Finding the "Ceiling" for Pilots

This man is operating the ceiling indicator in order to supply pilots on San Francisco-Omaha-Chicago route with important flying information. The apparatus consists of a gauge, the indicator of which is trained up a at which the beam of light from a lamp strikes t e clouds. The ceiling height is then determined from the reading of the calibration.

DETROIT HANGAR IS MODEL FOR COUNTRY

Fine Structure Dedicated at City Airport.

Detroit.-Situated within 20 minutes of the Detroit city hall, at Connors and Gratiot avenues, the new milliondollar exposition building and hangar of the Detroit city airport approaches the specifications for an "A" rating by the Department of Commerce, according to William J. Wallace, engineer-manager of the airport.

The hangar, dedicated at the All-American Aircraft show, was built under the direct supervision of Perry Fellowes, city engineer.

The airport site occupies 250 acres of ground and includes, besides the main hangar, a city owned service hangar and two privately owned hangars. The field is "L" shaped and is completely drained by a system of tile drains in rock filled trenches, resulting in more than seventeen miles or drain tile and five miles of crock

Comparing the hangar to those of other airports Wallace said, "I do not believe there is a better equipped hangar in the country than that of the Detroit city airport.

Good Runways.

"There are more paved runways at the Detroit airport than at any other airport I know of. The safety and convenience that these afford are important factors. I believe in placing this airport in a permanent place in national aviation."

There are four paved runways, two and one-half miles in length, 100 feet in width, providing a six direction service for the planes. Future plans provide for additional direction and parallel runways, Wallace said.

The exterior of the hangar, which extends 1,014 feet in length and 200 feet in width, is faced in buff-colored brick and trimmed with cut stone. with stucco over the door openings. The interior wall is faced with saltglazed tile, in full range buff tones. A control tower surmounts the north end of the hangar, from which all lighting and signal systems operate. A small transformer switch house has been installed on French

Motor Operated.

The hangar has two doors with a clear span of 80 feet, 20 feet high; ten doors with a clear span of 100 feet, 20 feet high, and two doors with a clear span of 150 feet, 25 feet and 30 feet high, providing for efficient entrance and exit for airplanes. The 150-foot doors are motor operated.

The filling of the creek bed which traversed the field of the airport has been in progress during the past two years, and together with the grading operations, has provided a smooth surface with no slope more than 2 per cent in any direction. The fills in some instances have exceeded 30 feet. In general the field is level and the elevation is 618 feet above sea level.

"The major unit in the development of the Detroit City airport," according to Wallace, "is to be followed by the erection of other buildings when

"This is not contemplated until additional property has been acquired. when another hangar similar to the one just dedicated, together with an administration building and a power house of sufficient capacity to heat the present and future buildings, will be built on the port.

"It is planned that underground steam lines will connect the power plant with the present and future buildings."

peak in the United States, Mount Whitney, is 14,501 feet high, yet Yankee flyers are forced to a higher altitude in South America to work their way through a pass in the Andes. Upsallata pass, 50 miles north of Santiago, is the only available opening in the Andes. Pilots of the Santiago-Buenos Aires leg of the New York, Rio, and Buenos Aires line hurdle it at 18,000 feet.

Overshoes for Planes Keep Ice Off the Wings Ithaca, N. Y .- Overshoes for air

olanes-a new method of keeping wings free of deadly ice-are an nounced at Cornell university, after successful tests in the Midwest. They were developed by Dr. William G. Geer, research chemist, with the cooperation of others. The overshoes lace over the forward edge of the wing. They are a thin layer of specially vulcanized rub ber exiding continually a colorless oil It is announced that the ice does not stick nor the oil "scrub off."

This slipperiness alone is insufficient and so the overshoes have a small hose underneath their striking edge a slight pulsation of pump driven air in this hose breaks the ice as it forms on the wing edge.

HIGHER QUALITY IN LAMBS NEEDED

Campaign Being Launched in Ohio for Improvement.

With prospects of lower prices for fat lambs this summer, quality in the lambs marketed will become increasingly important, says L. A. Kauffman, extension specialist in sheep husbandry for the Ohio State university. "Many lambs are now being contracted for on a basis of 8 or 9 cents a pound for fall delivery," says Kauffman. "The best lambs will be none too high from the producer's stand-

In the effort to improve the quality of the lamb crop, by reducing the number of bucky and undocked lambs marketed for from $1 to $3 below the top of the market, a statewide nativelamb improvement campaign is being launched in Ohio, backed by the Institute of American Meat Packers, the National Live Stock and Meat board, the agricultural departments of the railroads, the United States Department of Agriculture and the National Live Stock Producers' association.

Prizes are offered by these agencies for the counties which show the greatest improvement in the quality of their lambs. The extension agricultural agents in each of the 88 counties of the state are being asked by Kauffman to enroll their counties in the lamb improvement project. Importance of the sheep industry in Ohio is indicated by the fact which Kauffman cites, that this state has more sheep than any other state east of the Mississippi river.

Get Spring Lambs to Market Early in Year The secret of lamb profits (and it really isn't a secret) is this: Get spring lambs to market early in summer. This requires docking and castrating, liberal feeding, control of parasites.

