Anna Seafert Harsch was born December 6, 1900, and was 29 years, six months and 11 days old at the time of death. She was united in marriage to Louis C. Harsch on December 26, 1923. To this union were born four children, Louella June, William, Louis, Joseph Henry and Donald Blair, who came to brighten their home when the clouds of sorrow fell upon them. She was a faithful sister of the Hale Chapter No. 482, Order of Eastern Star.

She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, four children, mother and father, eight sisters and three brothers, besides a host of other relatives and friends.

Those who came from a distance to attend the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Bert Swartz, Mr. and Mrs. Grimm, Benj. Eichler, Mrs. Moine and daughter, Marvel, of Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Anderson and children of Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Seafert and Albert Seafert of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. A. Morin and children of Pontiac, Mr. and Mrs. Rolandis Harsch of Flint, Mrs. Chas. Bemis of Montrose, and Mrs. Hilts of Selkirk.

PETER WILLARD SLOSSER

Peter Willard Slosser, highly esteemed resident of Plainfield township, died at one o'clock Tuesday morning, June 17, at the age of 41 years. The funeral services were held Friday afternoon at the Hale Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. George Smith officiated.

He is survived by his wife, two children, Lila and Victor, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Slosser, two brothers, Hugh and Frank Slosser of Hale, and one sister, Mrs. Mae Edmonds of Detroit.

With his passing we are deeply conscious that from among us has gone one who was most highly regarded by his neighbors and friends; one whose devotion to home and family is a memory to be revered by all; one who by his neighborly acts, his willingness always to be of service to others, his honesty and integrity had elevated himself to a place of highest esteem in the community where he so long has lived as a real man among men.

In our hearts is the feeling that one who has lived so well in the service of home and friends has earned a reward in the Great Beyond.

"He has gone from our midst, One whom we loved so well; What grief his passing caused, Only God, alone, can tell. One hour well and hearty, The next hour doomed to die. Who knows the ways of Providence? Not you—nor I."

We wish to thank our many friends and neighbors for their many acts of kindness and the beautiful floral offerings during our recent bereavement. We also wish to thank those who so kindly loaned their cars; the singers for their comforting songs, and Rev. Smith for his consoling words.

AIR REGULATIONS TO UNIFY OPERATIONS

Department of Commerce Moves for Stabilization.

Washington.—Regulations which are expected to bring about in the air transport field the uniformity of operation of railroad and steamship lines, coupled with unprecedented records of safety and reliability, were put into effect during the past week by the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce.

These regulations, which are regarded as among the most important yet framed to deal with air transport operations, are designed to surround interstate air passenger transportation with all possible safeguards and to guarantee maintenance of schedules.

Under the new code of rules the Department of Commerce is requiring the operators of scheduled air passenger transport services in interstate commerce to obtain from the secretary of commerce a certificate of authority to operate such a service.

Safety to Be Increased. "The certificate of authority," it was explained by Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce for aeronautics, "will be issued only to those operators who effect complete compliance with the new regulations and the interpretations thereunder."

"When placed in full operation and effect, these regulations, which constitute a standard or code of minimum requirements governing the operation of scheduled interstate air passenger routes, are expected to bring about unprecedented records of safety and reliability in this phase of civil aeronautics."

The regulations require that on or before July 15 applications for certificates shall be filed by air transport operators with the Department of Commerce. Upon receipt of the application the department may issue a temporary letter of authority to operate pending inspection of the route and facilities of the operator by Department of Commerce inspectors.

To Standardize Methods. "This action by the Department of Commerce," Major Young said, "has now become necessary in order to standardize the various methods of interstate passenger air transport operation that have developed and will continue to develop in the future. It is in furtherance of a comprehensive, fundamental program which has been developed under the provisions of the air commerce act."

"Airways are now extensively established, satisfactory communications equipment is becoming available, and the required use of such facilities and aids to air navigation in the interest of increasingly safe and reliable operation in a uniform manner is definitely in order."

"The fundamental principles involved in the requirements have the approval and indorsement of a majority of the air transport operators in the United States. This approval was registered at a series of conferences called by the aeronautics branch with the operators late in January and early in February for the purpose of making a thorough study of the subject."

Certificate of Authority. Certificates of authority will be issued only to companies which can meet a high code of requirements. Aircraft used must be provided with suitable instruments and equipment and must be adapted to the nature of the service involved. Adequate numbers of qualified pilots and other employees must be provided to maintain safe operations under all conditions. All aircraft and equipment must be maintained to the highest degree of operating efficiency as determined by thorough inspection, repair and overhaul at fixed periods.

All airways or routes over which operations are conducted or proposed must be provided with air navigation facilities held by the secretary of commerce to be necessary in the interest of safe and reliable operation of the service. Adequate and competent ground crews must be provided and competent officials must be available to authorize, delay, suspend or cancel flights as may become necessary because of weather or other reasons.

Night Flying Will Be Extended 3,000 Miles

Washington.—Plans to open 3,000 miles of United States airways to night flying during the next fiscal year have been announced by the Department of Commerce. This would bring the total mileage of light airways to 17,500.

A large part of the special appropriation of $7,944,000, available for the work, will be used to open a night southern transcontinental route, Atlanta, to Fort Worth to San Diego. Another lighted airway is to be installed between Dallas, Little Rock, Memphis, Nashville and Louisville, forming an alternate southern route. A third will be from St. Louis to Indianapolis and New York.

There will be a cut-off route between Richmond and Jacksonville which will provide a lighted airway from Boston to Florida and an alternate route from New York to Florida.

The lighting of the southern routes, the cut-offs and connecting lines means greater flexibility for the entire airway system of the country. While there was only one transcontinental lighted route, if bad weather covered the northern route there could be no transcontinental air traffic at night.

Flying Club Formed Above Arctic Circle

Stockholm, Sweden.—The northernmost flying club in the world has been founded at Malmberget, in the iron mining center of Swedish Lapland, well above the polar circle. Its organizer, Knut Liljedahl, has purchased two planes, one with dual controls.

The entire community has shown a great interest in the venture. Liljedahl and his associates intend to use the larger machine for passenger flights, to help finance instruction of amateur pilots.

ROBOT WAS PILOT ON BOMBING FLIGHT

Odd Device Demonstrated by Army Air Corps.

San Francisco.—The feasibility of waging war in the air without the use of human pilots and of sending huge planes, piloted only by machinery, on cross-country trips, has been demonstrated by the army air corps.

A big army bomber took off from Mather field, Sacramento, bearing four men and a queer-looking machine about the size of a hat box. When the plane was well in the air the pilot, Major Knerr, turned the controls over to the little machine, which flew the ship straight as an arrow to San Francisco.

Over the Bay City Knerr touched a button and the machine guided the 18,000-pound plane in circles for 20 minutes and then headed it back for Sacramento. Except for the take-off and landing, the machine did all navigating, keeping the plane on an even keel through the rough air and maintaining the course with mechanical precision.

Besides Knerr the plane carried Hans Adamson, representing the assistant secretary of war for aviation; Lawrence B. Sperry, inventor of the automatic pilot, and Sergeant Budoff, radio operator.

The purpose of the flight, army officials said, was to prove the feasibility of using automatically piloted planes as huge instruments of destruction to be hurled against an enemy without the aid of human hands.

Sperry's invention consists of two gyroscopes. The instrument weighs less than 50 pounds in all and was installed in the forward cockpit. Delicately sensitive, it detects every movement of the plane and automatically rights the ship whenever it strays from its course.

Flies in Four Hours

To prove that the ordinary business man can learn to pilot an airplane as quickly as he can learn to drive an automobile, Frank T. Copeland of Santa Monica, Calif., entered a plane at Wichita, Kan., shortly after breakfast and was soloing before luncheon. He had learned to pilot a plane in four hours.

