company."

SUCH IS LIFE --- Shaking Helps -- By Charles Sughroe

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Eggs Long Human Food

Eggs appear to have been used as a food in all ages. The ancient shepherds in the Far East were accustomed to carry them in a sling. Homer says that the Romans began their conca, or supper, with eggs. It is probable that they formed one of the main foods of primitive mankind.

Are You Ready

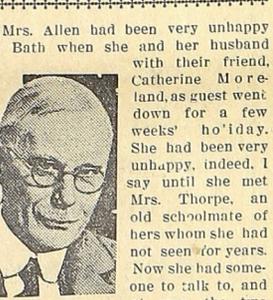

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

WHAT IS CALLED CONVERSATION

Mrs. Allen had been very unhappy at Bath when she and her husband with their friend, Catherine Moreland, as guest went down for a few weeks' holiday. She had been very unhappy, indeed. I say until she met Mrs. Thorpe, an old schoolmate of hers whom she had not seen for years.

What is called conversation is often only two people in juxtaposition each of whom has an opportunity to give

CHAPTER IX—Continued

The reporters grumbled in chorus. "No use asking Mr. Paul anything," explained the nice one. He's got the sphinx backed off the map. A clam is real valuable compared to him. If you wouldn't mind asking him and then tipping it off to us, we'd be awfully grateful."

I laughed. The man's impudence was refreshing. "Well," I said, "I'll think about it. Meanwhile, I'll have to talk to him first. If there's nothing else you want to ask me I'll talk to him now."

This was a pretty broad hint and I hated to give it. They were all such nice boys. But I was getting scared. They were altogether too nice. I didn't know what they might make me say if I kept on talking.

By this time Mr. Paul's auto had come up. Mr. Paul jumped out of the car and came up on the porch. He nodded in response to the newspaper men's greetings and then turned to me and Josephine and said, "Good morning." Then he turned back to the newspaper men. "I hope I'm not interrupting you, gentlemen," he said.

"Oh, no, not at all," chorused two or three. "We were just going when Miss Dinsmore suggested that we wait and ask you to tell us where Mr. Dinsmore is."

Mr. Paul shook his head. "I haven't heard anything from him," he declared. "I came out here to see whether Miss Dinsmore had heard anything."

"His properties will suffer badly in the stock market today if he doesn't turn up to support them, won't they?" asked one of the reporters.

"I don't know. I don't know," responded Mr. Paul. "Of course we'll miss assistance, but we'll try to protect his holdings for him. Still, of course, the situation is serious. You all know that it wouldn't do any good for me to deny it."

"It is rumored that the X Y Z has already gained control of Mr. Dinsmore's railroad. Is that so, Mr. Paul?"

Mr. Paul shook his head. "If it is I don't know it," he replied.

"The Gazette says there was treachery among Mr. Dinsmore's supporters," suggested another reporter, "and that some one in his confidence threw him down. How about that?"

"Nothing to say," replied Mr. Paul. "I can't deny all the fool stories you young men invent."

"How do you explain the large sales of X Y Z stock yesterday?" demanded another reporter.

Mr. Paul seemed a little startled. "I hadn't noticed that there were any large sales of X Y Z," he said. "I don't think there were, though I must admit that I've been more interested in watching our own road than in bothering about the X Y Z. I don't suppose the sales can be of much consequence. Now, gentlemen—" He paused.

This time the reporters took the hint and turned away. When they were out of earshot Mr. Paul turned to me and Josephine.

"Is that story in the Gazette this morning substantially correct?" he inquired.

I nodded. "Yes, it's about right," I said. "Except that neither Josephine nor I are quite the noble self-sacrificing and altogether fair damsels that Fred made us out to be."

"And you haven't seen your father?"

I shook my head. "No, I haven't seen him, but I have—"

Josephine trod on my foot again. This time I didn't show any emotion. I had gathered that Josephine did not want me to tell the newspaper men that I had heard Father's voice on the telephone, and now I grasped the fact that she didn't want me to tell Mr. Paul, either. I couldn't understand why she didn't want him to know, but I knew that Josephine never acted without pretty good reason, when she acted at all. So I turned the subject quickly. "We haven't seen him; and we haven't seen anybody who could tell us about him," I said.

"In fact we haven't seen anybody but Fred James, and he just said that he was sure Father would win out."

"Humph!" Mr. Paul grunted. Then he looked at his watch. "I've got to hurry back to town for the opening of the market," he said. "In all probability it today will show considerable perturbation, and I want to be in reach of it. If you hear anything of your father's whereabouts be sure to telephone me at once. Don't forget. This is extremely important. It may affect your father's entire fortune."

He pulled out a card. "My telephone number is on this card," he added. "Don't fail to call me."

I took the card he offered. "I won't forget," I said.

