LOCALS WIN TWICE OVER WEEK END

Tawas City eked out a victory over the Cowan-Nickless team from Bay City in the fourth of July tilt by a narrow margin. Although outhit, the locals managed to hit safely when hits meant runs and scored five tallies to their opponents' four. B. Mark, on the mound for Tawas City, pitched supreme ball for six innings, a sore arm forcing him to retire from the game. Boudler, who relieved him, did well with the exception of the final inning when Cowan-Nickless scored three runs, but a good throw from the outfield by Laidlaw cut off the tying run and ended the contest. The game was bitterly fought and closely contested throughout.

The locals made it two straight when they pounded out a 11 to 6 victory over the Saginaw Deuces Sunday. The Tawas team went on a hitting rampage and collected a total of fourteen safeties which were good for eleven runs, while the Deuces bunched their nine hits for six runs. The locals had several rookies on the team, who showed up remarkably well. "Doc" Smith, on the rubber, pitched a fine game, but weakened in the final innings. However, his mates had given him a fine lead in the early innings of the contest and he pulled through in good shape. Walt Moeller was the outstanding hitter, getting three timely safeties.

THREE NEW SONG HITS IN "SHANNONS OF BROADWAY"

Three new song hits, the kind you hear and remember, were written especially for the all-talking picture production of "The Shannons of Broadway," James Gleason's rollicking, record-breaking stage comedy which will be shown at the State Theatre next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

The songs, written by the famous team of Klages and Greer, were injected into Universal's film production of "The Shannons" by Gleason and Emmett Flynn, the director, who added several new features to the film version of the comedy. One of these features is the singing of one of the songs, "Get Happy," by Gleason himself, something he has never attempted before.

"Get Happy" might be termed the inspirational song of the picture, while the love song is "Someone to Love Me," crooned by the youthful Johnny Breden to Mary Philbin, the juvenile feminine lead in the picture. The third new song is "Living the Life of Riley," played by saxophone by Gleason and Mrs. Gleason.

Dr. F. T. Zieske, director of Health Unit No. 2, with the assistance of Miss Myrtle Cowgill, county nurse, will conduct immunization clinics at the court house in Tawas City on July 17, 24 and 30. It is hoped that all the pre-school children in Tawas City, East Tawas and nearby townships may be brought for their three doses of toxin-antitoxin to protect them against diphtheria or they may be vaccinated against small pox. Any adult wishing typhoid vaccine may have it at these clinics. Pre-school children who were not previously examined at the pre-school clinics may be examined.

EWALD WANK

Funeral services for Ewald Wank of this city, who died last Thursday morning, were held Sunday afternoon from the Zion Lutheran church. Rev. F. A. Sievert officiated, with burial in the Zion Lutheran cemetery. The deceased had been suffering from cancer for nearly a year. For the past 14 weeks he had been cared for at the home of his nephew, Carl Lorenz.

Ewald Wank was born January 24, 1847, in Ziemmen, Germany, and was 83 years, five months and nine days old at the time of death. In 1871 he was united in marriage to Pauline Gaul. To this union were born six children, none of whom survive him. In 1884 they immigrated to America and settled in Tawas City. After residing here for three years, they moved to Chicago. In 1894 they returned to Tawas City and have resided here since that time. His wife preceded him in death on April 26, 1918.

Surviving him are a number of distant relatives in Tawas City and Chicago.

Those from out of the city who were here to attend the funeral are: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lorenz and Fred Lorenz of Flint, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Blagborne and Miss Louise Lorenz of Detroit.

Singing and dancing are said to play an important part in "Children of Pleasure," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's all talking adaptation of Crane Wilbur's stage hit, "The Song Writter." Among those who will contribute to either the vocal or terpsichorean end of the production when it shows at the State Theatre Sunday and Monday are Lawrence Gray, last seen and heard in the Duncan Sisters comedy, "It's a Great Life"; Wynne Gibson and Helen Johnson, imported to Hollywood from the New York stage; May Boley, erstwhile vaudeville headliner; Benny Rubin, Kenneth Thomson and Lee Kohlman.

Six songs are listed for the picture, including "The Whole Darned Thing's For You," by Roy Turk and Fred Ahlert. The picture is also said to include a variety of revues and stage skits which were filmed in Technicolor. Harry Beaumont, producer of "The Broadway Melody," directed.

The story, which rumor has it, was inspired by the romance of Irving Berlin, concerns a successful Broadway song writer who is about to marry a society girl when he discovers at the dress rehearsal of their wedding that the girl considers the matter in the light of an "experiment." The picture contrasts the life of the debutante with that of the Tin Pan Alley song plugger revealing the almost insurmountable barrier of class distinction between the two. It is said the producers considered the plot particularly adaptable to screen use in the opportunities afforded by the two distinct locales for interesting scenes.

We wish to thank the friends who assisted us in our time of sorrow; also for the beautiful flowers, the choir, and those who loaned cars.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson Goupil, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Rauhut, Mrs. Rena Goulet, Mr. and Mrs. Simon Goupil, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Goupil, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Carlson, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Donaldson.

CHAUTAUQUA TICKETS ARE NOW ON SALE

The Chautauqua season tickets which residents of the county contracted for last summer, have been delivered to the individual contractors and no effort will be made by the central ticket committee to sell additional tickets until twelve days before the Chautauqua opening date. The interval will give those pledgers with more tickets than they can use themselves an opportunity to dispose of their surplus tickets.

This year's program is a fine one and much more than full value will be exchanged for the dollar expended. Every man, woman and child over four years old within walking or riding distance of the Chautauqua tent should plan to be entertained by the Isosco County Chautauqua from July 28 to August 1, inclusive.

DAVID GOUPIL

Whittmore lost one of its first residents in the passing of David Goupil, who came to that community forty-nine years ago. He passed away at the home of his son on June 29. Funeral services were held from the Whittmore Catholic church last Wednesday morning at 10:00 o'clock. Rev. Roscielnic officiated, with interment in the Catholic cemetery at Whittmore.

David Goupil was born in Quebec, Ontario, in 1845, and was united in marriage to Mary Moran in 1869. To this union ten children were born. His wife died 33 years ago. Two sons, Theodore and Edmond, also preceded him in death.

He leaves to mourn, three sons, Simon of East Tawas, Anson of Whittmore, and Clifford of Detroit, five daughters, Mrs. F. W. Rauhut of Lansing, Mrs. Rena Goulet of Flint, Mrs. H. L. Carlson of Detroit, Mrs. Oscar Hoffman of Monroe, and Mrs. Harold Donaldson of Lansing; also two brothers, two sisters, 13 grandchildren, three great grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends.

A number of relatives and friends from Alpena, Tawas, Bay City and Auburn attended the funeral.

He was a man of sterling character, a faithful member of his church and respected by everyone.

BIG FILM FROLIC IS HILARITY HIT

How would you like to see and hear Maurice Chevalier and Evelyn Brent in a slap-stick Lubitsch sketch which tells all about the Apache dance? Or Buddy Rogers and Lillian Roth in a bright, new catchy-singing-loving act? Or the dialog that would ensue were Philo Vance, Sherlock Holmes, Sergeant Heath and Dr. Fu Manchu to gather at the killing of Jack Oakie?

