Due to the increased enrollment in the typewriting classes, we now have a total of twelve typewriters in our commercial department. Four old machines were exchanged during the summer vacation for new ones, and five new ones were recently purchased, giving us nine new machines this year. With such fine equipment, we should have some very efficient typists. Irvin Burtzloff, who is planning to attend the University of Valparaiso this year, visited school Monday. School closed this week Wednes-day and Thursday afternoons to enable the students to attend the fair on these days.

The baseball team expects to have at least one game next week with some of the surrounding high schools.

Children who live in the city should not enter the school building before the ringing of the first bell in the morning and after dinner. It is requested that parents co-operate with the faculty in this regard.

Authorities are practically agreed that few children are ready for the ordinary type of learning occurring in the first grade before they are six years of age. It is quite evi-dent, then, that parents should recognize this fact when considering in regard to the best time to start a child to school.

The Whittemore schools opened on Tuesday, September 2. The fourth year that Whittemore has had a full twelve grade school finds them on the accredited list of the University of Michigan for a two year period, and a high school en-rollment of eighty-three students, which includes forty-four students stitution. Another year has just opened. To all interested, the Whittemore teachers extend thanks for the help rendered by parents, and friends in past years. They ask your help again for this new year. Give them your aid and encourage-ment and thus do your bit toward making our school "Bigger and Better."

Almost all of the teachers have been retained from last year. Mrs. Duncan Valley again has the priniary room with an enrollment of, forty-one. Most of the new flecked woolens are gay deceivers, in that at a casual glance one could never guess how very sheer and dainty are they. That is one of the reasons why these novelty worsteds are proving so popular for early fall wear; they are lightsome enough to be perfectly comfortable, yet they are smartly autsunlike in appearance.

When the girl on the train going back to college waves adieu and "auf wiedersehen" from the platform which is bearing her away from "home, sweet home," she is very likely to be clad either in a natty jacket-and-skirt suit, fashioned after the manner of the model shown to the left in the | copied in this transparent woolen by

Powder Lacquers Your Car Few people know that the lacquer which gleams on the bodies of thousands of automobiles today may have once been on the point of hurtling a shell many miles into space or blowing up a trench, says Popular Science Monthly.

The conversion of millions of pounds of powder left over from the war into industrial finishing products was the unusual story told recently to the American Chemical society by R. G. Woodbridge of the Du Pont company. The new cellulose lacquers, he said, bear so close a relation, chemically, to the nitrocellulose base of smokeless powder that changing the war product into a peace product is, comparatively easy.

seems scarcely more than 75. His face is sun browned and unwrinkled. He is active and robust and will sooner offer his arm to a woman when crossing a mean spot in the road than to think of taking hers. His memory is surprising, his outlook young, and his comments when not serious are colored by a sense of humor that a man half his age might envy."

Ex-Senator Cole died November 3, 1924, at the age of 102. The record in his case is clear. But considering the fact that it would have been easy enough to check up on the facts, it seems remarkable that in 1924 many newspapers printed the picture of "Maj. Edward James Monroe, son of the fifth President of the United States, who is feeling fit at the age of 109." The only difficulty with this story is that President Monroe had two daughters but no son !

Stories of persons who claim to have lived more than 100 years are numerous, but few of these cases will stand up under rigid investigation, acording to James A. Toby, writing in a recent issue of the Scientific American, who says that the age of a very old person seems to be one of the matters most susceptible to deviation from the truth, for memories are usually hazy in the extremely old, and the relatives, friends, and neighbors of these patriarchs seem always ready to exaggerate their antiquity. He then cites numerous examples of longevity which proved to be greatly exaggerated. A few years ago a Kentuckian named John Shell' received considerable notoriety as being 131 years of age, but a somewhat searching inquiry revealed him to be not more than 100, if he were even that.

