TAWAS CITY SPLITS WITH CALIFORNIANS

Tawas City split even with the California Owls last Sunday, the locals copping the afternoon tilt by an 8 to 7 count, and dropping the night game to the Owls by an 11 to 9 score. Both contests took place at the Tawas City athletic field.

The afternoon game, an agreed seven inning engagement, was a well played affair. "Doc" Smith, local hurler, annexed his fourth consecutive pitching victory for the local team. Although the visitors ticked him for eleven safeties, "Doc" came through in the pinches, and with his mates' timely hits, managed to come out on the long end of the 8 to 7 count. Trailing at the end of the first half of the seventh by a 7 to 6 score, the locals provided the necessary punch, a base on balls and three consecutive singles, in their half to turn the tables.

Before a crowd of several hundred fans attracted by the curiosity of a night game, Tawas City's string of four straight victories was broken when they fell before the Owls by a 11 to 9 score Sunday night, also in a seven inning game.

To permit playing this game, the field was illuminated by electric lights surrounding the diamond. The Owls, who make a practice of playing night baseball, were not too well off for their experience in this type of game; in fact, it almost seemed that the local boys had an edge over them in fielding, executing three double plays at the visitors' expense during the seven innings. At bat, however, it was a different matter. Tawas City was held to seven hits, while the Owls connected for twelve safeties. Jackson, pitching for Tawas City, held the visiting squad well in hand for the first six innings, but weakened in the seventh, when the Owls acquired their lead.

This contest, which marked the debut of night baseball in this vicinity, was a treat for fans and a novelty for the local boys who took part. All in all, it was conceded a worth while attempt by both fans and players.

NORMA SHEARER SHINES IN "LET US BE GAY"

Divorce with love still lurking around the corner from the courtroom motivates the plot of "Let Us Be Gay," Norma Shearer's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle which plays at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Saturday and Sunday, August 2 and 3.

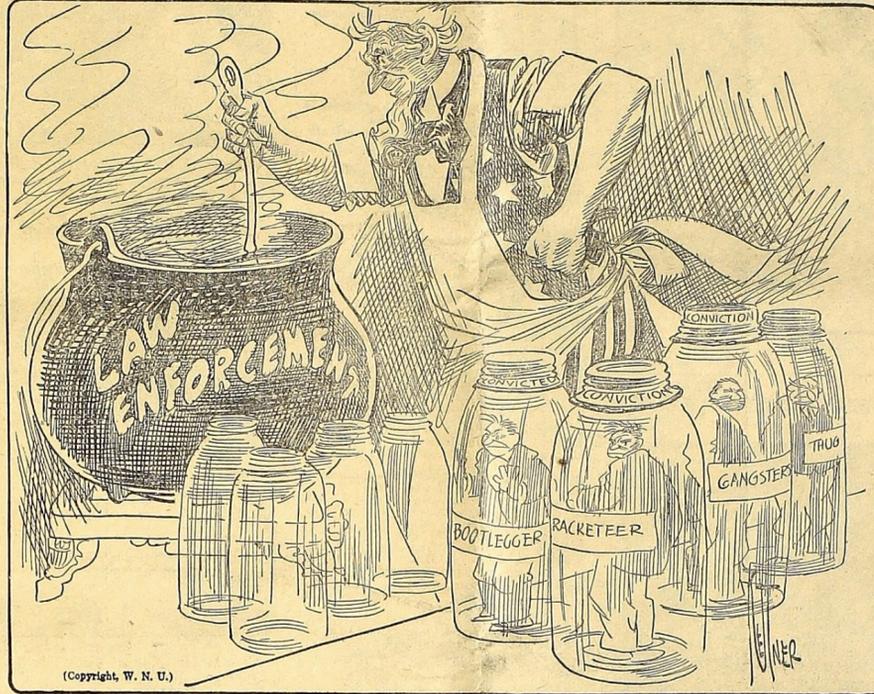

Miss Shearer renders a striking performance in this delightful picture of the Rachel Crothers stage hit, again demonstrating her rare versatility which has carried her to new heights in talkies. Robert Z. Leonard, who filmed "Divorcee," in which the star last triumphed, again was responsible for the direction.

Rod LaRocque plays the part of Miss Shearer's philandering-but-repentant husband and Marie Dressler is appropriately cast as the eccentric dowager who is the social vortex of a whirlpool of intrigue and gay week ends.

Attend the opening performance, Saturday matinee at 2:30.

ROXBURGH ENTERS RACE FOR STATE SENATOR

George F. Roxburgh of Reed City has entered the political ring in which he now may be classed as a veteran. This time he seeks the Republican nomination for the office of state senator of the 28th district. Mr. Roxburgh bases his right to considerable extent upon the fact that Osceola county has never had a senator since this district was organized over 20 years ago and feels an Osceola county candidate has a logical design on the office. A review of Mr. Roxburgh's career follows:

At eight years of age came to Michigan from Ontario. Father was born in Scotland; mother was born in Ontario. Lived in lumberwoods of Lake county for five years, and in 1877 the family moved to Reed City, Osceola county.

Had meager schooling in childhood; later attended Ferris Institute for two years; graduated from the commercial department of Valparaiso (Indiana) University.

Taught in rural and village schools; served on board of school examiners five years; was commissioner of schools of Osceola county for over 15 years, resigning to serve two years as secretary of the Michigan Teachers' Retirement Fund board; (Turn to No. 2, Back Page)

MRS. EMILY ROBINSON

Another pioneer chair has been vacated in Reno township by the passing of Mrs. Emily J. Robinson, who died at her home July 24th, after an illness of several months.

Emily Robinson was born June 29, 1857 at Eldorado, Hastings county, Canada. She was united in marriage to Mark Robinson of Madoc township, same province, in 1879. To this union were born six children, all of whom survive. Her husband preceded her in death eight years ago. She was a member of the Episcopal church, and was always willing to donate for a worthy cause. She was also a charter member of Reno Arbor, A. O. G. No. 528.

She leaves to mourn her death, three sons, James Robinson of Tawas City, Alex Robinson and Edward Robinson of Reno, three daughters, Mrs. Chas. Beardslee of Tawas City, Mrs. Arthur White of Prescott, and Mrs. Leland Barker of Detroit, one brother, Alex McInroy of Ontario, three sisters, Mrs. Minnie Knight, Mrs. Belle Stewart of Ontario, and Mrs. Brock of California, and eight grandchildren, besides a host of friends who extend sympathy to the bereaved family.

Weep not that her toils are over, Weep not that her race is run; God grant we may rest as calmly, When our work, like hers, is done. Till then we would yield with gladness.

Our treasure to Him to keep; And rejoice in the sweet assurance, He giveth His loved ones sleep.

SOUTH POLE EXPLORERS

FILM THEIR ADVENTURES

Although menaced by countless dangers, facing innumerable terrors, the little band of men that followed Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd into the unknown land at "the bottom of the world" returned to civilization without loss or injury. With them came the film-record of one of the most daring achievements of the age, "With Byrd at the South Pole," which will be the feature attraction at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Wednesday and Thursday, August 1 and 7.

Filled with colorful adventure, "brilliant drama, aching suspense, hearty humor," "With Byrd at the South Pole" is one of the strangest and most interesting pictures ever made. It is the living record of the men who battled the ferocious elements of Antarctica for twenty months and returned to tell what they saw.

"The foresight of Rear Admiral Byrd was, in large measure, responsible for the fact that his was the first polar expedition to return to civilization with every man in perfect health," according to Joseph Rucker, who, with Willard Vander Veer, photographed the thrilling real-life romance, "With Byrd at the South Pole."

The entire picture was made in Little America, situated on the Bay of Whales, in the area of 750 miles surrounding the South Pole. The daring fight across the Pole is one of the big thrills in the story. The picture shows the life, the work, the play of the men during those twenty months of practical isolation. The humorous incidents of their every day life are relived in film.

GRABBED THE MACE

John Beckett, a left-wing labor member for Camberwell, England, was responsible for the worst scene witnessed in the English parliament in 300 years when he seized the golden mace—symbol of parliamentary authority—from the table before the speaker's chair. Hoisting it across his shoulder with the cry "Mr. Speaker, it's a d—d disgrace!" he marched toward an exit. The indignity to the prestige of the house shocked the members and they booed and hooted the offender and later suspended him by a vote of 320 to 4.