These are only a few of the hilarious, enjoyable moments, some in Technicolor, which will set audiences applauding at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, when "Paramount on Parade" shows on July 15-16-17.

5,000 ATTEND EAST TAWAS CELEBRATION

The annual home-coming celebration and water carnival held at East Tawas July 4 and 5 proved to be very successful and worth while. The weather man was a bit rough on the crowds on the afternoon of the Fourth and again on the evening of the fifth, but all in all the weather was good for outdoor sports and the many events on the program were run off almost without exception.

The street parade was a pleasant surprise to nearly everyone and was cheered enthusiastically by the crowds lined up on either side of the street and on the pavement leading to Tawas City. Immediately afterward the water fight and greased pig events got under way, followed by baseball games, land and water sports and the parachute jumper.

The Detroit Players and a first class carnival furnished the crowds with various entertainment, together with the fish tug races and speedboat events on the Bay. The dances in the community building both evenings were very well attended, the attendance the first night testing the capacity of the floor. Excellent music was furnished throughout both days by the Bay City Lutheran band and the band concerts both evenings were greatly enjoyed by the thousands in the State Park.

It is conservatively estimated that at least 5,000 people paid homage to the East Tawas State Park over the holiday and a splendid representation was on hand to view the

GROESBECK ENTERS RACE FOR GOVERNORSHIP

With the announcement in the daily press, Wednesday and Thursday that former Governor Alex J. Groesbeck would be a candidate in the coming primary for re-election, the lines of battle in the ranks of the Republican party have been very sharply drawn.

Groesbeck, after a decisive defeat four years ago, again enters the race. Some of his friends think he can win the nomination, others who recall the ruthless way in which he severed with his friends and the way he ruled the Administrative Board, say he is taking advantage of the inner strife in the present administration, and is seeking to again gratify his lust for power.

Today, Wilber M. Brucker, of Saginaw, present Attorney General, is well out in front in the race. Young, energetic and clean cut, with a brilliant record as an attorney behind him, he enters the race with the knowledge that his work on the various state boards has given him a keen insight of state affairs and that he is well fitted to be governor of a great state.

It is a foregone conclusion among those who are vitally interested in politics that Mr. Brucker will receive the nomination and those who know him best say he will make a great executive.

A big surprise was accorded the members of the world power conference in Berlin when the new super-pressure locomotive (above) was shown there. It is radically different from the common steam engine. The feature of the super-pressure engine is that it saves 45 per cent in heating material.

The Passing of the Heath Hen

THE HEATH HEN

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
 IN 1914 there died in Cincinnati a famous native American. "Martha" was her name and her fame consisted of the fact that she was the last of her race, the sole survivor of the countless millions of passenger pigeons which once darkened the skies in their flight in the Mississippi valley. Today somewhere in the protecting scrub oak which covers the green plains of Martha's Vineyard there wanders another native American who is the successor to the unique position once held by "Martha." He bears no man-given name, for where "Martha" died in captivity he is spending his last years in the freedom of a vast reservation which was created 20 years ago to save his species from extinction. But the effort has failed for today this single heath hen, a male, on Martha's Vineyard is the last of his race.

When the earliest settlers came to New England the heath hen was the most abundant of all game birds in the East, being distributed from Cape Ann to Virginia and especially abundant in the lowlands of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Long Island. In fact, in Governor Winthrop's day this bird was so common around Boston that laborers "bound out" to employers stipulated in their agreements with their masters that it should not be served to them as their food oftener "than a few times a week." But when the settlers began cutting off the forests the decline of the heath hen started. The spread of civilization and the increasing number of cats and dogs which preyed upon its young further decimated the heath hen and by a century ago they were gone from the mainland of Massachusetts, although a few lingered for another decade or two on outer Long Island and on the Jersey plains.

Eventually it was discovered that the island of Martha's Vineyard off the Massachusetts coast, was the only place where these birds could be found and even there they were engaged in what seemed a hopeless struggle against death.

In 1876 they were reported extinct and the introduction of foxes and racoons to the island the following year made the death of the race seem certain. But somehow the heath hens re-established themselves. In the early '90s William Brewster reckoned that there might be 200 birds left on the island. The grass fire of 1894 ruined their breeding ground, and observers could find only five birds that autumn. In 1897 a hunter with a bird dog failed to start a single bird. Yet again they came back, only to suffer in another fire in 1906. Massachusetts game wardens set the heath hen population at twenty-one in 1907 and at fifty or more in 1908. Then the state took a hand and gave the birds active protection.

By 1916 the colony had grown to a thousand. The foxes and racoons were exterminated; other pests were kept down. But that summer another fire swept over the heath hen reservation, and that autumn great flights of goshawks descended on the island and preyed on the survivors. In 1917 fewer than 100 heath hens were left; these increased to more than 400 in 1922, when a cold, wet season almost wiped out the colony. Perhaps fifty birds were left in 1923, possibly thirty in 1927. Despite the care of the state and of the Martha's Vineyard Rod and Gun club, despite distribution of food, cultivation of clover and sunflowers, despite the destruction of cats and rats and crows and hawks, the colony dwindled steadily.

And now there is only one left. Prof. Alfred O. Gross of Bowdoin college, who for several years had made an annual census of the heath hens on the island, returned to Boston recently and submitted his annual report. In it he said:

"During the year 1928 the number of heath hens dwindled from three to one lone bird. This bird was alive at the time of the annual census taken March 30 to April 3, 1929. Though suggestions have been made to the state department of conservation to collect and preserve this last bird for science, it has been allowed to live its normal life among the scrub oaks on the sandy plains of Martha's Vineyard island.

"The bird continued to visit the farm of James Green, West Tisbury, during the early spring of 1929, and was reported as late as May 11. After that date, as was the custom of the heath hen in the past, this individual disappeared among the dense scrub oaks to live in seclusion during the summer months. In October, after going through the ordeal of moulting, it again appeared at the Green farm to announce to the world that it was still alive.

"It was seen at irregular intervals during the winter, and since the first warm days of March it has made daily visits to the traditional 'booming' field, the old meadow along the state highway between Edgartown and West Tisbury, in a place less than a hundred yards' distance from Mr. Green's house.

Almost simultaneously with the announcement that the heath hen was traversing the last mile of its road to extinction came the news also that the supposedly extinct passenger pigeon had staged a "come-back." At least two Michigan men, Robert H. Wright, Munising publisher, and Dr. Samuel R. Landes of Traverse City, both of whom knew the passenger pigeon in the days of its abundance, declare that within recent months they have seen passenger pigeons in northern Michigan. Wright, his wife and son declare that from a distance of 10 feet they saw two adult pigeons sitting in the road near Munising, and Doctor Landes and his brother state that they saw a flock of approximately fifteen between Kokomo, Ind., and Indianapolis, while driving from Florida to Michigan.