Liberal feeding helps the lambs towithstand stomach-worm infestation. It cannot be relied on as a preventive, however. The same observation is true in connection with roundworms of swine. Liberal feeding should be the rule always, and if the animals don't out on weight as a result, it's time to suspect worms and to get rid of Lambs are inclined to be independent about eating grain when they have milk from the ewes. For that reason, the feed placed in the creep must be a palatable, complete ration. Grain alone won't coax all the lambs into

Some of the western sheepmen use a canvas strlp instead of a trough for feeding sheep. The strip of canvas is about fifty feet long and has eyelets and rope at the end so it can be staked down. There is an iron rib every few feet to keep the canvas spread full width. The canvas can be taken up and shaken when dirty.

Let Pigs Harvest Corn

and Different Pastures "Pigs will be pigs and might as well be hogs; so turn them loose in the pasture," says R. B. Hinman of the New York State College of Agriculture. An acre of pasture may be worth 50 bushels of corn-to a pig.

into pasture is that they do the harvesting themselves. Rape is the best annual crop for pigs, and on good ground will suffice for more than twenty to the acre. On alfalfa and clover pastures, which fit well into crop rotations and tend to improve the soil, about seventeen pigs can be fed. In early spring and late fall sows with suckling pigs can pasture on blue grass. A combination of clover and timothy also serves as a good pasture for pigs and if farmers use a mixture of clover and timothy in their annual crop rotations, hogs may be pastured on this crop without the necessity of planting special pastures.

Corn Gluten Feed Good

as Protein Supplement Corn gluten feed is a good protein supplement for fattening steers if it is mixed with some other protein feed such as linseed or cottonseed meal. It is not advisable to use corn gluten feed alone to supplement corn grain. Mix the corn gluten feed in equal parts with linseed or cottonseed meal or both and you will have a good supplement whether you are feeding shell corn or ground barley. Yearling steers need about two pounds of this supplement per head daily when on full feed.

Feed Grain in Creeps

Early spring lambs to be fattened for market should be given grain when three or four weeks old. A creep should be built where the lambs may go to get their grain at any time. If the ewes are giving plenty of milk, the lambs will not eat much grain at first, but as they become larger they will eat enough grain to make considerable difference in their gains and finish, By following the plan of creep feeding, lambs may be marketed earlier at a higher price.

What Anne Hutchinson stood for

Winnifred King Rugg in the intro-

Hutchinson and Other Papers."

Where she lived-and the beginning was dominated by his strong-minded wife. During the first 22 years of their married life she bore him 14 children and during those years the energy which later was to be spent mainly in religious controversy was fully occupied with household cares and the upbringing of her family. But during that time she traveled repeatedly to the neighboring town of old Boston to hear Rev. John Cotton preach in St. Botolph's church.

Cotton became a sort of an ideal of hers and when he was forced to leave England because of his nonconformist views and emigrate to America, Anne decided to follow. What William Hutchinson thought of this uprooting of his home and family it not recorded, but he had probably long since learned not to oppose his wife's decisions. So in 1634 to the new Boston in Massachusetts Bay colony, a raw little town of less than a thousand inhabitants living in rude one-room log cabins and fragile frame houses, on the edge of the wilderness, came the Hutchinsons. Within a few months Anne became the "social leader and Lady Bountiful" of the settlement. She was a constant companion of John Cotton, who basked in her admiration for him; she became a close friend of the governor, Sir Henry Vane, the younger, and she became a recognized leader in the religious discussions which occupied so much of the colony's attention. In fact it was these discussions which brought about her downfall.

The heart of the Puritan religion was a belief that God's Word was in the Scriptures. The cardinal sin against such a religion was the belief that God's inspiration could be transmitted directly to human beings. So when there arose in the colony a faction, called "Antinomians" (people not living by the letter of the law of God, and believing that God revealed his laws directly to them), when this faction grew under the leadership of Anne Hutchinson, when meetings were held in her home to discuss and criticize the sermons of the Puritan ministers and when they asserted that most of the Boston ministers were under a "covenant of works" and were trying to be saved by religious observances, it was only a matter of time until Anne should find herself in trouble.

The climax came in 1637. Winthrop and the other Puritan leaders had fled from England to escape religious intolerance, but, as so often happens, those who suffer from intolerance are the first to become intolerant. So they put Anne on trial for heresy, a trial that has been compared to that of Joan of Arc at Rouen. Under the cross-questioning and testimony brought against her, she proved herself more than a match for her prosecutors. But just at the moment when it seemed that she had defeated her accusers, she burst forth into a long speech describing God's revelations to her. So she convicted herself. She was banished from the colony and went to Rhode Island to make her home.

Left a widow in 1642, she set forth with her children again in search of a new home. First she settled on Long Island and then in what is now Westchester county, N. Y. Here her turbulent career came to a tragic end. She arrived in the Dutch colony at a time when the Indians, infuriated by Dutch deception and greed, were engaged in periodic attacks on the whites. It was in one of those attacks that Anne Hutchinson, with all of her children but one and several of her neighbors, sixteen persons in all, were killed.