Unique Americans

Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter

Brig. Gen. Samuel P. Carter

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
CONSULT Mr. Webster's large book of words and their definitions and there you will find one characterized thus: "Unique, a. Being without a like or equal; single in kind or excellence; sole." Despite this explicit definition, "unique" is a much-misused word.

Consider now the careers of three Americans and see whether or not the characterization of "unique" is aptly applied to them. One of them was the only man who ever held the rank of rear admiral in the United States navy and the rank of brigadier general in the United States army. Another was a man who, although not a native of America, held a position in the highest legislative body of one American government and then held successively three important offices in the executive department of another American government. Even more remarkable is the record of the third—not a native of America, he held several important state offices in two states, was elected United States senator from three different states, commanded American troops in two wars and was governor of an American territory.

Tennessee gave to the nation its only admiral-general. Samuel Powhatan Carter was his name and he was born in Elizabethtown, Carter county, August 6, 1819. He became a midshipman in the navy in 1840. Six years later he was promoted to the grade of passed midshipman and assigned to the U. S. S. Ohio.

From 1851 to 1853 he was assistant instructor of infantry tactics at the naval academy and was made a lieutenant in 1855. The next year he served in one of Uncle Sam's forgotten wars, the expedition to China. On July 11, 1861, Carter was temporarily transferred to the War department for the special duty of organizing troops in his native land, eastern Tennessee.

Carter soon proved to be as able a military as he had been a naval officer. He was appointed first colonel of the Second Tennessee volunteers, then acting brigadier general of volunteers, and on May 1, 1862, he received his full commission as commander of a brigade.

As a cavalry leader Carter distinguished himself particularly. On August 28, 1863, he defeated that matchless Confederate horseman, Gen. John H. Morgan, and the next day repeated his success against General Smith. He was present at the siege of Knoxville in December of that year and later commanded a division under Gen. John Schofield in the North Carolina campaign of 1865. On March 13, 1865, Carter was brevetted major general, and was mustered out of the army in January, 1866.

He immediately returned to the navy, having by this time been promoted to the rank of commander. He served as commandant at the naval academy from 1869 to 1872, having been promoted to the rank of captain in 1870. He was a member of the lighthouse board from 1876 to 1880, and was promoted to commodore in 1878. In 1881 he was honored by promotion to the rank of rear admiral on the retired list, this reward coming as a fitting climax to his extraordinary career in both branches of the United States service. In 1891 "Admiral-General" Carter, truly a unique American, died in the Capital of the country he had served so well during his lifetime of seventy-one years.

In the year 1811 a ship attempted to ascend the Mississippi river to New Orleans, but finding that port blocked by a British fleet it sailed away to the West Indies. Among its passengers, who landed on the island of St. Croix, was an English Jew, named Benjamin, and his wife. On August 11 a son was born to Mrs. Benjamin and given the name of Judah. Although Judah P. Benjamin was though the right of being born on American soil, he was destined to become an important figure in American history.

Benjamin's boyhood was spent in Wilmington, N. C., until 1825, when he entered Yale. After three years he left that institution without getting a degree and went to New Orleans, where he studied law in a notary's office. He was admitted to the bar in 1832 and spent the next few years practicing that profession with a short interim of school teaching.

Politics was next to engage his attention and he allied himself to the Whig party. In 1845 he was a member of the convention which met to revise the constitution of Louisiana, and it is noteworthy that this foreign-born citizen of Louisiana was responsible for placing in the new code a provision that the governor of that state must be a citizen born in the United States.

In 1848 Louisiana elected Benjamin as presidential elector at large, and four years later sent him to the United States senate, returning him there in 1857. He took a prominent part in the slavery dispute of those times, and during one of the exciting debates in the senate a dispute with Jefferson Davis, the senator from Mississippi, brought the two men to the verge of a duel which was averted only when Davis apologized.

Although Davis had disagreed violently with Benjamin in the senate he recognized the worth of the man, and when the former was chosen as President of the Confederate States of America he selected Benjamin as attorney general in his cabinet. In August, 1861, Benjamin was transferred to the War department, where his conduct of the war aroused such bitter hostility, even including charges of incompetency and neglect of his duty, that he resigned. But Davis, to whose stubborn refusal to accept advice some historians ascribe a large share of the responsibility for the downfall of the Confederacy, again flew in the face of public opinion, and immediately offered Benjamin his third cabinet position, that of secretary of state.

When Richmond fell in 1865, Benjamin fled with the rest of the Confederate government. Making his way to the coast of Florida he escaped in an open boat to the Bahamas, and in September, 1865, reached Liverpool. After living quietly in retirement for a year in England he took up the study of English law, and in 1866 he was admitted to the bar.

In 1868, after his health had failed, Benjamin retired from active practice, and on June 30 of that year he was given of honor at a farewell banquet to him in the Inner temple in London by the highest legal luminaries in England. He then went to Paris to make his home and there he died on May 8, 1884.

If Benjamin's career in America was a remarkable one, even more unusual was that of another immigrant boy, James E. Shields. Born in Dunganon, County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1810, Shields came to this country at the age of sixteen and went to the frontier country of Illinois, where he studied law and began practice at Kaskaskia in 1832. Honors came rapidly to him in his adopted home. He was elected to the legislature in 1836, made state auditor in 1839 and appointed a judge on the State Supreme court bench in 1843. Two years later he was appointed commissioner of the general land office, but gave up civil life at the outbreak of the Mexican war to accept a commission as brigadier general of the Illinois volunteers in 1846.

During that conflict Shields served under General Taylor on the Rio Grande, under General Wood in Chihuahua and during General Scott's campaign. He was shot through the lung at the Battle of Cerro Gordo and brevetted major general. After his recovery he served in the Valley of Mexico as commander of a brigade of marines, New York and South Carolina volunteers, only to be wounded severely again at the storming of Chapultepec. Mustered out of the service on July 20, 1848, he was immediately appointed territorial governor of Oregon but resigned this office when he was elected senator from Illinois as a Democrat. He served in the senate from December 3, 1849, to March 3, 1855, and then moved to Minnesota.

When the state government was organized there he was again sent to the United States senate where he remained from May 12, 1858, to March 3, 1859. He next moved to California and at the outbreak of the Civil war was acting as superintendent of a mine in Mexico. Hastening to Washington, the Mexican war veteran was commissioned a brigadier general of volunteers in August, 1861, and after the death of Gen. Fred W. Lander Shields was placed at the head of his brigade. In 1862 he was head of a division of Gen. N. P. Banks' army then operating in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia and opened the campaign by inflicting a stinging defeat at Winchester upon "Stonewall" Jackson, who was just then beginning to make his bid for fame as the remarkable leader of "foot cavalry." Shields was wounded in this battle, receiving a broken arm from a fragment of shell.

On March 28, 1863, weakened by the wounds which he had suffered in two wars, Shields resigned from the army. Going to California he found that the lands granted to him for his military services had been lost by his trusted agent and he bought a farm near Carrollton, Mo., upon which to spend his declining years. Although he had decided to retire from public life, he was soon back into politics. In 1868 he was Democratic candidate for congress, and although his friends declared that he had been elected, he was not seated. Six years later they elected him to the legislature, and upon the expiration of his term, the general, aged, weakened and impoverished, sought the humble position of door-keeper of the United States senate in which he had represented two states. But this was denied him and he returned to Missouri. That state promptly honored him by electing him to the senate and he returned again as a member of the body which had denied him employment. He held this position until his death, which took place on June 1, 1879, at Ottumwa, Iowa, where he had gone to deliver a lecture on the Mexican war for the benefit of a church.

with white, the navy coat cut along nautical lines, is ever so popular. Usually the white shoes boast trimming touches which repeat the gay tone of the jacket.

