Tawas City took the measure of the 17th Squadron, Selfridge Fliers, her Sunday in a close, exciting game, 5 to 2. The first seven innings were a nip and tuck affair with the locals enjoying a one run margin. In the eighth Tawas' bats became active and drove three runs across. But the visitors were not so easily downed. They came back in the ninth and put one run over and had two men stranded on the socks when the final out was registered.

Boulder, on the mound for the locals, went along in beautiful style until the ninth, after two were dead, when the fliers collected three singles which netted a run. Dusing, the visitors' ace southpaw, pitched fine ball, his slants puzzling some of the locals. He shaded Boulder in strikeouts and bases on balls, striking out ten and passing none.

Top hitting honors were divided by C. Libka and Wilson, each getting three singles.

BEGIN WHITE PINE BLISTER RUST CAMPAIGN WORK

White pine blister rust was found last week in the telial stage in Isosco county, according to Robert Thompson, agent in charge of the blister rust campaign here. The telial stage is the stage at which rust is able to spread from the leaves of the currants and gooseberries to the white pine and is therefore an indication of the amount of blister rust which may be expected to develop.

Owners of white pine are urged to cooperate in the blister rust campaign. This they can do by working with the Department of Agriculture in the eradication of currants and gooseberries within nine hundred feet of their white pine. Because of their limited budget the state is not able to do more than take out all of the cultivated black currants which have been declared a nuisance by the state legislature.

In the other work the department can only furnish a foreman to direct the cleaning up of the area around the pine. Those interested in having their pine completely protected should communicate either with Mr. Thompson at Tawas City or with E. C. Mandenberg of the State Department of Agriculture.

The White Pine Blister Rust campaign is conducted by the State Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture and Michigan State College. Blister rust has thus far been located in thirty-one counties of the state and unless it is stopped will be a serious menace to Michigan's beautiful white pine.

White pine blister rust was brought into Michigan about 1915 on pine imported from France by nurseries in Montcalm county. At that time it was discovered and the whole shipment was followed up and the trees all destroyed. It has become evident since that time, however, that some of the rust escaped, as blister rust has spread all over the state.

KANE-McGUIRE

St. Joseph's church, East Tawas, was the scene of an unusually pretty wedding when Miss Ellen Rose Kane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kane of Tawas City, was united in marriage to Austin Arthur McGuire, son of Mr. and Mrs. James McGuire of East Tawas. Rev. E. A. Kirchoff officiated.

The bride was very charmingly attired in an antique ivory gown made in princess style. Over this was draped a veil of tulle arranged in cap effect. She carried a shower bouquet of Kilarney roses and swansonia.

Miss Elsie Neumann, as maid of honor, wore a dainty gown of shell pink satin and a toque of pink velvet. An arm bouquet of pink rapture roses completed her ensemble.

The bridesmaid, Miss Lucille Kane, sister of the bride, chose a Nile green satin gown. She wore a green toque of velvet and carried rapture roses of pink.

James McGuire, Jr., attended his brother as best man.

Little Miss Marilyn Smith, cousin of the bride, acted as flower girl.

"The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin was played by Miss Lucille Lixey, "Ave Maria" by Guonod and "Veni Jesu Amor" were pleasingly rendered by Miss Clara Bolen. With the playing of Mendelssohn's wedding march the happy couple and their attendants left the church, where they received congratulations from a host of friends.

Following the ceremony the wedding breakfast was served to thirty relatives at Hickey's Tea Room. The Tea Room was artistically adorned with wedding bells, ribbon streamers and flowers of pink, green and white.

The out of town guests present at the wedding were, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Case and son, William, of Belding, Chas. Davis of Pontiac, Mrs. Otto Smith and daughter, Marilyn, of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Don McGuire of Detroit.

The bride and groom are well known in this vicinity, the bride being a teacher in this county, and the groom a jeweler of Tawas City.

Mr. and Mrs. McGuire left after the breakfast for a motor tour, stopping at Flint, Pontiac, Detroit and Owosso. After September 1st they will be at home to their friends at Tawas City.

TEACHING FORCE IS INCREASED

The school bell will ring again Tuesday morning after a silence of eleven weeks. Carpenters and plumbers have been working in the building a considerable portion of the summer putting an excellent toilet system in the basement. The tenth member has been added to the faculty, and consequently work in music and art will be offered during the ensuing year to both the grade and the high school students.

School will call at eight-thirty Tuesday morning, and a short session will be held to enable the teachers to organize their respective rooms, and to make out class schedules. There will be a meeting of the faculty Monday afternoon at two o'clock to formulate policies of procedure in regard to some of the fundamental operations of the school.

The faculty for the year of 1930-1931 will be as follows:

The superintendent, Arthur E. Giddings, holds a life certificate and the degree of Bachelor of Arts from the Michigan State Normal College of Ypsilanti, and also the degree of Bachelor of Science from the Michigan State College of East Lansing. He spent the summer in the Graduate School of the University of Michigan, taking work leading to the degree of Master of Arts in general school administration. The next year will be the fourth that Mr. Giddings has been superintendent of the local schools.

The high school principal, John R. Forsten, holds a life certificate and the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Hope College of Holland, Michigan. While a student there, he was a member of the college football and baseball teams, and a member of the reserve basketball team. Mr. Forsten took work during the summer in the Graduate School of the University of Michigan. The ensuing year will make the fourth that he has been principal of the Tawas City high school.

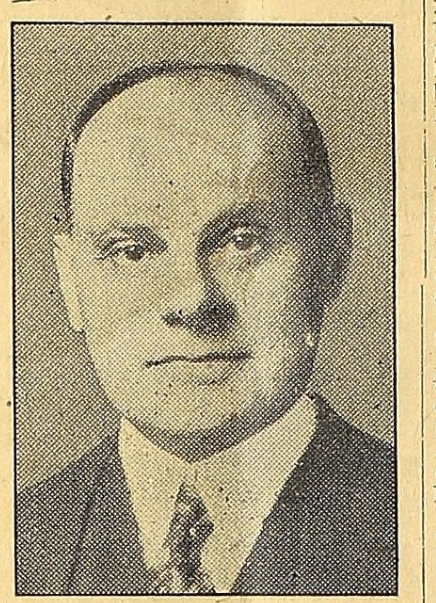

The commercial teacher, Mrs. Lurissa M. Forsten, is a graduate of the Michigan State Normal College, and holds a life certificate from that institution. She has also taken considerable commercial work at Ferris Institute. Mrs. Forsten will complete her fourth year in her present position at the close of the ensuing term.

The English-Latin teacher, M. Louise Crosby, holds a life certificate from the Central State Teachers College at Mt. Pleasant, Michigan. She is a specialist in Latin. Miss Crosby attended the summer session of the Ferris Institute of Big Rapids, Michigan, where she took some advanced work in Latin. The ensuing year will also make the fourth that she has held her present position in our schools.

The grammar room teacher, Robert Bollinger, is a graduate of the Central State Teachers College of Mt. Pleasant, Michigan. The ensu-

350 GREET GROESBECK

A crowd, estimated at 350 people, attended the booster meet held Friday noon at the Hotel Holland under the auspices of the Groesbeck for governor committee. About 125 were present at luncheon.

Alex Groesbeck, in the talks following luncheon, gave his reasons for being candidate for governor and a resume of the accomplishments of his former administration in that office.

A talk was also given by Charles DeLand, who was in Groesbeck's party. Mr. DeLand, in his talk, stated taxes were too high during the present administration and made an urgent plea for their reduction. It was his opinion that Mr. Groesbeck, if elected, was capable of reducing this tax, once he could wipe out the present deficit.

Although the schedule of his itinerary had been unexpectedly increased, curtailing his time for talks, Mr. Groesbeck responded to the wish of disabled Thomas Galbraith, one of Isosco County's oldest Republicans and an ardent admirer, to make a visit to his bedside before resuming his tour of northern Michigan.

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passages from the Christian Science text book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Jesus established His church and maintained His mission on a spiritual foundation of Christ-healing. He taught his followers that his religion had a divine Principle, which would cast out error and heal both the sick and the sinning." p. 136.

RURALSCHOOLS OPEN TUESDAY

Nearly all of the rural schools in Isosco county will open next Tuesday, September 2. This year there will be twenty-two one-room schools and two two-room schools.

The teachers of these schools all hold certificates approved by the State Department of Public Instruction. Nearly all have had at least one year of teacher-training work and some have had two years, or more. The few who have not had a full year of training have had some work at a state teachers' college. We feel that our rural teachers compare very favorably with those in other counties.

Many of our school buildings have been greatly improved during the last few years. Our two-room schools are both new buildings and modern in every respect. Our one-room schools have indoor toilet systems, heating plants with ventilating system in connection, and windows arranged so that the lighting is correct for the room. A number of the school boards have made these improvements by working on a four or five year plan under which they made one or more of these improvements each year. In this way the expense did not come all in one year.

The enrollment in these schools will be between seven and eight hundred pupils. Of this number about seventy will be eighth graders. We are looking forward to a very successful year of work for both teachers and pupils and remember that the people in each community are always ready to help you in any way that they can.

REPUBLICANS—HOW DO YOU LIKE BEING IN HELL?

(Reprint from the August 6, 1930, edition of The Michigan Tradesman.)

There are some things I am unable to reconcile in this world. For instance, four years ago when Groesbeck was defeated by Fred W. Grover for the nomination for Governor, he was invited to go on the stage at the Detroit convention and assure the delegates from all over the State of his continued allegiance to the Republican party. Did he do it? Hardly. Of course, he was pretty mad over the outcome. He not only refused to acquiesce in the invitation, but blurted out the following undiplomatic remark: "The Republican Party can go to Hell." Now he is seeking the suffrages of the same party he consigned to the demdition bow wows four years ago. I naturally wonder how many Republicans will vote for him in the primaries after having been invited to take up their residence in the nether regions?—Isosco Brucker for Governor Committee.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the friends and neighbors for their kindness during the illness and after the death of our husband and father, Leo Slimko; also for the beautiful flowers. Mrs. Leo Slimko and children.