Powered Glider Holds Great Possibilities

Washington.—That the powered glider will be the aircraft that will bring aviation and the private flyer together and pave the way to private flying on a significant scale is a growing opinion in aeronautical circles. The advantages of this type of aircraft, something in the nature of half glider and half airplane, cited by Kenneth M. Lane, chief engineer of the aeronautics branch of the United States Department of Commerce, are recognized by others as well.

Several concerns already are producing craft of this kind and others are reported considering their production. Having an engine of very low power and retaining the light construction of the glider, these powered soars are potentially among the safest of aircraft. Their landing speed of between 25 and 30 miles an hour is greater than that of the typical motorless glider which lands at approximately eight or ten miles an hour. Yet this speed is less than that of the average light plane.

While operated in much the same fashion as a plane, the motored glider has stability characteristics and generally lower performance that makes it especially advantageous from the standpoint of the inexperienced.

The light wing loading of this type of craft gives it a low stalling speed which also is reflected in its low cruising and top speeds. These deficiencies in speed performance are looked upon, however, as more than compensated for by the safety which is inherent in the design of the craft.

WIDE RIBBON SASH IS BACK; BEACH MILLINERY NEW TOPIC

GRACEFUL berths and capelets, much from froon and flouncing of skirts, wide ribbon sashes tied at the waistline, no, this is not quoting from great grandmamma's diary nor is it an extract from Godey's Ladies' Book—simply an enumeration of style "as is" at this very moment.

Twentieth century moderns turning to the quaint past for inspiration, is exactly what is going on in the world of fashion today—successfully too! The venture is not without its thrills.

For Wear at the Beach.

Beach millinery presents a new challenge to designers to do and to dare this season. In matter of brims the spirit is to "keep on keeping on" until the limit in width is attained. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that there is no limit when it comes to dimensions, for the

A Love of a Frock.

Fancy wearing lace mitts, and "sunshade" hats and broad ribbon sashes! Well, for one thing they are ever so flattering and prettily feminizing, we're finding that out more and more as summer comes on apace. There's the model in the picture for proof.

A love of a frock this, made of bengberg chiffon in a perfectly gorgeous patterning which silhouettes yellow tulips against a flame colored ground. The sash repeats the coloring of the tulips.

Those flounces! Quaint are they not? Modern, too! Ruffles wide, narrow, single or ensuite are flourishing throughout the summer mode. It is really going to be a season of many ruffles, around little capes as you see in the picture, up and down and around skirts, frilling short sleeves. Anywhere ruffles can find the merest excuse to lodge, that will they do, this season.

In regard to this matter of ribbon sashes they are being revived in all their original quaintness and picturesqueness. The very wide sash, as wider the brim the smarter the beach hat.

Not only as a matter of protection, for millady's sunshade or parasol serves no better, are these hats of enormous brims winning the favor of by-the-sea vacationists, but from a pictorial standpoint they are injecting a note of breath-taking novelty into the beach style parade.

Huge hats of straw, sometimes very fine, such as milan or hemp, sometimes very coarse, as is the new light-weight novelty straw, which is making its debut late in the season, take on multi colorings—that is, alternating sections are in various bright lines. These straw hats of many colors are worn either drooping like a canopy almost hiding the face, or their enormous brims are thrown back or blown by the wind in a dashing manner (see hat to right in lower picture).

Beach hats made of linen in pastel shades are quite the thing this season. The enormous brims of these easy-to-laundry chapeaux are draped

Perhaps, however, no more so than the narrower ribbon (preferably moire or belting) in pastel colors, the same brought about the waist neatly to the side front where it develops into flat loops and streamers, perhaps caught with a prim tiny bouquet!

Ruffled gowns of chiffon, or flowered, are greatly enhanced with the cunning sashes and ribbon belts now so in dish. The broader sashes are mostly of very wide soft satin or taffeta ribbon. Two-faced satin sashes, say or child on one side and larkspur blue or

The young woman posing to the left in the illustration is wearing a wide-brimmed straw hat in pale green to harmonize with her cognate beach ensemble. This very charming costume makes elegance its outstanding note rather than flashiness. The three-quarter length jacket and extremely wide trousers are of a lustrous trilc-weave fabric made of bengberg (a fiber from which fabrics are woven) using two shades, a medium and very light.

Famous Father—Worthy Son

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

RECENTLY there was unveiled on the wall of a modest brick house in Philadelphia a bronze tablet which tells the passer-by that "Hail Columbia" was composed here by Joseph Hopkinson on April 22, 1798. The unveiling was done by a little girl, Martha Hopkinson, who thus honored the memory of her great-grandfather, a man whose name is known to comparatively few Americans. Yet Francis Hopkinson and Joseph Hopkinson offer an example of "famous father-worthy son" scarcely paralleled in all American history.

It is eminently fitting that their names should be recalled as Independence day approaches for they contributed materially to the foundation of our Republic and the establishment of the national tradition.

Francis Hopkinson was born in Philadelphia in 1737, the son of an Englishman who served several years as a judge of the admiralty and a member of the provincial council. Hopkinson was the first scholar entered at the University of Pennsylvania (then the college of Philadelphia) and was graduated with its first class. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1761. After serving as secretary to a conference between the provincial authorities and the chiefs of several Indian nations, and as librarian and secretary of the Philadelphia library, he went to England in 1766 and became an intimate friend of Lord North, Benjamin West and John Penn.

Upon his return to this country he resumed his law practice, kept store for awhile and became a member of two societies which united in 1769 to become the famous American Philosophical society. In 1772 he was appointed inspector of the customs at New Castle but was removed because of his radical ideas. He next moved to Bordentown, N. J., and was a member of the provincial council of that colony from 1774 to 1776. In the latter year he was elected to the Continental congress from New Jersey and became one of America's immortals when he signed the Declaration of Independence.

Historians now seem to agree generally that the Betsy Ross legend of the origin of the flag can be accepted only with reservations. She may have made the first flag, so far as the actual cutting and sewing of it was concerned, but she was not the "designer." The evidence as to who actually was is at best incomplete, but such evidence as exists points strongly to Francis Hopkinson. It is known that he was greatly interested in the heraldic art, especially as it applied to seals, flags and coins. It is known that in June, 1777, he was chairman of the navy board, acting under the marine committee of the Continental congress, and that the famous "flag resolution" of June 14, 1777, establishing the design of the national flag, was presented to congress among the business of the marine committee.

But the strongest evidence is contained in the words of Hopkinson himself which are on record. On May 25, 1780, he wrote to the board of admiralty saying, "It is with great pleasure that I understand my last device of a Seal for the Board of Admiralty has met with your Honours, Approbation." This seal, which was adopted May 4, 1780, had 13 red and white stripes. In a later letter he asked for compensation for his services, itemizing a list of designs that he presumably had prepared. Among these was "the flag of the United States of America" and "a great seal for the United States of America, with a reverse."

But even though it may not be possible to establish his right to that distinction, he showed his versatility in other ways which entitle him to remembrance. As early as 1774 Hopkinson had won a name for himself by publishing an allegory in which he recounted the wrongs of the colonies and this is said to have done much to fan the spirit of revolution in all who read it. Throughout the Revolution he continued to use his gifts as a writer in a series of satires directed at the British, which were published in the newspapers of the day and attracted widespread attention.

MARTHA HOPKINSON UNVEILING TABLET

some of them even being attributed to Benjamin Franklin.

The most famous of all of Hopkinson's writings was "The Battle of the Kegs," based on an incident which took place during the British occupation of Philadelphia. A certain David Bushnell had invented a turtle-shaped, one-man submarine which he proposed to use in attacking bombs and ship fuses to the bottoms of British vessels in the Delaware river. Tests of this submarine, however, were not very successful, so the ingenious Bushnell next conceived the idea of loading a number of kegs with powder and putting them in the river to float down and explode against the ships when they touched them. Most of them blew up when they struck ice cakes in the river but one did actually destroy a British boat. This was enough, however, to throw the British into a panic and they began bombarding every floating object in the river, both the guns on the ships and soldiers on the wharves keeping up an incessant fire for hours.