In 1904 a Russian newspaper calmly reported the death at the advanced age of 180 of a woman named Therese Abalva. Another Russian newspaper in 1926 was more modest, for it allotted only 138 years to Ivan Tretya, a peasant of Rostov. A Hungarian farmer, Peter Zortay or Torton, exceeded them all for he was supposed to have been 185 when he died in buckets of water, kneel upon hard 1724; as was also St. Monagh, whose death occurred in 1781. Some months ago Henri Barbusse, the French author, recounted his visit in Georgia in Transcaucasia to Nikolai Andreyevitch Shapkovsky, who was reputed to be between 142 and 147. One of the most famous of the very aged persons of history was Old Parr, who was said to have been born in England in 1483 and to have died there in 1635. He was working as a farm laborer at the age of 152 when an interested nobleman, the earl of Arundel, took him to London and put him on exhibition where he died a short time later. John Taylor, known as the "Water Poet," got out a book called "The Olde, Olde, Very Olde man," in which he extolled this long excitement, her eyes dark with earnest purpose, but her voice was clear and steady.

"Here are a couple of cookies for you to eat son. The basket is full of them. Run out and see if you can sell some."

"You bet I'll sell them !" cried John, with his mouth full. He dashed downstairs. Mary went to the window and watched him come out from the gloomy doorway into the sunlit street below. The first person he met was an elderly business man hurrying to lunch.

"Good morning, sir !" cheerfully croaked John. "Don't you want to see what I've got in my basket?" He lifted a corner of the snowy towel. "Caraway cookies. My mother made them. She's the best cook in this town. They're warm yet from the oven."

John was staggered for an instant for his mother had not set any price. "How much do you think they're worth?" he asked anxiously.

"Helen! Here!" Mary's voice rang. "Take this money and run out and get a pound of frankfurters, a can of beans and a loaf of bread. You kids have a good, hearty lunch today." She gave the child a gay little push toward the door. Her little venture had won with John's help. She had sold granny's old blue teapot to the second-hand furniture dealer across the way, who had paid her just enough to get the flour and other things she needed for the few dozen cookies she had made. Now she had money enough to buy more supplies, as well as give When the children came home from her children food.

That night when John came home from school he found his mother taking the last of a delicious batch of cookies from the oven of the old stove. "Huh! I'll sell those in half an hour," John promised. "I've got to!" "You've the makings of a fine busi-

For she could not tell her children Helen came running in, her face at this moment when a thousand alight.

What Occurred on Board the JUNE PASTURES IN Marie Celeste.

HEN, on November 7, 1873, the Yankee bark Marie Celeste sailed from New York for Genoa, she Dairyman Should Buy Feed carried a cargo of alcohol in casks and was manned by an able crew commanded by Captain B. S. Briggs, of Marion, Mass. Mrs. Briggs and the captain's two-year-old baby were also on board, as Captain Briggs thought that the fall would be an excellent time for them to cross the Atlantic and get at least a glimpse of Italy. All the ships in the course which the Marie Celeste undoubtedly took aim to have "contented cows" by exreported fair weather during the en- tending the favorable conditions found the month of November but, on De- in June pastures throughout the year cember 4, the bark was sighted by the as far as this is possible. British schooner Dei Gratia not far scurvy or one of the other maladies Boyce launched a small boat and, without the slightest difficulty, boarded the American bark only to find the strangest scene that has ever been reported on the sea!

The Marie Celeste had been aban; doned by every living soul, yet there was not a lifeboat missing nor the slightest trace of a reason for the sudden disappearance of the captain, his wife and the crew!

That everyone had been aboard only a few hours before was apparent from the fact that the fire was still lighted in the galley. An abundance of food and water disposed of the theory that those on board had been driven insane by starvation and had leaped overboard. The sailors' chest, filled with their clothing and containing a considerable amount money, stood in the forcastle. A medicine bottle, standing upright on the table in the captain's cabin, was mute evidence that the bark had not encountered heavy weather, while, upon another table, was Mrs. Briggs' sewing and the impression of the baby's head was still plainly to be seen on the pillow in the crib. Captain Boyce's first action, upon finding this strange scene of silent desolation, was to examine the ship's log. The entries therein covered the entire voyage of the vessel from the time she had left New York until the day that she was discovered, helpless and unmanned. Nowhere in the log was there the slightest indication of any threatened disaster-no mention of a storm or the approach of other craft. The entry for the previous day was brief but complete, while the space for December 4, the day on which the Marie Celeste was boarded by the men from the Dei Gratia contained the only possible clew to the whole affair-a clew which only added to the mystery which surrounded the unfortunate ship. Here, in Captain in Advance at Low Price.