Helen Augur in her biography of Anne tells a dramatic story of the events of that dreadful day:

In September, 1643, Anne Hutchinson stood in her doorway looking at the fields of corn, tawny in the morning sunshine. She was thinking of what one of her neighbors had said the day before "When the corn is ripe and harvested, the Indians will break their truce." As she stood there, a group of Mohegans padded softly up. They exchanged friendly greetings, and then the Indians walked through the house and grounds, as if looking to see if there were any strange men about. But everything was quite as usual: William Collins and Francis were at work in the field, and the children were at little tasks about the field and garden. The Indians nodded farewell, and went

In the afternoon they came back, only this time there were more of them, and there were strange faces among them; Anne Hutchinson wondered why they had put on so much demonic paint. Perhaps they were off on some strange Indian ceremony, for they seemed excited. The dogs began to bark at the strange apparition, and the Mohegans asked to have them tied up, for they were afraid they would bite. The dogs were tied up.

Uncas' men whipped out their tomahawks. Anne Hutchinson saw four demons rush at her sons. Bread of adversity, water of affliction-she had lived out that promise, but God never warned her of this horror. William Collins and Francis were struck down, their skulls crushed and bleeding. Anne Collins fell beside her husband. Mrs. Hutchinson caught Susanna to her breast to shut out the sight from the screaming child. Katherine was half over a fence, but a Mohegan caught her by the hair and dragged her back to a stump. Anne Hutchinson heard the sickening blow; she saw-Mary and little William rush sobbing to her, as if she could save them. Then two Indians were upon her, and the child was torn from her breast. A tomahawk fell. Anne Hutchinson was dead. And for a final epitaph of her "American Jezebel," Helen Augur

Boston has finally made up its quarrel with the woman it cast out as "unsavoury salt." Her monument stands before the Massachusetts statehouse, with a fervent inscription to this "Courageous Exponent of Civil Liberty and Religious Toleration." There she stands, with a Bible in her hand, and a child snuggled against her, New England's heroine. PROTECT PEACHES BY PROPER SPRAY

Plan Work Soon as Shucks Split From Fruit.

Peach growers are planning to protect their crops from curculio and brown rot, by spraying as soon as the shucks split from the young fruits.

A spray mixture containing 1 pound of powdered lead arsenate, 121/2 pounds of dry-mix sulphur lime and 50 gallons of water, is advised by A. Freeman Mason, specialist in fruit growing at the agricultural college, New Brunswick. The use of more than the recommended amount of lead arsenate may cause serious injury to foliage and twigs. This spray should be applied just as soon as the shuck covering the young fruit starts to split.

Delay until the shucks have completely fallen may give the curculio a chance to do considerable feeding or to lay eggs. On large acreages a mixture made up of 70 pounds of sulphur, 10 pounds of lead arsenate, and 20 pounds of hydrated lime (70-10-20 mixture) applied as a dust with a blower is cheaper, and just as effective as a liquid spray. A well-grown, mature peach tree will require about one-third to one-half pound of dust material per tree.

Brown rot occurs as a soft brown rotten spot on the fruit. It spreads rapidly over the surface and to other peaches. Only a protective covering of spray can prevent this.

Oriental peach moth is an additional hazard that confronts the peach grower. Where the moth has been serious, the experiment station is tentatively recommending the application of 40 per cent nicotine sulphate in this shuck-fall spray. It is used at the rate of one-half plnt to fifty gallons of spray material. Care must be taken to coat the undersides of the leaves, where eggs will be found.

Guy Wire as Permanent Brace for Fruit Trees

Unusual storms, many of them carrying sleet, have wrought untold damage to all tree life throughout the eastern states during the last of the year 1929. Thousands of trees have been lost entirely, while still more have been damaged to more or less extent. Fruit trees have probably suffered most from a commercial standpoint, although sleet is no respecter of values.

Many of the trees that have been split and left in a weakened condition can be saved by proper yet simple means of bracing one branch to another, avoiding the use of props. Guy wires may be placed in trees of all sizes, but the size of wire used should be determined by the size of the tree to be braced. In fruit trees of small size, galvanized telephone wire is large enough. Trees over seven inches at the butt, one foot from the ground, should have the same size wire doubled, large apple trees and other large trees should have either quarter-inch galvanized strand cable or the larger five-sixteenths cable.

Black Mold Rots Occur on Cold Storage Fruit

Black mold rots most commonly found are caused by fungi of alternaria and rhizopus nigricaps. The former, very common in cellar or common storage, also occurs on both apples and pears in cold storage. It follows apple scald or calyx injury and stem punctures, or it may be a core rot. It is firm in texture and very similar in appearance to green mold, except that exposed fungous growth is black or greenish black in color. Since it makes its best growth at 60 degrees or more and grows but slowly at cold storage temperatures, one of the best means of preventing it is to place fruit in cold storage as quickly as possible.

STYLISTS TURN TO LONG AGO; UNDERWEAR FOR LITTLE FOLKS

NO LONGER do we have to resort | silk cotton or light novel frock into to paintings and portraits by the old masters, or to quaint English prints, or to the daguerreotypes of great-great-grandmamma and her contemporaries nor do we have to turn the yellowed pages of a Godey's Lady's magazine to feast our eyes on that which is beguilingly feminine and picturesque in dress.

