LOCALS WIN IN TEN INNING CONTEST; 5-4

Tawas City eked out a 5 to 4 victory over Weinberg's Comets of Saginaw in a thrilling overtime tilt last Sunday at the local athletic field. The game was a pitchers' duel between Boulder and Frank Matuzak, former Mint league hurler. Boulder held the edge throughout, but teammates' errors at critical moments were largely responsible for the Comets' runs. He pitched a fine brand of ball and well deserved to win.

The teams battled on even terms until the fifth and sixth, when the Comets scored a tally in each frame. For five innings Matuzak held the locals scoreless, but in the sixth Tawas City broke loose and put one run across. With the score 2-1 against them, the locals came to bat in the seventh and took a 4-2 lead. However, this lead was short-lived, as the Comets knotted the count in the eighth. Neither team scored until the tenth, when a double, an infield single, and a sacrifice fly to left netted the winning tally.

LORIN J. BUDGE FOR STATE SENATOR

28th District

Laurin J. Budge of Beaverton, was born May 22, 1880, at Lee, Maine. At 12 years of age he came to Michigan, became a registered pharmacist in 1904, graduating from Ferris Institute. He has been alderman, supervisor and mayor, and at present serves as president of board of commerce. In 1917 he was commissioned as first lieutenant of infantry and served in that capacity to the end of war, being one year in France. In 1926 and 1928 he was elected to the legislature by large majorities over democratic opponents. As a member of the legislature he always advocated lower taxes, favored the Turner bill to aid poorer school districts and supported good roads and voted for conservation measures.

Mr. Budge finds himself in the unique position of knowing intimately the problems of the farmer, laborer and business man, and he can lend an intelligent and sympathetic ear to all these groups.

The Gladwin Record says: "He has had the respect and confidence of his fellow members. He has, at all times, had a watchful eye on matters pertaining to the interest of this district and has been diligent in his attention to legislative affairs."—Ad. paid for by Veterans.

Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. 16:26. From the Christian Science text book, Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy, "Soul and matter are at variance from the very necessity of their opposite natures. Mortals are unacquainted with the reality of existence because matter and mortality do not reflect the facts of Spirit."

ANNUAL NUNN FAMILY REUNION HELD SUNDAY

The annual reunion of the Nunn family, was held Sunday, August 10, at Shady Shores park. Members of the family were present from Saginaw, Flint, St. Louis, Merrill, Rose City, Mio and Hale.

A pot luck dinner was served at noon in the basement of the Shady Shores community building, after which the guests met in the auditorium of the community building for their business meeting and program. The time and place of the reunion was found to be so satisfactory that it was voted to hold the second Sunday in August at Shady Shores for the ensuing year. The following officers were elected: President, I. L. Nunn; Vice-President, Mrs. N. Jennings; Secretary, Geneva Nunn; Historian, Mrs. Cora Beech.

A very pleasing program was rendered wherein Mrs. Beech gave an interesting history of the Nunn family, of which she has made an extensive research in old records dating back to the beginning of the eighteenth century.

NATIONAL GYPSUM TEAM WINS FROM SAGINAW ACES

The National Gypsum baseball team defeated the Saginaw Aces last Sunday at Sand Lake by a score of 10 to 5.

Clare Franks pitched the entire game for the National boys, allowing but nine safeties, while his mates collected thirteen hits off Pumpford of which three were doubles off the bats of Smith, Youngs and McKenzie. Franks struck out eight of the visitors while Pumpford retired three over the same route.

It was a very interesting contest from start to finish and much enthusiasm was shown by the large attendance of spectators.

EDDIE QUILLAN, YOUNG COMEDIAN, IN "NIGHT WORK"

Eddie Quillan, the young screen comedian who makes his first stellar appearance in Pathe's comedy drama, "Night Work," in which he has the role of a window dresser in a department store, is said to have been a better vehicle for his fun-making proclivities than was his highly successful "The Sophomore," "Night Work," which will be seen at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Tuesday and Wednesday next, deals with an assistant window dresser in a department store who is paid a small salary for being the goat on all occasions. He becomes interested in an orphan and meets the girl of his dreams, a nurse in the orphanage. Their love romance, which almost is wrecked, is one that is well calculated to provoke tears as well as laughter as the story proceeds. The ending, of course, is a happy one.

Ted Snyder, noted composer, and Mort Harris, well known lyricist, wrote the song numbers for "Night Work." "Deep In My Heart," the theme number, is sung by Eddie and Sally Starr, and Marjorie "Babe" Kane puts over a comedy novelty, "I'm Tired of My Tired Man."

COUNTY PURCHASES ANOTHER SNOW PLOW

The county road commission has purchased another truck snow plow and plans to operate two truck plows for snow removal on county roads. The commission has been somewhat handicapped heretofore in having only one truck plow for a large mileage of gravel road to keep open. By doubling this equipment they hope to eliminate most of the inconvenience to the public caused by heavy snows.

SUPERVISORS CALLED FOR ELECTION INSTRUCTIONS

County Clerk Frank E. Dease has issued a notice to supervisors calling them to the county seat for instructions relative to election inspection.

FRESH, FRENCH AND FRISKY

Chavalier clicks again! This time, in a new field—straight romantic comedy, with just a dash of song. "The Big Pond," coming Sunday and Monday to the Family Theatre, East Tawas, tells the story of a flashing but empty-noketed young Frenchman who makes good in the American chewing gum business so that he can marry the daughter of his boss. It has pace and humor, and Maurice gets several chances to sing. Listen for "You Brought a New Kind of Love to Me."