"Knee deep in June," spells just about the last word in dairy feeding. But, while June pastures in winter time are out of the question, it is possible to imitate June the year around, according to successful dairymen.

Taking their cue from nature they

Roy T. Harris, dairy record official from Gibraltar. Puzzled by the manner in Wisconsin for the American Ayrein which the American boat seemed to shire Breeders' association, the Holbe sailing-tacking here and there in stein Friesian Association of America, an aimless desultory fashion as if no the American Guernsey Cattle club, one held her wheel, Captain Boyce of the Brown Swiss Breeders' association the Dei Gratia hailed her, but re- and the American Jersey Cattle club, ceived no reply. Then, fearing that has listed as the assets of a good June her crew had been stricken with pasture, a well balanced ration, plenty of succulence, an abundance of fresh to which sailors are subject, Captain air and sunshine, pure water, and a normal amount of exercise.

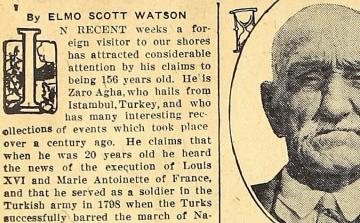

Asked for a 1929 model of a dairy ration, Harris admitted that there are about as many models in dairy feeds as in automobiles. 'He, in common with the dairymen in general, is quite concerned about the bran and feed market. His only solution is that the farmer try to foresee how much feed he will have to buy, and then imitate the large feed companies by buying in advance when the price is low. He appreciates that winter conditions bring their own problems and difficulties and that in place of the ration prepared already for us, by nature, we have to supply feed from various sources which will answer in its stead. He has found one good ration consisting of 25 to 45 pounds of silage, 10 to 15 pounds of clover hay and a grain mixture like the following satisfactory for this year: 30 parts of bran, 40 parts of ground oats of barley, 30 parts cornmeal or hominy feed, and 10 parts oil meal, using one pound of grain mixture for each three to four pounds of milk produced. If roots are used in place of silage 30 to 50 pounds will be necessary.

Pure-Bred Cattle Used to Boost Animal Prices

Cattle buyers who know that "blood will tell" are paying more for the cow that has records in her pedigree to prove her blood, says Prof. H. A. Hopper of Cornell university, who cites the records of the Holstein Friesian association sales from 1925 to 1928 in warning pure-bred breeders to keep testing their herds.

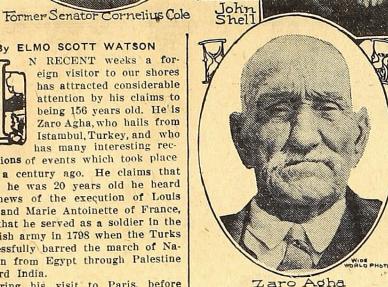

In these sales, cows with long-time records brought an average of $486 each, untested cows from tested dams sold for $223 each, while untested cows from untested dams brought but $183. Heifers from tested dams sold Briggs' handwriting, appeared the for $272 and heifers from untested dams sold for $103. That there is a demand for bulls with good records behind them is shown when the bulls from long-time record dams brought $425 and the bulls from untested dams sold for $121. While considerations other than records may legitimately enter-such as family, physical condition and age, one cannot avoid the conclusion, says Professor Hopper, that records are of major importance.

toward India. During his visit to Paris, before coming to the United States, it was reported that he had "no official documents with stamps or seals to prove his unusual age," but upon his arrival at Providence, R. I., last July he was photographed "exhibiting his birth certificate which is dated . February 16, 1774." As a result of the publicity which this venerable Turk has received, some even more remarkable cases of longevity have been reported. One is a Chinaman, for whom the claim of being 163 years old has been set forth. Another is Ivan Proskuniak, a Russian peasant, who is claimed to be 170 and is said to have been discovered last year by Henri-Barbusse, the French author, in the course of a long trip through the Ural mountains in Russia. M. Barbusse is reported to have declared that "Ivan Proskuniak is an even better preserved specimen of humanity than Zaro Agha. Ivan has all his teeth, eats goulash peppered with powerful spices and chews tobacco, while Zaro can only manage milk and goat's