It is all right here before us in our very own present-day style picture. The long, graceful and yards-wide skirts, the high waistlines or the slim a costume of alluring femininity.

A smart note in connection with the charming wide cape-like collar of embroidered batiste which is now so fashionable is to fasten it very primly in the front with a quaint little boutonniere.

and svelte princess bodice tops with | their exaggerated flares, the quaint little puff sleeves and the still quainter fichus tied so softly with streamers afloat, the long gloves, the huge brims, "baby colors," lovely sheer fabrics (dotted swisses, organdles and such), laces, ribbons, flowers-not an item missing in this campaign for the feminine and the picturesque which is being so enthusiastically waged throughout all fashionland today!

Seeing that our present-day fash ionists are turning to the modes of the far past in their quest for the bewitchingly feminine, the revival of lovely batiste for milady's 1930 garden-party and summer-afternoon frocks, is to be expected.

Is there any fabric more lovely, more enchanting for the fashioning of her prettiest gown than exquisitely sheer and delicately embroidered batiste? If so, history fails to record it. The adorable gown in the picture is of finest flower-embroidered batiste in a delectable tea-rose tint. The fichu, the tiny puff sleeves, the long gloves, the shower of French handmade flowers trailing from the waistline at the long back as memory carries, the typical undergarments for infants and children have been unimaginative white. Now that the world of fashion has become so acutely color-conscious as it has, one of the happy outcomes has been the interest stylists who specialize in outfitting the child are displaying in emphasizing colors for 'young" underwear. Henceforth, juvenile revolutionists with an innate color urge can have their longings fulfilled in little fine mesh-knit undergarments made of durene (a very high grade mercerized cotton of excellent wearing and laundering qualities) in such lovely colors as maize, pink, apricot, peach or white. Included in the list are panties, vests, union suits, bands and in fact types of every variety. Also cunning outerwear apparel is available such as colorful durene sun suits, and even " -l'ke "spectator sports" costumes with little shirts, cardigans and sleeveless sweaters.

Little boys' union suits are made in sizes for from two to twelve years. These have athletic sleeves, button fronts, waist tape attachments, in fact all the "latest improvements". and are in lovely pastel colorings.

Clever styling is also shown in in fants' shirts, which are designed with low tailored necks and short sleeves with specially finished ruffs. These little shirts come with high necks also with long sleeves crochet finished UNLY an old and trusted friend would venture to speak so frankly.

A new pipe, or an old one carefully broken in with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture, changes everything. And why shouldn't it? Sir Walter is milder and more fragrant. NCONVENIENT, isn't it, to leave your housework in the midst of some important bit of cleaning, in order to answer the telephone at your neighbor's.

It is inconvenient for your neighbor, too.

A telephone is a Comfort, and a Convenience—and it is a Safeguard in case of emergency. It costs less than many of our smaller luxuries and really is a necessity of modern living.

KEEP BULL UNTIL QUALITY PROVEN

Sire Should Be Kept Until Daughters' Work Shown.

The value of a dairy bull cannot be determined until the production of his daughters has been tested. Then it often happens that the bull has been slaughtered for some reason and his valuable influence lost to the herd.

John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college, says the bureau of dairying at Washington had proven the value of 834 bulls up until September, 1929, through records kept by dairy herd improvement associations, yet when the bureau began to search for these bulls, only 126 were living. The remainder were dead or no authentic informtaion was available. For that reason, says Mr. Arey, the herd sire should not be disposed of until his value has become known through the production of his daughters. After the bull has had a chance to prove his value, he should be kept as long as he is fit for service, provided he is a good one. If a poor one, he should be slaughtered immediately.

Many bulls are sold to the butcher when quite young because they have developed a vicious disposition. Viciousness is not a characteristic on which to condemn the animal, thinks Mr. Arey. Frequently such animal is one of the most valuable that the dairymen could own and there are ways in which a dangerous bull may be easily handled.

One of the best is the method used by a group of farmers in Caldwell county. These men have an elevenyear-old animal owned jointly. They have constructed a pen with shelter and with a breeding pen adjoining. This equipment was built at small cost to each individual and yet it provides ample facilities for handling the bull and at the same time insures his safe handling. Such equipment is recommended by Mr. Arey to other farmers who may wish to keep a herd sire that has grown dangerous with

to Keep Up Milk Flow

To keep up the milk flow in summer It is essential to have good pasture. Grass probably provides the cheapest feed that is available for dairy cows. Because of its succulent character it produces a larger flow of milk than an equal amount of feed furnished in some other form. Cattle showing a mineral deficiency on many other types of feed will generally show no mineral deficiency when they are on good pasture.

Overstocking is probably as great a cause as any other for damage to pastures. They should be top-dressed with manure or a complete fertilizer to give them the proper amount of nitrogen and minerals. Lime and phosphorus also have been found

Perfection in Master Clocks

Washington.-In three airtight glass cases in Washington are the three master clocks which, of all clocks in the United States, run with the least variation. Maintained by and kept in the United States Naval observatory, they are the timepieces by which the nation lives, moves and has its being; they are the standard by which we set each watch and clock throughout the United States. Now, after many years, new clocks are to be installed in the observatory.