When Hopkinson heard of this incident he was so amused that he wrote a poem called "The Battle of the Kegs." It immediately became the most popular soldier song of the war and Washington's soldiers sang it to a variation of the tune of "Yankee Doodle" during the remainder of the conflict. It reads as follows:

THE BATTLE OF THE KEGS

Gallants, attend, and hear a friend
Trill forth harmonious ditty
Strange things I'll tell that late befell
In Philadelphia City.
'Twas early day, as poets say,
Just when the sun was rising,
A soldier stood on log of wood
And saw a sight surprising.

As in truth he stood to gaze—
The amaze can't be denied, sirs—
He spied a score of kegs or more
Come floating down the tide, sirs.
A sailor, too, in jerkin blue,
That strange appearance viewing,
First damned his eyes in great surprise,
Then said, "Some mischief's brewing."

"The kegs now hold the rebel bold
Packed up like pickled herring;
And they've come down to attack the town."

In this new way of ferrying—
The soldier flew, the sailor, too,
And, scared, almost to death, sirs,
Wore out their shoes to spread the news,
And ran 'till out of breath, sirs.

Now up and down, throughout the town,
Most frantic scenes were acted;
And some ran here and some ran there,
Like men almost distracted.
Some "fire" cried, which some denied,
But said the earth had quaked;
And girls and boys, with hideous noise,
Ran through the town half-naked.

Sir William, he, snug as a flea,
Lay all this time a-snoring,
Nor dreamed of harm, as he lay warm
In bed with Mrs. Loring.
Now, in a tright, he starts upright,
Awaked by such a clatter;
He rubs both eyes and boldly cries,
"For God's sake, what's the matter?"

At his bedside he then espied
Sir Erskine at command, sirs;
Upon one foot he had a boot,
And 't other in his hand, sirs.
"Arise! Arise!" Sir Erskine cries;
"The rebels—more's the pity—
Without a boat are all afloat,
And ranged before the city."

"The motley crew in vessels new
With Satan for their guide, sirs,
Packed up in bags, or wooden kegs,
Come driving down the tide, sirs.
Therefore, prepare for bloody war!
With rebel trees surrounded,
Or surely we despoiled shall be,
And British courage doubted."

The royal band now ready stand,
All ranged in dead array, sirs,
With stomachs stout to see it out,
And make a bloody day, sirs.
The cannons roar from shore to shore,
The small arms make a rattle;
Since wars began I'm sure no man
E'er saw so strange a battle.
The rebels vales, the rebel dales,
With rebel trees surrounded,
The distant woods, the hills and floods,
With rebel echoes sounded.
The fish below swam to and fro,
Attacked from every quarter—

"Why, sure," thought they, "the devil's to pay
'Mongst folks above the water."
The kegs, 'tis said, tho' strongly made
Of rebel staves and hoops, sirs,
Could not oppose the powerful foes,
The conquering British troops, sirs,
From morn to night these men of might
Displayed amazing courage,
And when the sun was fairly down
Returned to sup their porridge.

A hundred men with each a pen,
Or more—upon my word, sirs,
It is most true—would be too few
Their valor to record, sirs,
Such feats did they perform that day
Upon those wicked kegs, sirs,
That years to come, if they get home,
They'll make their boasts and brags, sirs.

In 1788 Hopkinson published a group of seven songs which he dedicated to "His Excellency, George Washington." Whether or not this had anything to do with his appointment as United States district judge in Pennsylvania is a matter for conjecture. At any rate in 1790 Washington named him for that position. He did not live long to enjoy the new honor, however, for he died of a stroke of apoplexy on May 9, 1791.

His son, Joseph Hopkinson, born in Philadelphia November 12, 1770, followed closely in his father's footsteps. Graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1786, he also studied law and began practice in Easton, Pa., in 1791. But he soon returned to Philadelphia and rapidly rose to a position of prominence at the bar. He was elected to congress in 1814 and at the close of his term moved to Bordentown where he remained until 1822. He then resumed the practice of law and in 1828 President John Quincy Adams appointed him judge of the United States court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the same office held by his grandfather, Thomas Hopkinson, under the British crown. Hopkinson died in Philadelphia January 15, 1842.

In addition to his distinction as a jurist, Hopkinson was for many years president of the Philadelphia academy of fine arts, which he helped found, and vice president of the American Philosophical society which his father had helped establish. He was a writer of wide renown on legal, educational and ethical subjects but he is best remembered for the patriotic song which he wrote in 1798.

Conflicting stories are told as to the reason for Hopkinson writing "Hail Columbia." According to one version he wrote it in honor of President John Adams because of Adams' protest against the shameful attempt of the French government to exact bribes from American ministers sent to France to make a treaty which would smooth out the difficulties between that country and the United States. Another version is that it was written in order "to get up an American spirit which should be independent of and above the interests, passions and policy of both belligerents" in the threatened war between France and Great Britain.

Whatever the motive back of it, it seems pretty definitely established that Philadelphia theaters went to Hopkinson and tried with his help to put words to a piece of music called "The President's March," which was an arrangement of an old German folk song. Fox had been unable to find words that would adequately express the national feeling, but Hopkinson and his wife wrote such a song and Mrs. Hopkinson played it on the clavichord. Fox sang the song in the theater, advertising it as the "new federal song" and it gained instant popularity. It was not known as "Hail Columbia," however, until it was first sung in a New York theater some time later, but for the next 16 years, until Francis Scott Key's "Star Spangled Banner" swept the country, it was regarded as the only national song of the new republic.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

Who Was Robin Hood?

THE character of Robin Hood may be said to live only as a sort of literary mystery, for the romantic career of this knight errant is known to us almost entirely through the many and varied stories that have been told of him by the romancer and the poet and there has been a great diversity of opinion regarding this outlaw hero. Some writers accord him historical origin, others maintain that he was nothing more than a mythological character, while still others regard him as a creature of the popular imagination.

It is a well known fact that many of the most popular ballads concerning Robin Hood are nothing more than tradition, such as those of the "Hynd Horn" and others that were simply abridgments of older metrical romances, too long to be intoned or recited at a single sitting and therefore shortened by the minstrels and fitted to tunes, of which there are some still in existence. Prof. F. W. Child, in the introduction to one of the volumes of his "English and Scottish Ballads," says on this subject: "My hypothesis is that the series of ballads associated with the name of Robin Hood are based partly on an earlier English romance and partly on historical reminiscences of the hero of that romance."

The first reference to Robin Hood in English literature is the second version of "Piers the Plowman" which, according to Professor Skean, could not have been written earlier than 1337. Here the reference runs:

I ken nocht parilly my pater-noster
As the preest it singeth,
But I ken rymes of Robin Hood
And Rudolf, Earl of Chester.

The common belief concerning Robin Hood is that he was the captain of a band of robbers or outlaws who inhabited the forest of Sherwood, in Nottinghamshire. Even though they delighted in robbing bishops and other wealthy ecclesiastics, they are reported to have been religiously disposed and to have retained in their band a domestic chaplain, Friar Tuck, whom Scott immortalized in "Ivanhoe."

Other noted members of the band were—supposedly, at least—Little John, William Scarlet, George-a-Green and Much, the miller's son. Robin himself is supposed to have been born at Locksley in the county of Nottingham, about 1160, and the date as assigned for the death of the popular hero is 1247—eighty-seven years later, which would indicate that the outdoor life of the band was conducive to longevity. The site of Robin Hood's grave, well marked but disputed by historians, is on the extreme edge of Kirkless park, not far from Huddersfield.