A Broadway cast, new to pictures, helps out well. You already know Claudette Colbert, opposite the star. She's fine. Another medal for Director Hobart Henley.

You liked him in "The Love Parade." You'll not miss seeing "The Big Pond." Matinee Sunday at 3:00. C. S. T. Attend the matinee if possible.

RENOWNED LEGISLATOR POSITION RELATIVE TO PROPOSED BILL

In the last session of the legislature I introduced and succeeded in getting through the House and Senate what is known as the "Drainage Resolution."

The purpose of this proposed law is to permit the state, with the aid of the Federal Government, to pay the cost of our trunk line drains the same as is now the case with our trunk line roads.

This bill was the first of several pieces of legislation I have in mind, and was the beginning of the fight by the rural members of the legislature to reduce the terrible burdens of taxation now carried by the farmer and other small property owner.

I believe that all the roads of the state, including township roads, should be maintained by the state. I also believe that the state should pay a very much larger part of the expense of running our schools. I think the primary school fund should be greatly increased and that the Turner bill should be amended so that the funds available under this act will be distributed on a per capita rather than a cost basis. All schools would then share more nearly alike.

If it could be brought about, I would replace our entire present property tax with a state income tax similar to the tax now raised in Michigan by the Federal Government. If it is right and fair for the Federal Government to come into Michigan and collect one hundred fifty million dollars annually, why would it not be proper for the state to get its revenues in the same way and do away entirely with all property tax.

Re-apportionment of legislative districts is sure to come up in the next session. The new census figures will be used by the Wayne county delegation as a basis for their attack.

In the last session attempts were made repeatedly to pass bills that would have placed the northern districts at a great disadvantage. The proposition to amalgamate several of our northern counties was only one of the schemes that we had to fight.

I am opposed to any less representation for the rural districts than we now have. More than fifty per cent of our citizens live in country districts, yet in the last legislature not more than twenty-five per cent of the members were farmers.

I believe the next session of the legislature is going to be one of the most important in the history of the state, and I would like to go back and take a part in the big fight that is sure to come.

IOSCO WINS FIRST PLACE WITH RELIGIOUS PROGRAM

Recent reports show Isoco leading all other Michigan counties in its co-operative program of religious education for the year 1929. The percentage attained was 86, Ottawa county following closely with a percentage of 85.

Vacation church schools, leadership training classes, adult rallies, camps, institute of graded lesson materials, improved worship services, and adoption of progressive church school methods—all these have helped immeasurably in the attainment of this remarkable record.

Two other factors of success should also be especially noted—the constant giving of time and talent by a large corps of leaders, and the generous financial support of the work.

The Isoco County Council of Religious Education is justly proud of this record, and expresses sincere appreciation to every person who has had a part in making this fine attainment possible.

ALABASTER NINE ADDS ANOTHER VICTORY

Brown and Erickson were the victorious moundmen Sunday when Alabaster defeated Mikado at the latter's diamond by a 15-13 score.

Alabaster will play National City next Sunday at Alabaster. Both these teams are in winning form, and consequently a good game is expected.

Who "Invented" the Steamboat?

WHO "invented" the steamboat? Ask ten Americans that question and the chances are that nine out of the ten, remembering a few outstanding names in their school histories, will answer "Robert Fulton," thereby proving once more what a strange jumble of fact and fiction is the average American's conception of the history of his country. For the question of who deserves credit for "inventing" the steamboat has recently started another of those controversies over historical matters, which sometimes results in clearing up certain disputed points in the annals of our nation. More often it does not, principally because the partisans never seem able to agree upon a strict definition of terms, without which it is virtually impossible to settle such disputes conclusively.

In this particular case the word "inventor" is the crux of the situation. While popular opinion accords that distinction to Robert Fulton, and in 1900 he was elected to the Hall of Fame at New York university as "the inventor of the steamboat," being the first inventor and the ninth American chosen to membership among "America's Immortals," his right to that title has been challenged on behalf of no less than eight other Americans. Outstanding among these claims is that in behalf of Lieut. John Fitch, who, it is asserted, made a successful trip on the Delaware river in a steamboat which he had designed more than 20 years before Fulton's historic voyage up the Hudson in the Clermont.

Fitch's right to the title of "inventor" is supported by his descendants who are members of the Fitch Family association. They have nominated his name for inclusion in the Hall of Fame at New York university with the demand that either the name and bust of Fulton be removed or that those of Fitch be added. They are planning a nationwide celebration in 1935 to mark the one hundredth and fiftieth anniversary of "the invention of the steamboat by Fitch in 1785," and they ask that this celebration be given recognition by the government and that public agencies and national patriotic societies co-operate in it as they did in the Hudson-Fulton celebration of 1907.

They base their contention that Fitch rather than Fulton was the "inventor" of the steamboat upon certain official acts of the government, the chief one being that both houses of congress by a unanimous vote, approved on February 12, 1926, an appropriation of $15,000 for a suitable monument to Fitch as "the first in the world's history to successfully apply steam propulsion of vessels through water." This memorial was unveiled May 27, 1927, in the public square in Bardstown, Ky., where Fitch died July 2, 1798, in poverty and despair of proving to an unbelieving world the practical value of a steamboat.

They point out, too, that the labels on the models of steamboats in the Smithsonian institution bears out their contention that he was the "inventor." These labels read as follows:

JOHN FITCH'S STEAMBOAT—Designed by John Fitch, built in Philadelphia in 1786, and first tested on the Delaware river July 27 of that year, when a successful public trial was made. Equipped with a steam engine which, connected by geared machinery, sprocket wheel and chain, operated six oars placed vertically in a frame on each side of the boat.