Those little paletois which are creating such a furore this season, being so amusingly quaint and old-fashioned, are awfully smart. For these, velvet is a favorite medium, tuned in coloring to the dress with which it is worn. For instance a brown and yellow print dress calls for a paletois of solid brown velvet. If the paletois be fitted in basque-like forms, if the sleeves be nothing more or less than shoulder cape flaps over the arm, so

JACKETS IN GAY CONTRAST STYLISH; BIG BRIMS NOW TOP SHOWY PRINTS

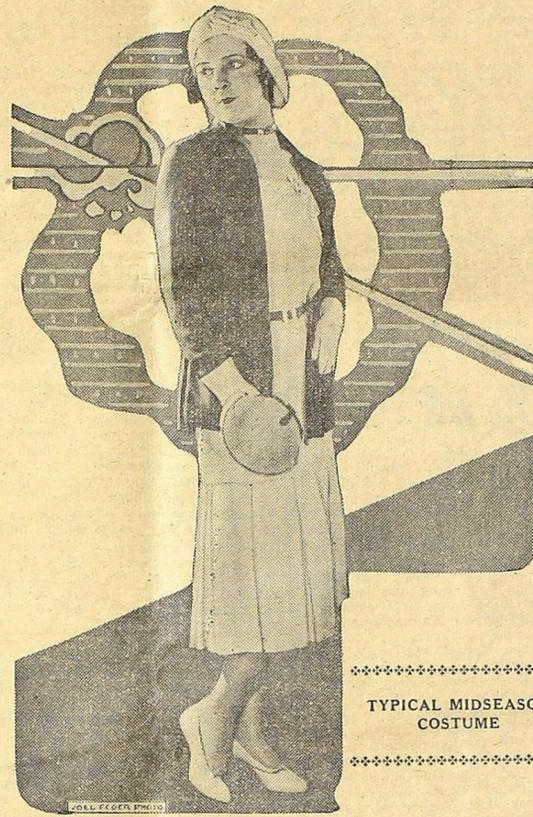

A VOGUE which has been flourishing since early spring and which is scheduled to carry over through midseason and into early fall, with even greater emphasis, is that of the separate jacket or short coat which gaily contrasts the dress over which it is worn. Throughout the advance fall showings the theme is being interpreted in versatile ways.

Just now jackets in bright red are quite the thing worn over white sports dresses or those of natural colored much the better, for it is the novelty of the thing which counts.

Midsummer is destined to make its exit midst extremely picturesque scenes so far as fashion is concerned. In its final gesture, the summer mode is staging with a grand flourish the loveliest of lovely big-of-brim lacy and sheer hats, the same topping ravishing flowery or plain filmy frocks.

We haven't had anything so flattering for years as these picture hats of openwork straws and other trans-shanting. The costume in the picture is typical. This outdoor ensemble which tops a white frock with a vivid red jacket is made of a bemberg material especially woven for sports wear. The dress is very simple, to all appearances, but it asserts its chic in such style-convincing details as a fitted-at-the-hipline skirt which develops wide box pleating at the hemline, also the square-cut neckline finished with a soft-tied bow at one side. The gown has short sleeves which are really much smarter than sleeveless. Take note of the narrow red suede belt, the red heels on the white kid pumps, the white beret with a flange made of the same fabric as the dress, and the white washable pull-on gloves, for these are all items which merge into a unit of ultra modishness.

Jackets of every color will enliven the autumn landscape. A sprightly effect is that of the orange-colored coatee worn over the dress of primrose yellow, and then there are those lovely pastel combinations such as a jacket in Patou pink with the frock of hyacinth blue. Bright navy blue parenities, and the adorable gay prints with which they are worn. Knowing this, women are loath to give them up until the very last moment, even though alluring fall fantasies in the way of cunning little velvet berets, likewise those of crocheted chenille are already making a strenuous bid for favor.

At the present moment interest centers about huge airy black hats with colorful frocks, although pure white and pastel colorings all have their place in the realm of summer chapeaux. In fact, two interesting trends are observed in the style panorama of the immediate moment—the all-white costume from tip to toe versus the bright frock topped with a black hat of wide proportions. It is indeed very new to wear with the gown of white georgette, net, batiste or organdie a fragile looking all-white hat whose brim is draped with subtle grace. A cluster of white violets at the shoulder and the picture is complete.

In picture below, each of the black summery models boasts a touch of color, as do so many of the late Paris hats. Pink with black, white with black or pale blue with black, is very Parisian. Which accounts for the delicate pink rose on the first large hat of lacelike straw in the picture, also the cluster of white violets posed at the left of the crown in the quaint bonnet of wiry crin weave shown at the top to the right.

NAVY LIKES MOBILE STUB MOORING MAST

Stands Tests for Docking of Big Dirigibles.

Lakehurst, N. J.—Preliminary tests of the motorized stub mooring mast for fast docking of dirigibles, which has been used both in handling of the Los Angeles and the German dirigible Graf Zeppelin, has proved so successful that the navy has approved further development of this idea.

It is generally conceded that the motorized stub mooring mast, an improvement made by young naval officers stationed at the Lakehurst naval air station, is one of the most important advances made in recent years.

Construction Contract. So enthusiastic are the older heads of the Navy department in Washington over the work that they have approved the construction of a new device which will incorporate the basic idea of the original motorized mast and some startling new theories. Naturally, the new project has been surrounded with the utmost secrecy.

All that is definitely known is that a contract for its construction has been awarded by the bureau of yards and docks of the Navy department and that it will cost $13,493.

Although navy officials will not discuss the new mast beyond explaining that it will be an improvement over the first mobile mast, a recent announcement of the bureau of aeronautics in Washington disclosed that a "self-contained propulsion system" for the mast is a contemplated refinement for the near future. The mast now in service is pulled by a tractor.

Telescope Feature Developed. Meteorological conditions and lack of man power were the conditions which primarily led to the abandonment of high mooring mast docking. The principal unit employed in the new mechanical docking system used here is a low mobile mast capable of movement over the ground with the dirigible attached to it.

This mast not only acts as the principal unit of the handling equipment, but also serves as a mooring device to which the ship may be moored for indefinite periods. It also incorporates a telescopic feature enabling its height to be adjusted to suit different airships.

"Flying Fort" May Be Built by Uncle Sam

Bellefonte, Ill.—A "flying fort," carrying a 37-millimeter gun, two air planes, ten machine guns and from 5,000 to 15,000 pounds of bombs, will be constructed at Scott field here, if congress approves a bill for construction of a new metal dirigible, according to announcement here.

Col. John A. Paegelow, commandant of the field, has outlined plans for construction of the dirigible. The projected craft will be 547.2 feet long. Eight engines of 4,900 total horse power would give the dirigible a maximum speed of 100 miles an hour with a cruising range of 4,400 miles.

While construction of the dirigible would be essentially a military project, Colonel Paegelow said it would serve such useful peace-time purposes as aiding in Mississippi flood-relief work and making a detailed aerial map of the Mississippi valley.

Idaho Ranchman Uses Plane to Herd Sheep

—Scott Anderson of Rupert, Idaho, is perhaps the first man in the West to use an airplane in herding his vast flocks of sheep. Anderson owns three planes which he uses to visit his different sheep camps, many miles apart, to which he takes supplies for his sheep herders.

The long journeys across mountains and plains to the various sheep camps which require days for wagons and even trucks can be made by airplane in a few hours. The sheep have become used to the airplanes and do not become scared or stampede when they land near them.

PIONEERS WILL FLY OLD-TIME PLANES

"Early Birds Day" at the National Air Races.

Chicago.—The national races to be held at Curtiss-Wright-Reynolds airport here from August 23 to September 1, inclusive, will not only reveal all that is new in aeronautics, but all that is old as well.

Quaint pusher biplanes, flimsy monoplanes, and ancient "motored box kites" will be flown and exhibited on August 27, which has been designated as "Early Birds Day." Men and women flyers who gained fame when the airplane was still in its infancy and who were as well known at that time as Lindbergh, Byrd, Doolittle, and Amelia Earhart are today, will again maneuver the craft which made the crowds gasp a decade ago.

Walter Brookings, first student of the Wright brothers and Frank Coffyn, the second finished pupil of the airplane inventors, will be among those present. Other famous pioneers will include J. A. D. McCurdy, Glenn Curtiss, Charles Willard, and Bud Mars, now a grandfather, and Colonel De Forrest Chandler, the first American pilot to use a machine gun on an airplane. Foreign pioneers, too, will take part in the Early Birds' activities: Anthony Fokker, who learned to fly in Dutch Java long before the war, and Igor Sikorsky, who was Russia's outstanding designer before he came to this country to repeat his success from abroad. Women pioneers present who piloted their own planes before the war will include Ruth Law, Katherine and Marjorie Stinson, and Mrs. Floyd Smith.