A Munich clock-maker named Riefler is the maker of the standard clocks now in use. Riefler's clocks derive their accuracy from the manner in which the pendulum is attached. In ordinary clocks the pendulum is attached to springs in the rigid clock frame. In Riefler's clocks, however. it is attached to springs connected to small tables which rock back and forth slightly. Electro magnets wind the springs every 30 seconds,

The new standard clocks which, according to Capt. C. S. Freeman, superintendent of the observatory, will be purchased soon include devices aimed at an accuracy superior to that of all other clocks. Known as "Shortt" clocks, they are constructed with the idea of freeing the pendulum of the job of unlocking the escapement. To do this, a secondary or "slave" clock is used which releases an impulse lever. Although the arrangement is complex, a high degree of perfection has been reached. The pendulum swings once every minute.

Taking care of the nation's timepieces involves an accurate care. The airtight cases holding them are kept in a double vault with automatic temperature control. Year in and year out the temperature in this vault is kept constant within one-tenth of one degree centigrade. Once a week the temperature vault is entered for in-

Charles Lockwood of Chamberlain, S. D., 89-year-old Civil war veteran who, with the death of Peter O. Hall, 91 years old, of Atwater, Minn., became the lone survivor of the famous "Last Man's club." On July 21, 1886. thirty-three members of B Company, first Minnesota volunteer infaztry, who had served side by side in the Civil war, organized themselves into a "Last Man's club." A bottle of Burgundy wine was purchased and each year the men assembled to drink each other's health. The original bottle of wine was not opened until three years ago when only three members were left. Peter Hall, who has just died, tasted it and the bottle was resealed. If Lockwood fulfills the original intent of the club, he will drink alone to his 32 departed comrades on July 21.

Man Loses Arm in Peculiar Accident

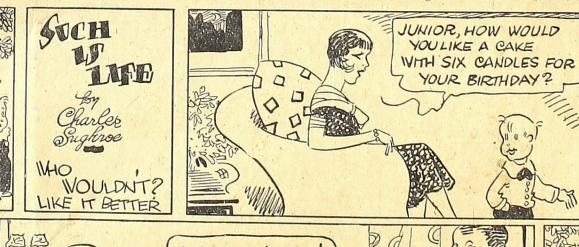

Biddeford, Maine.-Victim of one of the most mysterious accidents ever reported to local authorities, George Thomas, twenty-five, of Winchester. Mass., lies in the Trull hospital here. Driving through the town of Wells with Aubrey Stott, Winchester, and Albro McCullough of Malden, Thomas lost his arm and he doesn't know how

The three were near the post office and store at Moody in the town of Wells, when they met a large truck.

Soon after the machines passed each other, Thomas remarked to his companions that his left arm felt numb. They halted by the roadside and when he turned around he discovered that his arm was gone, while blood was pouring from the stump near the shoulder. The arm had been severed as cleanly as though shaved off with a huge axe with razored edge. Stott and McCullough, who could scarcely believe what they had seen, jumped from the car, began to look around.

and going back a short distance they found Thomas' arm lying in the road. Although bleeding profusely, Thomas continued to drive until they reached the store and there was given first aid by a physician before being brought to the hospital. Examination of his car here showed that the door handle on the left-hand side was missing and it is believed that some very sharp projection on the passing truck struck Thomas, though he declared he felt no blow.

THE STORY

On a pleasure trip in eastern waters, Philip Amory, English World war veteran, now a trader on the island of Papua, New Guinea, plunges overboard to save the life of a musical comedy actress, known as "Gin-Sling."
Amory becomes interested in Pia Amory becomes interested in Fig.
Laurier, member of a wealthy New South Wales family. He tells her of his knowledge of a wonderful gold field on the island, "Gin-Sling" tells him Pia is engaged to Sir Richard Fanshaw. His holiday ended, Amory arrives back at Daru. He meets an Englishman, Spicer, there on development business for a syndicate of which Fanshaw is head. Fanshaw's name recalls to Amory a long-forgot-ten incident in which he wit-nessed the escape of Fanshaw from a leper colony. He tells his friend Bassett about it and decides to inform Laurier. He goes to Thursday island to send the message. Amory hears Fanshaw dictate a message which indicates that the secret of the gold field is known. Amory meets with an accident that lays him up for three weeks. Recovered, he sails alone for Port Moresby. A storm compels him to put in at Thursday island where he finds Fanshaw.

CHAPTER VI_Contined

It doesn't matter," I thought. "Eight miles is only eight miles, and I'll be there not much behind him." I picked up my little dinghy, slung it into the light-green water, and pulled out. I was getting up anchor when it occurred to me to look and see what Fanshaw might be about. What I saw puzzled me. He had got his engine going, but not thrown in the clutch. The launch was drifting a little with the tide, but no start had been made. I hoisted sail, and got

"Put on as much speed as you like," I thought, watching her. "I'll do itwith this wind-in forty minutes, and that's good enough." Nevertheless I could not feel quite easy; it seemed to me that Fanshaw was just the sort of man to keep a card up his sleeve. "What card could he have?" I ar--and I will-to put a dozen weddings off; and once put off-once let me

I stopped, seized the tiller, and anaiched the boat over.