"In 1788 Fitch completed his first commercial boat for carrying passengers, and it was driven in a similar manner. This boat was 60 feet long and 8 feet wide. She made a trip from Philadelphia to Burlington, about 20 miles, in July, 1788, the longest ever made by any steamboat up to that date. October 12, 1788, the boat took 30 passengers from Philadelphia to Burlington in 3 hours and 10 minutes, a speed of over six miles an hour. In 1790 Fitch built another boat which attained a speed of eight miles an hour and continued to run on the Delaware river, carrying passengers and freight, for three or four months."

RUMSEY'S STEAMBOAT—Propelled by jets of water forced out through the stern. Tested on the Potomac river at Shepherdstown, Va., 1787.

STEAMBOAT CLERMONT, 1807—Designed by Robert Fulton, built in the city of New York, and made its first trip from that city to Albany in August, 1807.

Of these labels, the one on Fitch's model is the only one which uses words "successful public trial." If, then, a "successful public trial" is proof of "invention," it would seem that there is no doubt as to the right of Fitch to be given the title of "inventor of the steamboat." However, there are those whose definition of "invention" is a vastly different one and they assert that no one person can claim the credit for the invention of the steamboat.

Of the other "inventors" of the steamboat, the volume "The March of Commerce" by Malcolm Keir in the Yale University Press, "Pageant of America," has this to say:

"Samuel Morey of New-Hampshire, who began experimenting with a steamboat in 1790, built a paddle-wheel steamer which in 1794 ran from Hartford to New York at a speed of about 15 miles an hour. This boat had the paddle wheel at the stern. A later boat of Morey's, built at Bordentown on the Delaware, was operated with two side paddle wheels. Others who were seized with the 'steam mania,' as it was derisively called at the time, were William Longstreet of New Jersey, whose boat made five miles an hour against the current of the Savannah river in 1790, and Elijah Ormsbee of Connecticut, who made paddles to imitate ducks' feet and operated them by steam in a boat that he navigated from Cranston to Providence and Pawtucket and return.

"Oliver Evans, who invented the high-pressure steam engine and tubular boiler, applied it to moving boats as well as highway wagons and mills. Steam dredges built by him, such as the Orukht Amphibolus, operated in 1804 through the water under their own power. Robert R. Livingston, afterward associated with Fulton, built a steamboat and ran it on the Hudson. John Evans of Hoboken, N. J., experimented with a half-dozen different steamboats after 1791, and eventually hit upon the idea of the screw propeller in place of the more usual setting poles, paddles, oars, or paddle wheels. Stevens himself, however, soon discarded the screw propeller in favor of paddle wheels, and it was not until years later—in 1839—that the screw propeller received further attention.

"Benjamin Franklin, who had a finger in nearly every pie that was cooking during his lifetime, was a member of an association headed by James Rumsey, a native of Maryland, that proposed to try Franklin's idea of propelling a boat by sucking in water at the bow and ejecting it at the stern. A boat was built and run on this principle by Rumsey in 1787, a steam pump being the means of ejecting the water. Rumsey had in 1784 exhibited a steamboat before General Washington at Bath, Va. In this earlier boat the power had been steam applied by cranks to a series of setting poles. Fitch, who had applied for state monopolies over steamboats, contested Rumsey's invention, so Rumsey took his ideas to London but died there in 1792, before they became practical."

In mentioning the men who contributed to the success of the steamboat there is one name which cannot justly be omitted. Fitch, Fulton and the others had built steamboats which would operate on gently-flowing bodies of water in the East, but it remained for another man to tame the swift waters of the West. Fulton and Livingston tried it and failed. But Henry M. Shreve, whose name is perpetuated in the city of Shreveport, La., succeeded.

Shreve called his boat the Washington and in it he made two round trips between Louisville, Ky., and New Orleans, making the return trip in the then unbelievably fast time of 25 days or less than a fourth of the time it took the bargemen and keelboat pole men to make the same distance. From that time on steamboats went everywhere, no matter how swift the current they had to buck.

ODD ENCOUNTERS OF BIRDS AND AIRMEN

Eagles Attack the Planes, Gulls Follow Them.

New York.—Swooping down in attack on an airplane above Buffalo Valley, near Harrisburg, Pa., the other day, a bald eagle lost his life in the whirling propeller. Encounters between birds and airmen have not been frequent in various parts of the United States. In Europe the natural flyers and the mechanical flyers also have come to grips. Major C. C. Turner, air correspondent of The London Daily Telegraph, has assembled a number of such instances.

"Most air pilots can speak of curious meetings with birds and winged insects," he says, "and their experiences are now attracting the attention of ornithologists and entomologists. Unfortunately, few pilots are able to name the species whose strange doings they witness, and probably the only student of birds who flies in order to study them is the Duchess of Bedford.

Eagles Met Air Race.

"During the air race from Paris to Madrid in 1911 two famous French pilots, Vedrines and Gibert, each had an encounter with an eagle in the Pyrenees. Vedrines evaded his assailant by maneuvering out of the way, but Gibert put the challenger to rout by firing at him with a revolver.

"Generally speaking, birds are indifferent to aircraft, but they are at times inquisitive. Piloting a slow machine before the war, I had on several occasions the company of peewits, usually flying in pairs and keeping pace with the machine for considerable distances by its side or a little in front. It may have been chance, but it seemed intentional.

