CHAUTAQUA 1930 PROGRAM IS ANNOUNCED

First Night—"Tea For Three," a delightful comedy in three acts, by Roi Cooper Meigrue, will be presented on the opening night of the Chautauqua. This play with its successful runs in New York, Chicago, and other centers, has proven a pleasing variation for those who enjoy dramatic productions. Because of its freshness, its humor, and its common sense, it has proven a great favorite.

Second Day—The International Concert and Opera Company will provide the music on this day. In the afternoon the company will offer a half hour of music with the old masters, featuring the well known and greatly loved masterpieces of the world's greatest composers. Following this musical program and in contrast to it, American music will be discussed and illustrated by Alexius Baas.

In the evening the company and Mr. Baas will offer a program in two parts, the first part being a musical review, featuring the song hits of recent successful Broadway musical productions. The second part of the program will be Goumou's great opera "Faust," appropriately costumed and staged, employing special lighting effects and three changes in scenery.

Third Day—The afternoon program will be offered by the Dixie Merry-makers, a company of splendid instrumentalists using a great variety of instruments. Miss Marjorie Hall, playing the xylophone, piano-accordion, banjo, flute and piano, and Miss Alice Penn, playing violin, xylophone and piano, have for several years had their own high class musical act on the Loew Vaudeville Circuit.

The Dixie Merry-makers will furnish a musical prelude to the evening program. Following the prelude, Hal P. Denton, nationally known editor and Washington correspondent, will speak on the subject, "Behind the Scenes at the National Capitol." Mr. Denton has known personally every president of the United States from McKinley to Hoover, as well as practically every other great personage who has been in Washington during the past thirty years.

Fourth Day—The Olive Kackley Players bring to the cities on the Chautauqua circuit this year two great plays. In the afternoon they will offer the three act comedy, "Back Home and How," by Fred Ballard, author of the Harvard prize play, "Believe Me Xantippe," and other well known productions.

In the evening the Kackley Players will present what many competent critics have termed the greatest play of the last decade, "The Enemy," by Channing Pollock, who was the author also of "The Fool," another great problem play. "The Enemy" is not a war play. It is a great love story, and the story of a great love. There are no shots, shells or trenches—the action takes place in a home in Vienna.

"STRICTLY UNCONVENTIONAL" BRILLIANT MARRIAGE SATIRE

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announces the opening Sunday and Monday at the Theatre of "Strictly Unconventional," all-talking adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham's matrimonial satire, "The Circle."

The picture is rated as one of the few all-star stories ever written. It has six parts, all of them of exactly equal value, and it abounds in clever lines.

In fact, as the all-star vehicle of John Drew and Mrs. Leslie Carter a few years ago, it scored one of the most conspicuous successes the American stage has known. Its sharp, keen wit, and its laughable situations broke house records all over the United States and Canada.

Direction of this satire was put in the hands of David Burton, considered one of the most competent artists to come from the stage to talking pictures. Burton attained prominence on the stage as director of "The Swan," "The Royal Family," "Serena Blandish" and "The Racket."

He chose for his cast a group of well known players. Lewis Stone steps from "Their Own Desire" into "Strictly Unconventional."

BETTER SIRE TRUCK GOES TO HALE, JUNE 28

A better sire truck carrying four pure bred registered bulls of the beef type—Shorthorn, Aberdeen-Angus, Hereford and Shorthorn-milking, also a steer typical of what may be expected from a well bred bull and a common cow will be on exhibit at Hale Saturday morning, June 28. The truck is being sent out by the Michigan State College with the co-operation of the Northeastern Michigan Development Bureau.

Heretofore, dairy type animals have been sent out in the better sire campaigns, but there has been a demand from northern Michigan for a beef type of animal.

D. H. LaVoi, extension specialist in animal husbandry, and L. L. Drake, district extension agent, will be with the truck, giving lectures on the beef situation and outlook for the future. Information on profitable practices, breed characteristics and breed differences will also be given. A guessing contest on the weights of the animals exhibited will be held, with suitable prizes to the winners donated by the businessmen of Hale.

The college men will have information on location and prices of bulls for sale. Assistance in making selections will be given if desired.

KELLY STOCK CO. COMING TO EAST TAWAS MONDAY

About this time of the year residents of Iosco county look forward to a visit from the Kelly players. This organization, headed by Bill Kelly, will open a six-day engagement in East Tawas commencing Monday, June 23, in the big tent. Year after year Mr. Kelly has presented to play goers of Michigan a really surprising repertoire of the latest New York plays.

This season promises to eclipse all previous visits. Mr. Kelly spent the entire winter months in New York and Chicago, reviewing plays and selecting performers for his summer season in Michigan. His efforts have been well rewarded for he has gathered together a coterie of artists and a repertoire of the best stage productions. No doubt, many of the play-goers of Tawas and Iosco county who are familiar with the names of the latest stage successes will recognize some of the titles in the lineup of plays.

RECENTLY there were unveiled in the Hall of Fame on the campus of New York university, busts of nine great Americans. It is a remarkable fact that of these nine immortals who have thus taken their places in this American Valhalla, seven were natives of the same state and five of them were graduates of the same university. Insofar as Massachusetts this year is celebrating its tercentenary and honoring the men who helped add to her renown as a colony and a state, the ceremony at the New York institution might properly be regarded as a part of the tercentenary celebration. For those seven men all sprang from the soil of the Old Bay state and five of them were graduated from Harvard!

The nine who were thus honored in this year's ceremony included two statesmen, two historians, an author, a poet, an educator, an inventor and a jurist. Their names and their records of achievement are as follows:

John Quincy Adams was born in Braintree, Mass., July 11, 1767. After graduation from Harvard he practiced law in Massachusetts and first entered public life in 1794 when President Washington appointed him minister to Holland and two years later minister to Portugal. In 1797 he became minister to Prussia, and at the end of his career in that post returned to Massachusetts where he was elected to the state senate in 1802. The next year he was elected to the United States senate. President Madison appointed him minister to Russia in 1809 and he played an important part in arranging the treaty of peace which ended the War of 1812 between Great Britain and the United States. Adams was next appointed minister to England, and after an absence of eight years abroad he was called back to America to serve as secretary of state under President Monroe.

Adams' principal achievement as secretary of state was the treaty with Spain, whereby Florida was ceded to the United States for $5,000,000. In the campaign of 1824 he was elected President over Andrew Jackson when the election was thrown into the house of representatives, but in the election of 1828 Jackson was the victor. However, the ex-President did not long remain in private life. In 1831 he was elected to congress where he remained, representing the same district of Massachusetts, until his death in Washington February 23, 1845.

