

IOSCO COUNTY FAIR OPENS NEXT WEDNESDAY

TAWAS CITY

TUESDAY IS ENTRY DAY FOR EXHIBITS

The Fifty-Sixth Annual Isosco County Fair will open next Wednesday. Agricultural, stock, horticulture, poultry, household economics and school exhibits, horse races, fireworks, band, auto show, midway, vaudeville acts—something interesting every minute. A pleasant time to meet old friends and neighbors.

Everything that can be done by the officers of the Isosco County Agricultural Society to insure a successful fair is being done, and if the exhibitors will do their part and the public attend, we can have a fair worthy of Isosco county.

The buildings, grounds and equipment are being cleaned, repaired and made ready for the exhibits to be placed Tuesday, September 9th. Entries close that night at 6:00 o'clock.

Our program of entertainment starts Wednesday, September 10th, and that day is school day. Every school child will receive a ticket free, good for that day, at the school they attend. Miss Worden has these tickets for distribution to the schools. If for some reason the child can not use the ticket that day, we will honor it at the gate one of the other days if the children are accompanied by the parent or parents holding a membership ticket.

This year our membership tickets entitle holder to three admissions, admit, car, and entitles holder to exhibit and membership for one year, but no re-admission check. We have secured this year a new ride outfit, owned by Ernest L. Wade of Detroit, who comes to our fair well recommended.

Our free acts include the Harriet Trio, comedy riding, very clever and funny, and a crazy car that does remarkable stunts; Rexal Broder in whirlwind skating acts; Joe and Lizzy clown act.

A racing program equal to last year is on for Thursday, the 11th, and Friday, the 12th.

We have contracted for a Western Electric amplifier and announcer, so that every one will be able to hear distinctly both announcements and the music.

Each night we have a wonderful display of fireworks by the Hudson Fireworks Co., fired by experts. The best you will see in this section of the state.

We also have an airplane coming. The flyer states he will land and take off from the center of race track, carrying passengers.

LEANDER GARDNER

Leander Gardner, age 85 years, 11 months and 10 days, departed this life August 26th.

The deceased was born September 6, 1844, at Nantucket, Massachusetts. He came to Michigan in 1862. In 1891 he was united in marriage to Cordelia R. Bishop and to this union four children were born—Francis L., Charles, Albert and Geneva H., all of Detroit. He is also survived by six grandchildren.

The greater part of his life was spent at Hale, Michigan, where he was engaged in lumbering and farming until eight years ago, when he moved to Detroit, where he remained until his death.

Funeral services were held Friday, August 29th, at the residence, 4709 Spring Ave., Detroit, Rev. Gill of St. Matthias church officiating. The remains were laid to rest in Forest Lawn cemetery.

COLMAN SURPASSES SELF

IN NEW TALKER ROMANCE

When Ronald Colman's first all talking picture, "Bulldog Drummond," was shown, it did not seem humanly possible to improve on this great production, and yet in his newest picture, "Condemned!", which has its local premiere at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Sunday and Monday, Ronald Colman has reached still new heights of artistry and dramatic savoir faire.

Once again Colman is seen as the romantic, yet loquacious lover, among settings the like of which never have been seen on any screen before. In "Condemned!" he is seen as a French pickpocket who is deported to the notorious French penal colony, Devil's Island. Here are shown the tortures inflicted on the inmates of the drama of prison life and the seething unrest ever present among the convicts.

It is in these settings that Ronald Colman, as the fearless renegade, becomes infatuated with the warden's wife, played by Miss Ann Harding.

In this thrilling all-talking romance which was adapted from Blair Niles' biography of an unknown convict, Mr. Colman is supported by Miss Ann Harding, of stage fame, Mr. Dudley Digges, of the Theatre Guild, and Mr. Louis Wolheim, of both stage and screen fame. See it sure—Sunday and Monday, September 7 and 8.

NEW EDIFICE MAKES WONDERFUL IMPROVEMENT TO TAWAS CITY

The people of Tawas City can well feel proud of the improvement given their city by the erection of the new depot.

In order to facilitate and give quicker service and eliminate the extra stop that trains had to make, H. K. McHarg, Jr., with the cooperation of Tawas City and East Tawas, developed the idea which now exists in the present site of the depot.

The new depot is a two story structure. The upper story is used for offices, centralizing the main clerical work in the one building. The construction is of tile, cement and steel, which makes it as near fire proof as is possible to build. The location is one block off Lake street drive midway between the Tawas.

Owing to the depression of business conditions at the present time, Mr. McHarg can well be complimented for the substantial and handsome design of the depot and he should have the hearty co-operation of the business elements of the Tawas.

ALPENA DAILY NEWS

SPEAKS WELL OF LOCAL SENATORIAL CANDIDATE

The following is an article taken from the Alpena Daily News, dated Saturday, August 23, which speaks very well for our local candidate for state senator:

"Voters of the 28th senatorial district have an opportunity to do well for themselves by sending Herman N. Butler of East Tawas to Lansing as their representative in the Michigan Senate.

"Through a long period of activity Mr. Butler has definitely established himself as a community-minded man, for his home town of East Tawas and for the wider community of NorthEastern Michigan. "Not an office-holder at present, Mr. Butler is thoroughly familiar with men and affairs at the state capital and so he is in a position to render exceptional service to his own district and to share well in the work of advancing the interests of all NorthEastern Michigan.

TO THE VOTERS OF IOSCO COUNTY

Arnold H. Anschuetz, candidate for the office of Register of Deeds of Isosco county on the Republican ticket, was born in Tawas township and has continuously resided here. He received his education in the parochial and Isosco county schools. He is a taxpayer of Isosco county and believes himself qualified for the office. Any support that he receives will be appreciated.

ENROLLMENT INCREASED IN HIGH SCHOOL

The public school resumed Tuesday morning after a vacation of eleven weeks. The following teachers are in charge of the respective departments: Superintendent—Arthur E. Giddings; principal of high school—John R. Forsten; commercial—Mrs. Lurissa Forsten; English—Latin—M. Louise Crosby; Music—Art—Marjorie Sage; Grammar—Robert Bollinger; upper intermediate—Opal Coon; intermediate—Louise Bird; primary—Mrs. Ruth Quick; Ward—Mrs. Emma Anschuetz.

The following is the present enrollment in the respective rooms: Ward—19; Primary—22; Intermediate—29; Upper Intermediate—38; Grammar—48; High School—72. Congested conditions exist at the present time in the grammar room as there are seats for but thirty-six and forty-eight are in attendance. The board of education has taken action in regard to this situation by ordering more seats, and it is expected that this very unsatisfactory condition will be improved soon.

The high school enrollment is distributed among the four grades as follows: Ninth, 25; tenth, 22; eleventh, 13; twelfth, 12. This is an increase of 16 over the high school enrollment at the same time last year.

Music is now given three times each week in the grades and art is given twice. A credit course in art is now offered each day to the Juniors and Seniors of the high school, and judging from the number enrolled it must be a popular class. The high school also has a general chorus twice a week, and an opportunity will soon be given to some of the boys and girls for Glee Club work. If sufficient interest is shown, a high school orchestra will be organized during the present semester.

There seems to be considerable interest in baseball, as about thirty boys appear for practice. As most of them are new material, the result of winning or losing is yet to be determined. A few games will be played this fall with the surrounding schools.

HOME ECONOMICS WORK WILL BE RESUMED SOON

Isosco county women enrolled in home economics extension will resume their study of nutrition under the direction of Miss Muriel Dundas, nutrition specialist, at an early date.

Preparatory to the beginning of the second project, organization meetings will be held at Whittemore high school on September 11 at 1:30 p. m. and at the Court House, Tawas City, September 12 at 1:30 p. m. At this time an explanation of the content of the project and its aims will be discussed. Methods of teaching, plans for organization, and records will also be included in the work given by Miss Dundas.

Demonstrations in food preparation will be given as in the first year course in response to the many

CLOUT WAY TO ONE-SIDED VICTORY; 22-1

Tawas City and Alabaster mixed bats Labor Day at the local athletic field, and after the dust of conflict settled, Tawas City had administered a somewhat decisive drubbing to its opponents. The score after the final out was made stood 22 to 1, in favor of the locals.

Alabaster's lone tally came in the eighth, when three local errors forced an Alabaster runner to score. The Tawas City boys had different ideas of combat. They let loose with a terrific onslaught on the three Alabaster pitchers used during the course of the game, and hammered them unmercifully for a total of twenty-one safeties, including a triple and six doubles. At the end of the third inning they had piled up a lead of 13 runs, added another in the fifth, and four more in the sixth. The finishing touches to the final score were made in the eighth when four scores again were tallied, bringing the locals' total to 22.

The winning pitcher of this lopsided victory was none other than "Reg" Boulder. Boulder was master of ceremonies throughout. It was not until the eighth inning that an Alabaster runner reached second base. He held Alabaster to a single safe blow and struck out eighteen batters.

Next Sunday the locals will clash with East Tawas at the East Tawas athletic field. It will be remembered that these teams battled for 15 innings previously this year. Fans are assured of an exciting contest.

When he recovered consciousness he was in a receiving hospital with a broken collar bone and some bruises. His daughter, Miss Edith Budge, went to Detroit to bring him home, but owing to his collar bone needing resetting and further care, he is still in Detroit at his brother's home.

YOUTHFUL LOVERS IN SECOND OUTDOOR THRILLER

Five hundred dollars is what the Llano Kid was worth to the people of Texas back in 1885, dead or alive. He's alive at the Family Theatre and he's worth a whole lot more than that in entertainment. There are more thrills with Gary Cooper, as the Llano Kid, in "The Texan," than there were even in the great Western outdoor spectacle romance, "The Virginian." And that's saying a lot.

"The Texan," which opens at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, next Thursday and Friday, September 11 and 12, is Paramount's companion picture to "The Virginian." Again Cooper brings to life the spirit of the plainsmen pioneers, this time in a tremendous action drama which takes him from the rolling plains of Texas to the impressive pampas of South America.

Fay Wray is the girl who captures Cooper's heart in this strange love story. Cooper, a Texas badman, enters into a pact to pose as the long lost son of a wealthy Southern American woman. At the sumptuous hacienda, he wins the heart of the woman's lovely niece, and is accepted as the son of the house. His new interests awaken his better instincts, and he fights to escape his nefarious bargain.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Fate of Marshal Ney

ACCORDING to the undoubted records of his time and the pages of every history which contents itself with adhering to the strict letter of proven evidence, Michel Ney, marshal of France, duke of Echingen, prince of Moskva and bosom friend of Napoleon Bonaparte, met his death at the hands of a firing squad on December 5, 1815—his crime being loyalty to his old commander when Bonaparte had escaped from Elba.

