CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends for the kindness and sympathy extended to us in our sad bereavement; also those who sent the beautiful floral offerings.

Mr. and Mrs. David Bernard and family.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the many friends and neighbors for the sympathy and kindness extended to us; also for the beautiful floral tributes and Rev. Metcalf for his consoling words.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Smith.

The scholastic team of the Tawas City high school journeyed to Mt. Pleasant last Thursday afternoon to participate in the state scholastic contest Friday which was sponsored by the Central State Teachers College of that city. The team consisted of ten students; that is, Viola and Irvin Burtzloff, Irwin Schlechte, Dora Mark, William Leslie, Stewart Roach, Dorothy Bigelow, Elsie Mueller, Elvera Kasichke, and Glen Barnes.

The contest was conducted in much the same manner as in former years. The contestants were divided into three groups according to the enrollment in the high school. That is, one class contained all with more than three hundred students in the high school, one class contained all with an enrollment of between one hundred and three hundred students in the high school, and one class contained all students from high schools with less than one hundred enrolled. The students within each class contested against each other in three divisions; that is, music, vocational, and academic. The school which secured the most points in any one of the three divisions was awarded a plaque, and each student who secured a first or second place in any subject was awarded a gold and silver pin, respectively.

The musical division consisted of vocal and instrumental solos. Tawas City entered no contestants in this division. The vocational division consisted of contests in home economics, household mechanics, agriculture, mechanical drawing, woodshop, clothing, shorthand and typewriting. The contests in the academic division consisted of work in algebra, biology, Latin, English, French, chemistry, botany, civics, geometry, American history, European history, physics and general science.

In the vocational division, Tawas City entered contestants in typewriting and shorthand. Elvera Kasichke took first place in both second year typewriting and first year shorthand, and Irwin Schlechte secured second place in first year typewriting. This gave our school first place in this division with a total of 13 points. Pinconning with a total of 11 points, was a close second.

In the academic division, Dora Mark secured third place in ninth grade English and second place in general science. Elsie Mueller took second place in tenth grade English, and Irvin Burtzloff took first place in eleventh grade English. Glen Barnes secured second place in European history. These places gave Tawas City a total of 13 points in the academic division, or third place.

A total of 104 schools was represented in the contest, and 1182 students were present. While we are not certain in regard to the number of schools and students in our class, yet in all probability about one-half of the total number was our direct contestant. Inasmuch as the Tawas City students brought home a plaque to hang with the one won last year, and also three gold and four silver pins, all who feel interested in our public schools should feel justly proud of this record.

ENTERTAINMENT ART HITS

PEAK WITH "RIO RITA"

"Rio Rita," the all talking, all musical Radio Pictures' extravaganza which will be shown at the State Theatre Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, is evidence—tuneless, colorful evidence—that the screen has touched a new high mark in entertainment.

As the first operetta in sound and color, "Rio Rita" opens up a great new vista of entertainment to those cities and towns geographically barred from the Broadway spectacles of Ziegfeld and the Shuberts.

Bebe Daniels, in the title role, is no doubt a sensation with her new-found voice. No heralded prima donna of the opera ever so fascinated an audience as does Miss Daniels when she sings more than a dozen of Harry Tierney's beautiful melodies.

John Boles, erstwhile musical comedy star, is excellent as leading man with Miss Daniels. Pressing the leading characters for honors of the piece, however, are Bert Wheeler, Dorothy Lee and Robert Woolsey, who give to the show not only a generous share of comedy, but contribute much to its large share of dancing and singing.

One of the highlights of the show, so plentiful with highlights is the Pearl Eaton chorus of 100 of Hollywood's most beautiful dancing girls. The Cimini Grand Chorus of 80 voices; Victor Baravalle's Symphony orchestra and a night club show, introducing some grand specialty acts, round out the fulsome entertainment of "Rio Rita."

GEORGE PERCY SMITH

George Percy Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Smith of this city, died Thursday at Hurley hospital, Flint. Pneumonia was the cause of death.

George Percy Smith was born July 25, 1894, at Innerkip, Ontario, and when two years of age came with his parents to Tawas City. For a number of years he had been a resident of Plymouth.

The deceased is survived by his parents, one son, Kenneth, three daughters, Virginia, Dorothea and Phyllis, one brother, Leslie, and four sisters, Jean and Minnie of Cleveland, Viola of Buffalo, and Mrs. Ruskin R. Roberts of Ruckersville, Va.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon from the home of his parents. Rev. Frank Metcalf officiated. Burial in Tawas City cemetery.

The many friends of the deceased in this city deeply sympathize with the bereaved children and parents.

REV. GEO. SMITH DELIVERS BACCALAUREATE SERMON TO WHITEMORE GRADUATES

Last Sunday evening at the Whittemore Methodist Episcopal church, Rev. George Smith delivered the baccalaureate address to the sixteen members of the graduating class of the Whittemore high school.

The church was prettily decorated by the Sophomore class of the high school. Huge bouquets of lilacs lent the color and odor of spring to the church. The rostrum was a mass of potted plants and flowers with a background of arbor vitae. Shaded lights gave an air of quiet tranquility to the affair.

Reverend Smith's sermon consisted of a heart to heart talk to the graduates; an entreaty for them to continue with their scholastic work, stressing the importance of an education in this era of civilization. He asked them to enter into the life with their fellow men with a spirit of co-operation, charity, honesty, sincerity and self sacrifice.

He pointed out to the graduates that they are enjoying advantages and opportunities that were unknown to their parents and grandparents, and urged them to avail themselves of these opportunities and fit themselves for lives of greater usefulness.

Friday evening the third annual Commencement exercises will be held at the Roll Inn hall. The speaker will be Gerald F. Bush, of the Department of Public Instruction.

OPEN NEW GROCERY STORE IN HAMILTON BUILDING

A new grocery store will be opened to the public on Saturday, May 24, in the former Hamilton building by Benj. Sawyer and son, Grover B. Sawyer. Both men are well known in this vicinity. Benj. Sawyer having been in business for the past 25 years in this city.

The store has been entirely remodeled and redecorated inside, and also a new front installed. They will carry a complete line of staple groceries and will run the store on a cash and carry basis.

165 7th AND 8th GRADERS WRITE EXAMINATIONS

At the county seventh and eighth grade examinations held in Isoco county last week there were 110 seventh grade pupils who wrote and 55 eighth grade pupils. County eighth grade commencement will be held at the Community Building in East Tawas on June 6. County Achievement Day for the boys' and girls' clubs in the county will also be held at that time.

DUNCAN SISTERS AT STATE IN "IT'S A GREAT LIFE"

The Duncan Sisters have broken records in vaudeville and musical comedy all over the country, and in the opinion of this critic, they are on their way to repeat this pleasant experience in their first talking picture, "It's a Great Life," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production which will be shown Sunday and Monday at the State Theatre.

"It's a Great Life" not only gives the big public of the Duncans a brand new assembly of gags and songs, but it presents the girls in a strong, well-sustained story, in which they demonstrate that they can not only sing, but act mightily well whenever required.

There is no reason why we should spoil any one's pleasure by relating the story in detail. Suffice it to say that it has been done in a very human manner by the capable director, Sam Wood.

Everybody will want to know about the songs the two girls sing in the production. There are six of them, all peaches. Nine-tenths of the audience will go out humming "Following You," which fits the Duncan Sisters perfectly, because, like all the others, it was "made to order."

"It's a Great Life" was filmed with technicolor sequences, which adds charm to the costumes and scenic effects.

To those loyal citizens of Tawas City and Tawas township, who by their co-operation and kindness have enabled me to make a successful enumeration for the 15th Decennial Census, I hereby wish to convey my sincere appreciation.

Rebecca M. Baguley, Enumerator, Districts 35-12, 35-13

REV. BROGGER SUCCUMBS TO APPENDICITIS

The funeral rites of Rev. Edward A. Brogger, who died Monday morning at St. Mary's hospital, Saginaw, were held Wednesday at East Tawas. The deceased succumbed to an attack of appendicitis. The body was brought Tuesday to East Tawas. Rev. Brogger had been pastor of St. Joseph's church for the past nine years.

A Requiem High Mass for the children of St. Joseph's school was sung by Rev. Pius Mueller, O. F. M., at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. Rev. John Joseph Brogger, O. F. M., brother of the deceased, spoke words of encouragement to the children.

At nine o'clock a Solemn Requiem High Mass was celebrated. Rev. John Joseph Brogger acted as celebrant; Rev. T. W. Albin, deacon; Rev. Urban Miller, sub-deacon; and Rev. William Simon, master of ceremonies. Rev. John E. Troy of Bay City delivered a beautiful tribute to the memory of the deceased pastor. Sacred Heart choir of Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, under the direction of Joseph Schmitzler, rendered a Gregorian Mass Chant.

The visiting clergy consisted of: Revs. Joseph Steffes, V. F. Manistee; John E. Troy, Bay City; Godfrey Lenzen, Clacking Creek; A. Studer, Chesaning; J. B. Suprenant; Saginaw; Anthony Schumacker, Manistee; L. T. Bouchard, Alpena; T. W. Albin, Cadillac; J. M. McDonald, Alpena; P. A. O'Toole, Carson City; J. V. Barrette, Linwood; W. T. Simon, Bay City; Charles Van-Colen, Gladwin; A. S. Bauman, Munger; George Gougeon, Pinconning; C. A. Skowrouski, St. Charles; V. J. Heaphy, Saginaw; Joseph Delshanty, Harrisville; Francis Alt, Bay City; Pius Mueller, O. F. M.; Francis Brogger, Kalamazoo; E. Labory, Standish.