George Bancroft, born in Worcester, Mass., October 3, 1800, was also a Harvard graduate. After studying abroad he selected history as his special branch and soon became widely known, both in Europe and America as a historian and teacher. The first volume of his greatest work, "History of the United States," was published in 1834. When James K. Polk became President he appointed Bancroft secretary of the navy and his greatest achievement in this position was to win the title of "founder of the United States Naval academy" by establishing the training school for our future sea captains at Annapolis, Md. Bancroft died in Washington, January 17, 1891.

James Fenimore Cooper, born in Burlington, N. J., September 15, 1759, was the author who immortalized the American Indian in his "Leatherstocking Tales," and whose sea stories revolutionized the literature of the sea.

One day while reading an English novel he made a remark which has become a classic of would-be authors: "I believe I could write a better story myself." Encouraged by his wife, he attempted it, and in 1820 his first novel "Precaution" was published anonymously. It attracted some attention in England and it encouraged him to continue his writing. The result was "The Spy," published a year later, and "during the winter of 1821-22 the American public awoke to the fact that it possessed a novelist of its own." Cooper died in Cooperstown, N. Y., September 14, 1851.

One phrase, "Give me liberty or give me death!" is synonymous for the name of Patrick Henry, "the Orator of the Revolution." Born at Studley, Va., May 29, 1736, the future advocate of freedom was an indolent pupil in school and a failure in business. But when he took up the study of law he found himself and soon became known as one of the most brilliant lawyers in a state noted for its legal luminaries. By 1763 he had acquired renown as an orator and this was increased in the famous "Parson's Case" when he denied the right of the British king to abrogate acts of the colonial legislature.

Henry was an influential member of the Continental congress from 1774 to 1776 and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. In 1776 he was chosen governor of Virginia and served until 1779. He sat in the legislature from 1780 to 1784, again served as governor from 1784 to 1786, and once more, from 1786 to 1790, was a member of the state assembly. He declined to serve in the Constitutional convention and opposed the ratification of the Constitution. Again in 1799 he ran for the legislature and was elected but died in Charlotte county, June 6, 1799, before he could take office.

Elias Howe, inventor of the sewing machine, was another Bay State product, having been born in Spencer, Mass., in 1819. In 1843-45 he experimented with a lock-stitch sewing machine and finally perfected it, securing a patent in 1846. For years he vainly sought recognition of his invention, both in this country and in England, where he sold his rights in 1847 for 50 pounds sterling. While absent abroad his patent was infringed upon by others, but eventually the courts decided in Howe's favor, and after years of wretched poverty Howe suddenly found himself wealthy. In 1863 he erected a large sewing machine factory at Bridgeport, Conn., where he died in 1867.

James Russell Lowell, born in Cambridge, Mass., on February 22, 1819, was one of the famous groups of writers which Massachusetts gave to the nation during the middle half of the Nineteenth century, and of them all Lowell was undoubtedly the most versatile. Having been graduated from Harvard in 1838 he immediately entered the Harvard law school, took his degree in 1840 and began to practice.

After several years abroad Lowell returned to become a teacher in Harvard and to enter upon an epoch in his life as a scholar and critic. He became the first editor of the newly established Atlantic Monthly in 1857, resigning in 1861 to become associated with the North American Review in 1864. He resigned that position in 1872 and again went abroad, where the famous English colleges of Oxford and Cambridge conferred degrees upon him. In 1877 he was named United States minister to Spain and in 1880 was transferred to England, returning to America in 1885. On August 12, 1891, he died in Cambridge.

Horace Mann, born in Franklin, Mass., May 4, 1796, after his graduation from Brown university became a teacher, and then a lawyer. He was a member of the Massachusetts legislature from 1827 to 1837, and from 1837 to 1843 served as secretary of the Massachusetts board of education.

Mann visited Europe in 1843 and brought back with him reports on foreign school systems which attracted wide attention. Due to his efforts the school system of Massachusetts was entirely reorganized and became a model for many other states. From 1848 to 1853 Mann served as a member of congress. After his term was over he became president of Antioch college in Ohio and served there until his death in 1859. History has preserved his fame as the founder of the normal school system in this country and "father" of the American public school system.

John Lothrop Motley won his fame as a historian of a European country. He was born in Dorchester, Mass., April 15, 1814, and was graduated from Harvard in 1831. He then went to Germany to study, and upon his return to this country studied law, although literature was more to his taste. He published an American novel in 1839, but it attracted little attention. After a short career at the American legation in Russia he returned to America again to serve a term in the Massachusetts legislature.

After ten years of hard labor, during which he returned to Europe and found it necessary to rewrite much of that which he had already written, he published his "History of the Dutch Republic" in 1856 and was immediately acclaimed both in America and abroad. Along with these literary honors came a call to public service, and from 1861 to 1867 he served as American minister to Austria, and from 1869 to 1870 to Great Britain. Motley died in Dorchester, England, May 29, 1877.

A statesman, a writer, an educator and inventor and two historians—such was the contribution of Massachusetts to the 1930 Hall of Fame ceremonies. To make it complete, she also provided a great jurist—Joseph Story. He was born at Marblehead, Mass., in 1779. Harvard graduated him in 1798 and Salem saw him begin practice as a lawyer in 1801.

He was elected to congress in 1808 and in 1811 became speaker of the house. Soon afterwards President Madison appointed him associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and during his long career of 34 years on that high tribunal he assisted in the development of American constitutional law and in fixing the status of the American admiralty, patent and equity jurisprudence. He died in Cambridge in 1845.

STELLA NEEDED A VACATION AND REST

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

STELLA LED smiled with anticipation as she descended from the pullman at Craig station. The air was fresh from a recent shower and the countryside seemed friendly and inviting. A neat, shining car slid to a stop by the train platform and a tall, sun-burned man jumped out and approached her.

"Cousin Stella! I'm so glad to see you!"

"Cousin James! This is a pleasure! Where is Rose?"

"Frying a chicken for your supper," James answered. "These yours?"

It was a seven mile drive to Clear Spring farm. Stella was glad that she had come. She was fond of Rose and Jim. Her middle-aged childless cousins. It had been a hard year at the office and Stella was sick of hurry and noise and jazz. She would sleep late every morning, take long walks through the woods and pastures and rock on the front porch.

That evening was all Stella had anticipated and more. First came a delicious supper of fried chicken and gravy, hot rolls and honey and feed milk. Stella talked little, but her cousins hung on every word, eager to learn more about the new sound pictures, which they had never seen, and to glimpse big business through the eyes of an efficient secretary.

