IOSCO SUNDAY SCHOOLS

From a small boy living far within the interior of Mexico has recently come a "Thank You" letter for the Friendship School Bag sent last summer by the Juniors of Hemlock Road Baptist school. The good-will project for this year is the sending of a beautiful metal treasure chest to the children of the Philippines. The Council has purchased one of these chests and will gladly loan it to any interested Sunday school or individual.

Hemlock Road Baptist school reports the observance of the prohibition anniversary January 26.

The executive committee of the Isoco Council met recently at the home of Mrs. Shattuck of East Tawas. Splendid reports were given of the work being accomplished, and financial assistance from generous friends throughout the county enabled the treasurer to report all bills paid to date and a balance on hand of about thirty dollars. The following definite projects were decided upon for the coming months: Youth Conference, Men's Mass Meeting, Leadership Training Classes, Girls' Camp, Vacation Bible Schools, and Attendance Contest.

Remember the Leadership Training Classes this coming week—Tuesday evening, 7:30, at the East Tawas M. E. church; Friday, February 14th, 2:00 p. m., at the home of Mrs. Mae Dease, Tawas City. You are invited.

Rev. Halpenny of Lansing speaks on the subject, "The Gift That Is In Thee," at the East Tawas M. E. church Sunday morning, and occupies the pulpit of the Whittemore M. E. church Sunday evening. His evening subject is, "A Man's Job."

COMPLETING HEALTH UNIT ORGANIZATION

The work of organizing the Health Unit, consisting of Isoco, Ogemaw, Alcona and Osceola counties, is well under way, reports Dr. F. T. Zieske. A meeting of the representatives of the four counties will be called within a short time at Harrisville.

The Health Unit of this district and similar health units throughout Michigan are the first results of Senator James Couzens' gift to the children of Michigan. The Children's Fund of Michigan, as it is called, was donated "for the health, welfare, happiness and development of the children of the State of Michigan, primarily, and elsewhere in the world," in the words of the Trust Instrument itself. The board which is handling the fund has begun its work by giving attention to the health of the children in our own state only. When that work has been well established, other methods of using the fund as Senator Couzens intended will be studied and initiated.

WHITTEMORE M. E. CHURCH
Adult Meeting

There will be an Adult Meeting on Sunday evening, February 9th, at 7:30 p. m., held in the above church to which we invite you and all your friends to be present to listen to the Rev. E. W. Halpenny of Lansing, Superintendent of the Michigan Council of Religious Education. His subject for the evening will be "A Man's Job."

Don't miss this opportunity to hear Dr. Halpenny.

STATE FEATURES
ALL-TALKING WESTERN

TONIGHT, SATURDAY

One of the most unusual and distinctive pictures ever screened will be seen at the State Theatre tonight and Saturday evening. "Hell's Heroes," opens an engagement.

The picture, which was directed by William Wyler, is based on Peter B. Kyne's famous story, "Three Godfathers." Its plot deals with the reactions of three western bad men when they find themselves with a new-born baby on their hands in the midst of the desert.

They had promised the child's mother, before she died, that they would take care of the baby to the frontier town of New Jerusalem. A killing trip across the desert awaits them—and they know that at New Jerusalem, if they ever get there, the noose is waiting also.

This dramatic situation furnishes material for a picture rich in romance, pathos and humor. Many of the scenes were filmed in the Mojave Desert, and the realism of the picture is startling in its intensity.

Acting ability of the highest order features the production. Charles Bickford, Raymond Hatton and Fred Kohler give amazing characterizations. Fritz Ridgeway and Maria Alba supply the feminine interest in the notable cast, which also includes Joe de la Cruz, Buck Connors and Walter James.

HONOR LINCOLN AND HIS MOTHER IN NEW MEMORIAL

After many years of apparent laggardness in honoring a man whom she can rightfully claim as one of her own, Indiana is to have a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, who spent fourteen of the formative years of his life on her soil. More than that, the memorial is to perpetuate the fame of Lincoln, the "frontier madonna," who gave to the world the son whose memory all Americans honor on February 12.

Read about her and the great memorial that is to be erected in honor of her and her son, in the illustrated feature article, "A New Lincoln Memorial," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Herald.

SUPERVISORS STRONG AGAINST DYKSTRA BILL

Supervisors were strong against the Dykstra Bill at the meeting of the State Association of Supervisors held last week at Lansing.

The Dykstra Bill, introduced and defeated at the last legislature, has again taken on life. Detroit and other populous sections are demanding that this bill or a similar bill be passed during the next session of the state legislature.

The bill provides for a division of the Weight Tax as follows: One-third to the state, one-third to the counties, one-third to the cities, villages and townships.

In opposing the bill, the supervisors contended that such legislation would interrupt plans of the State Highway Department for the improvement of trunk lines in the municipalities of the state according to financial resources; and would be likewise detrimental to the development of the different county road systems of the state according to their contemplated plans.

The method proposed would award the local units taxes on the automobiles within its confines only, and these units would receive no tax from the state as a whole. In this manner, should a county have only 2,000 cars listed, it would receive tax from these cars only and the resulting amount would be pro-rated among the smaller units of the county. In the present system, seven-eighths of the amount distributed is apportioned according to the number of licenses. The amount received from this division by Isoco county this year amounted to $4,578. The remaining one-eighth is divided equally among all the counties. Isoco county's share of this amounted to $16,280.

Of course, the larger cities, in this manner, are forced to help contribute toward the upkeep of the roads in the smaller communities. The point was brought up in the meeting that the city drivers contributed to the depreciation of the country roads as much and more than the auto owner and therefore should help in maintaining and construction of all roads.

The state highway department, backed by Governor Fred W. Green, is opposed to the change from the present plan.

IOSCO COUNTY GETS $17,405
FOR SCHOOL DISTRICTS

Apportionment of the $2,000,000 fund provided by the last legislature to aid school districts having high tax rates was announced Monday by Webster H. Pearce, superintendent of public instruction. The money will be distributed by the administrative board probably within a month. Isoco county's share in the distribution will be $17,405.

Under the act, known as the Turner bill, the auditor general was commanded to raise $2,000,000 a year by general property tax for school districts having a rate higher than 10 mills and an attendance above the average for the state. The money is distributed in proportion to the attendance and the rate with the provision that no school district with a rate under 10 mills shall participate. No time is specified for distribution of the sum, except that it shall be done during each fiscal year.