Won't Break Formation.

"Pilots are often told birds flying in formation are dangerous. One of our airline pilots encountered a vast flock of big birds near the Alps. They were flying westward in close formation. 'There were thousands of them, almost wing to wing,' he says. 'They flew through a cloud without breaking formation.' They were right in his path and he was compelled to swerve suddenly to avoid the danger. One of them was struck and killed.

"A few weeks ago a pilot arriving at Le Bourget reported that he had run into a great flock of big birds in formation near Boulogne. Two of them were killed by the machine and the body of one was caught in the wires. Its wings were 5 feet 2 inches across.

"A pilot who has made a large number of flights from Southampton to Guernsey and back, says that it is a common experience to find seagulls keeping up with the machine all the way between these points. The machine normally flies at about seventy miles per hour and it appears, therefore, that the seagull is capable of this speed."

National Guard Air Units Are Independent

Washington.—Aviation units of the National Guard divisions throughout the country now are able to stand on their own feet and to serve the needs of the guard for training purposes without calling upon the army air corps for assistance, according to Maj. Gen. W. G. Everson, chief of the militia bureau of the War department.

As evidence of the progress made in equipping and training the National Guard aviation units, General Everson said, the plans made by the War department for the field training of the National Guard during the present year are based on the assumption that all air service necessary to the training of other arms of the National Guard can be performed by the militia air squadrons.

Field a Thousand Feet Below the Sea Level

There is one field used regularly by British military and civil aircraft which is a picnic for the visiting pilot, who must climb 1,000 feet from this field before he reaches sea level.

Operating out of the field he finds his landing speed decreased by up to ten miles per hour, his flying speed increased in like proportion, and his engine power increased by a sort of natural supercharging, due to the heavy air pressure.

The field is at El Lisan, in the great depression surrounding the Dead sea in Palestine. The field is on a naturally flat ground and is 1,000 feet below sea level.

WRAPS REFLECT MODES OF '60s; FROCKS FOR PLAY AND SCHOOL

YESTERDAY we smiled at the amusing little basque-like wraps such as were "all the style" in the '60s, wondering how anyone could ever think of wearing such "funny looking" fashions. Today we are proudly saluting forth arrayed in little wraps the very replica of those "impossible" styles as they appeared in the pages of Godey's Lady's book or as reflected in the faded daguerreotypes of the long ago.

Fashion can do just that! Change the mind of her followers over night.

It is exactly what she is doing this season—converting us from scoffers into ardent worshippers of the very modes which once we dismissed as "old-fashioned." So here we are paying homage to the quaintest looking little wraps that have appeared since "befo' the wah"—the Civil war if you please.

Now that fashion's followers are started in that direction there is no stopping them. They are fairly clamoring, especially the younger element, for quaint colorful little wraps like the one shown to the left in the picture. This one is a Chanel model of cerise velveteen. It is only hip-length, as you see, with a cleverly flared pelum. The cape sleeves are just such as graced the little paretots, as our great-grandmothers pleased to call their wraps of this type. The paretot of today leads a dual existence as it is as much at home posed over a tennis frock as it is over an evening gown.

The short graceful cape on the other figure is of red velvet. The gown with which it is worn is fashioned of hand-painted white moire. A most interesting treatment at the back displays a soft bow arrangement.

The story of these frivolous little wraps cannot be told in a few paragraphs. It would take many chapters to do them justice. However there are a few high spots which should be touched upon in even a brief mention of these cunning fantasies which are adding such a piquant note to the present-day costume. There is, for instance, the "scrumpious" hiplength wrap all covered with glittering seboth that will not continuously rip, tear and wrinkle during the siege of hours of play and hours of school—garments that do not demand a repeat-and-repeat performance of starching, of ironing and that come from their tubbing almost if not quite as prettily colorful as new. Mothers do indulge in dreams just like that.

Sometimes dreams come true. We are inclined to think that the little dress in the lower picture is evidence that they do. It is a knitted dress not of wool, for children draw the line at wearing wool, not of silk for silk is far too dressy for ordinary wear, but guess what. Give up? Well, the answer is beautiful sturdy and at the same time soft-to-the-touch cotton, durable cotton, if you please. Durened cotton is really mercerized cotton, the fiber being treated in a way to bring out a subtle luster, and best of all to withstand intensive wear and endless laundering.

These practical fashions of knitted cotton which children's specialty shops and departments are displaying with such pride are not beset with frills and furbelows (another point in their favor), but they are charmingly colorful, coming in a range of beguiling pastel shades. The little two-piece school frock illustrated is in an adorable shade of blue.

Youngsters with a desire for gay color can have many kinds of both underwear and outerwear in this sturdy knitted pastel cotton such as fine-mesh durable shirts, panties, union

Frenchman Builds Plane With Movable Wings

Paris.—A small airplane, with wings that work like a bird's and propelled by a low-powered engine which need not function to keep the machine in the air, has been secretly constructed by a young French aviator. Henri le Maout, the inventor, was nearly killed in the war when the motor of his plane suddenly stopped in battle.

This invention differs widely from the autogiro of the Spanish airman, de la Cierva, which utilizes a windmill propeller to help sustain it. M. Maout has devised a light, easily manipulated wing, which lessens the air resistance and allows the plane to float for a long period without motor power.

The wings, very small and under-slung, are sensitive to the slightest air changes. The plane, because of its lightness and lack of air resistance, can be propelled by a four-horsepower motor, the inventor says. The entire machine does not measure more than 17 feet and is approximately 12 feet in height. The plane weighs only 50 pounds with motor.