Rev. Edward A. Brogger was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., February 9, 1891. He completed his college and theological studies at St. Francis' Seminary, Milwaukee, Wis., and was ordained to the priesthood by the late Rt. Rev. Henry Joseph Richter, Bishop of Grand Rapids. His first appointment in 1915, at the time of his ordination, was assistant to Rev. T. J. O'Connor, at Mt. Pleasant. After five years service there, he received his appointment as pastor of St. Joseph's church, East Tawas, administering here until his death.

Surviving are three brothers and four sisters. Rev. F. B. Brogger, and Anthony F. Brogger, Saginaw; Rev. John Joseph Brogger, O. F. M., pastor of Sacred Heart church, Indianapolis, Indiana, Sister M. Theodora, mistress of novices, Hartwell, Ohio, Sister M. Adolphine of Good Counsel Academy, Makato, Minnesota, Miss Mary Brogger of Saginaw, and Mrs. John J. O'Toole of Merrill.

Final funeral services took place at 10 o'clock Thursday morning at St. Andrew's church, Saginaw. Burial in St. Andrew's cemetery, Saginaw.

POLLY MORAN MAKES WHOOPIE IN TALKING FILM

Here's a new recipe for a screen laugh—six hundred olives! It took exactly that number to register a howl for Polly Moran in William Haines' new talking starring vehicle, "The Girl Said No," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's comedy romance of business life which will be shown Sunday and Monday, May 25 and 26, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas.

The episode showed Polly as the comic servant enter a room with a tray of olives, take a comic fall, and spill them all over the parlor. What with practice, closeups and other incidentals to production, enough trays were spilled to total six hundred olives for the laugh.

The new Haines picture depicts the comedian as a graduate, just out of college, facing his first year of business life, and is said to be a cross-section of the experience of almost every youth in America first starting "on his own." He has to accept the responsibility of the family when his father dies; he faces keen competition and learns how to work the strings in business life, and then fights for the girl he loves. The battling football hero turns into a battling business man.

Lella Hyams is the heroine and Francis X. Bushman, Jr., the "heavy" as McAndrews, the same part he played in "Brown of Harvard." Polly Moran, Clara Blandick, Phillips Crane, William Janney, Wilbur Mack, William V. Mong, and Carleton Macy are in the cast.

A complete replica of a Wall Street brokerage office in operation, a rescue race in an automobile, a hilarious adventure in a night club and a comedy flirtation in a car, poignant heart interest scenes in the intimate family life of the hero and other amusing bits of entertainment are said to abound in the new play. Haines' first picture since "Navy Blues."

CHIC GLOVES ARE IMPORTANT; OUTFITTING OF LITTLE GIRLS

HUSBANDS and fathers please take notice, from now on the dress allowance for wives and daughters must be increased. Henceforth and until further notice the budget must be made to cover the expense of gloves ranging from the most formal types to every conceivable kind such as time place and costume may demand. At every Paris couture opening, the glove is being made a theme of out-

The graceful drooping leghorn which this little girl is wearing is trimmed with a broad velvet ribbon matched to the rose color print of the frock. Which is as it should be, for even in the little folks' realm, the costume must present a related color scheme from head to foot to be fashionable. In this instance the winsome standing importance. Perfectly fascinating long gloves in pastel tints are registering for formal evening wear. A preferred type is the 16-button mousquetaire suede glove in such baby colors as pink, pale blue and light yellow. Worn with the right evening gown, they create nothing less than a sensation. Long white glace kid gloves are in demand but the eggshell and suede tints are newer. Very handsome and exclusive types finish their top edges with borders of rhinestone or bead embroidery. Offsetting these fanciful creations are the very long black suede gloves, the same considered tres chic worn with colorful evening gowns. Quintessential of all are the very long and not so long black lace mitts which are complementing the gown made all of lace, also smartly in evidence with demure frocks which are sleeved with cunning short puffs. In selecting gloves one needs to consider the style, the color and even the leather in relation to the costume and dress is made of shantung printed in a delicate patterning which silhouettes blue and rose against a white background. Designers, manufacturers, also the family dressmaker and home-sewing women in general are rejoicing in the wealth of lovely materials which this season are at their disposal for the making of little folks' apparel. They cite particularly the prettiness and at the same time practicability of printed shantungs and printed linens which flourish in the fabric showings. Likewise the wearableness and attractiveness of printed crepe. In making up youngsters' fashions the very style points which are contributing so conspicuously to the smartness of adult fashions are being exploited in the children's realm with utmost enthusiasm. For instance, the little dress in the picture is styled with the popular cape sleeves, the circular-flare hemline, and a most sophisticated jabot made of self-material. Another mode which appears in replica of the costumes designed for mother and grown-up sister is the jacket suit, made of lively print silk. Most cunning models in miniature are laying siege to little daughter's heart. Outstanding among these is the jacket-and-skirt suit of printed crepe.

the other accessories. For afternoon longer slip-ons have become the rage. These are usually of suede or mocha in off-white shades, yellow or pinkish beige to blend with the stockings as a rule. A very smart color note for this season is to have gloves, hat, bag, and shoes of one shade. Pull-ons with decorated flare cuffs are also considered good style. Several interesting types are shown in the upper picture, also the newest lace mitts. With her handsome gown of white bengberg moire, the evening-attired lady as illustrated is wearing an exquisite pair of long pale blue glace kid gloves. Rhinestone buckles and a bow on one shoulder and at the belt provide the only trimming for her modishly fitted-at-the-waist frock. Attire for Small Girls. The call of the wide-brimmed hat is heard in the children's realm. From juvenile headquarters comes the welcome news that lovely big leg-horns, than which there is no more flattering type for youngsters, has come into its own once more. A gay print frock topped with a ribbon sashed or banded leghorn worn by a dainty little miss never fails to make a "perfect picture," and the il-

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Murder of Grand Duke Peter

SURROUNDED by a cloud of rumor and concealed in a haze of official secrecy, the murder of the Grand Duke Peter, husband of Catherine II of Russia, remains one of the many unsolved mysteries connected with that country, particularly since it is coupled with the personality of one of the most remarkable figures in the annals of royalty—Catherine the Great.

The story of Catherine II, the Semiramis of the North as her contemporaries delighted in calling her, is revolting not only because it is the story of a profligate woman but its deepest horror is to be found in the extreme corruption of the age and people to which the empress belonged. Peter the Great said of his country: "Russia is rotten before she is ripe" and to realize the true meaning of these words and the fullness of their implication, one must study in detail the reigns of Elizabeth and Catherine II. Never was there such a mixture of squalor and magnificence as in the palace of the former. Filth and splendor alternated throughout the royal apartments and the vilest food was eaten from plates of gold.

The first question concerning Catherine, therefore, is whether she corrupted Russia or Russia corrupted her when, as a girl of eighteen, she came from Germany to marry the Grand Duke Peter, heir to the Russian throne. At the time, the Empress Elizabeth, who ruled Russia as a usurper and kept the rightful czar in prison, was morally as corrupt as Catherine became in later years and added drunkenness, gross superstition, cruelty and insanity to her other vices. Yet, at the mere word of this frenzied empress, torture or an exile that meant worse than death, could at any moment be pronounced as lightly and as easily against the heir to the throne as against the poorest peasant.

An even more revolting figure was that of the grand duke himself. "A half-crazed savage in a wig and lace coat," "a swaggering, cursing, brawling, punch-swilling ruffian," "a royal degenerate to whom nothing was sacred save his own wishes"—these are some of the descriptions of the man to whom Catherine was given as wife. Left absolutely alone in such surroundings and with such a husband, there is little wonder that Catherine not only became corrupted but outdid the corruptions in which she found herself.

In daily and almost hourly peril from the insane fancies of the empress, Catherine may well have experienced the deadening effects produced by the loss of all security and, with respect to the question as to whether she might justifiably be accused of the murder of her husband, it is only necessary to refer to the notes of Walsneski, Polish historian who made a deep study of the facts in the case of this strange household.

"Peter remains the same gross, extravagant and insupportable being that he has always been," says Walsneski, "A strange brute streaked with insanity," according to St. Beuve's expression, and he still knows how to make himself thoroughly odious. Frequently he comes to bed drunk and, between hiccoughs, speaks to his wife of his favorite topics—his amours with the duchess of Courland, a hunchback, or with Freiline Voronstov, who is marked with smallpox. If Catherine attempts to go to sleep he punnels her with his hands and feet to keep her awake until sleep overcomes him. He is almost always drunk and becomes more and more mad."

The first step in the downfall of this royal brute was his removal from the throne at the undoubted instigation of his wife, a removal which was followed by his virtual banishment to his country home at Ropcha where he died, officially of "apoplexy" but in reality as the result of a direct plot against his life. The fact that the murderers dared to act as openly as they did and that no attempt was made to prosecute them indicates that Catherine had shown that the permanent removal of the grand duke would not be distasteful to her. The truth about the affair has, however, never fully come to light, for Catherine had no need even to defend herself. Her rule was absolute and she doubtless destroyed any records which would tend to implicate her with one of the not infrequent murder mysteries of the royal families of Europe.

Pilgrims Using Busses

Since religious pilgrims of Persia have been prohibited, for political reasons, from going to Kerbela, which is in Iraq, they must, if possible, visit Meshed or Kum, so they have abandoned the picturesque caravan for auto bus travel. Tcheranis have found that they can make the journey and return home in ten days instead of two months as in the old way.

Obedience

Kathrine Kestski, Red agitator, said, ancient domestic relations: "I asked of a young American bride: 'Did not you and your husband have words over you coming to the beach alone?' I understand that he did not want you to come." "Oh, no," said the bride, "we didn't have any words. I said I was going; he said I wasn't, and here I am!"

The First Memorial Day

J. A. Garfield

Gen. John A. Logan

Monument to the Unknown Dead in Arlington

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON.