HALE MAN FALLS INTO THRESHER

The tragic death of Orin Lake last Thursday afternoon in Plainfield township was a terrible shock to the community. He was threshing with his machine at his farm home and was keeping the peas, that were flowing back, fed into the separator, when in some way he slipped and was drawn into the machine head first. The engine was shut off at once and the doctor summoned by telephone, but death was instantaneous. Friends gathered quickly and did everything possible to assist the bereaved family.

Funeral services were held at the M. E. church on Saturday afternoon, Rev. Frank Metcalf of Tawas City officiating. Interment was made in the Hale Evergreen cemetery.

Mr. Lake, "Orrie" as he was called, was one of Plainfield township's outstanding citizens, a man of sterling integrity, always ready to assist his neighbors and a loving husband and father. The community at large mourns with his family in their great loss.

Orin Harvey Lake was born on June 2, 1876, in the province of Ontario, and died at Hale on August 21, at the age of 54 years, two months and 19 days. He moved with his parents to Michigan when four years old, the family locating at Tawas City. At the age of eighteen years he moved to Au Gres. On May 2, 1900, he was united in marriage to Lottie Baine of Au Gres. To this union four children were born, George of Oscoda, Mrs. Deuell Pearsall of Hale, and Lawrence and Harry, who lived with their parents and assisted in the management of the farm. He moved to Hale in 1905 and bought a farm, and has been engaged in farming and stock raising here since that time.

He leaves besides his wife and children, three brothers, Wilber L. of Flint, Thomas of Hillman, William of Mikado, and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth General of Petoskey, with a host of friends to mourn his demise.

ALABASTER BEATS AUGRES IN SHORT CONTEST SUNDAY

Alabaster handed Au Gres a 4 to 2 defeat last Sunday at Au Gres. The game was called at the end of the fifth inning on account of rain.

Brown, on the mound for Alabaster, pitched excellent ball. He held the Au Gres boys to four hits and retired ten men by the strike-out route. Sells, his opponent on the rubber, held Alabaster to six hits and struck out seven men.

Both teams had perfect fielding for the five innings. Anderson, of Alabaster, was the leading hitter, getting a single and double in two trips to the plate.

Alabaster will play the Flint Fisher Body nine on Sunday, August 31, at Sand Lake. Game called at 2:30.

PLANE MAKERS TURN TO SMALLER SHIPS

Produce the "Flivver" for Safety and Economy.

New York.—American aviation this year is showing a rather definite trend toward popularizing itself with the rank and file of the public by turning out machines that are within the reach of the man who has only moderate means but still would like to fly. This is true both in the glider field and in the field of its next-door aeronautical neighbor, the so-called "power glider" or "flivver" of the air.

In the past this country has shown quite a pronounced tendency toward greater and ever greater horse power in its airplanes, even though the latter might be designed primarily for sport and utility flying. Builders of transport and military ships, of course, are still headed in this direction and doubtless always will be, but certain of the light plane manufacturers are beginning to question whether they haven't made a mistake in attempting to follow the same trail.

Lesson From Foreigners. Now and then an American designer has come out with a "flivver" plane but, for the most part, he no sooner achieves a satisfactorily high performance at low fuel and upkeep cost than he immediately yields to the inevitable American demand for speed and begins crowding more horse power into his plane. The result is that he gets a faster ship but loses the performance characteristics originally sought, namely, safety through light weight and a low landing speed, and economy of first cost and continued operation.

The importation and manufacture under license in the United States of various foreign "flivver" ships has had a salutary effect on domestic design, but only recently has the country seriously taken up the very low horse power airplane. Occasionally such a ship has been brought out in the past but usually it has been a "freak" type which only a skilled pilot dared fly.

"Flying Carpet Sweeper." Initiative in the low horse power field, both for originality of design and faith in a potential American market for such a ship, belongs to a Cincinnati concern, which brought out a little monoplane known as the Aeronca, a tiny machine with a relatively big wing and a two-cylinder 30 horse power motor.

Scuffed at for its unusual appearance and irreverently dubbed the "flying carpet sweeper" because its wheels attach directly to the fuselage without the conventional landing gear struts, this little ship nevertheless has been a revelation to every airplane pilot who has flown it and has met with universal praise for its performance. What is more to the benefit of the builders, it is beginning to be in rather wide demand at its price of slightly less than $1,500.

Such a machine lands at twenty-five to fifty miles an hour, has a top speed of seventy or seventy-five and cruises along comfortably on a couple of gallons of gasoline an hour at the rate of a mile a minute.

Denver Guard Officer Gets Highest Rating. Denver.—Becoming the highest ranking air officer in the entire National Guard of the United States, Maj. Bruce Kistler of Denver was recently promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel and designated air officer for the Forty-fifth division.

At the same time Capt. Ralph Hall was promoted to major and appointed to succeed Colonel Kistler as commanding officer of the One Hundred and Twentieth Observation squadron, Colorado National Guard. First Lieut. Charles La Gue was promoted to captain. He is radio officer of the Denver flying unit.

Promotion of the three Colorado fliers is in recognition of the splendid record of the observation squadron, which was recently given the highest possible rating by the War department. The promotions came on the seventh anniversary of the formation of the unit.

Colonel Kistler is chairman of the State Aeronautics commission and development of aviation in Colorado under his guidance has been the envy of Guard officers all over the country. The one hundred twentieth observation squadron comprises 20 officers and 80 enlisted men, all of Denver. The officers are nearly all World war fliers.

Wages in Airplane Plants Are Revealed. Washington.—The first comprehensive study of wages and hours of labor in the airplane and aircraft-engine industries of the United States has been completed by the bureau of labor statistics, Department of Labor.

Plane Flights Give Alibi to Criminals

New York.—Registration of air passengers may be required here if aeronautical amendments to the municipal code as proposed by Police Commissioner Mulrooney are passed. "The airplane is a great instrument for the criminal who wants to create an alibi," Mulrooney declared. "It is possible for a criminal to commit a crime in this city, hop into an airplane and fly to Saratoga in an hour and a half and then establish an alibi by proving that he was there at such and such a time. I knew of three cases where criminals used planes, two coming to this city and one leaving. Presumably, their intention was to create alibis. I don't know of a better way for a crook to establish an alibi than by using airplanes."

BLIND FLYING FOR THE NAVY'S AIRMEN

Fledglings and Veterans All Must Learn It.

Washington.—The navy is seeking to remove, or at least modify, the perils of flight through fog and darkness by giving its men a thoroughgoing course in "blind flying."

Not only are the navy's fledglings at the Pensacola training station ordered to spend three hours of their course in the cockpit of a hooded plane, with only an illuminated instrument board to guide them, but the veterans of the service also are being similarly trained.

Further, Capt. Arthur Page of the Marine corps is studying, in collaboration with the United States standards bureau, a much more scientific and difficult phase of "blind flying." He is seeking to perfect the technique of landing on a moving airplane carrier with only radio directions and his instruments to guide him.

Instrument flying over land is difficult enough, but the navy has a problem harder still. The aviator at sea, the Navy department pointed out in a recent treatise on the subject, not only must plant his plane on a designated spot, but often, in landing on a plane carrier, he must put his machine on a moving surface.

Page's experiments, the Navy department said recently, are "speeding along."

"Instruments and equipment are being improved and developed," the department said, "and it is believed that the near future will see another contribution from the United States government toward the development of safety in flying."

Death of Curtiss Is Great Loss to Aviation. In the death of Glenn H. Curtiss aviation has suffered the loss not only of one of its outstanding pioneers, but of an inventor of unusual versatility and genius whose willingness to translate unshakable enthusiasm for new speeds on land and in air into personal demonstrations of the machines he conceived and built played a great part in kindling national enthusiasm both for flying craft and for the motors suitable to drive them, writes Reginald M. Cleveland in the New York Times.

Holder of Air Pilot's License No. 1 in America, Curtiss made the first public flight, the flights which took the early Scientific American trophies, the Bishop prize and the Gordon cup and won the $10,000 New York World prize for his historic flight down the Hudson from Albany. He added to his laurels by contributing many solid and constructive ideas to both airplane and motor design.

His work on light motors was particularly notable, and more flyers took to wings sustained by the OX engine, which was his brain child, than by any other motor yet designed. He gave to aviation both the pontoon and the flying boat, the hinged aileron and the fixed stabilizer. A visionary, in the best sense, the stuff of which his dreams were wrought will endure.

"BLIND" FLYER. One of the longest "blind flights" ever made, from Omaha to Washington, a distance of approximately 1,000 miles, was completed by Capt. Arthur Page, United States Marine Corps, winner of the recent Curtiss Marine Trophy race. Captain Page flew a navy Vought observation plane, equipped with a hood for covering his cockpit and was accompanied by Lieut. V. M. Guymon.

WRAP TREES FROM MICE AND RABBITS

Rodents Can Be Poisoned in Sod Orchards If Desired.

Damage from mice, rabbits and other rodents may be expected in sod orchards unless the trees are protected before winter, says Prof. Joseph Oskamp of Cornell university. If only a small number of trees are to be protected they may be wrapped with newspaper, burlap or building paper. For a large orchard a permanent wrapper is more satisfactory, such as wood veneer or galvanized wire screen. Galvanized screen of one-fourth or one-half inch mesh may be obtained in rolls 18 inches wide. This is about the right height for the protector. The screen may be cut in strips wide enough to provide for the tree growth and may be left on for several years. Wire wrappers are more expensive at the start but probably cheapest in the end, as they may be left on all year; the others must be replaced yearly.

Poisoned bait is suggested by Professor Oskamp as good insurance for all rodents and particularly for the pine mouse. Systematic poisoning is the only safe mouse control for sod orchards. Immediately after harvest, bait should be distributed and repeated when necessary. Poison stations may be made of wooden boxes, drain tiles, wide-mouthed jars, or tin cans; in fact anything that will protect the bait from the weather, and from birds and larger animals. Sometimes it is necessary to have a container under each tree and some placed on higher ground to avoid standing water.

