CHAUTAQUA HAS EXCELLENT PROGRAM

Just one more week before Chautauqua. Next Friday morning, July 25th, at 9 o'clock, the Junior worker will be here and wants to meet all the children of the surrounding country on the Chautauqua grounds. This will be free to all children until the Chautauqua opens on July 28th.

The cost of the Chautauqua has been guaranteed by public-spirited people of the county but there are more than enough people within reach of the tent to make it unnecessary for the contract signers to go down in their pockets to make up a deficit.

The program is filled with clean, wholesome, laugh provoking, thought tickling entertainment and the price of one dollar for five days shows that value several times the cost of the ticket is assured. Let's show the contract signers that we appreciate their guarantee.

The following are the contract signers:

- A. & P. Tea Co.
- John Bay
- C. A. Bigelow
- H. E. Bigelow
- Eugene Bing
- A. M. Boomer
- L. H. Braddock
- G. W. Brown

IOSCO BOYS LEAVE FOR MILITARY CAMPS

Six young men from this county left Wednesday for summer training at military camps. Carl Babcock, Irvin Burtzloff, Arthur Bigelow, George Lomas and Howard Swartz were assigned to Camp Brady. This is Carl Babcock's third year of training and he completes the basic course.

Lieut. O. A. Hilton of East Tawas was assigned to Camp Custer.

TAWAS CITY WILL PLAY BASEBALL GAME AT NIGHT

In an endeavor to give fans of this and surrounding community the best in baseball entertainment, the management of the Tawas City baseball club has scheduled a game with the California Owls for Sunday night, July 27th, at 8:30 Central Standard Time. This contest will take place at the Tawas City athletic field.

Night baseball, the latest development of our great national pastime, has been enthusiastically acclaimed wherever exhibited. In order to permit playing, the diamond is entirely illuminated by electric light, and the game goes on as well as any daylight contest.

The California Owls, a traveling team now making a tour of this state, is one of the fastest semi-pro teams in the country. Their appearance here in a night game assures fans a real treat.

Tawas City will also play the Owls in the afternoon of the same day at the athletic field. This contest will start at 2:00.

THIRD CHILD HEALTH CARE LECTURE TO BE GIVEN NEXT WEEK

The care of the child during the runabout period, between the ages of two and six years, is the topic of the talk to be given by Dr. Frances Hennessy this week throughout Iosco county. This time in the child's life is most important yet oftentimes little attention is paid to him at this age. The child's health and food habits are laid down at this time and in general he is getting his start in life. Many other interesting and important problems will be considered in this week's talk by Dr. Hennessy.

Miss Myrtle Cowgill, county nurse, will give a demonstration on the early care of the baby.

The schedule is as given below. All classes are on fast time.
Monday—10:00 a. m., Reno township hall.
Tuesday—10:00 a. m., National City school house; 2:30 p. m., Whittemore school.
Wednesday—9:30 a. m., Hemlock Road Baptist church; 3:00 p. m., Court House, Tawas City.
Thursday—10:00 a. m., Alabaster school; 3:00 p. m., Literary Club, East Tawas.
Friday—10:00 a. m., Wilber school; 2:30 p. m., Auditorium, Oscoda.

BARBERS' EXAMINATION HELD AT BIGELOW SHOP

Monday afternoon three apprentice barbers were examined at the Hosea Bigelow barber shop. The examination was held by H. P. Masterson, president of the state board of barber examiners, and Inspector O. V. Bowles. Two of the apprentices were from Flint and one from Whittemore.

Under the new laws regulating barber shops a more rigid examination is required and includes with the regular standard barber shop practice, a knowledge of the anatomy of the face and an eighth grade education.

MRS. MARY HARRINGTON

Mrs. Mary Harrington, age 73 years, died Tuesday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank J. Bright, in this city. Mrs. Harrington had been in ill health for several years. Services were held Wednesday afternoon at the Bright home, and the remains were taken to Traverse City for burial Thursday afternoon.

She is survived by one son, Alvin Smith of Muskegon, and one daughter, Mrs. Frank J. Bright.

Her home was at Traverse City, but for the past three years she had been residing with her daughter here.

EDWARD LIVERMORE

Edward Livermore, age 92 years, Civil War veteran and former Iosco county resident, died Sunday at Attica. The body was brought to Alabaster for burial in the family lot.

The remains were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Walter King, Miss Rebecca King of Attica, Mrs. Dewey VanWagoner of Lapeer and Frank King of Millington. A short service was held at the grave, with Rev. Schapter, M. E. pastor of Lapeer, officiating.

The Livermore family will be well remembered in Alabaster and Tawas City, where they made their home for years.

HERMAN C. BURR

Herman C. Burr, resident of this city since 1882, died at his home here at about ten o'clock last Monday evening. Mr. Burr had been an employe of the Detroit & Mackinac railway for 43 years.

Herman C. Burr was born in Germany in 1865. He came to the United States in 1882, coming to Tawas City, where he has since resided. In 1886 he was united in marriage to Anna Musolf, who survives him. He is also survived by two sons, Julius M. Burr of Wyandotte and Harry C. Burr of Flint, and six daughters, Mrs. Ida Schlechte and Mrs. Fred Rempert of Tawas City, Mrs. George McQuigg, Mrs. G. B. Buchanan, Mrs. S. J. Buchanan and Mrs. H. L. Spinnery of Flint, and 18 grandchildren, all of whom were present at the funeral.

The funeral services were held from the Zion Lutheran church Thursday afternoon. Rev. F. A. Sievert officiated.

Noted Naturalist Tells of Bird Life

R. S. WALLACE

From start to finish, there is no let down in the high character of the attractions provided by the Community Chautauqua. This is particularly emphasized in the closing program on the evening of the fifth day, when R. S. Wallace, nationally known as a naturalist and student of bird life, and until recently in the employ of the United States government, is scheduled for a forty minute lecture, accompanied by an open forum, preceding the musical soiree by the Fay Epperson Whistling Ensemble.

Wallace is thoroughly familiar with birds and their individual characteristics, and in a most fascinating way he presents facts and legends about them which are of peculiar interest and value to the public at large. His answers to the many and sometimes almost astounding questions propounded in the open forum by business men and others whom one might marvel at their interest, attest to his unquestioned ability not only to instruct, but to entertain.

Following the lecture the Fay Epperson Whistling Ensemble appear in a new and entirely different musical program.

SCOUT RESCUES 9-YEAR OLD BOY FROM DROWNING

Through knowledge gained in Boy Scout training and presence of mind, Charles Malcolm, Jr., age 17 years, of this city, rescued Henry Charles Rommel, age nine years, from drowning last Friday afternoon and resuscitated the boy after he had been under water eight minutes.

The Rommel boy and his little sister were playing on a raft near the shore at the Green Lantern inn. The raft started to go out into deeper water and the little girl jumped off. When the boy jumped off he was in water beyond his death.

Young Malcolm was working on the shore near the parochial school and hearing cries hurried to the scene. He found the boy lying flat, face downward, in about four feet of water. An alarm had been given to the Coast Guard and Dr. R. C. Pochert was called. Although they hurried to the scene, Malcolm had fully revived the boy before they arrived, notwithstanding the length of time he had been under water. The Coast Guard crew and Dr. Pochert give young Malcolm great credit for his presence of mind and knowledge gained in Scout work.

Malcolm is a member of Tawas City Troop No. 77, Boy Scouts.