William B. Merston of Saginaw, one of America's leading authorities on the subject, and Prof. Norman A. Wood of the University of Michigan say there is not the remotest chance for the survival of a single passenger pigeon. Reports have long been received of the pigeon's presence in various localities, but investigation has proved the observers mistaken. Usually the pseudo "passenger pigeon" was found to be a mourning dove, or the band-tailed pigeon from the West.

The extermination of the passenger pigeon was accomplished even more swiftly than that of the heath hen. The state of Michigan was their principal nesting grounds and their rookeries in the northern part of that state covered dozens of square miles, each occupied by one or two squabs, in a single tree. The farmers considered them a pest and the slaughter of the birds which began in the sixties reached its high tide in the seventies, when the commercial possibilities of the birds were realized.

No one took steps to regulate the slaughter, for the supply was considered unlimited. No matter how many thousands or even millions were killed, the enormous flocks still streamed out of the South in April. They still darkened the sun—broke the branches from trees by their weight. Their rookeries still filled the woods. Then shortly after 1880 the pigeons suddenly disappeared.

Pigeons were observed near Cadillac in 1888, but disappeared a month after their arrival. They were traced northward as far as Oden, Emmet county, and are presumed to have crossed the straits of Mackinaw into the Upper Peninsula or Ontario. After 1888 no large flocks were seen anywhere, and the appearance of a single bird was considered worthy of mention in scientific journals.

Another American bird which is now extinct—and has been for nearly a hundred years—is the great auk. It was different from any other American bird, in that it could not fly, although it had great powers of swimming and diving. Its native habitat was the coast and islands of the North Atlantic and from the first arrival of white men on the shores of the New World they preyed upon these birds, seeking out their eggs for food and killing the birds for their feathers. The slaughter of the defenseless birds went on for more than two centuries when it was suddenly discovered that the great auk was all but exterminated. The last specimens, a male and a female, were killed on Fire Island off the southwestern coast of Iceland in the North Atlantic on June 3, 1844, by the crew of a sloop which visited the island for a cargo of meat and feathers of other seafoam which inhabited the place. Today either mounted specimens or eggs of the great auk command huge sums whenever, which is a rare occurrence, they are offered for sale. It is estimated that there are about 70 eggs in existence today while the number of skins or mounted specimens does not exceed eighty.

The great auk and the passenger pigeon are extinct. The heath hen is nearing extinction. And not far behind it on the road to oblivion, in spite of all the efforts that have been made to preserve them, are other species. Notable among these are the majestic trumpeter swan, which is today a rarity even in zoos, and the snowy egret, which is all but extinct because its dorsal plumage in the breeding season furnishes the much-sought agrette for the ornamentation of women's hats. And so widespread has been the destruction of our national bird, the bald eagle, that only recently a bill was introduced into congress forbidding the killing of an eagle, except when it is caught attacking live stock, in an effort to save it from the fate which has already overtaken some of our birds and is threatening so many others.

ROSE DIDN'T LIKE GLUTINOUS TAPIOCA

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ROSE was glad when the fat woman left the car. She felt too sick to stand with the other swaying, glutinous creatures. "Glutinous," she thought, "I must be very sick to think of the snow and slush and the moving crowds as glutinous. And that girl's coat, just like tapioca." Rose had never been ill in her life. She was afraid of illness, for it meant that she could not work. She was glad when the noisy downtown streets lay behind. Everything was glutinous. Her hands felt hot and fat. She thought this must be fever.

She was glad when the conductor touched her arm and said it was her stop. She recalled faintly she had asked him to do that lest she fall asleep, so strange she felt. When she got home she rang the bell. The landlady would grumble, but she could not explain, and perhaps, she would ask her to send for a doctor. She feared she would have to. The snow and the dreadful glutinous world with nothing firm.

"Since you're sick, Miss Brooks, I'd best send for Doctor Smith. He's younger than I like, but he can probably fix you, or send you to the hospital."

Rose, too sick to be frightened at the dreadful word hospital, nodded and crept up the glutinous stairs to her bed.

"How foolish, how can the stairs be glutinous? It's the rubbers—" Bed was not so comfortable, as she had hoped it would be. Everything was over-fat and over-soft, and when she closed her eyes they fed her tapioca.

It was three days later that Rose awakened, and then she thought she must be insane.

For she lay in a pretty room, in a rosy apartment (at least the bed was a folding one), and opposite was a piano with Bach's "Fugues" on the stand open. There were goldfish in a bowl in the window and clean snow descending outside against a vivid blue sky. In the only large chair sat an extremely pretty girl of about her own age.

"Well, Miss Rose Brooks," she said, approaching the bed, "I can see you're nearly well again. I'm Esther Smith, my brother is your doctor, and we just couldn't let you go into a hospital, so we brought you here. And this is your breakfast. I hope you hate sloppy cereals, because I do. Just orange juice and toast and this egg, which is from my sister's home in the country. And there's honey." Rose surprised herself by sitting straight up and wanting very much to eat what was on this pretty tray.

"But," she said, and didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

"You eat and I'll talk. You were delirious when my brother saw you. No. You haven't been very ill, dear, forgive me, we thought you were rather thin. You see, I worked before Ralph came to the city and I know what restaurant food is."

Here the doctor himself came in and took her wrist. He laughed. "Well, you're a prize patient, all right," he said, sitting down by her side, "just go on eating, please."

"What's been the matter with me?" said Rose.

"Anemia and inanition, if you want scientific terms."

"I don't. What was it, really?" said Rose, and the Smiths laughed.

"Too good a constitution and appetite to stand underfeeding, and too hard work for anyone to stand."

Rose looked shy. "You see, I don't earn very much," she said, "and Maura must go through high school. . . . She's in the country, my little sister."

"I see," said Doctor Smith. "Only you know, it's a mighty funny thing, but we can't live without eating. There is a vacant spot on that tray that goes to my heart," he continued. "Where's the second egg?"

His sister flew to get it. "Here," she exclaimed.

"And now," went on the doctor, "I called up your employer, and he couldn't keep your job open, I am glad to say. No. Wait a minute, please; I know of a better one directly you are ready to take it. You're a college girl, aren't you?"

"State university, yes," said Rose.

"Well, my sister is a teacher, and she wants an assistant. At a private school near here."

"But I must owe you a frightful lot of money, don't I? Your sister must have been nursing me, and you—oh, it's awful! I've never been ill in my life before."

"I know that," the doctor shot a triumphant glance at his sister.

"Bang go my chocolates," said the sister.

"Yes, I shall have a month's supply of cigarettes," responded Ralph. "A little bet, my dear Rose Brooks. Well, now, I must be off. Eat a great deal and play with my sister. It's lucky it's vacation. By." And he was gone.

"You don't know how glad I am to have you to play with," said Esther, kissing Rose. "But I am very curious about one thing. You kept saying everything was glutinous, and I couldn't understand what you meant."

Rose laughed. "Oh, the snow looked exactly like tapioca, which I loathe."

Esther clapped her hands. "You're doomed. That is, if you can learn to like him. My brother has sworn to marry any woman who has perfect health and hates tapioca. He is nice, isn't he? My! but you're blushing! I wish I had your rich complexion and black hair."