The presence of the grave, with the stone bearing its inscription, would make it appear that there is historical foundation for the story of Robin Hood's life, but many writers are rather inclined to the opinion that the name, though not of fictitious origin, was applied to a number of persons whose exploits were told and retold in England many centuries later. But, by some writers of a later age, it has been maintained that the prince of robbers was none other than the earl of Huntingdon, who, through misfortune or the mismanagement of his estate, had been compelled to adopt a predatory life.

A collection of Robin Hood lyrics, printed under the title "A Lytell History of Robyn Hood," was issued about 1495 and forms the most reliable history of the life and deeds of this forest hero. One of these ballads mentions that Edward II, having arrived at Nottingham, resolved forthwith on the extermination of Robin and his band. It is a singular coincidence that, in the household expenses of the same monarch, appears the name of "Robyn Hode," who appears to have been a porter of the chamber at the time that the hero, according to legend, resided at court.

It has been maintained, however, by many distinguished antiquarians, that Robin Hood is nothing more than a poetical myth, "one amongst the personages of the early mythology of the Teutonic people. It has been suggested that the very name of Robin Hood is nothing more than a corruption of "Robin of the Wood" and that the character is only to be regarded as the embodiment of the spirit of unrestrained freedom and sylvan sport, due to the almost total absence of any direct historical evidence concerning him.

"Kilocycle"
Kilo means one thousand. Cycle means a period of time in which a certain phenomenon occurs repeatedly in the same order. In electricity it is the period of time which is taken for an alternating current to rise from zero to its maximum potential and return to zero again in one direction, and then go from zero to maximum and return to zero in the opposite direction. Combining the two meanings, kilocycle means the above proceedings performed a thousand times a second.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

CONTROL CURCULIO TO PREVENT HARM

Important That "Drops" Be Picked Up and Destroyed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Supplementary control measures against the plum curculio, or peach worm, must often be used in addition to the customary spraying or dusting with lead arsenate, if a large curl pile of wormy peaches at harvest time is to be prevented.

The United States Department of Agriculture considers that the most effective of these supplementary control measures is the collection and destruction of peach "drops." A majority of the small peaches that are punctured by the curculio early in the season fall to the ground within a few weeks after the calyxes, or "shucks," have been pushed off. The worms remaining in these, if they are not picked up and destroyed, later reach maturity, push their way out, and enter the soil to transform into adult beetles, thus starting a new generation of this destructive pest.

Three collections of "drops" will get about 90 per cent of the worms that fall to the ground in peaches during the season. The first collection should be made about one month after full bloom and the other two at intervals of about five or six days. All drops should be made harmless as soon as collected, either by burying in a trench 18 to 24 inches below the surface of the soil and covering with a layer of quicklime before filling in the soil or by submerging them in boiling water.

Another precaution for keeping down the number of adult beetles is to burn over woodlands and brush near the peach orchard during the winter months. This may not always be advisable, but prunings, rubbish, and brush piles should not be allowed to remain and harbor curculios.

Disking under the spread of peach trees in the orchard from about May 10 to the last of June will destroy many pupae in the soil. This should be done as frequently as possible. Jarring the trees in the spring enables the orchardist to collect many adult beetles, which are then killed by placing in a can of coal oil. The regular spraying and dusting schedules should be followed as well as the above measures.

Bees Are Essential to Proper Set of Fruit

Bees are essential to the proper set of fruit as demonstrated last year in pollination experiments at Ohio State university, according to Virgil N. Argo. There should be a stand of bees on each acre of ground in the orchard for best pollination results.

The blooming time for some varieties of fruit is very short and if flying weather is bad the bees will work near their hives and may not spread out sufficient pollination. If there is a stand near it will bring about better pollination than if they were a distance from the orchard.

Arsenates used as sprays or dusts are disastrous to bees and a spray schedule should be arranged that would not interfere with the bees, Mr. Argo states.

Apple Varieties Will Vary in Qualities

Apple varieties vary greatly in quality, texture, season, and in the best use to which they can be put. Some varieties are fine in December but poor in March. Some are excellent cookers but poor bakers. Some are good for eating out of hand but poor for any other purpose, while others are excellent general purpose varieties. Needless to say, a customer who buys apples for a particular purpose only to find them totally unfit for that purpose is not a satisfied customer and is not likely to be a "repeater."

Horticultural Notes

Apple trees planted 40 feet apart yield 43 bushels more fruit to the acre than trees spaced 30 feet apart, says an eastern investigator.

Pro-pink and pink sprays should be prepared for in April. The disease to be combated is the apple scab. The spray material is lime sulphur. The dilution is one and one-half gallons of concentrate to 50 gallons of water. One and one-half pounds of lead arsenate should be added to control such early insects as curculio.

Many serious consequences may follow when fruit trees, vines and other fruit plants are allowed to starve. Blossoms may form and fall to set fruit, and this is especially true of apples, pears, and plums.

Raspberries, both the red and black varieties, are easy to grow and produce an abundance of fruit the second year. This is also true of blackberries. Just a few plants of each of these fruits will make a fine display of both flowers and fruit and the berries will furnish some of the best.

CAP AND BELLS

OH—HIS BEARIN'S!

In a Montrose school recently a little girl informed her teacher that an airman was flying over Montrose late the night before.

"What was he doing?" asked his teacher.

"Please, Miss, he was looking for his children," was the unexpected answer.

"Looking for his children?" said the teacher, "what do you mean?"

"Daddy said he'd lost his balloons."—Scots Observer.

SIGN OF INDIFFERENCE

"I don't believe my husband loves me any more."

"Why on earth should you say that?"

"Well, he says he don't mind if I dress chic like the other girls do."

Self-Deception

Perhaps you cynically sigh, "In vain to get the truth I try!" Yet most of what is told to you is what you like to listen to.

Watched His Man

An orator, warning to his task, took off his coat, which rather disconcerted one of the stewards of the meeting, who thought that a reporter would make a sensation out of the incident.

Towards the close, he said to the speaker:

"I don't suppose you knew when you removed your coat that a newspaper man was present?"

"Yes, I did," was the reply, "but I kept my eye on the coat all the time!"

Yes, a Few Small Ones

"How has your potato crop turned out, old chap?" asked one ardent amateur gardener of his neighbor.

"Splendid, old man," replied the other; "some are as big as marbles, some as big as peas, and, of course, quite a lot of little ones."—Capper's.

Always Better to Plug

With Brain Than Body

"We hear a great deal about the success that comes from plugging and plugging," said Charles M. Schwab. "I do not deny that this is so, but on the other hand, the man who plugs with his brain instead of his body is bound to go the farthest. A wealthy friend of mine had been forever bragging about his son who had gone into the family factory and worked eight hours a day as a mechanic. 'Both feet on the ground, you know,' boasted the proud parent. So when I met the lad, I said: 'So you're the young man with both feet on the ground. What do you do for a living?' To which he replied: 'I take orders from a man with both feet on a desk.'"

YOUR LINENS ALWAYS LOOK SO BRIGHT AND SNOWY MRS. CROSS

How she gets such snowy washes

"THERE'S really no secret about it, my dear. Everyone knows Rinso washes clothes much, much whiter. Not only that, but it saves hard work. I never scrub any more; I let Rinso soak out the dirt. My clothes come so white, I don't even bother about boiling. I think Rinso is wonderful."

Safe for finest linens

Though it works like magic, Rinso is safe. You can trust your finest linens and cottons to its rich, soapy suds. What lasting suds — even in hardest water! You need no bar soaps, chips, powders or softeners.

Cup for cup, Rinso gives twice as much suds as light, puffed-up soaps — it's so compact. Great in washing machines; the makers of 38 famous washers recommend it. And nothing like it for dishes! Get the BIG package.