G. A. R. HALL IS NOW UNDERGOING REPAIRS

Through the efforts of the American Legion Auxiliary, the G. A. R. hall on Newman street in East Tawas is undergoing extensive remodeling. The Auxiliary was instrumental in having the upper meeting hall cleaned, painted and papered, and purchased new curtains in time for the Legion boys to meet there on Memorial Day.

A deed to the property has been given to the American Legion by Reuben Wade of Tawas City, the only living member of Warren Post, G. A. R., and by the W. R. C. The W. R. C. will retain the right to use the building for any meetings. Boy Scout organizations of the city have also been given the privilege of using the hall free of charge, and it is planned to have a recreation and reading room for their use.

The G. A. R. building is to be moved back from the street even with the Morrison home. A new stairway will be erected and a new dining room and kitchen will be added. (Turn to No. 2, Back Page)

NATIONAL CITY WINS SLUGGEST FROM ALABASTER

National City upset the Alabaster nine in a slugging contest last Sunday by a score of 16 to 12. The game took place at Sand Lake.

Alabaster collected a total of 18 hits off two National City pitchers, including three triples and three doubles. National City bested its opponents in hits by one, having a total of 19, including a home run by Clarence McKenzie, and seven doubles.

One of the features of the game was the triple play executed by National City in the second frame. They also had a double play to their credit.

Chautauqua Season Tickets Now on Sale

Our Annual Community Chautauqua, the dates of which are rapidly approaching, is sponsored and promoted by a splendid group of public-spirited citizens.

Under the plan of Chautauqua operation, it is not possible for any of these Chautauqua workers to realize any individual financial profit. They profit only in the same degree and same way that every other citizen of the community profits. They have assumed the responsibility of the Chautauqua as one of their duties as good citizens. They appreciate the opportunity that it offers for the securing of clean, wholesome entertainment and recreation at a ridiculously low price.

Many of the features on this year's Chautauqua are the same as thousands of people have seen and heard, and yet these attractions, along with all others, cost the Chautauqua season ticket holder an average of less than 25c each.

We urge that you do yourself a favor, as well as to the committee, which has assumed this responsibility for you, by seeing them at once and telling them how many season tickets you will want for your family.

TO THE VOTERS OF IOSCO COUNTY

I want to announce my candidacy for the office of Register of Deeds of Iosco county on the Republican ticket at the September primaries. Your support will be appreciated.

BANCROFT AT FAMILY IN HIS NEWEST PICTURE

George Bancroft's newest picture, "Ladies Love Brutes," shows at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 22 and 23.

In this newest Paramount release, the mighty Bancroft is cast as a rivet-tossing 'steel monkey' who becomes such a success in his trade as a two-fisted steel construction man that he sets up a contracting business of his own. He gains a moderate amount of wealth but discovers that he is handicapped by lack of social position. Accordingly, he plans to make a social lion of himself. Mary Astor, a young society matron, falls in love with Bancroft.

Villainy enters the scenes in the person of Stanley Fields, a racketeer labor agitator. The climax comes when Bancroft encounters Fields in a stirring battle of guns and fists. See it sure.

The Story of Jane McCrea

CAPTURE OF JANE MCCREA

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MOST Americans know that the assassination of the Austrian archduke at Sarajevo, Serbia, in 1914, was the spark which set off the greatest conflagration in the history of mankind, the World war, but how many of them knew that the murder of an American girl by Indians in 1777 played a part in determining the destiny of their own nation? Yet there are historians who will agree that her death, the one hundred and fifty-third anniversary of which comes on July 27 of this year, was a factor in the so-called "turning point" in our struggle for independence. In these years so many sesquicentennial celebrations of important battles of the Revolution are being held, it is fitting that Americans should hear again the story of lovely Jane McCrea and her tragic fate.

In June, 1777, Gen. John Burgoyne with an army of 7,000 British and Hessians and a large force of Canadian and Indian allies swept down from Canada for the invasion of New York by the way of Lake Champlain. After he had captured Ticonderoga, Crown Point and Fort Edward, he expected Sir William Howe to come up the Hudson river from New York and join him at Albany. Thus they would drive a wedge between New England and the other colonies and put an end to the rebellion. Fort Edward was in a dilapidated condition and was held by only a small rear guard of Gen. Philip Schuyler's army, which had been forced to retreat before Burgoyne's greater numbers.

Near Fort Edward stood three cabins, one of which was occupied by a Mrs. McNeil, who is described as "a fat and talkative old woman, who had been twice widowed." She was a cousin of Brig. Gen. Simon Fraser of Burgoyne's army, and for that reason felt no apprehension at the approach of the invaders, even though Burgoyne's Indian allies had been killing and scalping settlers as they advanced. On July 27 she welcomed a guest into her home—Jane McCrea, a twenty-three-year-old girl, who lived with her brother, John McCrea, a lawyer and colonel of the local militia, near the mouth of Moses Kill, south of Fort Edward. Jane McCrea was noted throughout the countryside both for her beauty and for her long and lustrous hair which would reach to the floor when she stood and let it down.

Because of the near approach of the enemy, John McCrea was preparing to move to Albany, but his sister refused to go with him or even to stay at their home on Moses Kill. The reason was that she had a lover, David Jones, a neighbor who, being a Tory, had fled to Canada soon after the outbreak of the war and was now returning as an officer in one of Burgoyne's Loyalist regiments. He had written to her, proposing that she should ostensibly pay Mrs. McNeil a farewell visit, then slip away to the British lines and he would have the chaplain marry them. There are several contradictions in the various stories of the Jane McCrea tragedy. One of them is in regard to how she happened to fall into the hands of the Indians. According to one story Jones sent a party of Indians under the leadership of a half-breed to escort her to the British camp, and Burgoyne's account of the affair gives color to this version.

Some historians, however, do not mention this fact. According to their version, about nine o'clock on the morning of July 27 a party of Indians attacked and drove into the fort a picket guard of the Americans, killing the commander and capturing one man. Incidentally, this man's name was Standish and he was a descendant of the valorous Miles Standish or Pilgrim fame. The Indians then discovered the two women in the cabin, entered it and dragged them out. Standish saw them rushing their prisoners along the trail up the hill to a place where they had two horses.

They tried to place the women on these mounts and easily seated Jane McCrea on one. But fat old Mrs. McNeil was a different proposition and, try as they could, the savages could not lift her into the saddle. Meanwhile the others led Jane McCrea away and, as she and her captors passed near the spot where Standish was held captive, he saw two of them engaged in an angry dispute. Suddenly one of them turned and shot her from the saddle, scalping her as she fell. Then, according to their savage custom, they stripped her of the wedding finery, in which she was going to meet her lover, and mutilated her body horribly. They then continued on to Burgoyne's camp, where they told what had happened and exhibited her scalp.

While this was taking place fat old Mrs. McNeil was having her troubles. Although she had not been injured by her captors, they had stripped her to a single undergarment and in this she appeared in camp where the Indian turned her over to her cousin, General Fraser. That officer was much embarrassed, for he was not able to find in camp any women's clothes large enough for Mrs. McNeil. Finally, out of his own wardrobe, he produced a great coat large enough to cover her. All the while he was forced to listen to a torrent of abuse from the irate old lady because of her treatment at the hands of his "rascally Indians."

