MANY GREET NYDA CAMPBELL, SOPRANO ARTIST

A capacity crowd greeted Miss Nyda Campbell, soprano, and Arthur Johnson, pianist, who presented a delightful recital at the East Tawas M. E. church Tuesday evening. So large was the audience that it be-came necessary to seat them with chairs in the aisles.

All of her songs were well revated her hearers, not alone with the beauty of her voice, but with her winsome personality as well. All of her songs were well re-ceived, but special commendation was expressed for the selections "Sheep and Lambs" by Homer, and "Mother" by Romberg. Chaney's best, so this production was warmly anticipated.

In the role of the sinister ventriloquist, Chaney uses five voices, those of the barker, the ventrilo-

Here, beside a young lady who is 5 feet 41/2 inches tall, is a stalk of corn grown on the farm of Ernest Utterback near Woodsboro, Md. It was not the tallest in the ten-acre field, and the fact that the yield will be fairly good shows that the crop on this particular field at least defied the prevalent drought. The stalk was exhibited in a store in Thurmont, Md.

Language and Custom

Custom is the most certain mistress of language, as the public stamp makes the current money. But we must not be too frequent with the mint, every day coming, nor fetch words from the extreme and utmost ages; since the chief virtue of a style is perspicuity, and nothing so vicious in it as to need an interpreter. Words borrowed of antiquity do lend a kind of majesty to style, and are not without their delight sometimes; for they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win themselves a kind of gracelike newness. But the eldest of the present, and newest of the past language, is the best. For what was the ancient language, which some men so dote upon, but the ancient custom?-Ben Jonson. in "The Dignity of Speech."

ARemarkable American Family

PRESIDEN'T JOHN QUINCY ADAMS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON T HAS become almost axiomatic that genius does not transmit itself and that the sons of great men rarely, if ever, turn out to be great Certainly that has been as true in America as in other nations, although we have had a few fam ilies which, over a period of years, have contributed several in dividuals of distinction. Two of these which come readiest to mind are the Lees, who during the Revolution produced a statesman and a soldier, both of more than ordinary ability, and during the Civil war a really great military leader; and the Harrisons, who produced a Revolutionary war statesman and two Presidents.

But if it is necessary to find an exception to prove the rule it may be found, perhaps, in the statement made by some one that "American history is all cluttered up with Adamses." For "in America there is one family, and only one, that generation after generation has consistently and without, interruption, made contributions of the highest order to our history and civilization." Those are the words of James Truslow Adams (who, by the way, is a Virginia Adams and not related to the Massachusetts family of whom he writes) in the prologue to his book, "The Adams Family," published recently by Little, Brown and company of Boston.

The Adams family was established in America about 1636 when a certain Henry Adams, probably because of a damses began when John Adams was sent to France as one of the American SECRETARY OF THE NAVY commissioners-his son, John Quincy CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS Adams, going with him to begin his education in European schools, and the excessive demands of his colafter a brief stay there and a brief leagues, convinced Great Britain of return to this country he went back the fairness of the American cause to England as one of the commissionand won a just settlement. ers to arrange the terms of the treaty The fourth generation is remarkable of peace and later to become American minister at the Court of St. James. His career as vice president and finally as President completes the pattern of the life of this first great Adams. In John Quincy Adams, the second generation kept up the standard set by the first and even advanced it. Before he was seventeen years of age he was private secretary to the minister to Russia and to his own father in Paris and in London. On his twentyseventh birthday, after his graduation from Harvard, President Washington sent him as minister to The Hague and later to Porfugal. Prussia and Russia. Then followed a term of teaching at Harvard but he was soon called back to public service on the peace commission of 1815. Next he emulated his father by becoming minster to England and came home in 1817 to serve President Monroe as secretary of state. John Quincy Adams was a master diplomat, having learned his lessons in the European school of international relations. He brought Spain to erms in Florida and his conciliatory actions offset the rash deeds of Jackson without blunting the force of the American policy. To him, according to Historian Adams, belongs most of the credit for the Monroe doctrine, though it has come down in history bearing the name of the Virginia Presdient. Like his father he failed of reelection to the Presidency, but his great years came during his service as congressman from the Plymouth district when he stood almost alone in defense of constitutional government during the period of the slavery dispute. Finally he died at his desk, worn out in the service of the republic The third generation of Adamses did not produce another President, but it did keep up the family tradition of diplomatic service to the nation, and if there were any way to evaluate comparative worth of national and inernational service it might show that the contribution of Charles Francis Adams was just as great as were those of John and John Quincy. Originally a Democrat, he turned Whig in defense of freedom and union. After a career as editor and congressman, his great opportunity came when Lincoln and Seward sent him to the post his father and his grandfather had held-minister to England. There he successfully checkmated the Confederate attempts to secure recognition, and when his firmness forced Lord Russell to forbid the English-built rams to leave the shipyards for Confederate service, he sealed the doom of the southern cause. And as a member of the Alabama claims commis-