But this is one of the many instances when a strict interpretation of history is at variance with the experience of individuals, when a reading of the records in the case must be tempered by the experience of individuals. Marshal Ney is reported to have been executed on December 5, 1815, but

On the day following the funeral of the marshal of France, Philip Petrie, a former soldier in the marshal's army who had turned sailor at the close of the Napoleonic wars, was scouring the decks of a vessel which was to clear Bordeaux that night for Charleston, S. C. While at his work Petrie glanced up as a hooded figure, wrapped in a long cloak, came aboard from a small boat. In an instant the former soldier was on his feet, his heels clicked together and his hand snapped up in the precise salute of the Napoleonic veterans. Standing thus he waited for the cloaked figure to pass him. But the passenger halted and, in a muffled voice, inquired: "Who do you think I am?"

"You are my old commander, sir, Marshal Ney," replied the other, "I would know you in ten thousand."

"Marshal Ney," stated the voice which proceeded from the hood, "was executed for treason in Paris, two days since."

But, during the remainder of the voyage, as Petrie afterwards declared to a number of reputable witnesses, the cloaked passenger did not appear on deck—and, what was still more remarkable, Petrie did not know, at the time of his recognition of his old commander, that Marshal Ney had been executed!

The next chapter in the case of report vs. history was written at Charleston, S. C., some weeks later when a trio of French immigrants chanced upon a familiar figure in one of the side-streets of the American city and exclaimed: "It is Marechal Ney himself," whereupon the figure vanished into a nearby house.

About this time a mysterious person who gave the name of Peter Ney appeared in Cheraw, S. C., and obtained a position as French teacher in a school at Brownsville, nearby. One morning he was found in bed, his throat raw and bleeding from wounds which he himself had inflicted and, clutched in his left hand was a newspaper giving an account of the recent death at St. Helena of Napoleon Bonaparte, former emperor of the French. On the hearth was a pile of burned documents, while several jeweled decorations adorned the table—relics which were carefully put away until Peter Ney had fully recovered from his attempt at suicide.

It was not until 1846 that the schoolmaster died and, on his deathbed, was pressed by his physician to clear up the mystery which surrounded his prior life. With an effort "Peter Ney" sat bolt upright, held his head erect and declared, in a voice which held more than an echo of its former clearness: "I am Michel Ney, marshal of France," and fell back dead.

After the funeral, Mrs. Mary C. Dalton, of Iredell county, North Carolina, gave out what she said was the true account of Marshal Ney's escape, as told to her by "Peter Ney" under seal of secrecy. When sentence of death had been passed upon him, according to this account, the marshal had been notified that the firing squad had been made up of his own men who were to fire over his head. At the report of their guns he was to press his hand to his heart, releasing a quantity of ox blood contained in a bladder, and to fall forward as if dead. At the hospital he would be replaced by the corpse of a common soldier, executed that morning and dressed in the uniform of the marshal, while his escape to America would be facilitated by way of Bordeaux.

So it would therefore appear that all the individual evidence in the mystery of Marshal Ney points in one direction, toward the fact that history is mistaken when it declares that Michel Ney was executed on December 5, 1815, and that he really died in South Carolina, thirty-one years later.

But, even granting this, there is still one more question which remains unanswered: Why, if Peter Ney and Michel Ney were one and the same, did not the former marshal of France return to his native country when full and complete amnesty was granted to all political exiles? Reticence

Plane Has Paddle-Wheel Propeller

Here is the "X-606," experimental "paddle plane," which will test Schroder's invention of a paddle-wheel propeller for aircraft. Ernest Schroder, San Francisco inventor, has been perfecting his flight theory for 15 years. He claims paddle propulsion will enable one man to take off and land without assistance of a ground crew, as the paddle blades pitch can be regulated by the pilot to operate as a brake.

HERE'S ONE REASON FOR STALLED MOTOR

Fuel Line Arrangements Blamed by Experts.

Washington.—Analyses of investigations into fatal crashes and forced landings due to motor failure during the initial climb of planes lay the blame for such failures at the door of fuel line arrangements, according to a survey by Prof. Alexander Klein of the Guggenheim school and Maj. G. L. Lloyd, vice president of Barber & Baldwin, Inc., aviation insurance underwriters.

When planes are stopped by shutting off the fuel at the base of the storage tanks the lines become empty, Major Lloyd said. The first turn of the valve preparatory to starting again fills the bowl of the carburetor by sending a slow trickle down the side of the line, which does not force all the air out of the line. It forms a seal on the lower end, precluding the escape of the remaining air. There is sufficient fuel for starting and warming the motor.

Pilot Is Helpless. As soon as the plane is wheeled to the runway and taken off at full throttle, however, the fuel present in the carburetors is used up before the necessity for full throttle operation is passed. The air-bound fuel lines refuse to feed gasoline fast enough to keep the mixture to capacity, and the manifolds fill with more air through the carburetor air intakes.

Motors which stall from this cause are hard to start again, as the air-binding soon extends through the valve chambers, manifolds and cylinder heads, so that even though the pilot realizes his position with the first sign of faltering he becomes "helpless" to remedy the situation. The limit of his resourcefulness is usually taxed in the imperative endeavor to land the plane safely, and he has little time to bother with the engine.

Causes Many Accidents. The investigators said in a report submitted to the industry and to the Department of Commerce: "We are satisfied that this condition can and does exist, and probably accounts for many unexplained accidents with competent pilots at the controls. In one of our tests it took more than five minutes before a full flow of gasoline was achieved following an air lock in the lines—the air bubbling out through the carburetor instead of exhausting itself through the vents in the tank. In another test the air in the line restricted the flow 50 per cent for a period of four minutes. In some tests no air locks occurred; in others the flow was full for several minutes, when it would become intermittent as sections of air were forced through the lines. When all the air was exhausted the flow again became normal."

License Suspended for Flying Over Bermuda

New York.—Roger Q. Williams was a trifle stunned when he received notice from Gilbert C. Budwig, director of air regulation in the Department of Commerce, that his pilot's license had been suspended for 90 days because in his recent nonstop round-trip flight he flew over Bermuda, British territory.

"On our flight from Maine to Rome, Yancey and I flew over a lot of countries just the same as other transatlantic airmen have done, and nothing was said about it," Williams said. "When we took the Pathfinder to Cherbourg to put her on a boat, we received an amusing telegram from the French air ministry, saying that inasmuch as we already had flown over 75 per cent of the military fortifications of France, permission was thereby granted to fly over them all."

New U. S. Ruling Affects Future Glider Licenses

Washington.—Giders manufactured after October 1, 1930, will not be eligible for license from the Department of Commerce unless they are built by manufacturers operating with approved type certificates, or, if not so manufactured, unless they meet the requirements for such a certificate, according to Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce for aeronautics.

Any glider built prior to October 1 will be eligible, regardless of design or manufacture, and needs only to pass an inspection satisfactory to inspectors of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce.

AIR WEATHER MAPS WILL BE IMPROVED

High Powered Rockets May Be Used to Get Data.

Washington.—Mapping weather of the air as successfully as weather of the earth's surface now is charted is seen by Dr. Charles G. Abbot, Smithsonian secretary, as a possible achievement of high power rockets.

Commenting on experiments of Prof. Robert H. Goddard of Clark university, who has been granted Guggenheim support in rocket work, he stressed the value of moderate-height measurements to aviation. "Rockets at all principal airports," he said, "will be making daily measurements of temperatures, pressures, wind velocities and electrical conditions."

"At present our measurements for the aviator's chart must be made by watching drift balloons, by sending up planes, by flying kites and captive balloons, or by estimating from observations made on the ground."

"It is impossible to get quick results on the air conditions at considerable heights in these ways. With the parachute-rocket, however, we may expect that automatic instruments will bring back their records safely within a few minutes from any desired height."

Importance of the weather maps made up by the United States weather bureau for the use of commercial pilots is explained by Martin L. Dobbler, famous scientist and a member of the American Meteorological society.

"Before a trip an airplane pilot is presented a picture, so to speak, of what is going on in the atmosphere throughout the United States and Canada," he explained.

"All maps have the high and low pressure areas marked. A high barometer reading on high pressure area means that heavy cold air is coming down to the ground from aloft with attendant clear skies. The low barometer reading or low pressure area indicates lighter, rising air and cloudy skies, usually accompanied by rains or snows."

"The course usually taken by these areas of high and low barometer on the North American continent is from west to east. The prevailing westerly winds are generally encountered by pilots at 5,000 feet altitude or above. The only exception is in the fall, however, when the West Indian hurricanes disrupt the usual flow of air."

Plane of Future May Be Single Huge Wing

New York.—The great passenger-carrying airplane of the future probably will appear to the groundman's eye as a single great wing sailing through space. The prominent fuselage of today with its low-slung landing gear will have disappeared. Every feature of today's planes which protrudes and offers wind resistance will be incorporated into a single wing so far as is possible.

This is the picture of the future air express sketched by Howard Mingos, aviation authority, in the North American Review after a study of current experiments being made by the leaders in commercial aviation.

Passenger lines of the air have not proved commercially successful, says Mr. Mingos, and it is not likely that they will until each plane can carry more passengers, thus reducing the expense per passenger, and carry them at greater speed, thus increasing their advantage over the railroads.

Army Pilot Spends His Leave at the Controls

Denver.—Like the postman who spent his vacation taking long hikes in the mountains, Lieut. Stanton Smith of Kelly field spent his 15-day leave recently by flying 10,000 miles before returning to duty with the army air service.

Lieutenant Smith arrived in Denver flying a single-seater Boeing pursuit plane after covering 1,000 miles from Chanute field, Illinois, in exactly seven hours.

Around Orchard

TIP LAYERING OF BLACK RASPBERRY

Three or Four Inches of Soil Make Good Covering.

The size and quality of black raspberry plants are effected to a considerable extent by the care given when tip layering. In an experiment of Wooster, use of small tip plants in setting led to only about 25 per cent stand and loss of practically a year in comparison with an almost perfect stand and thrifty growth from tip plants with well developed root systems. Occasionally the long black raspberry canes simply bend to the ground where the tips become covered with soil largely through the effect of rains and take root. Much better plants are obtained, however by giving attention to tip layering. A narrow spade is a good tool for tipping purposes. Three or four inches of soil make a satisfactory covering. Shallow tipping may result in considerable loss from whipping, heaving, or pushing out of the soil. Too deep tipping may result in breakage of many of the tender sprouts in digging. A vertical rather than a horizontal position of the tips in the ground is much to be preferred, says J. S. Robinson of Ohio State university.