Houghton county receives the largest amount from the first apportionment, it receiving $146,497. Nearby counties to Isoco will benefit as follows: Crawford, $7,108; Gladwin, $10,853; Oscoda, $4,826; Otsego, $8,054; Missaukee, $19,565; Clare, $8,138; Cheboygan, $29,732; Wexford, $30,515.

"DYNAMITE" IS CECIL B. DE MILLE'S BEST PRODUCTION

Cecil B. DeMille shows the world he has been handicapped all these years by the lack of dialogue in his pictures. Among his outstanding productions were "King of Kings" and "Ten Commandments." These pictures have been topped by far by the latest of all talking pictures, "Dynamite," which comes to the State Theatre Sunday for a three-day showing. Mr. DeMille making the picture, you would expect it to be flashy, but you could not imagine how flashy. You would expect a story with more kinks than a corkscrew and more kick than a mule, but you could not guess from the title that it would explode like "Dynamite" explodes.

The rafters crack and windowpanes bend when it gets to the big mine scene (and you best hadn't never seen this one).

Mr. DeMille employs, as usual, a large cast. This one is headed by Miss Kay Johnson, who can give lessons to most of Hollywood's best little dramatic actresses without lifting a finger, Charles Bickford, who suggests no other actor save George Bancroft and is almost as good, Conrad Nagel, who needs no subcaption, and Julia Faye, ditto. These and the hundreds or thousands who work with them put on a show.

You must see and hear this picture!

See and hear the funny men. Masonic Minstrels.

Making Uncle Sam's Submarines Safe for Crews

Various devices have been adopted by the United States navy for the safety of submarines and their crews. This picture of the new S-29 shows the "pad eyes" near the water's edge. These rings will permit cables to be attached in case of sinking and pontoons will then raise the sunken ship. Other safety equipment on the S-29 includes Momsen "lungs" (quickly attachable breathing devices for the crew), a safety escape lock on deck from which the crew can escape; a marker buoy which will serve as a marker for a rescue ship, and a telephone buoy which also will go to the surface and serve as a means of communication with the crew below.

"False Pyramid" Is Being Excavated

Under the direction of Alan Rowe, an archeological expedition from the University of Pennsylvania museum recently began its first season of work at Meydum, Egypt, where the expedition is concentrating on the excavation of a pyramid which the Arabs call El-Haram el-Kaddab, or the "false pyramid." The photograph shows this pyramid, which rises to a height of approximately 215 feet and is believed to have been constructed during the Fourth dynasty in Egypt, dating from about 2930 B. C. onwards. Meydum, the site of the pyramid, is about fifty miles south of Cairo.

Luxurious Car for Young Fish of America

A new de luxe all-steel car for the transportation and distribution of young fish has just been put in service by the bureau of fisheries at Washington. The car resembles a conventional pullman and is fitted with tanks which will contain half a million young fish, in addition to living quarters for the crew of caretakers who accompany the finny passengers. The photograph shows E. C. Fearnow, superintendent of distribution of the bureau, examining some of the tanks.

FRIENDS

Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription, which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, head achy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Might Have Continued Talking "On Other Hand"

The Jews and Irish are targets for many a joke, with the Scotch a close second. Or maybe it's vice versa.

Cliff Edwards and I simply couldn't decide the question at luncheon recently, says the Hollywoodian in Film Fun. While on the subject we swapped many a story about all the nationalities concerned. One of Cliff's, which I believe too good to pass up, is the one about Jackie, a young Jewish lad, who was courting Rosie, a beautiful belle.

Jackie had one arm about her and with the other was gesticulating as was his custom.

"Rosie, I love you! I love you!" And wishing to further impress her with his sincerity, he added, "I love you even better than my business!"

But even so gallant a statement as that apparently did not satisfy Rosie, for she asked, "Is that all, Jackie?"

"Oh, no," he insisted, with a befitting gesture, "on the other hand, there's a lot more I could say."

Finger-Nail Artist

New York art circles are attracted by an exhibition of paintings by a Chinese artist who paints with his finger tips instead of the brush, and draws with his finger nail.

Kwei Teng, the artist, has painted in this way for more than ten years, and achieves admirable effects in landscapes, both Chinese and western.

He declares that the extreme sensitiveness of the finger tips translates the artist's intentions more directly than any other known tool.

The United States postal laws and regulations say that each route shall serve at least four families to the mile, except that on a route less than ten miles in length at least six families shall be served for each mile of travel involved. The shortest rural free delivery route is six miles, and the longest is 89.11 miles.

A New Lincoln Memorial

PROPOSED LINCOLN MEMORIAL IN SPENCER COUNTY, IND.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOURTEEN states in the Union and some thirty cities have Lincoln memorials of one sort or another. Kentucky, which gave him birth, has one of the most imposing—the magnificent temple at Hodgenville, where is enshrined the rude log cabin in which he was born on February 12, 1809. Illinois, which first sent him into public life and gave him to the nation as its President at one of the most critical periods in its history, has a score or more reminders of his greatness. But it is a curious fact that the state in which he lived during fourteen of the formative years of his life for a long time did not have a single memorial erected in honor of Abraham Lincoln.

That state is Indiana, to which he came at the age of seven. It was in Indiana that he got most of his little schooling; it was there that he earned his first dollar; it was there that he first met with the neighboring youth in a country cross-roads store, first read the newspapers and got in touch with the outside world, first began to discuss politics, first took part in public debates and first read law. The soil of the Hoosier state was particularly dear to him because it holds the body of the mother who bore him and that of his only sister who was married, lived and died there.

The only exception to the statement that Indiana was strangely laggard in honoring a man whom she could properly claim as one of her greatest sons is the fact that more than fifty years ago, after vandal hands had cut to pieces the first marker erected by citizens in Spencer county over the grave of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, another and more imposing marker was erected there by Clement Studebaker of South Bend. So it is especially appropriate that his daughter, Mrs. Anne Studebaker Carlisle, should be the president of the Indiana Lincoln Union, which is now engaged in the work of raising a fund of more than a million dollars to erect on Indiana soil a national shrine to commemorate the lives of Lincoln and his mother.

Three years ago, on Mother's day, the executive committee of the union held memorial services at the grave of Nancy Hanks Lincoln and pledged itself to the patriotic task. On that occasion, an aviator zooming low over the grave and cabin site, dropped this message:

TO THE MANES OF NANCY HANKS LINCOLN

The men and women of today are here beside your grave.

Among the guarding trees, to make their vow, your name.