On her fourteenth birthday came a dozen silver teaspoons, on her fifteenth six silver forks, on her sixteenth birthday two silver tablespoons, a pair of silver sugar tongs, a jelly spoon and six oldfashioned bone-handled knives.

The birthday Gertrude was seven ten grandmother died. The muddled affairs of the estate settled, precious little besides the chest and its neatly wrapped silver and carefully folded linens proved to be left for Gertrude. Forlornly she watched the dear familiar furnishings of her grandmother's home taken away. Resolutely she determined to "buy back" the pieces grandmother had most treasured. Firmly Gertrude said "No" to Alvin Griffen, the thin-lipped, sterneyed, middle-aged lawyer who had so oddly interpreted the enigmatic phrases in grandmother's quaintly worded, self-drawn will.

STARTING POINTS OF SEVEN AIR DERBIES

Contests Will Inaugurate Races at Chicago.

Chicago .- The starting points of the seven air derbies which will inaugurate the National Air races, to be held on Curtiss-Wright-Reynolds airport at Chicago from August 23 to September 1, inclusive, were announced jointly by Maj. R. W. Schroeder, director of contests, and Maj. Luke Christopher of the National Aeronautic association, race referee.

The Eastern Women's derby will start from Washington, D. C. It will be routed south as far as Atlanta and thence westward and up the Mississippi valley. Entries are limited to planes of 500 cubic inch piston displacement. The Western Women's derby will start from Long Beach, Calit., and will cover 2,365 miles. Control points have been designated at San Diego, Phoenix, Tucson, Douglas, El Paso, Roswell, Lubbock, Amarillo, Wichita, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Des Moines, Madison, Elgin. Entries are limited to planes of 800 cubic inch displace-

The reason for the short final hop to the finish line is to permit the participants to finish in their proper orders so that spectators will not be con-

GUESTS WELL CARED FOR AT AIR RACES

Grandstand Arrangements at Chicago Contests.

Chicago .- Every feature of the accommodations for guests at the National Air races which open here August 23 will be more elaborate than formerly. The center section of the grandstand is devoted for the most part to boxes. This section of the seating system is directly opposite the center of the field and fronts on the starting and finishing line for the race events. Two cafes, seating 200 each will be available for the exclusive use of box holders. Other arrangements for occupants of boxes include club accommodations and telephone service.

The hangar balcony above the grandstands will furnish a promenade for box holders. Running the entire length of the hangar, the veranda supplies an excellent view of every activity on the airport, including the aeropits where planes and pilots will line up before each event.

A modern well-appointed cafeteria seating 1,500 will be used each noon for service club luncheons. In the evening it will be thrown open to the public for the use of those who plan to stay over for the night events. The main section of the grandstand before the hangar will seat 45,000 spectators. Wing bleachers at either ends of the center section will furnish accommodations for many thousand additional guests.

Men and women flyers are to be provided with comfortable quarters adjoining the lower balcony. Above the grandstands and flanking the present control hut on the roof of the hangar will be the headquarters of the race officials, press accommodations, and radio broadcasting booths.