The United States biological survey recommends the following formula: Mix one tablespoonful of gloss starch in one-half cupful of cold water and stir into three-fourths pint of boiling water to make a thin clear paste. Mix one ounce of powdered strychnine with one ounce baking soda and stir into the starch to make a creamy mass free from lumps. Stir in one-fourth pint of heavy corn sirup and one tablespoonful of glycerin. Apply to 12 quarts of wheat and mix thoroughly to coat each kernel. Oats, though preferred by the mice, are not satisfactory to use for this formula, as the mice hull the oats before eating.

This formula will be satisfactory, but if any quantity is needed inquire of the local county agricultural agent, for the biological survey has mixed quantities of this bait co-operatively. One pound of the bait is sufficient to treat one acre.

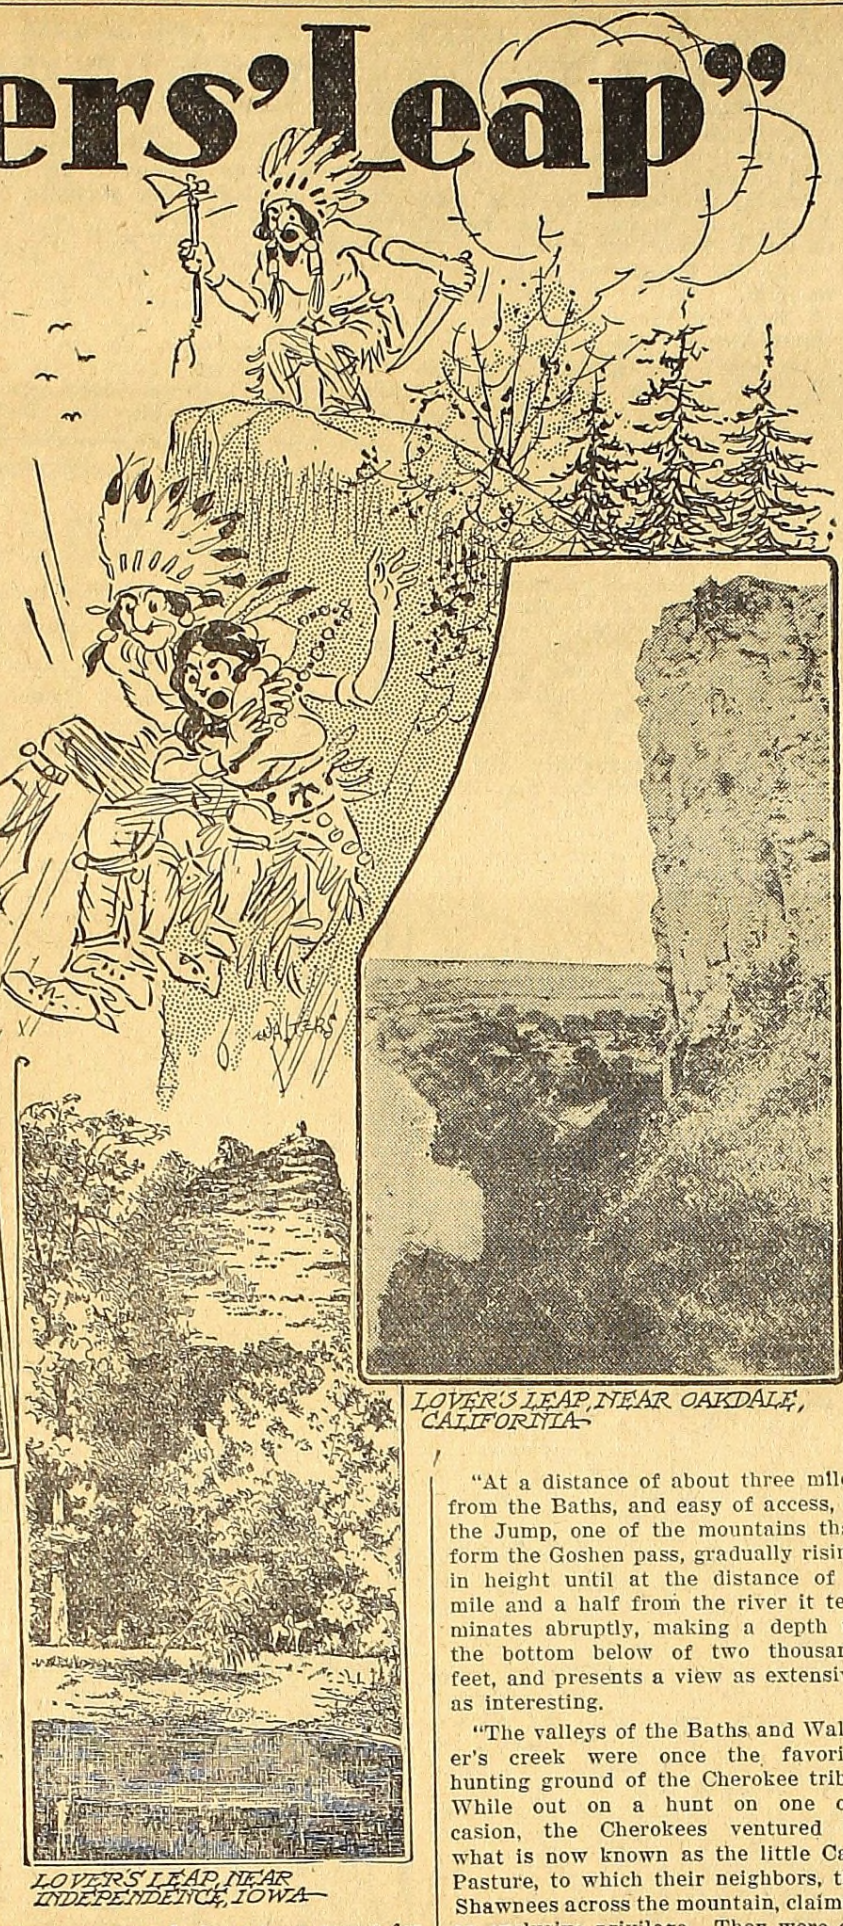

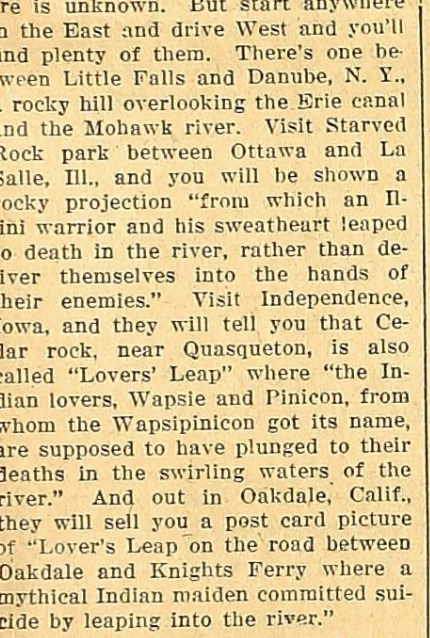

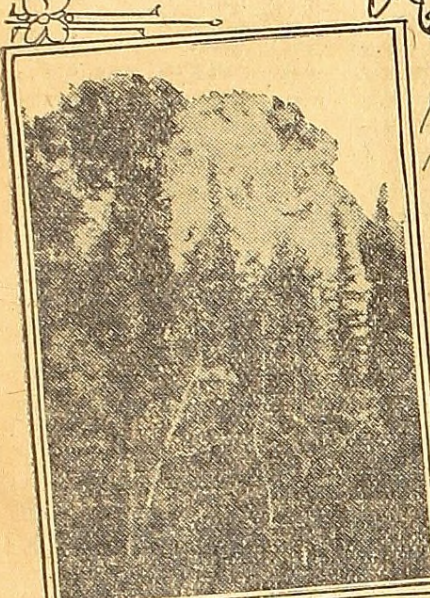

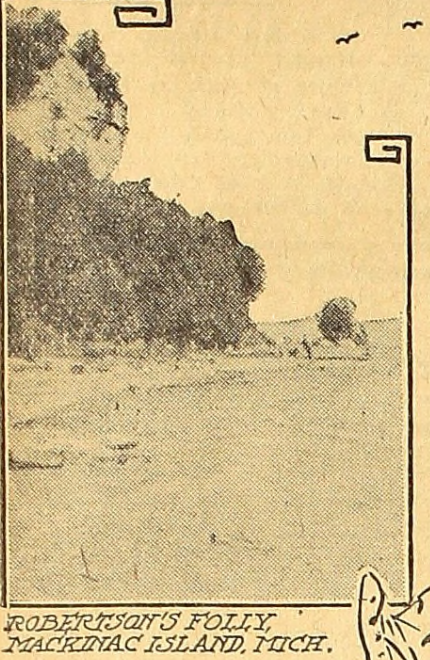

Importance of Growing Large, Healthy Plants. We can see the importance of growing large, healthy plants, when we stop to realize that the strawberry plant produces more than its own weight in berries (leaves, roots, stems and everything considered). And it produces its crop in a comparatively short time compared with the larger fruits. It takes about thirty days from blossom to ripe berry, and the average period of ripe berries for a given variety is about two weeks, thus making about six weeks from the first blossoms to the end of the fruiting season for a variety. Compare this short period with the blossom-to-ripeness period of the apple, peach or pear. They take about all summer to produce their crop. And the strawberry, during its short fruiting time, must not only blossom and produce its heavy crop of berries, but it must also keep vigorous and healthy, and carry on all its usual life processes—in other words, it must maintain itself in the best of condition, for just as soon as the plants begin to weaken for the want of food or water, the berries become small and irregular, thus affecting the possible yields.