"Gosh," I said to myself. "Is that your card, my man?" For he had turned the launch, and was heading her-thirty miles an hour-straight

All I had heard of Sir Richard's daring as an airman, in the war, went racing through my head. His fierce attack-his famous stunts.

Truly he was stunting now. He might, probably would, cut my boat in two, and spill me in a shark-haunted sea, seven and a half miles from the mainland. He might merely wreck himself in the attempt. Anyhow, he meant to try. That was Fanshaw. And, I swear, even as I saw him drive right down on me, I found time, somehow, to think, "G-d, Richard Fanshaw, if you weren't the biggest villian unhung, what friends we two could have been!" In the same moment, I had reached for the sporting rifle that lay loaded in its clip beside the deckhouse, flung it to my shoulder, and show him dead. He fell from the wheel of the launch, right down into black blue water, sank and was gone. The launch, released from control, nent ahead furiously. I stayed a minute watching it; wondering whether it would get to the mainland without hitting anything, and what would be thought of its arrival, empty, if it did. I had little thought of myself, though I was vaguely aware that my own life might some day be forfeit, to pay for the life I had that minute spilled into the Pacific ocean. It did not seem to matter very much. Nothing seemed to matter. For now I understood that killing during the red years of war had not been the same as this killing now. I felt myself for the first time in my days, blood guilty. The man had tried to run me down. Yes-but I had not even attempted to escape, to maneuver out of his way. I had shot him; not because he was trying to ram my cutter, but because he was on his way to marry Pia

Laurier. With that thought came strange relief; the chill stupidity cleared away from my brain. Had I not said ! would give my life for her? Had I not done it, potentially? If anyone ever came to know of the business of this morning, I should hang as sure and could not report to work. The

as God made little apples. Good. Well and good. That seemed to wipe out the stain. I cannot explain; I can only say how I felt about it. I can only tell you that I steered the cutter, with a light enough heart, towards the back of the island, took a great sweep out to sea, and made for Port again by a round that, I calculated, would bring me into town towards afternoon.

When I came in, hoisting the yellow flag that asks for the doctor and pratique, I was left to wait some time. At last the doctor's launch came out and freed me; the customs let me go, with an easy question or two.

Scarcely had I landed, before half my acquaintance—it seemed—were about me, vieing with one another for first chance to relate the event of

Sir Richard Fanshaw had taken out his launch early that morning, and had never come back, and the launch had been sighted actually coming in from Fisherman on its own, till it ran aground on a shoal. When they got to it, there wasn't a soul on board, and no trace of the bridegroom but his gold cigarcase. Fisherman and the surrounding sea had been fruitlessly searched, but the bridegroom had utterly vanished, and it had been necessary to call in the Anglican parson to meet the unlucky bride and break the news.

In the midst of the clamor, I gathered my goods and escaped, thankful to have passed the barrier that I had unconsciously feared-the question I had been awaiting, with anxiety untold-"Did you see anything, hear anything, of an accident?"

I couldn't have convinced any one with a denial of the facts I should have had to deny. But they had deceived themselves; assumed, without question in their eagerness to tell me all about it, that I could have nothing, on my part, to tell.

If I had doubted my safety, 1 did not doubt it now. I climbed up the long, steep stony path that led to the house where Pia might be found. The native in a government tunic, who came to the steps, answered my inquiry with "Sinabada, she stop."

Would she see me? I scribbled my name on an envelope, and sent it in by the native.

She would see me. The boy came back to say that, "Sinabada, she talk you come."

It seemed too easy, too simple. I felt almost afraid. This was Pia, slowly coming through the curtains at the end of the veranda. Graver, older, changed, I saw her. I saw, too, that the change was not-as it might have been-the work of the last few hours. Whatever had altered her was less recent than the tragic end of her bridegroom. She had, indeed, the look of one who has been half stunned by an unexpected blow, and scarcely yet recovered; but the grief, the wild despair of love parted from love in fulfillment's very hour-these were not hers.

I had almost feared the meeting, been afraid of what I might feel in her presence; might, terribly, with shut lips, remember. I thought my love might have been clouded by the shadow of the day, as hers might have been dicamed by time.

I was to learn here, for the first time and the last-since it was for all time after-what love could mean, and do. There was not, between us, the bar of any difference, distrust; the chill of any "variation or shadow of change." In the flower-scented semi-dusk we met, she who should that day, have been the bride of another man, I who had that man's blood upon my hands, and it was as if the long months since we parted on the great liner, at Goode island, had been a minute only, and as if nothing, no one, had ever come between, Nothing of all the explanations, all the talk, that should have been between us two, got itself said. For one moment we stood, filling our hungry eyes with one another, and I think I was, in that moment, as pale as she, Then our arms were round each other, and the honey of the weetest kiss in all the world was on .ny lips at last She was sitting on my knee, by and by-I don't know where I had found a chair-and we began to talk, but it was not the talk I had figured.

"What are you going to do till we are married?" was the first thing I remember asking her.

And she-"Oh, go home and make it up with Dad and Mother, I suppose.

I did not ask her what she had to make up. I was too busy swallowing a large lump of disappointment. Somehow I had thought-but that, of course, was impossible!-a girl with money (curse her money!) and I without even enough cash to buy stores for my trip.

Well, if anything on earth was sure, it was sure that I should have enough to pay for everythicz I fancied, when I came back from that trip.