In the search for good strong pylons to mark the triangle of the five-mile closed course for the air races this year, so that spectators could keep the contesting planes in view from grandstand seats, extra height was required. Oil derricks such as were used at Los Angeles would not do. Neither would the wind-mills employed at Cleveland. Capt. Max M. Corpening, executive director of the races, appealed to the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois for help. It donated three high tension transmission line towers with the crossarms removed. They make ideal pylons shrouded in checkered canvas.

combination of religious and economic reasons, decided to leave England and try his luck in the New world. By chance he settled at a place called Braintree in Massachusetts. He married and had children, who in turn married and handed down the family name. This went on for four generations without producing any man of distinction until we come to John Adams, a farmer and shoemaker in Braintree married Susanna Boylston, daughter of a family prominent in the medical history of the colony.

"With the fifth generation, in the person of John Adams, historian, publicist, diplomat, President of the United States, the family not only suddenly achieves national and international position, but maintains it in successive generations for two centuries. Was it due to some mysterious result from the combination of Adams and Boylston blood far beyond the ken of science even today; or to some unfathomable synchronism between the peculiar qualities of the Adamses and the whole social atmosphere of the next few generations, a subtle interplay of unknown forces; or to mere chance in a universe in which atoms rush and collide chaotically? Fascinating as is the problem, it is insoluble. All we shall see is that without warning, like a 'fault' in the geologic record, there is a sudden and immense rise recorded in the psychical energy of the family."

The stage was set for the first great 'Adams, John, to play his part in American history when the dispute between England and her rebellious colonies sent him to the Continental congresses, where clear heads were headed to see that independence was inevitable and union of the colonies essential. While most Americans think of the Revolution mainly in terms of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin and a few others of spectacular deeds, the true history of those times could not be written without the name of John Adams. It was he who had much to do with bringing congress to the point of declaring independence; his was the master stroke which caused the adoption of the New England troops around Boston as a Continental army and which checkmated intercolonial jealousies by placing George Washington, a Virginian, in command; he deserves the principal credit for establishing the American navy, and he furnished many of the political ideas on which the new nation based its government. The international career of the one is so outstanding as had been rep resentatives in the previous generations. Only one, John Quincy, turned to politics and he, having chosen the unpopular Democratic party, had little chance to rise to prominence. Charles Francis was first a writer and then a business man. Perhaps the greatest of the four was Henry Adams who won his distinction in the field of literature. "Mont St. Michel and Chartres." Brooks Adams dabbled in law and in writing history without making any profound impression upon either. In his "Epilogue," the Adams historian carries the record of this remarkable American family down to the present when he writes:

"On September 20, 1824, John Quincy Adams wandered among the tombstones of the family burial plot at Quincy musing on the past and future of his line. 'Four generations of whom very little is known' he wrote in his diary, 'than is recorded upon these stones. There are three succeeding generations of us now living. Pass another century and we shall all be mouldering in the same dust, or resolved into the same elements. Who then of our posterity shall visit this yard? And what shall he read engraved upon the stones? This is known only to the Creator of all. The record may be longer. May it be of blameless lives!'

"The century has passed. We have seen the generations, and today a third Charles Francis, a son of John Quincy's grandson, John Quincy, is head of the family. A Harvard graduate, like all his family since John; for thirty years treasurer of the university; a lawyer, like all his family; a famous yachtman who defended the American cup against the British; a man true to the family tradition and honored in his community, he sits in the cabinet at Washington as secretary of the navy which was founded by John.

Gertrude sighed as she went about gathering up the dishes and washing and drying them in the closet, which had been equipped with a diminutive sink and small gas stove and rechristened a "kitchenette." She sighed, for, like most superlatively efficient young women, she wished wistfully that men might offer her a cheerful camaraderie rather than awe for her accounting skill.

The worst of it was that there seemed to be no hope of any beaux in the future. Year by year as Gertrude successfully solved one vexing problem after another, bringing order out of the chaos of the figures put before her, the awe seemed to increase, the chance for camaraderie recède.

And then came the night that Kathleen suddenly decided to accept an eleventh-hour invitation to dine with a man she had just met. To Gertrude was given the task of making Kathleen's peace with the beau who had been scheduled to take her to a dance later in the evening.

Loyal to Kathleen, yet hating to tell even a white lie, Gertrude endeavored to think of some tactful explanation to make to Frank when he should arrive at the apartment to call for Kathleen. As she frequently did when puzzling over a vexing problem, Gertrude took up a piece of sewing and bent over it, laying painstaking stitches in the fine fabric, unconsciously trying, perhaps, to draw closer to the spirit of the dear grandmother who, besides the lovely linens, had given Gertrude a heritage of character still more valuable.