poleon from Egypt through Palestine

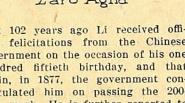

cheese for his diet." But the prize winner so far is another Chinaman if we are to believe the following story which appeared in the New York World recently: "That lively young man from Turkey, Zaro Agha, who claims a mere 156 years of life, must surrender his longevity laurels without a struggle if the life story of Li Chung-yun, whose fame reaches these shores from far off China, is ever authenticated. For Li claims to have entered this world 252 years ago and grown to the prime of manhood 96 years before Zaro was given his first nursing bottle.

that 102 years ago Li received offifelicitations from the Chinese cial government on the occasion of his one hundred fiftieth birthday, and that again, in 1877, the government congratulated him on passing the 200year mark. He is further reported to have found records showing that Li was born in 1677."

Such are the reports which have been widely published in our newspapers during past months. But they have also resulted in discussions in other publications which tend to discredit these stories and bring the weight of scientific testimony to bear out the belief that none of those mentioned are anywhere near the age claimed for them. Recently the New York World expressed its doubt that Zaro Agha was 156 years old and quoted the chief actuary of the New York Life Insurance company to the effect that no authentic record exists of a human life longer than 106 years. "Centenarians are and have always been extremely scarce. There were only slightly more than 4,000 people in the United States in the last census who claimed to have attained that But it is significant that of this number almost 3,000 were negroes; close to 2,000 negro women said they were 100 years old or over. Although negro females form only 5 per cent of the total population, they give the country half its centenarians! "On its face, such a situation is highly improbable, and while we are not questioning the honesty of those who make the claim, we strongly suspect that in the great majority of cases they are mistaken as to the exact number of years they have lived. Many of the old negro people are illiterate, and nearly all of them lack authentic records giving the date of their birth. "In fact, we find that wherever records are absent centenarians rise up and flourish. Turkey and the Balkans have long been a happy hunting ground for centenarians, in spite of the fact that conditions of life are very hard and public health standards are exceedingly low. The claims to extreme old age are nearly always appealing fictions. "In my opinion, authentic centenarians are so few in America that they can be counted on the fingers of one's two hands."

Zaro Agha

Nor does Li concede a thing to the playboy of Istambul in the matter of matrimonial prowess. He claims to have buried 23 wives before taking his twenty-fourth bride, while Zaro led but 11 to the altar.

"One record young Mr. Agha may be welcome to retain as far as Li is concerned: the Turk's claim to be the only man alive who has survived 156 years without a single drink stronger than goat's milk to sustain him is not challenged by the 252-year-old Chinaman. He has never kept track of how much rice wine he may have consumed in the last two and a half centuries. "But LI, like Zaro, does confine himself to his own particular diet, and the item in it which he attributes his hardihood is ginseng root.

"Lest any reader be incredulous of Li's age let us hasten to add that it is vouched for by that eminent scholar, General Pei-fu, who also qualifies as a full-fledged ex-war lord, having captured Peiping after the custom of great military figures in his native land and having once brought all North China under his sway. Fu occasionally takes his pen in hand.

"According to Fu, at whose home the venerable Li lived for some time, the latter is 'an educated man and still possesses a virile mind.' In fact, he recently delivered a series of lectures at the University of Changtu on the art of life in general, with particular emphasis on how to get the most out of each century.

"Li, who eats nothing but herbs, disbelieves strongly in any form of strenuous exercise. 'Golf is the shortest way to a short life,' he told one of his audiences. When he was 217, he added, he himself tried half an hour of tennis, which he regrets to this day, feeling that it shortened his life span at least a decade. A life of harmony in spirit and soul is the essence of his teaching.