Plans are now under way for these early flyers to perform in exact replicas of the planes in which they gained fame.

The Early Birds, the organization which is sponsoring the exhibition of all that is old in aeronautics, is a unique body. Membership is limited to men and women who piloted airplanes on or before December 16, 1916, which covers the first thirteen years of directed human flight.

Hoover's Son Heads Air Radio Service

Chicago.—Herbert Hoover, Jr., at a meeting held here was elected president of the newly organized Aeronautical Radio Inc., a company formed to take over and operate the radio activities of the various aviation companies. The company was formed to save the aviation companies the expense of having to maintain separate radio systems in the operation of their planes.

Many of the nation's leading trunk air lines and private flying services are to be associated in the new company. The headquarters will be in Washington, D. C.

Other officers are: Thorp Hiscock, of the Boeing Air Transport, vice president; Paul Gordsborough, executive vice president; H. C. Leuteritz of the Pan-American airways, secretary-treasurer. Members of the board of directors are: Herbert Hoover, Jr., the Western Air express; P. G. Johnson, Boeing Air express; Mr. Leuteritz, Jack Frye, Western Air express; L. H. Britton, Northwest airways; Frederick G. Coburn, Aviation corporation; C. C. Shangraw, Aviation corporation; William P. MacCracken, New York, Rio, and Buenos Aires airways, and Louis G. Caldwell, Chicago attorney.

Wisconsin Aviation Worth Two Million

Milwaukee.—Approximately $2,500,000 is invested in aviation fields and equipment in Wisconsin, according to a survey completed by the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce.

It is shown that there are 68 air fields, of which 14 are established airports, 18 landing fields with 36 emergency fields.

The largest and best equipped fields are the Milwaukee county airport, the chamber of commerce report said, and the Curtiss airport in Milwaukee county. Each represents an investment of $500,000, the report said.

There are 18 municipally owned fields in the state, 45 privately owned and five provided by the Department of Commerce.

Ladies, remember Dr. Hennessy's lectures each Monday afternoon at the M. E. church annex.

Mrs. F. K. Reybold of Flushing, N. Y., is spending several weeks at the home of her mother, Mrs. Belle Curtis.

Mrs. Joe Krutz and baby of Saginaw are guests at the parental home.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Lockwood and Mrs. D. Piper of Lansing spent last week with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Taulker.

Mrs. F. Jennings and daughter, Miss Marion Jennings, entertained guests from Royal Oak over the week end.

Rev. and Mrs. Gregory and family of Milford are guests for ten days of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Glendon.

Mrs. M. Cobb, Cecil Cobb and Victor Webb spent the week end of last week visiting in Millington.

Miss Helen Webb will attend the carnival at Bay City this week as Miss Hale.

Mrs. Harry Westcott was operated on at Samaritan hospital, Bay City, last week Friday. Her condition is reported as favorable.

Mr. and Mrs. Wylie Pearsall of Clarkston, Mich., were week end guests of Hale relatives.

Mrs. A. I. Hether and daughter, Miss Helen, of Clare were guests at the R. D. Brown home this week.

The Chautauqua programs presented this week have been excellent. The attendance not as good as was hoped for owing, no doubt, to the business depression.

At the regular meeting of Hale Chapter No. 482, O. E. S., held last Tuesday evening, a program was presented commemorating the third anniversary of the institution of the chapter, and lunch was served. The meeting was well attended.

Meeting the Needs of Millions of People

The low-priced automobile has brought greater opportunity and added hours of recreation to millions of men and women.

BECAUSE the automobile is such an important factor in the lives and prosperity of so many people, the purpose of the Ford Motor Company is something more than the mere manufacture of a motor car.

There is no service in simply setting up a machine or a plant and letting it turn out goods. The service extends into every detail of the business—design, production, the wages paid and the selling price. All are a part of the plan.

The Ford Motor Company looks upon itself as charged with making an automobile that will meet the needs of millions of people and to provide it at a low price. That is its mission. That is its duty and its obligation to the public.

The search for better ways of doing things is never-ending. There is ceaseless, untiring effort to find new methods and new machines that will save steps and time in manufacturing. The Ford plants are, in reality, a great mechanical university, dedicated to the advancement of industry. Many manufacturers come to see and share the progress made.

The greatest progress comes by never standing still. Today's methods, however successful, can never be taken as wholly right. They represent simply the best efforts of the moment. Tomorrow must bring an improvement in the methods of the day before. Hard work usually finds the way.

Once it was thought impossible to cast gray iron by the endless chain method. All precedent was against it and every previous experiment had failed. But fair prices to the public demanded that wasteful methods be eliminated. Finally the way was found.

A better way of making axle shafts saved thirty-six million dollars in four years. A new method of cutting crankcases reduced the cost by $500,000 a year. The perfection of a new machine saved a similar amount on such a little thing as one bolt. Then electric welding was developed to make many bolts unnecessary and to increase structural strength.

Just a little while ago, an endless chain conveyor almost four miles long was installed at the Rouge plant. This conveyor has a daily capacity of 300,000 parts weighing more than 2,000,000 pounds. By substituting the tireless, unvarying machine for tasks formerly done by hand, it has made the day's work easier for thousands of workers and saved time and money in the manufacture of the car.

All of these things are done in the interest of the public—so that the benefits of reliable, economical transportation may be placed within the means of every one.

SUCH IS LIFE — An Explanation

HIS WIFE WAS ALWAYS A GREAT BOOSTER

his pocket. "There's the letter. Read it." He tossed the envelope into her lap.

Alice read the letter. It was brief, but terribly vital. She was shocked by what Richard had torn out of his heart to show the one friend he felt he could speak to. She sighed as she finished reading.

"Do you want to read Margaret's letter, Orson?"

"No! I have no sympathy with Margaret. A woman who takes all and gives nothing! You see what Dick says there. He's going to throw up his job and go. That ends him." He sat silent for a moment. "The firm has asked me to take over his territory."

"That means you will leave home and travel! You have always wanted to do that!" Alice tried to smile with stiff, bluish lips.

Orson, not looking at her, laughed. "That was before I got a settled habit in life. I'd rather take less salary and stay at home. If it's all the same to you." He looked at her keenly.

"There are no two ways of thinking about that," Alice said, suddenly glowing with joy. She went over to his chair, sat down on the arm, and put her cheek against his. He encircled her with his arm and held her close.

"You've made me too comfortable, Alice," Orson said. "When I've come home nights, tired as a dog, you've had food, love, understanding to give me. Every morning you've sent me forth with renewed spirit. You never complained when money was tight or I was too worried over something to remember your birthday with the customary box of candy."

"That only happened twice," Alice reminded him gently.

"You've been a great booster. And, I'll admit it, I'm the kind of fellow who needs boosting—occasionally. I don't know what I'd be without you, old girl. That's what poor Dick lacked—his wife's sympathy. For 20 years she's kept his nose on the grindstone; she needn't be surprised at what's happened. I've envied Dick. There's been times when I hankered after his job. Now I can have it—"

Alice waited. Her heart beat fast.

"But aside from the fact I like my own job too well, I can't take Dick's. That's what's been nagging at me, ever since I heard from Dick. I knew you'd like a little more money, that's natural. We'll have to skip to put the boy through college. But he's got a big mind; he'll amount to a lot more than his father ever will—you're sure you feel about this job business just the way I do?"

"Sure," said Alice.

"Then you write to Margaret. And I'll write to Dick. Maybe we can do something for them yet—"

"There's the door-bell!" exclaimed Alice.

It was a messenger with a night telegram. Alice tore it open.

"From Margaret!" she said. "Dick's going to stay. My fault. Letter to follow." She read the words aloud, holding the paper with one hand while she wiped tears off her cheek with the other.

"Now then," said Orson, gaily, "when you write to Margaret be right on your job every word you say. Boost Dick for all he's worth. You can do it."

"Sure, I can do it," replied Alice as she hurried across the room toward her little writing desk.