Grapes Easily Started From Cuttings in Fall. Grapes can easily be started from cuttings. These cuttings should be made up about the time you prune the grapes, tie them in bundles and store them away in a cool cellar in damp sand until spring. In the spring they should be planted out so that the upper buds of the cuttings are just flush with the level of the soil. Pack the dirt carefully about the base of the cuttings. In making the cuttings use only strong one-year-old wood. The cut which forms the base of the cutting should be made close up to a bud or joint. Make the cutting about 12 to 16 inches in height, with the upper cut about an inch above the upper bud.

Off-Grade Apples. Since some folks are looking for what they seem to think is a bargain, they may actually pay nearly as much for off-grade apples as they would have to pay for a much better grade. Growers often make the statement that they procure as much for their so-called cull apples as they do for their better grades. This is sometimes true due to the fact that less expense is involved in the production, handling and sale of the low grades of apples.

"Lovers' Leap"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HAVE you a "Lovers' Leap" in your locality? If you haven't, then it's unique, and you might well capitalize upon that fact and, in advertising to tourists the attractions of your region, assure them that "this is the only place in the United States which does not have among its scenic beauties a single Lovers' Leap."

Just how many of these places there are is unknown. But start anywhere in the East and drive West and you'll find plenty of them. There's one between Little Falls and Danube, N. Y., a rocky hill overlooking the Erie canal and the Mohawk river. Visit Starved Rock park between Ottawa and La Salle, Ill., and you will be shown a rocky projection "from which an Illini warrior and his sweetheart leaped to death in the river, rather than deliver themselves into the hands of their enemies." Visit Independence, Iowa, and they will tell you that Cedar rock, near Quasqueton, is also called "Lovers' Leap" where "the Indian lovers, Wapsie and Pincon, from whom the Wapsipinicon got its name, are supposed to have plunged to their deaths in the swirling waters of the river." And out in Oakdale, Calif., they will sell you a post card picture of "Lovers' Leap on the road between Oakdale and Knights Ferry where a mythical Indian maiden committed suicide by leaping into the river."

While nearly every township or county can boast of at least one Lovers' Leap, Mackinac island in northern Michigan has the distinction of having two places where love's young dream found a tragic ending. The guide books will tell you of "Lovers' Leap"—This lone pinnacle rises to a height of 145 feet above the waters of Lake Michigan about a mile west of the main part of the city. The legend which gives it its name is that in the long ago the beautiful Lotah, an Indian maiden of the Ojibway tribe and only daughter of a famous chief named Wawanosh, watched from this height the departure of her lover, named Geniwegwon, with a war expedition across the water; and to the rock she came day after day to await his coming. At last, the party returning without him, brought word of his death and the distracted maiden not caring for life any longer leaped from this cliff; the lifeless body was found by her father at the foot of the precipice the evening after."

Then there is Robertson's Folly, where "It is told that a young and beautiful Indian girl was wooed and won by this dashing young Lieutenant Robertson, but the poor maiden soon learned that he was to depart for the East at an early date to marry a white girl. He granted her a last farewell meeting at this their trysting place, and in a desperate struggle she succeeded in precipitating him and herself over the cliff."

But if you want the story of a Lovers' Leap with a wealth of detail, go to Linn Creek, Mo., where there has been handed down from pioneer days this tale of Lovers' Leap above the clear waters of the Niangua river before it flows into the murky Osage:

"A century ago the mighty Osage and Shawnee tribes dwelt along these streams. They were fighting enemies, and bones of big-framed giants, war clubs of stone, rusted arrow-heads of crudely fashioned metal and other

THE HEIRLOOM EMERALD NECKLACE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE lazy wind crooned a murmurous tune among Jennie Tolliver's chinaberry trees and in her heart was a wistful song of borrowed happiness. Miss Jennie was living the days of her lost romance in the approaching wedding of her niece. Wouldn't the sleek head tilt and the dark eyes shine when Jennie Wrennie beheld the marvelous wedding gift of the heirloom necklace with its perfectly cut emeralds and the great center stone carved on the under side with the family crest! Why, that stone alone was worth a king's ransom!

Never a day but the necklace circled Miss Jennie's throat—a green band of living light that glowed and deepened with its owner's very pulse beats. Absently Miss Jennie reached a hand to feel it. Her heart skipped a beat. The slim fingers felt higher. The necklace was gone!

Miss Jennie stumbled to the oval mirror in the hall, her eyes round disks with the shock of her discovery. The reflection showed her column-like throat bare of its habitual adornment. She sank weakly into a chair, ill, inert. How long she sat there Miss Jennie did not know.

A voice roused her. Mrs. Carey, the new boarder next door, stood in the hall. Miss Jennie's smile was strained. "Excuse me, Mrs. Carey, I have just made a terrible discovery. I did not notice you. Won't you come in?" Rising with difficulty, she led her visitor into the dim parlor.

Mrs. Carey looked sympathetic. "What did you discover?" "My necklace—I lost it today." "Not the gorgeous green necklace I've seen on you two or three times?" "Mrs. Carey," pride of family and tradition were in Miss Jennie's voice, "I have worn that necklace every day since I was eighteen and my mother before me, and hers before her." Her caller's eyes widened. "It must be very valuable." "Beyond price," lamented its owner, shaking her head. "Where do you think you lost it?" questioned her visitor. "It must have been in Atlanta. I matched a green hat to it, for the Tolliver women always dressed in harmony with the necklace. I bought the hat after shopping for my niece's trousseau."

"Well, I certainly hope you find it," sympathized her neighbor. "I'll run in again when you are not so upset." "One thing is certain," said Miss Jennie as she addressed the portrait of the first Jennie Tolliver on the left wall after her caller had left. "Jennie Wrennie must not know until after the wedding. Not a shadow must mar her happiness."

An hour later Miss Jennie left the telephone in a high state of excitement, nor would she explain to her niece the nature of the mysterious call.

Next morning Jennie Wrennie was mystified to find that her aunt had gone to Atlanta again.

And Miss Jennie, on the mezzanine floor of a certain hotel in Atlanta, was mystified at sight of her neighbor, Mrs. Carey. In conference with a stranger about whom there was something so startlingly familiar that Miss Jennie's heart leaped. He rose at sight of her, and, approaching, asked, "You lost a necklace?"

Apparently he did not know her. It could not be Jack Thornton, after all! Somewhat breathless, her attention more on the figure of the man before her than on the lost heirloom, as he led her to the divan where Mrs. Carey sat, she declared that she had.

"Perhaps I have found it," he told her, "if you will describe it?" Seated beside her neighbor, while the stranger drew up a chair opposite them, Miss Jennie began:

"It was a very valuable strand of perfectly matched, square emeralds with an oblong clasp set with three small diamonds. An heirloom, in fact, with the large center stone carved on the under side with the family crest, St. George and the Dragon."

Mrs. Carey, her face a study, suddenly rose to go.

"Not so fast," interferred the stranger, drawing a pair of handcuffs out of his pocket. "Since you're so fond of jewelry, you may like these."

Miss Jennie was stupefied, while Mrs. Carey's face was suddenly drained of color, and, though she tried to speak, no words came.

"She advertised in an Atlanta paper for the return of your necklace—offered $200 for it, and I happened to see the ad," he explained.

"Mrs. Carey! My neighbor!" exclaimed Miss Jennie, horrified, adding after a moment, "of course, I shall not prosecute. No Tolliver lady would sit in court needlessly. After all, I have the necklace back."

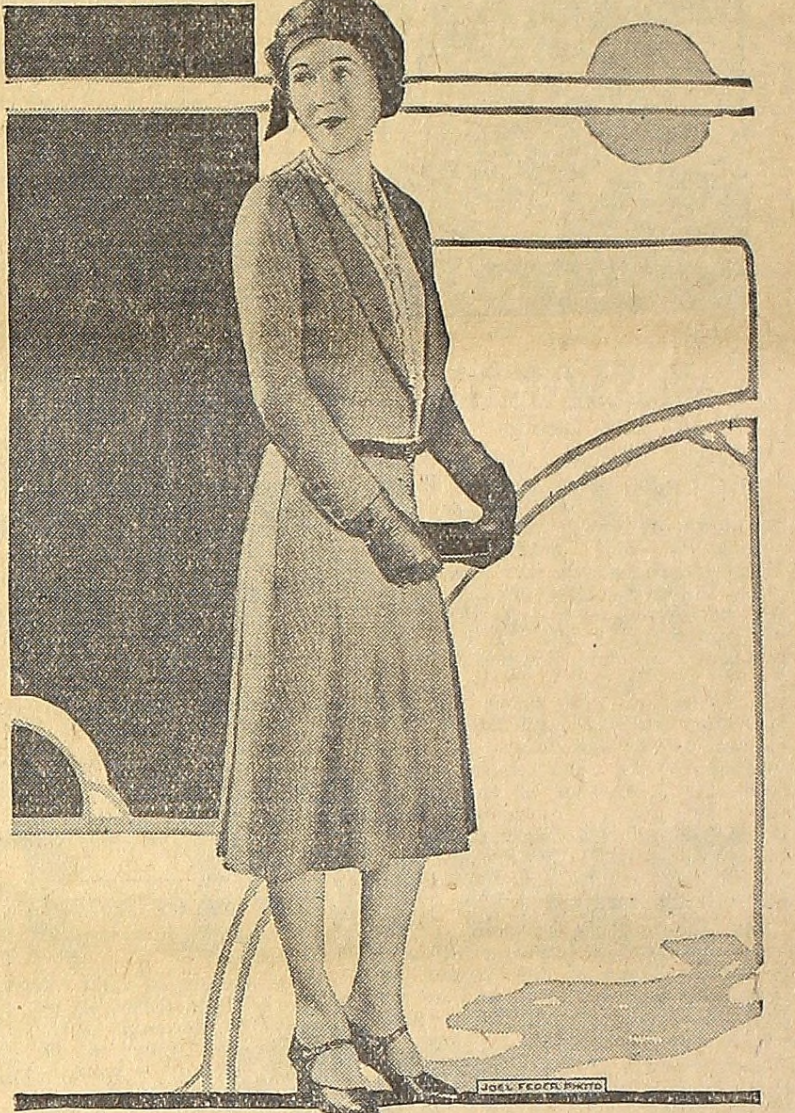

Miss Jennie turned toward the stranger and the guilty woman slipped away.