"Prof. Wu Chung-chieh, dean of the department of education at Changtu university, has learned, it is reported,

Perhaps most interesting of all "authentic centenarians" which this country has ever known was Cornelius Cole. In 1922 the New York Times printed an interview with him in which he is described thus:

"In 1847 young Cornelius Cole, then twenty-four years old, received his degree of bachelor of arts from Wesleyan university. A short time later came rumors of the gold discovery in California and with a half dozen friends he set out to make his fortune. In 1922, Cornelius Cole, sole survivor of his class, preparing to celebrate his hundredth birthday on September 17, received an invitation from his alma mater to come to Middletown, Conn., and receive an honorary LL. D. In spite of opposition from friends and members of his family who thought the journey too arduous for a centenarian, he came, bringing with him recollections which went back to the thrilling days of '49, and an active legal life that included a friendship with Lincoln, a place in both houses of congress, an interesting part in the purchase of Alaskato say nothing of a live interests in life in prose and verse. Thomas Parr was said to have been married at 120, and after the suitable interval to have become the father of a child. When he died in 1635, the celebrated William Harvey, discoverer of the circulation of the blood, performed an autopsy on him and found his general condition good, though the brain cells were somewhat worn. A reprint of Taylor's book was issued by James Caulfield of London in 1794.

Old Parr's unusual age was accepted until 1873 when W. J. Thoms, deputy librarian of the house of lords, made a real investigation of the case and concluded that about fifty years had been improperly tacked on to the ac-, tual life of Parr. The gentleman was a real centenarian, but little more than that.

Mr. Thoms also exposed two other notorious long-lifers. A certain countess of Desmond was credited with 140 years, but the doubting librarian showed that the ages of two 'separate countesses of the same name had been added together; instead of one person living to 140 years, two women had each lived about 70.

A writer familiar with Mr. Thom's iconoclasm on this subject, a John B. Bailey, wrote a book in 1888 which he called "Modern Methuselahs," and in it he cited a number of instances of well-known centenarians.

He began with St. Anthony, who was said to have lived to 105, but most of his other examples, such as the Emperor Cantacuzenus of the Fourteenth century, Pletho, Cornaro, Titian, De Fontenelle and Amory, were only 99 or 100. The author, however, did list a dozen cases which he believed to have been actually 100 years old or more.

She was almost to wash windows? as helpless as the one-legged hen which John had tenderly insisted upon bringing from his old home. Somebody had given him a chicken with a frostbitten leg. Instead of consigning the plump fowl to the kettle he had made a brace for the useless leg and she now found life so agreeable that she was laying an egg every other day. "Very soon, son," she said, brushing away her tears, "I'll get a job at which you and Helen can both help me. We'll begin tomorrow."

That night Mary lay awake. Her knee was painful, but even more painful were her milling thoughts. What could she find to do in this big place where she knew nobody? But some money must come from somewhere, or the children would have no food tomorrow.

In the early morning hours Mary arose softly so as not to disturb Helen, who slept beside her. Flashlight in hand, she found her grandmother's little worn Bible, a treasure even more precious than the battered blue dishes. Shutting her eyes tight, she opened the book at random and placed her fingertip upon a passage. Grandmother had always done this when in perplexity or trouble and often she had declared that she had found an illuminating message. Opening her eyes, Mary now read with the aid of the flashlight the words upon which her finger rested. They were: "And Hannah made cakes." Pressed between the pages was a small paper, folded, and yellow with age. She opened it wonderingly. Written in/faded brown ink with a painstaking hand was a recipe for caraway cookies.

Mary crept back to bed, shivering, but there was a look of hope on her tired face. Well she remembered granny's tasty cookies. The recipe had been missing a long time. In a moment she was sound asleep. When she awakened next morning she felt more rested than for weeks.

"Well, mother! Have you decided what we're going to do to earn a living this winter?" demanded John as they sat eating their makeshift breakfast.

"I've an idea, son. It appears to be a good one. I'll let you know about It this noon when you get home from school."

That noon when John entered the apartment she handed him a basket covered daintily with a white towel. Her face was flushed with heat and is George Edward Hall."

Mary laughed with a note of joy in her voice.

> "Well, I guess we're all going to be busy as bees this winter," she said. 'If we don't look out we'll be millionaires before we know it. What do you and John want for supper, Helen? We'll have something to celebrate with. Name a real treat."

Helen's blue eyes sparkled merrily up into her mother's face. She gave the final award to Mary's difficult labor.

"Caraway cookies," she said.