Later Stella went with Rose and Jim after the cows and when they returned the purple and gold of sunset was fading into soft, quiet pastel shades. She watched Jim turn the separator, helped Rose feed the portly white cat and then sat in a comfortable old chair and watched the moon climb the sky. Quiet and peace; no noisy neighbors or shrilling radios or clanging traffic.

Next morning Stella was awakened at six o'clock by a strident voice: "One-two, bend left; three-four, bend right."

A radio? Horrors! But Rose referred to the innovation with frank pride. "Jimmie just got new batteries. Now we can have music and programs all day long. He likes the stock reports and the jazz, but I enjoy the cooking chats most of all."

"Things might be worse," Stella was thinking optimistically, and before noon they were. She heard an excited telephone conversation and gathered that Silas Smith, the nearest neighbor, was ill, and his wife terribly worried. Leaving Stella to prepare herself a cold snack, Rose and Jim hurried over to the Smiths. They returned late in the afternoon and when the car stopped it seemed as if a dozen children tumbled out.

"Silas has acute appendicitis," Rose said breathlessly. "Doctor Carr took him to the city for an operation. Bessie went along, of course, and we are going to feed the stock and look after the children."

"You are certainly good neighbors," declared Stella. "Come here, little girl, and tell me your name."

"Jiggs," answered the six-year-old towhead, "and I want to go with my daddy."

She began howling lustily and it required the combined efforts of Rose, Stella, and the ten-year-old twins, Dick and Bob, to comfort her.

"Turn on the radio," Jim suggested. "That will drown her out."

From that hour bedlam reigned. The boys raced shouting through the house and Jiggs and Tramp, a nondescript dog, chased the terrified chickens from the front yard to back. Stella peeled a mountain-high pile of potatoes to the accompaniment of an amateur jazz orchestra some fifty miles away.

"How long will you keep the children?" she inquired of Rose, who was baking pies.

"Until Bessie and Silas get home, probably ten days or so. You'll get used to their noise before long."

That evening Stella and Rose washed dishes, while Jim went after the cows. The portly cat did not come for her evening milk; she had disappeared. Later the twins rocked vigorously in Stella's comfortable rocker, while the cold, chaste moon climbed the sky and looked down disapprovingly on the noisy group. Jiggs sat in the squeaky porch swing beside Stella and Tramp was close by scratching fleas.

Stella rose wearily. "I have a headache," she said; "I believe I'll retire."

"Let me sleep with her, Mrs. Bibbs?" coaxed Jiggs loudly.

"Well, you do have to sleep somewhere, that's a fact," smiled Rose. "How about it Stella?"

"Whatever you say," Stella answered weakly.

Jiggs slept soundly, her limbs outflung in childish abandon, but Stella lay wide-eyed. She could never endure this for two weeks, but how could she get away without offending Rose and Jim? She awakened still undecided, but desperate. Fortunately, the arrival of the mail offered a solution of the problem. She had a letter from the office, merely a friendly note from the filing clerk, but she seized on it as a means of escape.

"I must go back," she told Rose, holding out the envelope with the firm name engraved in the corner. "An emergency has arisen and I must take the next train!"

"Oh, what a pity!" cried Rose. "We were going to have such fun."

Late that same evening Stella entered her apartment. She flung wide the windows and a cool breeze came in, bearing a faint, pleasing hum of traffic. Taking up the phone, she called a nearby restaurant, ordered her dinner and while she waited for it sorted her three days' accumulation of mail. Her favorite magazine had come, she noted, and the book of the month. Turning the dials of the radio expertly, she allowed a silvery thread of music, poignant and beautiful, to enter the room. This was quiet and peace. The bridge-playing couple who lived in the apartment across from her, she recalled, had gone to the mountains on their vacation. The radio fans who lived below her had gone to the seashore. Stella tasted her shrimp cocktail and as she savored its cool, delicious flavor she let her eyes linger with pleasant anticipation on the waiting book and the soft, inviting couch. She, too, had embarked on her vacation; a vacation—with rest.

Average Person Getting Too Little From Life

Many people are not asking enough from life, for there is more to be had if one will go at it scientifically, declares Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, famous preacher, in an article in the American Magazine.

Doctor Cadman has formulated ten questions and if the reader must admit any of the accusations, he "needs an earthquake to awake him," he says. The list is as follows:

1. Have you enough knowledge of yourself to understand what you can accomplish?
 2. Are you standing still, or are you progressing?
 3. Do you ever use your imagination to picture yourself in advance of where you are?
 4. Do you focus your aims?
 5. Do you see the relation between self-denial and self-expansion?
 6. Do you wait for others to pull you along?
 7. Do you strive constantly to raise the standard of your tastes and qualifications?
 8. Do you mark time instead of marching?
 9. Do you ask too little of religion, of morals, of marriage, or of any other factors or facts of life?
- "Jot down on a sheet of paper three squares," Doctor Cadman recommends further. "Let the first stand for emotions, the second for brain force, the third for will power. Then trace your actions, mental and moral. Which of these squares will contain the largest number of motivations for these actions? There is but one answer, that representing emotions. Far too many of these are random outbreaks of feeling, unrestricted impulses, hunches that do not hunch."

Burning Coal Deposits

Fires in coal mines occasionally burn for years, defying all efforts to put them out. Under New Straitsville, Perry county, Ohio, and covering an area of about ten square miles, there is a coal mine fire raging which is said to have been going on since 1884. In the 46 years about $50,000,000 worth of coal in ten-foot and twelve-foot strata has been destroyed. Millions have been spent to check it. Another coal mine fire in Ohio that was extinguished after thirty years, 1927, was that in the Hocking coal field, between Corning and Congo in Perry county. Other mining authorities mention a coal mine at Zwickau, Saxony, which caught fire in the Fifteenth century and is still burning; also the "Burning Hills" of Staffordshire, England, where for years, until the fire burned out, tropical plants grew luxuriantly.

In Barren Soil

Huge trees growing without any visible means of support are one of the queer sights of the Zapata swamp of southern Cuba, which is nearly 1,500 square miles in extent. Many varieties of trees, some 4 feet in diameter, are found growing in limestone areas where not so much as a single spoonful of soil can be gathered from an acre. The trees make a start in small pockets and holes in the limestone, where collections of leaves and disintegrated rock furnish them with cover for growth. In their search for food the roots stray about over the surface of the rock, finally plunging through holes to find sustenance in soil hidden deeply in the cavernous recesses of the coral stone.

When to Cut the Tree

Rate of growth and yield in any type of forest will vary considerably with the degree of intensity with which forestry practice is carried out. Studies of growth in the Pacific Northwest, says the American Tree association, have thus far been confined chiefly to the more important timber types. The minimum rotation (age at which the trees are cut) in the Douglas fir region has been determined as sixty to eighty years.