The best time for layering is when the tip portion has lengthened out in "snaky" or "rat-tail" fashion with small curled leaves. Tips put down too early are likely to push out of the ground. Tipping too late may result in several small plants from sub-laterals instead of one new plant with a well developed root system from each lateral. Plants with best root systems are obtained when only one tip is put down from each lateral. In a good black raspberry plantation more than 10,000 laterals for tipping are expected per acre. There is great tendency for laterals to branch just before rooting; resulting in a whorled type of sub-lateral development. With such a condition the plants obtained are usually smaller and do not possess the extensive root systems secured when unbranched laterals are tipped.

Use of a late summer sown cover crop, such as oats, which forms a mat, does not become too high, winter kills and does not interfere with digging in the spring, may be worthy of trial under some conditions to prevent bruising of the tips.

Propagate Gooseberries and Currants in Autumn

Gooseberries and currants may be propagated from cuttings seven or eight inches long. The cuttings may be tied in bunches and buried in the sand in a cool cellar or in soil out of doors. If a storage pit out of doors is used, it is well to turn the butts of the cuttings up. This permits them to callous and keeps the top ends cool and dormant. The cuttings may also be planted in the fall, leaving the top exposed about two inches above ground and covering the row with a mulch of straw, leaves or other litter. Both gooseberries and currants may also be propagated by layering. In this case, a branch is bent down in July or early August and covered with soil. The branch will often strike root by this time in the year. Another way to propagate these plants is by means of mound layerage. As soon as the canes take root they are separated, cut off, and transplanted to the nursery row, where they are allowed to grow for a year or more before transplanting to their permanent location.

Horticultural Hints

Many clean crops of grapes may be grown without following any set spray schedule, but the grower should be on the lookout for trouble and start control measures as soon as insect pests are found.

The use of phosphate fertilizers as top dressing around hills of plants or around fruit trees cannot be expected to give good results on heavy soils, according to the college soils man.

At a casual glance it might seem that the more fertilizer used the less an orchard would need to be pruned. This is true only when the heavier application does not result in a thickening up of the trees.

A number of our best apple growers are using shredded oil paper in crates of apples given common storage on the farm. About a half pound of the shredded paper is used, evenly distributed throughout each bushel crate.

A good way to prune peach trees after the fruit buds have been killed is to give the trees a very heavy cutting back or in some cases a deheading. Peaches are borne on year-old wood, and if the fruit buds on the 1929 wood have been killed during this winter that wood will never produce peaches.

The market pays a premium for fruit of good size, color and quality. Thinning may be depended upon as an effective means to attain these market requirements.

"No Man's Land"

STATE CAPITOL, RICHMOND, VA.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

RECENTLY R. W. Gunn, a merchant of Richmond, Va., exploded a veritable bombshell in the Old Dominion and sent state officials, historians and attorneys scurrying to dig in the archives by declaring that he is the real owner of the greater part of the land upon which stands the state capitol and that he wants to be paid for it on the basis of its original valuation, made in 1784, of some $6,500, plus compound interest at the rate of 3 per cent a year for 146 years. And that has set some of the mathematicians to figuring just how colossal a sum would be a principal of $6,500 plus compound interest for nearly a century and a half.

The Richmond merchant says that the state of Virginia can not produce any records to prove that the land condemned in 1784 for a public square was ever paid for and says he will ask relief from the general assembly at its next session if the state refuses to consent to a suit alleging breach of contract.

Falling in that step, Mr. Gunn has been advised by counsel that he can go into the federal courts on the grounds of the violation of constitutional property rights and he affirms he can prove his contention by existing records.

Mr. Gunn points to a letter sent to Thomas Jefferson, then ambassador to France, by members of a legislative commission, asking Mr. Jefferson to engage an architect in Paris to prepare plans for a state capitol and assuring the author of the Declaration of Independence that "the hill on which Gunn's yellow house stands, and which you favored as the best situation for a state capitol continues to be preferred by us."

The original Jefferson letter is in the custody of the College of William and Mary. The original condemnation order has been placed on record in the Henry County court, after remaining obscure for nearly 100 years. Mr. Gunn has been working on his claim since childhood, but made no effective headway until the original condemnation jury's report was unearthed from dusty archives.

"Thirty years ago, I met a man who was then ninety years old," Mr. Gunn said recently. "Asking me if I were a descendant of the old Gunn family of Richmond, he told me that his father, who worked for the state government, had informed him that the state of Virginia never paid for the land condemned for use as a public square and the permanent seat of the state government. The reason, he said, was that the condemnation proceedings records had been lost and that no claim against the state could be proved in court.

"I was told by my family as a boy that my family never had been compensated by the state. My efforts were blocked until the original condemnation order was found. The papers by mistake were sent in 1784 to the city clerk's office for recording. Instead of to the clerk of the Henry County court. Those papers, plus maps uncovered and the letter to Thomas Jefferson, which shows Mr. Jefferson had inspected the old Gunn plot while governor of Virginia and favored it for a state capitol site, speak for themselves.

"I have been informed by Auditor C. Lee Moore he can find no record of the state having paid for the property it condemned in 1784. I took the matter up with Governor Byrd toward the close of his administration.

"The governor, after referring my letter to the secretary of the commonwealth for investigation, informed me that the facts were as I had stated them to be, insofar as the existence of any record of payment by the state was concerned.

"In the judgment of legal advisers, the mere condemnation proceedings in the absence of payment did not take the title to the property from my ancestors. I feel I have a substantial claim to ownership of the land on which the state capitol now stands. I cannot sue the state for breach of contract without the state's consent, and the statute of limitation has expired. But I believe the people of Virginia would like to see the proper settlement made."

Nor is this Richmond merchant the only one who is interested in this matter for he declares that other old Richmond families, among them the Sydners, Curries, Archibald Carys, Prices and Acrille Coches, had half-acre lots condemned in 1784 and present-day descendants of these families are watching with interest his move for restitution.

Nor is this Virginia case unique, for Oklahoma has a somewhat similar one, only the "No Man's Land" there has infinitely greater potential riches to make it worth fighting for. It is a small triangular tract of about two acres in the heart of the great Oklahoma City oil fields which has been "lost" for 60 years. No "Boomer" homesteaded it after the "run" into Oklahoma in 1889. The surveyors and mapmakers seemed to have missed it and it is still government soil.

No one seems to have dreamed that this valuable parcel of land was available to a claimer until recently when Forrest Parrott of Oklahoma City, guided by maps which others had seen, no doubt, but failed to realize their significance, began a bit of "prospecting" in the archives of the register of deeds at the Oklahoma county court house.

What he found was almost unbelievable—a plot of unclaimed land, sandwiched right in the middle of one of the richest oil areas of the world.

So Mr. Parrott staged the "run of 1930." With an armful of stakes he dashed out to the little sliver of river bottom land and drove his pegs.

Then, as in the prairie schooner and sunbonnet days of 42 years ago, Mr. Parrott set about making his claim legal. He went back to the courthouse and filed an affidavit of his claim, setting forth he was filing on it as a homestead and claiming priority rights as an ex-service man.

The triangular shape of the neglected piece of land was caused by the antics of the North Canadian river.

When the government surveyors made their first survey of 1870 they did an excellent job for working out the river bottom into chopped-up lots, but they forgot this one tract.

The tract is in the center of the most intense drilling activity in the Oklahoma City oil field. Half a mile east is T. E. Slick's No. 1 Bailey 17,000-barrel-a-day well, and the same distance south the 22,000-barrel-a-day well owned by Wirt Franklin.

And yet these are only two examples of queer claims which result from surveyors' or mapmakers' errors or some slip-up in registering deeds or some other title to land. A curious case was reported from New York recently, and added another item to the record of high-priced real estate in that city where some plots of ground are literally worth more than the number of silver dollars it would take to cover them. In this case a purchaser of real estate paid a total of $1,200 for 218 square inches of land—$5.50 a square inch. It came about in this way:

One of the Mrs. Vanderbilts wanted to buy a plot of ground in East Fifty-seventh street between First avenue and the river, on which once stood five brownstones, built in the seventies by one Harvey Dennis, a considerable realtor of his day. Naturally the prospective purchaser wanted to be sure she had a clear claim to the title, so she had experts of the Title Guarantee & Trust company look it up.

For what if after the house were erected somebody should bob up and claim a strip of property, eighteen feet by one inch, running right through the building? Such a demand would form a grave crisis. In this instance a hunt was made for the Dennis heirs. It was hard to find them. It took two months, during which time more than 300 letters were written. Finally they were located. There were six heirs in all. The situation was explained.

The title company people finally got them to sign a quitclaim for $200 each, or $1,200 in all. That isn't much, but then neither was the land to which they were unintentionally the heirs. It amounted, in fact, to just one and a half square feet.

But if New York can claim the smallest and the highest priced pieces of real estate, Chicago can point with pride to the world's costliest cow path which runs right through a modern 22-story skyscraper known as the 100 West Monroe building.

The cow path dates from the early 50's when Dr. Jared Bassett bought the entire Clark street frontage, 150 feet deep, between Monroe and Madison streets. In the center of the block he built his home with a cow barn for his cow, "Bessie." As time went on, Doctor Bassett sold most of his property but always with a provision for a 10-foot easement so that "Bessie" could make her way to the barn.

So in 1925 when the 100 West Monroe Building corporation took over the lease for the property they found the flaw which preserved the path but too late to do anything about it. The deed was subjected to litigation and it stood the test. While their solution of the problem was a little costly, it was rather unusual, for they usurped the air rights and left "Bessie" her 10-foot path with an 18-foot clearance, just in case she should desire to bring in a wagon load of hay some time.

Above the 18-foot level the building juts out at right angles, covering the cow path and extending upward for 20 stories. While set-back buildings are common sights in Chicago this is the only "set-out" building on record. And the space lost would bring about $12,000 in yearly rentals.

Another curious situation, caused by a flaw in a title, was reported from New York recently. The story of it, as told in the New York World, follows:

"A legal catch in the title of what used to be known as City Hall place—a street only about 900 feet long that ran from in back of the Municipal building at Duane street to Pearl street—is holding up plans for the proposed civic center around the new county court house and Foley square.

"The riddle which Assistant Corporation Counsel Jopl J. Squire of the bureau of street openings is charged to solve is what can the city do with the forty-foot roadway which bisects one of the most valuable plots of real estate in New York.