"Good evening," said a deep, pleasant voice when Gertrude answered the summons of the old-fashioned knocker, "I've come to make my young friend's peace with Miss Kathleen." "Oh !" gasped Gertrude.

"Frank phoned that he was meeting a cousin's train and asked me to present his apologies to Kathleen." Gertrude smiled as she answered: 'And I was to make Kathleen's peace with Frank-to explain that an unexpected occurrence would prevent her going to the dance."

The man smiled in response and said: "Well, well. Here I have been fretting at the thought of facing Miss Kathleen, and now I find the lady isn't even home. Christian was right-the lions were chained."

6,000 Miles Each Year

Los Angeles .- As long as Watkin Davies, seventy-eight-year-old Stockton (Calif.) business man lives. he will travel 6,000 miles a year by airplane somewhere on the North American continent.

He made this assertion here just before he left by Western Air Express for San Francisco, completing his latest trip of 7,000 miles to Alaska and over the W. A. E. lines.

He is one of the company's oldest passengers, having traveled more than 15,000 miles over its routes in the last two years. "I came out to the West 47 years ago," he said. "I had to work hard for a living and as a result didn't get to see much of the Pacific coast. Now that I have the leisure and the money, I expect to make up for lost time." On his last trip, Davies visited Seattle, Vancouver, Alert Bay, Ketchikan, Wrangell, Petersburg and Juneau. He flew on an Alaskan-Washington Alrways plane. Returning to San "-anclsco, he took a plane to Sali Lake City, Pasco, Wash., and Boise, Idaho. Another aerial "holiday adventure" will be taken around Christmas, Davies said. He has not decided on the route he will take.

Davis to Fly Another "Mystery Ship" in Races

Atlanta .- Douglas H. Davis, the Dixie flyer who gave commercial aviators their first victory over army and navy pilots in the national air races at Cleveland last year, will seek new laurels in the 1930 contests in Chicago August 23 to September 1.

Davis will pilot another "mystery" ship of the same type as the singlemotored craft he piloted over five laps of a ten-mile course in 1929 in the free-for-all event, averaging 194.69 miles an hour and pushing the plane up to 229.8 miles an hour on his fastest lap.

After the 1929 races Davis set a new record for a flight from New York to Atlanta, covering the approximately 800 miles in four hours and a half.

Flying Boats Check North Sea Poaching

London .- Royal air force flying hoats from Felixstowe Marine Aircraft establishment, during the last few months, have been patrolling British waters in the North sea. So effective has been their work that they have almost put a complete stop to the poaching by Belgian and French fishing boats within the three-mile limit. This work has been carried on in conjunction with the Fisheries Protective flotilla.

The vessels of the protective flotilla have been fitted with wireless apparatus suitable for communication with aircraft. This co-operation has resulted in the capture of a number of poaching vessels and subsequent prosecution, the areas patrolled being chiefly sole fisheries. It is proposed now to extend these patrols to the herring fisheries

Mohammedan Holy Day

The observance of Friday as the Moslem day of assembly, correpond-Ing in some respects to the Christian Sabbath, originated in the Mohammedan revelations. According to the instructions of the prophet, Friday was the day Adam was created, the day on which he entered Paradise, was expelled therefrom, the day of his repentance, the day of his death, and it is to be the day of his resurrection.

Yes, There are Thrills in the Banking Business

We have occasion here in the Iosco County State Bank to observe certain savings accounts grow and accumulate. We know the people back of those accounts.

And we confess to a real thrill as we witness the financial successes of these customers.

A young man sets his goal at $1000, and finally reaches it. A young lady borrows money to put herself through school, and succeeds in paying every cent of it. A hard working man pays off a mortgage.

> These are financial victories we are privileged to see, and we share in the thrills. That is one of the compensations of the banking business.

Recall "Enoch Arden" Tragedy

Owen Sound, Ont .- A true-life story, | the murderer, or that she will consent exceeding in sordid tragedy that of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," is revealed in a petition sent to the Nebraska state board of pardons on behalf of Harry Lafayette Dales, sevcerned. enty, formerly of Barrie and Owen

Sound Sentenced to life imprisonment for murdering a horse trader more than a quarter of a century ago, Dales is now pleading for liberty on the ground that his wife and children here desire to see him again before his death.