The more reason-if reason was wanted-for getting away at once. For leaving her. That hurt.

She went on talking. She sat there on my knee as if it had been a chair, her arms supporting her, round my neck; and yet I felt that, for the moment, she had withdrawn herself a

. "You see, they thought-at least Mother did; Dad wasn't therethat there was too much hurry about-" And now she faltered; her face turned, in the dusk, a little away from me-"About the marriage." I did not answer.

"Richard cabled," she went on. "He said he was starting earlier than he had expected, on his exploring trip through the unknown parts of Europe. And he said one never knew one would come back. And he asked me to meet him here and marry him before he left."

I was still silent.

"I telegraphed," she went on. "I said yes. Mother didn't like it. She said he could put off his trip, come to Singapore-we were staying at Government house-and do the thing decently. She almost forbade me to leave. But-well, Mother's pretty clever; she knows when to stop. She said at last that if I was bent on marrying some one, it was better Richard than-than-"

"So she let me go. She couldn't come herself; my sister Anne had joined us, and Mother thought his excellency was rather taken-he's a widower, you know. And that made her determined to stop, if the heavens . Well!-So I came. And I-I- Let me go."

I did not struggle to hold her, by so much as a finger or a fold of her dress. I knew that, for the moment, something other than love, or I, had her in its grip. Death. Youthful Lovers Made Victims of Unkind Fate

One of the minor executives in a large New York office and one of the secretaries had been carrying on a secret romance for some time, although no one in the establishment was aware of it.

Being an up-to-date young man, the executive, who shall be known only by his first name, Philip, to save embarrassment, carried on his courtship in a modern manner. Instead of writing her letters in the preliminary stage of his campaign he conceived the idea of waiting until the rest of the office had gone home and then speaking a few words into the dicta-phone she used. The next morning she would put on the ear phones and hear something along this line: "This is Philip, sweetheart. Don't forget I love you." But one day the secretary was IN result was that her substitute, starting to transcribe the letters on the cylinder, heard the love message and burst into laughter.

Philip was unable to stand up under the razzing he received daily thereafter and soon found another position .- New York Sun.

Talk to Yourself Via Slot

Those who enjoy hearing their voices may do so by dropping a coln in a slot machine which is to appear in London streets. It is operated on the phonograph principle. The voice is registered on a thin disk of red metal alloy, of secret composition, which is delivered five seconds after the speaking is finished. It can be used on any phonograph and with any fiber needle. The record is guaran teed to be permanent.

HAD NO ACCOUNT TO BE PAID IN MONEY

(© by D. J Walsh.)

OSALIE BRANDON was home for a three weeks' vacation, and as usual her first hours at home were given over to restoring order to the doctor's accounts, for her father was notorious for his neglect of the bookkeeping end of his large practice, and Celia, the general housekeeper, had too much to do to bother with bookkeeping, even if she had known the meaning of debit and credit, which was doubtful. The making of featherweight biscuit, velvety cake and perfect roasts did not require a knowledge of business efficiency and Celia rated several degrees above 100 per cent perfect when it came to cooking. And as Rosalie frowned over the accounts, checked one after another of long, unpaid bills, she kept thinking how very shabby her father's old fur coat was; remembered the pride he had always taken in his personal appearance and now, due to his tenderheartedness, he was wearing a mangy old coat with half the hair worn off it and his suits were shabby and frayed at the cuffs, despite repeated pressings and cleanings! It wasn't fair! Surely a few of those bills could be met, little by little, if the debtors tried!

With a coughing, sputtering conglomeration of foreign noises and sounds a rattle-trap old car drew up at the front door of the doctor's house and a tall, extremely thin young man unwound himself from the steering wheel and prepared to alight. Just dad's luck, thought Rosalie, to be out when a patient who owned even an apology for a car called! Perhaps she could make him wait.

"Is Doctor Brandon in, ma'am?" asked the too-thin owner of the mystery of the automotive industry.

"No. Won't you wait, though? I expect him back almost any time, now," and Rosalie felt herself warming to the strange young man in spite of her annoyance over her father's affairs, and she found herself noticing how very blue the young man's eyes were; what a sad, tired, almost weary droop there was to his mouth and wide shoulders as he sat uneasily awaiting her father's return. Why, he couldn't be much over twenty-five. Yet here he was looking for all the world as if the cares of a nation and a whole flock of starving orphans were upon his lone shoulders! And how positively shabby the man's clothes were, for all their neat, painful cleanliness and order! Perhaps it was the car; it certainly looked as though it might impoverish almost any one, and certainly anything as dubious looking as that mechanical device might cause its owner serious worry and thought and care; might, Rosalie thought, with a hint of laughter in her fine gray even make one ill, physically and otherwise!

But just then Doctor Brandon came in, greeting the stranger heartily, and Rosalie's eyes narrowed at the patent embarrassment of the young man, even while her father introduced them, and she discovered that he was the very young minister newly appointed to the Sleekport church.

"Who's got the mumps, now, Jeff?" bluffly joked the tired doctor as he fiddled absently with his case of medicine, "or has some one a new set of twins or perhaps the measles?"