"Part of this riddle is what will the Church of St. Andrew, which stands on the west of the old street, do about its parish house which stands on the east of it. Under the plan drawn by Joseph Johnson, City Hall place was to be scrapped to make room for the new federal building and the parish house was to be torn down and rebuilt on plot adjacent to the church.

"This new plot was to be exchanged by the city for the old site of the parish house. A section of City Hall place was included in the new site. But when the church officials asked for a title deed to the land the city was surprised to find that it could not be given. The reason was that the city owns only right of way easements which were obtained in 1800 from the original owners of the plot, but that some unknown heir of the original owners holds the free title.

"Had the city or federal government actually erected a costly building on part of the old street and had the true owners turned up and set forth their claims, the money loss to the city would have been tremendous according to real estate authorities.

OFF TO THE PICNIC AT SWEETHEART CAVE

By LAURA MONTGOMERY

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"THANKS, just the same," repeated Sally.

"I can't see why you ought to want to go about and meet all your old friends."

Sally's smile held a touch of wistfulness. The young widow had come back to her home town to teach school again, and she sometimes found the well-meant efforts of her neighbors somewhat of a trial. Edna, for instance, seemed to take exception to a closed door, and so Sally had little time to herself.

Old Steve put on his best suit for the holiday and he now sat forward in his rocker, a great eagerness flushing his thin face. "Well, if Sally doesn't want to go, Martha, that leaves a vacant seat. Couldn't—wouldn't you like me to go along? I'll help set out the lunch and—" he gulped here, his eyes growing bright with hope as his daughter made no reply. "I'd certainly enjoy hearing the band play and seeing the flags."

"At your age. Nonsense."

"Oh," said Martha's father sorrowfully, "I wouldn't have made a mite of trouble and I do want to hear that march the town band has been practicing for the picnic."

Although it was only eight o'clock the day was intensely warm. The heat seemed to hang on the sultry air in thick waves that made Sally's eyeballs ache. She smiled over at the forlorn figure in the rocking chair. "I didn't know you were going to stay at home here alone, Mr. Simmons. I'm glad I stayed because now I'll get your luncheon for you."

"It wouldn't have hurt Martha to have taken me." He turned away his gaze swiftly and the girl suspected it was to hide a suspicious dimness. "I—I sure would enjoy the day out at Sweetheart's Cave."

Sally felt a pang of compassion. Poor old Steve still retained a sentimental feeling for that place beside the Fox river. Sally herself had once listened to a sweetheart there, listened and accepted and then had come the quarrel. Red Blake had left town the night she gave him back the cheap little ring with the turquoise set with the pearl and garnet.

"I kissed Belinda there," mused Steve, his chin trembling with the pathetic disappointment of an aged one who welcomes each anniversary with mingled joy and fear—fear lest it be the last one.

Sally closed the magazine that lay open in her lap and her brown eyes grew determined. She thrust back the thought of the peaceful day she'd planned and got to her feet. "I'm going to put up a lunch, Mr. Simmons, and, if you have an extra flag anywhere that the family overlooked, you just find it. We're going to the picnic at Sweetheart Cave."

Incredulously the dim eyes searched the blooming face. "You mean you'll go with me? Martha will be mad—she hinted that I ought to take off this good suit and clean out the chicken yard. She—she ain't so easy to get along with after she's been mad."

"We'll chance it," answered Sally recklessly, her cheeks growing red. "I guess we can take our pleasure as we like. The chicken yard can be cleaned any time."

So it was that the only buggy left in the livery stable was occupied by the pair. Sally had spent the $3 she had saved for new gloves on the anti-dust rig that brought cheers and gibes from the motor cars flying past. But, as she saw the thin, erect figure at her side and the happy old face, she didn't regret the gift of her day nor the vanishing gloves. Old Steve waved grandly to his neighbors and kept unfurling the flag he had brought.

"An auto is all right if you're in a hurry," he said, quite as though Sally had begun an argument, "but, for sheer comfort, give me a nag every time. Belinda used to like a buggy."

They were jogging along a country road that was being used as a detour while a bridge was being built. Sally too, was thinking of other years, and the reins lay slackly in her hands.

From behind them came a speeding car that rocked wildly over the bumpy road and the horse, startled from his somnolent reverie, threw up his head and swerved sharply into the ditch. Sally's head struck the corner of a cement culvert and, with a scream, she drifted off into unconsciousness.

Then she dreamed that she was back again in that carefree time when picnics meant unalloyed joy, and a faint smile trembled on her mouth as she heard again Red's husky, embarrassed voice speaking.

"Red, white and blue, I love you," he chanted.

"It was a pretty ring," she murmured vaguely, then felt a little stab of pain as she realized that the voice had been merely a dream. "Why am I sitting in the dust?" she said, her voice coming thinly.

"Who'd ever think that old nag had that much life in him?" contributed Steve, rubbing his knee. "Nothing broken, I guess. How about you, Sally?"

Sally was twisting her head with some difficulty. She was leaning against that something that smelled of tweed and tobacco and was most comforting.

"Yeah. It's me," grinned Red, ungrammatically and with much earnestness. "Life sure is funny. Haven't been in the Fox river valley for years, and I'd heard that you were married, and I made up my mind I wouldn't give any of the neighbors a chance to laugh at me, so I skirted the town. And, first thing I find on this detour is my old girl. Any especial reason for curling up in the ditch? Queer way to spend a holiday, I'd say."

Sally explained about the speeding car that had continued its way and then glanced up at the good-looking sedan drawn up beside the upturned but undamaged buggy. "Is your wife waiting there?" she hazarded, ashamed of that cheap method of finding out what she longed to know, but determined to do so.

Red grinned. "First I knew I had a wife. You were the faithless one, Sally."

Sally's heart leaped beneath the dusty white frock, but, as Red got up and righted her equipage, she grew pale. In a moment more he would be on his way in that stunning car and she—she would drive Steve to Sweetheart Cave. She couldn't hang on to his coat and volunteer the information that her brutal husband had died, leaving her with the debts of his illness to pay.

"Mighty glad I happened along, Sally. So long!"

The words were casual but the look in his bright blue eyes was more than friendly—the old love shone there mingled with a longing that she saw he intended to keep loyally mute.

He pulled into first, stepped on the gas and, with a wave of his hand slammed the door and the car moved.

Sally bit back a sob. If only he had asked. If only he would wait—why couldn't she think of something that wouldn't sound too bald. She didn't know where he was going or where he lived, even.

Old Steve, who had been gently helped by Red into the high, narrow buggy beside Sally, now looked up as though aroused from deep reverie. "Wait, Red," he called, his thin tones rising amazingly above the purr of the motor, "wait a minute!"

Red paused.

"We're going to the picnic at Sweetheart Cave, Red. Why don't you join us? Sally has packed a big lunch and," wisely the dim eyes dwelt on the man's face, "it's a fine place to be on a day like this with—" teasingly he paused while Red's eyes remained fixed on the tense young face at Steve's shoulder—"a pretty little widow. Sally is school teaching now, she has to earn her living. Guess she might be induced to give it up, though—" the voice stopped because a pink palm had closed firmly over Steve's lips.

"Oh," said Red, a glorious comprehension thrilling in his tone, "sure, Sally, we'll all go to the picnic."

Perfection in Speech Declared to Be Rare

Anyone who wishes to convince himself that only a small percentage of persons use American speech clearly and forcefully can do so without going farther than his office chair and listening to the speech of the persons who come in.

Not one of us in fifty speaks English so that it is clean-cut and clear or free from colloquialisms, coarseness or vulgarity; not one in twenty expresses his thought in delicate, elegant and beautiful words. Very few persons—and among them many native-born Americans of English-speaking stock and men and women born in England—really pronounce correctly.

To this day the American says "host-till" while the Englishman prefers "hostyle;" the American usually aspires the h in "humble," but some educated Englishmen still speak of "an umble and a contrite heart." This class refers to "an abtural criminal, an ospital, an istory, an istorical novel and an otel," where the American sounds his h's.

Although our colloquial speech is careless, the speech common to the English is slovenly. They are given to dropping the h, smothering the r, mauling the a and mauling the o. Objection has repeatedly been made to the prevalent English practice of breaking down the vowels in the unstressed syllables used in conversation, yet fault is found also with us for striving to attain precise uniformity of vocalization.

Among certain other racial peculiarities that perplex those who speak English the words "again" and "been" are repeatedly cited as examples. "A-gain" is repeatedly heard on the air and is occasionally heard in common speech, and before long the English "been" will be assimilated at the expense of the American "bin."—Frank H. Vizetelly in the Atlantic Monthly.

Ingenious Campers

When four Jenkintown (Pa.) young women set out to camp beside the Pennyback creek, they found so many "No Trespassing" and "No Camping" signs that they were on the verge of giving up the search for a camp site. However, they found a spot where the creek was about as wide as a large tent and about six inches deep. They pitched their tent across the brook, using flat stones for their cots and stove, and the six inches of water for a floor. And when they were questioned by a policeman why they had ignored the signs, the four finally made him admit that pitching a tent across the stream was not trespassing on the "land."

WOOLEN WEAVES ENTER NEW ERA; EXCITING FUR SEASON IS SEEN

A NEW era has dawned for woolen weaves. In the fashionable world no theme in point of importance and intriguing interest out-ranks that of the new woolens. Their daintiness, their sheerness, the lacy texture of some of them, their novel nubbings and fleckings and ingenious patternings make one feel that in their weaving almost miracles are taking place. Every costume requirement, so far as texture and effect is concerned, is met in the woolens of today. No matter how dressy, no matter how sporty there's a woolen weave for every occasion. The range includes every type from wool lace as delicate as a cobweb and sheer crepe as exquisite as chiffon to mannish woolen mixtures of infinite variety.

For early fall wear, the subject uppermost in the minds of designers is that of the daytime frock made of a novel woolen weave. A favorite material for the dress typed to town and travel wear as well as to schoolroom and office is the woolen weave that gives the impression, when looked at casually, of being a heavy and smart tweed, but which is in reality so sheer as to be almost transparent.

Color mixtures contribute strikingly to the effect of these loose-woven tweeds. Such unusual combinations are employed as garnet, raspberry and black or perhaps a mingling of yellow, brown and green with flecks of white and black. However, notwithstanding the lure of color, the vogue for black-and-white still persists.

Flecked, nubbed effects, broken diagonals, plaids, checks and stripes and coarse rope-yarn basket weaves are interpreted in terms of black and the coming fall and winter months. Among other things a most thrilling renaissance of fur accessories is in prospect. We are going to wear with our suits or frocks, our ensembles and our furless coats, the most fetching and the most novel fur fantasies imagination can picture.