Shall never die. And to their praise, add our tribute, from the sky.

We are the artificers of the past, whose handiwork has gained the praise of men. With stone and clay.

With brush and pen, we wrought, to leave expressions of the truth we found.

But you—You dared to take a living child, a plastic infant mind, to mold

Into a soul of love, an instrument divine. Your genius

Used an art that ours was mean beside. To you then, Master Artist, we send our word of praise.

Through devious paths that masked the way,

You led with kindly hand, a child into the light of truth. And made an honest man.

The memorial will include the spot where the Lincoln cabin stood and the grave where his mother lies buried. It is intended that it shall in all respects typify the pioneer days when Lincoln was a youth. The plans of Frederick Law Olmstead, landscape architect of Brookline, Mass., which have been adopted, include the complete restoration of the area with appropriate markers, a magnificent memorial hall and the pioneer atmosphere of native trees and shrubbery, with a small body of water and a clearing.

The proposed national memorial will link the three states of Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois in the perpetuation of Lincoln's life and labors preparatory to his great destiny. It also honors the memory of the pioneer mother who gave him to the world.

The story of that pioneer mother is one of the most appealing in all American history. "A backwoods madonna," Dr. William E. Barton calls her and in his book, "The Women Lincoln Loved," published by an Indiana publishing company, Bobbs-Merrill of Indianapolis, he gives this graphic word picture of her life, and her death, in the state to which is given the privilege of caring for her grave:

Southern Indiana was then a wild region, and the settlements back of the Ohio river were few and sparse. There were at first no regular church services, no physicians, no schools. Perhaps Thomas Lincoln did not regret the absence of schools so much as Nancy did. There is no reason to believe that he opposed such education as his children were able to secure, but apparently the mother was more intent on the securing of an education for her children than was the father. Abraham and Sarah had attended school portions of two terms in Kentucky. They had learned to spell and had begun to read. But there were no schools in their neighborhood in Indiana during Nancy's lifetime. If Abraham and Sarah learned anything more, they learned it from Nancy, or from Dennis Hanks, whom the Spencers had sent to school in the old Baptist meeting-house on Nolin, and who claimed, with some apparent reason, to have grounded Abraham Lincoln in the elements of his education. There were very few books in the home of Thomas Lincoln and his children, and the same condition prevailed in all other homes in the neighborhood.

For two years Nancy Hanks Lincoln dwelt in Indiana, and saw some approach to comfort in the conditions of her home. Gradually the cleared area of land and "deadening" around the cabin widened, and the acreage of corn increased. The stock of poultry and of bacon grew, and the "pinching times," while not pushed far back into the woods, were not at the door as they were at the beginning. Conditions appeared to promise a reasonably comfortable future for the family.

Abraham Lincoln was old enough now to look with more possibility of appreciation on this mother of his, and to estimate somewhat her qualities. She was now approaching the age of thirty-five. She was above medium height and had a slight stoop, though predisposed to consumption. She weighed about a hundred and thirty pounds. Her complexion was dark, and her face was thin and sallow. Her forehead was unusually high, and all her relatives commented on this feature of her appearance as belonging to an exhibit of human intellectuality. She was usually cheerful, but her face in repose was sad. At times she displayed a marked tendency to mirth, but she had moods of melancholy.

Abraham had a boy's limitation of judgment; perhaps he did not appreciate these qualities so fully in his youth as he did later, but we have no reason to suppose that he was wholly blind to them. She was a good mother to him, and he knew it. She was ambitious for him, and desired that he should have the opportunities which both she and her husband had missed.

The autumn of 1818 brought to southern Indiana a terrible sickness, afflicting both man and beast. The cattle were first to suffer from it, contracting the disease from eating the foliage of snake-root, and as it was found to have been their milk that carried the illness to their human owners, it was called the "milk-sickness." A number of the people in the neighborhood where the Lincoln lived contracted the disease and died. Levi and Nancy Hall died, and so did Thomas and Betsy Sparrow. Two uncles and aunts, one couple being her foster parents, were swept away as with a flood.

Then Nancy herself contracted the disease. There was no physician within 35 miles. We have the testimony of a neighbor who was an eye-witness, that Abraham and his sister were faithful in waiting on their mother, and doing what they could for her. "She struggled on," says this neighbor "a good Christian woman, and died on the seventh day after she was taken sick. The mother knew that she was going to die. She was very weak, and the children leaned over her while she gave her last messages. Placing her feeble hand on Abe's head, she told him to be kind and good to his father and sister. To both she said 'Be good to one another,' expressing a hope that they might live, as they had been taught by her, to love their kindred and worship God." Thus, at the age of thirty-five, on October 5, 1818, died this madonna of the backwoods, the mother of Abraham Lincoln.

Doctor Barton then tells how Abraham assisted his father in sawing out the planks from which he made the coffin, how they buried her on the hill beside her foster-parents and how no funeral sermon was preached over her grave until months later, when Rev. David Elkins came that way and conducted services. First there was an opening hymn with David Elkins "lining out, two lines at a time," then a "simple and heart-felt eulogy of the dead and a stern admonition to the living" and finally a closing hymn—"with it rose the courage and faith of those who sang."

Then came the word of blessing, and Thomas Lincoln took the hands of his two weeping children and led them back to his desolate home. The feet of millions of pilgrims have walked and will walk that path. They will stand within the granite temple that now enshrines the log walls within which, at Hodgenville, the maternal pain of Nancy Hanks gave to the world her son Abraham; and they will tread reverently through the leafy aisles of the State park at Gentryville, where a massive granite stone now marks the spot which Abraham Lincoln in his boyhood watered with his tears.

He loved his mother while she lived, and he loved her memory afterward. It was a pathetic memory, and had in it elements concerning which he was properly reticent; but as to his inheritance through her of the qualities which he deemed to be some of the best within him, he spoke with deep feeling, "God bless my mother. All that I am or hope to be I owe to her." Although in this utterance, her son spoke of the mental traits he thought himself to have inherited from her, rather than her direct influence over him, it was of her mind and character he spoke when he said that however unpromising her early surroundings might have been "she was highly intellectual by nature, had a strong memory, accurate judgment, and was cool and heroic."

To him, as he looked back upon it from the standpoint of later experience, it seemed her life had been a tragedy. But we are not sure that she so regarded it. She had sad experiences, and times of depression, but she had lived and learned and loved. She had known the joys of wifehood and motherhood. She had never suffered hunger or neglect. Always there were those who cared for her and for whom she cared. To her it may not have seemed that hers had been a sad life; and she left that which permanently brightened the life of humanity.