ONE can say for certain just where and when the idea of Memorial day originated. A recent historian, Lloyd Lewis, attributes it to the grief which swept the nation at the death of Abraham Lincoln. Writing in Liberty magazine two years ago under the title of "Memorial Day is Born" he says:

"Always there will be a dispute over where the day began, because the day itself came from nowhere and everywhere. The greater the number of claimants for its birthplace, the plainer the proof that the Republic was aching vaguely with eagerness to speak its grief after four years of killing. Seven hundred thousand men, Blue and Gray, were dead. "The funeral of the war's greatest figure pointed the way."

"Each little fugitive decoration of graves across the land was a seed springing from ground that had been harrowed into fertility by the Lincoln funeral spectacle. Sentiment crystallized as that burial drama, with its pomp and storms of flowers, fitted into the mood of the moment."

As for the various claimants, there can only be regarded the facts of their observances, each of which contained the germ of the idea, in their chronological order without attempting to assign any priority to any one. On June 1, 1861, Warrenton, Va., held memorial services over the grave of a Confederate hero, John Quincy Marr. On May 1, 1865, a memorial service was held in Charleston, S. C., which had been organized by James Redpath (war correspondent and later founder of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau) who was then superintendent of the freedmen's schools in that city.

That same year, some time in the spring of 1865, the women of Columbus, Ga., had decorated the graves of their war dead and the following January the members of the Ladies' Aid society there decided to perpetuate the custom. They picked upon April 26, 1866, the anniversary of the surrender of Gen. Joseph Johnston, the last formal act of the Civil war, as the date for their Memorial day celebration. Montgomery, Ala., observed the same day, April 26, 1866; Fredericksburg, Va., decided upon May 10, 1866; and Camden, Ark., decorated graves in November, 1866. Up North at least one memorial service was held in 1866. Gen. John J. Murray of Waterloo, N. Y., and some of his comrades in the Union army are said to have decorated graves in their home cemetery on May 22, 1866.

But even though it is impossible to establish definitely any exact priority in the matter of the origin of this day, it is possible to trace a succession of events which led to the observance of what, perhaps, may be characterized as the "first Memorial day" in its close resemblance to the event as it is now celebrated. On April, 1866, the women of Columbus, Miss., held memorial services in the cemetery of that town and decorated not only the graves of the Confederate war dead but also those of some Union soldiers buried there.

The next spring there appeared in a New York newspaper a brief paragraph which stated that "the women of Columbus, Miss., have shown themselves impartial in their offerings made to the memory of the dead. They strewn flowers alike on the graves of the Confederate and of the National soldiers." Among those who read that item was a young lawyer named Francis Miles Finch who was living in Ithaca, N. Y. It inspired him to write the following verses:

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY
By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Under the one, the Blue,
Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robes of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle-blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet:

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Under the laurel, the Blue,
Under the willow, the Gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers
Alike for the friend and the foe:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Under the roses, the Blue,
Under the lilies, the Gray.

So with an equal splendor,
The morning sun-rays fall,
With a touch impartially tender,
On the blossoms blooming for all:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Brodered with gold, the Blue,
Mellowed with gold, the Gray.

So, when the summer calleth,
On forest and field of grain,
With an equal murmur falleth
The cooling drip of the rain:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Wet with the rain, the Blue,
Wet the rain, the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
The generous dead was done,
In the storm of the years that are fading
No braver battle was won:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Under the blossoms, the Blue,
Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

When this poem was published it achieved instant popularity, it was widely reprinted and later set to music so that its message of reconciliation was carried to all points of the country.

Meanwhile on April 6, 1866, there had been organized at Decatur, Ill., a group of Union veterans who took the name of the Grand Army of the Republic and within a short time thousands of men who had worn the blue were members of the G. A. R., as it became familiarly known. In 1868 the national commander of the G. A. R. was Gen. John A. Logan of Illinois. On a cold, raw day in March of that year a party from Washington set out to visit the battlefields around Richmond. The leader of the group was Col. Charles L. Wilson, a Chicago editor of that time, and with him were his niece, fiancée and Mrs. John A. Logan. They rode from one scene of desolation to another, touched by the poverty of the region, once the proud capital of the Confederacy. And above all they noticed the numberless Confederate graves, most of them decorated with faded flowers and bunting, with here and there an improvised gravestone.

Returning to Washington, the Richmond pilgrims went to the rooms of General Logan, who had been unable to accompany his wife on the trip because of the pressure of congressional business. The war-torn country about Richmond was described to him; the rows of graves, each marked by some loving hand, now covered by a gentle snow that, nevertheless, could not dim the tokens of devotion left upon them.

"The Greeks and Romans," said General Logan, "in the day of their glory, were wont to honor their hero dead by chaplets of laurel and flowers, as well as bronze and stone." And he added that this thought should be carried over to the United States. It could be done, he believed, by the issuance of an order from him, as commander in chief of the G. A. R. to the posts established throughout the North.

General Logan immediately set about writing the order and the following night called a meeting of the G. A. R. staff officers in his rooms at the old Willard hotel, Washington, where the order he had written was submitted for their approval. The staff was unanimous in agreement and not long thereafter "Order No. 11" was broadcast from G. A. R. headquarters all over the country. In part that famous order reads as follows:

GENERAL ORDERS No. 11

Headquarters Grand Army of the Republic
Adjutant General's Office,
446 14th Street, Washington, D. C.
May 5, 1868.

I. The 30th day of May, 1868, is designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers, or otherwise decorating, the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country during the late rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, hamlet and churchyard in the land. In this observance, no form of ceremony is prescribed, but posts and comrades will, in their own way, arrange such fitting services and testimonials of respect, as circumstances may permit.

We are organized, comrades, as our regulations tell us, for the purpose among other things, "of preserving and strengthening those kind and fraternal feelings which have bound together the soldiers, sailors and marines, who united together to suppress the late rebellion." What can aid more to assure this result than by cherishing tenderly the memory of our heroic dead, who made their breasts a barricade between our country and its foes. Their soldier lives were the revolve of freedom to a race in chains, and their deaths the tattoo of rebellious tyranny in arms. We should guard their graves with sacred vigilance. All that the consecrated wealth and taste of the nation can add to their adornment and security, is but a fitting tribute to the memory of her slain defenders. Let no wanton foot tread rudely on such hallowed grounds. Let pleasant paths invite the coming and going of reverent visitors and fond mourners. Let no vandalism of avarice or neglect, no ravages of time, testify to the present or to the coming generations that we have forgotten, as a people, the cost of a free and undivided republic.

If other eyes grow dull, and other hands slack, and other hearts grow cold in the solemn trust, ours shall keep it well, as long as the light and warmth of life remain to us.

Let us, then, at the time appointed, gather around their sacred remains, and garland the passional mounds above them with the choicest flowers of springtime; let us raise above them the dear old flag they saved from dishonor; let us, in this solemn presence, renew our pledges to aid and assist those whom they have left among us, the memory of his passionate mounds—the soldier's widow and orphan.

II. It is the purpose of the commander-in-chief to inaugurate this observance, with the hope that it will be kept up from year to year, while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades. He earnestly desires the public press to call attention to this order, and lend its friendly aid in bringing it to the notice of comrades in all parts of the country in time for simultaneous compliance therewith.

III. Department commanders will use every effort to make this order effective.

By order of John A. Logan,
Commander-in-Chief.
Official: N. P. Chipman,
Adjutant General.

As a result of this order formal exercises were held at Arlington, Va. (later the site of the present Arlington National Cemetery) on May 30, 1868, the principal ceremony being the decoration with flags and flowers of the monument to the "Unknown Dead," a memorial that had been erected to the memory of 2,111 unidentified dead found on the fields of Bull Run and the route to Rappahannock. The principal address was delivered by James A. Garfield, twelve years later elected President of the United States. As yet the term Memorial day, or Decoration day, had not been linked with the observance, and his address, afterward printed in pamphlet form in Cleveland, Ohio, was simply entitled: "Oration of Hon. James A. Garfield, delivered at Arlington, Va., May 30, 1868, on the Occasion of Strewing Flowers on the Graves of Union Soldiers."

The idea spread rapidly and at the ceremonies held by the G. A. R. in Monument cemetery in Philadelphia on May 29, 1875, it was recorded that "the annual floral decoration of the graves of our dead soldiers has become a national custom." For it was doing much to heal the wounds of the war and, in uniting to honor their dead, the North and the South were forgetting the bitterness of a few short years before. One of the most significant bits of evidence of this occurred in Brooklyn when on the eve of May 30, 1877, a great throng assembled in the Academy of Music to hear the chief orator of the day—Judge Roger A. Pryor, formerly brigadier general in the Confederate army.

AIR TRANSPORT IN DOMINION IS HEAVY

Used by Timber, Mining and Fur Industries.

Chicago.—Dispatches from Edmonton, Alta., telling of the opening of a new line from Fort McMurray, a few miles north of that city, to Aklavik, 1,800 miles north on the Arctic ocean, call attention to the advances made in air transport in the Dominion in the last few years.

Canada is now, with the exception of a few miles along the northwest border, connected from ocean to ocean and also interlaced from north to south by air lines that tap every great lumbering, fur, fishing and mining center.

One of the features of the air passenger service there that surprises operators in the United States is that the lines are paying expenses and that the travel, although not in all instances as heavy as here, is substantial in spite of much higher rates prevailing.

Miners Want Speed.
The secret of the success of the Canadian lines lies in their utility in a country almost devoid of railroads in many parts and traversed at all seasons of the year by mining and lumbering executives and engineers, amply financed from London and New York and desirous of traveling speedily regardless of cost. The charter business is particularly good in the wilds, where, were mushing and canoe transportation resorted to, weeks would be consumed in trips that now occupy only hours.

Planes on most of the lines are equipped with pontoons in the summer months and skids in the long winter. There are only a few weeks in which planes cannot be used either on the ice or the water, these times being the spring thaws, when the ice is too soft for skids and not sufficient, cleared out of the lakes to permit the safe use of pontoons.