The favored scarf of 1930 trends to flat stole types. The muff which "belongs to the set" is apt to be any shape, either a pillow type or a square affair, or perhaps round like a football, but regardless of its shape it is almost certain to be tres petite.

As to scarfs even the simplest types have a jauntness and a style all their own such as lends an air of distinction to any costume with which it may be worn. Since flat furs yield readily to fabriclike manipulation, the majority of fur accessory sets are fashioned of such pelts as astrakhan, Persian lamb, galyak, kidskin or lapin in white or dyed any color desired.

The little fur neckpiece worn with the furless cloth coat pictured is typical of the trend in scarfs for fall. Being of beige galyak it enters into perfect color harmony with the coat which is styled of African brown woolen of velvety texture. In the making of this coat much attention white as often as they are in color. These patternings are apt to be very indefinite or they may elect to strike a daring note after the manner of the loose-woven woolen which gives such distinction to the dress in the upper picture. In this model the stripes are interwoven in a very designful way

TOWNLIN

The Townline M. E. Church
About forty-three years ago our church was built on the corner, when there was plenty of good timber. All of the work was donated by the members. The acre of ground where it stands, with one hundred dollars, was given to us by Mr. Smith, a large land owner here at that time. The bell that hangs in the belfry was also given by the neighbors who live in this community. And now that it has been sold and is being torn down, we feel that we shall miss the old church on the corner, where it has stood for so many years. We shall not forget the many sociable hours we spent there together. Neither shall we forget the heartaches it caused us when we could no longer see our way clear to hold our services. We think the beautiful shade trees that surround the building will also miss it. We shall all miss the old church on the corner.
Signed by the Members of the Townline M. E. Church.

Meteors and Earth's Weight
To a small extent, the weight of the earth is increased by the fall of meteors. Young estimates the number of meteorites that enter the atmosphere daily at from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000, and the annual total weight at 5,000 to 7,000 tons. But it has an effect in slowing the rotation period of the earth by the increase in its diameter, and so lengthens the day, but only by less than one-thousandth of a second in a million years.

Tornado's Movements
Most tornadoes move toward the northeast; a few toward the southeast; the others in an easterly direction. Although the storm moves at great speed around its center, its forward movement is from 40 to 60 miles an hour. It is therefore often possible to avoid a tornado by driving at right angles to it at a high rate of speed.

Broad "A" Not Irish
Professor Grandgent of Harvard university says the earlier English "ah" became short "a" by the sixteenth century. Until 1780 or thereabouts the standard language had no broad "a." Benjamin Franklin, who recorded in 1768 the pronunciation of his day, knew no "ah." Evidence indicates that it appeared again in London speech between 1780 and 1790. There is no basis for the statement that it originated with the Irish.

Long Dynasty Near End
Since the year 1557 the descendants of one old English family have plied their trade of saddler in the same shop without interruption. They are named Denyer. Says Food Forms Character

Characters are formed by the things people eat, according to a man who is trying to start a "good" food movement in Europe. Those who eat oysters become lazy, he says, while crab gourmets develop crawling natures and winkle addicts grow frivolous. And eaters of turkey are hopeless in his estimation.

Benefit in Suffering

That of suffering is the result of illness, and the strength of the mind is a result of an article in the "Churchman." "Suffering rightly borne is constructive work," says this authority. "He who has borne his bit has also done his bit; pain conquered is power."

Beautiful Irish Glen

About four miles south of Tipperary, near the Galtee mountains, is Glen Aherlow, rich in legends and beautiful scenery. Here are the mountains of the Harper of Clinch, who fell in love with the daughter of the king of the Munster fairies. A magic mist prevented his entrance into the castle, so he harped melodiously enough to make the mountains tremble and the lakes move.

Delhi Long Prominent

The city of Delhi has been a capital province of India almost from the beginning of the history of India. It was made the British capital of India by proclamation of King George V in 1911.

Spender Has Advantage

It is a well-known fact that the man who spends much, though he needs to carry more money than the man who spends little, does not have to carry as much in proportion to his expenditure. This is because the larger any operation is the more economically it can be managed.

Power of Inflection

Often a person with a commonplace mind may appear extremely intelligent and fascinating because of his or her power to put meaning into meaningless remarks by the use of inflections.—American Magazine.

Early Use of Monograms

The Greeks are supposed to have been the first to use monograms. They are found on old Greek coins and rings. The Romans, however, made the more personal application to family names.

FOR GOVERNOR
—vote for
WILBER M. BRUCKER

- saved $3,000,000 for the people in the Bell Telephone case.
- cut the costs of Woodward avenue widening by $1,000,000.
- collected $3,000,000 worth of "bad debts" for the state.
- curbed the "loan shark" business.
- prosecuted the House of David case.
- won the lake level case, that will eventually make Michigan ports ocean ports.

He has devoted his life to service for Michigan

The record of Wilber M. Brucker has been a record of true public service—of full-time, whole-hearted service to the people of Michigan.
Consistently—since he has held office for the State—all his effort and talent and time have been devoted to the State—to Michigan interests, Michigan welfare, Michigan advancement! Private practice and personal business have found no place in his long and distinguished public career.
A University of Michigan graduate—and member of a Michigan division during the World War—Mr. Brucker first served the people in the role of assistant prosecutor and later, prosecutor of Saginaw county. In this capacity, he soon became known as one of the outstanding prosecutors in Michigan.
As assistant Attorney General, he attracted widespread praise because of his effective work in the notorious House of David case.
And later, as Attorney General, he realized the full scope of his abilities with a series of unusual legal and administrative achievements—thwarting the famous "Chicago water steal"—sustaining the negligent homicide act—winning the State's radio case—and making the Telephone company submit to state legislation.
Obviously—your vote for Wilber M. Brucker will be a vote for Michigan, because Wilber M. Brucker has devoted his life to serving the people of Michigan. He is, above all, the people's candidate—your candidate for governor.

The interests of his district fared well under his membership in 1929 and 1930. We have reason to believe that his experience as a legislator will give him the ability to represent capably the 28th senatorial district, and to protect its various interests as may become necessary. — Gladwin County Pol Adv

May we all be honest with ourselves, forget selfish interest, and in the spirit of patriotism vote for the candidate who in our judgment is best qualified to fill the office.

Let us try to keep in mind the best interests of the county, district and state when we go to the polls next Tuesday.

Chop Suey Ingredient

The bean used in chop suey is the mung bean. This is an oriental bean grown primarily in China and Japan. The bean sprouts grow to be from one to one and one-half inches long. It is only the bean sprout that is used, as practically all of the bean goes to sprout. For sprouting, the bean should be soaked 24 hours in water and then placed in a well drained container and kept at a medium temperature for about ten days. The bean should be moistened daily.

Miles of Conveyors in Ford Plant

This picture shows two types of conveyors in use in the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company.

AN ENDLESS chain conveyor, three and a half to four miles long, said to be the longest in the world, has just been completed at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company at Dearborn, Michigan. On it parts of Ford cars in the process of manufacture are transported from one building to another and completed parts are carried direct to railroad cars for shipment to branch assembly plants.

The conveyor, which carries its cargo on suspended hooks, has a daily capacity for 300,000 parts weighing over 2,000,000 pounds. It supplants freight cars and trucks which have been used for the transfer of many parts from one point to another in the Ford plant.

This longest conveyor of them all is a development of the Ford policy that nothing should be done by manual labor that could better be done by machine.

In the early days of his manufacturing career, Mr. Ford devised the assembly line—a moving track on which cars in the process of assembly went to the workmen instead of the workmen carrying parts to the car. The assembly line, perfected in many ways, is now used by automobile manufacturers generally.

The value of the conveyor in reducing physical labor, in saving time, in preserving system and in cutting costs soon became apparent and its use was extended to other purposes about the plant. Now there are literally miles of conveyors of various types in the Ford plant. Some of them carry parts from one building to another and are carefully synchronized so that the parts arrive at precisely the right moment and in the exact spot where they are needed. Others transport red hot ingots of steel weighing nearly a ton each. Still others move outgoing shipments.

If it were not for the conveyors, according to officials of the Ford Company, mass production would not be possible on its present scale.

"A REPUBLICAN for the UNITED STATES SENATE"

If you feel that Michigan should be represented in the United States Senate by a REAL REPUBLICAN — by a man of proved ability — by a man of years of experience in public service and with a proved record of accomplishment for his state — then you will vote for Former Governor Chase S. Osborn.

CHASE OSBORN

CHASE S. OSBORN has a long record of public service behind him. He served Michigan as Governor in 1911 and 1912, and refused to be a candidate for a second term. As Governor, Chase Osborn gave Michigan:

The first Industrial Accident Board and the workingmen's compensation and employers' liability law, which has served as a model for other states. More than $50,000,000.00 have been paid employees under this act.

The opportunity to adopt a constitutional amendment granting the right of suffrage to women.

The presidential preference primary.

The first forward step toward prohibition, in a law which prohibited the ownership of saloons by breweries or anyone interested in the wholesale liquor traffic.

One of the first regulatory laws covering charges by railroads and express companies.

Its first forward step toward tax revision.

A reorganized Michigan national guard and took it out of politics.

Abolished scores of useless state offices; put more property on the tax rolls than any governor, before or since.

Legislation that exempted war veterans from taxation.

As Senator he will make an equally outstanding record

TO THE VOTERS OF IOSCO COUNTY

It has been impossible for me to make a canvass of the voters of Iosco county on account of the press of business in the office lately. I am a candidate, as you know, for re-nomination to the office of Prosecuting Attorney and most of you know what my record is. I can show you by the reports of the Attorney General's office of the State of Michigan that it is equal to the best and stands among the first in the record of convictions made. The ability of any attorney is shown by his success in winning cases for his client, and in the judgment he uses in bringing cases into court. My experience has taught me what is needed in the way of evidence, and I always bring to bear upon any case brought before me the exercise of my best judgment.

In the last three cases that I have had in the Supreme Court of Michigan, we have prevailed. This, to my mind, should be conclusive. Some times an individual may not agree with me as to my judgment and will be angry, possibly as to my decision in regard to certain evidence brought before me. But remember, I am the person responsible to the tax payers of Iosco county, and I would be doing a great wrong to them, as well as to myself, if I should proceed to act on a case where the facts and evidence are not clear. The individual has no responsibility to the tax payer, and very often is trying to satisfy a grudge or whim at the expense of the people of the county.