Though the world has acclaimed Abraham Lincoln as one of the greatest men who ever lived, they were simple people, this mother and this son. So the simplicity of his character is stressed by the architect, Thomas Hibben of Indianapolis, in his design for the main building of the proposed Lincoln memorial.

Putting Airplanes on Snowshoes

These "snowshoes" attached to airplanes banish much of the winter hazards for air mail pilots between Chicago and San Francisco. By means of these slotted skis, pilots who find themselves running into wintry weather are able to land on deep drifts of snow while fully loaded. The skis are sufficiently strong to absorb the landing impact of mail planes weighing three tons and tri-motored transports weighing eight and three-quarters tons when fully loaded.

DECLARES PILOT IS NOT A SUPERBEING

S. A. Morehouse Objects to This Romantic Idea.

New York.—Silas A. Morehouse objects strenuously to the idea that a pilot is a superbeing. The romance-loving part of the public, he declares, has built up a tradition about the man who flies an airplane that would have him thought of as a combination of a Caesar, Magellan, Mussolini and Robin Hood.

"It's all wrong, the idolization by the public," said Morehouse, who is chief pilot of a big air transport company. "A pilot is an ordinary man, filled with normal ambitions, who does his work as it comes, occasionally doing something outstanding because the opportunity comes his way.

Sound Judgment Stressed.

"Common sense is a jewel of a phrase. It associates directly with good judgment, and in hiring pilots for my line I strive to determine the amount of good judgment a pilot has. Of course, this comes only after we are satisfied that he knows perfectly the mechanical part of piloting."

The age at which a pilot is best fitted to start flying big transport planes is, in most cases, between 28 and 32, Morehouse said. By that time he has learned his profession, thoroughly, and moreover, has satisfied his desire for experimenting with planes in the air and is content with safe flight.

Transport line pilots heretofore have come from the ranks of army and navy pilots almost exclusively. His company, according to Morehouse, has only one pilot who has had no military or naval experience. For the future, however, the air transport lines must look to the commercial schools for their new men.

"The average course for this instruction necessitates an outlay of about $7,000," he pointed out, "$5,000 for the course and the rest for expenses. Then the graduate must figure on working as copilot for several months or years until he makes more than living costs.

"A training course for an air transport license can be likened to that of the education of a physician. While the time required is not so long, the qualifications are great, and money expended as much.

Constant Service Valued.

"It is very unusual when we take a man who has left aviation for a while and wants to return to his old love. We believe that a pilot should have constantly associated himself with planes from the time he learned to handle the controls.

"Personally, I would rather a pilot that I employed had not been in a crack-up, although others argue that such an incident makes an airman more careful. But I believe that if a man erred once, there is a possibility it may occur again. We know the record of every man we employ. A similar procedure is taken by steamship companies in selecting their navigators."

Study Flyers' Sight at Wilmer Institute

Baltimore.—The effect on vision of the extremely high altitude at which aviators fly is a subject of intensive research in the laboratories of the new Wilmer Institute of St. Johns Hopkins university and Johns Hopkins hospital. It is hoped that the outcome of the study and research at the institute in connection with the visual difficulties of aviators will contribute to the solution of many of the problems that are presented in the field of aviation.

Doctor Wilmer, head of the institute that bears his name, became interested in the problems of eyesight of aviators during the World War. He entered the army as colonel in the medical corps and directed the work of the medical research laboratories of the air service in investigating, among other problems, the effect of high altitude on vision. An instrument, known as the Henderson-Pierce rebreathing apparatus, was developed, which produces in a man in the laboratory an effect similar to that which he would experience at high altitudes.

STUNTING BRANDED AS POOR PUBLICITY

Doesn't Help in Making the Public Air-Conscious.

New York.—The need of a new and broader interpretation of the relationship of aviation to the general public is contained in an editorial, "Publicity That Helps the Industry," in the aeronautical weekly, Aviation.

In the article it is said that the various stunts which have garnished aviation, particularly in recent years, are of little value in making the public air-conscious enough to want to fly. The editorial follows in part:

"The aviation industry needs a new brand of publicity. This is not to say the previous standards and practices have been wrong. They served the needs of their particular era and gave the public certain essential facts and a considerable mass of heterogeneous information contributing to air-mindedness.

"Stunt publicity, I. e., parachute jumps, refueling attempts, aerial weddings and the like do not add appreciably to the dignity and air of responsibility essential to the continued health of the business. Nor will statistics and generously embellished reports answer the myriad of questions the public is asking and which must be answered, directly or indirectly.

With the exception of the Lindberghs, Chamberlains and Doolittles, the dignified, unostentatious and constructive workers whose contributions to aviation are not to be measured by temporal standards have been kept in the background—too much so, we sometimes feel. We cite the instance of Lieut. Harry Sutton, late of the army air service, as an example. Lieutenant Sutton over a period of three years daily risked his life and limb in hundreds of test "spin" flights in an effort to analyze this feature of flying and to nullify its influence.

"His reward, modestly given and modestly received, was a medal from the War department and a better paying job in the industry."

These Figures Prove That Flying Is Safe

Washington.—When a person has flown 800,000 miles in a commercial passenger airplane, or to put it differently, when one has made 4,000 air trips of 200 miles each, then he may expect some kind of accident. But taking one 200-mile trip each week, his theoretical period of safety would last 78 years.

That is the assertion made by statisticians based on operations data. By assiduous use of pencil and paper they have figured out that the chance of danger to the one-trip air traveler is only one in 4,000.

Translated into terms of air travel on other carriers, it would require the steamer Leviathan nearly five years, operating at full speed without stops, to run 800,000 miles. Or, traveling aboard a 60-mile-an-hour train, 13,333 hours would be spent in covering this distance, the statistics say.

The cynics might dissent from this logic, pointing out that one can never be sure that his isn't the ill-fated four thousandth trip. Still, in a world of motor-trucks, high-tension wires, floods and railroad accidents, the danger element in air travel doesn't loom very large.