English Is Advocated as Language of Air

Berlin.—Airplanes and radio have made the question of an international language more pressing than ever before, in the opinion of Walter Angermund, press chief of the Luftwaffe. Herr Angermund points out that in times of danger many precious seconds are often lost because of the inability of pilots to communicate with each other by radio except with code words. There is also the constant annoyance, a much more vital problem in Europe than in America, of hearing lectures and entertainments on the radio which, coming from over the border, cannot be understood.

Herr Angermund reviews the possible international tongues and, after discarding Esperanto and similar "mixtures," comes to the conclusion that English is the most eligible candidate.

One of Angermund's reasons for selecting English is that it is comparatively free from dialect. Another is that it is already familiar to 1,300,000,000 people.

PLAIN AND CUNNING

quins, which is quite the newest thing for formal evening wear. And have you seen the new so-called "bunny" wraps which are made of dainty white fur and which reaches not much below the waistline? They are a mid-season and early fall treat, designed to be worn over sheer flattery frocks. They are "darling."

For Play and School.

Oh, how genius would only invent durable, comfortable, practical, attractive frocks for little girls, outfits for little boys, and sunsuits for

These Are True Stories---

One of our World War veterans, who served his country overseas, received an honorable discharge when his service ended. He has lost that discharge.

Another man had an extensive coin collection in which he took much pride. One Sunday afternoon he and the family were away from home a few hours. When they returned the collection was gone.

Still another man we know, lost all of his valuable papers a few months ago in a fire.

The moral is obvious. Those valuable papers and keepsakes, by all means, should be kept in a safety deposit box. Just so long as you keep such valuables distributed about the house, you are exposed to loss. Is there any reason why you should take that chance?

Here we see Chicago with its fine families, its beautiful homes, its great buildings; and then we see its poverty, its tenements, its bootleggers and its gangsters. And thus it is a colorful panorama that makes a background for characters who are as vivid and real as the people you find every day about you.

When the daughter of a well-to-do family makes a runaway match with the carpenter's son, the family, naturally, objects. The theme is not new. It is a famous complication of real life which, in its various angles, has provided inspiration ever since poets began to sing and novelists to write.

This is a story of youth and love that is as new and refreshing as the first violet of spring, yet its problems are those which might have confronted a pair of lovers at the dawn of civilization; but in this case they are settled in a truly modern manner, with the advantages of decision which common sense, freedom of thought and freedom of action are supposed to confer.

Infidelity and the overstressed triangle are absent. Art is the only jealous mistress here. It has been the achievement of the author to write a real love story in which maid and husband and wife, through all their stress, even anger and possibly hatred, feel the dynamic current which steadily draws them one toward the other.

CHAPTER I

Call Me Up

Her life began to have meaning and importance the day that Ernestine met Will again on Michigan boulevard. She had not seen him since they were both children, and the attachment she had formed for him then was a pale plant beside that which sprang up in her now. She was so beguiled with Will, so in love with his long nervous person, his burning black eyes, and his bright exclamatory ways, that nothing mattered to her except that he love her. Lillian always contended that Ernestine could have stopped the whole affair in its beginnings, but it is more than likely that she was wrong.

At that time Ernestine was surfeited with safety. She felt in herself the beginnings of spiritual indigestions at the security and complacency of the Bricelands. At school she had discovered that there were worlds beyond worlds outside of her mother's. Her family's outspoken conviction that society began and ended in their own particular group was a conviction entirely unjustified by facts. The oasis, Sheridan Park, had become lost long since in the great activity of Chicago, and what the Bricelands considered "old family" was unknown among the really rich and powerful of the city, as well as among the newly rich and arrogant "gold coasters" of the North side.

Her schooling was finished when Ernestine was twenty. Lillian had been out of school a year and had already taken up the threads of the life outlined for them by mamma's connections. The sisters were congenial and fond of each other. At first Ernestine had been more than satisfied—she had been actively happy—just to be with her mother and Lillian again, with Grandmother Briceland and old friends in the big lovely house on Sheridan road. There was an endless parade of parties and dances and weddings.

But after a few months Ernestine decided that to be reared in an "old family" group on the North side of Chicago was almost as bad as being brought up in a little town. She knew everything that every one hoped or did. Some of the younger people were becoming definitely ambitious, and aligning themselves with the gold coasters, or making entry, through school connections, into the older and richer society of other cities. The Bricelands were inaccessible to the horde of apartment house dwellers who were moving into Buena and Sheridan Parks, and crowding the North Shore with glass-enclosed tenements. Mamma disregarded the invaders superbly and refused to join the northward movement out of Chicago or the southward movement downtown. She would stay where she was, and Lillian complained that her attitude not only protected her from climbers, but also prevented the family from doing any climbing of its own.

But Ernestine sympathized with her mother's loyalty to old associations. Ernestine herself was without social ambitions. She was established among intimate friends. She had only to be natural, casual, mocking, and it was enough. Ernestine knew a strange nostalgia. She wakened at night, filled with the need to use her gifts more actively.

And then, she met Will. It had been twelve years since she had last seen him, but she knew him at once when she encountered him on Michigan boulevard one November afternoon after the Armistice. It was late afternoon, and the sky was thickening with dusk. Will stood with his shoulders against the great granite blocks of the library, looking out over the heads of other people, into the mysterious beauty of the clouds.

She stopped and looked at him, and her heart missed a beat less this be some stranger who might respond too boldly to her stare. But she was sure it was Will. He did not see her at all, and his intense concentration confirmed her recognition of him. It was his old stare.