Faithful Dog

Doctor Dunlap of Kingfield, Maine, made a call and left his rubbers on the porch. His dog, Peter, a cocker spaniel, was with him and took it upon himself to watch those rubbers, which he did until the latter part of the afternoon, going without his dinner to do so, until the doctor's family was notified and came and took Peter and the rubbers home. He had not noted the doctor's departure from another door.

PAJAMA COSTUMES ARE POPULAR; EVERY HAT IS A PRETTY HAT

Pleated Trouser Type of Pajama Costume.

NOW that the scope of wearableness for the pajama costume reaches beyond the boudoir and the beach, into almost every environment, designers are seizing upon the theme as an outlet for their most intriguing and venture-some ideas.

Just now it is the pleated-trouser type which is making a name for itself in the pajama realm. The cunning outfit in the picture is of printed challis—a material which is very popular for sports and kitchenette wear this season. These pleated flares which begin at the knees are quite skirlike in appearance. Made of challis, linen, gingham and other smart washable weaves, pajama ensembles of the sort pictured are smart for beach wear. They are also rapidly usurping the place of the bungalow-apron type and its near relations.

In creating the multitudinous pajama costumes which have invaded the mode, fashionists make it a point to tune their materials and their styling to environment and event. For instance, one would naturally expect beach pajamas and those worn by enthusiastic sailor lassies, to take on a nautical aspect. Which they do, as in the case of a clever outfit the coat of which goes navy both as to color and motif in that a very important looking insignia is embroidered on one arm while there appears on the shirt of white washable silk an anchor stitched in the dark blue. The trousers completing this ensemble are made of

of this humble material are among fashion's proudest achievements, especially when patterned gingham and plain percale are combined.

Pretty Summer Hats.

Every hat a pretty hat, a flattering hat, is the decree set for this summer. There's no doubt about it: millinery is returning unto its own—proving itself worthy of its name.

And now that le chapeau is so victoriously "doing its bit" in this campaign for the sweetly feminine which fashion is so successfully waging, let no woman complain of not being able to find a becoming hat. The shops are full of 'em—just such striking and versatile models as are shown in this picture. It happens that each of these hats are either black or black-and-white, for the preferences of all fashionable Paris still trend in this direction.

It will be seen at a glance that in the group illustrated fashion plays no favorite with brimmed or brimless, the beret and fitted cap shapes holding their own along with the hat with a brim. For the little molded-to-the-head toque shown at the top the modiste uses a black baku crown inserting motifs of white felt, adding a bow of the same.

A smart black ballbunt hat featuring a wider-at-one-side brim, also accenting the mushroom tendency (very smart in Paris) is pictured at the top to the left. Its undertrim of uncurled ostrich is a last-minute style feature.

The black lace straw hat confirms the vogue for wide brims for dressy afternoon wear. It also has an underbrim trim of ribbon and a black-and-white flower.

Crochet straws, especially in black and white, draped in a manner as shown centered to the left in the illustration, and in the concluding model complement the new black crepe frocks which are so attractively enhanced with touches of white organdy this season.

If there were space for more pictures we would like to show one of those very new coarse straws, which are light in weight and ever so glossy. They are immensely attractive and les dernier cri from Paris.

After the First

Twenty-five Thousand Miles

THE VALUE of sound design, good materials and careful craftsmanship is especially apparent in the new Ford after the first twenty-five thousand miles. Long, continuous service emphasizes its mechanical reliability and economy of operation and up-keep.

As you drive the Ford through many months and years you will develop an increasing pride in its appearance and a growing respect for the substantial worth that has been built into it. From every standpoint—in everything that goes to make a good automobile—you will know that you have made a far-seeing, satisfactory purchase.

Wherever you go, you hear enthusiastic praise of the car and this significant, oft-repeated phrase—"I'm glad I bought a Ford."

A FORD owner in New York tells of a 13,000-mile trip across the United States and back in sixty days and says "the car was extremely economical to operate, comfortable and speedy." A grateful father tells how the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield saved his wife and children from serious injury.

To test tires, a large company drove a new Ford day and night, for an average of 500 miles every twenty-four hours. It was still giving satisfactory service after 105,000 miles.

A Ford car that had fallen into Fernan Lake was submerged for twelve days before being raised. After a new battery and carburetor bowl were installed, it was driven back to Spokane under its own power.

Many police departments have written of the special advantages of the Ford in crowded traffic because of its alert speed, acceleration, and ease of control. An increasing number of fleet owners are also purchasing the Ford because their cost figures have given conclusive proof of its economy of operation and up-keep.

In addition to important triumphs in Germany, France and Italy, the Ford won six out of seven leading places in a contest in Finland, first and second in the Rafaela races in Argentina, first and second in the run from Copenhagen-to-Paris-to-Copenhagen, three gold medals in England, first ranking in the durability test over the tortuous Amancaes road in Peru, and first place in the 1930 reliability run conducted by the Royal Automobile Club of Sweden.

This contest was an exceptionally severe test of endurance and sturdy construction because it was held in the dead of winter and covered 600 miles of steady running over snow-covered country roads and mountainous hills.

Poor Father

Mrs. George Creel, the former popular actress, Blanche Bates, holds the modern mother responsible for the bad upbringing and extravagance of modern youth.

"I do not blame the fathers," said Mrs. Creel, "because they are hard workers and it is all they can do to provide the expensive material comforts a modern family exacts. Nowadays all the training a family gets must come from the mother, and she isn't doing her job conscientiously."

"I lose patience with the modern mother," continued Mrs. Creel, "but I feel sorry for the modern father. One of these poor souls, referring to himself, said to me bitterly the other day:—

"They also serve who only stand and pay."

Yale Fund

Every once in a while personal advertising columns in the New York newspapers carry an inquiry as to the whereabouts of anyone named Leavenworth. A man named Leavenworth has left a fund to provide a year at Yale for anyone having the same name. Only one Leavenworth a year may attend, and if there are several applicants, a competitive examination is held.

Helping the Poor

One of the older wills provided as follows: "I have 71 pair of trousers. They are to be sold to the poor, and the proceeds given to the poor. The garments shall not be meddled with, and only one pair shall be sold to any one person." The sale was held. The purchasers, when they took the pants home, found a $1,000 bill in each pair.

LIGHTNING RODS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I had supposed, until I made a trip to southern Illinois a few weeks ago, that the lightning rod which once had so general a vogue had gone the way of corsets and consumption cures, and electric belts for relieving fits, and fakes generally which intrigued the credulity of the inexperienced and robbed them of their money a generation or two ago. I supposed that we all knew that buckeyes carried in the pocket neither prevent nor care rheumatism, and that the lightning rod may be a menace to safety rather than a protection if not properly adjusted. But I am mistaken; the lightning rod, and Nancy tells me also the corset, is coming back again.