Brushless Painter

New York art circles are attracted by an exhibition of painting by a Chinese artist who paints with his fingertips instead of the brush, and draws with his fingernail. Kwei Teng, the artist, has painted in this way for more than ten years and achieves admirable effects in landscapes, both Chinese and Western. He declares that the extreme sensitiveness of the fingertips translates the artist's intentions more directly than any other known tool.

Eskimo Seeks Working Mate

The Eskimo bride is chosen, not for her looks, but mainly because she is good at making clothing, a resourceful cook, and a handy worker around the camp. The girl who is unable or unwilling to do her share of the work, even if she possesses the beauty of a Venus, has a poor chance of finding a mate.

Let Vast Riches Slip Through Fingers

London.—"It's all in the game!" In that laconic sentence was expressed the fatalistic philosophy of a man who once was rich beyond all the dreams of avarice and who now lives in complete and lonely poverty in a remote section of the Transvaal.

Nearly half a century ago the name of Samuel Honeyball was famous throughout the world as one of the four mining prospectors who discovered the richest gold deposit in the world, the Rand gold mines which have been valued at $1,000,000,000 and which have yielded five times that much to their lucky owners.

Found Wreck of Pauper.

Honeyball recently was found living in penury—shaggy, unkempt, aged, the wreck of a man who gained a world and lost it, the living hero of a stranger and more fantastic tale than novelists ever told. But he has no regrets, no resentments, no ill-feelings and but one explanation for the turn in his fortune.

It was nearly fifty years ago that

Londoners were startled by the amazing news from Africa that a rich gold deposit, the richest yet, had been discovered by four men in the bleak ravines of the Transvaal.

Stories of untold wealth began to be heard and before many months men from all corners of the world began to sift into the Transvaal.

Great Discovery Made.

And Honeyball was one of the heroes of the rush, rich and famous. And deservedly, for with his three companions Honeyball prospected in the wild ravines and baboon-infested plains.

Then the great discovery in the Witwatersrand district was made. Gold, conglomerate beds of it, were found.

And in spite of the amount of precious metal the Rand mines have given up since they were discovered nearly half a century ago, the amount still there, waiting to be dug out, is still measured in billions by mining experts. But Honeyball is living in a remote section of the country, depending for his livelihood upon a pension of $3.10 a week.

How he lost his untold wealth is not known and Honeyball will not tell. He prefers not to discuss the matter.

AMBITION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We are all, young and old, obsessed with secret ambition. What we are is nothing when compared with what we are going to be. Youth always has its daydreams, builds its castles in Spain, and while engaged in the dull routine of everyday life, lives another and more glorious existence in the realms of imagination. We have all intended to be what we are not.

Nelson, whom I knew as a boy, was going to congress. He pictured himself rising to oratorical fame, swaying the rulers of the nation with his fiery words, possibly landing finally in the Presidential chair. He died last week on a small farm in central Illinois, a good citizen but never having made a speech, never having had a political job in his life. Perhaps he developed a new ambition before he died. You, too, have had your secret ambition, and I mine, and see where we are today—as far from it as are the poles from each other.

Bryant across the street from me—thirteen years old he is—doesn't care for school. He would be an aviator and fly across the Andes. Walter sees himself on the stage—Charlie Chaplin or George Arliss or even one of the "Gang." Tom is going to be a great engineer and build great bridges rivaling the Tay bridge of which he has seen only the pictures. No one of them probably will ever do what he now imagines, for Bryant is a poor mechanic, Walter has no stage presence, and Tom is flunking arithmetic.

It is curious how these secret ambitions cling to one even when middle age has been reached or long since passed. Saxton is sixty and an accomplished surgeon, and so far as one could guess will stay at his profession until he is carried out by the undertaker. What he would like to do, he says, and what he intends to do, is to quit his profession, buy up the old farm on which he was born in New

One of the smartest "trotteur" costumes evolved by Schlank is shown above. The frock and scarf are of natural pongee hand-embroidered in shades of violet, while the coat is of white galynk with a matching band of fur on the chic cloche hat.

England, and raise sheep—lambs for the spring market—he's always adored sheep and he knows he could make a go of it. The joke of it all is that Saxton really thinks that he will some day do it.

Gordon is a farmer, not a particularly aggressive farmer, but making a living and something more. He's fifty and has never written a paragraph for publication in his life. He tells me he is going to quit the farm some day and strike out as a newspaper reporter. He imagines that it would be a pleasant and easy life. Poor man; how he would be disillusioned!

Smith, who is teaching English in a small cottage, in a moment of confidence, told me the other day that some day he hoped to have saved a hundred thousand dollars. He is going down to Florida then and play golf on the Bellevue-Biltmore links.

It is a good thing to have an ambition even though we never realize it; it keeps us going.

Trouble Trails Honeymooners

Seattle. — Two young honeymoon couples who eloped from California arrived in Seattle in time to be served with summonses in a $10,000 damage action—just 11 days after their double wedding at Reno, Nev.

All the way from Wheeling, W. Va., Albert A. Heunisch motored to Oakland to claim his seventeen-year-old bride, Sylvia. With him he brought his college chum, William B. Dawson of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was to have been "best man."

It was "love at first sight" when Dawson met Sylvia's girl chum and the four decided to make it a double elopement and wedding.

Driving to Seattle on their double honeymoon to visit Heunisch's uncle and aunt, Justice of the Peace and Mrs. John B. Wright, the honeymooners were arrested by highway patrolmen at North Bend on request of authorities at Easton.

"We couldn't imagine why we were detained," Dawson said, "and then we found that a car we passed Sunday had plunged off the highway immediately afterwards. We were supposed to be responsible."

In the car, which dived down a 30-foot embankment, were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Wilson, their eight-year-old daughter, Katherine, and Mr. and Mrs. John J. Cusworth. Mrs. Cusworth, Mrs. Wilson and her daughter were severely injured.

When authorities decided not to file reckless driving charges against the honeymooners they continued their trip to Judge Wright's home. The Wilsons and Cusworths, however, retained Attorney John J. Sullivan to bring personal injury actions against Dawson, owner of the car.

Lone "Ace" Saved King's Throne

Paris.—If truth is not stranger than fiction, then R. H. Davis, O. Henry et al will do some turning in their graves when they hear of Antoine Maillet, the only man on record who ever defeated an army single handed. Some weeks ago, Maillet, a French war ace, undertook a little job for King Tafari Makonen of Ethiopia.

It seems that a certain Ras Gugsu Olie, a former husband of the former Empress Judith, craved to be king, and with that end in view drew up somewhat of an army which offered battle to the loyal troops not far from Addis Ababa, the capital. The king asked Maillet what he could do, and Maillet said he would see.

A few days later the intrepid flyer took out over the lonely mountains and treacherous ravines not to mention the impassable jungles and forests teeming with lions, elephants, crocodiles, boas, leopards, panthers and hyenas. When he sighted the enemy he dropped his majesty's regards. Those who were not killed ran.

The king, learning of the news, was overcome with remorse at the demise of Olie, but nevertheless a reception befitting a hero was prepared at Addis Ababa for Maillet, who returned unscathed to discover that he had earned a place in history alongside of Lafayette, Napoleon and some of the other better-known French fighters.

Maillet's life was not uneventful during the World War. He brought down a dozen German planes, was captured, escaped, won the Medaille Militaire and four other citations, was wounded but continued in active service to the last. The war over, he enlisted with the French troops in northern Africa, where he served until 1928—a brilliant career covering 15 years.

It was only when even the African campaigns began to pall and there was no further reason for his remaining with the French army that he conceived the idea of becoming a soldier of fortune. It was in such a capacity, with the high-sounding title of director of aviation for the Abyssinian army (his being the only plane) that

Not so the wretched Spicer. With some stage idea of himself as a mighty hero urging him on, he seized his rifle, and, before either of us could stop him, had pumped half a dozen bullets into the crowd.