When she approached him and touched his arm, his glance came back from the clouds and rested on her face, and he smiled. His smile was charming. His whole countenance broke up into different lines and planes; his face seemed warmer, nearer.

"Hello, Ernestine," he said in a natural tone. "Did you get the bird book?"

She laughed with delight. "Will Todd, you are incomparable." "Will Todd, you are incomparable." They were shaking hands now and laughing together. "To think that you remember me, after all this time. Ten years—no twelve! But—of course I got the bird book. I wrote and thanked you for it! Didn't you get my letter?"

She was conscious of many things. Of his clothes, which were all wrong, too bright and loud, each garment chosen without regard to the whole. He was too white, like a person always indoors, and though he was tall, he was not at all robust. Yet he gave a distinct impression of energy, mental rather than physical. He seemed to Ernestine to be positively electrical, the most alive person she had ever known.

He put his hand within her arm and turned her southward, so that they walked shoulder to shoulder.

"Nary a letter," he answered. "I see now why I have spent all these years misunderstanding you. And you wrote me! My heart was broken, when I was ten. I've never trusted a woman since."

She laughed at his nonsense, but with a certain catch at her throat. When she was eight years old he made a beautiful book of colored bird pictures for her and bound it. He had brought it from far out on the Northwest side of Chicago, where he lived, to her home in Sheridan Park. She had been at dancing school that afternoon, and had never seen him since.

"It seems dreadful that you should never have been thanked for the book. I wanted to go to see you again, but no one would take me. But I spent a whole month's allowance on a gorgeous box of stationery with a huge gold E on every page, and I wasted most of it before I had a letter perfect enough to send you."

"I'll never have it now," he said. "It isn't right."

"I suppose I didn't address it correctly. Somebody should have helped me. But let me thank you now for the book, Will. It was beautiful. I have always treasured it. It was the only thing I had given to me that the giver made with his own hands."

"Don't thank me yet," he said, drawing her into an entrance and pushing a gilded button for the elevator. "Take tea with me, and thank me, in detail, and with repetitions."

As they ascended in the elevator he gave her arm a little squeeze, she looked up at his bright smile and smiled in return, memories flooding over her. He had always smiled charmingly. When he was a child she thought it was because he was lame that he smiled so sweetly, but now, he was free from any impediment that she could see.

Ernestine recalled the carpenter's wagon at the stone carriage block of her mother's house. It was a bright green wagon, with a green and yellow striped umbrella over the driver's seat. Old Peter Todd, who worked for papa, had got down from this high seat and turned to help his son. He—Peter—had come to repanel the dining room for mamma. As the boy's mother wasn't well, he explained, he'd had to bring him. Ernestine had at once exclaimed the tall thin boy, with a metal brace on one foot, from behind his father. He liked her. Silent with every one else, he was gay and friendly with Ernestine. He had come with his father every day that summer, and they had played together from morning till night. How kind mamma had been to him! Ernestine wondered if mamma would be as kind now?

She had never had so nice a playmate. Perched perilously on the high wagon seat, she had gone home with him and his father. The tiny house in which he lived had seemed to her like the little house on the plains in the story of The Wonderful Wizard of Oz. He had given Ernestine a pine shingle with a rippling American flag painted on it; and, after she came back from the lake in August, he had brought her the bird book, a duplicate of one of his own that she had admired.

And she had never seen him again—nor thanked him!

"What a charming place, Will!" she exclaimed, as they came out on an upper floor and into the room with the walls crowded with brass and dark relief work. Crowded, small, dark tables were set with colored linen runners. At every table there were women smoking, and throughout the room a sprinkling of men who looked strange to Ernestine. They had a foreign sophisticated air. They were not at all like papa or Loring.

They ordered pastry and coffee and sat leaning forward on their elbows looking at each other, smiling, remembering.

"But how about your brace?" she asked him. "Were you able to discard it at thirteen, as you expected?"

"Sooner. But walking without it was a staggering business for a year or so, I can tell. I'll never be a golf champion, and the American army had to go to France without me, but I'm well, really. I never think of it any more. It's such a darned interesting old world to kick around in, without wanting to play tennis. I work on the Sun, and often go home after two in the morning. I come over here sometimes, when it's quiet except for a few cars. The streets echo, and the strangest feeling of unreality comes over me."

"What do you do, Will, on the Sun?" His eyes shone. His voice thrilled with enthusiasm and excitement.

"I work in the art department," he told her, and the way he put it, it was a "brag," a superlative announcement. "I've been there over a year now, and, Ernestine, I'm crazy about it. Lord, it's wonderful, the feeling you get on a paper. I've made some fine friends. John Poole is a friend of mine, and a good one, too."

Every one in Chicago knew John Poole, whose comic strip in the Sun was as much a feature of Chicago life as the beauty of the Blackstone reared against a winter sky.

"Why, Will, how fine! But what do you draw?"

He hitched his chair a little nearer to hers in his eagerness.

"Did you ever see, in a newspaper, the little curls around a half-tone—that's a photograph—decorations to make the picture, which may be odd in shape, fit into the type? I do those things, and lettering, and sometimes a spread." He sent a waitress for a paper, and showed her what he did.

"I get twenty-five dollars a week for it," he boasted. "And I'd do it for nothing, if they didn't pay me. The fellows are real guys, and we've got a regular boss. This is my day off, and here I am downtown, and going over there, pretty soon. I can't stay away. If you'll go with me, I'll drag you around the plant, and show you the big presses, and introduce you to the Mr. Poole, and the fellows in the art room."