"How can I thank you, sir! Of course, I shall gladly pay the reward, but even then, when I think of losing

BLACK AND WHITE FOR AUTUMN; BEADED GOWN STAGES COMEBACK

HERE'S how to start the fall season with a flourish of chic that will tell the world you are properly style-minded. The order of procedure is as follows: Acquire a stunning suit of black-and-white tweed, for black-and-white is scheduled to repeat its triumphs this fall.

Having decided upon tweed in black-and-white for your initial fall outfit, next to consider is the silhouette. An answer to correct "lines" is given in this illustration of a pert little bolero topping a skirt which flares, thanks to iridescent sequin or paillette, you may be a sparkling rhinestone, a seed pearl, a bit of jet or of strass but this much is certain, whatever your species you are destined to play a dazzling role on fashion's stage during the coming fall and winter months.

All signs point to the forthcoming as a "bead season," bead trimmings on our daytime frocks, and all-over beaded gowns for formal evening wear, little spangled theater, dine and dance jackets with spangled berets

Its adroit seaming. Please to take note that this skirt fits ever so snugly about the hips, which it must do to comply with the dictates of fashion. No doubt you have been impressed with the extreme simplicity of this suit. The explanation is that it is tre chic to be simple in a sophisticated way.

In this analysis of that which goes to define autumn swank let us next turn our attention to the footwear, the gloves and the chapeau which leads to distinction for the costume pictured. Being black they reflect the very essence of smartness. At all the best booteries they are declaring the prestige of fine, shapely and supple black kid shoes for fall. As to the correctness of black kid gloves for wear with the autumn costume, ask la Parisienne—she knows. The modish little black beret tops this black-and-white tweed suit to perfection. Choose it of velvet, of felt or of chenille.

The tweed of which the bolero and skirt in the picture is styled is of the smooth lightweight variety, but to match merely begins to tell the program mapped out for beads for the season before us.

The touch of sparkling embroidery will enhance many a velvet gown, also those of stately white satin for evening. Shoulder straps of glittering beads will collaborate with low-cut necklines to achieve flattering décolletés.

Our afternoon frocks of satin, velvet, crepe and faille silk, will take unto themselves beaded yokes, beaded collar-and-cuff sets, beaded bandings and beaded motifs of every sort.

Beaded frocks for evening wear assume an entirely different aspect from those of the past. The latest is the gown fashioned of beaded net or chiffon which can be bought by the yard.

Two very beautiful exponents of the formal beaded frock are presented in illustration below. The exquisite princess dress in the foreground just suits the delicate beauty and lovely slenderness of Jeanette Loff, the cinema artist who registers so beautifully all white mixtured woens are not thus. Some of the newest mannish worsteds are almost shaggy in appearance, because of the nubs of white yarn which look almost as if snowflakes had fallen on a dark background. Not only does white tone up black in fashionable autumn weaves but there are other equally as stunning effects, such as dark wine colored woolen flecked with white.

Beaded Gowns Are Back.

Mink on Its Travels Leaves Trail of Death

Those who enjoy long hikes while reading trail signs should travel an extensive swamp or along a Michigan river and spend the day following a mink track. The mink is one of the best travelers among the animals, and his sleek coat holds a concentrated package of lean meat, bone and sinew.

Every hollow log and every hole in the ground along the mink's route is inspected by his remorseless nose and his shoebutton eyes. Nature equips him with a neck which as large as his body so he runs no danger of entering any hole from which he can not get out.

Any animal or bird which has taken shelter in a hole or log is meat for Mr. Mink. So is old drag-tail, the muskrat, when he comes into his house for air and finds that a mink has clawed his way in and is waiting for the homecoming of the bulder.

Most minks which have escaped traps and hunters long enough to acquire wisdom have a regular route for their travels. They will follow the course of a stream for miles, then cross a portage to another stream, travel up that to its headwaters, and cross back through woods and fields to their starting points.

The mink is not a glutton but a killer. His victims are found usually with a portion of the neck and one shoulder eaten.

The mink's traveling gait is a hop and his trade mark in the snow is a pair of prints spaced from 18 to 24 inches apart. Occasionally he tucks his front feet up and slides down a bank, often making a slide on the creek or river bank. A little spring brook along his route makes the easiest place to entice him into a trap. A waterret in a narrow, swift flowing rife will often pinch the toes of the smartest traveler.—Detroit News.

Typical Feminine Strategy

Dial telephones, the kind that enable you to ring up anybody you want directly without asking "Central" for the number, have brought new problems and possibilities. Leaving the receiver off the hook gives the "busy" signal to anyone trying to ring that number. Thus Walter Winchell discovers that certain girls who wish to dodge their regular boy friend for an evening, while going out with a new one for variety, simply leave their phone receiver off the hook. When the boy friend calls up he gets the "busy" signal no matter how often he tries. And she can alibi next day that she was at home all the time as evidenced by the busy telephone. The little slickers.—Capper's Weekly.

Home Run

President George L. Omwake of Ursinus college remarked at the Pennsylvania Society of New England dinner that last fall he celebrated the golden anniversary of the first day he went to school. He said that the strange part of this, however, was that he had been at school every year since. A short time ago he cited this to a member of his family, now a freshman in college, to clinch an argument.

"Huh," retorted the student, with the usual disregard of the young for parental feelings, "I don't know how anyone could be in school so long and still be so dumb."

Standing His Ground

"You have conducted several investigations?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "and in every instance I am holding my own. I still know just about as much as when I started."—Washington Star.

LAURIN J. BUDGE
FOR STATE SENATOR
25th District

Laurin J. Budge of Beaverton was born May 22, 1880, at Lee, Maine. At 12 years of age he came to Michigan, became a registered pharmacist in 1904, graduating from Ferris Institute. He has been alderman, supervisor and mayor, and at present serves as president of board of commerce. In 1917 he was commissioned as first lieutenant of infantry and served in that capacity to the end of war, being one year in France. In 1926 and 1928 he was elected to the legislature by large majorities over democratic opponents. As a member of the legislature he always advocated lower taxes, favored the Turner bill to aid poorer school districts and supported good roads and voted for conservation measures.

Mr. Budge finds himself in the unique position of knowing intimately the problems of the farmer, laborer and business man, and he can lend an intelligent and sympathetic ear to all these groups.

The Gladwin Record says: "He has had the respect and confidence of his fellow members. He has, at all times, had a watchful eye on matters pertaining to the interest of this district and has been diligent in his attention to legislative affairs."—Ad. paid for by Veterans.

SUCH IS LIFE--The Difference

By Charles Sughrue

The DAIRY

GET BEST RESULTS BY FEEDING GRAIN

Adjust Calf's Ration to Prevent Tendency to Scour.

To get best results, calves should have about all of the grain they can eat up to the time they are five to six months old and a good method of feeding would be to have enough grain in the manger so that there is some grain there practically all of the time.

It would be desirable to feed the grain twice a day, aiming to feed it so that there will be just a little left from each feeding when it is time to give the next feed. Calves are handled this way to the age of about six months, after that they can be turned to pasture or fed about the same as you would feed older cattle and should go ahead and make satisfactory growth.

It is only occasionally that it is desirable to try to treat a calf for scours by any other means than to adjust the ration so as to prevent the tendency to scour. Changing grain ration should help to reduce the amount of scouring in calves. It is necessary to avoid feeding too much skim milk also. Generally about one gallon of whole milk at a feed twice a day is as much as any calf can handle during the first two or three weeks of its life and many calves will not handle quite this much. It is doubtful if it is ever desirable to feed more than one and one-half gallons of skim milk at a feed twice a day to calves after they are put on the skim milk. Larger amounts of milk are often the cause of scouring and digestive disturbances.

Putting Milk Cows in One Large Box Stall

At various times there has been mentioned a system of dairy cow housing that has an able exponent in the head of the Illinois University Dairy department—Prof. W. J. Fraser. The plan that Professor Fraser has followed for years at the university farm, St. Paul, is to run the milk cows in large box stalls, the whole herd in one stall. The cows are stanchioned only for grain feeding and milking. Hay and ensilage are fed in racks. This plan has been quite widely adopted in Illinois and those who practice it claim that labor is considerably reduced, the cows are in better health, the manure is preserved more perfectly and the cows are cleaner. To keep the cows clean about one-third more straw will be required than when stanchioned. The cows so stabled are necessarily dehorned. This is considered an advantage whether the cows are in stanchions or loose boxes.

Hot Water Effectively Removes All Milk Fat

Several agricultural colleges and hundreds of users of machines have found from experience that hot water, not less than 160 degrees Fahrenheit, will effectively remove the milk fat that is so destructive to the rubber parts and at the same time kill most of the bacteria. Cold water should first be sucked through the machine immediately after the milking is finished. By lifting the teat cups up and down, an air brushing action will be secured as well as a water brushing effect. This will remove the milk that is in the machine.

Dairy Facts

Yearling and two-year-old heifers should be fed very little grain.

All inferior calves in individuality and breeding should be vealed or otherwise disposed of.

The young bulls should not be used for service until they are a year old and then should be given very light service.

Weed out the unprofitable dairy cows. It is more profitable to milk three good cows than a half dozen poor ones.

Keep is of value in the ration for the iodine content, more particularly in localities where calves are known to be afflicted with big-neck or goiter.

Of the various means by which one may get greater returns from a given acreage of pasture, none is more important than turning live stock from one pasture to another.

When the daughters of a bull come into production, that bull will soon be proved to be either a valuable breeding animal or just so much soap head.

A cow which gives 10,000 pounds of milk in a year returns $103 more above feed cost than the typical New York state cow.

Train Night-Flying Birds
A race of night-flying pigeons is being developed under supervision of the War department. Soon after the World war the United States army signal corps started to develop these birds, realizing that they would be of invaluable service in case of war or in time of great national disaster, such as floods, cyclones or earthquakes. At the army signal school at Fort Monmouth, N. J., there is now a loft containing only night-flying birds. These are the result of careful training of homing pigeons, selection and breeding of the most intelligent, the sturdiest and those that had habitually flown in twilight or darkness.