The star-shell of profanity that Caxon touched of, upon this, would have done credit to Flanders—where, by the way, he had probably learned it. If Spicer couldn't hold himself, with firearms, Caxon could and did. But the time had passed for that. One man had fallen and the rest, hoo-hooing as headhunters do, were right on the top of us.

You could not blame them. They were defending their homes and their women from incredible white monsters, who had made the first attack; if we had avoided the village, there would have been no trouble, so I remember thinking at the time. But there was not much chance for thought; we had all we could do, in the next few minutes, to keep our skulls from being smashed by stone clubs, and our bodies spilt by the effective broad-blade arrow used for infighting.

There can be only one end to such a fight. Spicer's carriers fairly ran amuck; mine followed them, and though Caxon and I tried our best to hold the brutes (as well as we could, while defending ourselves) they made a shambles of the village square in about six minutes. Almost all that were left of the tribe bolted into the bush, and the carriers pursued, hoo-hooing in triumph. There is nobody braver than your Papuan when upheld by superiority of arms.

I have said that almost all left. One remained; a huge, powerful fellow, with fiery sunken eyes like a gorilla's, and arms that could have hugged a bear. I didn't notice him until the carriers had charged out of the village. Then something happened, and happened so quickly that I hadn't time to realize it before it was done.

The big fellow, who had been bidding his time, made a leap half across the village square, caught Spicer in his gorilla-like arms, and sprang with him right over the precipice. Caxon, still spouting the eloquence of Flanders and Sari-Bair, followed as fast as he could, but wasn't fast enough. He stood hanging over the edge, alternately cursing Spicer and the chief. I gathered, from a few red-hot sentences, that the black gorilla was one of the party into which Spicer had foolishly fired, some days earlier; that the whole trouble which beset us was due to his earlier folly. This explained what had been puzzling me—the reason for an ambush that the tribe had sprung on us; it would have been more natural for them to clear out when they saw us coming. I hadn't time to think about that, however, nor time to think about anything save one fact which blazoned itself on my mind—that a white man, captured alive by a New Guinea tribe, is very much worse than dead. And as the savage had done, I jumped clear over the precipice.

I heard Caxon shout as I went; no doubt he thought I had suddenly gone mad. Perhaps there was a little madness in the act, because I could not be quite sure that I should light where I the law of centrifugal force, well on the outside of the ledge, so that the luckless fellow's legs hung out over nothing at all. Spicer wasn't insensible, I judged, but he was limp and powerless with sheer fright.

There was no way of getting him unless one risked his life; so, remembering what was likely to happen to him if the savage got away with him, I toppled that worthy over with a shot right into the back from my 45 Colt, and "stood by" to grab.

It was a near thing; so near that I used to wake up in the night and remember it, afterward. The chief went down with a yell that was like the long screech of a train going into a tunnel. I never heard his crash. I had seized Spicer's legs almost as I fired, but he went over the cliff, too, and if I had not dropped into a sitting position and, luckily, jammed one foot against a stone, I should have gone after. As it was, I had to hold up his entire weight until Caxon (who had been scrambling and cursing all this time, trying to get down the cliff face) managed to reach us, and take hold. I was pretty nearly done then.

Between us we got up, and bullied and shoved him, somehow, onto level ground. He was barely able to speak. We gave him whisky, and started collecting the carriers. We were off the line of the village by now; nothing more was seen of the tribe who had ambushed us. Two carriers had been clubbed, and a third damaged. We had to carry him, hoping he might recover.

Again Tatatatata had drawn blood.

On the road once more, I forgot the whole business. It seemed that Caxon did not, however. When we were camped that night, he got me away from Spicer (who seemed to like me rather less than he had done before, on account of that morning's business) and spoke as I had not expected to hear him speak. He seemed to think, absurdly, that my hurried dive of the morning and my rescue of Spicer, were something to be praised; he seemed to want—inexplicably—to make up for it, reward it. "This was bonzer, what you did," he said; looked for a word, and failing to find it, repeated, "Bonzer. I couldn't have." Then he fell silent, and his hands dangled, loose at his sides; he looked at them as if they didn't belong to him before he went on. "I tell you. Clear out. You clear out."

"What?"

"I can't go back on my mates. But—clear out." I looked at him, puzzled. Was he trying to win the race into Port Moresby, get first with an application to the "Mines"? Was it a trick? Caxon was notoriously tricky. Or—what was it?

He saw my doubt, seemed to lose his temper about it. "I've warned you," he snapped. "I'll say one more thing, because . . . it is bonzer. . . . Take another road. Get to Daru. Get across to The Island. Clear. There are countries—You're not believing me. Well, go your own way. Go to h—l." He added a few embroideries, and stalked off. He seemed to be annoyed with himself.

I gave the matter little thought. If I had considered it, had acted other-wise than I did, the course of two lives certainly, three or four possibly, would have been changed. But what is to be, will be. I went on.

So we came back to the Romilly river, we crashed through the last of the Liomas; we left the heat and heavy smell of the bush, and came into the fresh scents of flowing water, and the sweep of the river wind. Before us showed the green, marshy bank, and on the bank, a little group of tents, white, ridged, with separate flies—government tents.

There were white people near the tents; I did not look at them, or even wonder who they were, for, unbelievably, I saw a woman's figure detach itself from the group, and move towards me; I heard it speak my name—and it was Pia.

CHAPTER XI

I suppose that the appearance of Pia, there on the Romilly river far from civilization, when I had thought her safe with her parents by this time, might well have astonished me, started me guessing and wondering. It did not—at first. Nothing on earth seemed so natural and right as that she should be there, should be anywhere where I was. She was my mate, she only, out of all the women in the world, all whom I had known, all whom I had not known. This was as plain to me as the swing of the sun from east to west. The rest of it followed.

Some way apart from the others she stood, on a clear space of marshy grass; it came to me that she had something private to say. I walked towards her; and stopped. I can recall the wimpling sound of the Romilly waters against the anchored launch; smell the smoke of the camp fires, see the little group of white men standing ceremoniously apart. I remembered that I was just beginning to feel a certain uneasiness, that struggled for supremacy against the mastering joy of her presence; her face, when I saw it near, seemed unusually grave. . . . Then I caught her hands, and held them for an endless minute, and I was sure that the trouble did not matter, whatever it was, because it had left her alive, and myself alive, and both of us together.

"Then, Phil, I Want You to Marry Me—Now."

"Phil," she said with curt directness, as if seconds, minutes, were counted. "Will you do something for me? I want you to make a blindfold promise, and you won't like that. I want you to promise you'll ask no questions."

I did not like it. Still, I answered—"I'll promise anything you choose, and ask nothing."

"Then, Phil, I want you to marry me—now."

The promise held—as a heel-rop holds a horse, that would break away, if only it dared. A hundred questions were in my eyes, I have no doubt; I have no doubt either that the whole hundred were drowned, swept out of sight, in the tide of fierce triumph that caught me when I realized that Pia was to be mine today.

She read me. "There's a mission-ary with us," she said. "Mr. Martiney. He's coming now. He'll marry us, but—I can't go with you."

"Go with me? I've come back!" I had her hand; I held it as if never, in life or death, I meant to let it go again.

"Yes," she said, her eyes looking at me and through me, in the same moment, as though she saw something very far beyond. "Yes, but it's good-by, all the same. You promised Phil!"

"I'll ask nothing," I told her. But I kept that slim brown hand in mine, and I never let it go until Rev. Mr. Gartney, and his two witnesses had done with her, and with me; until my seal ring was on her marriage finger, and my name, the Black Sheep's name, was hers till death should part us. Then I let go, to place my arms about her, and before any and every creature who might be looking on, to kiss my wife.