But this comic aspect of the affair soon became a tragic one when Jane McCrea's scalp was shown to her. She recognized it at once, as did David Jones, who then learned of the fate of his bride-to-be. Upon being informed of what had taken place, General Burgoyne immediately held an inquiry, ordered the Indians to hand over the murderer, put him under arrest and announced his intention of executing him. But St. Luc, the French-Canadian leader of the Indian allies, informed the general if he did that the Indians, who were already resentful of Burgoyne's efforts to restrain them from the atrocities which they had been committing against the settlers, would desert in a body and go home, probably solacing themselves by killing any whites they found, whether Loyalist or Patriot. So Burgoyne yielded to St. Luc and pardoned the slayer.

It is doubtful if even the loss of his Indian allies would have been as severe a blow to his hopes as were the results of the murder of Jane McCrea. From the beginning of his expedition the excesses of his savages had brought down upon him criticism in England and furious denunciation by the Americans. Patriot propagandists had let loose blasts of scorn and bitter anger at him because he had employed savages. Of course, they were ignoring the fact that during the wars with the French the Colonists had been glad enough to have the aid of Indians, over whom they had little more control than had Burgoyne over his allies. They were ignoring, too, the fact that early in the struggle for freedom, they themselves had solicited the aid of Indians and even then so-called Christian Indians from Stockbridge, Mass., were fighting on their side. But propagandists then, as ever since that time, have not always been concerned with telling the whole truth.

Burgoyne had hoped that not only active Loyalists, but those whose allegiance was doubtful would rally to his army as it advanced. When he captured Ticonderoga so easily, it was such a blow at the Patriot cause that it began to look as though the whole rebellion might collapse, especially since there were so many Colonists who cared little for either king or congress and wanted only to be allowed to continue in their peaceful pursuits. But the unpunished murder of Jane McCrea made even those, who might be inclined to swear allegiance to the crown and receive a certificate of loyalty, waver. If the bride of an officer in his army was killed by his savages, what assurance would they have that anyone would be safe from his painted demons, they asked themselves. Among these who favored the Patriot cause her death helped fix in them a stubborn determination to resist the invader to the end and to quicken them into action. "Remember Jane McCrea!" became something of a rallying cry along the harried frontier of New York, for the fame of the victim made the story of her death spread like wildfire and greatly stimulated recruiting.

Thus the story of Jane McCrea was spread broadcast throughout the colonies. It became a leading item of Patriot propaganda.

No doubt that master propagandist of them all, canny Ben Franklin made good use of it, just as he used the famous "inventory of scalps" story (which he had manufactured) so efficiently in stirring up the Patriots to a high pitch of fury against the British. Although it is impossible ever to lay a finger upon the definite results of propaganda, there can be no doubt that this story had an important effect upon Patriot morale at a time when it was very low. It took the fighting of a Willett and a Gansevoort at Fort Schuyler (Stanwix), of a Stark and a Warner at Bennington and of a Morgan and an Arnold at Saratoga to crush the invader and to make his defeat one of the fifteen decisive battles of the world and his surrender the real turning point in the American Revolution. But the beautiful girl who was struck down by an Indian bullet that July morning, 153 years ago, deserves a share in that great victory. Unwittingly she played an important role in a mighty drama. No Jane McCrea did not die in vain.

TEN DAYS OF FINE AIR RACES COMING

Renowned Flyers Will Be at the Chicago Meet.

Chicago.—People who are curious to meet in the flesh the men and women who have written their names imperishably in aviation history will find many of their heroes and heroines assembled in one spot for ten days, late this summer.

The tenth National Air races, to be held this year on the model Curtiss-Wright-Reynolds airport at Chicago, August 23 to September 1, inclusive, will attract every flyer of renown on the North American continent. Colonel Lindbergh, Jimmy Doolittle, Capt. Frank Hawks, George Haldeeman, Lon Yancey, Roger Williams, Art Goebel, Amelia Earhart, Louise Thaden, Ruth Elder, Emily Smith and many others will be there.

When these famous air people are not racing or entertaining the grand stand crowds in the air, they will be watching events from grandstand boxes or greeting spectators through the microphone.

Every one who is anyone in aeronautics, the aristocracy of the air, will be in attendance.

Managed by Experts.
Plans are nearly completed for this outstanding aeronautical event of the year under the direction of executives all of whom are prominent in aviation. Cliff Henderson, who staged the start and reception at the finish to the army round-the-world flyers in 1924, and who is responsible for the success of previous air races at Los Angeles and Cleveland, is again managing director. He is an expert pilot. Maj. Shorty Schroeder, who is generalissimo of all events on the field, has been flying since years before the war. Just before he resigned from the army he established a new world's record for altitude. Seven miles above the earth's crust he lost consciousness when his oxygen supply became exhausted, and fell careening through the skies unconscious, when the denser air nearer earth revived him and he landed his plane undamaged.

Maj. Reed Landis, director of advertising and publicity, was an outstanding American ace in the World war. Flying with British squadrons, he accounted officially for nine enemy planes and one balloon before September, 1918. Co-ordinating the work of these three flying executives is Capt. Max M. Corpening, noted horseman and polo player, who is secretary of the Race corporation. He is also an air pilot.

The program includes all the service events which have thrilled spectators at past shows, army and navy pursuit races, army attack plane races, marine and National Guard squadron races, and the hair-raising tactical maneuvers of such famous flights as the Sea Hawks, High Hats, Sonsoguns, and the Three Musketeers.

Civilian Flyers Dominate.
But more events than ever have been arranged to give civilian flyers a dominating place in the program. There will be speed races for every type of plane, from the light powered glider to the great multi-motored transports. The remarkable interest in gliding during the past year will be recognized with a prominent place on the program. Gliders will be launched by shock cord and catapult, and released from automobile tows, from airplane and dirigible.

There will be a score of parachute contests, dead stick landings, and novelty races and events. Lighter-than-air will be represented by many types of airships, from the tiny four-passenger cabin blimps to the great naval dirigible Los Angeles. For ten days and nights the air above Chicago will be filled with a magnificent pageant demonstrating the progress in aeronautics in the past year.

Derbies and Prizes.
Five air derbies will inaugurate the races. Two will be confined to women entrants. The Dixie Woman's derby, for ships of the 510-cubic-inch class, will cover two thousand miles down the Atlantic seaboard, westward skirting the Gulf of Mexico, and thence up the Mississippi valley to Chicago. The California Woman's derby will permit entry of planes in the 800-cubic-inch class and will start from some West coast city which is yet to be selected. The remaining three derbies are for men, a non-stop derby, a New England derby to take off from Boston, and a Quaker derby which will take off at Philadelphia.

Captain Corpening announced that the largest number of trophies ever offered for the national air races are posted in a Chicago bank. At least $100,000 will be divided among the winners. Aside from the derby prizes, the biggest cash offering of the meet will be awarded to the winner of the free for all speed event for which the Thompson trophy has also been established. Ten thousand dollars will be divided among the three winners, as follows: first, $5,000; second, $3,000; third, $2,000.

Plane Brings Comics.
Seattle.—Every Sunday morning as Air Mail Pilot Al Davis flies eastward over the sagebrush territory of eastern Washington a group of children waits expectantly near a ranch house far from any city or town for the drone of his motor. All is excitement in the little group as they watch the plane roar, out of the west, dive toward them and see Davis throw out a tightly rolled bunch of Sunday comic pages.

Soucek Again Holds The Altitude Record

One of the major world's records in aviation has returned to the United States as a result of the calibration of the barograph which Lieut. Apollo Soucek took aloft with him the other day. This is the altitude record for airplanes—or, indeed, aircraft of any sort—and stands now at 43,166 feet. It supports Will Roger's pronouncement that you can't keep a good Oklahoma man down. Further than this, it stands a monument to the persistence of this intrepid young naval officer, who has been testing and experimenting, trying and retrying, with his Wright Apache plane and, its supercharged Wasp motor since Willi Nuenhofen of Germany took the former mark away from him last year, after he had held it but three weeks.