Turkey Refuses to Sell Royal Floating Palace

Turkey's precious royal pleasure galley dating from the reign of Sultan Mohammed IV will never be sold no matter how many flattering offers are made, according to the director of the naval museum. A British enterprise recently offered the government a large sum for this unique craft, proposing to take it to the United States for exhibition purposes. The offer was rejected.

The galley, believed to date back to 1650, is 40 meters long, five and a half meters wide, two and a half meters deep and weighs 150 tons. It was manned by 144 men, three to each oar. The point used at that time was so good that even now it is almost as fresh as when new, particularly the blue. The gilded prow is long and sharp, but the remainder of the galley is curiously overhung, after the fashion of ancient Venetian craft. In the stern is the imperial cabin with a triple cupola supported by columns and completely overlaid with mother-of-pearl and tortoise-shell mosaic, studded with garnet glass. The cabin is flanked by two glass gilded gryphons and entered through a balustrade adorned with four large balls of cloudy crystal.

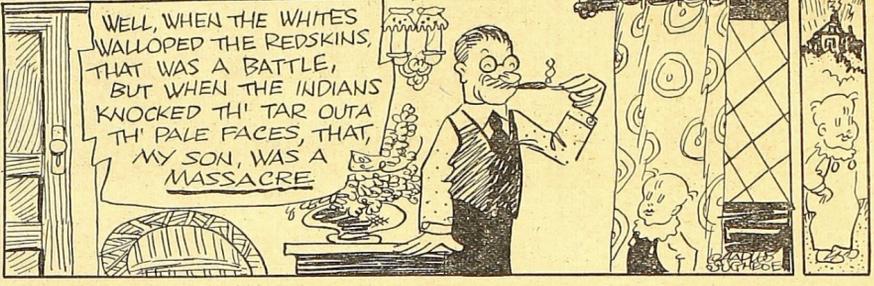

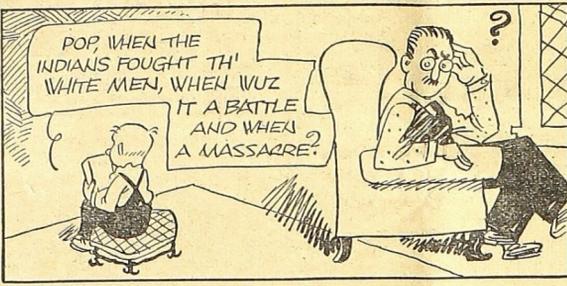

In addition to this masterpiece of medieval boat-builders' art, there are thirteen other caiques in the same building—graceful craft once propelled with gilded oars, scores of which are stacked in the half-forgotten naval museum beside the Golden Horn.

Dutch Republic

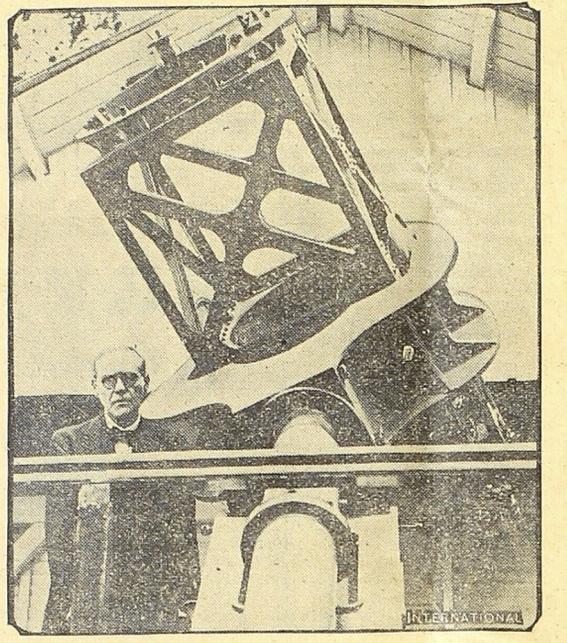

The first stadtholder of Holland was William of Nassau, styled the Great, who was killed by an assassin, an alleged hireling of Philip II of Spain, July 10, 1534. The princes of Orange, stadtholders during the Dutch republic, founded the royal house now represented by Wilhelmina of Holland and princess of Orange-Nassau.

William the Great recovered the principality of Orange in 1559, and led the revolt which under pacification of Ghent led to the union of the north and south provinces.

The house of Orange was overthrown by the French in 1795, but restored in 1813, and two years later the prince assumed the title of king of the Netherlands.

Improved Photographic Telescope

Prof. John Ritchie, noted American astronomer, with the new type of photographic telescope which he has invented jointly with Professor Chretien, French astronomer. The instrument, which is technically known as the Ritchie-Chretien Aplanatic telescope, is only 54 inches long and uses a mirror of but 20 inches in diameter, thereby considerably decreasing the cost of installation and operation. It is said to produce better results than do the 100-inch telescopes previously installed by Professor Ritchie at the Mt. Wilson observatory in California.

Sees After Thirty Years of Blindness

Chicago.—A young man on his honeymoon was stricken with total blindness—thirty years ago.

One day recently, his vision suddenly restored, he sat bewildered by the side of the woman who for three decades had been his guide, his companion and his wife, and—until he closed his eyes again—she seemed unreal.

Three days before the man—J. F. Fish, 2428 North Sawyer avenue—sensed the beginning of the miracle that was coming to him.

He was in his own living room. His wife was there. The feeling he had was as if a black curtain before his eyes became less black at the lower edge and a misty gray border grew.

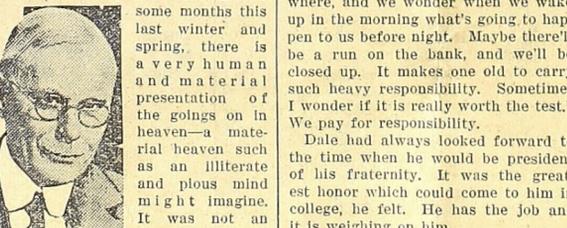

For some time he considered this without saying anything. Probably it was just an illusion, he thought. But the gray border widened. It became translucent—and then—transparent. He exclaimed:

"My dear, I believe—I really believe that I am beginning to see!"

RESPONSIBILITY

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

In "Green Pastures," the much-talked-of negro drama which ran in New York for some months this last winter and spring, there is a very human and material presentation of the golgs on in heaven—a material heaven such as an illiterate and plous mind might imagine. It was not an easy job running the heavenly choir and keeping things going along regularly and peacefully, and one of the heavenly host is heard to say, "Sometimes it's hard, even bein' God."

Even omnipotence must carry heavy responsibilities, and it may be they are not easily borne. It was one of the Henrys who, worn out with the worries of his kingship, is quoted as saying: "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." It isn't all glory and gayest times being a king. Anyone who holds a high position must bear responsibility and pay dearly for the honor and the distinction which the position carries.

I thought that Weldon was having a pretty soft time. He lived in a beautiful house, he seemed to be free from financial worries, and he was president of the local bank. As far as I could see he came late to work

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Harold Russell Ryder, the broker who spent millions on Broadway before he crashed, has, according to close friends, a most extraordinary and puzzling personality. They describe him as a man with a mixture of a delusion of grandeur, a kindness complex, a total financial irresponsibility and a Robin Hood desire to aid the needy. Ryder never, in his spending, was of the loud-voiced aggressive type. Always courteous and gentle, he spoke in almost hushed tones.

"May I please have another good table tonight?" he would say to a head waiter, and then to a bus boy, "Will you see that all my guests have plenty of water?"

Then he might give the head waiter $100, and the bus boy $10. He knew the waiters in the places he frequented by name; knew their family history; asked concerning their wives and children. He always tipped lavishly, but if any of the waiters was in trouble, he would hand him a big enough bill to help him out.

Those who knew Ryder tell me he had a mania for helping persons financially. Waiters, taxi-drivers, musicians—he always has been fond of music—scrubwomen, actresses, chorus girls, any of them could get money from him if he thought they needed it. His friends declare that this gave him a reputation he didn't deserve; that he was no roue; didn't especially care about women—unless they were broke. His beneficent, caliph-of-Bagdad complex started working immediately to demand his aid and protection for anyone who did not appear to have any money. It was his pleasure to fill their pockets.