She felt her horizon widening. What a world men lived in! Papa had his quarries, and Will his curlcups, and Loring his law! How wonderful to live in something, and for it! She felt that her own life was dim and futile. Now that she was out of school, she was expected to have a good time until she married. Will was the only man she knew outside the old familiar circle. How dull her interests were compared to his thrill over a twenty-five-dollar-a-week job.

"But, Will,"—she turned to him in such a manner that it seemed their faces would touch, drawn by the strong attraction that brought them so close—"I thought you were going to be a real artist."

"Ho," he said, "that's why I couldn't stand the Art institute! I want to be a cartoonist. I've discovered that you can do a whole lot more with a pencil line than make a penultima. I think you can make a line stand up and howl. You can make it do all sorts of things for you, caricature, design—nonsense. I don't want to be a color artist."

"But the birds you made for me, when you were only ten—the colors, and the way their heads bent—it's a beautiful book, Will. I showed it to my zoology teacher when I was in school, at Lake Forest, and he praised it. I wouldn't take anything for it."

Will brushed the birds aside impatiently.

"Kid stuff," he told her. "Have you seen these little shadow figures, just straight lines for body and limbs? You can get action into one of those things. Look here." He had been busy with a soft pencil on the edge of the stiff menu card, and he showed Ernestine now a sketch of a cat, sitting there looking at the fish list, licking his whiskers—a predatory hungry Tom. She laughed involuntarily, and her eyes filled with admiration.

"I see what you mean," she said. "It's a new kind of art, like jazz is a new kind of music. I know what you're trying to get at, and you do it, too. It's disrespectful though—don't you think?"

He was entranced with her understanding.

"Of course it's disrespectful," he said robustly. "Why not? I think the time has come for a little healthy disrespect. We'll show them."

He was very compelling. Ernestine's look of admiration was extravagant, and he was becoming a little drunk with it.

"I've done several column heads. You watch the first page of the second half of the Sun. I always put a little cat's head down in one corner of my stuff. We're not allowed to sign our things, but you can identify mine if you watch the paper. The fellows all encourage me, and my boss does, too."

He looked at her for a long moment and then exclaimed:

"Gosh, it's good to talk to you, Ernestine. You always did get right inside of my heart. I wasn't a bit surprised to see you. You may not believe me but all these years I've often thought I'd meet you. I never forgot that day you came to our house. I've often seen your shadow, sitting there in the kitchen eating bread and milk, and talking to mom. I remember I wanted to give you all my things—every one. You should have taken them. It would have made a lonely kid happy."

She was tender, remembering.

"I made an awful fuss because they dragged me to the lake that summer," she told him. "I wanted to stay in Chicago with you, and the practical difficulties of leaving a child behind did not interest me. We should have been together more. We were real friends."

"A boy never forgets kindness," he said soberly. "You were so good to me and always took my part."

"But, Will, you did something you never knew for me. You told me one day a thing I've never forgotten. I thought your brace gave you a wonderful advantage, in the way of a lever to get your own will, and you scorned me for such a thought. It would be taking advantage, you said. I've never forgotten that. You were the one who taught me to be sporting."

The spell was cast. The mysterious bonds of spiritual understanding were forged.

Sacred Chinese Temple Taken Over by Bandits

Mount Lushan, one of the twelve sacred mountains of China, famed alike for the piety of its monks and for the beauty of its scenery, has been entirely pre-empted by bandits. The once sacred grottoes, formerly given over to the contemplation of immense carved images of Buddha, or to the rites of Taoist priests, are now used as prisons. Ancient Chinese writings declare that Mount Dushan was "40 miles high and 240 miles in circumference." Today Lushan rises only a little more than 4,000 feet, but it affords an unsurpassed view southward over the gulf of Pechili and eastward toward the Liaoting peninsula, on which the Russians built Port Arthur and on which the Japanese now occupy Dairen. Lushan is very rugged, and in olden times every cliff was ornamented with a temple. Yehltuyu, the famous Chitan who rose to power under Genghis Khan, was an especial devotee of Lushan and legends have it that he selected this mountain to be "the eternal trustee of wisdom." Accordingly he is supposed to have buried 10,000 sacred books in a cavern under the peak of the mountain, and then to have erected over his repository the temple which today is a bleak ruin.

Paper Barometer

Henley's Twentieth Century Book of Recipes publishes the following method of making a paper barometer: Saturate white blotting paper with the following liquid and then hang up to dry:

Cobalt chloride, 1 ounce; sodium chloride, ½ ounce; calcium chloride, 75 grains; acacia, ¼ ounce; water 3 ounces.

The amount of moisture in the air is roughly indicated by the changing color of the paper, rose red indicating rain; pale red, very moist; bluish red, moist; lavender blue, nearly dry; blue, very dry.

Liberty Can Shelter Many

Fifteen or twenty persons can stand on the inside platform in the head of the Statue of Liberty and about the same number three steps lower, but the latter group does not have a satisfactory view.

"You're awfully pretty, Ernestine. You were a cute kid—but fat. I can remember what round cheeks you had. But now your cheeks slope down in that perfect line." He touched the line of her cheek with a tentative forefinger, then quickly withdrew his hand and flushed. "Dark eyes, dark hair and pale clear skin. What more could a girl want, unless it is such perfect bony structure? You'd be pretty anyway, dark or thin, or pale or flushed, because it's real—deep. Now you're blushing—and that gray coat." He laughed delightedly, and the deep color suffused Ernestine's cheeks at his personalities. But she was not displeased, only smiled at him.