SAFETY IN LOWER SPEED AT LANDING

English Have Developed the Strut Air Brake.

London.—Reduction in airplane accidents and increased adaptability of planes to small fields have been accomplished in England through research aimed at lower landing speeds.

The slotted wing, an invention which helped win the Guggenheim award for safety in flying a few months ago, is one of the devices used in bringing planes to earth at lower speeds. Basic changes in design have also been made. But one of the most successful appliances appearing recently is a simple air brake attached to the struts in the form of "fairings" to reduce air resistance.

In flying position they present a thin surface to the front and support the struts a the same time. But when landing the pilot moves a lever turning them at a 45 degree angle so that their resistance immediately arrests the speed of the plane.

Since the resistance of a surface increases proportionately to the square of the speed, these small devices have terrific force in slackening the rate at which a ship dives to a landing field. They reduce flying speed from 130 miles an hour to 95 miles an hour, and increase the gradient of glide from 1 in 11 to 1 in 7.

The racing pilot, Dudley Watt, has developed a plane which it is claimed remains in complete control at a flying speed no greater than 90 miles an hour. It is a two-seater biplane powered with an 85 horse power motor. Pilots who co-operated with him in making the changes, which they have not yet divulged but which make little apparent difference in the appearance of the ship, asserted that a remarkably short runway is needed if there is a wind, and that it takes off in a short space because of the low speed at which it becomes air-borne.

Use of wheel brakes, which Europeans have been slow in adopting, now is becoming general and most airplanes are equipped with them.

BUILT FOR THE R-100

This elaborate mooring mast was built at St. Hubert field near Montreal, Canada, in preparation for the arrival of the big British dirigible, R-100, from England.

Canadian Flyer Awarded Prize for Arctic Service

Ottawa, Can.—The McKee trophy, highest honor in Canadian civil aeronautics, which is awarded annually for the most meritorious flying in connection with the development of regular air transportation in Canada, has been awarded to Captain W. R. May, chief pilot of Commercial Airways, Ltd., for his work incident to the progress of the Mackenzie river operations of his company.

This new airline is over almost 2,000 miles of wilderness of northwestern Canada, from the railhead at Fort McMurray to Arklavik on the Arctic ocean. It represents one of the most difficult airline operations in the world. With the exception of a few village trading posts the territory is barren and uninhabited. Due to extremely low temperatures, the short Arctic days and storms during the winter months, the difficulties of safe flying are innumerable.

KNITTED ENSEMBLES FOR SPORTS; AFTERNOON FROCK IS IMPORTANT

SPORTSWOMEN who know fashion turn to the knitted ensemble as the costume ideal to wear when "playing the game." Incomparable, too, for "tour and travel wear is the general verdict in regard to knitted apparel.

As to accounting for the increasing favor expressed for knitted fashions, knitted wear is itself its own best "reason why." The record of achievement during the past several years in the knitted industry reads like a fairy tale. Perfectly amazing things have been accomplished in the way of daintiness, lightweightness, colorfulness and "style."

Those lacy frocks, for instance, filmy as a cobweb, which are being featured this year in the sports collections are actually knitted. And

The afternoon frock is again important in the fashion world. Was a time, not so long since, when we really forgot, or rather the style program did not demand that we change our clothes for each passing daytime social event. Sports, sports, how monotonous it grew to be wearing sports clothes for breakfast, luncheon, theater, bridge tea, and even dinner.

The real reason we did it was because there actually were no definite luncheon, afternoon and tea fashions. Having reached the point where sports clothes were accepted even by "the best of regulated" dressers as appropriate as anything, we sometimes became totally resigned, and just wore them on through the dinner hour.

Admitted that we were not picturesque or even particularly pretty thus those entrancing three-piece bouclette suits! Of course the woman who is assembling a wardrobe of swanky clothes will never think of passing up as fascinating a proposition as these knitted fantasies. Assuming that you have grown wise as to the importance of white for this summer, we suggest that one of the number of sports costumes which you hope to acquire be a three-piece all-white bouclette. You will fall in love with the blouse (worn over or as a tuck-in) which is included in these knitted trios—sheer and lacy as can be. To wear with this you are perfectly justified in choosing white hat, white footwear, gloves, a boutonniere of white violets, and a pocketbook also all white. It's a white season!

Of course if you yearn for color, then decide upon one of the adorable uniforms? We believe the answer is unambiguously in the affirmative, or rather the negative—we were not!

To improve the point that all this is changing the illustration below shows a charmingly informal afternoon frock of embroidered durne cotton. It looks, as it should, according to the present call of the mode, decidedly afternoon-ish. One would never play tennis in such feminine attire, but one would eat a summer luncheon in it; or drink iced tea at five o'clock. One would sit on the country club porch playing bridge of a warm afternoon, but one would never play golf in it.

All of which goes to show that the clothes question is anything but a "happy-go-lucky" proposition this season. It requires intelligent study as to the appropriateness of things. The new rules are really quite arbitrary—pastel shades for the knitted three-piece, pale blue if you have been reading up on French preferences, or delicate pink if it's more becoming. However, see to it that all the accessories are white, for again let us remind you—it's a white season!

However all's not white and pastel tinted that's knitted. Just the thing for the day on the links is a rich green or radiant brown three-piece fashioned after the manner of the model in upper picture. The sleeveless jumper, with its surplice fastenings, is the very essence of chic. If you are fond of circular skirts, many of the knitted suits have them this season—capas, too, instead of jackets if such be your choice sports for sports, afternoon costumes for afternoon, and formal evening attire for just that and none other. Transgress the law as to what's what in wearing apparel for this or that time, place and event, and you are, well, to say the least, you are simply not fashionable, not modern.

Notwithstanding some few objections voiced at the outset of this new regime, women are completely won over to this order of things which calls for "perfectly darling" summer frocks made picturesquely instead of "sportsy" of loveliest materials, chief among which are handsome allover embroidered effects.

RELIABILITY ECONOMY

GOOD PERFORMANCE

THE NEW FORD TUDOR SEDAN

YOU are buying proved performance when you buy a Ford. You know it has been built for many thousands of miles of satisfactory, economical service.

Letters from users in every part of the world show the value of the sound design of the car, good materials and accuracy in manufacturing. You sense a feeling of sincere pride in the oft-repeated phrase—"Let me tell you what my new Ford did."

Further tribute to the sturdiness, reliability and general all-round performance of the new Ford is shown in the repeated and growing purchases by government bureaus, by police departments, and by large industrial companies which keep careful day-by-day cost records. In most cases, the new Ford has been chosen only after exhaustive tests covering speed and power, safety, comfort, ease of control, oil and gas consumption, low yearly depreciation, and low cost of up-keep. They have found, as you will find, that the Ford embodies every feature you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

VOL. I JULY 18, 1930 NUMBER 11

Joe: "I see where they found a horned frog in Texas that lived for 31 years, sealed up. It's mouth had grown together."

Moe: "Well, that shows that we would all live longer if we would keep our mouths shut!"

We are still selling scratch feed for $2.00 per 100 lbs.; corn and oat chop for $2.10 per 100 lbs.; bran for $1.90 per 100 lbs.; flour middlings for $2.20 per 100 lbs.; cracked corn for $2.30 per 100 lbs.; whole corn for $2.15 per 100 lbs.; coarse corn meal for $2.30 per 100 lbs.