"Yes, I like Doctor Smith, but, of course, that's ridiculous," said Rose primly.

"And 'Doctor Smith' likes you," persisted his sister.

And perhaps the two elderly Miss Graingers, who kept a select private school, were the only ones who were really sorry when the assistant teacher in the English department was married. Esther, who couldn't resist a joke, gave the bride a baroque pearl with the remark that it looked like glorified glutinous tapioca.

The queer thing is that next to her engagement ring it's Rose's favorite jewel.

Few Who Have Not Felt Lure of Chicken Range

Once there was a hod carrier who had to work with a group of other hod carriers who were always ragging him. They poked fun at him because he could not carry as many hods in a day as they could. Each of the others, too, could carry more in his hod at one load—or so he claimed. The man cursed his luck and wished he had gone in for chicken raising on a small scale.

There was a clerk in a big store who felt that life had handed him the rawest of raw deals. Seemed as if he couldn't get along with his fellow clerks. They ragged him and called him slow and he wanted like everything to quit the clerk business and raise chickens.

The owner of the store was sadder than any of his clerks and often he could not sleep nights. It appeared—at least to him—that his fellow merchants wouldn't play ball as to prices and the like. Sometimes they accused him of things of which he was not guilty and this interfered with his appetite. He often wished that he had gone in for raising chickens.

Senator Blank almost passed out from sheer envy when President Double Blank was elected. He had wanted the office like all get out and it gravely him to see Double Blank get in there. He had a notion to chuck politics once for all and get him a small chicken ranch back home.

"So they turned down another of my appointments, did they?" scowled President Double Blank. "Oh, dear, oh, dear," he sighed, "I used to think that to get into the White House would be the life of Riley. All that senate has done since I got in is razz me. A fellow'd be a darned sight happier raising a few Barred Rocks and selling the eggs from house to house."—Omaha World-Herald.

The Statue and the Mayor

The late Ira Remsen, president emeritus of Johns Hopkins, was much hurt by the sharp attacks on universities that have recently come from the pen of H. G. Wells, and Doctor Remsen said one day to a Baltimore reporter:

"You'd think from Wells' words that the men our universities turn out were all like the mayor of Nola Chucky."

"The mayor of Nola Chucky, you know, was summoned to unveil a statue of a famous general in the neighboring town of Paint Rock, and on his return from the ceremony a lady said to him:

"Is the general's statue pretty?"

"So-so," said the mayor. "So-so."

"Is it an equestrian statue?" she went on.

"Equestrian?" said he. "Well—er—not particularly."

Didn't Want to Butt In

It was the height of the grass fire epidemic. The telephone was jingling and jangling in the fire alarm telegraph room. Half a dozen companies were out on fires and a bell alarm was in.

"Fire department," one of the alarm room operators said as he picked up the receiver.

"Say," he heard a man's voice, "there's some old papers burning close to the house up here."

"Well, what are you doing?" the operator asked.

"I'm watching 'em burn," came the reply.

"Why don't you stamp on the fire and put it out?" the man was asked.

"Well, I don't want to butt in on your business," was the astonishing answer the operator heard.—Worcester Telegram.

Hesitating Airmen

Captain Trumbull Harris, the well-known aviator, said at a dinner in San Francisco:

"The America's long delay on account of weather and her final departure in the worst weather known to man teaches us a lesson, namely, that the aviator, of all people, mustn't hesitate.

"Hesitating aviators are as ridiculous as Jaggers.

"A friend calling on Jaggers, found the man bending over a shirt with a rapt, dreamy, perplexed look.

"What's up?" the friend asked.

"Well," said Jaggers, "I'm in a quandary. This shirt is too dirty to wear and not dirty enough to go to the laundry, and I don't know what to do about it."

She completed her training at Portland, Ore., and the photograph was made just before she hopped off for a solo flight. ## FEDERAL LICENSES FOR GLIDER PILOTS

Three Classes Established by the Government.

Washington.—Glider pilots will be licensed by the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce under amendments to the air commerce regulations announced by Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce for aeronautics. Licenses will be of three classes, student, non-commercial and commercial.

The aeronautics branch adopted the amendments believing that the policy would encourage the glider movement in this country while adhering to the department's principle of recognizing only competent airmen and airworthy craft.

Explaining the three classifications, Mr. Young said: "Glider student permits, authorizing the holder to receive instruction and to solo licensed gliders while under the jurisdiction of a licensed glider pilot, will be issued by the Department of Commerce inspectors and department divisional offices upon application. No physical or written examination will be required.

Examinations and Tests.
 "The non-commercial glider license will serve the group that is desirous of operating gliders only for sport and pleasure. This license parallels, to a degree, the private airplane pilot license. The only examination required for this license will be a flight test, which will consist of a minimum of three flights, including moderate banks in either direction.

"The commercial glider pilot license will be issued to all applicants physically qualified who successfully accomplish the flight tests involved.

"The flight test for the commercial glider pilot license, in addition to normal take-offs and landings, includes a series of general and moderate banks, 360 degree turns and precision landings. The glider pilot license will be issued to all grades of airplane pilots upon a satisfactory completion of the tests involved."

Application forms for licenses may be obtained from Department of Commerce inspectors or divisional offices.

League of Glider Clubs.

A league of glider clubs, operating under a central organization which will handle interclub competitions and function as a general aeronautical educational bureau, has been put into operation in the National Capital under the auspices of the Aviation School of America, according to announcement by Henry R. Marks, secretary and treasurer.

The central body is to be known as the Washington Society for Aeronautics and four principal committees have been organized.

Thirteen clubs, or units, consist of 25 members each and will function as independent glider clubs, each electing its own officers and financing its own activities. The president of each unit will act as a member of a central executive committee.

Though each unit will be limited to 25 active members, an associate membership class is planned within each unit. Gliding is to be done at Mile Square field, near Alexandria, Va., and two silver trophies already have been donated as awards for interclub competitions.

Professors Will Fly

New York university, according to Dr. John W. Withers of its school of education, plans an extension course next fall in which professors of education will be sent by plane to cities and towns in New York, Maryland, Massachusetts and Delaware for instruction to teachers in grade and high schools. "The time is not far distant," says the truly air-minded dean, "when the skies will be dotted with ships hurrying their cargoes of education to many destinations."

FLYING AT GREAT HEIGHTS NOT EASY

Soucek Tells of Winds, Cold and Thin Air.

Washington.—The world's foremost altitude flyer, Lieut. Apollo Soucek of the navy, holds no hope for practicable commercial aviation operation at great heights. An altitude of 10,000 feet, or two miles, he believes, will mark the limit of ordinary air transport operation.

In the light of present-day knowledge of conditions in the bitter cold upper air levels, Lieutenant Soucek contends, there is no real basis for predictions that passenger lines some day will operate regularly at enormous altitudes, above the level of the highest clouds and storms.