The county of Iosco is a corporation of about eight million dollars valuation, and every person in this county is a stockholder in this corporation. The Prosecuting Attorney represents these individuals and he is bound to appear and prosecute any person or criminal who might attack any citizen's rights. You want a lawyer who can prosecute for you, fearlessly and unafraid. You may be secure in your life and property today, but what about tomorrow? If you believe that someone else can protect the county's as well as the people's interests better than I can, then you should vote against me; but if, on the other hand, you examine the records and see what they show, I believe that you will be led to believe that the best interest of Iosco county and its citizens will be best served by voting for one whom you know, and whose record in trying county cases has been successful.

Thanking you, one and all, for your support in the past, and wishing you all success, I am, Very respectfully yours, John A. Stewart.

"Outlived Friends" He Ends Life

Danville, Va.—Frank W. Davis, recluse, whose twenty-eight day hunger strike failed as a means of suicide, won his fight for death with a gun in his lonely shack near Mountain hill, he was buried on a neighbor's farm.

His body was found by neighbors, and the gun, with a cord attached to the trigger, lay nearby. He had shot himself in the chest.

Asserting he had outlived those he loved, that he had no friends, that he was too old to be useful, the farmer started his hunger strike May 2, determined to end his life by starvation.

Twenty-eight days later, authorities took him to a hospital and threatened to commit him to an insane asylum. Davis abandoned his starvation at.

tempt, said he had a "new outlook on things" and was permitted to return home. He had been heard to say he believed shooting himself would be morally wrong and "messy," and the gun never had been taken from the house.

He bequeathed his ten-acre tobacco farm and his funds to Hazel Seay, young granddaughter of Mrs. Josephine Miller, on whose farm he was buried.

KNOWING HOW TO SPELL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK, Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

A group of educated men in New York city—congressmen, senators, newspaper reporters, public officials of distinction—held a spelling contest not long ago, the words being given out by a statesman who used an old-fashioned spelling book such as we were familiar with sixty years ago in the district schools of the country. It didn't take long to floor the whole lot, and they went down like a row of untrained soldiers facing the fire of machine guns. The simple truth is we don't know how to spell. If a misspelled word creeps into our correspondence, we blame the error upon our stenographers.

It is rather interesting to see what common words floored the statesmen—"salable," and "mortise," and "tranquillity" and "initial." Words which one should expect every intelligent person to be able to manage were too much for them.

In my own experience there are a dozen simple words in common use which more than half the high school graduates who come to college are likely to stumble on. "Sophomore" and "laboratory" and "athlete" and "truly" and "receive" and "embarrassment" and "judgment" are quite commonly too much for the young student. "Accommodate" and "transferred" are more often misspelled than spelled correctly. Even in railway stations I see "Pullman Accommodations" done in big gold letters. It seems now to be no disgrace not to know how to spell. "Oh, I can't spell," a healthy, intelligent sophomore says to me, and that with him seems to end it. He admits the fact and feels no obligation apparently to strengthen his orthographic weaknesses. I had a brief note last week from a high school boy who managed in a short page to misspell seven words. Pretty good, I thought, considering the opportunity which he had.

In the old days there were two or three things which we did learn in school—quick arithmetical calculation, the grammatical construction of sentences, and spelling. Not to be able to work all the problems in Ray's Third Part Arithmetic was a disgrace. If one could not diagram, analyze and parse the words in any sentence which came along he was anathema, and spelling was the chief indoor sport. We drove miles on winter evenings to demonstrate our ability in spelling contests. I was the pride of the community once when I was fifteen, for I entered a spelling match at the Burrill schoolhouse a dozen miles from home and spelled down seven school teachers. It would not be so much of a task today, I suspect, nor so much of an honor.

It still gives me a shock to get a letter from a man of standing and to find in it misspelled words. It suggests carelessness, inaccuracy, inexcusable ignorance. I had always thought well of Carson. He is a graduate of one of the great educational institutions of the country, and he goes into good society. I had a letter from him last week in which in three distinct places he speaks of the "alumnae" of an organization to which he belongs. Carson doesn't know how to spell.

Shows Evolution of American Home

Concord, Mass.—An unusual museum among institutions housing the nation's historic treasures has been established in this picturesque community whose name figures so prominently in the chronicles of the early American progress.

It is a large red brick building set on an attractively landscaped plot diagonally across the street from the old homestead of the famed poet, Ralph Waldo Emerson. Gifts made last year in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Shepard Barrett of this town enabled the Concord Antiquarian society to create the novel repository.

Though offering to public view for the first time a host of relics recalling revolutionary days, the museum was not erected primarily for the exhibition of such objects. Its principal purpose is to depict the evolution of the American home during the approximately two centuries from 1650 to 1840.

The singular beauty of the structure, known as the Concord Antiquarian house, probably lies in the fact that it actually was built around the rooms that it contains. Typical rooms in Concord homesteads known to date back to a certain period were transferred intact to the new building and installed in their original state.

Antiques, virtually all of them gathered from Concord homes and many of them priceless, have been used in furnishing the house, being divided among the rooms of the periods which they represent. A Seventeenth-century chest in the oldest room would easily bring $15,000 to $20,000 if put on the market according to antique connoisseurs.

Possibly the outstanding feature of the Antiquarian house is the Emerson room. All during the years that this room was a part of the poet's old homestead the public was barred from it. Now it has been transferred intact to the new museum, where visitors will be permitted to inspect it from a glassed-in vestibule.

Emerson's study is exactly the same as it was in those long-ago days when he sat in the curved-back rocking chair at the round table in the middle of the floor and penned his famous verse and essays. The books on the many shelves that cover the farther wall are just as he left them. His favorite pictures decorate the walls and here and there about the room are little ornaments typical of the early Eighteenth century. Emerson's original portfolio lies on the center table at which he worked.

Upstairs is a tiny room dedicated to the memory of Henry Thoreau, essayist, philosopher and naturalist. The crude cot on which he slept during his back-to-nature experiment at Lake Walden is there. On one wall hang the deer skins that the Indians gave him. The room also contains many of his other belongings, including some of the paraphernalia that he used as a surveyor.

Purely historical relics which have been assembled at the museum include one of the two lanterns hung in the belfry of Boston's Old North church to warn Paul Revere that the British were coming by sea; part of one of the original timbers of the old Concord bridge, and a mirror which was broken by a bullet fired during the battle at the bridge.

Rejuvenation Cause of Downfall

New York.—Speaking of operations, have you heard what science did for, or to, George Frederick Williams?

For 30 years Williams had been a messenger. For 30 years he had earned about $30 a week. He lived soberly, staidly, brought up a son and daughter and spent all his evenings in the bosom of his family.

Then Williams fell ill. He was operated upon last January. Then things began to happen to the staid old messenger.

Williams stepped out to find out what it was all about. With him he took the $2,200 pay roll of the Sterling Watch company, for whom he had worked five years.

He went to Norfolk. A pretty blond barber shop manicurist also felt the urge. They went to Washington, D. C., to Greensborough, S. C., to Chicago.

"That operation did it all. It changed my attitude toward life. I wanted to get out and raise h—l. But it didn't last. The mad feeling began to wear off." That is the explanation offered by Williams.

Williams returned, got forgiveness from his wife, went to Detroit and surrendered. In general sessions court, Judge Donnellan sentenced him to from one to two years in prison.

Ruins of Doric Temple Unearthed in Himera

Palermo, Italy.—The remains of a fine Doric temple have been brought to light at Himera, near Termini Imerese. Archeologists declare the temple was built by Greeks or by Greek colonists shortly after the year 480 B. C., after the victory of the Sicilians against the Carthaginians. In its original form the Himera temple probably was a fine example of Doric architecture, for even its ruins are noble and inspiring. The temple had a brief life, being destroyed, it is thought, by the Carthaginians only 70 years after its completion.

It is supported on a rectangular basement about seven feet high, on which the columns rest. About half of the columns remain, the others having been razed by the Carthaginians.

DAIRY FACTS

PROTECTION FOR MILK AND CREAM

Cleanly Conditions Are Essential for Products.

Filth and manure, when they gain entrance to milk and cream, give these products their respective odors and flavors. They further contaminate them with many species of bacteria which ferment, the product, decomposing one or more of its ingredients, producing objectionable odors and flavors, and yield ferments which in turn have the power of decomposing the product and deteriorating it in storage.

In order to avoid unnecessary contamination of milk, cream and butter, these products should be produced and handled under cleanly conditions. The barnyard should be kept dry and free from manure so that the cows are not compelled to wade knee-deep in mud before they enter the stable. The stable must be kept free from accumulation of dirt and manure; the manure should be removed at least once daily; the bedding must be clean and the stable must be sufficiently ventilated to eliminate strong animal and manure odors; the floors should be sprinkled with water before sweeping and the sweeping must be done several hours before milking, so as to give the dust in the air a chance to settle before the milk is exposed to the stable air.

The cows must be kept clean, by preventing them from lying down on a filthy floor and their udder and flanks should be wiped off with a clean, damp cloth before milking commences; the currying of the cows should be done after and not before milking.

Control Milk Vitamins by Ration Fed to Cow

The vitamin content of milk, one of the few foods to contain the whole vitamin alphabet, varies according to the ration fed the cow, says the monthly "Food Distribution."

Vitamin A content of milk may be changed by varying the amount of this vitamin in the cow's ration. It quotes Dr. W. E. Krauss, assistant in the dairy department of the Ohio Experiment station as saying. This is also true of vitamin B, although it is now thought that the cow can manufacture her own supply of this substance.

Vitamin C content of milk can also be changed by changing the ration, says "Food Distribution," but this factor is so easily destroyed by heat that other foods must be relied upon to furnish what is lacking. The Ohio Experiment station is now attempting to increase the amount of vitamin D in milk through a commercial feed containing fish meal in the cow's ration. Irradiated ergosterol, the most potent source of vitamin D known, is being used in another test.

Standardized Cream Is Held Without Variation

Where a standardized cream is sold, either of 20 per cent for coffee cream or 40 per cent for whipping, an effort should be made to hold to this test without any serious variation. A difference of ten turns each minute on the separator crank will change the test nearly 3 1/2 per cent. Also any great change in the temperature of the milk at time of separation will affect the test.

Losses from these may prove as serious as using a worn-out machine or one in which the bowl is out of balance. Although the newer models turn much easier than the older ones, yet those with power available are making use of either electricity or gasoline to help secure a uniform speed and also take some of the drudgery from the job.