Mr. Paul got into his car and started toward the break in the wall. As I stood watching him I saw a woman coming along the road toward him and, of course, toward the house.

She was a long way off, but I recognized her at once as Miss Labert. I couldn't mistake that prancing walk of hers. Mr. Paul seemed to recognize her, too, for he stopped the car suddenly, though so far as I could see she had not even noticed him. Of course, I could not hear what they said and I could not see Mr. Paul, for the car concealed him, but I could see Miss Labert and I watched her with much interest.

The conversation was short. Miss Labert listened for a moment; then she tossed her head and came on toward the house. Mr. Paul's auto stood still for a while and I could imagine him staring after her. Then he went on.

Then I heard a sort of rumbling beside me and looked around and saw Perkins glaring toward Miss Labert, thrusting his head in and out and cussing beneath his breath. I couldn't understand a word he said, but I knew it was cuss words. It couldn't have been anything else.

This gave me something to think about. I suddenly remembered that August day long before when Perkins had glared after Mr. Paul; and I remembered how he had dived between the plants in the ballroom after Miss Labert only the night before. Now he was glaring at both of them. A dim suspicion began to shape itself in my mind.

Miss Labert was Perkins' lost wife and Mr. Paul had been the villain who had enticed her away! I was perfectly certain of it.

Miss Labert was still some distance away. I glanced toward her and then turned to Mrs. James, intending to tell her of my discovery.

But she beat me to it. "Was that Mr. Paul?" she asked. She seemed a little disturbed.

I nodded. "Why, yes," I said. "Do you know him?"

"He called on me a week or two ago about a thousand shares of stock I owned in the A B C railroad. He said that your father wanted to buy them. I refused to sell, and then he asked for my proxy for use at a meeting that he said was about to be held."

A dim recollection of the conversation between Father and Mr. Paul came into my mind. "Yes," I nodded. "That must have been the thousand shares that father asked Mr. Paul to trace. I think he said some one had taken them West a good many years ago and that unless he got them he would lose control of the road."

Mrs. James looked doubtful. "Mr. Paul didn't tell me that it was so necessary as all that," she said. "But these may be the shares, for I did get them from the West. I inherited them from an uncle who died in San Francisco two or three years ago. I gave Mr. Paul the proxy."

"Thank you ever so much," I said. "I'm beginning to recollect pretty well now, and I know Father wanted the shares pretty badly. He said that with that thousand shares he would be all right and without them he would be all wrong. It was awfully good of you. But"—I glanced toward Miss Labert, who was now very near—"but there's something I want to tell—"

Mrs. James interrupted; you know how women do interrupt. "I was glad to do it," she said. "I've always been satisfied with your father's management of the road. From what Fred told me last night I gathered that some one was trying to take it away from him, and I was glad to help him retain it. I wanted to ask Mr. Paul about it. From your father's having disappeared I was afraid that there might have been some mistake."

"No, there wasn't any mistake," I said. "Father told Mr. Paul to get the shares for him and if he did so it's all right. But I want to—"

I broke off. It was too late to tell my suspicions, for Miss Labert was almost upon us. So perforce I turned to greet her. Mrs. James and Josephine had fallen a little back and I decided not to introduce them. I didn't think she was a proper person for Josephine to know—or me either, for that matter. Still in the interest of—er—in Father's interests, I would risk her. "Good morning," I said.

Miss Labert returned my greeting cheerfully. "Ain't it the truth," she said; "it sure is one good morning. I reckon these October days are about the fuzziest in the year. How's Mayo today?"

Mayo indeed! Almost I flashed out at her. How dared she—how dared Perkins' wife, even if she hadn't disgraced herself—how dared she call Mr. Braxton by his given name? I shook my head for a minute; then I quieted down. I couldn't be jealous of a creature like her. And, besides, she was a lot older than I was.

"Mr. Braxton has gone," I answered, sweetly.

"Gone! Good heavens!—Where?" The woman's consternation was evident.

"I don't know," I answered, still sweetly. "He went away very early. The doctor took him, I believe. He did not wake us to say good-by. He left a note for us."

Miss Labert's face cleared. "Say, that was a real rotten thing to do," she exclaimed, with conviction. "I didn't think it of Mayo. He's always been real gentlemanly. However, if the doctor's got him it's all right. So long," she nodded and turned away. Then abruptly she glanced back and burst out, "Don't you worry, kiddo!" she said. "He'll come back all right. Take it from me!"

She turned away again and this time she did not look back.

It was just as well, for I was completely flabbergasted. Great Scott! Did I betray myself so plainly as all that? Very nearly I faintly with mortification.

Mrs. James' voice brought me back to earth. "Who is that remarkable person?" she asked, as she and Josephine came forward.