We will have another car of Hexite in Monday.

Pillsbury's Best flour, $1.00 per sack; Blackburn's Best bread flour, 95c per sack; Blue Bird pastry flour, per sack, 95c.

Arthur: "Dear, didn't you notice that the sauce at the hotel last night tasted of furniture polish?"

Martha: "Yes, darling. But it went well with the cabinet pudding."

Salt: Barrel salt, $2.75; 100 lb. sacks, $1.05; 50 lb. sacks, 55c; 25 lb. sacks, 35c. Salt blocks, 50c.

Any day now we expect to see the advent of a combination hip flask and cigarette lighter—the same liquid can be used for both.

"My wife went through my pockets last night."

"What did she find?"

"What all explorers find—material for a lecture."

We also handle the famous Huron Portland cement.

He: "I've been wanting to say something to you all day, but I don't know how to start it."

She: "If I were to say 'Yes,' would that help?"

Lucille Rose Harris,
Plaintiff,
vs.
Divorce
John H. Harris,
Defendant.

In this cause, it appearing by affidavit on file, that the Defendant, John H. Harris, is not a resident of this state, and that it cannot be ascertained in what state or country he, the said John H. Harris, now resides, and that the sheriff of said county has been unable to make service of process upon him because of his unknown whereabouts.

On motion of N. C. Hartingh, attorney for Plaintiff, It is Ordered, that the appearance of said Defendant, John H. Harris, be entered in this cause within three months from the date of this order; and in case of his appearance he cause his answer to the Bill of Complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof served on Plaintiff's Attorney within fifteen days after service on him of a copy of said bill of complaint; and in default thereof said bill be taken as confessed by said defendant.

It is further ordered that Plaintiff cause a copy of this order to be published in The Tawas Herald, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county; and that such publication be commenced within forty days after the date of this order and be continued therein once each week for six weeks in succession; or cause a copy of this order to be personally served on the said Defendant at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance.

Consider the poor fish!

A TRUE sportsman is as careful about his pipe tobacco as he is about his lures. Why distress the poor fish and taint the pure air with a strong pipe when Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking tobacco costs so little, and is so mild and fragrant? The success of the Sir Walter Raleigh blend is due to the use of very choice Burleys, which, although mild, lack neither body nor flavor. The quality is uniform, and the gold foil wrap retains all the natural freshness and fragrance.

Wonderful Sensitivity of the Eye

Boston.—If man paid for optical energy at the rate charged for electricity for domestic use, his vision would cost him less than one trillionth of a trillionth of a cent per second. This energy used every second for seeing is the millionth part of the millionth of an erg. It takes about 1,000 ergs to lift a thirtieth of an ounce half an inch.
Dr. Charles Sheard, director of physics and biophysical research of the Mayo foundation at Rochester, Minn., made these revelations of minute quantities before the American Optometrist association in convention here.
"The retina of the eye," he said, "is one of the most sensitive energy receivers and detectors known. It may be thought of as a radio receiver, although it does not respond to stimulation by ordinary waves, for it is a very selective set and is tuned to radiant energy of wave lengths within a single octave, lying between four and eight ten-millionths of a meter or yard. These waves, like radio waves, travel at a speed of 186,000 miles a second and are the shorter of the much taller ones we have christened radio.

"The sensitivity of the eye is extraordinary. Employing the Einstein equation of the energy required to cause the expansion of a single electron with a ray of green light, we may conclude that a single energy quantum for green light is sufficient to excite vision.
"This is saying that the liberation of a single electron in the retina by a green or blue light can excite the sensation of vision in the brain. A millionth of a millionth of an erg per second is the energy or power necessary to excite vision.
"Since it requires the millionth part of the millionth of an erg to cause the emission of one electron at the retina and thus to set up the sensation of vision, then we know that if these thousand ergs to which we have referred could be used up at the rate of a millionth part of the millionth of an erg and if there were no dissipation or

SUCH IS LIFE — As Usual

"Makes Good" Without Hands

Bell, Calif.—If the same determination displayed by Charles C. M. McGonegal, thirty-four, veteran of the World war, in refusing to allow the loss of both of his hands to be an insurmountable handicap, is shown in his administration of the post office, that office is due for an enviable career.

McGonegal has officially assumed his duties as postmaster here following nine months of waiting for governmental red tape to untangle the questions which arose regarding the eligibility of a man without hands to serve in that capacity. The appointment was confirmed recently by the senate.

A member of the First division, McGonegal was among the first to reach France and served there eight months before he received the injuries which deprived him of his hands. He was in a raiding party, he said, out to destroy a nest of machine guns. As he went forward, a grenade in each hand, he was stunned by the high explosives of a heavy barrage and both of the grenades exploded with terrific force in his hands.

After his discharge from a war hospital in this country, McGonegal said he realized he could not allow the loss of his hands and forearms, just below the elbow, to wreck his life, and he lost no time learning to manipulate the hooks which must serve him in their stead. Sometimes he would stay up until two or three o'clock in the morning practicing and he still learns new tricks with the hooks every day.

He drives a machine without any extra appliances or devices, about 17, 000 miles a year. He pilots a plane and, although the Department of Commerce thus far has refused him a pilot's license, he says he will put up a fight before he gives up the determination to have a pilot's license just for his own personal pleasure in flying. He fishes, hunts, swims and rides horseback.

As he talks he nonchalantly reaches into a vest pocket for a cigarette, dexterously lights the match, picks a piece of lint from his coat sleeve, stops for a moment to reach for the telephone, mops his brow with a handkerchief (the first day as postmaster was a bit hectic), handles paper and letters as easily as a person with two hands, writes and in every way proves that he has not allowed his affliction to cramp his style.

Which Makes It Unanimous!

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Greater New York is divided into five boroughs. According to the latest census reports, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond and the Bronx have gained in population, while Manhattan has lost. The loss is reported as 18 per cent.

There is an old and wealthy gentleman in this city, for whose opinions most of us have a deep regard. He predicted to me that the day would come when nobody would live on the island of Manhattan. He said that within a comparatively few years, Manhattan would be entirely given over to business, and that workers all would be brought in from outside by tunnels, bridges and viaducts. He thought this would especially be true when they developed airplanes to the point where they could land on small spaces.

Others do not agree with this diagnosis. They think that the workers of New York will some day live in sort of model tenements and apartments erected on the top of tall office buildings. They vision huge buildings, each a village in itself, with stores, movie theaters and all kinds of things under one roof. They think these buildings will be over 100 stories high, with perhaps 50 stories devoted solely to business.

Increase in Pension for Spanish War Vets

Washington.—The new Spanish war veterans' pension bill, recently passed by congress, provides for pensions as follows:

The cartoons were hung in the window and subscribers walked by and looked at them, just as they now look at the electric and window bulletins displayed by New York papers.

This window display stirred the artistic soul of the sixteen-year-old A. W. Brown. He went home, drew some pictures, and took them down to the paper. One was accepted and hung in the window, beside the regular cartoon. That was a big day for a famous illustrator of the future. More of his work was accepted and finally, when the St. Louis chalk-plate process came in, enabling small papers to make and publish illustrations of their own, Brown was hired as an artist. His salary was $4 per week.