Government Films Abroad
Uncle Sam's own official movie industry seems to be reaching considerable proportions. The Department of Agriculture films now cover 250 subjects, and are beginning to be in fairly strong demand from foreign governments. The government of Uruguay, for instance, recently ordered 130 copies of official films, while other countries buying the films included Mexico, Cuba, Nicaragua, Haiti, Colombia, Peru, Argentina, Brazil, Dominion of Canada, South Africa, New South Wales, Belgium, Holland, Japan, Turkey, Germany and Soviet Union.

Manganese Boon to Steel
The steel industry takes approximately 95 per cent of all the manganese consumed in this country. The percentage of the metal which goes into the steel varies from around 1 per cent to as high as 12 per cent in steels in which particular hardness is desired. Manganese has long been used in removing oxygen from molten steel, but it is only of late years that its value as a hardening agent has been realized.—Washington Star.

Some of them turned on the light while standing in water and were shocked, others reached for the soap and slipped down, while a few went to sleep in the tub. None, however, were murdered for singing in the bathtub.—Florida Times-Union.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By Walter Trumbull

There is a faint suspicion in my mind that I must be advancing in years; because I see things in the newspapers which remind me of other things which certainly happened far away and long ago. There is, for example, the death of that great figure in aviation, Glenn H. Curtiss. The first time I ever saw Mr. Curtiss was at Brescia, northern Italian city at the foot of the Alps. That was in 1909.

These college boys of today, who hop into their planes and drive to a polo match, a boat race or a football game, probably don't remember much about such engines as the Anzani or the Gnome, or about such aviators as Delarange, Paulhan, Rogers Sommer, Lefebvre, Ferber, Latham, and Fernandez. Yet most of that group gave their lives to aviation before man's wings had grown so strong. Other great birdmen of that day are still known; because they eventually associated with big companies to which they lent their names. Among these are the Wrights, Santos Dumont, Henry Farman, the Voisins, Bleriot and Curtiss.

TENNIS STAR COMING

Betty Nuthall, English tennis star, is to participate in the American championships to be played in the East this autumn.

The first real aviation meet was held in France, at Reims. Nobody went very far to see that one. It was felt that this flying business was just a stunt; that it never really would be practical. But they did pretty well at Reims, so, when the second meet was held in Italy, at Brescia, we decided to go and see it. Brescia was crowded. We stayed in the same hotel with Glenn Curtiss and some of the other flyers, but arrived so shortly before the meet that we were given the proprietor's own room. I never have forgotten the family photographs on those walls. They certainly were not taken by Hal Phye or any of these fashionable photographic artists.

That certainly was a great meet. Bleriot was there with the little monoplane in which he had lately flown the channel on that early morning when Hubert Latham, with his larger Antoinette plane, was waiting for the wind to go down. And the Voisins, Henry Farman, Wilbur Wright and, I think, Santos Dumont, all were on hand. The huge crowd, which ran the scale from royalty to peasants, caught a sharp breath and then exhaled a united "Ah!" as the first plane left the ground. Our "ah" was as loud as any of the rest. None of this present generation ever will get that kick out of seeing a man fly.

The Wright plane didn't have any wheels then. It had skids, and they had to build a tripod and a track to get it into the air. It couldn't be got off the ground. Most of the planes had bicycle wheels. Glenn Curtiss won the prize for distance flight. Somebody, probably Latham, broke the altitude record in a Voisin plane. He must have risen almost a thousand feet. Glenn Curtiss prophesied that the day would come when man would fly the ocean. People laughed gently at his enthusiasm; but he lived to see that day. What will this present generation live to see? That meet at Brescia with those rickety, feeble, hand-made planes was only twenty-one years ago. What about the next twenty-one years? Like the man who never had suffered from delirium tremens, we haven't seen anything yet.

Another thing which takes me back through the years is the earthquake in the purple Apennine portion of Italy. They say Vesuvius is growling again. I climbed Vesuvius once with the last crowd up before it blew its bonnet off. That old hill has a red-hot disposition. But the earthquake is what brings back memories, and not pleasant ones. It happened we were in Sicily the year of the earthquake, and got into Messina as soon as they would let us. That was a picture nobody who saw it forgets. Dead, dying and injured; homeless, frightened people, who had lost all they possessed; mothers who had lost their children; children who had lost their parents; great piles of crushed stone, plaster and debris where buildings and streets had been; walls left standing with fragments of floors sticking out and supporting articles of furniture. The Red Cross did a good job there, but there are some things beyond human aid.

Illustrated books are coming in again. The return of illustrations started with private editions, often reprints with new illustrations. These sold for about $15. But now some of the regular issues of books have pictures illustrating the text.

At least two of the girls netted in the police raid on Earl Carroll's "Vanities" were formerly artists' models. One of them, when dressed for the street, is a quiet, ladylike person happily married, who spends her Sundays with her husband's family in the country. In her artist model days she never posed for the figure.

The Viking ship Roald Amundsen, which sailed from Norway in July, 1929, to follow Leif Ericson's route to America, is here seen in the Mississippi river on its way to St. Paul, Minn. Women Workers Must Hide Age

Washington.—A woman's proverbial reticence where age is concerned has economic if not ethical justification in our modern industrial system, according to officials of the United States women's bureau.

The woman over twenty-eight who tells her employer the truth about her age is likely to find herself out of a job, says Miss Mary V. Robinson, director of the bureau's division of public information.

The bureau finds the term, "older worker," is being applied to all women employees between the ages of twenty-eight and sixty-eight, and that it is "fairly typical" for industrial concerns to employ only women under thirty.

"With the problem of finding work becoming more acute for women in their thirties, naturally to the women of over forty forced to seek a job the situation seems almost hopeless," Miss Robinson said.

"Many women in their fifties, despite years of satisfactory and loyal service, are kept through wrong types of efficiency methods in constant dread of losing their positions; and those who have crossed the sixty mark, even though still hale, fit and useful, generally are regarded as hopelessly beyond the dead line of employment."

The women's bureau recently made a survey of women hand workers in the cigar industry, where hundreds have been thrown out of work by factory mergers and installation of recently invented automatic cigar-making machines.

A number of those questioned frankly admitted prevaricating about their age in their effort to find new work.

Miss Robinson raises the question if it isn't "a shortsighted civilization" that offers wage standards too low to provide savings; that would insure against unemployment, and age standards too low to provide jobs for capable applicants.

Writing His Own

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I have known Corwin for a half dozen years or so while he was in college and since he has severed his connection with our educational institution, or I might perhaps better say, since it has been severed for him. He did not do well as an undergraduate. He could apparently find nothing that he liked and he could not quite bring himself to do what was to him distasteful. He has not found anything since he left college that either suited him or that he suited and now he is hunting another job.

He came in a few days ago to ask me to write him a letter of recommendation—one of these "to whom it may concern," a sort of epistolary proprietary medicine which would be a palliative or a curative for all job-hunting ills. I write a great many letters of recommendation, and I try to make them truthful. There is almost always something which one may say commendatory of any of one's acquaintances, but Corwin pretty nearly stumped me. All that came into my mind was that he was extremely good looking and more than ordinarily well dressed and these two characteristics are a trifle inadequate in a man who is expecting to find a place of responsibility and emolument.

I hesitated before acceding to Corwin's request, and I suppose he saw my hesitation. "Can't you do it?" he inquired. "Well, I have been up against some pretty hard propositions in my time," I said. "I think I can say something. Why don't you try it yourself," I suggested. "What do you mean?" he asked. "You know about your own qualities and characteristics better than anyone else in the world," I answered. "You should be able to evaluate your training, your experience, your dependability, and your own particular strong points. Why don't you write a recommendation for yourself and bring it around to me? If it is true and complimentary, I'll sign it." "I've never thought of that," he said. "I'll try."

Voodoo Collection for Museum

Washington.—From the interior of Nigeria, original home of the voodoo cult, the National museum has received a large collection of native implements and articles of magic presented by C. C. Roberts of Malden, Mass., an oil operator who has built up an extensive business in this little known country.

The section of Africa, where native culture has reached its highest levels, hitherto has been unrepresented in American collections. The most conspicuous objects are the frightsome wooden masks used by the native magicians. These are elaborately carved heads of animals and grotesque human faces employed in the rain-making and fertility rites. All show a highly developed artistic ability. They are used in the weird metamorphosis ceremonies in which men are supposed to change themselves into totem animals.

The collection also contains many examples of the famous Benin brass work. The Hauser negro tribe, it was explained, apparently progressed directly from copper to iron without going through the bronze era which has been common to other civilizations.

Their extremely artistic iron statuary has been one of the wonders of the anthropological world. The use of brass was introduced by the Portuguese during the early explorations of the West African coast.

Among the objects is a model of a safari in brass, with the king being carried through a jungle in a hammock carried by his subjects and with a retinue of attendants. Each little figure is modeled to life in brass. There are also brass models of hunting scenes. Instead of preserving records of notable events in drawing or painting, as did the primitive European, the Nigerian system is to model it in brass.

This collection, it was pointed out, is of special interest since a great majority of the natives brought out of Africa in slave trade days came from this part of the country, although they may have been brought originally from somewhere else by the negro slave traders.

That the artistic ability of the people has declined little since ancient times is shown by the apotheosis of the tin can in two samples collected by Mr. Roberts. Cigarette tins, lined neatly with leather and fur, become objects of considerable value with little likeness to their original state.

Among the objects of cultural interest are pottery stoves with grate, firepan and oven formed out of the same lump of clay.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly and Ernestine consents to marry Will.

CHAPTER II—Continued

"They'll think I've persuaded you. They'll think I want the money, that I'm seeking for myself," he protested. "If I thought you could live on what I make—but you don't know anything about money. You don't know how hard it is for two people—living on twenty-five dollars a week. I don't know what to do, but I want to do what's right."