All the night clubs know Ryder; the night club workers are for him to the last man. Why not? Ryder is said to have spent over $40,000 on Broadway in a month. Some few were grateful. One man sat in Ryder's office two hours to see him. When he finally did see him, he gave him a hand-made wooden cigarette case.

"I made this for you," he said. "It was the only way I could show my gratitude."

"Where did I see you and what did I ever do for you?" asked Ryder.

"Don't you remember me?" said the man. "I'm a waiter. One night you asked me about myself. I told you my wife was to have a child and I had saved no money. I didn't know what to do. You gave me $200. I cannot tell you how that helped."

POPULAR LACE TWEED

Among the new fabrics lace tweed is destined for great popularity in the sports field. A pattern of this tweed is shown in the smartly flared suit in the illustration. It is made with a one-piece dress which outlines the figure to the knees, where it flares in circular flounces. The dress is topped with a short jacket showing the same flaring finish, while a belt further emphasizes the flared effect. The yellow and black combination is subdued by a small black beret, while black oxfords complete the costume.

Umbrella Sentence

New York.—Joseph Latzo, husky iron worker, had to answer an intoxication charge twice. Magistrate Rudich suspended sentence. Latzo's wife, however, decided to do her own sentencing. As he left court she attacked him vigorously with an umbrella.

When students and teachers come to his office now he closes his eyes "in order to recognize them more readily"—because his ears are better trained than his eyes.

The original loss of his vision was the result of a blow on the head. The restoration was time's slow healing of that injury.

Quebec Dog Carts to Go

Quebec.—One of this province's most picturesque sights, the presence of small dog carts along the highways, has been condemned in the interests of the machine age.

Ryder immediately called up one of the big piano concerns; told who he was; asked them to keep open until he arrived. When he got there he bought a piano which cost several thousand dollars, put it on a truck and had it delivered in Greenwich Village.

"Here is a piano," he said mildly to members of the quartet. "You sing well, but I like songs better with instrumental accompaniment."

On another occasion Ryder paid $7,000 for a radio and a piano and gave them away. A taxi man he helped in Paris constituted himself Ryder's bodyguard. If he took another car, this driver would follow with his taxi, until such time as Ryder got safely back to his hotel. Ryder did everything in the grand manner, even

Springs to Heat Capital of Iceland

Washington.—Iceland, the world's oldest republic, lying just south of the Arctic Circle, is preparing to heat its capital, Reykjavik, and at the same time provide power and amusement through the long winters with boiling water drawn from nearby hot springs.

Progress in this undertaking to a point where, next winter, the national hospital and a school will be heated and an indoor swimming pool will be established, utilizing the water after it has given up most of its heat, was reported to the Department of Commerce this week by North Winship, Consul General at Reykjavik. He described it as the first step toward heating all of the capital.

The success of this undertaking provides a fresh explanation of the admiration which anthropologists and other students of human races and progress have long expressed for the Icelanders, who have retained in their isolation the splendid qualities displayed by their ancestors of 1,000 years ago in resisting oppression at home until hopelessly outnumbered and then sailing into unknown seas in flimsy ships to find a land where they could live in freedom.

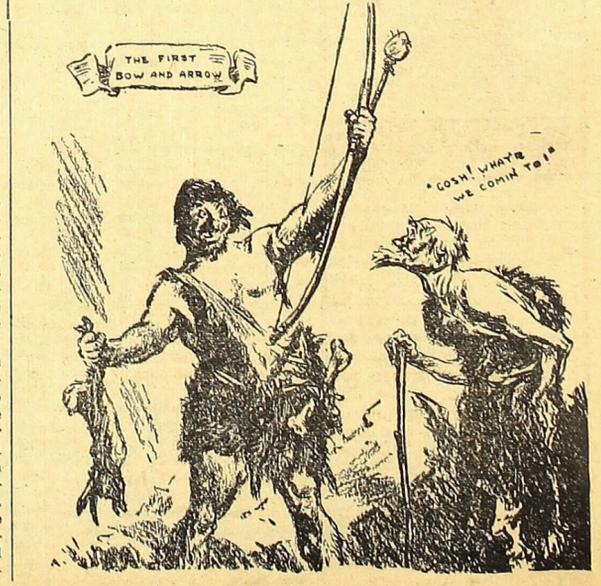

Iceland was formed, after a fashion, much as the republic was formed, through a volcanic uprising in the earth's crust. That accounts for the abundance of hot springs there, providing water ranging from warm to boiling in temperature. Experiments looking to the use of this natural resource have been in progress for some years, and have shown very favorable results, Mr. Winship reported.

Winship explained, will be installed in the usual manner, except that the radiators will be somewhat larger than ordinary.

Hair Cut by Lightning, He Feels "Pretty Good"

Excelsior Springs, Mo.—Fred Skelton, farmer, believes in plenty of fresh air and sleeps with his head near an open window. One night lightning shot through the screen and struck his pillow, tore it to fragments and took off all of his hair. After being unconscious for about an hour, the farmer came to and said he felt "pretty good."

It Was a Big Idea Once

First drillings were made two years ago by the Icelandic Engineering association at Wash Springs, about two miles from the capital. During the succeeding experiments the hot water was successfully used in heating a house, in cooking and washing and in warming the soil. Further investigation and experimentation are planned.

Under the plan for heating the capital a pumping plant will be constructed near Wash Springs. It will be built under ground, and the nat-

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT—

CHILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

"I know. It's like them mountains that he called after you. Ever so often, on the field, I'd used to look at them, at sun-up; there they was, the Pia Lauriers, high up and cold, with the light on them, and you'd see them for a little while, all gold, and then, when the sun was gettin' warm, and they looked sort of homelike, and not so far away, the mists would come up like cloaks, nuns' white cloaks, hidin' them, and they were gone."

The tears were near Pia's eyes. "Why, you're a poet," she said, lightly, to hide her emotion. "I'm not; I'm not even musical. . . . It's what I said; you have so much that I haven't, and there are things he'll miss. But, Jinny, we've got to remember that we love him, and want to do the best for him, and he would just hate it if we couldn't be friends."

"You mean you'll be my friend—real dinkum—no nonsense about doin' me good and improvin' me and gettin' me into 'a nice place where they'd be kind to me'?"

"I want to be your friend just as one girl to another. If I may."

"If you may!" said Jinny, and flung her arms about the other's neck.

Pia's kiss, given without reserve, was still on her lips, when Jinny, without warning, sprang away, leaped to bar feet, listened a moment, and then, in frantic hurry, began to put on her clothes.

"What's the matter?" asked Pia.

"Matter? Hark at that!"

"I hear nothing."

"Nothing, h—! That's rain."

A sudden memory leaped into Pia's mind—

"What happens if rain comes?"

"Him say, altogether we die."

She did not quite understand—yet. But she ran out of the tent, and under the few faint drops that were beginning to fall, looked up and down the gorge. Camp had been made on a slope of barren sand and gravel at the bottom of a rocky wall. There was driftwood there, and plenty of water, and, when they had halted, just before dark, it had been impossible to see any better place behind them or ahead, all the gorge, for miles, was steep-to, with a bottom almost level, that made good going, in spite of boulders and moraines of loose stone. The thread of water that here represented the Romilly, had not seemed—then—of any importance.

But already that thread was making its import felt; already a small, growling voice was audible among the boulders; tinkle and tripping of water, that came from somewhere far away. Simol had heard; already he was up, out of his tent, and running round among the other tent-flies with a stick in one hand and a lantern in the other. "Get up, you —s," they heard him shout; he wielded his stick with a powerful arm, and many a carrier woke, shrieking, under his blows. He tumbled them out; he did not waste time on Pia and Jinny, seeing them already up and dressed. Lanterns were hurriedly lit all over camp. The rain was not yet heavy, but it was increasing in the slow steady fashion that presages a downpour.

"Leavem altogether you load, get down along creek blanky quick," shouted the sergeant. "We go back."

"What is it?" asked Pia, as he came running up to her tent.

"Rain," answered the sergeant. "He fullum up this place quick time. You get down along creek, you two-fellow Sinabada, you run like hell."

"Where to?" demanded Pia, coolly.