If his plea is granted Dales will return to his former home, as did Enoch Arden, to find that his wife, in the long interim, has married another. Furthermore, she declares that she was never legally married to Dales; that he tricked her into a bigamous ceremony, while he already had a wife living; and later deserted her and their three small children.

The former Mrs. Dales, now nearly seventy years of age, is now Mrs. Henry Rourick, and she denies that she has petitioned for the release of to see him if he is liberated. She insists, in fact, that the Harry Dales who tricked her into a supposed marriage, is dead, so far as she is con-

"He disappeared and I heard nothing of him for ten years," she declares. "On those grounds alone I would have been able to remarry, even if we had been married legally in the first place; and I learned later that we hadn't."

Mrs. James Mothersill, Dales' daughter, who was five years old when he disappeared, admits that she has offered to provide a home for her father if he is released from prison, but declares that she had hoped to avoid publicity in connection with the matter. She does not condone her father's misdeeds, but she clings to the prayer "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us," and she declares that a quarter of a century in prison may be sufficient atonement for many misdeeds.

To the majority of Owen Sound residents Harry Dales is only a name, but a few old residents of the city remember him as "a likeable ne'er-do-well," and a man of many loves. suddenly, remained a prominent figure for only four years, and then disappeared as if the sea had swallowed him up-which it quite possibly did. No one knows his age at the time he made his discoveries, save for the rather vague statement that he was born somewhere in England during the Sixteenth century, while his father and grandfather are supposed to have been London merchants interested in the Muscovy company.

It was on April 19, 1607, that Hudson, accompanied by his sixteen-yearold son, John, and ten sailors, left England on the Muscovy company's little 60-ton ship, the Hopewell, His object was to discover the North pole and to sail across it to China and India, believing that he could reach the Orient through a sea passage somewhere in the frozen North. Frustrated by a solid wall of ice, Hudson returned from his first voyage a disappointed man and later made a second attempt with the same result.

But the discoverer was not yet satisfied and, in 1610, he set sail once more for the new world, steering his course further north until he came into the wide waters of what is now known as Hudson's bay. At first he mistook this bay for the Polar sea but, learning his mistake, he continued to push onward in his search for the Northwest passage. Finally his crew

A little priest came to the country town a dozen miles or so distant from the neighborhood in which I lived. There was no church in the town worthy of the name, but within two years he had one built, and then he moved on to another and larger town. He was a faithful shepherd of his flock, but his avocation like that of Seleucus was building. So as long as he lived he moved from one town to another always leaving a beautiful church behind him. It gave him enthusiasm; it kept him young and interested in life.

The man without an avocation is sure to grow stale, to dry up, to lose interest in life, and to become ineffective in his vocation. Maybe Seleucus was a better and a happier king because of the cities which he built. (C), 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

mutinied and, because the food supply commenced to run low, they decided to return home, So, on June 25, 1611, Hudson, his son and seven of the weakest of the sailors were set adrift in an open boat. This was the last that was ever heard of the explorer or any of his party. An expedition was sent out from England some time afterward to search for them, but no trace of the boat or its occupants could be found, nor has anyone ever been able to learn the fate of the nine sailors. Possibly they perished in the waters of the bay which bears Hudson's name, possibly they reached land safely and were attacked by hostile Indians or it may have been that they starved to death-either in their boat or on land.

For many years rumors about the fate of the little band were plentiful and the quaintest of these reports has been told in legend form by Washington Irving, while other unverified stories tell of a settlement of white men in the north country and of its gradual merging with native tribes. Not long ago it was reported that a document had been discovered among the archives of the Hudson's Bay company which contained a confession of one of the mutineers and the statement that Hudson had been murdered and not cast adrift, but this was later denied by the officials of the company.

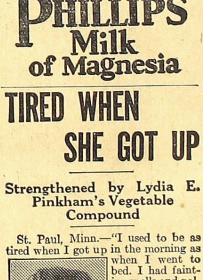

Though it is generally supposed that Hudson and his followers either died of starvation or were killed by the Indians, there is absolutely no indication of what befell the castaways after the "Discovery" left them to their fate in an open boat in Hudson's bay.