He looked most forlorn sitting there, thinking, pondering, trying to contemplate a future without her, trying to reconcile his own pride and self-esteem with the position her family put him into.

"I should never have kissed you," he exclaimed. "I should never have loved you."

"Will," said Ernestine tenderly, "you couldn't help that."

For now his sad confusion had caught her in the grip of her first passion. Now she lived in terrible fulfillment the promise her throbbing heart had made weeks ago, when she had talked to Lillian about marriage. Her heart leaped in her like a thing threatened with mortal danger. She flung herself upon him precipitously, her arms strained round his neck. He caught her and held her close. All his being flared up in answer to her own emotion, and his lips sprang to hers in a kiss that was as new to them as though they had never touched each other before. It was a promise.

"Take me today, Will," she cried, and tears streamed down her face. "Now, quickly, before anybody can say a word to us, before they can be reasonable and reassuring and competent about us. Take me and hold me, now, quickly and secretly. I promise you I'll live on what you earn. I promise I'll take my chance with you—completely. I'll never let them have reason to say that you wanted anything but me. Whatever you are is all I'll have, Will. I promise."

She was crying wildly. He was shaking, as she was, but he laughed a little, and wiped her cheeks with his own clean handkerchief. "The lady promises, Judge," he said, and kissed her and laughed at her and teased her. "The lady promises never to sue me for more than a million a year alimony. The lady promises—"

He picked her up and set her on her feet. "Come on, then—let's do it now," he cried, and seized her wrist and ran, pulling her along.

It was almost evening when Will and Ernestine came to the Briceland house. In the downstairs drawing room the lamps glowed softly. She had telephoned mamma that she was in town for lunch and would come out with Will at five. Beyond Lillian, Ernestine could see Loring's square shoulders.

They ran up the steps, hand in hand, and at the door Will gave her a reassuring hug and kissed her cheek.

"Let me do the talking," he whispered, and they went into the hall and ran into the drawing and living room. Ernestine was aware at once that the swift kiss Will had imprinted on her cheek had been seen, for papa was flustered and hostile, and mamma looked at her in pale reproach.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "do you remember Will Todd?" Mamma gave Will her hand, and he moved awkwardly forward, looking shabby and ill at ease beside the magnificence and self-possession of papa and Loring.

"We've just been talking about you," mamma said to Will. "I didn't know until yesterday that you were such friends with my little girl. I'm sorry you haven't been here sooner."

Will murmured something, and Ernestine introduced him to her grandmother, who looked at him severely and gave a slight snort of recognition, and then Lillian came and offered him her hand and said she remembered him. The two men straddling the hearth acknowledged the introduction with silent handshakes. Mamma asked Will to sit down and rang for tea. Ernestine, full of guilt, sat down close beside him and turned to speak to mamma.

The conversation moved haltingly as they waited for tea. Papa, somewhat maliciously, asked Will about his father.

"He's well," Will answered in a calm natural voice. "But my mother has been almost an invalid for a year now. We feel very anxious about her."

"We are sorry to learn that," said mamma, and then went on quickly: "What have you two children been doing all day?"

There was a dramatic pause, but Ernestine took it up quickly. "Mamma, you forget that I am twenty now."

They laughed politely. The tea-wagon came, mamma poured tea for them all, and they talked of things about which Will knew nothing. Ernestine could see how they were making him feel like an outsider. Sitting in the deep chair, his long legs drawn up before him, Will was not so disturbing. Her heart was full of tender loyalty.

"You have changed a great deal," mamma said to Will. "You used to be a shy little boy."

"I don't feel very shy today," he told her, and smiled at Ernestine.

His bright black eyes, like shiny bits of anthracite, under his white, domelike forehead, were beautiful, but Ernestine knew that the others could see nothing but his queer clothes.

"Tell them, Will," she said at last, putting down her cup and taking his from him.

They all stopped, and turned startled faces toward the two. Will squared himself and turned first to mamma.

"We've gone and done it," he said, smiling.

"Gone and done what?" asked mamma sharply, and her pallor startled them all.

"We've gone and got married—to-day."

"Married! Who?"

It was papa's voice, harsh, protesting.

"Ernestine and I," answered Will steadily, and Loring said, "Married!" in a hoarse, incredulous tone, and Ernestine, looking up, saw his face, as pale as mamma's, and as startled, with deep chagrin and consternation written on it. But none of the others noticed him.

"You see," said Ernestine gently, "we were engaged anyhow, and when mamma invited Will to tea, today, I thought we might just as well make it an announcement party."

"You thought!"

"Certainly, papa. It was my idea."

"Not at all," said Will quickly.

"But anyhow, we are married. I know this strikes you suddenly, sir, but we just decided in haste, and as we want nothing but your blessing—"

"Be still!" exclaimed papa passionately, and he turned to Ernestine.

"Where were you married? By whom?"

Will took the conversation into his own hands with deliberation.

"We went to town about noon, went to the courthouse and got our license, then to a jeweler and bought the ring and waited while it was engraved."

Ernestine held up her slim hand, and showed the astonishing gold band on her third finger. "Then we took a taxi out to my mother's house, got her and went to the church I was reared in, in Avondale, and were married."

"But why this mad haste?" spluttered papa, who was almost incoherent. "Ernestine," turning to his daughter, in renewed determination to have nothing to do with Will, "what's got into you? I am sure you have been under some dreadful influence. I can't understand how you could act this way. I can't believe it."

He was furious, he was undone, but he still had a note of command in his voice. Ernestine felt his strength with terror.

"Papa—" she began, but Will cut in resolutely, so that in spite of papa's determination to talk to Ernestine the situation narrowed itself constantly to papa and Will.

"Ernestine was afraid, sir, that you might try to separate us. My own instinct in the matter was that we should talk this over with you, but I see, now, that she was right. You must understand, sir, that we are married, and your objections are futile."

"Ernestine had reason to fear me," papa said in a voice none of them had ever heard from him before. Ernestine felt herself shiver under it. Papa had no intention of considering himself helpless.

"She had reason to fear me, and so had you. I suspect your fear was more important than her own. Even if she were a fool, you might have been decent about it. I have no intention whatever of letting her go away from here with you. You'll learn, sir, that there are such things as annulments, even as divorce. Just because she has made one foolish mistake, is no reason why I should let her ruin her whole life. You have behaved very badly, but your behavior ends here and now. Ernestine stays here. You may go, and I will deal with you outside the house."

Ernestine felt that everything was lost, but Will only laughed. If papa were new and strange, so was her young husband, for he seemed to glow, to fill out, to be bigger and stronger.

"Don't be silly," he said. "Ernestine is of age. She married me of her own free will, and if you tried any such stunts, she would say so. Our marriage is entirely legal. It stands before everything else. She is now my wife, and my home is her home, and you can't detain her."

"We'll see," said papa grimly, and then mamma broke in.

"You shouldn't have, Ernestine. You shouldn't have run off and got married, without telling mamma. It's the biggest, the most important thing in your life—and to take such a step without your people knowing it! I can't bear to think you'd go off and be married—and not tell me."

"I'm sorry, mamma," said Ernestine in distress, and papa took things up again. He had made a decision.

"Go to your room, Ernestine," he said in a voice of stern command, "and stay there until I can talk to you. If you ladies will excuse us, we will settle this among ourselves. Do you hear me?" he said sharply, turning his furious eyes upon Ernestine. She faltered, half turned to go in automatic command, for papa had always ruled his home, without much effort, but Will put his hand on her arm.

"Stay here, Ernestine," he said in a low voice, and she paused, undecided, while mamma and Lillian seemed to be grouped together on the other side of the room.

"I can understand your distress, sir," said Will. "I can see just how you feel about this, not knowing me at all and not understanding my motives. But you exceed your authority. If you should detain Ernestine here by force, I have only to go out and get the nearest policeman and come back for her. You can't do it."

There was a moment of incredulous silence, and papa half turned to Loring, in appeal, and Loring said in a low tone, "He's right."

Will followed this advantage swiftly. "After all, what have you against me, except you think I may want Ernestine's money? We have decided to do without that. I'm not a stranger to you. You've known my father for thirty years. You know my people, that they are honorable and decent. There's no reason at all why I shouldn't make any marriage I choose, even with Ernestine. I'm working. I can take care of her."

Papa raised his clenched fist above his head, as though he would strike Will, and Ernestine made a little moan and mamma screamed. But Loring put his hand on papa's arm, and drew him back. And in that moment Lillian went to Ernestine and put her arms around her and kissed her.

"Oh, Lill!" Ernestine cried, and burst into terrible tears. "Papa, papa," she cried, turning from Lillian to her father, and holding out her hands, "don't quarrel with us. I can't bear it. I love Will. I wanted to marry him. Let us go ahead with our own married life, now, but don't quarrel with us."

"It's you who have broken faith," said papa. "Not your mother and I. You've put this stranger before us. You can't have both."

Ernestine was appalled.

"You mean that I can't come home?" Papa attained a grim smile.

"That's what I mean," he said, but now mamma broke in hysterically.

"I won't be separated from Ernestine. I won't permit it," she cried, and went to her younger daughter and took her in her arms. "Darling, you can come home as long as mamma lives here. I will see you every day. It's dreadful. It's hard on all of us, and it will be terrible for you. But mamma will not let her little girl go away like this."

"Elaine!" said papa, but she turned to him, as full of anger as he.

"The child is married," she exclaimed. "She may have made a mistake, but if she has, it is only a reason for standing by her. This is my home, as well as yours. I won't be instructed to let my little girl go out friendless. You may do what you like with me, and send me away, too, if you can, but I am going to see Ernestine. I am going to have her here."

Of course papa was helpless, and he said so with a shrug.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "I am willing to take the responsibility for my marriage. After all, it's I who married Will."

"Not you alone," said mamma vigorously. "The whole family has married him, and we may as well realize it. For nobody marries just one of the Bricelands. We are all going to stand together, always. Papa, we will have to make the best of it. The marriage will have to stand."