Through the energy of promoters it is now possible to take a plane in Magdalen island, at the extreme tip of Nova Scotia, and travel to Montreal, Toronto and Detroit. There is little schedule development directly north of Lakes Huron and Superior, except individual operations and charter services to fur-trading posts and to mining camps.

Line to Far North.
From Winnipeg lines radiate to Chesterfield inlet, far up along Hudson bay in the northwest territories. Churchill, the new grain port on Hudson bay, is on this far northern line. Simpson, Fort Rae, Fort Reliance and other centers are also reached by routes out of Edmonton and Winnipeg. Few landing fields exist and the lakes are used almost exclusively. Gas and food caches have been placed at convenient intervals throughout the entire country traversed by lines and pilots fly in subzero temperatures with comfort in insulated cabins.

Kill Devil Hill Anchored for Memorial to Wright

Norfolk, Va.—Kill Devil hill, a rambling mountain of sand ninety-seven feet high, covering twenty-six acres, from which the Wright brothers on December 17, 1903, made the first flight with a motor-driven airplane, finally has been chained down by government engineers to allow erection of a monument and establishment of a government reservation of 500 acres, which will include the hill and a modern airport.

Driven by northwest winds, the hill has moved 500 feet in the last quarter century from its position when the Wrights used it. In the last 250 years the hill has submerged small fishing towns and small forests in its march toward Kittyhawk bay.

Capt. John A. Gilman, constructing United States quartermaster, was given the task of nailing down the itinerant hill. He placed a strip of wood mold, two inches deep and 300 feet wide, around the base of the hill. Fourteen acres were then sown with rye, wild grass and bitter tannic seed. With the loose sand protected from the wind the hill remained where it was.

The proposed Wright memorial will be fifty-five to eighty-five feet high and will cost $238,000. A government reservation of 500 acres will be utilized as an airport.

New York Not Ready for Department of Aviation

Albany, N. Y.—The time has not yet come in New York for the establishment of a state department of aviation, the New York aviation commission, a temporary legislative committee created in 1928 to study the needs and development of aviation, says in its annual report to Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"In the future some such provision may be found necessary," the report says, "but for the present it is the belief of the commission that the most efficient and economical method of procedure in the state regulation of aeronautics is a continuation of the commission."

The report sets forth that there are now 89 landing fields in the state as compared with 39 a year ago. It recommends that the state department of education be instructed to license all flying schools in the state, and that the state police be equipped with airplanes. It recommends that airplanes that do not have approved type certificates be not allowed to fly within the state.

LAWRENCE PREDICTS FOOL PROOF PLANE

Motor Designer Points Out Probable Improvements.

St. Louis.—An airplane, "foolproof" and as easy to drive as an automobile, eventually will be a reality, Charles L. Lawrence, designer of the Wright Whirlwind motor, believes.

"You will steer these planes to the right or left with an automobile wheel, just as you would a car, and with no fear of making a false move," Lawrence commented.

"You will go up or down simply by pulling or pushing the wheel and the airplane will be in perfect control in every position and at any speed even when descending.

"The stick which now maneuvers the plane will be done away with, also the necessity of using the feet on pedals," he said.

Lawrence, to whom President Coolidge presented the Collier trophy to the greatest achievement in aviation during 1928, said he believed too much dependence upon the personal equation constitutes the largest fault of the present-day plane.

Although he admitted the present-day craft yet is imperfect, Lawrence emphasizes that the airplane, "when in competent hands, is a sound means of transportation."

Construction of the airplane motor and frame have been improved to such a degree that most accidents and crashes are due to bad judgment of the pilot, the motor expert believes.

Fire hazards of the present-day plane will be eliminated, adding further to safety of flying.

"The hazards," he said, "will be eliminated by preventing other parts of the machine from becoming hot from exhaust and the use of a less volatile fuel."

"No matter how safe flying becomes, bad judgment of pilots will continue to cause accidents just as it does today with the automobile."

Hog Island Yard Will Become Great Terminal

Philadelphia.—Hog island, the greatest shipyard in the world in time of war, is planned to become one of the greatest air-marine-rail terminals in the United States in time of peace.

After much dickering between Philadelphia and Washington, the federal government, through the United States shipping board, has agreed to sell the World war shipyard site to the municipality for $3,000,000.

Slowly decaying since it made its great wartime record in the building of ships, Hog island is to be transformed into a great terminal, according to present plans, where ocean steamships, transatlantic ships of the air, and transcontinental trains and airplanes may load and unload passengers and cargoes.

The total area involved in the purchase is 946 acres. Of this 307 acres will be used for the airport, 70 as a seaplane base, and 569 for the marine and rail terminal.

New York State and California Leading

Washington.—New York and California still lead all other states in the number of planes and pilots, a recent report of the Department of Commerce shows.

New York has 977 licensed planes; California, 832. California, however, has 903 transport pilots, 18 industrial pilots, 179 limited commercial pilots, 976 private pilots and 1,461 mechanics, compared with 84 transport pilots, 13 industrial pilots, 135 limited commercial pilots, 513 private pilots and 733 mechanics for New York.

POULTRY

ROOSTERS SPREAD POULTRY DISEASE

More Cases of Bacillary White Diarrhea Noticed.

Male birds help to spread bacillary white diarrhea among poultry although the disease does spread without males, according to the New York state college of veterinary science at Cornell university.

Until recently the cause of the spread of this disease among mature chickens has been unsolved. Experiments were conducted in which pens were made up of infected and non-infected hens. Cock birds were placed in some of the pens and others were maintained without males. A period of months was necessary before any evidence of this dissemination was seen.

Bacillary white diarrhea has been found to be the most widespread and serious disease of baby chicks. To assist poultrymen to control the disease, the veterinary college has encouraged local veterinarians to establish laboratories which are maintained under its supervision. These laboratories are located in Erie, Orange, Onondaga, Otsego, and Greene counties. Long Island also has a number of similar laboratories conducted on the same plan.

Although testing under this plan has been in operation only one year up state and two years on Long Island, nearly 100 flocks have been handled. Approximately 52,000 chickens have been tested and progress is being made in lowering the amount of infection in these flocks and in decreasing the chick mortality due to this disease.

Ducks for Breeders

Are Fed Differently

When ducks are raised for breeders they are fed differently from those intended for market. They are not forced so much as are the latter, and less fattening feed is given them. The corn meal and beef scraps are reduced to one-half the quantity used in the above rations. The following is an excellent ration: Equal parts corn meal, wheat bran, green feed, 5 per cent beef scraps, and 5 per cent coarse sand or grit.

A ration for breeding (laying) ducks is recommended as follows: Fifty per cent by measure, corn meal; 15 per cent wheat bran; 15 per cent green feeds (cooked vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, etc.); 12 per cent beef scraps, and 8 per cent coarse sand or grit. Mix with water to a dry, crumbly state and feed twice a day—morning and night.

Proper Feed Selection

for Raising Ducklings

The proper selection of the feed is extremely important to secure the rapid growth of the duck, and the ingredients of the feed must be such as will afford a well balanced and substantial ration. As a whole, it may be said that the rations used by the largest duck raisers are essentially the same, differing only in the quantities used in the mixing.

Investigations show the real value of the feed to be the same for producing rapid growth and early development. The duckling grows twice as rapidly and is a much heavier eater than the chick, and to produce the best results its feed must be such as will be easily assimilated. Various methods of feeding are recommended for raising ducks successfully.

Poultry Facts

Profitable turkey raising is largely a matter of proper management.

Hens need minerals both for body maintenance and shell formation.

The best time to market Leghorn cockerels is when they are broiler size, and the earlier you market them the more you get for them, though they bring a good price up to July 1.

It is probably best to use two geese with one gander. Sometimes three are mated but best results will be had from the closer mating.

In feeding geese it is always advisable to have plenty of water near at hand as they do not swallow well unless it is washed down.

Chilled chicks will often show signs of diarrhea. Keep the brooder stove regulated to furnish the right temperature and much trouble will be prevented.

Broilers pay good returns when they are marketed sufficiently early in the spring.

The cockerels from the early hatches may be satisfactorily marketed as broilers.

Fastening hardware cloth or baby chick netting under the low roosts, then slanting it down to the floor helps to teach chicks to roost when no more than a week old. The roosting habit will save many a chick from being smothered.

YOUR WASH LOOKS SO WHITE AND CLEAN TODAY!

AND I DIDN'T EVEN SCRUB IT! I'M USING RINSO NOW

Her washday story caused Aunt Sue to change soaps

"It's JUST too wonderful for words, Aunt Sue. I soak everything in creamy Rinsosuds—and out they come bright and gleaming! So white, I don't even bother about boiling.

"This way saves the clothes. My hands are spared, too. And Rinsos is economical. Cup for cup, it gives twice as much suds as those lightweight, puffed-up soaps."

Rich, safe suds

In tub or washing machine, Rinsos is all you need. No bar soaps, chips, powders, softeners—even in the hardest water. A little Rinsos gives a lot of rich, lasting suds.

The makers of 38 famous washing machines recommend this safe soap. Get the BIG package. Rinsos's thick suds are great for dishes, too.

Mythological Term

Ambrosia is the term used in mythology to describe the substance which, with nectar, formed the food and drink of the gods, and which made immortal those who partook of it. Usually, both in Homer and later writers, ambrosia is the food and nectar the drink, but some, as Sappho, used ambrosia as the name of the drink and nectar as the food.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Getting Service
A young New Yorker recently went to a famous mid-western hospital for a highly specialized operation, and has returned bearing word that, "out among the big things," he has been set down as a mental case. But it comes out even, for he thinks the nurses were a set of mental cases. He found, he said, that his $8 a day nurses would give him no service. If he asked for something, they replied, "You don't want that now." So he devised the scheme of holding a water pitcher high in the air and saying, "If you don't give me what I want I'll drop the pitcher." After the nurses had cleaned up two broken pitchers, his requests were granted, but the hospital officially set him down as a maniac.