All through the farming district, as we drove down toward Metropolis, we could see the work of the lightning rod dispenser. Every house, every barn, every outbuilding, from woodshed to chicken roost, was bristling with lightning rods. Fourteen I counted on one farmstead.

I could guess how it all happened. Some silver-tongued orator, trained in salesmanship at college, had dropped in on the Browns and had sold them the proposition. Safety, protection, freedom from sudden death were all to be gained by the simple investment in lightning rods—the more the better. They fell, and, being the most prominent people in the neighborhood, were followed suit by the neighbors as meekly as sheep following each other over the pasture fence.

If it isn't lightning rods it is something else quite as foolish that we all adopt. Two years ago all the big boys in college had coonskin coats. I knew a boy who waited table and fired furnaces in order to get himself one and so be in style. Last year the coonskin coat was quite passe. All the real beau brummels had camel's hair. One just wasn't in it without a camel's hair coat. Next year it will be something else and the camel's hair coats will be thrown into the discard.

It was the same way with garters. Some one started the fashion of discarding garters and letting his socks hang in a discouraged way over his ankles and immediately every young fellow threw away his garters.

We don't think so much for ourselves; we follow the fashion; we do as our neighbors do. If Mrs. Brown has long skirts or bobs her hair or goes in for antique furniture, then all the neighbors follow in quick order. If Brown puts a lightning rod on the hen house, immediately all the chicken houses in the township are furnished with lightning rods.

The story is told that in the late war a German private soldier was apprehended upon French territory and brought in to the American commander of the post.

"See here," the American said, "You have no business here. What's going to happen to you is that you're going to be backed up against the fence and shot."

"Vell," the German said, ready to adopt lightning rods if that was the style, "Vateffer iss de rule."

Another case of lightning rods.

Walking "League of Nations"

Washington.—What will the well-dressed business man wear this summer?

London and New York haberdashers have their own answer to that question; geography predicts he will wear the products of 20 foreign countries, more or less.

"If bright national labels were pasted on the pieces of masculine wearing apparel wholly or partly of foreign origin, the well-dressed business man would look like a trunk just returned from a world tour of the best hotels," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its headquarters in Washington, D. C.

"From top to the toe this American, attired for the street, is a walking economic League of Nations.

"Take his hat, for example. It may have been made in Italy, Ecuador or the Philippines. If it was made in the United States, the straw probably came from abroad, from Switzerland, Italy, China or Japan. In one recent year the United States imported 360,000 miles of braided straw for hats.

"The leather sweatband probably came from a New Zealand sheep; the filmy gauze of cotton net under the crown from England.

"His collar, a trim, gleaming collar that resists wilting, probably owes much of its stability to long staple cotton from Egypt. Extra fine shirts also have in their weaves long staple cotton, possibly grown in Arizona or among the lowlands of the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida, or in the British West Indies, but more probably in Egypt.

"The silk of the necktie comes from Japan, of course; but if it is one of the cheap variety, sort of stiff, the kind that looks fine the first time it is tied, bad the second, terrible the third, then it is probably loaded with tin from Singapore.

"The entangling alliances of this American's feet are indeed wonderful to contemplate. Four continents, at the very least, annually save millions of United States citizens from patting around barefoot.

"Now for a look in the business man's pocket. That fountain pen with a bright case of casein—where did it come from? From a cow, not an American cow, in all probability, but an Argentine cow, because in Argentina there is a smaller demand for milk for food than in the United States. Casein for pens and similar objects is solidified milk. The gold of the pen point may be American—or it may be South African. The very point of the pen, the part he writes with, is not gold, but iridium most likely from the platinum mines of Soviet Russia's Ural mountains.

"The yellow pencil in the coat pocket has a lead of American or Mexican graphite, and paint colored by Rhodesian chrome yellow, bound by American or Argentinian linseed oil, and provided with a durable surface by lac from India, perhaps, or tung oil from far up the Yangtze in China, or kauri gum from New Zealand bogs.

"Paper of his pocket memo pad may be all-American; more probably it is Canadian. Cigarettes are doubtless of American tobacco with a pinch of Turkish tobacco from Greek Macedonia, too, it may be, and wrapped in cigarette paper from France. And the good American money in his wallet and his pocket, an American product surely! But no, the green of the greenback is chrome green made from Rhodesia or Mozambique chrome. He may shun a Canadian dime, but never a Canadian nickel, for nearly all our nickels are Canadian. The chief U. S. A. contributions to a nickel are the Indian and the buffalo."

words with a comedian, and found him in a funny little coop of a dressing room. "Not much for a star, is it?" he said. "When they built the theater they didn't figure on dressing rooms, and found they had to put them in later."

Avoids Women

When you hear the name, Pirie MacDonald, you unconsciously think of the phrase, "photographer of men." MacDonald has been a photographer of men for 30 years, and not once in that time has he made a woman's portrait. Sixty thousand men have posed for him in that time.

Men who make pictures of women make emasculated pictures of men, says MacDonald, and he will have nothing of it. At Christmas time he wanted a portrait of his daughter, and he paid another photographer $180 to do the job.

Women, MacDonald claims, wear uniforms, while the men dress distinctively. "Take the Ritz ballroom," he goes on. "Out of 100 women, 95 wear gowns cut to the minute. Their hair is done the same, and they powder and paint by decree."

And the strange part of it is that MacDonald, thirty years and more ago, won four successive annual prizes for the best photographs of women.

Trained Monkey to Steal

Mexico City.—Chapultepec zoo is serving not only as the residence of unoffending beasts, whose only mission is to entertain the crowds, but also as a prison for a monkey arrested by capital police as the confederate of a notorious burglar.

Benito Hernandez, renowned as a second story worker, last year convinced police authorities here that he had reformed. A suspicious crowd, the detectives who had many times caught him rehanding at his illicit work, continued for months to watch him carefully. Their most sagacious agents, however, were unable to observe the least outward sign in Hernandez's activities.

Now, police charge, it has been revealed that the reformed burglar's period of good behavior was devoted to training a monkey of unusual intelligence, which in recent weeks has been performing crimes as neatly as his master used to do. Authorities believe a long series of robberies in the Tacubaya district were solved when Mrs. Maria Barrientos discovered the monk in the act of robbing her home. The policeman she called experienced the greatest difficulty in following the agile culprit over the roof tops to the nearby home of Hernandez.

In the latter's rooms were found dozens of articles recently stolen in the neighborhood. Hernandez pleaded he was not responsible for his pet's acquisitive habits, and that he had been unable to return the articles because their owners were unknown to him. He is being held in jail pending appearance in court.