What the Average Pilot Earns

The average pilot on a regularly scheduled air transport line earns $5,556 a year and works an average of less than two and a half hours a day, according to a report of the aeronautical branch of the Department of Commerce. The same report states that the average air transport operator employs pilots at a base pay of $194.02 a month, with additional compensation at the rate of 5.5 cents a day-mile and 9.3 cents a night-mile. Flying an average of 68 hours a month, the average pilot earned $463.51 during that period. Mechanics and riggers earned an average of $164.37 a month, at an hourly rate of 70 cents.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescription product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

6 reasons why we recommend INDIAN RED for your car

2 Gasoline that gives up 100% of its power instantly is usually called "high test". A gas that does this can't help but give snappy pick up and instant starting the year around. Indian Red is that kind of gas plus the five other factors necessary for ideal motor operation.

You can identify Indian Red by the pump globe and the harmless red dye used to give a distinctive color.

- 1 It is BOTH 100% petroleum product and anti-knock.
- 2 It gives instant response to BOTH starter and accelerator.
- 3 It instantly mixes with air in the manifold and makes a "dry" gas.
- 4 More miles per gallon.
- 5 Longer engine life—less oil dilution.
- 6 Absence of gum forming elements.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Owing to the increased cost of Check Books, Pass Books, Stationery, Posting Machines and General Bookkeeping Expenses we have found it necessary to inaugurate an equitable charge on small checking accounts.

This rule will become effective March 1st.

If you maintain a balance of Twenty-five Dollars, or more, no charge will be made, but accounts showing a balance of less than Twenty-five Dollars will be subject to service charge of fifty cents for the month.

This rule will not apply to Savings Accounts, nor accounts of Churches or Fraternal Orders.

Nearly all city banks---and many of the smaller town banks ---have adopted this rule, and we are sure you will consider it reasonable and just.

Any accounts showing an overdraft will be charged fifty cents for each separate overdraft.

We appreciate your account, whether large or small, and want to continue to furnish you the best Banking Service possible.

Trusting that you will realize the reasonableness of this plan, we remain,

Yours very truly,

Minnesota Penitentiary Extolled

St. Paul, Minn.—The Stillwater prison plant is characterized as the best of its kind in the country by the third issue of the Handbook of American Prisons and Reformatories, now being published by the National Society of Penal Information.

The handbook also commends the prison industrial organizations, but points out the need of a more progressive policy in the matter of discipline and in the development of an educational program.

The article says in part: "This (the prison) is a notable institution in two important respects: Its plant is the best of its kind in the country and its industrial system one of the most effective. The plant, carefully built as one construction job, gives this institution a physical equipment that is probably unsurpassed in the country."

"Industrially the institution has an enviable record. Its shops are modern in design and construction, well lighted and ventilated. The working conditions throughout are excellent.

"The progress made in humanizing the institution and developing individual instead of mass treatment has not been nearly as rapid as the progress in institutional and industrial development. In fact, the great plant and huge industry tend to dwarf the individual and unavoidably make him see that he is merely a cog in a machine and an unimportant unit in a great institution."

"This inescapable problem is common to every great institution, but it is intensified here by the retention of the silence system, by a monotony of routine and by a regimentation of life, both in the cells and out, which has been abandoned in many prisons of the country. The silence system, for instance, has been given up for several decades in many states.

"The state is fortunate in having a plant admirable in so many respects and an industrial system that has covered the cost of running the institution every year since 1902. But the accomplishments in these important fields make the case stronger for a more progressive policy in the realm of discipline, the development of education and other constructive features that have proved their value in institutional life, and a prison regime which makes every possible effort to treat the inmates as individual human beings rather than as a mass."

Commenting on the board of control, the handbook says:

"There appears to be a tradition that members of the board who have served effectively shall be reappointed. The result is a continuity in membership and a corresponding lack of appointments for political reasons such as are made in neighboring states."

Not Legal Punishment

The practice of tarring and feathering, as a punishment, is as old as the Crusades. The earliest mention of the punishment occurs in the orders of Richard Coeur de Lion, issued to his navy on starting for the Holy land in 1191. Historians think it probable that this punishment was never regarded as legalized, but was always a type of mob violence.

Baker, geologist for the Rio Bravo Oil company, now working in Texas.

Chinese Soldiers Driven to Banditry

An alarming increase in banditry in at least 10 of China's 15 provinces is indicated in reports received by foreign legations here from their consuls. This state of affairs is attributed chiefly to the persistence of civil war. The consular reports state that most of the bandits are not professionals, but men and women who have been driven to prey upon their neighbors because of desperate need of food. In some of the cases reported whole villages banded together to make raids upon neighboring villages to obtain food supplies. Such instances were reported from Szechwan, Hupeh, Kansu, Anwei and Fukian provinces. In several provinces—notably Honan, Shantung and Kwang-si—consular reports indicate that former soldiers grouped into well organized bandit gangs have looted towns and villages and kidnaped persons even of moderate means for ransom. Several army commanders have not paid their troops for months, even years, and eventually the soldiers desert to become robbers.

North Manchuria has been a chief sufferer from the recent spread of banditry. During recent years, with comparative peace and order, this section has prospered, and this government had succeeded in suppressing the Mongol, Chinese and White Russian robbers who infested the area. But the dispute with Soviet Russia has preoccupied the government troops, with the result that the bandits have become more active than ever. The 2,000 mile border between Siberia and Manchuria is out of reach of the Chinese troops, and affords easy prey for the robber bands.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Lung Capacity

In spite of every effort to expel all air from the lungs, there remains always about 100 cubic inches. An additional 30 inches or so enters the lung with each breath under normal conditions. However, with exertion, 100 cubic inches may enter. The average daily "intake" is 690,000 cubic inches. (©, 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Experiment in Aviation Safety

Washington.—The army air corps will carry out an experiment to make long distance flights safer through the use of the short wave radio when the first pursuit group wings its way over the 3,500 miles of ice-bound country from Mt. Clemens, Mich., to Spokane, Wash., and back, this month.

Should the experiment prove a success, it is understood, the army is expected to issue an order that all army planes making long distance flights must be protected by short wave radio devices.

The present experiment is to be carried out with the aid of the American Radio Relay league and the General Electric company of Schenectady, N. Y. Eighteen fast pursuit planes and a slower and much larger "mother" radio ship will be in the experimental group.

The radio ship will follow the speedy fighting planes and will keep a sharp lookout for ships in distress. Every morning the radio ship will be in communication with the powerful short wave station of the General Electric company at Schenectady. That station will listen for the first ten minutes of each flying hour for S O S signals from the radio ship.

If an S O S is sent and received the Schenectady station will rebroadcast it to the army air corps posts in the area where the accident has occurred. Also arrangements will be made to send the S O S out through regular long wave radio stations to the Northwest in order to inform people living in the vicinity.