"We must remember," Soucek said, "that there are almost unvarying trade winds in the upper air. In this country these winds blow with unflinching regularity from the southwest to the northeast and at great altitudes this wind maintains tremendous velocity. "Except for planes flying from the southwest to the northeast there would be no benefit derived from climbing up into these great trade winds. It would obviously be to no one's advantage to climb miles above the earth and then try to buck a 75-to-100-mile-an-hour head wind when favorable winds might be found closer to the earth's surface.

"Then, too, we must take into consideration the fact that the air is rare and very cold always at high altitudes. It would be necessary to heat airplane cabins and to provide oxygen for passengers, and such a procedure would be expensive and would entail the carrying of heavy equipment."

At altitudes above 25,000 feet, Lieutenant Soucek pointed out, the temperature remains fairly constant throughout the year and above 40,000 feet this temperature ranges down to 73 degrees below zero, regardless of the season on the earth's surface eight miles below.

New Airplane Motor Devised by Germans

Berlin.—Germany will soon challenge the world with a new air-cooled airplane motor of 500-550 horse power; the Siemens firm having just produced a type of its own.

The new motor, nine cylinders, weighs only 800 pounds with the remarkably low fuel consumption of 212 grams, and an oil consumption of 12.7 grams per horse power an hour.

A 50-hour test under supervision of the aeronautical control bureau was successful, 600 horse power being developed at 1,900 revolutions a minute.

A steady development of 485 horse power on long-distance flights can be relied upon, the inventors declare.

Hammond Invents Eye for Plane in Fog

Boston.—John Hays Hammond, Jr., noted for his radio research work, announced at his laboratory in Gloucester that he had invented a television system that gives an airplane an eye like a hawk, no matter how thick the fog that hovers over a landing field. The radio eye enables the pilot actually to see the scene below him on a television screen placed ahead of him in the cockpit.

Mr. Hammond and his staff of engineers heralded the new system as one of the greatest safety factors so far developed for aviation. He described the invention as the wedding of the two sciences, radio vision and aviation.

Just received a carload of salt—Barrels, 100 lb. sacks, 50 lb. sacks, 25 lb. sacks and blocks. Be sure and salt your hay as your stock will do better and it keeps your hay from moulding in the barn.

Clerk: "I can't help being sleepy in the office. My baby is teething and every five minutes wakes me up." Chief: "If that is so you had better bring him to the office."

If you want to keep your cows up in shape, use about one-half as much Hexite as you would in the winter and you will get results.

Mother: "Darling, were you a good boy at Aunt Nell's today?" Little Larry: "Yes, I never asked for a thing at the table. I waited till after dinner and asked for more pie in the kitchen."

Cracked corn at $2.30 per 100 lbs.; coarse corn meal, $2.30 per 100 lbs.; whole corn, $2.15 per 100 lbs.; flour middlings at $2.20 per 100 lbs.; wheat bran, $1.90 per 100 lbs.

Mistress: "Amy, what on earth are you doing?" Maid: "Well, ma'am, I finished cleaning the windows, so I thought I'd make a good job of it and empty the rubbish out of these 'ere boxes below the windows. So much dirt in 'em, ma'am, that things 'ad started to grow in 'em!"

Just received a car of bran and middlings and a car of Pillsbury's flour.

Now is the time to put in your winter's coal while the prices are down.

We have just received a car of plaster and lime.

"How was your stay at the beach?" "Fine, but the first tan days were the hardest."

Bevan P. Sharpless, a young scientist of the Naval Observatory at Washington, has started on a 7,300-mile journey to the tiny island of Niuafo, where he will observe and photograph a total eclipse of the sun which will last only 1.9 minutes. The photograph shows him at work at the observatory preparing for the trip.

First Picture of Waterspout

Washington.—An airplane has flown around a waterspout, permitting the recording of the first still and motion pictures ever made from the air of this awe-inspiring phenomenon.

The photographs of the twisting column of water and vapor were made between Miami and Havana by the seaplane survey party of the National Geographic society which is making a comprehensive aerial study of the geographic features and weather conditions along the east coast flying routes between North and South America.

Frederick Simplic, in charge of the party, describes the unusual experience in a communication to the society's headquarters here.

"Roaring across the sea from Key West to Cuba," he writes, "the giant flying boat 'Argentina' was almost in sight of Havana when a heavy rain squall suddenly blew up to starboard. Pilot Hawkins, to avoid the angry black cloud, veered to port. Then, to our amazement, there quickly dropped from the north end of the storm cloud the thin, writhing black column of a waterspout. In a few seconds, as we watched, it grew to a black, whirling corkscrew at least 600 feet high and probably 50 feet or more in diameter.

"At first glimpse of the ominous natural phenomenon Jacob Gayer, staff photographer, and Capt. Albert W.

Stevens, noted army parachute jumper and aerial picture man, seized cameras and made for open ports. Calling Pilot Hawkins through his speaking tube, Stevens asked him to circle the spout, approaching as closely as safety would permit.

"A sinister, frightful-looking monster the spout had now become, like a giant factory chimney linking the heavens with the sea. Then, as it grew in size and whirled and twisted, it took the shape and appearance of a great snake, spray and mist rising in clouds from where its tail lashed the sea. Yet its writhing edges were as clean-cut as a broad band of black ribbon.

"All day the sky had been overcast, the sea calm, the air supercharged with moisture. It was from a particularly black, low-lying cloud that the great spout had developed; and, as we flew round and round it, Gayer and Stevens made a series of pictures. First they shot the straight, dark descending line that marked the monster's formation; then its great twisting black bulk; and, finally, a long, grayish snake-like arm that swung off at 45 degrees—its lower end now whipped into thinning water-strands like the frayed tail of a colossal horse. By my watch, it was exactly seven minutes from the time the spout first formed until it faded into the black depths of the moving squall. Twenty years ago my tramp steamer in the China seas ran from a waterspout. Now, in a plane that could fly 127 miles an hour, we impudently played tag with one—and took its picture!

"Whizzing over Morro castle we landed in Havana harbor in a tropical downpour, to find crowds of Cubans in sheltered places along the waterfront excitedly discussing the 'cyclone.' 'The only way to stop one,' said an excited customs inspector, 'is to shoot it!'

"But for this amazing prank of nature, our air cruise from Washington down to Havana was without adventure. Down the Potomac the ship had flown, past Arlington and Mount Vernon basking in a Sunday morning sun. Above the battle fleet at Hampton Roads, past Norfolk and out to sea—with the so-called Great Dismal Swamp stretching far to the west. A vast, dark blue and mysterious waste it is, seen from the air, with here and there what seems to be cleared and cultivated areas.

"Towns, lighthouses, islands, rivers and estuaries slipped before the watchful eyes of our cameras. Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, lay along the path of the ambitious aerial survey which began at Anacostia Naval base and will end in the Argentine."

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Lost Ambassador

WHEN, in the early part of the last century, it became necessary to transmit certain papers of great diplomatic importance from the Court of St. James' to that of the Emperor Francis of Austria—documents which urged Austria to declare war against Napoleon—the man chosen for this delicate mission was a young diplomat named Benjamin Bathurst, son of Lord Bishop Bathurst of Norwich.