"Aren't you glad we knew each other when we were kids?" he said to her. "It makes us seem so much closer now."

They swayed together and fell into a warm hypnotic silence. His little finger brushed her hand, as he knocked his ashes into the tray the waitress had placed for him, and at once they rose, talking and laughing artificially.

Ernestine felt the need to masquerade her bright joy in him. She was acting like a moon-struck high school girl, acting as though she had never talked to a man before. Well, she hadn't. Not like this, certainly. She had listened to plenty of them raving about themselves, and explaining the technicalities of football, but she had never taken part in such a satisfying conversation. But she dissembled as they left the tearoom and turned toward the newspaper plant.

It was dark now, and the streets were crowded with homegoing workers, so they instinctively drew close together. She asked after his mother in a formal tone.

"She'll never be well," he told her sorrowfully, and at once her sympathy drew them back into intimacy. He tried to put the conversation back into place.

"How's your pretty sister Lillian?" She answered that Lillian was a beauty now, fair and slender and exquisite. A lady.

"She's going to marry Loring Hamilton, I guess," she said. "He's at the house a lot, as he's always been. He's awfully good to both of us, but Lillian's his choice. He's in his father's law office now. He inherited a nice practice. I believe he wants to be a judge. Don't you remember him?"

"A big blond boy? He was almost grown when we were kids. Yes, I remember him. He treated me with an air of weary patience. I hated him. He used to tease you and pull your hair. If he prefers Lillian, he's changed, for he always noticed you. I admit I was simply jealous. He had the run of the house, and I was an outsider and treated well only because I was a kid."

"Why, Will, that's not a bit nice of you to say," she protested, and he laughed good-naturedly. Both of them knew it was true.

"Is your mother just the same? She had such a pleasant voice, but she was bossy. Kind of a queen. I admired her tremendously. She fitted entirely my juvenile notions of a grand lady."

Ernestine laughed now.

"There's nobody like mamma for managing every one," she admitted.

They came to the Sun offices, and as they went in through the squirrel cage, the rhythmic crash of great presses came muffled to Ernestine's ears. Will took her over the whole place.

"Upstairs and downstairs, and in my lady's chamber," he said. In the syndicate rooms he introduced her to half a dozen young men who were much impressed with her youth and beauty. He showed her the stool he sat on, the work on his board.

Mr. Poole came out and shook hands with her, and she was conscious of disappointment. He was a huge, untidy old man, with fat cheeks that had fallen a little, and a shiny bald head. But his eyes were intelligent, his voice was very kind. She felt that she might like him, if she could only know him.

Will's vanity seemed excessive. Although she knew he was proud to show her, he was none the less proud of himself. But it was like the vanity of a capable child, not at all displeasing. Not until they got into the street again did Ernestine realize that they had walked all over the big plant with their fingers interlaced. But she clung to him now shamelessly. He was such an old friend. She was filled with strong reluctance that this vivid hour should end.

He said goodby at the bus, without mentioning another meeting. Ernestine could not let it go at that.

"But you must come to see me," she said, as the conductor waited impatiently for her to board the bus.

"I want to see you again, Will."

"Sure," he said vaguely. His mind had already gone back to work.

"Sure. Call me up some day."

Ernestine went quickly along. Her feet were dancing, and her heart was dancing, too. She was extraordinarily happy and full of life. If only such an encounter could be a daily occurrence!

Some one was standing on their doorstep, watching her, waiting for her. She ran up the steps, and Loring Hamilton was there, big and fair and handsome, in his dark coat, with the fur collar.

"Hello, Lorie. Have to rush in. I'm late. Are you just leaving?"

Italy Accords Honors to Mothers of Nation

Taking their cue from the ancient Israelites, who smeared lamb's blood on their doors during the Egyptian captivity when the angel of the Lord was about to kill the first born of the Egyptians, in order that their children might be recognized and spared, the Italians now place white ribbons in front of their houses in which children have been newly born. This custom, which was instituted in Turin, has now spread to Milan and is expected to become nationwide. It is designed to show the esteem in which the regime holds those women who, in the words of one newspaper, "have given to the country sons who tomorrow will be soldiers." Everything is being done to continue interest in the "demographic battle" through which Mussolini hopes to raise the man power of the country to the maximum and to recover the power of ancient Rome.

Rejuvenation

Dr. Sims Lee Rice, the Richmond surgeon, was talking about the Voronoff and other methods of rejuvenation.

"These methods," he said, "rejuvenate, yes, but the rejuvenation only lasts a short time. A year or so passes, and you are older, far older, than before."

"One of our millionaires," Professor Rice went on, "underwent the rejuvenating operation, and temporarily the change in him was remarkable. Though he was seventy years old, a crop of thick brown hair burst forth on his bald head, his wrinkles disappeared, and the strength of youth came back to him."

"When he returned home the home papers all called him 'the grand old man.'"

Vitality of Germs

Germs sealed up in culture tubes 26 years ago have been found to be still alive by Dr. Ortiz Patto, reports Modern Mechanics Magazine. Having a number of these culture tubes made up as long ago as 1903, he inoculated samples into living animals to see if typical diseases would be produced. Many of the germs grew in the new cultures and some produced disease just as these same germs would have done when young.

"Dipped" Herrings for Health

Mrs. Anna Kreisler, the oldest inhabitant of Latvia, who died at the age of 129, lived for many years almost entirely on raw herrings, which she ate after dipping them in weak black coffee. She attributed her longevity to this diet.