THE SEAT OF THE SCORNFUL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Since they have been capable of conscious emotion men have desired happiness and have sought it in every occupation of life. One has only to look about him to know how very many unhappy people there are in the world. Four thousand years ago it was as it is today. In King David's time men were searching in vain for happiness and that keen observer of human nature laid down certain laws for reaching a happy and a contented state of mind. "Happy is the man," he says, "who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." There is no happiness resulting in a deviation from virtue, in the violation of law, nor in a feeling of superiority over those with whom we associate daily. Virtue, honesty, humbleness of mind—these characteristics are at the foundation of happiness.

Youth, it seems to me, has a little tendency these days to stand on one side watching the procession of middle-aged and old passing by and to curl his lips and raise his eyebrows in a somewhat supercilious way, scorning the faith and the accomplishment and the manner of life of those who have preceded him. The easiest thing in the world is to criticize what other people have done or believed; to find weaknesses and faults and mistakes of all sorts, to scorn what has been done by our elders. But the scornful are never happy. One might imagine that there might be a sense of satisfaction in a feeling of superiority, but it is not so. I attended a convention of young people not many weeks ago, and after it was over I had a letter from one of the delegates. He had taken no part in the discussions, but he was scathing in his comments upon the way the business had been carried on and upon the character of the legislation which had been enacted. His whole attitude was one of superiority and scorn of his fellows, but he was far from happy. As I was coming from Honolulu to San Francisco last summer I met on the boat a British missionary who had spent most of his life working with the people of India in some way if possible to make their lives happier and more comfortable, and their religion more vital. He told us of his faith and his work one afternoon as we sat about the lounge—simply, sincerely, and I thought very effectively. There was a young girl listening with a sneer on her face, scornful of every reference to the power of religion to mold men's lives. She was superior to everything of that sort. She had no use for religion of any sort, she said, and especially for the Christian

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults. That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

5218 Happy People Give up Their Secret

JUST suppose you could get 5000 joyously happy people together in one big hall and could ask them what made them all so full of pep. Suppose, strangely enough, that all of them had discovered the same way to be happy. You would feel that here, if anywhere in the world, was the secret of how to get joy out of life. This is just what has happened during the last few weeks. We knew there were millions of people who had found the secret of happiness in the same way, and we asked them in one or two small announcements in the magazines and newspapers to tell us their story. Letters came to us from practically all over the globe. All of them said "The secret of happiness is health."

How to get this health? The way that all of these people had discovered was not some magic medicine, not some powerful drug, not some difficult course of training—but only a simple, harmless, natural method. It was to keep the body internally clean, sweeping its natural poisons away each day, regularly as clock work—by the use of Nujol. These people had made a great discovery. They had found out that Nujol contains no drugs; that it is as tasteless and colorless as pure water; pleasant to take and forms no habit; that it cannot hurt you, no matter how much you take; that it is non-fattening; not absorbed by the body;

They have found the way to Buoyant, Zestful Health, and the Joy that goes with it that it is only the internal lubrication your body needs, just like any other machine. It sounds like a fairy tale, doesn't it, to be well and happy so easily? Well, all you need to do to find out if these people have made a real discovery is to get a bottle of Nujol today at any drug store and take it for two weeks. It costs but a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. The sure way to happiness is through health.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.
Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.
Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of good water.

CHAPTER XIII

—22— Doubt

The Badger was sinking to the booming of the Centurion's minute guns, sinking with the sun that had draped a crimson curtain across the portals of the west. Aft, under the break of the poop, a carronade was made fast to ringbolts, square amidships, and on top of it was lashed the bundle of sailcloth that held Collishawe's body. The Englishman rested where he had died, and from the stump of the mizzen still floated the flag he had ordered hoisted there, one corner torn by a roundshot.

The sloop-of-war reared up, struggling to keep her bow above water; but presently she sagged forward, and this time she failed to recover herself. Her fore'slee commenced to slant. Masses of green water surged through the forward ports, and she started to slide under as if she was coasting down a hill that grew steeper and steeper. Waves licked at the bundle on the carronade, submerged it, slapped the poop railing—and her stern canted high in air, the White Ensign at the mizzen standing out straight in the breeze as it was engulfed.

The last minute gun boomed, and Fellowes launched a crisp stream of orders almost before the echoes had died away, none but himself aware that he must have something to divert his mind or else go mad.

Cara Inglepin ignored the resumption of discipline's sway. Her gaze remained fixed on the swirl of wreckage that marked the spot where the Badger had disappeared. But presently, as the brig forged ahead, the litter of spars and deck fittings dwindled to insignificance, and she became aware of the orderly hum of activities around her—and of her father.

"Do you suppose I might speak to Captain Fellowes?"

"Is it wise, Cara?" her father asked. "I am bound to admit Fellowes has been civil, but I think we do well to avoid him as much as possible. And I'll not have him suspecting us of pleading for mercy."

She laid a caressing palm on Ben Inglepin's face, which was neither so plump nor so rubicund as it had been, after a day's toil in a stuffy cockpit that presented one endless succession of horrors.

"I owe him an apology, Father," she explained simply. "And I must thank him."

"Thank him?"
"For his generosity. It was noble."
"He's generous and noble enough to see that we are by way of being hanged," Ben Inglepin retorted disagreeably.

"You're unfair, Father." Her lips some figure straightened. "If we merit to be hanged, shall we complain of him? We knew the risks we must encounter. And if a stake such as ours is worth playing for, worth winning, 'tis worth losing a life for."

There was nothing circuitous or indirect in the expression with which Ben Inglepin regarded his daughter.

"Ah, lass, you shame me. Egad, you do!" He stooped and kissed her.

"Speak to Fellowes. He's a gentleman, I'll own, and a bulldog, if there ever was one. Chater and—"

"We'll say nothing of Chater, Father," she interrupted. "I would have been better for us had we not soiled our case by contact with him."

"Oh, my dear! Don't be hard on Saul. He wasn't choice, I'll grant you, but in his way he helped—"

"Ah, no, he ruined us! But for him Captain Fellowes would not have been pressed. And if—but this is to no purpose. Go below, and see if you can help poor, fat Maria. I'll be with you soon."

"Stay on deck, poppet, and win some color to your cheeks," Ben counseled. "The senora and I can manage."

Fellowes was staring out over the stern—at the same distant spot, which so recently had monopolized Cara's attention, when the girl approached.