Instantly Perkins flashed into my memory. "Who is she?" I echoed. "Who is she? She calls herself Miss Labert, but that isn't her name. She's Perkins' runaway wife and she eloped with Mr. Paul."

If I had wanted to create a sensation I had succeeded beautifully. Josephine gasped and for once broke out in speech.

"Edie!" she cried, in horror-stricken tones. "Are you sure? How did you find out? Does Perkins know?"

I was about to tell the whole tale when Mrs. James interrupted. "You're wrong, Edith," she said, positively. "I knew Mary Perkins well, and she isn't half the size of Miss Labert, and she doesn't look a bit like her."

Drop in Meat Eating
The average American ate about 5 pounds less meat last year than he did the year before, and 8 pounds less than in 1926, a summary prepared by the Department of Commerce indicates. There has been a steady decline in the amount of beef and veal consumed, while pork has climbed but insufficiently to balance the loss in beef products. Lamb and mutton have held about even. Beef consumption has dropped from a per capita figure of 63.6 pounds in 1926 to 51.7 in 1928, while pork has risen from 65.7 to 73.9. Lamb and mutton have stood at approximately 5 1/2 pounds and veal has dropped from 8.2 pounds to 6.8 pounds.

Constipation Gone. Has Roses in Her Cheeks Now

"About seven years ago, I was dying slowly of constipation. My system was full of poison, which not only dulled my senses, but my complexion was muddy, eyes blurred, my stomach was ruined, and I was continually catching cold. I did not have any life or energy.

"After reading one of your ads, I bought several bottles of Milks Emulsion, and began improving at once. Improvement was so marked that everyone noticed it, and spoke of how it cleared my skin, made my eyes much brighter, and put roses in my cheeks. In fact, I was an entirely different person. I took altogether 15 large bottles of Milks Emulsion, and looked wonderful and felt the same way. It absolutely made me over. It adds more to your looks than anything I have ever heard of. After I had taken the first 8 bottles, people began to notice the improvement in my skin and my eyes being brighter.

"Every woman should know of it. I have never had a cold since I took Milks Emulsion, no stomach trouble or constipation. I think it is a God-send to humanity.

"A nephew of mine was almost dead of stomach trouble. I started him on Milks Emulsion and while he has only taken 4 bottles, he can eat nearly anything, and is beginning to feel fine.

"You will always find me a Milks Emulsion booster." MRS. REBECCA CAMPBELL, R. R. 1, Dyersburg, Tenn. Sold by all druggists under a guarantee to give satisfaction or money refunded. The Milks Emulsion Co., Terre Haute, Ind.—Adv.

NICE WORDS WON'T DYE a dress or coat...

Neither pretty pictures nor colorful adjectives will dye a dress or coat. It takes real dyes to do the work; dyes made from true anilines. Next time you have dyeing to do, try Diamond Dyes. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree they are better dyes. You get none of that re-dyed look from Diamond Dyes; no streaking or spotting. Just fresh, crisp, bright new color. And watch the way they keep their brilliance through wear and washing. They are better dyes because they contain plenty of real anilines—from three to five times more than other dyes. The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. When you buy—remember this. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

Cold Responsible for Error of Stevenson's?

Robert Louis Stevenson never was in sympathy with those to whom snow and ice brought joy. During a cold spell in Edinburgh he wrote: "I feel fit for little else besides prayer. I can not be comforted; my wits are frozen. . . . Life is an amusement totally unsuitable for winter. I place a claim to immortality on that phrase. How can you mind about Shelley? You wouldn't if you were as cold as I am."

It may have been this loathing of cold which, by some psychological twist, betrayed Stevenson's wits into his worst literary blunder, the Manchester Guardian suggests. When Marcel Schwob sought permission to translate "The Master of Ballantrae," Stevenson implored him to make a variation in the original.

"Pray do not let Mrs. Henry thrust the sword up to the hilt in the frozen ground," he wrote; "one of my inconceivable blunders, an exaggeration to stagger Hugo. Say she sought to thrust it into the ground."

"Logging" Made Easier

By the old system of logging, the great pieces of timber lay upon the ground until there was sufficient snow to "snake" them to the water. By the most modern methods the logs are carried over the snowdrifts by means of a mono-rail system, which supports the carrier with its cargo a few feet above the ground. Time and money are saved, for the construction cost of the "L" line is not great.

Credit Given Moliere

Literary critics regard Jean Baptiste Poquelin (Moliere) as being one of the first, if not the first, great 17th-century dramatist to write a notable comedy.

Employers and employees join together in buying another kind of insurance which provides leisure and freedom from financial worry in later years.

Business men build needed credit for business with life insurance policies... Final payments on homes are made certain by insurance.

About one person in every five in the United States and Canada shared in the Metropolitan's greatest year of service.