Aqueducts Show Skill

of Ancient Engineers

If ever you travel through southern Europe, particularly in Italy and in parts of France, you'll see many a large stone structure stretching" in some cases for miles along the countryside. These look very much like high brick and stone walls containing hundreds of open doorways. If you climb on top of one of these ruined structures, though, you will note that it contains a hollow pipe running throughout its length, and a little study will serve to convince you that the arches which form what you thought was a wall are merely the supports for this long stone pipe. If you could follow such a structure all the way to its end you would find that it reached toward a lake, perhaps up in the mountains, or a river of fresh water, and you might also learn that the other end of the arched wall reached into some large city, perhaps 50 miles or so distant from the water. And you might guess that the entire structure was some sort of method of conveying water from a reliable source to inhabitants. in a distant village or city. Your guess would be correct, for it was by means of such long aqueducts that the ancients brought their water over long stretches of country to places where it was needed.

Most of these old aqueducts are now in ruins and no longer furnishing water, for we have found other ways in which water might be given to inhabitants who live far from freshwater rivers and lakes. But they are interesting to us, for they tell us something of the manners of the people who lived over 2,000 years ago, and they tell us, too, that these people were highly skilled as engineers and as builders.

"Fanny, my dear wife-" That was all. The final letter of the word "wife" ended in a sharp scratch of the pen, as if the captain had been interrupted while making his entry. But what had he been going to write? Why had words of this kind appeared in the log which was otherwise devoted to the briefest of statements concerning the weather and the progress of the bark? One theory, advanced at the time, was that the casks of alcohol in the hold had leaked and that the fumes had rendered everyone on board the ship insane, causing them to jump into the sea. But Captain Boyce's report, filed after his delivery of the bark in Gilbraltar, definitely stated that the cargo had been intact. (C by the Wheeler Syndicate.)

Spirit of Brotherhood

in the Father's House Few American tourists fail to pay a visit to the city of Rheims and its gorgeous cathedral, now happily restored through the generosity of Mr. John D. Rockefeller. What will please that American donor of broad and even catholic mind, we feel, is to know that the cathedral has become the objective of many German pilgrimages and that the people of Rheims are treating the thousands of German fathers and mothers who come to pay a visit to the immense military cemeteries nearby, with dignity and sympathy. Walking through the mystic twilight of the interior of the immense edifice recently, while the organist was practicing up for some coming event, we noticed on a confessional a small card. On it were printed but three words, but those three words in that environment held a world of significance, far more in fact than their literal meaning. The card read: Man Spricht Deutsch (German spoken). As we strolled through the nave and transcept inspecting the restored portions and windows, accompanied by our guide, the gracious Pere Dumesnil, minor canon attached to the cathedral staff, we remarked to him: "Here is a Catholic church in France, restored by the liberality of an American Baptist, with an inscription in German." mansions!"-Pierre Van Paassen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Dairy Hints

Enough grain should be fed to keep the calf growing rapidly.

A cow that will not give more milk than her feed costs had better be sold for beef.

. . . The heifers should not be bred before they are sixteen to eighteen months old. . . .

For a man to succeed in the dairy business, he must stay with it year in and year out.

Regularity of hours in feeding and milking is an important factor in making dairying more profitable. * * *

At six months or before, the bull calves should be separated from the heifers to prevent accidental breeding. * * *

The cream separator should receive attention immediately after use. With hot water available, and a little washing powder, the cleaning up will not prove burdensome as it often is when this job is delayed.

With bucket-fed calves skim milk

may be and usually is continued until the calves are eight to twelve months old.

Under ordinary conditions the cow should be dry six weeks at least and if in poor flesh, two months is better.

This is the season of fall-calving. Extra care of the cow at this time will repay the dairyman. Her grain nil, "in my Father's house are many ration should consist of lazative and cooling feeds; such as ground oats, bran and linseed meal.

Jack Gardner, who lives in the Fifties, was directed as an engineer. Later he was an English naval aviator in the war. Now he is an inventor. He has invented a machine which strips and shreds flax. They used to have to let flax rot, degum it and bleach it before they spun it. Flax fiber comes in lengths of from 12 to 24 inches. Sea island cotton, which I am told, is the best grade, has about a 21/2-inch fiber. By the Gardner method, flax can be cut into short lengths and fed to cotton machines, many of which have been idle. A great many people have the best intentions to answer, but procrastination puts off the evil day until they are ashamed to write or the obligation may pass entirely out of their memory. There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and briskness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin-a doctor's prescription for the bowels-will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other pure ingredients will clean you out thoroughly-without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system form souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxa tive drug stores sell.