"Oh, Miss Inglepin, we—we are indebted to you. To you and your father and your—ah—duenna. Very helpful, Doctor O'Shaughnessy tells me. We should have been badly off without you—the Badger's wounded and everything."

"We were glad to do it, sir," she returned. "But I came to thank you. 'Twas knightly of you—to bury him so—with his flag flying. And I am sorry for what I said this afternoon."

He flushed brick-red.

"'Twas the truth," he muttered. "I have much to answer for. He told me—Collishawe told me—'twas Chater persuaded him to press me—not you. I owe you an apology. I wasn't quite—"

"But how could you have been? You were dreadfully wronged, and none the less because 'twas all a tissue of mischance."

"'Tis an evil passion, this hate," Fellowes insisted. "Vexation and sorrow—and death—it has brought to all who crossed my path."

"You exaggerate, sir," she answered soberly. "Surely, 'twas not evil to slay Captain Chater, who would have slain you. And James was your enemy in war. If he must have died, he'd rather have died so."

"Are you become my advocate?" he cried, exasperated—the other officers glanced at him askance. "Well, then, give me an argument in justification of delivering you to Joshua Inglepin's hatred!"

"'Tis unnecessary I should argue with you to do your duty," she replied as soberly as before. "You set your hand to this task. Will you draw back from it?"

"God knows! I—" He was on the point of saying: "I love you! How can I send you to a cell in the Bride-well, a gibbet on the Southwest battery?" When he realized the bare fact he loved her must make him implacable. In honor, he could not favor her. And if he possessed any lingering shreds of pride, he adjoined himself in a hot burst of fury, he'd remember she had accepted Collishawe after plighting troth with him.

"I have got myself into this coil," he concluded, strangling his emotion. "'Tis for me to work myself free. But I'd have you know, ma'am, I gain no satisfaction from it."

"How could you, who are not cruel?" she answered tranquilly. "Come, Cuffee, you can aid me shift the wounded men for their ease."

Burdened with prisoners and running short of water and food after a six months' cruise, Fellowes was relieved when a wet Easter sent the blockaders scurrying off shore, and the Centurion could venture a landfall. They stood out from the Rockaways, following the beat the Badger had patrolled, and on the verge of darkness sighted the spot of Sandy Hook and came to anchor for the night under the guns of the forts. They were safe! A fat cruise, everyone agreed. The prizes should yield $100,000, at the lowest computation and allowing for the loss of one of the three sent in, what with the gold in the Centurion's strong box and the choicer bits of cargo stowed in the hold. And that meant some $350 in prize money for every seaman.

Of all the crew, Fellowes, alone, was moody, and received indifferently the congratulations of visitors. By his instructions, nothing was said of the capture of the True Bounty, and the Inglepins and their attendant were confined in the after-cabin. They were Joshua's personal share of the spoil, he reflected cynically, they and the tidbit of treason that went with them, and Joshua should be the first to gloat over their humiliation and shame. He'd have nothing to do with it after discharging his duty. Surrender them, give his report—and go. Where? Anywhere there was fighting.

He abandoned his reflections when the Inglepins came on deck, the duenna, wrapped in her funeral garments, clinging to Cara like a shadow. Both Ben and his daughter looked like people who have shut the past from their minds, who front the future unafraid. Ben nodded pleasantly to Fellowes, and Cara enfolded him in one of those compassionate glances which made him writhe inwardly. Why should she pity him? He wanted none of her pity. And annoyed, self-conscious, his expression became wooden and taciturn as he responded to their greetings.

Noggle had the longboat hoisted out. In addition to the oarsmen, Fellowes detailed an armed escort, consisting of Sopher, Eaches, Doak, Cuffee, and Tom, and when they had taken their places he asked the Inglepins to follow them. The duenna was lowered in a lubber seat. Her vast bulk could never have accommodated itself to the Jacob's ladder. And last, he went overside himself, precisely dressed in a fresh uniform, sword and pistols at his belt, the compromising petition Cuffee had found in the True Bounty's anchor-stock folded up in his breast pocket.

His hand crept toward the pocket, rested on his coat-lapel. He toyed with the thought of wrenching the document from his hiding place and casting it into the East river. But Cara's eyes were on him, steady eyes, pitying eyes, and head and hand dropped together. Had she read his purpose? Or was that but fancy, too? "Faster, men," he urged the rowers hoarsely.

It was only six months since the True Bounty and Centurion had sailed, and the waterfront remembered the gossip that linked the two vessels. And here was Ben Inglepin returning in Joshua Inglepin's brig, with an armed escort in attendance. Cara, her hand on her father's arm, waved to an occasional acquaintance, smiling frankly. The duenna was a shapeless mass, waddling after them. Nimrod Sopher, very important, strode in front. Doak and Eaches marched behind him, and Tom and Cuffee immediately behind the Inglepins and the duenna. Fellowes brought up the rear, denying the requests for information which were showered upon him, as the word spread along the docks—"Hey, the Centurion's in! They got Ben Inglepin 'n his gal."

Merchants and shopkeepers, hucksters and peddlers, sailors and militia-men, boys, and girls, market women, housewives, maid servants, eddied toward Front street. Far in the rear a brace of fat watchmen hobbled anxiously, inquiring of everyone they met what had happened. In Front street they had an answer:

"Ben Inglepin's in Joshua's office Joshua's, I tell ye No, no, not his'n. 'Ain't nobody thar No, ye can't git in. Joshua's privateersmen won't let ye."

But the watchmen persisted and forced their way to the doorstep.

At that moment Fellowes emerged from the doorway of Joshua Inglepin's office, and the grim, set expression of his features, the competent poise of his lean body, caught the attention of the nearer bystanders. Men craned on tiptoe to catch the few words he spoke.

"You two are watchmen? Then one of you is to go to Government house, and inform Governor Tompkins, with Mr. Joshua Inglepin's compliments, that the Centurion privateer is in, and Mr. Inglepin will be obliged to examine certain matters of importance."

A dozen voices hailed Fellowes. "What's toward, sir?" "Are the British coming in?" "Will they engage the forts?"

"I have no information of that character, gentlemen," Fellowes answered. "As a matter of fact, the blockading squadron was driven offshore by the recent storm."

"Did ye have a good cruise?" called a different group. And one deep voice roared: "What happened to yer foretopmast?"

"We lost it in action with the Badger sloop-of-war," Fellowes returned. And sensing the abrupt tension produced by the statement, went on: "It may interest you to know that we sunk her. We have the survivors of her crew aboard, and among other things I must consult the governor as to their disposition."