Cream Rises Somewhat Rapidly in Fresh Milk

"It is admitted," says Roy T. Harris of Wisconsin College of Agriculture, "that cream rises somewhat more rapidly in fresh warm milk than it does in older milk at lower temperatures, and it would therefore seem possible that if milk were stirred until cooled or even stirred rather thoroughly once after the cooling process has advanced somewhat, less cream would rise to the surface in the can than would otherwise be the case. At the same time, it is held to be doubtful that this natural separation has any appreciable effect upon the accuracy of the sampling. It is quite likely that the greater errors occur elsewhere."

High Quality Product

Clean barns, clean cows, clean milkers, and cooling immediately after separation, all tend to produce a high quality product, but probably most important of all is the care of the utensils which come in contact with the milk and cream. As the dairy utensils are handled on many farms, they are by far the most important source of bacteria. With proper attention their care may require less work than is usually given on farms producing an inferior product.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. A runaway marriage follows. Loring Hamilton wins Lillian's consent to become his wife.

"I hope you didn't get up on our account, mother," she said gently, "but I'm glad you are better."

The woman looked up at Ernestine, her faded eyes, under the drooping brows, regarding this strange bird that had slipped so easily into her nest. How old she looked, thought Ernestine. She was a generation beyond mamma, for she was old with a gentle humility and meekness that Ernestine had never met before. There was not in her even the stubbornness that sometimes the meek can use so effectively.

Will's father Ernestine could understand. A carpenter, with a gift for woodcutting, he was a skilled and able workman and had a great pride in his trade. He was a tall, thin, stooped man, with a clean-shaven, heavily furrowed face and brightly saturnine, black eyes, which regarded Ernestine with a kind of grim humor. He made her realize without saying so, that he disapproved of their marriage as much as her people did, but that he was not the man to cry over spilled milk. They could count on his kindness.

At breakfast in the bright kitchen, Ernestine and Will made plans.

"You are welcome to stay here as long as you like," said Peter Todd, but the two shook their heads. They had already decided to be independent at once.

"We might just as well go today, and find a place to board until we can get an apartment," said Ernestine, looking very young and earnest. "I'll get my trunk from mamma's, as soon as we have found a residence. It's awfully good of you to want us here, but the house is small, and mother is really not well enough to have us."

Mrs. Todd said nothing, and Ernestine felt that she had never seen so dispirited a creature.

"If we get near town, mom," Will said, "we can save money on carfare. I know a place on Erie street one of the fellows told me about, where you can get a room and two meals, at a reasonable price, and it's in walking distance of the office. Anyhow, I think we ought to live alone."

"That's right," said Will's father. "It's the only way for young married people. If you need any money when you go to fixing up a flat I can lend you a little. I always have a few hundred dollars tucked away for emergencies," he explained to Ernestine. "I can let Will borrow, without interest, if he needs it. I own a house on Troy street that you could have if it wasn't leased. But the location is not good for you."

"We'll manage," said Will confidently, and Ernestine admired him.

They exchanged bright looks, and Mr. Todd said heartily:

"Well, come and visit us sometimes, anyhow."

It was soon time for them to go. Ernestine, in her squirrel coat and scarlet hat, bade her new relatives good-by. She felt that there were tears in the air, realized a little that these people were losing Will more definitely than she would ever be lost to her family. He was their only son, but they said good-by to him with quiet dignity. Ernestine admired their restraint, and was grateful for their good taste. They offered neither advice nor counsel, but allowed the young ones to go forth about their own affairs. The house on Erie street brought to Ernestine her first shock of reality. It was an ancient, smoke-blackened dwelling place, not far from the lake. Across the street from the house a five-story machine shop reverberated with activity. A secret-looking brown-stone house, with drawn blinds, stood on the corner. Ernestine felt that the apartment they spoke of so glibly was not so near. A sense of the irrevocable nature of the step she had taken swept over her. She was now Will's, and, as he had said to her father, his roof was her roof. His home was hers, and this was it. She had definitely abandoned her old way of life and set her feet in a strange country. The future was as remote from the past as though she were following him to a great distance.

Hand in hand they ran up the stone stairs and met a small plump woman, called Mrs. Bennett, with whom Will discussed rooms and prices, while Ernestine stood to one side, burning conscious of the gold band on her third finger.

Ernestine was too good a sport to bemoan their conspicuous lack of money. Fresh from the rigors of a fine school, it was not hard for her to accustom herself to simplicity. Will discovered that she had a most practical nature. The forces which had driven her into marriage had not all been romantic. In adjusting herself to living on Will's pay, she was able to exercise some of her native ingenuity and shrewdness, and in that capacity she found a certain pleasure. It was fun to put herself on a basis of having no money to spend and then discovering how much she had grown accustomed to spending in the months since she had left school. Her trunk was full of pretty clothes. It was an element she did not at first appreciate.

CHAPTER IV

A Party at Pastano's

Mr. Poole was having a party for Ernestine and Will, and, according to prearrangement, Ernestine slipped downstairs ahead of time to show her self to Mrs. Bennett. She could not help but be proud of the evening dress mamma had given her for Christmas, and which she had not worn before. The yellow chiffon lay about her slender limbs delicately, subtly. She appreciated the illusive cobwebby hose that had come with the dress and the gold cloth slippers. The string of small real pearls which had come to her from her Grandmother Langley's estate, the pearl ring which daddy had given her to match her necklace, were the last touches of a perfect toilet. Will had appreciated her, this evening, his fine eyes glowing with admiration.

"You are lovely," he protested, as though she had denied it, and she swung herself about in the narrow room and gave him a languishing, mocking look. But she went down the carpeted stairs in a glow, her squirrel coat over her arm.

Mrs. Bennett got up with an admiring exclamation when Ernestine closed the door behind her. The latter advanced to the center of the room and pirouetted on her toes. A little, round, weary body, with tired eyes beneath a fringe of gray hair, Mrs. Bennett had long outworn personal egotism and was generous with praise and sympathy.

"Youth is the time to live, darling," she said to Ernestine. "My life is an old story, but you are young and glowing, and things are happening to you. It is better for you to have your hard times now, and grow old rich and strong, than to have the hardships in old age, as I have had them. But tell me, aren't you excited to be having a birthday party given in your honor by a great cartoonist?"

Ernestine laughed.

"He only wants to be nice to Will. He thinks it will please Will, and of course it does."

Mrs. Bennett maintained a discreet silence, and Ernestine turned to the mirror over a chest of drawers and looked at her reflection, running her hands over her sleek soft hair. She was a little thinner than she had been when she was married, and her eyes were big and dark in the delicate whiteness of her face. She was lovely with a breath-taking quality, her face shining with an inner spiritual excitement. It seemed to her as she stared that she looked too happy, too thrilled for every-day use. She must learn to dissemble.

"Sometimes, darling," Mrs. Bennett chided Ernestine gently, "I think you fail to realize what an effect you have on the people here—on the men. You are so different from the other girls these boys know. You bloom. You wear the face of love. It's hard on them. I want you to be very wise with Mr. Poole. It would be an easy thing for you to disrupt his friendship with Will. Will admires him, and his patronage means so much, just now."

"Will won't be jealous of any attention I pay to Mr. Poole, or that he pays to me," Ernestine said indifferently, "if that's what you mean. It won't hurt Mr. Poole to admire me. He's a nice old man, and he loves to admire women, and men, too, as far as that goes. It's part of his big heart, Will says. Anyhow, Will wouldn't be jealous of me—now." Her small face was so shining that Mrs. Bennett threw her advising instinct away with a gesture and came and kissed her young friend.

"Have a lovely time, darling. Pastano's has the distinction of being the very toughest place in all Chicago. It is beautiful, and not so dangerous as Mr. Pastano likes people to think. He is really very careful about the police. And then, too, you will be with Mr. Poole, who is a close friend of Ruby."

Will was at the door, grinning at them, his mobile mouth twisted into a kind of sardonic look that he wore at times, and that made him like his father. He had a great deal of poise, Ernestine often thought, considering his youth and scanty advantages. Marriage had changed him very little. He was, perhaps, somewhat more inflammable, but he took Ernestine and the life with her most naturally and without self-consciousness.

They went on to Pastano's, entered an unmarked doorway and climbed broad wooden steps with double doors at the top which opened upon light, music, heat and the sound of happy voices.

The big room was airy, its excellent ventilation a surprise to Ernestine, and an important factor in every one's pleasure and good appetite. Mr. Poole came to meet them, and Ernestine gave him her hand and her nicest schoolgirl smile. She wished Mrs. Bennett had not said anything to her about this man. She did not have to heed any warnings except those her husband gave her!

Following Mr. Poole among the tables, Ernestine thought about the many things Will had told her of this man, until she felt that she knew him perfectly. His remarkable gifts, his value to his paper, his carelessness of himself, his small vanities and prejudices, his indolence and drunkenness and his great charm, she knew. He was as natural and straightforward with every one as a child with other children. Yet he possessed also the authority and autocratic manner of the man of established reputation. He drew Ernestine's hand within the curve of his arm, and led her to a table reserved for their party.

All the places were filled except theirs, and the men rose to greet Ernestine. There was only one other woman, Mrs. Wiston, the wife of the syndicate editor of the Sun, a small beautiful woman with the face of a siren who can never forget her role. She had been married twice before she had met Wiston, and Ernestine knew that back in New England were the wife and child Wiston had set aside for her. Ernestine was conscious of the indignation common to married women against such an impostor.

"You Are Lovely," He Protested as Though She Had Denied It.

Wiston himself, a tall academic man with a ribbon to his glasses, Ernestine had met at the office, and John Tucker, called Tommy by every one, who was Will's rival for honors in the art room. The third man who was presented to her Ernestine did not know and she failed to catch his name. He was a small powerful looking individual, with a dark mustache, bright gray eyes and a vain and elaborate manner. The other two men, Underwood and Harrison, were from the Sun staff, and happy to be at any party, any time, any place.

They all sat down, Mr. Poole with one of the women on either side, and Tommy Tucker next to Ernestine, the pompous little man next to Mrs. Wiston, with the others grouped about the big table. Ernestine by now had forgotten her self-consciousness and became radiantly happy. She wished Will were beside her. She was only a half, and Will was the other half, and he ought always to be beside her, breathing as she breathed, turning as she turned. The idea delighted her, and she laughed at herself but felt still a deep joy in their unity.

Mr. Poole turned to Ernestine and told her softly that her youth and beauty were sweeter than sweet night itself. He took his glass in his hand.

"And more intoxicating," he said, "than this for which I have wasted half my life and most of my talents."