Papa would not look at her, nor answer.

"We'll have to go," said Will.

"Goodby, darling," said mamma, and embraced her. "I'll see you soon."

"Goodby, papa," Ernestine altered, but papa held his stubborn attitude.

"I'll have to go upstairs and get some things," murmured Ernestine, as they went into the hall.

Lillian went upstairs with Ernestine. Mamma came out and put her hand on Will's arm.

"Be good to her," she implored.

"If you can't take care of her, if she's not happy, let her come back."

"I will, Mrs. Briceland," he said soberly. "I appreciate what you have done."

Mamma wept afresh.

"It is hard for her father. He worships her. You must understand him. It is a terrible blow to him. He will come around."

The girls came down the stairs, and after a moment Ernestine and Will were out in the dark street again, with her small dressing case in Will's hands. The family stood about in the living room in stricken silence.

The silence lasted for some moments, then Mrs. Briceland turned to her husband.

"You should never have let her go off like that," she said reproachfully. "What will she do?"

"I had no intention of letting her go, if you hadn't interfered," he exclaimed. "I was only threatening her with the loss of the family, in order to get her to stay here—to gain a little time."

"She wouldn't have done it," said Lillian. "She's too crazy about him. It probably was her idea that they get married first. She meant it. You couldn't have kept her."

"How much do you suppose he earns, on the Sun?" asked mamma, and Loring answered:

"Probably anywhere from twenty-five to forty dollars a week."

At that papa threw up his hands in a gesture of despair and turned to leave the room, but he looked back at his wife darkly.

"If you had stood by me," he said to her, "if we had all stood together, we could have held her here. You went back on me, both you and Lillian. It gave them courage. Now, you can think of her, God knows where, with that upstart." He went into the hall, and mamma followed him, her bright persistent voice coming down the stair:

"You shouldn't have let them go. We might have kept them both here, and taken care of them. Lewis, you'll have to make up your mind to give in, and get him a better job—"

The voices trailed off, and an upstairs door closed upon them. Grandmother went stiffly out of the room. Lillian began to move about the room, satisfying her need for order by pushing the chairs in place, straightening the pillows and moving the things on the table. Loring stood by the fire, staring into it, his face flushed, one hand opening and closing nervously. Lillian came and spoke to him in a voice which was already like mamma's.

"I'm sorry you got into this," she said. "It's terrible. How can Ernestine act that way? She's the most haphazard thing. But this is the worst yet. I feel as though she had ruined herself. But you aren't going to be angry with her, are you, Loring?"

"No," he said. "No, I won't be angry with her. Your mother's right. The family must stand by her."

Lillian shuddered a little.

"It seems dreadful to me," she said. "Ernestine out somewhere in Chicago, with that man. I don't see how she can be crazy about him in the first place, and how she could have married him in the second."

Loring reached out his hand and ran his fingers down the crepe sleeve of her dress, caught her fingers and held them in his own.

"Would you do that much," he asked wistfully, "if you cared for a man? Would you defy everything for him?"

"I don't know," said Lillian honestly. "I don't know. I want things nice. I want some plan and arrangement to my life."

"But if the man you cared for was not—eligible," he persisted, "would you marry him anyhow?"

"It's not a fair question," protested Lillian, and then added softly: "I don't know what I would do. Because I've cared for only one man, and he has been eligible in every way. So I can't imagine how I would act under other circumstances."

There was a little silence, and then she said, in a stifled voice:

"Is it I, Lillian?" She looked up at him, and his face was full of suffering. Her own was compassionate.

"Did you care for Ernestine, Loring?" she asked him, but he shook himself quickly.

"No, no!" he exclaimed. "Not—that way. I'm fond of her. She's been like a little sister to me, always. But it's you I care for. It's you I want for my wife. Is it possible that you care for me, Lillian?"

"I always have," she answered simply, and he stared down at her, and again his voice was queer and strained. "I'm like Ernestine," he said, "what I want is love."

She put up her fair sweet face, and he kissed her placid lips.

"I love you, Loring," she assured him, and he took her roughly into his arms.

"You hurt me," she complained in a moment, and he released her and stood holding her hand gently.

"I want love," he said again with poignancy, and Lillian assured him in her quick bright voice that she loved him.

CHAPTER III

Strange Country

It seemed a natural thing to Ernestine, however it seemed to the others, to wake on her marriage morning, in the little back bedroom of the tiny house where the Todds had lived all their married life. She was instantly wide awake and oriented. Perhaps it was the close tangle of Will's arms about her that made everything normal. Perhaps the delicious consciousness of new happiness had never entirely been lost in sleep. It did not matter at all about the family now.

Thinking of everything, Ernestine felt in her heart something new about Will. Added to her romantic love for him was something really more wonderful: a sound thing—respect. He had behaved admirably.

She was filled with a transport of tenderness, a strong conviction of having done well. Now, at last, life had begun for her. The chrysalis of girlhood was broken, and she was emerged into womanhood. She had become real. Always now, Will would be here beside her at the beginning of every day. Gravely she considered this, and sent up a wordless prayer that she might be a good wife.

Some one was moving about in the kitchen, and she heard the rattle of coals in the kitchen grate. How close and small the house was. Each sound came through the thin walls distinctly. Ernestine realized that she would have to close the window, and she essayed to rise. But at the first movement Will's arms tightened about her, though he did not wake. Ernestine extricated herself and got up with a swift strong movement.

"You have to work today, Will," she said in such a wifely tone that he laughed and looked up at her adoringly.

"I suppose now I've got somebody even worse than my mother about making me get up," he said, and then added, "Hey, wait, I'll get you some warm water," for Ernestine was washing her face in the basin that stood on a small washstand near the door.

But the water out of the pitcher, which had stood all night with the cold wind blowing through the open window upon it, was cold and invigorating.

Will shaved in the kitchen, and Ernestine could hear his voice, in an affectionate murmur, talking to some one. Before the small wall mirror, she applied her make-up, looking at herself sharply. She arranged her sleek soft hair, proud of its thickness and texture. What was there in her face? Was she different this morning? She must not be different. She powdered again, and rubbed some of the scarlet oil of her lips, which were as red as cherries under the lip salve.

She made the bed neatly and set the room in order, packed up her belongings. The smell of coffee and the sound of the percolator made her feel faint. She had eaten nothing the evening before.

In the kitchen, Will's face turned on her, as bright as a triangular mirror with the sun on it. His mother was sitting by the kitchen table, with a warm shawl over her heavy dress. She could be up at times, and this morning she had made the effort. Ernestine went to Will's mother, and kissed her.

Gifted Chinese Artist

Scorns Use of Brushes

We sometimes see an artist with long, tapering fingers, and we are reminded of the expression "artistic hands." In China there is a man who not only possesses artistic fingers but who actually uses those fingers in the paintings he does.

Kwei Teng, a Chinese artist, scorns brushes and ordinary drawing tools—his hands provide him with everything he needs. With his nails he draws his pictures, and then with his sensitive fingertips he puts on the required colors!

The work of this strange artist was recently exhibited in New York, and met with great admiration—tempered with a goodly amount of curiosity! People found it difficult to believe that good results could be obtained by such primitive methods, but they came away from the exhibition entirely converted.—Montreal Family Herald.

Pictures for Public

While the French government is endeavoring to arouse interest in the natural features and beauties of the country by printing views of the more interesting sights, the tramway companies are trying to improve the mental equipment of their passengers by printing the portraits of celebrated characters of French history upon the tickets which are issued to riders. The faces of Turgot, Lamartine, Michelet and Victor Hugo are among those appearing upon the tickets, and it is supposed that the passenger will be spurred on to improving his mental equipment by contemplating the portraits.

Mirrors on Golf Club

Sir James Henderson, British scientist, faced with the usual troubles of the golfer, invented a club whose head contained two mirrors to aid him in perfecting his form, and the device has proved so successful that it is being placed on the market in England, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. When the head is placed against the ball the mirrors reflect the light from a lamp set beside the ball. Unless the club is in correct position the light is not reflected from both mirrors.

To Disperse Mobs With Water

Berlin's police department has been equipped with a number of anti-riot automobiles to dispel unruly crowds. The car is an armored water tank on wheels capable of shooting water at tremendous pressure. Each car has a capacity of 56 gallons and the turret, resembling that on war tanks, is so arranged that water can be thrown in any direction.

Defy Passing Years by Right Way of Thinking

But why look old? That, says some one, is all nonsense. But is it? They do say we are as old as we feel. And that's about the truth of it. Of course, we change as time passes. That must be admitted. Yet the change need not be at so rapid a rate.

Even then, we ought to show the change very much less than we do. You know the gentle shock we sometimes get when we run across a person we haven't seen for years. There is a definite, a marked change in him. It depresses us; because our thoughts immediately turn to ourselves.

No discussion of the faculty of the Tawas City Public Schools would be complete without a mention of the janitor of the system, Henry Fahselt. The fact that the work of a capable janitor is becoming to be looked upon as important in Michigan is shown by the fact that at least one of the teacher-training institutions ran a session for janitors during the summer of 1930. Mr. Fahselt has been with us for eleven years in his present position.

IT'S WISE TO CHOOSE A SIX

Announcing a new production record

2,000,000 Chevrolet Sixes now on the road

Since January, 1929, Chevrolet has produced and sold over 2,000,000 six-cylinder automobiles—nearly five times as many as any other manufacturer has ever built in an equal length of time.

These 2,000,000 buyers have chosen Chevrolet because it offers many desirable qualities not obtainable in any other car so low in price—

—the smoothness, silence and flexibility of a modern six-cylinder valve-in-head engine—the greater comfort and roadability of a modern, full-length chassis—and the style, safety and distinction of bodies by Fisher.

Yet, despite these fine car advantages, the Chevrolet Six is unusually economical. Its gas, oil, tire and upkeep economy is unsurpassed. And any model can be bought for a small down payment and easy monthly terms! Come in today. Learn for yourself why two million buyers have agreed—"it's wise to choose a Six."