"Well, you see, sir," began Geoffrey Harrington nervously, "that poor farmer out at the flats already has seven-and it seems the youngest isn't at all well, and I was wondering if perhaps you'd be willing to go out

"You will not, dad," fiercely interrupted Rosalie. "You were up all night with that new Hennessey baby, and you know you'll never get so much as a penny, and I just won't let you go away out there in this cold-"

"Then," replied the tired young man with an even sadder, wearier droop to his shoulders, "I'm afraid the baby will die. It won't eat and it cries all the time, and it never sleeps-"Just a moment, Jeff," interrupted her father bruskly, "and I'll be with Rosalie heard her father trying to get the district nurse, and when he finally came out with the information that they'd have to go alone Rosalie ran for her coat and hat and a moment later was shivering over the cold, flat road with her father shouting questions and answers to the young minister above the roar and clatter of the rocking, clattering car.

"I'm going to stay and help a while," whispered Rosalie when her father and Jeff came out ready to go. "You come for me later, dad, will you?" and Rosalie knew a strange thrill of gladness as Jeff eagerly offered to come and get her any time, and the thought helped her as she wrestled with soiled dishes, heaped up laundry and uncombed, unwashed children, Never in all her life had Rosalie worked so hard or so gladly, and at 5, when the early twilight was dimming the big old kitchen, now scrubbed and orderly, and the babies were being served a wholesome supper of sauce, milk, corn cake and cookies, Rosalie heard the bang, clatter and turmoil that heralded the approach of Jeff and his auto with unfeigned gladness. As he held her coat for her Rosalie felt a tug at her skirt and she bent down to embrace one of the oldest of the little girls, who was trying to tender Rosalie a couple of worn, shabby $1 bills with the mother's admonition that this was to be "on account," and turning suddenly, Rosalie looked at Jeff with quivering lips; that these people, so poor that they had hardly enough to keep body and soul together, should make this pitiful effort to pay a doctor's bill of over nine years' standing! And she had been grumbling over her father's, leniency!

"Take it back to Mummy, darling, and tell her to buy you some shoes! She hasn't any account with us-not to be paid in money, at least!" And Rosalie pulled her hat low over her eyes and her collar high up, lest Jeff see the sudden tears that were streaking her face.

"The Hennesseys have twins," gently remarked the young minister as he guided the coughing, sputtering car to a standstill and turned to help Rosalie out.

"Twins!" gasped Rosalie. "But I thought they already had one--this morning!"

"They did, and they have, and now your father is doing tailspins in the library because Mr. Hennessey tried to give him $10 on account-he wouldn't take it!"

"He wouldn't take it-why?" gasped Rosalie stutteringly.

"Because they haven't a cent and would probably have to run a grocery bill to pay him that much! Your father," he continued seriously, "is the most wonderful man I've ever known, Miss Brandon!"

"I supose you're the same," faltered Rosalie, hopelessly, "I suppose you, too, would give away your shoes and go barefoot!"

"Not any more, I wouldn't-on account of somebody else-somebody who is more wonderful than her dad," gently answered the sky pilot as he took Rosalie's coat from her and went to hang it up. And Rosalie knew!

The Continental congress was in session at intervals from September 5, 1774, to October 21, 1788, at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster and York, Pa.; Princeton and Trenton, N. J.; Annapolis and New York city.

During that time 16 men served as presidents of the congress-not of the United States. There was no President of the United States until George Washington, because there was no Constitution, and no such definite determination of the executive powers as there is now. The president of the Continental congress corresponded roughly, in his functions, to the Vice President in the present government -the president of the senate. He had some powers, delegated to him from time to time, beyond those of the presiding officer of a legislative

John Hanson of Maryland was one of the presidents of the Continental The complete list, with date of the election of each, follows: Peyton Randolph of Virginia, September 5, 1774; Henry Middleton, South Carolina, October 22, 1774; Peyton Randolph (again), May 10, 1775; John Hancock of Massachusetts, May 24, 1775; Henry Laurens, South Carolina, November 1, 1777; John Jay, New York, December 10, 1778; Samuel Huntington, Connecticut, September 28, 1779. Preserving Autographs To make indelible autographs that are written in pencil, the bureau of standards suggests spraying with the fixative used by artists for preventing the smudging of crayon and charcoal drawings. The fixative is a weak solution of bleached shellac in alcohol. The color is so pale and the film of shellac left on the paper is so thin that it cannot be noticed. Be careful not to close the book or turn the pages before the alcohol evaporates and the shellac loses its tackiness. Artists' supply houses sell a cheap tin sprayer, but an old atomizer for spraying the throat can be used. The solution should be well rinsed out of the tubes with alcohol if you wish to use the atomizer again.

Doctor's PRESCRIPTION when system is sluggish; costs nothing to try

When your bowels need help, the mildest thing that will do the work is always the sensible choice. Take a laxative that a family doctor has used for all sorts of cases of constipation. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so pleasant to the taste, so gentle in its action, it is given children of tender age and yet it is just as thorough and effective as stronger preparations. Pure senna, and harmless laxative herbs; ingredients that soon start a gentle muscular action. Avoid a coated tongue, bad breath, bilious headaches, etc. Every drug store has Dr. Caldwell's famous prescription in big bottles.