Bobbed Hair Proved to Have Been Viking "Fad"

It has been definitely proved: Bobbed hair was the fashion over a thousand years ago. It cannot be claimed that it conquered the entire world at that time, but we know absolutely that the ancient Vikings, the robbers and seafarers of old, knew the style. This astounding fact, together with many others of perhaps little interest but even greater scientific importance, has been established through the discovery near Tilsit, East Prussia, of a huge Viking burial place, dating from the Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh centuries. The finds are unusually rich. Each man's grave contains three or four iron swords, as many as a dozen lanceheads, bronze belt buckles, stirrups and snaffles. In the women's graves jewelry of all kinds was found, bronze bracelets, rings, necklaces, all beautifully wrought. A young woman with bobbed hair was found in one of these graves, with "zippers" used in place of buttons or pins to fasten garments. Edgar Ansel in the Chicago Daily News.

MARK'S BIGGEST MOMENT HAD COME

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MARK MASON felt that his "big moment" had arrived the very instant he met Sallie West. Such a little doll of a girl she was with her great questioning eyes and her fluffy hair that needed no artificial wave to make it curl on a wet day!

The consensus concerning Sallie was, to his sorrow, that she was a useless, helpless little thing that would be of little help in any man's life except for ornamental purposes.

Because he knew that Sallie would be at the Mannerings house-warming and because he felt that it would be only wisdom to avoid being with her too much, Mark Mason took his small nephew with him in his low-slung sport roadster. He was accepted with shouts of joy from the others in the party when he turned up the natural roadway to the lodge, as they called it.

"What are you going to do with the boy?" they all called merrily.

Mark West packed the six-year-old out of the seat serenely. "Give him a good time in the woods," he replied calmly. "We'll bring you folks a string of fish for your supper tomorrow night, eh, Bobsie?"

"Betcha," Bobsie answered gravely.

It wasn't much of a lodge yet. A small square of a cabin at one side and a garage much larger than the cabin at the other end. Only the central living rooms and a half dozen sleeping rooms had been finished thus far, but the Mannerings were so in love with their woods home that they had decided to have the house-warming now and then another one later on when the house was completed.

"Isn't this just like the forest where Goldilocks found the home of the three bears?" Sallie asked Bob.

Mark clenched his teeth. This was more than he had bargained for. He had never seen Sallie before with children and the fact that Bob followed her about doggedly made it difficult for Mark to keep away from her. And, after all, that was the reason that he had brought Bob along—so that he wouldn't see too much of Sallie.

When evening came Bob suddenly recalled the fact that he had a mother. "I want my mother!" he kept moaning over and over again.

"I thought you wanted to come with Uncle Mark and fish and swim and be a big boy!" reproved his uncle crossly.

They were playing bridge before the great fireplace and Bob had been sitting on the floor playing contentedly until he wanted to be tucked into bed for the night. For a moment Mark was sorry that he had brought the child. His sister hadn't wanted Bob to come. In fact, she had questioned him closely about his reason for this sudden affection toward Bob.

"Now, I'll take good care of him and bring him back Monday morning," Mark had told him. "I'll give the child a dandy week end where there are real woods for miles and miles in every direction."

"Mind you, don't let anything happen to him," she had said the last moment before they had left.

"Here, Mark, take my hand, and I'll put him to bed," Sallie said suddenly.

Mark took her cards and dropped into her chair, trying not to notice the broad smiles on the faces of the other three at the table. In the room off the gallery, where she had taken Bobbie, Mark could hear her singing a little song about three little kittens who had lost their mittens and Bobbie's contented murmurs came now and again. Then a scream startled them all galvanically.

"Oh!" screamed Sallie. It's a forest fire! Look! Look!"

There was an instant of silence and then a mad rush toward the door.

"Get the cars out of the garage," said Mannerings, "and we'll make it all right!"

But the opposite end of the clearing was already in flames that leaped thirty and forty feet into the air. Sparks showered down. Roaring almost like that of surf filled the air and acid smoke filled their nostrils and mouths so that speech was almost impossible.

No one waited for any one else. Primeval days had returned and each one flung himself or herself into the darkness, with self-preservation as the only thought of the moment.

Sallie alone remained behind, her great eyes seeming to question wonderingly what should be done. Even in that moment of tense fear Mark could not help but admire her as she stood with her arm thrown across the child's shoulders protectively.

"Run, Sallie, run!" Mark urged her. "I'll carry Bob!"

"But where will you carry him?" she asked quietly. "In all of this forest there is no place of shelter from forest fire. Everything will burn!"

"Alice didn't want me to bring Bob," said Mark, "and now—now—"

"Down near the garage are the carpenter's ladders," she interrupted. "You stay right here, Bob, and don't you move! Do you understand? We'll come back to get you, but—don't sit from this—spot! Understand?"

She took Mark's hand and pulled him along. He reached for Bob's hand, but she tugged him along.

"We'll get the ladders and put them down the well," she said. "There will be a place the fire can't touch. It will leap over and Bob will be safe. If the others—"

Tiny as she was, Mark found that she had strength enough to help pull the long ladders. As soon as he had them together and was getting them into the well she hurried for the child.

"Uncle Mark first to see that you don't fall in," she said, "then Bobsie boy and then Sallie. Ooh-hoo!" she called to the others, but the only answer came in the form of shrill cries in the far distance.

With tight lips Mark climbed down the black well, holding up his arms for the boy. Above him on the ladder he could vaguely see Sallie when the flames swept the clearing. Sparks fell in on them occasionally and sputtered in the water below.

"All right, Sallie?" asked Mark.

"All right," she answered, with an apparent effort to steady her voice.

"I wish you'd be my Aunt Sallie," said Bob suddenly. "Will you?"

Sallie was silent.

"I wish you would, too, Sallie," said Mark gravely. "I—I never expected to ask you to marry me when we were down a well, but—will you, Sallie?" He knew now that his biggest moment had come.

And although Sallie's voice was very small, the answer was in the affirmative.

Road Runner Unchanged From Pleistocene Time?

The long-legged road runner, a bird whose habitat is in the southwestern part of the United States, has resisted evolutionary tendencies and remained practically unchanged since Pleistocene time, perhaps 100,000 years ago, according to a University of California graduate after a careful comparison of the long-legged road runner with those of similar birds found in the Pleistocene tar beds of Rancho La Brea, Los Angeles.

The study was made by Leigh Marlan Larson from specimens furnished by the University of California museum of vertebrate zoology and by Dr. Loye Miller, professor of biology at the University of California, at Los Angeles.

In explanation of the problem presented by the road runner, Mr. Larson says:

"It may be assumed that the modern road runner is the result of a marked change from the remote common cuckoo ancestry by gradually increasing leg development with a corresponding reduction of the wing elements. Although Pleistocene is relatively close to us geologically, there have been faunal changes since then, and in some instances, it is judged by some students, evolutionary changes. The bird branch of the theoretical evolutionary tree was the latest group to separate from the reptilian stock, and so the evolutionary history of birds is comparatively late. A degree of change since Pleistocene might therefore be a logical presumption, and it has been proffered in some instances.

"With reference to the road runner, then, certain questions come to mind. First, whether the Pleistocene road runner had more powerful and therefore more useful wings, and less developed legs, than the road runner of the present time? Second, has the road runner carried on further development since Pleistocene, or has it been a perfectly stable form for some 100,000 years?"—Boston Herald.

The Failure

Mayor Thompson, welcoming the Australian boys' band to Chicago, said in the course of his address:

"America is so rich in opportunities that the man who falls today is likely to resemble Judson Slosson.

"Judson Slosson ran the general store in Croydon Four Corners. He was doing on the sidewalk in front of the store one balmy afternoon, his chair tilted back against the wall, when a boy awakened him.