Wild Creatures His Pets
According to reports from Abyssinia, Ras Tafari, the regent who made himself emperor, lives somewhat after the fashion of the feudal lords of the Middle ages in Europe. Ras likes all kinds of wild animals and he has quite a menagerie on the grounds around the royal palace at Addis Ababa, the capital of the kingdom of Ethiopia, as it is officially called. The monarch is especially fond of lions and has several fine specimens. He makes pets of the cubs. They can often be seen sleeping or romping around the throne itself.
Ras, who claims to be a descendant of the queen of Sheba and King Solomon, likes to imagine that nature endowed him with many of the qualities of the king of beasts.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Snow Quickly Melted

Calcium chloride, for the removal of snow, was first applied about three years ago. During last winter experiments were conducted in Queens, Brooklyn and Manhattan, N. Y., as well as in Philadelphia, Pa., and Hartford, Conn. The pavements were sprayed with a treated solution of calcium chloride made non-corrosive. It was found that when the mixture was applied, before or at the beginning of a storm, the snow did not stay but melted almost immediately.

Britishers Well Fed

Specifications as to supplies brought to this country for the British army in the Revolution required sound "beef, pork, bread, flour, rice, salt, peas, oatmeal." To these were added cheese, bacon, suet, fish, raisins and molasses. Don Seitz, in writing on the subject, adds: "Potatoes, parsnips, carrots, turnips and cabbages were provided when possible. Nor was there lack of liquid refreshment. Port, claret and spruce beer were forwarded in quantities."

To the pair within the tent, drunkenly singing, drunkenly caressing one another, the sight of Pia in the open doorway, Pia slim, erect, rigid as a young soldier in her sporting khaki, Pia with cold accusing eyes beneath a heavy patrol helmet, came as a disturbing vision from some other world. They sprang apart, and it would be hard to say whether the man or the girl uttered the foulest words.

"You shuttem head belong you," bellowed Sergeant Simol, enraged. "What-name (why) you talk bad along my Sinabada? By-n-by me break you front along bayonet."

"That's enough, sergeant," warned Pia. "Wait outside for me." She stepped into the tent, and fixed a steady accusing gaze on Smithson, who suddenly sobered, had risen to his feet. "It's the missis, by—" he muttered, leaning one hand on the disordered supper table and staring under his tattered locks of hair.

"Mr. Smithson," asked Pia, with cold courtesy, "will you kindly tell me why you are not at my husband's claim?"

"Plenty of time," retorted Smithson, picking up courage, under a secret nudge from Jinny. "Going back to it when I get good and ready."

"I believe you are a gold miner. Don't you know that a claim is forfeited if left without just cause, for thirty days?"

"He don't need you to learn him," came Jinny's shrill voice. Pia did not ignore her. She turned toward Jinny, and sent her a glance, in which pity, kindness and a certain fear—the chaste woman's irrefragable fear of the unchaste—were strangely mingled. "You are Mrs. Spicer," she said. "I'm sorry to see you encouraging this man in neglect of his duty."

"Mrs. Spicer as much as Mrs. Anybody," said Jinny. "More Mrs. Spicer than you're Mrs. Amory, by all accounts." She laughed coarsely.

Pia ignored that. She was feeling for her feet in this strange medium. She remembered Jinny—remembered her well. How the girl had altered since those days on the great liner! How her beauty had coarsened, how the slim, firm graces of her dancer's figure had slackened into ugly lines! So this was Jinny, always, that perfect condition was her only chance of grace. It had gone; the grace was going with it; youth and beauty, too soon were passing away from Genevieve Treacher. In the first moment, Pia could not account for so great a change. But Jinny, uncomfortable beneath that pitying gaze, seized her half-filled champagne glass, and emptied it at a gulp, hoarsely crying as she took it from her lips. "What's yours? Drink heavy, we'll soon be dead!" And Pia saw that the vice of Jinny's kind, long avoided, had caught her up at last. She was indeed "drinking hearty" now she was even well on the way to fulfill the latter half of her famous war-cry.

"Champagne for the lady," proclaimed Smithson, still not quite himself, though considerably sobered. He reached for a bottle.

"Thanks, no," fell from Pia's lips like an icicle. "You haven't told me yet, Mr. Smithson, why you come to be here. I might as well tell you that I hold my husband's power of attorney, and am going up to the field to act for him."

"I came to be here," answered Smithson, with painful effort, "because I came to be here." He offered this brightly, as a complete explanation.

"We're prospecting," contributed Jinny, putting down her glass, and fixing a defiant stare upon Pia. "Me and he. There's other gold beside that on Tatata, which don't belong to my friend anyhow. As for powers of attorney," she went on, hurriedly pouring out more wine, and keeping her face turned somewhat away—"I reckon this is a free country; I reckon my friend don't have to run when anybody whistles—even Mrs.—Phillip—Amory." She loaded each word with contempt. If Pia, in her presence, was shaken, somewhat, by the fear of the chaste for the unchaste, Jinny, on her part, was consumed by the light woman's burning and perfectly genuine scorn for an innocent girl.

"Here, don't you ladies get quarreling over me," thickly said Smithson. Supporting himself by the tent poles, he had moved over towards the door; was looking owlishly, yet with a curious interest, at the velvet, star-besprinkled sky. "I came away," he said, "because this lady wanted to go and fine gold mines. I let her go fine gold mines all alone? Naw! She and me, and the whiskey and the champagne—what's that poetry about a jug of wine and a case of whiskey, and Gin-Sling singing alongside of you? She and me—and a—the new moon."

At that, Jinny, much the soberer of the two, let out a sudden shriek, flung herself half across the tent, and slapped her fingers on Smithson's babbling mouth. "Hold your tongue, fool," she cried, to Pia. "He don't mean anything. I mean, he means that the moon makes him worse than he is. It's like that with loonies of all sorts. He gets sort of wild. You know." She had pulled herself together with marvelous completeness; was lighting and smoking a cigarette. She did not look at Pia any more. "Don't mind us," she said. "We're rough, but we're honest. Rough diamonds, me and him. You'll excuse us, please. I'll get him back to the field for you; I'm fed up with prospecting. I made love to him, and got him to come away with me, because I wanted him to work for me; you can put that in your pipe and smoke it if you like." She stood with her hands on her lean hips, staring at Pia; Pia, straight, helmeted, armed, as a young Joan of Arc, with blue, pure eyes burning in a face of mountain snow, paused, still as the night outside, her mind on full stretch over this new problem. What had the moon to do with it?

There was small chance of finding out anything, here, in this reeking tent, from the half drunk pair who were certainly not prospecting, whatever their business in the bush might be. Without a word, Pia turned and walked away, followed by the sergeant.

She lingered a little on the way back to the camp. The carriers were noisy; she could hear them shouting and singing. How they were shouting! Dancing, too. When she came out into the open clearing, she could see, by the light of the fires, dark forms whirling and leaping as if possessed by demons. They made such a noise that, at first, she could not distinguish what they were singing, although some words seemed strangely familiar. Then, over the uncomprehended shouts of the Mambare and Yassi-Yassi carriers, came loud and clear the cry of some Port Moresby boys—"Sail-O! Sail-O!"

Pia knew the custom of saluting the new moon with that cry. She glanced to westward, where the forest, sloping down, showed a wide stretch of sky. There, in the west, almost gone, hung one clear small strip of silver, like a light peeling dropped from some fairy fruit. New moon!