Young Bathurst had been in the service of the foreign office for several years and had always showed himself to be as dependable as he was fearless and his journey to Vienna was made practically without incident. While he was still at the Austrian capital there occurred the famous battle of Wagram, followed by an armistice and peace highly favorable to the Napoleonic forces. Bathurst, however, was informed in no mild terms that he had incurred the displeasure of the French emperor by reason of his exploit in reaching the Austrian court in time to swing the tide which brought that nation into the conflict and, when he started on his return trip to London, he purposely took an indirect route leading through Trieste and Malta in order to escape the vengeance of Bonaparte. In addition, he traveled under the incognito of "Herr Koch, a traveling merchant," and his attendants as well as himself were heavily armed.

Nothing occurred until Bathurst arrived at Perlborg, on the road to Hamburg, where the party stopped at noon. His secretary and his valet reported later that the young diplomat had been absolutely fearless during the journey and did not appear to be in the least troubled by the dangers through which he had passed unscathed. As Bathurst sat at dinner in the Inn of the White Swan, however, the maid who was serving him saw him glance up suddenly and, as she later phrased it, "Turn white as a ghost and shake as if he had been stricken with the palsy." Wheeling around, she caught a fleeting glimpse of a man's back, moving rapidly away from the window—but that was all. Immediate search of the premises was made, without result. No suspicious characters had been seen and no strangers had been reported, save the usual noon-day arrivals at the inn.

After finishing his dinner, Bathurst informed his secretary that he would alter his plans and remain at the inn overnight, pressing on toward Hamburg in the morning. Then he went to the commandant of the army post nearby and, stating that he had reason to believe that his life was in danger, requested an armed guard around the inn at night. Soldiers were accordingly detailed as an additional protection and a cordon of them was thrown about the inn at sunset.

About two hours later Bathurst stepped outside the door of the inn—but not outside the circles of armed guards—to make certain that his horses were ready to continue their journey on the following day. According to the accounts of those present at the time, the Englishman could not have gone more than five steps without being visible to some of the soldiery. But, despite all the precautions, he disappeared as completely as if the earth had opened and swallowed him!

Some fifteen minutes later, alarmed by his master's failure to return, Bathurst's valet started in search of him, only to find that the young diplomat had never even reached the stables behind the inn, nor did the most thorough search of the surrounding country bring any clue to light until, nearly a month later, two peasants in search of firewood came across a pair of trousers such as Bathurst had worn, concealed in the forest some two miles distant. The trousers were stained with blood and, in one of the pockets, was a half-written letter to Mrs. Bathurst, informing her that a certain Count d'Entraigues, a French spy, had been seen nearby and that Bathurst himself feared that he might never return to England alive.

Bathurst d'Entraigues was the man whom Bathurst had seen through the window of the inn? The supposition appears to be likely, but, even granting that it were, how did the Frenchman succeed in capturing Bathurst under the very eyes of his own men and the armed guards? Also, what disposition was made of the Englishman's body, for the river was dragged and the country searched for miles around without locating another clue. However, in tearing down a house near the inn nearly forty years later, the skeleton of a man was found buried under the floor, but this was never identified, and the disappearance of Benjamin Bathurst remains one of the mysteries of the Napoleonic wars—particularly since the Count d'Entraigues was murdered a short time after Bathurst vanished.

Solarium for Miners

The deficiency of sunshine which is experienced by miners is being atoned for in the case of an Idaho mining plant by subjecting these workmen to a treatment of artificial sunshine. The health-giving ultra violet rays which are absent in the lower regions are being supplied by electrical means as the men leave the mines. This is achieved through the agency of a moving platform, which will carry the men slowly through a narrow cabinet equipped with six powerful mercury-quartz lamps—the arrangement being such that the artificial sunlight will strike every part of the body. The solarium will be available to the miners' families.

Confesses Big Art Swindle

Paris.—Charles Millet, grandson of the painter of "The Angelus," has confessed to selling for tens of thousands of dollars to London and New York art dealers pictures falsely attributed by him to his grandfather and other great artists.

The whole collection of Millets in the famous Barbizon museum, states Charles Millet, are also forgeries.

The paintings were made for him by a skillful copyist named Cazeau.

The investigations which brought this vast swindle to light began a few days ago. An art dealer in London applied through the Melun magistrates for the return of several genuine bronzes by Rodin which he had consigned to Millet for sale and for which he had received no payment.

Police raided Millet's house in the Forest of Barbizon, where his famous grandfather had lived and worked. After a severe interrogation, Millet confessed that for years he had been exporting, principally to England and America, paintings guaranteed by him to be the works of Millet, Monet, Degas, Corot, Cezanne, Sisley and other impressionist masters of the last century.

The works sent to England and America were sold in some instances, it is understood, for sums exceeding $50,000.

A panic is growing in the Paris art market owing to the widespread nature of this scandal. Dubious paintings by the Nineteenth century masters are being obtained at astonishingly low prices. No fewer than 4,000 forged pictures have been sold to unsuspecting dealers and collectors, state the police.

Art experts are working tirelessly, visiting collections whose owners are anxious for reassurance regarding the true value of their treasures.

Sees Burden in Long Life

Rochester.—She has a far better chance than most persons to run off with the honor, but Mrs. Sophie Reich of 225 Gregory street doesn't want to be one of the select few who live to be one hundred.

Mrs. Reich recently cut a birthday cake with ninety-seven candles on it at a dinner party given her by her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

While flowers and greetings poured in on her she told a reporter why it doesn't pay to live too long. "You get too stupid," she declared, adding:

"Once your faculties become imperfect you are a burden to your family, too, and I don't want to be that."

Mrs. Reich is small and dainty, the kind of old lady who looks well in a white bonnet, but she doesn't go in for that sort of thing. She was quick with a retort to every question. She doesn't need an ear trumpet and she walked about with as nimble a tread as if she were twenty.

She came to this country from Germany, a young woman of twenty-two. Mrs. Reich's husband, Christian Reich, died in 1881.

She was the guest of honor at an "old folks" service in St. Paul's Evangelical church, along with all members who are over sixty years of age. "Children of Life's Sunset Slope" was the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Elmer H. Hoefler.

Stratagists Plan for Large Scale Inundation

The story of how the Dutch, in the days of the prince of Orange, opened the dikes and flooded the country to drive off the Spanish invaders is well known. The story of how the Allies did the same in this last war to hold back the Germans for a few precious weeks is also well known. Now the French ministry of war plans to make inundation a regular part of their defense at the north.

Before, when the dikes have been opened, it was only as a last resort, because land flooded by salt water is rendered sterile for years, so that only the greatest necessity would force the French to open the gates to the seas.

However, they plan to build a line of dikes and levees that will permit mixing salt water with fresh water, so that the land will be fit for cultivation sooner.

This new system would allow flooding the land at any time and in a very short period of time. Army maneuvers this fall will include manipulation of the existing locks.

"She's right there, if you could see it," I told her. "Thank God you can't. But have you heard anything definite?"

"Only since she went. Yesterday. A boat came in from the west, and there were a lot of men who hadn't done well, and were going away again. But they said some had done well; and they said—I heard them; I listened like a—like a housemaid."