Pet Clinic
Every Saturday afternoon, at a building in lower Seventh avenue, may be found a line-up of pet lovers at a free clinic for animals. Here, at the headquarters for the Humane society, come those who can't afford to pay for veterinary services, and those who can—for the reputation of the society's veterinarians is great. The other afternoon I dropped in to see Harry Moran, the superintendent, and to get a line on the sort of services dispensed.

Animals, Moran told me, have just about the same illnesses that human beings do. While I was there a woman arrived in her limousine, carrying a Sealyham terrier that was suffering from a case of nerves. And someone brought a billygoat that was suffering from—believe it or not—in digestion. One of the regular visitors is a cat with ingrowing toenails, brought in for a—tell me if I'm wrong—manicure.

One can safely make acquaintances in a small town. Everybody knows who everybody is.

New Game
Ultra smart New Yorkers who have tired of Guggenheim, anagrams and other childish pastimes have devised a new means of amusement. It is the game of larceny. If you are invited to the Smiths for dinner, you snoop about the apartment looking for Smith's wallet or Mrs. Smith's pocket-book. You try to steal $5. You win the game, of course, if you get the $5 without being caught. Then, if you're an ultra smart New Yorker, you return the money a week later, accompanying it with a light jest.

Minor Upheaval
One of the minor upheavals caused by the waistline-and-long-skirt epidemic has been in the window display business. Store proprietors have found that their wax mannequins are completely out of touch with the mode, with their lack of feminine curves. So many a sculptor's work of art has been confined to the junk heap, and the sculptors are working night and day turning out mannequins with fuller figures.

Nearly fifty species of the ducks, geese and swans of North America have been bred in captivity.

THE OLD LOVE-SEAT BIG ENOUGH FOR TWO

EVE MORGAN stood at the window in the south gable of the old gray house gazing out at the river where the pond-lilies were just coming to creamy, fragrant bloom. An old flat-bottomed boat lay bleaching in the sunshine among the lily-pads. It was a bit of genre that would have made an artist's eyes sparkle, but Eve did not even see it. She could only hear the voice of the auctioneer coming up from below. Mr. Bell had a perfect lingo calculated to make auctioned articles go off like hot cakes. But the things were not going off like hot cakes. Eve knew why. Folks had come from miles around out of sheer curiosity to see how the last descendant of the high-nosed Morgan tribe was taking the humiliations of adversity. She was taking it ill, but she kept out of sight, up here in this small, low-ceiling room, with the door closed.

Already she had torn her handkerchief into shreds for she would not cry. Tears did no good. Tears did not bring back one who was dead or produce money where there was none, or inspire love where there was only indifference. She had tested all that. It was hurting her cruelly to sell the sacred accumulation of three generations of Morgans, but what else could she do? She could not live in the house any longer because she could no longer meet the demands of the mortgage. She could not take the furniture with her where she was going—into a furnished room in town. And she had to have some money to pay her way through business school. The last of the Morgans was going to be a typist—if she knew enough for the job. The kind of education she had received was not very stimulative of mental energy.

"How much you offerin' for this table? . . . Fifty cents? Come, now, raise that to seventy-five—seventy-five I'm offered. Make it eighty—eighty, one; eighty, twice; eighty, three times! Sold to Miss Quilter."
"I wish I'd made a bonfire of the whole mess," Eve thought bitterly. "And I need money so. Oh!"
Voices on the stairs. Fat steps approaching. Voices. She knew them. Mrs. Peck and Mary Osgood snoring up here to find where she'd gone. They tried the door handle. "I bet a cooky she's in there," Mary whispered.
From below the auctioneer starting in again. "Here's this sofa. What say, Miss Hoyt? What's that you call it? A love-seat!" A burst of laughter which drowned the auctioneer's witticism. Eve put her hand to her slim white throat. The love-seat. Just big enough for two. Many was the time that she had sat there of an evening with Joe Russell, playing checkers, holding the board on their knees and laughing when all the men slipped off onto the carpet and they had to begin over again. Not that it mattered. They hated to beat each other. Eve had believed—

She was near the breaking point. Those women! They were coming back. The window was open. It was on the side of the house opposite from where the auction was going on. The boughs of the old apple tree scraped the siding. She had gone down that way before. Leaning out, she took firm hold of the friendly branch. She slipped down the tree trunk. Somebody was shaking the door handle. "Anybody in here?" Eve's feet touched the ground. She fled toward the river. Climbing into the boat, she pushed it off into deep water. She had no oars. She floated down with the current.

The noise of the auction grew fainter and fainter. The boat leaked. She had to put her feet up in order to keep them dry. It came to her that it wouldn't be such a bad idea to go drifting on—on until one sank in the water-logged boat. An evil thought, unworthy of the Morgans. She'd have to walk back. But by the time she got there the auction would be over.

The boat drifted on for half a mile, then nosed in under the old covered bridge. A spurt of dust in the distance marked the approach of a car. The sedan thundered into the bridge, came through, stopped, Eve, looking up from her boat, saw a man leaning from the open door of his car looking down at her. Their glances met, clung together, spellbound.

It was a meeting of chance. Joe Russell was not looking for Eve down there, and Eve was certainly not looking for Joe up there. Suddenly without speaking he started on. Where the bridge approach sloped to the road he turned and came bounding down through the meadow to the very point where Eve was trying frantically to make dry land without getting her feet wet. Joe stepped in and gave her a hand. They stood close, face to face.

"I wondered why you weren't attending your own auction," he said. "I stopped there as I came by." His lean face under sunny hair softened into an expression half tender, half mischievous. Turning to the car he opened the back door and hauled forth the love-seat. Placing the little sofa in a convenient position under the willow he invited Eve to sit down.

"Joe!" Trembling, sobbing, laughing, Eve sank down upon the love-seat. Joe stood gazing down at her.
"I couldn't let that go for a song," he said. "I had a job getting it away from Mrs. Quilter, though. Eve! Do you know if I just hadn't happened to get hold of the fact that you were holding that auction today this—?" He made a sweep of his hand toward the love-seat—"might have been riding up Berry brook this moment on Gus Quilter's wagon."
Eve shivered.

"I hadn't seen you in so long I thought you'd forgotten me," she said. "That was your fault, Eve. Remember you're a Morgan and I'm a Russell. Though I will say I'm struggling hard to get away from the traditions of my family—"

Eve's eyes turned from his to the sedan. His gaze made her heart beat wildly, which quickening, after the leaden sinking occasioned by quite different emotions, was terribly disturbing. It seemed as if her cheeks were on fire.

"What else you got in there?" she asked, tremulously, pointing to the sedan, pretending to be amused.

Joe hauled forth a chair, a table, a little framed picture of Eve herself, a blue pitcher and a strip of faded rag carpet. He laid the carpet at Eve's feet, placed the table before her, placed the chair beside the table, put the pitcher on the table and leaned the picture against the pitcher. He smiled shyly, wistfully.

"Sit down in that chair, Joe," Eve said.

"What's the matter with the love-seat? It used to hold both of us."

It was a tense moment. Silent as if a dream were stealing by. And then it all came true, the dream. It came blissfully, absurdly true there under the willow beside the river. She and Joe clinging together, kissing, vowing vows. Just man and girl. All thought of Russell and Morgan banished forever. In the old love-seat.

Japanese Flowers in National Capital Park

Japanese flowering cherries differ widely in fruiting habits, depending on the variety of tree and on the climate, says Pathfinder Magazine. So far as known, the double-flowered varieties do not produce fruit anywhere and only occasionally is fruit found on the semi-double forms. The single-flowered varieties, which grow wild in Japan, do bear fruit, but very sparingly except in certain regions.

For centuries the Japanese have looked upon these ornamental cherries with an admiration bordering on reverence, and their horticulturists have devoted much time to the development of new varieties. Although such trees were brought to the United States as early as 1863, and there are now many collections in this country, the best known and most popular collection is the large group in Potomac park, Washington, D. C.

The first Japanese flowering cherries planted on public ground in Washington were purchased in 1909 by Mrs. William Howard Taft. In 1910, upon the suggestion of the Japanese consul general at New York, the city of Washington received 2,000 trees as a gift from the city of Tokyo. This entire consignment, however, was ordered burned by the government because the trees were infested with insect pests and plant diseases. Tokyo then sent another consignment of more than 3,000 trees, which were planted in Potomac park.

Seek Uses for Waste Straw

The matter of finding some use for the great quantity of waste straw that is annually destroyed in the western part of Canada has been given some earnest attention by the Canadian government through its research bureau, the Canadian Pacific railway and innumerable industrial development boards and chambers of commerce. The first step has been recently accomplished by the establishment of a factory at Regina for the manufacture of metal reinforced building board made entirely from the waste straw of the farm. The volume of this material which has heretofore gone to waste in western Canada cannot be less than 10,000,000 tons every year and it is constantly increasing and it is hoped to make use of the Regina process for the manufacture of building blocks of the material.

Chinese Hunt Ideal Girl

Even the Chinese are hunting for the ideal girl. A youth of Shanghai recently wrote in a periodical: "The modern Chinese girl must embody all the ancient virtues and all the modern ideals. She must be smart, but not extravagant. She must be sociable, but not boisterous. She must understand politics, but not practice them. She must recognize a man's rights, but must not insist on her own. She must be at once a mate and a maid." He admits that he has been unable to find her.

"Passion Play" Salaries

There are no definite amounts paid to the actors who take part in the "Passion Play" at Oberammergau, Germany. Some years ago there was $100,000 to distribute among the villagers after the season closed. Of this sum the principal players received $375 each for 47 performances, which lasted from the middle of May to the end of September. In addition to playing, there had been months spent in rehearsal and a whole year of preparation.