"I show you. You go first, lightem torch." He was away again, driving the boys like cattle. Some of them wanted to collect their little belongings, their betel-bags, their pipes, their blankets. . . . Simol cracked them over the head, over the legs, hustled them without mercy. "You want to die here, you blanky black swine?" he shouted. "Get on."

The Tatata boy had already vanished into the darkness behind the camp. He needed no one to tell him what was coming. Through a raffle of rocks, Pia and Jinny hurried, backward along the way by which they had traveled earlier in the day.

"He knows some place we can get up, it must be pretty near," gasped Jinny, as they pressed forward. Running was impossible, walking not easy. One had to balance and scramble. Pia nodded, saving her breath. In the minds of both was the thought—"It may not be near enough." Simol, according to his lights had acted wisely; he had pitched camp in the one place where there was driftwood for fires and standing ground for tents; he had left behind him a way out, in case of necessity. . . . Doubtless the proper place for ascending to the heights above was on ahead, too far to reach in the dark. Doubtless one could have got back to the other way out, in the face of any ordinary rain-burst. But—was this ordinary?

In the minds of both women there was a fear that it was nothing of the kind. Where they were, the rain was now heavy, hissing on the stones, thrashing the bent shoulders of the two girls; the thread of water in the river bed was rising so that they had to walk knee-deep in many places. But that was not all; that was by no means all. Behind them, chasing, threatening, thundering, like some colossal "dragon of the prime," in search of prey came something infinitely worse. They could hear it more distinctly with every minute. It was not like a dragon now; it was like a railway train running away; like three trains; ten trains, roaring through one tunnel all together. And they were like people trapped in a tunnel, who couldn't find the refuges in the walls. In truth, the walls of the Romilly canyon were as much a trap as any tunnel; and Jinny, at least, well knew that, between those walls, you might be beaten and battered to fragments by the thing that was coming, just as you might be battered under the furious wheels of a train.

The darkness and the rain were terrible. The torch was a mockery. "To be drowned in the dark!" thought Pia, sliding over boulders, splashing in and out of pools that deepened with every minute. Then—"Oh, sweetheart, will you ever know?" Then, as she struggled through water nearing her waist, staggered against the clawing current, felt that the end of the fight was very near, came thoughts that she has never told to any; broken and breathless prayers that remain between Pia and her God.

And still, in the roaring darkness, in the rising water, the tiny ray of the torch showed no sign of Sergeant Simol.

A gust of wind came suddenly, sweeping the canyon; she did not need Jinny's clutching hand, Jinny's half-heard shout, to know that it was the outsider of the flood. . . . the end.

They flung themselves again the merciless rock wall. For the last time, Pia's torch swept up the dark. She saw—they both saw—a rope dangling down the wall. Through the shout of the coming flood pierced Sergeant Simol's bull-voice from up above—"Takem rope!"

He had found some all but impossible place of ascent, torn a liana from one of the trees that clung to the slope above the rocky wall, and was flinging it down to the "two-fellow Sinabada."

The wall sloped upwards. The rope, seen in the stream of torchlight, was very long. In a single tense instant, both girls realized that only one could be saved, and each, in the same moment, determined that it should be the other.

But Jinny, Jinny the gypsy, the dancer, unstable in all things, swift in all things, was in that last moment swift to seize and hold the glorious chance of death. While Pia, more deliberate, cooler, was endeavoring to force the rope into the other's hands; while the wall of water and tumbling rock, before which no human thing could live, was sweeping down upon the two, Jinny, crying, "Take him that!" kissed Pia, and flung herself into the flood.

There was but a second left. The rope swung, Pia clear of the roaring Romilly, just in time.

Above—Sergeant Simol and the greater part of the carriers (some had been swept away, but some had followed the Tatata boy, and climbed safely out), pulled heartily, landing in a few minutes, one white Sinabada, who, strange to say, wept and cried at being rescued. . . .

CHAPTER XIV

The sun was climbing high above the proclaimed goldfield of Tatata, now changed indeed from the lonely basin that held all its treasures untouched for so long. Light blazed from the intolerable silver of tinned roofs clustered low down in the valley—magistrate's house; licensed "hotel," store; small field hospital. Light danced on running water that was led from springs higher up, and flumed into the various claims, dotting the whole extent of the basin—the basin that was gold bearing almost everywhere, but, nowhere, carried anything to touch the wealth accumulated in one prospecting claim at the very bottom. On new clean tents, on old soiled tents, on "bush" huts made of sago and black palm, the sun struck fiercely, making every place it touched white-hot; for it was growing now towards noon, and in the low latitude of Tatata, midday found no coolness, almost no shadow, anywhere.

Near the bottom of the pit, above the small flat that held the prospecting claim, were gathered the strangest group that perhaps had ever been seen in that country of strange happenings. Papua. It was far inland, days and days from the sea; but here, on a big flat rock, as on the deck of a ship, stood together a number of men, watching with the utmost attention two who held chronometers and sextants, and were apparently waiting for twelve o'clock to take an observation of the sun.

These were old sailors, of whom every goldfield holds a few. They had held on to their "instruments," as a mate or a master will, so long as he can keep himself and his goods away from the pawnbroker. The field had found them out, and—urged by one Spicer and his mate Caxon, who held the ground nearest to the coveted prospecting claim at the bottom, had got them down here, toward noon on the thirtieth day of Smithson's absence from Tatata. Nothing was to be done illegally. As soon as the thirty days were up, and not one second before, the goldfield at large would compete for the possession of that treasure-hole at the bottom; would place its pegs all over the coveted ground. Spicer and Caxon, it was well known, would run the best chance. They had been careful to take up much less than their legal share, but to place their ground—being almost first in the field—all round the prospecting claim. On this account, they were sure to be the first who would strike in the pegs, since goldfields' custom forbids trespassing. "Give us our bite at it," Caxon had asked the others, "and we'll stand aside to let the rest of you in right after." The miners had agreed; there was nothing to be gained by rushing, for Caxon and Spicer, having no prospector's claim, could take up only two full claims between them, though they might, and would, pick the best bits. What was left—twenty-nine claims—would be well worth getting; worth fighting for, if fighting had to be done. The warden and magistrate had left his house and come down to the flat; he wasn't very sure about that matter; Papuan goldfields had always been conspicuously peaceful, but then, no field had ever shown so much gold in so small a place at Tatata, and, on a field, the more gold, the more trouble.

For the last two hours, a party of natives had been visible, making their way down the sides of the basin. They seemed—for natives—to be in a tremendous hurry; but no one troubled much about that, since nobody had come to Tatata to study the habits of Papuans. If anyone thought about it at all, he put down the haste to the pig that the men were carrying, wrapped in leaves and slung from a pole—a good pig, by its size, probably one of the tuskers that the Papuan holds "something better than his wife, a little dearer than his child." When there is a feast in prospect, and especially a feast with tusker pig in it, the Papuan, usually slow, can call on reserves of speed that astonish and exhaust the very best of active white men.

"What's the time?" somewhat impatiently asked Caxon of the nearest old salt.

Looking at a huge silver watch, the sailor replied—"Ten past eleven."

"Aren't you slow?"

"Me slow? My watch slow? That watch hasn't lost, not two seconds, in ten years."

"Then why can't we use it, and hang this sextant business?"

"Because," said a tall, fair man with a prettish face—Spicer—"we want to be absolutely legal, and if two master mariners make it twelve o'clock, on the day that's the thirtieth after Smithson went away—at twelve o'clock—nobody can say a word about any of our claims afterward."

"It's a blanky long time to wait."

"There's Bob Whitson; he'll shorten it for you if you lend him a boy."

Abundant Proofs That Sound Waves Can Kill

Living creatures can be struck dead by sound waves too highly pitched for the human ear to hear them, writes T. C. Bridges. These high frequency waves—called super-sonics—have been tried on animals and produced instant death. The sound appears to shatter the blood corpuscles, and death is as sure and sudden as if the creatures had been struck by lightning. Sound can do many things which seem mysterious and almost miraculous. For instance, fire can be extinguished by sound. Some little time ago Mr. Charles Kellogg of California gave a demonstration of the power of sound over flame, and by drawing a violin bow across a piece of aluminum extinguished a burning gas jet at 50 feet. Sound vibrations can not only break a wine glass but can damage a building. It is suspected that the deep, vibrating notes of organs can cause vibrations which may actually weaken the structure of a church or cathedral.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

What Became of Father Gapon?