What had those people in the tent said, about the moon? Why had Jinny Treacher struck Smithson, when he spoke of it? Why must she, Pia, know nothing about the moon—the moon which measured off months—

"Oh!" It was a sudden cry. Leaping over a hundred unnoticed links, her mind had sprung to the end of the chain of thought. She knew.

one and sufficient cause, made void a claim. Smithson—who couldn't resist drink or girls—was here in the forest, two days away from Tatata, with Jinny, and Jinny's (or Spicer's) cases of champagne. There were no calendars in the bush—drinkers' memories are treacherous. If you wanted to stay away thirty days, guessing wouldn't do. But if you did not guess, if you counted by something that wouldn't drop a day here or there; if you left at new moon, and gave over your reckoning to something that was sure to come back in exactly twenty-eight days, something that every night in sight would hail with salutations and loud cries—then you might be perfectly sure that you would stay away just long enough.

"Sergeant Simol!" said Pia. "Go and get me one of Mr. Smithson's carriers."

"Yessir," replied Simol, as if she had asked for a handkerchief, "I bring him dead or I bring him live, Sinabada-Sir?"

"Alive, of course; and don't let anyone see you getting him."

"Right-Sir." The sergeant melted into the bush.

It was some minutes before he returned, driving before him an extremely scared and very naked Papuan.

"Come on, you black cow," encouraged Simol. "You like I handcuff him, Sinabada?"

"No, certainly not. Don't frighten him. Ask him when they left; the field, and be sure you get the right answer."

"Me savvy," nodded Simol. An interchange of questions and answers followed.

"Sinabada," said the sergeant, saluting, "him say this man, this woman leaveem Tatata thass time the new moon come, be-fore. Him leaveem twel' o'clock, sun he stop-on-top."

"Give him some tobacco, and let him go. Sergeant! Tell him not to talk about this."

"I tellem all right," proffered the sergeant, on returning. "I tellem I taken head belong him, cleanem head all same pish, sookem along pipe, stickem him head up along my dubu (clubhouse) suppose him too much talk. . . . Sinabada!"

"Well, sergeant?"

"Whassamatter?"

Pia looked into the face—anxious, kindly, shrewd—of the dark Kiwai sergeant, and recognized a man. Simol had sensed, without understanding, the crisis in which she found herself; was offering, blindfolded his help.

"It's this, sergeant," she said briefly. "Mr. Smithson was left to look out after my husband's gold. If he runs away from it for one moon and two days, another man can steal it; then there is no gold for my man, no gold for me. Sergeant, do you know the way to the field—I mean, know it well?"

"I no savvy you too much, Sinabada. One carrier he savvy plenty, village belong him stop two day along bush."

"What! you've got a Tatata man?"

"My word, yes, Sinabada. Be-fore, him killem one white man, along Tatata road him go to jail along Daru; this man he good man, he savvy plenty."

"Get him here," Pia ordered. Another wild, naked creature was herded up.

"Yes," he said, in answer to the sergeant. "Me savvy load (road) too much. . . . Tatata? Tomorrow we walk, we walk strong, nother day we walk, we walk strong, nighttime we sleep, morning time sun he come up big, we come up along Tatata, sun he go down, we come along gold field."

"Twenty-eight days tomorrow," counted Pia. "Twenty-nine tomorrow. Thirty the day after. Thirty-one to arrive. . . . Sergeant! Ask him does he know another way—a shorter way."

"No savvy," said the carrier promptly. "I know him; he seemed to her mind, a little too prompt."

"Offer double pay," she ordered. "No savvy," was the result—not without a touch of temper.

Pia turned her back, and walked off to her tent. Her man, his fortune were hanging in the balance.

The cat streak that hides in all women came to the surface. She became cruel, in defense of her own.

"Make him talk," she flung over her shoulder, as she went.

"My word, me blanky well make him," was the sergeant's reply. He reached for a strip of lawyer cane.

It was only a minute or two before the ex-murderer appeared, sulking, shaking, whimpering, driven by Simol Pia, sitting on her camp bed as on a bench of justice, questioned him, and the sergeant translated.

"Is there another road?"

Simol replied. "Him say, yes. Plenty bad road, full up along devil" (TO BE CONTINUED)

STARTED ON THEIR HONEYMOON IN A TAXI

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

AT THE risk of being accused of giving the taxi companies too much free advertising it must be freely admitted that more marriages are made in taxis than in heaven, as some one has said. And it doesn't always take two in a taxi—but there, there, there—that's running ahead of the story.

When Eloise Gary stepped out of the railroad station and found that the rain was pouring down in a cloud-burst she gave a little gasp that surprised the people near her and made the taxi driver at the curb grin with joy. Eloise had just a dollar in her purse and her best hat on her head. Scant use there would be in applying for a first-class position with a rain-soaked hat on her head. Yet with only ten minutes between that time and the time set for her interview—well, what was she to do?

Eloise gave a quick scurry across the sidewalk and jumped swiftly into the taxi. Her briefcase with all her samples of work was dropped on the seat unceremoniously while she interviewed the contents of her purse to make sure that lone dollar had not jumped out some place along the way into the city.

Once at the door of the tall office building Eloise took the briefcase under her arm, paid the man the fare called for by the meter and added a dime tip, which was more than she could afford and less than the man had looked for. Then she ran across the sidewalk once more and disappeared within the great doors.

There was no question about it, she thought as the elevator rose smoothly to the thirteenth floor, a person felt much more assured when she stepped from a taxi than she would feel had she walked across the muddy ten blocks from the railroad station. She would certainly patronize the taxi service liberally if she connected herself here.

The interview went smoothly and satisfactorily until she was asked for samples. Then she unstrapped the briefcase, deftly opened it and watched with fascinated and astonished eyes while an insurance rate book and insurance folders fell out. This was nothing like the inside of her neat case, with everything rubber-banded together and classified.

"Why—I must have picked this up in the taxi and left my own on the seat," stammered Eloise. "I—some one must have left this in the cab."

"You came in a cab?" asked the personnel man in surprise. His eyes dropped, but Eloise knew that he must think her work highly paid to be able to afford a taxi.

"Yes," she murmured carelessly, "and I know I took my own case into the cab, because I had opened it just inside of the station door to take out my purse."

In a half hour she found herself walking into the street again, a strange man's briefcase under her arm and a contract at twice the sum she had intended to ask for her art work. She went into the first candy shop to have the chance of sitting down comfortably at a table and while waiting for the ice cream soda she ordered glanced through the case again.

ELDRIDGE WEST, Insurance, 487 Central Boulevard, Telephone Oakwood 9907.

Half a hundred of these cards tumbled out at her and clipped to one a name and address a block distant with the penciled notation:

"3:45 p. m., Thursday sharp."

"Why, that's only ten minutes away," Eloise murmured.

She glanced through the case a little farther and found a brief concerning a $50,000 life policy made out with the same name and address at the head. Eloise had a brother who had once been in the insurance business and she had often listened to him explaining various points about participating and nonparticipating policies, life incomes at age sixty-five and endowments. She felt interested in the paper and glanced through it before she remembered that unless she located this Eldridge West instantly he would miss the appointment.

There was no answer at the telephone number and Eloise realized that Mr. West must even now be searching frantically for his briefcase.

"I'll take it up there and perhaps he will meet the appointment without the material at hand," she told herself.

At the office, promptly at the minute, she laid the card on the desk of the information clerk. "If—" she started. She intended to say that if Mr. West happened to be there she would like to return his briefcase to him.

"Go right in," smiled the clerk, rising and hurrying before her to open the great walnut door.

"You're not Mr. West," snapped the man at the desk.

"No, of course I'm not," smiled Eloise. "Only, you see, I found his briefcase and I—if he hasn't come in yet, I—I can explain this policy to you," she said with astonishment at her own daring.

At the end of a half hour his name was on the dotted line. His phone rang at his elbow as he screwed the top on his pen again.