CHAPTER X

It was nearing ten o'clock, which is late in the morning for people who rise at five, and Ogo, my head carrier, and I were at the end of a long job. We had left the other carriers busy wooding and watering above, had gone down onto the flat, bringing with us pick, shovel, pegs, prospecting dish, and long steel measuring tape, worked about a bit among the "riffles" made by half sunken rocks, and taken sand and gravel from promising spots. I had washed out a few dishes, and found them good something like three ounces of fine gold to a dish, with nuggets to spare, over and above; on an average, about fifteen pounds worth to every dish we washed. It was a veritable jeweler's shop; you could kick the sand up with your toes and see it glitter.

I had a right, as discoverer (for Grace and his partner had never actually found gold) to peg out for myself one area of a hundred feet by fifty, and a prospecting claim due to me as discoverer of a field forty miles from any other—of thirty further claims. This left little for any one else who might come along. . . . "My troubles!" I said. "Let them wait. They meant to let me." Some of the ground, judged by what we washed, was a little richer than the rest. I picked that, measured, pegged, nailed up my notice, and was done. The warden of the field, when appointed, would have to check and confirm the work; but for all practical purposes, I had my ground secure.

The sun was high now, and down in the airless bottom of the pit, it had grown hot; so hot that the sweat ran in streams down my arms, and dripped salty from my forehead into my mouth. "Smoke-oh," I said to Ogo, contemplating with pleasure the neat white pegs that marked off my fortune. "We can get pigs in plenty, for food." I told him, puffing at a welcome cigarette. "Well, shoot all you like. Going to stop here a week." For I was minded to load a carrier or two with gold; they were traveling light now, having eaten up a great part of their loads.

Ogo drew at his bamboo pipe; he was happy, at ease, resting from tedious and unnecessary work. I watched him, as I sat perched on a rock, my face towards the long hard way by which we had climbed down, the day before. Ogo was looking up the east side of the basin, toward the ranges.

A change came over his face. It came very quickly; it seemed, in an instant, to set his features stiff, like water frozen by an icy wind. "What do you see, Ogo?" I asked him, not turning my head. "Taubada," he answered, sitting up on the sand. "Me see two white men, fifty New Guinea man he come."

I looked behind me now. Up the long slopes that ran to eastward, I could see nothing at first. Then I could see—some way down the sides of the basin, dark dots moving, white dots following them. They were going fast, making the best of their way toward the bottom, like sugar ants raiding a bowl, and very anxious to get to the sugar as quickly as possible. It was, beyond all doubt, Spicer, Caxon, and their carriers.

For when I thought of Spicer and his patron; of all that the brute must have known, and of the silence—paid silence doubtless—that he had kept; of how he had balked me once, and had just fallen short of ruining me now—well, it was not astonishing that my fingers, half consciously, crept toward my left hip and the stock of the revolver without which no wise man travels through unknown Papua.

I have said that my mind, like my body, had come to maturity on the red fields of the War. There are thousands, near my age, who will understand just what that means. The War is dead, forgotten, as are its millions of dead and forgotten fighters; but the personalities shaped by it remain. It has never been possible for me to regard killing, inevitably, as murder. When Spicer and Caxon came fairly into sight, a little later; when they were well within rifle shot, nothing restrained me from picking off the tall, fair man with the awkward tread, and ridding earth of a brute as little fit to live as Fanshaw himself had been.

I could not marry Pia Laurier. . . . They did not hurry as I had done; they did not leap onto the gravelly flat that held more treasure than all the older goldfields of New Guinea put together. We met at leisure in the midst of the glaciers of rocks that fringed the bottom of the Pit. Caxon, a silent fellow always, nodded sideways to me, and sat down on a rock, hands in pockets, surveying the flat with a sharp professional eye, which assuredly did not miss my pegs or my notice. Spicer came up grinning, held out his hand, and quoted fatuously, "Doctor Livingstone, I presume?"

I think that in the moment, an ill-defined presentiment of misfortune seized me. I suppose I must have felt, vaguely that this defeated Spicer had no reasonable right to look cheerful; certainly none to crack jokes. But if I did feel anything of the sort, it was submerged by my personal dislike of Spicer himself. I wanted to abuse him, strike him. What I did say was only—"Haven't left many of the plums for you, I'm afraid."

"Are there plums?" he said foolishly, as if he had come up into the heart of wild New Guinea for a walk. His eyes were roving while he spoke; I saw them rest on my pegs, and for a moment they opened wide, and showed as many ugly things as the windows of a convict jail. It was Caxon who spoke, however.

"What does it go to the dish?" he asked. He was sitting as he always did sit, characteristically, with legs flung wide apart, and arms akimbo, soft hat pulled right into his eyes, and insolent lip stuck out. Of the few old-time miners remaining in New Guinea, I had always liked Caxon the least.

Nevertheless, I answered him. There was no use denying patent facts. "About four ounces to the dish," I said.

Spicer let out a whinnying cackle of delight, but Caxon made no sign. "I suppose," he said presently, "we had better have dinner." It was three o'clock; they had—as I afterward heard—camped part way down the crater on the previous night, and traveled, since dawn. It was by a very short hand that I had won.

I hadn't dined either, so we joined our messes—it would have been contrary to New Guinea bush custom to do anything else. And while we ate and drank, and watched each other slyly from under our eyelids, there was just one thought in the minds of every one—"Gold!" But not very far from it, I think, was the thought of the other thing that maddens, too, when seen; that cries out, too, when flung upon the ground—blood. . . .

"Better be careful of 'accidents' in the bush," I thought, even as I pressed the two to share my food. "It's a big strain on any man's self-restraint. Nothing open, of course—I'd respect that—but so many little sneaky ways of killing are possible. . . ."

"What kept you back on the road?" I asked the two. I wanted to know; besides, this silence was irritating me. They looked so well pleased with themselves; had so little right to be pleased. . . .

"Foolery," answered Caxon, his mouth choked by biscuit. "Spicer here won't realize that I'm leader, and—" "Quite incorrect," bleated Spicer, in what I fancy he took to be an "Oxford accent." "At the death of Sir Richard, the leadership devolved on me. I decided that the interests of the Emplah would best be served by opening up what we had been led to understand was a probable goldfield of the very—"

"You were out for cash to go on the spree, same as myself," commented Caxon. "And if you'd fired just about two more shots into that crowd of natives we met, neither of us would ever have seen this place. You started the whole crowd on us, and then I had to shoot, and we wiped them out considerably. Of course we had to go round after that."

"The result of your alleged leadership," patronized Spicer, "being, in sum, that we have arrived after all the valuable ground is pegged."