"What did they say?" I was prepared for misfortune now.

"They said that Smithson—the man you sent—was drinking. And somebody asked them 'What's he drinking?' Gin-Slings? And they laughed most frightfully, and I couldn't hear any more. But it sounded badly, Phil. I can't tell you how glad I was that today was visiting day; I thought you ought to hear it at once."

I thought so, too; her information troubled me more than I chose to say. Smithson had been working the claim satisfactorily enough. Gold in various amounts had been paid into the bank for me, my partner taking his agreed percentage. So far, so good. But the last payments had been, undoubtedly, very far spaced out; and the written reports sent in from time to time were diminished both in number and in size. Solitude of Tatata was solitude no longer; the unblazed track was trampled by scores of miners and hundreds of carriers; men from every Australian goldfield were trying their fortune and some were making it—but no one had struck anything, no one even hoped for anything, as rich as the prospecting claim that belonged to me. "I'm sleeping right on the claim at night," Smithson had said. "I and the boys. We're doing wonderful, but we have to be careful nobody goes and jumps it on us."

"The Emperor turned up here a while ago," ran another letter (I did not need a translation of that name.) "What do you think, he's married Genevieve Treacher, the one they call Gin-Sling Caxon is here, too. He and the Emperor are working partners. I think they've got a decent claim, but of course nobody has anything the like of yours. Send me up a good dog if you can hear of one, they're worth a dozen sentries."

Then a long period of silence. Then a brief letter, mentioning the dispatch of another parcel of gold, and saying little else.

After that came silence again. I had not heard from Smithson for two months now. And on the top of it came Pia's news that he was drinking.

Then it was that I felt, for the first time, the full weight of my chain. Something was wrong at Tatata; I knew that as surely as if I had been there to see. The pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow, so wonderfully found, was in peril. With it was imperiled all the dignity, all the security, of my future life; all the excuse I had for dragging Pia down to the level of a convicted felon. And Smithson, whom I had trusted as I would have trusted myself, in whose hands lay my whole fortune, was failing. And I must stay here; stay in the pebbled prison yard and the foolish chicken-wire cell; work on the jetty, walk a few yards out and back, see the white road and the blue sea before me, and know that for nearly four years, at the very best, I could not hope to treat the one or sail the other. Not free, not free!

I think that all the sorrows of all the prisoners in the world—flowed over me in that brief minute when I sat silent, under Pia's troubled eyes, trying to pull myself together and think what must be done.

The silence was broken by Head Jailer Holly, who, with many cracklings and unfolding of his newspaper, remarked briefly that all we had to say must be speedily said. For two weeks I could have no letter, for a month, I could see Pia no more. If she was to do anything for me—and it was becoming plain that by nobody else could anything be done—then we must settle it at once.

But how? The time was almost out. Head Jailer Holly was folding up his paper, rising from his seat. Pia, surely the prettiest, daintiest picture that had ever brightened that sad place—was already putting up a face like a sweet pale rose, for our last kiss. I took it. I held her for a moment closer than usual, moved by some indefinable, dark presentment. I found words, somehow, at the last moment; words hurried, tumbling over one another. "Take out a power of attorney for me," I said. "They'll let me sign it. Inquire about so-and-so, and so-and-so" (I gave her a few names) "and find which of them will take Smithson's place. He'll have to go up at once; don't wait for letters to me. Write as soon as you can. Good-by, little love" (she was near as tall as I, but the adjective came naturally; Pia would always be "little" to anyone who loved her). "Take care—"

"Time up," said Head Jailer Holly.

More than ever, did I long for letter day. But when my letter came at last it brought no comfort with it, rather distress and dismay. The power of attorney had come made out for Pia. I had wondered a little but signed it. And now the letter told me that Pia had gone to Tatata herself. "You mustn't worry about me," she wrote. "There was nothing else to do. From all I can hear, it's a woman, and only a woman, who is wanted to look after your interests just now. Don't worry about me; the place is well opened up, and the warden sees that order is kept. I may be a good while; no knowing what I shall find. Good-by, my very dearest. Give my love to the Prince if he comes along. I'm sorry I shan't be there to meet him; he is a perfect duck. They say he's going to be married now—lucky princess! But I wouldn't change my own prince for him."

I had plenty of leisure, in the too-long nights, to con over her letter again and again; try to read between the lines of it, and guess at certain things she had not openly stated. "Only a woman—" What could be meant by that? The reference to the "Prince" I understood; but it cut sharply despite that pretty saying about her "own prince," for I knew that the forthcoming visit of one of England's best-loved royalties would only, for me, add to the weight of the invisible fetters I carried night and day. To know that the town was holding festival, to see, from the high, fenced yard of the jail, mast a-flutter with flags, new archways built over roads; to hear the gun-salute and the very cheers, and know oneself set apart from it all, not able even to stand in the crowd and send one's hat and one's heart up in a shout for old England and her Prince—this hurt my sense of Empire; made the hard state of prisoner, in anticipation somewhat harder. But I put the thought away; determined not to think about princes and royal visits, which could mean nothing to me. . . . If I had known!

What follows, I gained from Pia, long after all was past.

CHAPTER XII

Near sunset, Pia came to the last camping place but one, before the field of Tatata. She was not alone; the government authorities had sent with her an escort of armed constabulary, since a certain number of these were due to go up to the field in any case. Placed in charge of an old and trust-worthy sergeant, they had served and guarded her faithfully through the trip—"savages in serge," but true to their salt—and on this last night but one, they were very merry over the near fulfillment of their task. It was some credit to them, and to Sergeant Simoi, too, they felt, that they had brought the Sinabada (lady) safe through all the perils and fatigues of the wild bush, and almost reached the field.

Simoi did not encourage wandering away from the camp. The government—had "talked strong" to him, before he left, regarding the lady's safety, and all that must be done to ensure it. So, when they were putting up the tents in this last camping ground but one Simoi, seeing the lady at the edge of bush clearing, called out to her to be cautious.

"You no go walk-about, Sinabada," he pleaded. "S'pose you wante flower, me and my police we gettem plenty."

"Dutch Treat" Makes No Hit With Modern Girl

To the young man who writes to ask if it is proper to let the girls pay for their share of an evening's entertainment we reply that it is. Perfectly proper but highly improbable.

Experiments have been made in this direction, but somehow or other they didn't work. Even when the girls propose the idea it doesn't make a hit with them if the boys take them too literally in the final settlement. Positively, the girls don't like it. Maybe it is because woman is more conservative than man, and one of her inherited privileges is to say that the woman pays while she sees that the man does it.

Of course, when the girls suggest a dutch treat the wise thing is to seem to fall in with the idea, and then to buzz your own girl into granting you

By-n'-by one big bush fig he coming, he altogether kai-kai (eat) you." "There are no pigs about, and I don't want flowers," came Pia's clear voice, just a little tired. "Thank you, Sergeant Simoi; I am only looking at that funny light in the bush."

"What-name light, Sinabada?" "I don't know what it is. It seems like a very big tent, some way off. And I think I heard—but that's impossible."