Plans for New National Park

Ashland, Wis.—A group of islands, nestled like precious stones in a setting of natural charm on the edge of one of the most beautiful natural harbors in the world, may become the site of a new national park.

The islands, termed the Apostle group after a band of 12 rolicking brigands who called themselves the apostles and who preyed upon lone coureurs de bois on Chequamegon bay of Lake Superior in the early Seventeenth century, are as wild, rugged and beautiful as in the earliest days of Wisconsin's civilization.

Already the mecca of hundreds of wealthy Americans who maintain summer homes upon Madeline island, the largest of the group, the Apostles are to be made a national park if the efforts of Wisconsin citizens are successful in congress.

A bill introduced by Congressman H. H. Peavey, Washburn, Wis., to establish a park, is pending before congress now.

At La Pointe, the population center of the sparsely settled islands, the first known dwelling in Wisconsin for white men was erected about 1658. Two Frenchmen, Pierre Radisson and Medard Chouart de Crosseliers, built the log habitation and, according to the history of the region, "were delighted with the country and Radisson described its beauties with an eloquent pen."

"The country was so pleasant, so beautiful and fruitful that it grieved me to see that the world could not discover such enticing countries to live in," wrote the French explorer. The French remained in the region, colonizing and establishing trading posts, converting the Indians to Christianity and extending the boundaries of the French empire in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The islands remained a center of this work, the trading post at La Pointe, occupying a strategic position in the French fur trade.

EX-PRESIDENT'S BRIDE

Senorita Leonor Llorente, of Mexico City, whose engagement to Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, former president of Mexico, has been announced.

Later, when the British obtained the territory, Madeline and the other islands flourished as local centers of the vast Northwest fur trade. La Pointe at one time was the county seat of Ashland county, losing its identity shortly after the founding of Ashland. It still remains a center of fishing, trapping and has a population of several hundred summer residents.

Several of the islands are uninhabited but possess rare natural beauty in the form of sandstone caves and rock formations, cut into queer and fantastic shape by the waters of Lake Superior.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Not Self-Poisoning

It would seem to us strange that the poison given out by some insects and snakes can be contained in their bodies without harm to them, but this is explained by the fact that every reform of life has a different chemical make-up and what is poison to one is not to another. CHOOSING AN OCCUPATION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK, Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Jim is eighteen and very much in love—or at least and Ruth should be created for each other. If by some misstep he had failed to meet her, he is sure that he would have gone through life alone, disconsolate, or if otherwise mated, unhappily and unsuccessfully so. He does not realize that possibly twenty years from now he will have difficulty in recalling her name, and when it does come back to him the memory will not stir in him the slightest emotion. There are whole counties full of girls who would make Jim as happy as Ruth does if he could only meet them and who would make him as happy as the one he will finally marry will do.

There are thousands of young people who feel about their jobs as Jim does about his girl. They have special talents, they think; they are designed by nature to do a certain job and if they should fail to get into that particular position in life it would mean complete and hopeless ruin for them.

It is because this idea is so prevalent that we hear so much today concerning vocational guidance—so very much in fact that we might well believe that every man and woman is designed for some specific profession or occupation, and if by any unlucky chance he should fall into something else he will meet his professional Waterloo.

I meet young fellows every day who are so much concerned about what they are best fitted for in the way of a life work, so eager to find some branch of learning or education or some occupation that will be suitable and pleasing to them—not to say easy—that they do nothing well or with any particular interest. Fearful of not doing the right thing, they neglect what opportunity is before them.

Now the fact is, as I have watched young people come and go for the last forty years or more, the average normal person could do one sort of work about as well as another if he would only set himself to it. Lloyd was brought up on a farm and would have made a very good farmer if he had set himself to it. As it was he studied engineering when he went to college and was elected to an honorary engineering society in his senior year. He is not an engineer today but a banker who goes about the country telling people who know less than he does how to run their banks. I haven't the slightest doubt that if he had so chosen he could have done just as well in medicine or law as he is doing as a banker.

It seems to me it doesn't so much matter what occupation a man chooses as it does how he goes at what he chooses. (©, 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Burning Steamer, Seen From Airplane

This picture, made from an airplane, shows the burning freighter Thames on a reef 700 yards off Tod's point, near Stamford, Conn. The steamer was en route from New York to New London when she caught fire. Of the crew of twenty-six men only ten were rescued.

is admitted by the officials of the exchequer. It is done so purposely to avoid a flood of spurious claims. The present practice of the Bank of England is to wait until one claimant appears for a hitherto unclaimed stock, and then advertise for all other claimants to the same stock.

One reason that people forget such valuable property is that many stockholders go abroad and are never heard from again. Then there are aged or ailing persons, who forget that they possess stock, and there are the hundreds of persons, who when they die, neglect to leave any mention of their possessions.

A claim recently brought out the fact that an English woman, who had died at Marseilles at the age of ninety-eight, was entitled to $280,000 in stocks, and $100,000 in accumulated dividends, yet she had been constantly borrowing from her relatives.

The finance act of 1921 gives to the national exchequer all dividends unclaimed after five years, although the stocks remain in the holders' names for another ten years.

Animals Poor "Talkies"

Animals are hard to take in sound pictures, according to a statement of Dr. Raymond Ditmars. The lion's roar sounds feeble, camels are difficult and wolves refuse to howl into a microphone. The sound record of a rattlesnake is realistic, as is the cobra's hiss. A major difficulty is getting the animal to respond at all.

THE STORY

On a pleasure trip in eastern waters, Philip Amory, English World War veteran, now a trader on the island of Papua, New Guinea, plunges overboard to save the life of a musical comedy actress, known as "Gin-Sling." Amory becomes interested in Pia Laurier, member of a wealthy New South Wales family. He tells her of his knowledge of a wonderful gold field on the island. "Gin-Sling" tells him Pia is engaged to Sir Richard Fanshew. His holiday ended, Amory arrives back at Daru. He meets an Englishman, Spicer, there on development business for a syndicate of which Fanshew is head. Fanshew's name recalls to Amory a long-forgotten incident in which he witnessed the escape of Fanshew from a leper colony. He tells his friend Spicer about it and decides to inform Laurier. He goes to Thursday Island to send the message. Amory hears Fanshew dictate a message which indicates that the secret of the gold field is known. Amory meets with an accident that lays him up for three weeks. Recovered, he sails alone for Port Moresby. A storm compels him to put in at Thursday Island where he finds Fanshew. Amory resumes his voyage to Port Moresby. Fanshew follows in a motor boat and attempts to run him down. Amory shoots and kills Fanshew.

From where I was camped, the whole world seemed to fall away in one huge wave, upon whose crest the boys and I precariously hung. Four days we had toiled to reach this place, four days of hardest work, cutting our road foot by foot, through forest that was knitted and tangled together. We were pitted with leech bites, scorched by mosquitoes. I hadn't had enough dinner, and wasn't likely to, for months; comfort was a dream, and danger daily food.

And I was happy. In the way of one who has long thirsted for a draught of the home airs about his native town, and, after long travel, long difficulty, has won back to it at last. I wish I could find words to tell the completeness of that conviction; the certainty—based on no producible facts—that I was in my proper place and doing what I ought to do—here, four days inland from the midwaters of the Romilly river, away from all the world, white men and all their works; here, on the spine of the Dreadnought ranges, verging—at last, at last!—on the unknown.

From today, I knew, the worst of the work began. I scanned the world below, and decided that I had done well. Grace, the dead miner, hadn't left the Romilly till he came right to the head of the navigable part. I, acting on what was more a guess than a conviction, had branched off from the river halfway up. Nobody knew just what lay a day or two beyond my present camp, but from what I could see and infer, I thought I might succeed in cutting off weeks of work, by going on just as I was going. I might go a longer way round than Grace had gone, but I was likely to get there sooner. So I sat, and smoked, and felt myself at peace. And the sun went down upon my day.

I should have slept well that night. I did not. I lay wakeful, on my grid of sticks, saw, through the open triangle of the tent-fly, the Cross swing round to the movement of the earth about the sun.

"Sleep," I told myself. "You must sleep, tomorrow's a hard day." But there seemed to be springs in my eyelids, holding them up; the muscles of my limbs were stiff and unrelaxed. I could not sleep.

Toward morning, when I should have been waking, I dropped into confused, tired sleep. The first spears of sunrise woke me like a stab; it is not at sunrise, but before, that the explorer should leave his none-too-downy bed. With a curse at my own laziness, I pulled on boots, and was dressed. Already the carriers had their fire going; they sat round it, blanket-robed, watching the pot of rice cook over the flames. I looked at them, almost through them; felt, as one feels in such places, that they, the brown men of the country, made scarce a break in the glorious, the intoxicating sense of solitude that a white man knows, on the verge of untroubled lands. Over that nearest ridge, a couple of days' march on, there was no man knew what; but when I topped the mountain, I should know. And I said, in my rashness—"This is good; I ask no more of life."

In the same moment, I turned, looked carelessly down the long cutting in the forest that we had made the day before, and saw a figure seated on a log.

The current of my blood seemed to stop, as the flow of the Romilly river stops, for an instant, when the Gulf bore comes sweeping in, and holds it back. Then, as the bore flies up the river, driving all before it, anger, and sick dismay invaded my soul. There was something else, too—gratified vanity, and a kind of anger love, perhaps but they were drowned beneath the uprushing tide. I took ten steps to the place where Jinny Treacher was sitting, and I said to her, "G—d, Jinny, what made you do this?"

She looked up at me. I could see now, in the growing daylight, how her beauty was wrecked; how her eyes had sunk back into her head, and her copper hair lost its shine; how she had worn herself to a skeleton, and let her clothes fall into rags. There were sores on her arms and neck—leech bite sores, blue marks of mosquito bites, deep scratches made by lawyer thorn. Her shoes were bandaged onto her feet. Her hat was a tangle of torn straw.