"Yes," said Caxon simply, and buried his face in his pint-size pannikin. I knew the Papuan miner too well to question him. But there was something about the whole deal that I did not understand.

"It doesn't matter," I thought. "If they fancy they can out me somehow or other in the bush, they've got 'another think coming.' I've got the place in spite of them all, and I'll keep it." We had finished our meal now, and the two newcomers, without further parley, went down to the flat and began walking about. It was fairly late in the afternoon by now; nevertheless, the pair started off on what was evidently a brief prospecting trip. I heard the clink of Caxon's pick now and then, and the sharp tap of a hammer. I did not trouble much about them; I was too busy making use of the opportunity to wash out a few more dishes of gravel. There could be no question, now, of loading carriers with gold for the homeward trip, but I wanted, at least, a good sample.

I do not think I shall ever forget that hour—ecstasy of washing out dish after dish, lifted almost anywhere on the flat, and finding, sure as day, at the bottom of every one, a rich sediment of yellow dust and flakes. Nature, amazingly, had done its work. My claim might be the better for sluicing later on; but at the moment, one could collect enough to make any man crazy drunk with gold-lust, out of the simple washing of a dozen dishes.

I washed them; collected the gold (it was about thirty-five ounces) and put it away in one of my swags, for Caxon and Spicer were now returning from what I took to be a fruitless quest, and I did not want them to see my marvelous gains.

They came straight up to me, evidently according to a preconceived plan. They looked tired and dirty, discouraged, too. Spicer's mouth dragged open, and there was a nasty look about his pretty blue eyes that I had seen more than once before.

"Well, Baa-Baa," he began unpropitiously, "it seems that the only thing we can do—"

"Say that again," I interrupted, "and say it right."

"Mister Amory," he corrected with scornful emphasis. "The only thing we can do is to peg out what's left, and go back."

"You understand the mining laws of the country, I suppose," was my answer.

"I do, if he doesn't," put in Caxon. "We're not going to visit the mines department this trip. The best thing you can do is to come back with us. You've got the loan of us over the whole business, and we'll all be safer together. That fancy shooting of Spicer's has made the bush a bit lively, I reckon."

I reflected. Caxon was undoubtedly in the right. Joining forces and carriers would be best for every one. We could travel faster together, because there would be plenty of hands to cut a road when wanted; more safely, because the natives would be slow to attack a big body of people. There was nothing that I need stay for, now that I had pegged my claim; I had only to go down to Port Mores by and get it granted.

Yet, and yet, when the next day came; when the tents had been struck, and the carriers' loads portioned out, and the long, hard, upward tramp was beginning, I could not do away with a sense of ill-defined anxiety. On the surface everything was right. I had won the race, taken the treasure. Caxon with his callous greed, disregarding everything in life but gain; Spicer, greedy, too, were both defeated. That was well. What, then, troubled me?

As far as I could define the matter, it was this; they did not really mind. Inexplicable, that. Unsatisfactory, that. The thought (it was not a fear, nothing so definite) stayed with me through the greater part of the trip down to the Romilly river. Nothing occurred to deepen it; nothing, on the other hand, happened to make it less. I could not help observing that my two white companions were almost nervously anxious lest I should leave their sight. There is a streak of vanity in every man; my streak led me to conclude that the two of them valued my company—in view of the dangerous country we were traversing—more than I had supposed. Yet the puzzlement, the anxiety, were still alive, somewhere submerged in my mind. I did not altogether understand. . . .

Caxon, who was endlessly troubled by Spicer's futile attempts to be regarded as "leader," had given orders that no one, white or black, should leave the main party without his knowledge. It cost me nothing to obey him; I knew that, in the Papuan bush, divided authority spells disaster, and whatever opinion I might have held of Caxon in his private capacity, I knew him to be the best of bushmen.

On one afternoon, we had been climbing for some hours, having taken a route slightly different from that of the outward trip, and intending to cut across a ridge. This way brought us into a bit of new country; and so it was that, emerging suddenly on the top of the ridge, we came without any warning right upon one of the villages of the Tatata tribe.

The people had heard us long before; their women, pigs, babies, and collections of skulls, were no doubt already carried off into the bush. We found the men awaiting us, plucky chaps that they were—thirty or forty naked creatures decked in feathers and shells and dogs' teeth, armed with the formidable bow of the rangers that can shoot you through at a hundred yards, and the stone club that smashes a skull as easily as a spoon smashes an egg. Not much to stand against our rifles; but they didn't know rifles; there was the trouble; and Caxon and myself were equally disinclined to stake a massacre, by way of teaching them.

"West Point of the Air" in Texas

Rising majestically from the exact center of a 2,300-acre field at San Antonio, Texas, this administration building will form the nucleus for what is designed to become the world's greatest aviation training school. The air corps training center, which will be virtually a "West Point of the air," will have a field staff of about 5,000, with about 1,150 students trained annually. It will be dedicated June 20 and 21. Inset is Brig. Gen. P. F. Lahm, who is in command of the training center.

THREE-LEVEL LANES IN AIR PROJECTED

Upper Stratum Set Aside for Fast Liners.

Washington.—Using as a basis the data supplied by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, the bureau of aeronautics of the Department of Commerce has made plans to test the value of high altitude flying with the object of adding materially to the speed and also to the reliability of the nation's air transportation.

It is proposed to develop three "stacked" lanes across the skies of the United States, one of which, the highest, will be reserved for a commercial express service on high speed air mail planes will move; the next lowest will be used by medium fast planes, while the third and lowest lane will be reserved for slow, heavy-duty freight carrying ships.

Plan Is Controversial.

While engineers of the bureau of aeronautics view this "marking off of the skies" as largely experimental, W. Irving Glover, assistant postmaster general in charge of air mail, has come forward to speak for room on the uppermost lane for the fast mail planes of his service. This announcement from the Post Office department has drawn attention to a plan which involves many interesting theories and which is still largely controversial.

Three airplanes at three altitudes. Mr. Glover said, are likely to be the result of studies by the Department of Commerce, but at exactly what altitude the topmost or high speed lane would be established has not been revealed. It has been assumed, however, in view of the fact that the experiment is to be carried out by using the data supplied by Colonel Lindbergh, that this lane would be located between 10,000 and 12,000 feet. The second lane, for medium-fast planes, presumably would be located in an altitude range between 8,000 and 10,000 feet, with the third lane for the slow craft below that.

Natural Earth Current Involved.

Scientists have long known that the movement of the earth creates an earth air current which moves at an enormously high speed, which produces a prevailing west-to-east air force. But the very lowest altitude at which the effect of this wind could be felt is 20,000 feet, which is considerably above the topmost and high speed lane which is proposed under the findings of Col. Lindbergh.