"Kin ye let me have half a pound of dried beef, Mr. Slosson?" the boy said.

Judson got up. He stretched himself and yawned. Then he slouched into the store grumbling:

"Consarn the luck! Nobody but me sells dried beef in this old burg, I suppose."

Like Breaking a Bill

Franklin P. Adams says that the best child story that he ever heard is this one. He was dining with a few members of the Cornell university faculty at the home of Dr. Louis Agassiz Feurtes. During the meal course the shrill voice of the 7-year-old Feurtes daughter was heard from the upper regions, "Mamma."

Mrs. Feurtes elected to ignore the appeal.

"Mamma!"

"Yes?" called Mrs. Feurtes from the table, while conversation suspended.

"There's nothing but clean towels in the bathroom. Should I start one?"—Montreal Star.

Differences in Welding

An electric weld is one in which the parts to be joined are heated to fusion by an electric arc or by the passage of a large current through the junction. Oxyacetylene welding is the process of welding metal by means of an acetylene flame, raised to a high temperature by oxygen, conveyed to a burner or torch with a suitable combining nozzle. The acetylene is commonly supplied in steel cylinders.

COW CANNOT EAT ENOUGH PASTURE

Home Grown Feeds Will Fill Out Grain Ration.

(By J. C. NISBET, Extension Dairyman, Kansas State Agricultural College.)

Knowing the needs of dairy cows and what they eat when on pasture will add to the dollars from the milk bucket.

Green, succulent pasture is naturally high in protein but is low in total digestible nutrients. A cow milking over 20 pounds of milk a day cannot eat enough pasture to provide the necessary carbohydrates to maintain that production. Grain feeding of this cow on pasture is absolutely necessary. Her grain ration need not be high in protein—home-grown feeds will balance the pasture. A mixture of 400 pounds of corn and 200 pounds of oats should be fed at the rate of one pound of grain to every four and one-half pounds of milk from the Ayrshire Jersey and Guernsey, and one pound of grain to five pounds of milk from the Holstein.

Dry pasture contains about one-third as much protein as the green succulent grass. An understanding of this fact makes the successful dairyman begin to add a high protein feed to his grain ration as soon as pasture starts to dry. The grain mix then is composed of 400 pounds of corn, 200 pounds of oats, and 100 pounds of cottonseed meal. The rate of feeding is changed to one pound of grain daily to every pound of fat produced a week.

Abundance of pasture is very important to the dairy cow. Being the hardest worked animal on the farm, she does not need a bare gymnasium for exercise. Every time she produces five gallons of milk she has used up more energy than a team of 1,500-pound horses plowing through an eight-hour day.

Cooling Milk Supply

Is Not Difficult Problem

The summer spells are accompanied by the usual loss to milk and cream shippers.

Much milk has been returned as unfit for use, due to souring, and the aggregate loss in only a few days would run into thousands of dollars in a single county. And in every such hot spell there are many farmers who never lose a can of milk and many others who always do. Why the difference? It is all summed up in two things—cleanliness and cold. The first is most important where all dairy utensils are concerned. Improper washing and scalding will do far more to spoil milk than dirty cows or dirty stables on any farm. A cooling tank at the well, through which the water intended for the stock flows, is effective and in common use. Ice is desirable, but many farmers who never have had a can of milk returned are also without ice. A survey of their methods would show real cleanliness in handling the milk and cooling as well as well water will allow.

Controlling Abortion

Is Not Difficult Task

Contagious abortion is not difficult to control, Dr. Robert Graham, Purdue university, stated recently at the meeting of the Indiana Dairyman's association at Purdue. Before attempting to carry out eradication plans the dairyman should learn how the disease is spread.

Correct understanding of the nature of the disease, the importance of the abortion test, segregation of the infected animals and clean stables and clean yards are necessary in control of the disease. If the manager or owner of the herd is not aware of the value of these sanitary measures it is next to impossible for him to carry out a good program.

The local veterinarian assisted by the laboratory is able to give the dairyman assistance that will get results. Veterinarians know that some cows that calve normally may be spreaders of the disease.

Sunflower Feed

Cows keep up their milk flow easier when fed early cut sunflowers in the silo, and they lose less in weight when fed silage from the early cutting than when eating silage from the later harvests. The freshly cut early plants will be very watery, and sap will run out of the silo, unless the plants are allowed to wilt for a short time in the field. They may be cut with a corn binder but hand cutting is probably better.

Treating for Bloat

Formalin is recognized as the best treatment for bloat. This may be secured from any drug store, and should be the 40 per cent solution. One tablespoonful should be mixed with one quart of water and given to the animal, which will give quick relief. In addition to the use of formalin, the old time precautions should be observed to prevent bloat from occurring. Give the cattle a good fill of dry feed before turning on to green alfalfa.

Early Aquatic Sports

In 1715 an Englishman named Thomas Doggett instituted boat races among the fishermen on the Thames. The first English regatta of which we have evidence took place on the Thames off Ralegh gardens in 1775. This was modeled on the Venetian regatta. The first race in the United States occurred in 1811 between two barges, the Knickerbocker of New York and the Invincible of Long Island, the former being the winner.

BEST MEDICINE SHE KNOWS OF

Says "Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound"

Ft. Meyers, Fla.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine I ever heard of. Before my baby was born I was always weak and rundown. I had nervous spells until I couldn't do my housework. A lady told me about the Vegetable Compound and it strengthened me. Beside my own housework, I am now working in a restaurant and I feel better than I have in three years. I hope my letter will be the means of leading some other woman to better health."

Mrs. BERTHA RIVERS, 2914 Polk St., Ft. Meyers, Florida.

Speculation That Failed

The "Mississippi Bubble" was a speculative scheme, projected by John Law, the failure of which occasioned widespread financial distress and bankruptcy in France. As an annex to the bank he had established in 1716, a company was formed which had grants of land in Louisiana and which was expected to realize immense sums by colonization and commerce.

JOAN CRAWFORD HAS COMEDY ROLE IN "MONTANA MOON"

Celebrate the Fourth in East Tawas and see "Montana Moon" at the Family Theatre July 3 and 4. Continuous showing beginning at 2:00 on July 4th. Come any time.

Joan Crawford, still untamed but out of the jungle and into the open spaces, fills this somewhat inconsistent tale with some of the most delightful comedy the screen has held in a long time. Even if you rebel in spots, you'll care for this picture in a big way, in spite of yourself, for it has great gusto and paprika.

Joan is loose on a Montana ranch this time, with Johnny Mack Brown doing yeoman service as an ignorant foreman of cow-gentlemen. And Joan does a tango with Ricardo Cortez that you'll like. In addition, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer turned loose its comic force in full, and Benny Rubin, Karl Dane and Cliff Edwards are funny. Bubbling Joan is back where she belongs, in a light and frolicsome picture, and her fans will welcome the change of style.

ability to entertain, and before the game will put on an exhibition of trick catches, shadow ball, intermixed with comedy. A sensational and happy period of entertainment to all fans at the ball park on July 3 is guaranteed, even to those who have never attended a baseball game. The Havana Red Sox are run on the same lines as a league club, playing baseball every day, meeting all comers, their only rest coming when a rainstorm makes it impossible to put on the game. They tour the country each year in a large and attractive bus, and in the past five years have compiled a record that has put them in demand by premier baseball outfits throughout the country, as well as in Canada.

Manager Dillon can consider himself indeed fortunate in being able to secure the Red Sox to play against his team. Although the players on the Red Sox club are not allowed to play on major league teams, they are not held back from playing in the league parks, and they have already played in the great stadiums of Montreal, Pittsburgh, Jersey City, New Orleans, Scranton, Toronto, and many other Minor League parks. The game here will be called at 5:00 p. m., Eastern Standard time.