Anger had possession of me, and yet—though I knew that she had practically wrecked my expedition—I could not choose but pity the bright thing, brittle as a butterfly, who had waged her light self against the terrific powers of the unknown; who, before the threshold was well crossed, lay beaten. Nothing but the slow pace enforced on me by the cutting of a track had kept her with me so far. She must have known this; guessed that her only chance of life was to come forward and show herself, fling herself on my mercy, before it was too late. She had obtained a canoe (as I afterward learned) from the village at Romilly mouth, and persuaded a small crew to accompany her. Living and sleeping on board, she was able to keep her boys with her until she landed at the place where I had debarked a few hours earlier. There they deserted, as carriers will, and she had had no food save what she could carry herself, no shelter save the frost, during the four days of my journey towards Dreadnought range. Luckily for her, it was impossible to lose the way, even when she fell behind, since the track we were cutting made our course plain as a macadamized road. I think she went in constant terror; terror of natives, terror of wild beasts, even terror of me; for she must have guessed, all too soon, that her plan of following me right through was madness, and that she would be forced into showing herself.

But I do not think she knew, even suspected, that her coming stamped the expedition into dust. She thought she had merely to placate me, use her woman's tricks, in order to find refuge in my party. She didn't doubt her ability—Jinny had not had much reason to doubt her chance of success. In this or any other test where the weapons of her sex were pitted against man's determination.

But it was not man's determination that barred her now. It was the immense, impersonal might of the untamed wilderness, of Papua. Against this, the finest men of the Nineteenth century, the pick of the Twentieth, had fought, struggled, and—most often—lost, paying the loss with their lives. Who was the little dancer, to break lance in such an army?

She did not know. She stood up, and came to me, with the red of sunrise on her red-gold hair, smoothing her torn shirt, and pulling down her tattered breeches, calling to work the smile that had gained a drop of new sweetness from every man who fell victim to it, until now it was a very honey flower wherein the wandering, kissing bee might drown. She knew her work, this Jinny. She made me, in a minute, forget her rags, her stains, her battered weary look, and see her but as I had known her months, weeks ago, on the liner and in Thursday Island. Yet, at the same time, I was angry, and sorry—for her and for myself.

"Jinny, Jinny," I said to her, and again "Jinny, Jinny!" It seemed as if I could find no other words.

But Jinny was only too eager to talk.

"My oath, Phil," she declared, catching me by the loose folds of my shirt, as if she feared, that somehow, I might vanish—"My oath! I thought it was all in with me, I did, straight. Last night I couldn't see a sign of your fire anywhere, same as I'd seen it other nights, and I fair gave myself up for dead. And so this morning, I

"Passion Play" Life of Small Bavarian Village

The Passion play, a dramatization of the sufferings in the life of Christ, takes place in the little village of Oberammergau, nestling in the Bavarian Alps. And this play has been going on every ten years since the plague of 1633. During that year the citizens of Oberammergau vowed that they would enact the piece every ten years as a thanksgiving offering for having been delivered of the plague.

The original text and arrangements were probably made by the monks of Ettal. The music was composed by Rochus Dedler, schoolmaster of the parish in 1814. The production is given in the open air and stands are constructed to accommodate 5,000 spectators. Seven hundred actors are employed in the play, all native villagers. The proceeds go for the public good after the expenses have been defrayed and a small remuneration made to each actor.

The play is a stupendous manifestation of religious worship and the moral character of each actor is considered as well as his histrionic ability. The principal parts are hereditary. The whole village lives for this production. The inhabitants spend their time at fashioning crucifixes, rosaries and images of the saints to sell to the tourists who flow through their quiet little city year by year.

Golf, Earth, Strength

The ancient Greek, you remember, gained new strength every time he hit the earth. It has that effect on a golfer's language, too.—San Francisco Chronicle.

started off just as soon as I could see me feet, and I said to myself, 'Jinny, my girl, if you don't find him quick, the robins or whatever-it-is will come and cover you with leaves today.' So I hurried and hurried, and when I come on you just like that, it took me queerly, and I had to sit down, because of course I was afraid that you'd be angry—Phil, you're not angry with little Jin, are you? Phil, I just had to come. I don't mind anything, now I've found you, and I know I'm goin' with you."

"Jinny, my dear," I said—and I did not think my black-haired Dian herself would grudge the kiss that went with the words—"Jinny, tell me—for I wanted to put off the bad moment as long as possible—"tell me, have you had any breakfast?"

"No, nor dinner last night," she said. "I hadn't anything left."

"Then you must breakfast at once," I called a carrier, spoke to him and set him to make tea and bring meat and biscuits.

She had eaten her meat and biscuits; she had thirstily finished her pannikin of tea. Life was creeping back into her tired face, and with it something that I knew my next few words must kill—hope.

"I thought you'd be angry," she said, setting the pannikin down upon the ground. I said nothing. I took her scarred, burned hand, and began smoothing it gently in mine. Angry? She little knew. The very rage of her had been in my heart, when first I looked down the clearing, saw her sitting there, knew what it meant to me, and knew in the same moment, that she could never, if she lived to be a hundred, understand what she had done. How could one be angry?

"Leave go of my hand," she said suddenly. "There's something you aren't telling me, Phil. What is it?"

"Jinny," I said, "there are a great many things you haven't told me, and I propose to know them before very long; but there's plenty of time for all that. Plenty of time," I repeated, "for anything either of us wants to tell the other. On the way."

"Yes," she said. "The way to the place they call Tatatafa."

"The way to the mouth of the river, I mean," said I.

"You're goin' back again?" cried Jinny.

"We're going back."

"Because of me?"

"Because I find it necessary to go."

"Phil, I'd have drowned myself rather than—if I'd known, Phil—don't do it, old boy. Let's go on and chance it. I'm not afraid of anything, I'll go till I drop dead. Let me, Phil!"

She was almost crying; she held my sleeve tightly, and shook me, in her eagerness.

"Jinny," I said, "we're up against hard facts. You'd drop dead, as you call it, before noon today. You—"

"I done well up to this, anyhow. I kept with you, Phil!"

"You kept with me because the work hadn't begun. If you had been an hour—five minutes—later in finding me, Jinny, the meat-ants would have been picking your bones tomorrow, maybe before you were dead. If you came on with us now, we might be able to help you along—"

"Yes?" Her eyes glowed with hope.

"For a day or so—carrying you in a litter where we could, and slinging you up precipices with bushrope like a tied pig. . . . That, Jinny, would cut our day's work down by a third, maybe a half. We should get a little way and turn back. I prefer to turn back now. Don't cry, Gin-Sling; you never cry, you know. What's that war-cry of yours—'Drink hearty, you'll soon be dead? Let's hear it again.'" I clapped her on the back, assuming a gaiety I was very far from feeling.

One of the swift changes typical of her sad, merry kind, seized hold on her without warning. She flashed into sudden fury.

"For twopence," she said. "I'd kill him—swine!"

"Who's the swine?" I asked. But she looked at me sideways, and made no reply. I saw she was shaking with rage.

Around Orchard

BEES MAKE MONEY FOR ORCHARDIST

In Gathering Honey They Increase Fruit Yield.

Without making a nickel's worth of honey, bees can earn astonishingly large profits for their owner, if the owner is also an orchardist. This was demonstrated during the past year, by two demonstrations in orchard pollenization by bees, carried on under the supervision of Virgil N. Argo, extension specialist in beekeeping for the Ohio State university.

One of the demonstrations was made in the W. W. Farnsworth orchard at Waterville. The owner rented 104 colonies of bees and established them in the orchard at the rate of one colony to each acre of bearing trees. Pollenization by the bees was held responsible for increasing the yield of a four-acre plot of self-sterile damson plums by 200 bushels over its best previous yield, in spite of a poor season. The extra 200 bushels of plums sold at $2 a bushel.

The Ohio Orchard company at Milford Center rented 20 colonies of bees which were placed in two blocks of Minkler apple trees, notoriously "poor setting." A check was obtained by placing the bees at one end of a very long, narrow strip of the trees. The results showed that 47 trees accessible to the bees yielded a total of 261.5 bushels of apples, or 5.56 bushels to the tree, while 35 trees which the bees did not reach, produced only 125.5 bushels or 3.61 bushels to the tree.

In both orchards bouquets of the other varieties of the fruit from which pollen was to be taken were placed near the hives. The bees distributed pollen from these bouquets as they worked on the growing trees. Research into the possibilities of the system is to be carried further this year.

Lap Graft Is Simplest Form of Orchard Work

The lap graft is perhaps the simplest form of this sort of work. The sprouts used are generally a little smaller than a lead pencil, and scions about the same size must be found. Both scion and stock must be cut at a long slant, and then put together in such a way that the inner bark of both will coincide in at least some places so that sap may flow from the stock to the scion.

After the stock and scion are shaved to fit they are put together and wool yarn wound around, after which a suitable piece of grafting wax is wrapped around the whole thing. During the season when it is found for sure that growth has started vigorously the wool yarn may be cut with a sharp knife so that it will not unduly bind the growing wood. This of course should be done in the middle or latter part of the year. This is the common lap graft but some people cut an additional tongue in both parts of the stock and scion, thinking it makes a firmer hold. This may be done, but the other method mentioned is adequate if properly done.

Immature Sweet Clover Likely to Cause Bloat

Alfalfa and sweet clover, when in full bloom, are less likely to cause bloating than the immature clover where wet with dew or rain. Keep cows off the pasture until dew and rain have dried. Allow free access to salt and slaked lime. Feed cows before turning them into the pasture. When sweet clover is the exclusive roughage ration and has been fed for some time it may cause death from bleeding. The hemorrhages occur in large swellings about the rump or elsewhere in the body or internally. Such poisoning most commonly occurs when the sweet clover is moldy, having been killed by frost or withered in autumn, or when old sweet clover is excessively fed. Dehorning or castration is likely to be followed by fatal bleeding when such sweet clover has been the exclusive roughage feed of cattle.