Ernestine, looking up in his kind face, knew instantly that in spite of his flowery words, and in spite of Mrs. Bennett's conventional fears, his wish toward her. He knew that she was deeply in love with Will. But to watch her, to speak to her, to listen to her voice, gave him pleasure. It was all he would ever want of her. Her instinct in this matter proved true, during the years of Will's association with Mr. Poole.

"And what have you two young pieces of impudence been doing since last I saw you?"

"We have dined in state at mamma's," said Ernestine, smiling mischievously. "Will missed the significance of it entirely. Papa has, under duress, forgiven him. He offered Will a job in his office."

"And what does Will say?"

"He didn't even pay any attention to it. He just said that he was satisfied with the job he had, thanks just the same, and went on talking to mamma."

Mr. Poole laughed with delight. "Doesn't he know what papa wants?"

"I don't know whether he does or not. But anyhow, papa knows that, now he has decided to forgive Will, Will doesn't intend to let it make any difference. Papa really would like to let us struggle along. He feels pretty disappointed in me. But mamma can't bear it. She is determined to take care of us, whether we will or no."

"But how can she, if Will does not change his employment?"

Ernestine's face grew firm. "She can't. I won't let her. I've made up my mind to have nothing but what Will can give me. I don't mind being poor."

"You must resist poverty," Mr. Poole said. "It is the deadly enemy of marriage."

Ernestine's small face was scornful. Poverty was not so black as it was painted, she observed. He looked at her.

"You do not believe me? Wait, then, and see."

"But we are poor now. It's fun to be poor."

"You—poor!" His amazement was so genuine that Ernestine looked at him in surprise. "My darling child," he reasoned with her, "you don't know what the word means. You two—still in the flush of first love, without children, without a house to burden you, without a responsibility! One bed will do for both of you, one room will hold two hearts together. You are well, you are eager, you are fed and clothed and housed. You have a trunk full of pretty clothes, an adoring mamma begging to do things for you. You do not know the cold and odious breath of poverty at all. I could show you its dark face: slums, little children with great heads and emaciated bodies, houses held together by strings—shambles! I'll show you pale girls, and prostitution, and bare shelves, and empty cupboards, and pride bent double. Lack is a cruel witch. Pray that you may never know her."

"Yet you just told me to wait!"

"Ah, but that was nonsense. Life will never be cruel to you."

They ate the excellent food put before them, and talked, the men arguing among themselves about a technicality in some one's work, Will and Underwood and Mr. Wiston deep in it, Mr. Poole and Tommy competing for Ernestine's attention. Presently Tommy was drawn into the men's talk, and Mr. Poole leaned close to Ernestine and became very confidential.

"Will tells me you are going to have a child. I think that is the last perfection. I always knew that he was gifted, but his marriage with you has established the certainty of his future. Such things are not accidents. He is the chosen of the gods, or one of their finest gifts would not be his. He has all the elements of success. And a wife and children will do the forging."

Ernestine's cheeks burned. She could not understand how Will could have told his still precious secret to Mr. Poole. But she exercised great self-command to be quiet and responsive to him. He went on praising Will, and assuring her of the brightness of his future, until, after a little, she forgot her confusion and told him her own feelings about Will.

The party grew very gay, and Ernestine joined in the general happiness. Without warning the tight little man with the powerful shoulders was on his feet. He bowed to Ernestine, and he bowed around the room, and everywhere hands began to clap and there were shouts of joyous approval at sight of him.

With a gesture indescribably complacent, he held up his hand for silence and got it instantly. Standing so, his chest pushed out like a pouter pigeon's, his body rocking back on his heels, his napkin in his hand, which he flourished from time to time, he began to sing.

It was Siegfried's cry of joy, when he passed through the flames and found the sleeping Brunhilde. Ernestine recognized it, as she recognized the man. He was Mostane, one of the world's greatest tenors. And she had criticized his manner! But now, all else was swept away, and she lived only through her ears, on which fell each perfect note. She knew in delightful anticipation what his golden voice would do next, and her heart soared with his voice.

He stopped abruptly, rocked a moment on his heels and then gently, softly, poignantly he sang without accompaniment:

Still wie 4's Nacht
Tief wie 4's Meer
Sol deine Liebe sein.

The tears rained down Ernestine's cheeks. He sat down in a storm of excited applause. Ernestine could not stop crying. She leaned on Will's shoulder, for he came and sat beside her and put his arm about her. When at last she could breathe steadily she rose and went around the table to Mostane and took his fat face in her two hands and kissed him.

There was a cheer from all the tables, and Will gleamed at her with approval for her spontaneity.

"Nothing else was adequate," declared Mr. Poole.

The hours passed in a trance. The patronage in the dining room changed, grew noisier, more turbulent. Girls came and went on the stage, and danced and sang, and twinkled pretty feet, and flicked bare knees. It was all an unreal blending of sight and sound and color, and Ernestine's heart was far away, in some lonely space with Will. Her being still trembled with that last swelling note. Dimly in her mind she felt an awakening of artistic comprehension, a spiritual understanding of the strength and power of perfect performance. Will had latent in him some such force, but it was far from impulses to such finished authority. Her thought was not that clear, but groping.

It was time to go home, and Ernestine wanted Will to take her away from the others. But she saw that Mr. Poole was not himself at all any longer. Will always took him home, from the office, from such affairs as this, to his flat. Ernestine felt that she could not bear to be parted from Will tonight.

She became conscious of a man standing behind her, a little to one side, regarding her gravely, quietly. She glanced up at him but did not know him. He was a huge man, with a great dark head and clear dark skin. He wore a sack suit, and his narrow face glittered with a ruby of enormous size, set in a gold circle. On one of his big brown hands, which were covered with coarse black hair, was another such gem. Ernestine remembered with a feeling of faintness all the wild stories she had heard about Pastano's place being so disorderly. Will, at least, was sober, as he always was.

Mr. Poole now saw the stranger, greeted him and called him to the table.

"And this is Mrs. Todd, my young friend's wife. You know Will, of course, and the others. Ernestine this is Ruby Pastano, jewel merchant ward boss, and the owner of this dive. A bad man—a terrible man. Shake hands with him."

Mr. Poole was enjoying himself and looked up at Pastano with glee. Mr. Pastano did not smile. He still fixed on Ernestine that queer solemn look he bowed above her.

"Sit down, Ruby, sit down!" commanded Mr. Poole thickly, and motioned for a waiter to bring a chair, which was produced instantly.

Mr. Pastano sat down between Mr. Poole and Ernestine, and she felt his gravity spreading about the table, so that all were a little quieted.

"This is my birthday," Ernestine explained graciously. "I am twenty-one years old today, and Mr. Poole was kind enough to have a party for me. Now that you have come, it is more charming."

"Your voice—" he said, his own tone soft and silky. "Where are you born?" She told him, naively, the address of her mother's house.

Roman Highways Built for March of Legions

When the Romans set out to conquer the whole known world of their day, their practical minds came to their assistance, and they built, as the long arm of their conquests spread around the shores of the Mediterranean, permanent highways throughout their empire, primarily for the swift and safe movement of their troops throughout all the countries they conquered, says a writer in the New York Times.

Their first principle was to draw a straight line between their most important camps. The Appian way, which was begun in 312 B. C., one of their greatest achievements, extended throughout the length of the Italian peninsula from the Forum in the Eternal city itself to Brindisi, from which the legions embarked on their journeys to the east. The pillar set up by Pompey to mark the southern extremity of the great road may still be seen in the modern city.

The Romans built their roads by first cutting parallel trenches through the soil to indicate the width of the roadway, removing loose earth until a solid foundation was reached. Upon this four layers of materials were beaten down, the lowest usually of flat stone sometimes laid in mortar, above which a layer of coarse concrete of smashed stones was superposed. Above this was a layer of finer stones or concrete, on which was laid a surface of fine stones carefully matched. The width of some of their roads was 14 feet, on each side of which were unpaved roadways half as wide again.

Original Chautauqua
The first chautauqua assembly, known as the Sunday School Assembly, was in session August 4-18, 1874, as the result of a plan formed by Lewis Miller of Akron, Ohio, and Rev. John H. Vincent of New York. The assembly plans widened rapidly in successive years. In 1879 a school for teachers in secular subjects was opened. Probably chautauqua is best known in connection with the plan of systematic home reading. The plan was proposed and explained in 1878. The first year 7,000 persons were enrolled and from that time readers varying in number from 8,000 to 25,000 have joined the circle per season. There are now throughout the United States and Canada more than 550 local assemblies modeled after the original chautauqua institution.

It was a custom among the ancient Greeks to dedicate the finest pieces of embroidery and weaving in honor of the dead, at funerals. These were usually wrought by the relatives

One of Oldest Legends, That of Wandering Jew

How long the story of the "Wandering Jew" has been in circulation, and what was its origin, are questions on which there is no evidence to base replies. But it is certain that from the period of its first writing it became more prevalent than ever in various homes.

It was not till after that the aspect of eternal wandering was introduced, and this was possibly encouraged by the fact that at intervals persons claiming to be the original "Wandering Jew" made their appearance in different parts of Europe.

According to the Italian astrologer Guido Bonatti, the wanderer passed through Forli in 1267. Philip of Novara, a famous jurist who resided for a long time in Jerusalem, writing in 1250, refers to one Jehan Boute Dieu as an proverbially long-lived, suggesting that the legend was then well established in Jerusalem.

Crop Rotation Ancient

The principles of soil cultivation, which are included under the term "scientific farming," were known to the farmers of the most ancient times, according to H. W. Warner, writing in the Farm Journal.

"The principle of crop rotation was known and practiced to some extent more than three thousand years ago," he says. "We find application of lime to the soil mentioned in writings dating well before the Christian era. The early white settlers of New England found the Indians fertilizing corn, and artificial fertilization with guano was practiced by the Incas in South America 20 centuries ago."

Complex Typewriter

Japanese typewriters have 7,026 characters. The operator has a directory and chart at his elbow to help him find unusual letters or signs. Good writers average 60 words a minute, which is as fast as handwriting. And tucked away in one corner of the machine is the English alphabet, which may be used at will.—Capper's Weekly.

Childish Intelligence

The intelligence quotient or "I. Q." of a child is determined by multiplying its mental age by 100 and dividing by the actual age. Thus the intelligence quotient of a normal child is 100. A child with an I. Q. below 80 is rated as subnormal, while one with an I. Q. above 120 is rated as gifted. About five children in 100 will be found to be 20 below normal, and about five, 20 above normal.

Added Fame to Old Device