A cheer that was almost hysterical acclaimed the news.

CHAPTER XIV

Joshua's Decision

Joshua Inglepin stood in the entrance of his private office as Fellowes ushered the prisoners in from the street. His eyes gleamed like blue agates, his jaw was clamped rigidly; but there was less color than usual in his face, and his neck-cloth was damp with sweat. Ben was debonaire, self-possessed. He regarded Joshua half-humorously, gave him a curt nod and a "Morning Jos," while Joshua eyed him almost slyly, and appeared to be fumbling for words. Cara, after a single level-eyed stare at her uncle, looked idly out a window at the crowd besieging the warehouse. The duenna stood listlessly, clicking her beads in black-mitened hands. "Humph," exploded Joshua, clearing his throat. "D—d if you didn't do it, eh, Fellowes? But where's Chater?"

"Dead."

And at the word a little, cool wave seemed to roll across the room, chilling the hearts of all who heard it. Joshua's mouth worked for a moment before he spoke again.

"Dead, eh? And the True Bounty?"

"We burned her. I couldn't spare the men to fetch her home."

"Had reason, I suppose?"

"We found what we sought," Fellowes answered, and thrust a hand into the pocket which contained the petition. But Joshua stopped him by a gesture.

"Not out here. Too public—people can see through those windows. Come inside."

He stood back while they filed into the private office, then shut the door after them.

"This is better," he said, in no hurry to accept the paper Fellowes had produced. "By the way! See anything of Collishawe?"

"He's dead," Fellowes replied, wincing. "We sank the Badger."

Joshua beamed.

"This is what I call a thorough job," he exclaimed. "'Tis what comes of hating enough."

The bellow of the crowd had risen louder, and Fellowes made an excuse of it to change the subject.

"We should get rid of those people, sir," he said. "They may be dangerous. And here is the paper. 'Tis important. If—if anything is to be done, the governor should see it immediately."

The Best That's in Him

What should be a man's first ambition? I should say to do as well as he can with what has been given him.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Orchard Information

RASPBERRY YIELD MUCH INCREASED

Heavily Manured Patches Give Fine Berries.

Three times the average production of red raspberries in Colorado was obtained last season by L. F. Watts of Canon City.

Mr. Watts' one-fifth of an acre yielded at the rate of 566 crates per acre—the highest yield of any grower who kept records—according to George Beach, extension horticulturist for the Colorado Agricultural college. Lester Hayne of Longmont was second in the contest with a yield of 518 crates per acre on his one-fifth acre patch. It is a significant fact that the two highest yields were harvested from patches that had been heavily manured.

These high productions were obtained in spite of the generally unfavorable season.

Mr. Watts used crates of 24 half-pint boxes, so his yield per acre was about 3,400 quarts. He grew his Cuthbert raspberries in the hill system, with three feet between hills and eight to ten canes in a hill, removing old canes and covering the new ones in November. Early in the spring he gave the patch a heavy dressing of barnyard manure. Through the growing season he cultivated and irrigated as often as the weather permitted.

The average size of the patches on which records were kept was a half acre. The average distance between rows at Canon is slightly less than six feet. Few growers there cover the canes in winter. At Longmont and Loveland all commercial patches are covered for the winter and rows average seven feet apart.

"The fact that raspberries as a rule receive less attention than most other crops is evidenced in many ways," says Mr. Beach. "In most places little attention is given to cultivating, thinning and pruning. The average number of canes per foot of row varies from two and one-half to fourteen and the state has many advocates of both hill and hedgerow systems."

Winter Injury to Both Shade and Fruit Trees

Both shade and fruit trees suffer from winter injury. Their wood normally undergoes a ripening and hardening process in the fall which fits it to withstand the ensuing winter, writes Curtis May in the Ohio Farmer. Warm, wet falls delay ripening and may result in serious loss from winter killing. Low temperatures frequently cause trees to crack open along the trunk. Ledges or ridges on the trunks of soft maple, cherry, and elm are formed by the growth of new tissue from both sides of such cracks.

The sun on warm days in late winter frequently heats the trunks of apple trees, particularly on the southwest side so that the cambium becomes active. A sudden drop in temperature kills this growing tissue. The bark eventually sloughs off, forming the typical trunk canker due to winter injury.

Pruning Most Important Winter Task in Orchard

Most important of winter tasks in the orchard is that of pruning. It may be started as soon as the leaves have fallen, particularly on bearing trees.

When fall pruning of orchards is practiced the painting of pruning wounds with heavy paint is even more important than in the case of spring pruning because of the tendency of the wounds to dry out during the winter and thus retard healing when growth begins the following spring.

Horticultural Facts

Beautyifying the farm home with trees and shrubs is an investment, rather than an expense.

As a rule, a seedling peach tree is dear as a gift, and it will be better to work a day for a dollar to get the money to buy four peach trees, than to set as many seedlings that cost nothing.

Red raspberries are hardest of the brambles, while blackberries are most tender; black raspberries are intermediate. Currants and gooseberries are extremely hardy and need no winter protection.

Nursery men advise fall setting of fruit trees more than they used to. There is no better time to set apples and pears.

Apples, sour cherries, and grapes will prove unprofitable unless a good site is chosen and adapted varieties planted.

Storage scald on apples can be practically eliminated by using one and one-half pounds of shredded oil paper, containing 18 per cent by weight of mineral oil, for each barrel.

Greater Beauty - Finer Performance

Never has a Chevrolet car won greater praise for its appearance than the new Chevrolet Six. Its new Fisher bodies reveal in every detail the artistry that has made the Fisher name famous throughout the motor car world. In beauty of line and color, in balance and harmony of design, they represent one of the greatest style triumphs in Fisher history. Upholsteries are richer and more durable. The instrument panel carries a new and more attractive grouping of the control instruments. Seats are wider and deeper. In fact, not a single feature has been overlooked that would add to the comfort and convenience of both driver and passengers.

In addition to its new beauty, the new Chevrolet Six represents a remarkable advance in every phase of performance. Its improved six-cylinder valve-in-head engine has been increased to 50 horsepower—giving faster acceleration, and greater reserve power. Steering has been made safer and easier. Four Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers provide exceptional riding comfort. Fully enclosed, internal-expanding, weather-proof brakes give positive braking control. And numerous structural improvements add to the car's dependability, endurance and long life. Come in today and see this car. And remember, it is now available—