Hope in Prosperity

The word "prosperity" has an interesting fact in its history. Fundamentally, from its origin, the word means "an answer to hope." An effective popular definition of prosperity could perhaps be phrased: "Prosperity is that condition of economic affairs which the people earnestly hope will come to pass.'

This origin of the word prosperity is borne out by Webster's New International dictionary, which traces the word to the Latin prefix "pro," meaning "according to," plus the first four letters of the verb "sperare," meaning to hope, in other words, the realization of a wish for better living conditions.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist.

2 He looked down at her, the light from the drawing room window streaming on to his face, and Ernestine paused, surprised. She was filled with an inward dismay for she had never seen him like this. His face, usually complacent, was keen now, his blue eyes were brilliant sparks, his whole countenance quickened and fired. His voice, when he spoke again, had a barely perceptible quaver. "Why were you running, Ernestine? You're still a kid half the time. When I heard you running, I knew it was you, because my heart began to run. too.'

"Nonsense," said Ernestine briskly, but he was persistent.

"I was just going away, disappointed that I hadn't seen you, and here I have you alone for a moment at last. I've been wanting to tell you how beautiful you are, since you're grown. Where have you been? Your face is shining. I could see it luminous in the dark street. Ernestine-don't be silly. I'm trying to tell you I care for you-I-"

She pulled away from him with determination.

"You're the silly one," she said impatiently. "And dumb, as well." She passed him quickly, and closed the door behind her, shutting out his handsome, desirous face.

In her room, dressing for dinner, she was furious with him for intruding on the enchantment of her hour with Will. Didn't he know that he had made himself conspicuous, all last year, with his attentions to Lillian? He was not her lover. What was the matter with him?

Lillian came in from her room, which adjoined Ernestine's, and the younger sister looked at the elder one with old but ever-fresh admiration. "Loring was kidding me," she told herself. "Of course he's crazy about Lillian."

Lillian was ash blond, and very lovely. Her eyes were a kind of deep violet, serene calm eyes, and her lips were thin and bright, red, beauticut. Her nose was patrifully her skin a clear milky white, cian, and she wore just enough rouge to give her a faint rose color and make her eves more lovely. The two girls plunged at once into the conversation of sisters, without beginning or end.

"Well," said Ernestine, "what of it? You can't marry unless you're asked. I can be friends with Will without in December she had escaped church and met him and talked, hand in hand, marrying him, can't I?" as they always talked, quickly,

"I doubt it," said Lillian calmly. "You always go to such extremes, Ernestine. You are always blundering around, taking such awful chances and making wild friends. You've been spoiled and have had your way about lots of things. But this is one thing you can't have."

"But how ridiculous," she exclaimed "You all know, every one of you, that if she had told her folks of her infatuation, they would have carried her off to Europe, or had him forced out of town. They would have separated them instantly."

One blowy, gusty Sunday morning | his own vitality, enraptured with Ernestine's beauty and dearness. One day, however, when they had gone for their usual walk north along the lake shore, he seemed oddly silent and thoughtful, and at times he looked at her, as though wondering whether to speak his mind or not. When he left her, he kissed her again and again, and said oddly, "Remember me," as though it were farewell.

"I'll see you tomorrow," she whispered to him, and turned her fur collar up against the wind.

But she did not see him the next day, although she waited at their rendezvous for an hour past the time. Nor the next day. By the third day she was filled with deep dismay and fear. All sorts of questions whirled through her mind. Perhaps he had tired of her. It might be that the affair had run out for him, that he had never intended to make more than a sweetheart out of her.

But she had only to think of his bright honorable face to know that there was some other reason behind his attitude. She had only to think of his eager kisses to know that he cared. She called him on the telephone at his home, at ten o'clock. His mother answered and said, in a low voice, that he was sleeping.

"Would you waken him. It's important," she said, and stood shaking in the telephone booth, until she heard his voice, husky with sleep. "This is Ernestine," she said, trembling. At once there was an electric silence, and then he said, in a voice now thoroughly awake:

"Well?" She could have cried. "What's the matter, Will? Aren't you going to see me again?"