"Eh? No, no time to talk insurance to anyone—just took out a fifty thousand policy anyhow and that'll hold me for a while, I believe. No, no—oh, well, show him in, then."

The door opened and an anxious-eyed young man entered. "I left my briefcase in a cab, sir," he muttered. "I've been trying to locate it but—but—"

"You need a keeper," snapped the man at the desk. "I've just signed up for a policy with the young lady here, Miss—what is your name, if I may ask?" he asked Eloise.

Eloise told him. The young man stared.

"Ah, yes, Miss Gary. . . . Well, if you have no keeper," he said gruffly to the young man, "if you have no keeper, Mr. West, let me suggest Miss Gary—if she contemplated acting as keeper to an impecunious young insurance man who leaves his briefcase about. . . ."

Eloise Gary blushed and held the signed application toward Mr. West.

"I—I found the case, you see," she explained, "and my brother used to sell for this same company. . . . I—I hated to see the case lost and with the time marked 'sharp' and underscored. I knew it must be some one very, very busy," she said with a sideways glance toward the man at the desk. "I—I—"

"I don't know how to thank you," Eldridge West said over and over again as they stood at the curb downstairs.

Three months later, when they were married, they started their honeymoon in a taxi for, as they said, it was only fair to patronize a company which had, so to speak, brought them together!

Pollock's Services to the Nation Forgotten

Some of the men who did the most to create the United States of America have never been given proper credit. Without Robert Morris, for instance, Washington could never have kept fighting. And there was a Robert Morris of the West, too. His name was Oliver Pollock.

Pollock was born in Ireland, but emigrated early to the Colonies. He lived for a time in Carlisle, Penn., then moved to Havana, Cuba. Later still, he moved to New Orleans. He was a successful merchant and banker, wholly a self-made man.

Appointed a commercial agent of the Colonies, he bought and shipped munitions and supplies up the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, and across country from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia. Gov. Patrick Henry appointed him a special agent for the state of Virginia during the Revolution, and in this capacity he did more than any other man to finance the George Rogers Clarke expedition. If it had not been for his work, and for Clarke's, England today would own at least a good part of the Middle West.

Pollock raised some $300,000, mostly on his own notes. But when liberty was won at last, the new republic promptly forgot him, and he was thrown into jail at Havana for nonpayment of personal debts. His friend, Governor Galvez of Louisiana, on becoming captain-general of Cuba, released him on his own parole, and Pollock, undaunted, set to work and built up a second fortune.

He paid every cent of his debts contracted in the cause of a nation that neglected him. When he died, a very old man, at Pinckneyville, Miss., on December 17, 1823, there was no official demonstration, and today his name is forgotten.—Donald Barr Chidsey in Popular Biography.

The Two Stars

Harry Leon Wilson, the humorist, said at a dinner in Monterey: "Stars are apt to be intolerant. A star actor sneers at other actors, and so it is with star writers, golfers, cooks."

"There's a story about a good man who died and went to the good place. He had been an ardent angler, and a short time after his arrival he began to tell a fish story. Everybody listened to his story with flattering attention, but one man interrupted almost every sentence with loud bursts of incredulous laughter.

"Finally the angler turned to his other listeners and said:

"Who is that chap who doesn't believe me?"

"There were shrugs and smiles, and several voices said: "Oh, just Jonah.""

United States Roses

In the United States each section has its favorite rose, from the delicate arching hedges of "Cherokees" in Texas or the stately "Baltimore Belles," which are descended from prairie roses, to the "Mission Rose," named after the American missionaries who brought slips of the flower from Vancouver, where an old settler, John McLoughlin, had found delight while breaking the wilderness in planting and tending the flower.

First White Bridal Veil

The origin of white bridal array dates back to 1553, when Mary Stuart married Francis the Second of France. The ceremony took place before the great doors of Notre Dame, and the bride wore a robe of white and silver brocade, with a train of pale blue velvet, six yards long. Till this time white was worn as mourning by royal widows in France.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as its tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Make Profitable Use of Time to Get Results

Sometimes we are so utterly dull and out of touch with the stimulus of life that we complain how time hangs upon our hands. The truth is time neither flies nor remains still. It moves onward at exactly the same rate today as it did a million years ago. What is happening is an alteration in our reaction to time. All these points of view arise out of a changed state of our mind. One moment we see things one way—the next the same things have an entirely different color. That is why, one day, time seems to be fleeting, and another to drag.

Time is always with us, and all we have to do is to occupy ourselves in a way that will produce the best and greatest results. This means thinking on a constructive basis, so that every moment of life is spent in such a manner as to have in it but a minimum of waste.—Exchange.

Uncover Ancient City

The French government and Yale university are uniting in the work of uncovering the ancient city of Doura on the Euphrates river. The scientists have been excavating for about a year and the objects unearthed are said to have thrown new light on the little-known era of 300 A. D., as well as the obscure Parthian civilization.

Up to the present time the finds consist mainly of parchment records, of no importance in themselves, being mostly minor legal documents, but of great value in supplying names of officials and other data of the city.

American Indian Painters

Perhaps the best known group of Indian painters today is the young Kiowa Indians of Ponca City, Okla. A number of their paintings were shown in Europe in 1925 in connection with the international congress on art education at Prague, and were received with great enthusiasm by Europeans. A group of Pueblo Indians also has created much interest with paintings.—Washington Star.

Shallow evaporation pans, leading away from the Etang de Berre, and looking in the distance exactly like vast reservoirs, have been built, and these are filled from the lake. They are then dammed off, and dry air and blazing sun do the rest.

We Are Optimistic!

Michigan is "coming back." There can be no doubt of that.

We, in the banking business, see evidences every day of better times ahead. Not exactly as we'd like to see it yet, of course, but improving gradually.

Possibly the experiences of the past few years may be blessings in disguise. Perhaps we will all be better off for those experiences. Let's hope so, at least.

The Iosco County State Bank sees substantial prosperity ahead for this section of Michigan. We hope every-one of you may share in that prosperity and thereby add to your happiness and contentment.

built. Work was begun this week, and Mrs. Clara Barkman, president of the Auxiliary, removed the first board. The Legion and Auxiliary are especially grateful to Leslie Nash, who is donating time, money and all facilities for raising and moving the building; also to F. X. LaFlamme, who is to lay the cement blocks free of charge.

Others who have seen the value of improving our main business street and who have shown their loyalty and patriotism in helping the American Legion by donating money and material are as follows: Leslie Nash, F. X. LaFlamme, Chas. Miller, H. N. Butler, William DeGrow, Charles Curry, Hosea Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. McHarg, L. G. McKay, Grant Shattuck, Will Grant, Temple Tait, Mr. Leaf, Jos. "gay nineties" gags, Marion and Lawrence and the other boys and girls must have had more fun!

It's a rollicking tale of the love tribulations of one of the original Florodora girls, and a gay young blood, Marion Davies as the tomboyish chorus girl and Larry Gray as the youth whose flirtation develops into love, are delightful.

What makes the picture extra-delicious is the atmospheric stuff evolved. The bathing beach, the horseless carriage ride, the leg-o'-mutton sleeves and the rest of the gad-awful fashions for ladies, are too precious.

And, of course, the Florodora number, done in Technicolor, is the beauty high light. If you take mama and papa, don't be surprised if they break into their reminiscences.

Chipmunks in Winter

While chipmunks hibernate during the winter, they apparently do not become dormant in most cases, like bears; rather they store up food in their burrows during the summer and subsist upon this.