ESPECIALLY in view of the momentous occurrences which have taken place in Russia during the past three decades—events of more widespread importance than he ever dreamed of—the fate of Father Gapon, leader of a mob which was shot down in "Red Sunday," is a matter of interest to a world which has come to regard Russia as the leading riddle of the day.

Father George Gapon was born in a remote village in the Russian province of Poltava, his father being a liberated serf. His birthplace was a miserable hovel, yet—Father Gapon was a born leader and finally collected around him such a following as to shake the throne of the Czar himself.

For many years he labored among the peasant classes in his efforts to effect a betterment of their conditions and, in 1904, when there was a great strike among the workmen, Gapon's influence became very manifest. The people loved him, they trusted him and they followed him wherever he commanded, for they recognized in him almost their sole hope for the future.

It was arranged that on the fatal Sunday the working men, with their wives and children, should march to the imperial palace, not in a threatening mood, but as righteous supplicants for justice and that the petition they had framed should be presented to the czar. The procession started in an orderly manner, but the ranks of the marchers were swelled by students, revolutionists and idlers from all sections of the city. Slowly and inexorably they were drawn into a trap prepared for them by the soldiery and, when they had been entirely surrounded, volley after volley was fired into their defenseless ranks, hundreds falling dead in the snow, while the survivors scattered like panic-stricken sheep.

Father Gapon was among those who escaped and, for a time, he was compelled to live in Switzerland and in various other parts of Europe, seeking in every way to help his unfortunate fellow countrymen. Finally, in disguise, he ventured back to St. Petersburg but was eventually discovered and, in April, 1906, only a little more than a year after the attempted intercession with the czar, he entirely disappeared.

What became of him has never become known and many Russians believe that he is still alive. One report was to the effect that he had been secretly hanged on April 10, 1906, by four revolutionists who heard him admit that he was spying on his former revolutionary colleagues on behalf of the police—but no one familiar with the previous life of the priest placed the slightest reliance in this statement, believing that it was given currency by Russian officials who wished to undermine even the memory of the peasant leader. Another report stated that Father Gapon had gone to Valdaia, on the lake of the same name, and had entered a monastery there, while the government's statement declared that he had betrayed the cause of the people and was acting in conjunction with the police, giving out no information as to his eventual fate.

In May, 1906, it was believed that the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the priest had been dispelled by the discovery of a corpse, identified as the remains of Father Gapon, hanging in an upper chamber of a lonely villa in Ozerki, Finland. Decomposition of the face made positive identification almost impossible, but the clothing resembled that worn by the missing labor leader.

There was still another story to the effect that the government had spirited the priest away and had confined him in prison, while a counter report declared that Father Gapon had escaped to Constantinople and that a message had been received from him by friends in the United States shortly after the date of his supposed death.

Is the Russian leader alive and safe? If so, why did he not put in an appearance when his country stood in greatest need of him, when the revolutionists overthrew the czar and the red mask of revolution stalked unchallenged from the Volga to the Baltic? Did he turn traitor to the cause which he had championed and finally die at the hands of the men to whom he had devoted his life? Or is he still languishing in a Russian fortress, held prisoner by Soviet chiefs for fear of his influence for good?

No one is able satisfactorily to answer these questions, for the fate of Father Gapon is one of the unsolved riddles of Russia, itself the master mystery of the world.

Take an Easy Chair

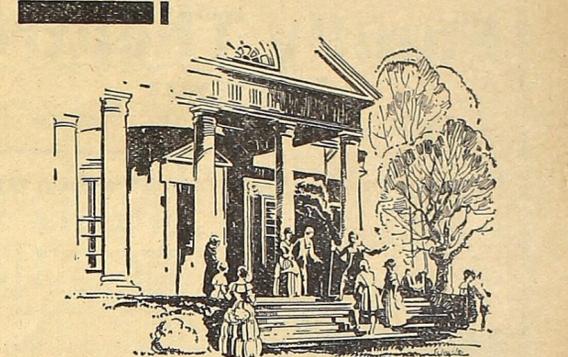

She was a maid who had been working for the doctor for years, and the habitual expressions of these years could not be easily laid aside.

When the doctor died she remained at the house. An old friend of the doctor, who had been abroad and had not heard of his death, called and was admitted.

"I would like to see Doctor B," he said.

"I'm sorry," said the maid, "but the doctor is dead."

Stricken by this intelligence, the visitor sat silent for a minute, when the maid said: "Will you wait?"

Hospitality

A GENEROUS host was Thomas A. Jefferson. So lavish were his entertainments and so great the demands upon his hospitality that the "Sage of Monticello" became almost bankrupt. University of Virginia students recently enacted the above scene at the Jefferson mansion near Charlottesville, Va.

Rats Scent Danger and Flee From Poison Trap

Have rats the power to sense coming dangers? The question is answered in the affirmative by some authorities in a summing up of the result of a campaign against the rat nuisance in Oslo, writes a correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. The campaign lasted for a week and fifteen tons of poison were distributed in bins and cellars. There were approximately 600,000 rats in Oslo and when the campaign ended not a single rat was seen. Some had been poisoned, but not more than a small fraction. What had happened to the rest?

Several people reported that a few days before the poison was laid down regiments of rats were seen wandering out of town, following the main roads. The experts now admit that these stories are not entirely fantastic. When the first report of the "emigration" was reported they inquired into it and saw the rats leaving. As far as the rats are concerned, the campaign has been satisfactory for Oslo itself, though the neighboring villages are not so enthusiastic.

Shift to Cities Checked The farm-to-city shift of population, which in 1926 had given indications of reaching alarming proportions, has fallen away until during 1929 the loss to the farms was only 269,000.

It is estimated that 1,876,000 persons left farms to reside in the cities, but during the same period 1,257,000 left the cities for the farms. Helping to balance the shift were the 631,000 births on the farms, with only 281,000 deaths. During the peak year of 1926 more than 2,100,000 persons left the farms for the cities.

"I Believe I Paid That Bill"

Have you ever had that feeling? If you'll pardon a personal reference, we'll tell one on ourself. We received a statement of an account not long ago. We were almost certain we had paid it and we hunted through our file of cancelled checks. Sure enough, we found the check and submitted it. The mistake was on the party who billed us. On another occasion, we had the same feeling about a similar account. We couldn't find the check that time, which convinced us that we were wrong.

Here's the big point in those two instances—our cancelled checks told the story. In one case we were right, in the other we were wrong. A cancelled check is the best receipt in the world. That's just one reason why it pays to pay by check.

taught three summer terms at Mt. Pleasant Teachers' college; was also a member of Teachers' Reading Circle board.

Was secretary of Osceola county Farm Bureau board when first organized.

In 1922 was elected State Representative to the legislature from the Osceola district; was re-elected in 1924. First term was member of committees of Northern Normal College (chairman), Public Utilities, Pontiac State Hospital, and Apportionment; second term, committee on Transportation (chairman), Apportionment, Revision and Amendment of the Statutes, and Western State Normal College.

Was one of the floor leaders in helping to pass the first gas tax legislation against strong opposition; has marked ability in public speaking and was looked upon as one of the strongest men in the session.

Is now serving his fourth year as Master of the Michigan State Grange and is a member of the Board of Managers of State Fairs.

As a member of the Legislative committee of the State Grange, has been making a study of the most important state legislative needs; has appeared several times recently before the special Legislative Commission hearings to offer constructive suggestions for revising the tax system in Michigan.

It is his opinion, the most outstanding issues of the next legislative session will be the equalization of the tax burden; securing state aid for the over-burdened school districts; a just distribution of road funds; and matters of conservation. Stood square toed on all legislation and voted promptly and fearlessly; vote never was demanded. Never missed a roll call nor was he absent at any session.

July 29, 1926, the Grand Rapids Herald said of him: "Mr. Roxburgh was one of the real stalwarts of the house. He stood squarely for the gas tax through the 1923 session when the governor was fighting it. He was one of the biggest factors in the house. Everybody always knew where Roxburgh was and he wasn't afraid to make known his stand."