"Where are you?"

"I'm at the drug store, at Wilson and Sheridan."

"I'll be there within an hour," he told her.

He looked terrible. His face, often white, was ravaged, and his eyes burned. But he was calm. He had reached some decision, and Ernestine knew that the initiative rested on her.

"What's the matter, Will?" she asked him, trembling again, and hating herself for it. It was awful to he such a slave.

The Lady Promises

Again and again Ernestine resolved to tell mamma all about Will, but again and again her confidences faltered before mamma's bright energy, before mamma's staccato bossiness. It was really her first secret from her family, and she did not feel right about it. Of course she was old enough to have a friend if she wanted one, a friend of her own choosing, but Lillian's attitude that she was having an "affair," a romance on the side, purely for the thrill of it, dismayed her. Yet she couldn't tell mamma, and an incident occurred which sealed her silence. She had called Will on the telephone the next morning after her encounter with him on the street, and that had been the beginning of an absorbing intimacy. He worked in the afternoon and at night six days a week. He had nothing better to do with his forenoons and his luncheon hour than share them with Ernestine. But the very time of these engagements made Ernestine safe from curiosity. It was a time of day exclusively the property of women in mamma's world. It would never have occurred to mamma that a love affair could have proceeded during a succession of forea real man." noons.

And a love affair was what it rapidly became. Ernestine could not prolong the time with Will enough to suit her, and his eagerness soon matched, then outrode, her own. His enthusiasm, his energy were compelling, and Ernestine felt the rousing and stirring of her own personality in touch with his. Within a week she was desperately in love. She had no room for any thought and feeling but those which concerned Will Todd. Presently she realized that the termination of their friendship would be a true catastrophe, and with this realization she began to practice secrecy with know best, and she should confide in them."

All this while mamma had been watching Ernestine. Mamma was so pretty, with her violet eyes, and smooth fair hair, and her slender vigorous body. But mamma was sharp. "Neither of my girls would do such a thing," she said now in her soft quick voice, but with a meaning that Ernestine and Lillian both sensed. "I am sure that neither of my little girls would do such a thing to me-have a secret love affair. Would either of you?" "Don't be nutty, mamma," advised Lillian, and Ernestine was silent. Later, alone, Lillian turned to Ernestine eagerly. "You'd better come across. I think the folks are on to you." "You haven't told them?"

"Of course not," said Lillian impatiently. "It's your own business. But, Ernestine, you aren't really going to fall in love with him, are you? Papa would be furious." Ernestine shook the bright tears from her eyes and smiled at Lillian. After a moment, Lillian went on uncertainly.

"Loring saw you yesterday morning. He asked me who the young man was, and I told him, but asked him not to mention it. Still he may tell. He's awfully fond of you, Ernestine. He's always telling me that you are just like a little sister to him. He might feel it his duty to tell papa about you and Will," "But there's nothing about Will that anybody could object to," protested Ernestine. "I'm not engaged to him, but if I should become engaged, I don't see who could care. He's fine and good and gentle. He's brave, too, Lillian shook her head.

"It's your funeral," she said, with the heartless laissez-faire of her generation, which feared, above all things, that it might become its brother's keeper. "But you know just how papa would react to Will Todd. He's the son of papa's old carpenter. He's poor, and he hasn't been to school, and he's not very strong-there's nothing but objections to such an idea, Ernestine. Anyhow, I can't see why you could let yourself even think of such a thing as getting engaged. Imagine taking a chance like that !"

Will said nothing about marriage. He was full of talk, overflowing with

"Is that the trouble?" she asked. "Do you think I ought to have invited you to my home?"

"Well," he said slowly, "why said to her: shouldn't you - unless you were ashamed of me?"

How could she explain without wounding him?

"But you see, Will-it has nothing to do with being ashamed. My first thought was to tell the folks, but then, it seemed they might disapprove of our friendship, and I want to keep it. And then-"

"But don't you see, Ernestine, I can't meet you any more, like thisout on the street, and in the library, and in restaurants and tearooms? I can't do that to your parents. If they don't want you to go with me, I can't coax you to do it-clandestinely."