Mrs. Micawber was quite right in her predictions. He was only having the experience which most of us have in receiving no answers to our letters. Her husband was asking for financial aid from his wife's relatives, and nothing is so little likely to arouse enthusiasm and bring a quick response in letter writing as a request for money. CHAPTER IV—Continued

-5-"But you have lived in the country?"

"Oh, yes, always, in the summer. My Grandmother Langley had a home in Indiana where my father's quarries are. Why do you ask?"

"Never mind me. Tell me of yourself. This house in the country, and your home on Sheridan road is a long way from here."

Ernestine understood his idea, but she refused to be drawn into such a complicated conversation.

"It is only a few miles," she replied, and he gave an impatient exclamation.

"It is a thousand miles and a hundred years at least," he said. "Tell me about your mother's house." Ernestine thought about it.

"Do you know anything about American period furniture, Mr. Pastano? There is a Duncan Phyfe table, and pierced brass fire-fender, in the living room; four-poster beds upstairs, with hooked rugs and woven counterpanes-all of the things have come into the family honestly, through natural possession, and not from auction rooms. But, of course, you know."

She smiled at him. Her long hands lay together in the immaculate perfection of her yellow chiffon lap. Her voice was low, only for his ears, and though she thought him very strange, she gave him her gravest, youngest courtesy.

"I know nothing about America, at all, it seems."

"It's just the house-I'll take you to see it some day, if you like, although mamma doesn't like people to consider it a museum, as some experts do. Of course, I don't live there since my marriage. We live in a rooming house on Erie stret, and it just shows that furniture and things do not mean so much, for 1 am happier now than I was."

"You have lef' this house of your mother, with pierced brass from your own ancestors, to live in Erie street?" She nooded and smiled again, and she had been unbearably affronted, | tired, too. But, Ernestine, I'm so and she rose and stood pale with anger. Mr. Pastano rose and stood before her, and met with approval the blaze of her eyes. A waiter appeared instantly with her coat, and he took it and wrapped it about her with immense dignity.

"So, go, princess !" he exclaimed, and bowed a little, and looked at her again, his own eyes alight. "You have only my good wishes. It is unfortunate I must confess the title to a place unfit for you, but this place was not made for you. The unfit, the broken, the abnormal must have their haunts, and they are not for others. Some day, perhaps, it will be my fortune that we shall be friends." Every one was staring at them.

Will had risen and stood beside her, smiling uncertainly, not knowing at all what was going forward.

"I want to go home," Ernestine said to him icily.

"Tommy will take you," Will answered easily, "I have to take Mr. Poole to his flat." Ernestine felt herself beginning to tremble with the indignities heaped upon her. She had been so in love. so exposed, that it all hurt her incredibly. She looked about her uncertainly, then laughed and answered Will with composure.

"I don't believe I'll have to depend on Tommy. Here are Lillian and Loring. They'll take me home."

Will swung about in astonishment, and there, indeed, coming through the room uneasily, were Lillian and her lover. Ernestine stood, smiling malignantly, as they came forward.

"Ernestine," exclaimed Lillian, when she was near enough, "I wanted to see you. We went to Mrs. Bennett's, but the maid said you were here, so we followed you. Can you come with us?"

"I was just going," answered Ernestine. "But wait and meet our friends. This is my sister, Miss Briceland, Mrs. Wiston, and Mr. Poole, Lillian, and Monsieur Mostane, and Mr. Wiston of the Sun, and Mr. Underwood, and Mr. Heyward-and this is Mr. Pastano, who owns this charming place. And this is Mr. Hamilton, Mrs. Wiston-" The men had risen and were fumbling over the acknowledgements of the introductions. Ernestine seemed the most composed person present, and no one could have guessed that her knees were trembling.