European Gooseberries Quite Vigorous Growers

There are two groups of gooseberries; the European and the American types. The European varieties are vigorous growers and produce large attractive berries. They are no better in quality than the American varieties and are much inferior in yield. Consequently, they are not recommended for commercial culture though they may have a place in the home garden where something a little out of the ordinary is desired. Columbus is one of the most satisfactory European varieties. Oregon Champion is a cross between the European and American types that has made many friends.

Dehorn Peach Trees

It is seldom desirable to dehorn peach trees. It is usually much better to give annual pruning of the right amount and keep the trees in a desirable fruitful condition from year to year by such pruning. Dehorning causes a profusion of rank sprout growths below the cuts. Many of these branches cannot be used; some break off and most of them grow too rapidly to be easily trained. The crop also suffers for two years or more following dehorning.

Bolt the Separator

The separator should be placed level and firmly bolted to a strong foundation, to prevent vibration of the machine. It should run smoothly, to prevent loss of butterfat, in the skim milk as well as excessive wear of the machine. To prevent undue strain and wear, the separator should be started at low speed and gradually raised to full speed. The bowl should be filled with warm water when started, to take out dust and odors and keep the milk sweet.

The DAIRY

LIBERAL FEEDING OF HEIFERS BEST

Specialist Offers Suggestions to Meet Conditions.

Feed a liberal amount of feed to the yearling heifer and watch her grow.

That is the recommendation made by J. C. Nisbet, extension dairyman, Kansas State Agricultural college, to all dairymen.

"By lack of sufficient and the right kind of feed the yearling heifer will never develop the size she should and will mature much later than the well-fed heifer," says this dairy specialist. He offers four ration formulas to increase the returns from the yearling heifer.

First ration: Feed all the alfalfa hay she will eat. Under ten months—feed two to three pounds of a mixture of corn chop, oats, bran, and oil meal and 12 to 20 pounds of silage per day. Over ten months—feed small amounts of corn chop. Increase the silage to 20 to 30 pounds daily.

Second ration: To be fed where alfalfa hay is not available but silage is plentiful. Feed all the roughage she will eat. In addition feed 15 to 30 pounds of silage per day. The heifer will need three to five pounds of grain mixture of corn, oats, and oil meal in which the oil meal makes up at least one-half of the grain ration.

Third ration: Where alfalfa hay is available but there is no silage: Feed the heifer all the alfalfa hay she will eat and three to five pounds a day of a mixture of equal parts oats, corn, bran, and oil meal.

Fourth ration: Where neither alfalfa hay nor silage is available: Purchase alfalfa to form one-half to one-third of the total roughage consumed daily. Feed grain as in ration three.

Don't Stop Grain Feed During Pasture Season

Early pasture for the dairy cow is not going to make the owner any money if he assumes that washy grass will entirely take the place of grain feeding. In that case the pasture results in a heavy strain on her. She will soon be in poor condition, falling off in her milk flow, and illy prepared for the later test of hot weather, flies and short pasture.

It is much better to keep up the grain feeding at a fair profit now, in order to insure a steady milk flow throughout the summer, and to keep the cows in good physical condition.

The correct ration for cows on pasture, according to the Missouri experiment station is: 300 to 400 pounds of ground corn, 200 pounds of ground oats or bran, 100 pounds cottonseed meal, a good mineral mixture. The minerals will furnish lime and phosphate to make milk, keep the cow in condition, and help to develop the calf she is carrying. It makes the cow more resistant to abortion and possibly also more resistant to flies.

Immature Sweet Clover Likely to Cause Bloat

Alfalfa and sweet clover, when in full bloom, are less likely to cause bloating than the immature clover where wet with dew or rain. Keep cows off the pasture until dew and rain have dried. Allow free access to salt and slaked lime. Feed cows before turning them into the pasture. When sweet clover is the exclusive roughage ration and has been fed for some time it may cause death from bleeding. The hemorrhages occur in large swellings about the rump or elsewhere in the body or internally. Such poisoning most commonly occurs when the sweet clover is moldy, having been killed by frost or withered in autumn, or when old sweet clover is excessively fed. Dehorning or castration is likely to be followed by fatal bleeding when such sweet clover has been the exclusive roughage feed of cattle.

Weedy Pastures Injure High Quality of Milk

Ridiculous is not the word to describe the quality of milk from cows running on weedy pasture fields, observes the Farm Journal. Ragweed, pigweed and goldenrod cause milk that is way off when it comes to flavor, to say nothing of reduced flow at this time of year.

But cows don't eat these weeds alone if you will feed plenty of good roughage, plus grain and supplements, or a ready-mixed dairy feed.

Sheep for weed killing and for wool, dairy cows for milk—that's the best dairy program.

Bolt the Separator

The separator should be placed level and firmly bolted to a strong foundation, to prevent vibration of the machine. It should run smoothly, to prevent loss of butterfat, in the skim milk as well as excessive wear of the machine. To prevent undue strain and wear, the separator should be started at low speed and gradually raised to full speed. The bowl should be filled with warm water when started, to take out dust and odors and keep the milk sweet.

Here's Additional Proof That Silence Is Golden

Elihu Root said in an after-dinner speech in New York on his return from Geneva:

"Silence is golden in diplomacy. It is golden everywhere."

"Once upon a time a corpse in a bathing suit was fished out of the sea and sent to an undertaker's. A rich young man called the next day and identified the corpse as his father. The young man was giving orders to the undertaker for the most expensive burial in the establishment's program when the mouth of the corpse fell open, and a row of false teeth dropped out.

"That's not father," said the young man, and he hurried away.

"The undertaker had been putting the corpse into a mahogany coffin with gold trimmings, but now he put it back on its stone slab again.

"'Idiot!' he said to it. 'If you'd kept your mouth shut you'd have had an A-1 funeral.'"

Brazilian City's Elevator

Bahia, in northern Brazil, has an elevator tower containing two elevators to bring people from the plateau to the level of the bay. The city is built on two levels, and each elevator has a capacity of 27 passengers and speed of 700 feet a minute, which means that nearly 4,000 passengers an hour can be carried the distance of 135 feet which separates the two parts of the city.

What this Doctor did for Humanity

As a young man the late Dr. R. V. Pierce, practiced medicine in Pennsylvania and was known far and near for his great success in alleviating disease. Finally he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., and set up in ready-to-use form, his GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY, the well known tonic for the blood. This strength builder is made from a formula which Dr. Pierce found most effective when in private practice.

It aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood—clears away pimples and annoying eruptions and tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear.

Stars and Planets

The stars are fixed in space, while the planets travel. The difference is best seen by looking on the planets as other earths, and the stars as other suns.

AMERICAN BOROUGHS

Certain incorporated villages below the rank of cities in four states are known as boroughs. The states are Connecticut, New Jersey, Minnesota and Pennsylvania. A further extension of the term "borough" was made by the New York legislature in 1897 in reference to the city of greater New York, which has the five boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens, Bronx and Richmond.

Nation's Infancy

In 1775 the estimated population of the American colonies was 2,600,000. The population of the principal colonies was: Massachusetts, 335,000; Pennsylvania, 800,000; New York, 190,000; North Carolina, more than 265,000, and Virginia, 450,000.

Would you like to try this doctor's laxative free of charge?

Every family has occasional need of a laxative, but it should be a family laxative. One that can't form a habit, but can be taken as often as needed. When breath is bad or tongue coated. Or appetite fails. Only a doctor knows the right ingredients. Dr. Caldwell discovered the correct combination years ago. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin combines harmless herbs and pure senna. It starts muscular action and soon corrects constipation. Gently, but surely, it relieves a bilious or sluggish condition. It is mild. Delicious. Effective. All druggists keep this famous prescription ready, in big bottles. Or write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle postpaid.

"When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I could hardly do my housework. I was so nervous and weak from Change of Life that I had to lie down very often. I heard about the Vegetable Compound through a pamphlet which was left at my door. I am doing all the housework for a family of four and it keeps me on my feet. I have taken six bottles and I have gained strength and flesh."—Minnie E. Hicks.

Taft School Holds Picnic

By Evelyn Papple

The Taft school closed their school for this term May 14. Parents, friends, relatives and pupils participated in a very successful picnic. In spite of the rainy weather a large crowd was present. A delicious lunch was served at twelve o'clock. The ice cream and lemons were furnished by the Girls Sewing Club.

Miss Wixon and Mr. Nettrumen, the Michigan State club leaders, arrived shortly after dinner to judge the boys and girls club work for this year.

The girls sewing was exhibited upstairs. The sewing this year represented five different years. The prize winners are: First prize, first year work, Gola Charters; first prize, second year work, Edith Papple; first prize, third year work, Anna Adam; first prize, fourth year work, Evelyn Papple; first prize, fifth year work, Genevieve Anderson.

The boys had only four years' work in their club. First prize for first year work was won by Neuman Bamberger; first prize, second year work, Rupert Charters; first prize, third year work, Norman Sibley; fourth year work, Carlton Robinson.

After the exhibit the boys went to the ball diamond for a ball game but the weather was so rainy that the game was postponed.

Out of town guests who attended the picnic were: Mrs. Homestead of East Tawas; Mrs. Westervelt of Rose City; Mrs. Geo. Bamberger and Miss Georgena Manning of National City.

He Bought Stock--- And He Lost!

This actually happened right here in our community. It is typical of many other such cases. A Silver-tongued salesman came into Tawas City with a stock proposition. He told a very alluring story about possible profits and it sounded so good that at least one of our citizens purchased. The proposition proved to be absolutely worthless as an investment.

This bank hasn't a word of criticism.

That man who bought the stock did just what many others have done. The point we want to make is simply this: Our business judgment may be no better than yours—possibly not as good—but we are in a position to find out all about these stock investments and give you the facts.