"What-name you think you hear?" "Corks," replied Pia. "Corks being pulled—and singing."

"Sinabada, me think you lie," replied the sergeant courteously using the native fashion of expressing astonishment. Then, suddenly, slapping his thigh, and leaping—"B— Sinabada, you no lie, me hearem, too. What-fashion this?" (What does this mean?)

"We'd better go and see," said the girl. "Me and you," declared the sergeant, "we go see. I beggie-pardle, Sinabada, I walk first." He set his sturdy bulk in front, and, by the last faint glow of twilight, began cutting a path through the forest, Pia following. A few minutes later, the two came out on the edges of a second clearing; one that seemed to have been made for the sole accommodation of a great white tent that stood in the middle of it. The doorway was wide, the doorflaps were hooked back. One could see right into the tent, and the sight—for that place, and that time—was amazing.

There was a table inside, covered with a white cloth. On it were plates of food, tinned delicacies of all sorts; wild boar from the forest; wild turkey, okari nuts, mushrooms. There were glasses. There were bottles.

Youth and gaiety and recklessness were embodied, if ever human form expressed them, by the limber, red-headed figure of a girl, who, gaudily dressed, hung over a man lying on a cushioned deck chair. The girl, at the top of her not unmusical voice, was chanting the last rave success, while the man, an emptied glass dropping from his fingers, wailed loudly and interminably that classic of the sentimentally drunk—"Annie Laurie."

Outside, the silence, the stars black Papua.

To Pia, standing a little way off, within the shadows of the forest, the whole strange scene looked like some vivid cinema picture. Sergeant Simoi, staring until his treacle-brown eyes almost started from their sockets, gave forth his opinion candidly—"I think this-one too much purfuri (magic), Sinabada. More better you-me (we) no stop." Head-hunters, cannibals, the ambush and the spear-rit, never shook the iron nerve of the old sergeant; such things were in the day's work of any policeman. But sorcery—was a different matter.

"Hush, sergeant," warned the girl. "I want to find out about this." For into her mind had crept a conviction, born she knew not how, warning her that this thing had to do with the object of her journey.

"Who is the white man?" she whispered. Simoi pulled himself together, realized that there was no sorcery here, and became at once the smart, non-commissioned officer of every day.

"I think," he said cautiously, "name belong him Si-mission."

"Si-mission? Oh?—Smithson! Sergeant, are you sure?"

"Me savvy. Me too much damn savvy. Bee-fore" (some time ago) him take away one girl belong my village. Fashion belong him, Sinabada. (It is his way.) "Him too much likem girl, likem plenty bottle goodluck" (bottles of whisky).

"I know," said Pia musingly, "that Phil thought he was sober and reliable."

"Him all right, Sinabada, suppose no body showem girl along him, showem goodluck along him. Suppose girl, goodluck showem this man, he 'nother kind." (Untranslatable idiom, suggesting change of character.)

"He's not the only one," commented drily society's pet child. "I think I know who the girl is now. I've seen her before. Only for Phil, she would be at the bottom of the sea. Now, sergeant, you and I are going to talk to these people."

"Me and you, we go," answered the sergeant, swelling out his chest. Mechanically he touched the long bayonet-knife that swung in its sheath at his hip. For igniting, Sergeant Simoi loved the bayonet. . . .

The DAIRY

IT PAYS TO FEED COWS IN SUMMER

Big Mistake to Overlook Grain in Dairy Ration.

New York dairymen who do not feed grain to their milk cows in summer while they are on pasture are overlooking a sure method of increasing their net income, says F. B. Morrison, head of the animal husbandry department at Cornell university. It is surprising, he says, that many men who take much trouble in providing their cows with excellent rations during the barn feeding period of the year, depend blindly on Dame Nature in summer.

Pasture alone was satisfactory for cows in early days, when even the best of them yielded an amount of milk we would now consider too low for profit. By skillful selection and breeding, the modern high-yielding dairy cow has been developed, with a capacity for producing milk so great that any ordinary pasture will not furnish her enough feed both for milk production and for body maintenance.

The proper feeding of milk cows on pasture is much simpler than during the winter, and, says Professor Morrison, doubtless this is the reason why so many farmers, busy with their crops, fail to give their herd the necessary attention in summer. Often the cows are merely turned to pasture after milking at night and morning, with no further thought as to the supply of feed actually available for them. It is no wonder that when pasturage becomes scanty in midsummer, the cows run down in flesh and fall off decidedly in milk yield. Even if fed liberally when barn-feeding starts in the fall, quite commonly they cannot then be brought back to normal and usual production.

It is especially important to feed grain liberally when pastures become short and parched. This is important any year, and of particular importance this summer, when every farsighted dairymen desires to do his share in providing sufficient milk in the New York milk shed during the shortage period next November. Under typical pasture conditions in the state, he says, experience shows that it is best to feed a grain mixture containing about 18 per cent protein, at the rate of one pound of grain to three pounds of Jersey and Guernsey milk, and one pound of grain to four pounds of Holstein, Ayrshire, or Shorthorn milk.

Proper shelter in a warm, light, well ventilated barn. The leeward side of a barbed wire fence is an expensive shelter for milk cows.

Increase Profitable Butterfat Production

The following are essentials in profitable butterfat production, according to H. H. Kildee, formerly of the dairy husbandry division of the University of Minnesota, University farm, St. Paul.

Proper shelter in a warm, light, well ventilated barn. The leeward side of a barbed wire fence is an expensive shelter for milk cows.

A knowledge of the herd through the use of milk scales and the Babcock test.

Corn silage and clover or alfalfa hay as patriotic, profitable, palatable feeds.

A grain ration in proportion to milk and butterfat produced.

Fall calving as a means of increasing production as well as price at a time when more labor is available.

A bushel of grain fed before calving rather than two fed afterward. Prepare the cows for the milking period.

Water of moderate temperature. Ice water is not conducive to greatest milk production.

A milking machine in case of labor shortage.

Co-operation with the neighbors in organizing cow-testing associations and purchasing feeds in carload lots.

Grinding Roughage for Cows Saves All Waste

Three members of the Bedford (Pa.) dairy herd improvement association are grinding roughage. Tester Willard Straw reports, "This practice does away with practically all waste," says he. Soy bean hay run through a feed-mill, plus a commercial dairy feed used in connection with silage and home-grown grains, enabled Carl Armstrong's herd (Kendall county, Illinois) to place second in the testing association, with an average of 747 pounds of milk in a month.

A GOOD Business Chance

We fixed up the upstairs over the Leaf's Drug Store and as it contains a good deal of room and is also partitioned off in different rooms, we wish to lease the upstairs for business purposes. It is especially adapted for the following businesses.

- For a Beauty Parlor
For a good Dressmaking Establishment
For a repair shop for Women's and Childrens Clothing, Underwear and Silk Stockings.

We would lease the upstairs to a responsible party for a term of years, and as the location is the best in town, this would make a good business opening for anyone who can manage the three lines of business. We will put in electric lights in all the rooms and build a stair on the outside of the building.