It would be possible for present planes to climb to an altitude which would be able to take advantage of this earth wind movement. At least certain types of aircraft would be able to reach the range of this wind force, but that would solve but half the problem. It would mean that west-to-east service would be too fast for the practical purposes of a two-way service which sought to operate on synchronized schedules. Westbound planes would always be at an enormous handicap, regardless of the level at which they were flown.

Critics Question Efficiency.

Another factor which must be considered, critics of high altitude flying say, is that of efficiency. In the sense that the air is an ocean navigable by aircraft, with the earth the shore line of this new sea, every air line is necessarily a coastal line. In coastal transportation the further off shore the traffic must be moved the less efficient it becomes in affording transportation to receiving points located along that shore line.

But there is another point at which efficiency may be lost in high speed lanes. The fastest of these lanes would be located in thinning atmosphere, where a large portion of the efficiency of the propeller must of necessity be expended in maintaining level flight. Therefore, unless planes are to be moved along by strong wind forces, their speed depending largely on the assistance of the winds, little would be gained from an air traffic lane at high altitude.

AIR LAW INSTITUTE COMES IN AUGUST

Legal Code to Be Planned at Chicago Meeting

Chicago.—Wizards of the air and of the law will meet in August at Northwestern university to take some measurements of the rights of man in the third dimension.

At the Air Law Institute, a feature of the Northwestern Law college summer session, they will strive to do for the law of the air what was done in other new fields for centuries past by the more difficult medium of experience, according to Dean Emeritus John H. Wigmore and Dean Leon Green.

"While man was content to move and live on a plane surface," Dean Green said, "the problems of the law presented only two dimensions. With his advent into the air the law must be extended into the third."

Experiences of European air experts will be brought to the institute by lecturers on British, French, German and Italian air law—Dr. A. D. McNair, Cambridge university, England; Capt. Albert Roper, secretary general of the Commission Internationale de Navigation Aeriennne of France; Dr. Hans Oppikofer, director of the Institut fur Luftrecht, Albertus universitat, Konigsberg, Prussia, and M. Antonio Ambrosini, director of the Italian Instituto do Diritto Aeronautico.

Air Reservations to Guard Power Plants

Washington.—Owners of plants or storehouses in which high-explosive material is kept may have them certified as air space reservations so that airplane pilots may be warned to fly around them or at a safe altitude above them, according to an announcement by Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce for aeronautics.

"Areas once certified, if the public safety dictates, may be required to display distinctive day and night markings in order that airmen may avoid them or fly over at a height sufficient to permit of a reasonably safe emergency landing outside of the danger area thus marked, which in no case should be less than 1,000 feet."

Markings will consist of painted signs bearing the symbol H-X for day-time flying. For night flying a revolving red beacon will be used, or a system of projector lights in conjunction with flashing red lights placed above the structure.

Turning Is Difficult Maneuver for Flyers

One of the maneuvers that the student flyer finds difficult to learn, though not the most difficult, is that of turning. It is quite different from turning an automobile in that the pilot must operate two controls, the stick and the rudder. Two planes of travel must be changed instead of but one.

Poorly made turns have led to airplane accidents. Now the thought grows that the one control will be made automatic in its operation, probably the aileron which gives the necessary bank to the turn.

Keys Restored by Plane
Keys were restored in very quick time by airplane—that is, if one has $250 to spend for it. So a traveler bound for Marseilles, France, and the East returned recently. When his valet found the keys just after the man had left London, he hired an air taxi, which started two hours after the train. It reached Paris in time for the keys to be handed to the owner on his arrival at the station.

Primitive Postal Service
As early as 1672 there was a postal service between New York and Albany, Indians being employed to carry letters between those points.

She Lost a Check!

The other day a lady here in Tawas City lost a check. She had made it out to one of the stores in our city and intended to call there and pay her account with it. Somehow the check was misplaced. It was gone and she couldn't find it. But she is a sensible lady. She immediately notified us to stop payment on that check if it should happen to be presented here at the bank, and then she made out another check. Nothing lost. Everybody happy.

Now, then, suppose that her check had been actual money. Ninety-nine chances out of a hundred it would have been lost forever. It's just another illustration of the value of keeping a checking account. It's worth thinking about, anyway, isn't it?

the part of Clive Champion Cheyne, deserted thirty years before by his wife, Lady Kitty. Kitty is beloved by Lord Porteous, now grown old with her. This part is played by Ernest Torrence. It is the role originally portrayed by John Drew.

The two young "mad fools" who rush into love despite the horrible example of Porteous and Lady Kitty, are played by Catherine Dale Owen (direct from her success in "The Rogue Song"), and a newcomer, Paul Cavanaugh. Tyrrell Davis, of the stage production, "The Swan," and the screen's "His Glorious Night," plays Miss Owen's stodgy young politician-husband, while Mary Forbes of "The Thirteenth Chair" is the sophisticated Mrs. Shernstone.

Scenes on horseback and an English garden are said to furnish the exteriors of the production, while the dramatic scenes of the picture are played out largely in the interior of the luxurious country home of Clive Champion Cheyne.

is a comedy drama of New York suburban life. An ambitious mother trying to break into society and finding her carefully-laid plans thwarted by the unexpected arrival of a poor relative, schemes and plans to—but the poor relative takes a hand at scheming and planning, also, and the play comes to a happy ending and in an unexpected manner. "Mary's Other Husband," Larry Johnson's successful play, which ran for several seasons on Broadway; the record breaking farce comedy, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," "The Royal Family," "Friday," "The Thirteenth," "Virtue Awakened" and "The Only Road," are other plays that will be presented during the week.

A feature of the show this year will be the excellent standard of vaudeville to be presented between the acts. Singing, dancing, comedy and magic. The Kelly Syncopaters, a real hot jazz band, is an entertainment in itself and will keep you swaying and crooning while they burn up the latest popular melodies.

Theatre, East Tawas, Sunday and Monday.

This picture is the first Zane Grey story to be filmed with dialog. In it, the he-man heroes and danger-defying women of the West step from the pages of the famous novel, act their gripping drama, and talk. "The Light of Western Stars" is the gripping story of the West in which the last desperate stand of banded outlawry on the American frontier is authentically pictured.

Two of the lovers of "The Virginian," Arlen and Mary Brian, have the leading roles. Arlen, a swaggering cowboy, rescues Mary Brian from Fred Kohler, an unscrupulous badman, and wins her from Regis Toomey, her Eastern lover. Harry Green contributes his inimitable comedy to the picture, and, in boots and saddle, he is funnier than he was even in "Kibitzer." Don't miss it!