"We wanted to get on, if you and Will can come with us," said Loring, while Mr. Pastano stood and regarded the newcomers evenly. "I'll come with you, but Will has an engagement before he returns home. Goodby, Mr. Poole. Thank you for the evening." She gave her hand to her host, and happy that I wonder if I can be any happier." Her voice was bright and clear-quick and competent. Ernestine remembered the tears and passion of her own engagement. "You will be happy always. You will," she said with intensity. They left her at the stone steps and watched until she opened the door with her latchkey and disappeared into the dark prison-like house. Then Loring turned the car about and, with Lillian at his side, started back north.

Lillian cuddled against him. "Oh, Lorrie," she said sorrowfully, "she isn't happy. You know she isn't. It wouldn't be so bad for her to be poor, if only he were good to her. But you can see that he neglects her. If he cannot provide for her decently he could at least be a gentleman to her. But after all she has done for him, he mistreats her." "Don't be disturbed about it, darling," said Loring in a low voice. "There's nothing we can do now. Only be good to her and wait for her to waken.'

In Mrs. Bennett's boarding house Ernestine climbed the stairs slowly, feeling herself weak with rage.

CHAPTER V

room was cold, but she was unaware of its temperature or of the frost gathering thick on the window.' Everything was fuel to the flame which burned in her. The longer Will delayed the more her anger grew. His cavalier treatment of her. Tommy could take her home! Mr. Poole needed him. More than anything else, more, she told herself, than the humiliation of Mr. Pastano's scorn was this fact, that Mr. Poole mattered more than she did.

She gave herself up to anger as she had given herself to love-with abandon. Will had neglected her. He had humiliated her. She knew that she would not have cared for any of it so much if she had not been forced to see it through the horrified eves of her sister and Loring. They were pitying her now. She could imagine Lillian's comments, Loring's sympathy. That was the crux of the whole matter. And Mr. Poole, the vile old drunkard! Was this the sort of friendship her marriage was to bring her? She had given up everything for Will-everything! Was he to sacrifice nothing for her? Could he not abandon this adoration of an obscene old man who happened to be a cartoonist? It was not necessary for these gifted people to foregather in

"Don't speak to me!" she cried again, and this time her voice was clear. "I never want to go anywhere with you again."

"Be silent," he commanded in voice low but stern, and his eyes leaped back at her with an anger equal to her own. "Have you lost your wits? Shouting in this place in the middle of the night?"

Ernestine stood, her mouth open a little in amazement at his tone. Hot words trembled upon her tongue. "Undress and get in bed," said Will.

What do you mean, sitting here, without more clothes on, in this icy room? Do you wish to harm yourself?"

She laughed. "You are concerned about my welfare, aren't you?" she taunted him, and for answer he seized her shoulders and gave her a quick little shake.

"Ernestine," he demanded, "will you do as I sav?'

She stood trembling, fighting down the stupid well of tears, reaching out after her departing anger.

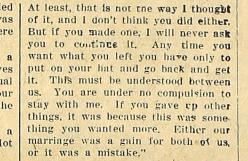

"Will,"-her voice was as low, as vital as his own-"I'm in such a rage that I have got to talk to you. You can't treat me this way. You can't leave me to the courtesy of strangers. You can't take me to such placeswhere there's drunkenness and immorality. You have got to be a better husband to me than that. I have given up everything for you-everything-

"When you are in bed, I'll talk to you," he answered, as he threw off his coat and went to the wardrobe and brought her her warm dressing gown, nightgown and fur-lined moccasins. He undid the fastening of her dress and before she could arm herself against him, he lifted it off over her head. The satin slip, the silken underthings-her body was like cold marble. In a moment, it seemed, she was in nightgown and dressing gown. in bed, and he was drawing off her gossamer hose and chafing her feet in his own cold hands until the mottled skin showed red with blood. Then he tucked her under the covers and brought a chair and sat down beside her, not touching her. Ernestine laughed again.

"If you really cared," she said, her eyes dark with anger and pain, 'whether I were warmly in bed you might have come with me to see."

He was silent. He was very pale. Small beads of perspiration stood upon his forehead in the cold room.

"I am not likely to be ill," she sa'd scornfully. "Don't be afraid of that." Still he did not speak, but looked at her as though he were trying to arrange some momentous decision in his mind. He took a cigarette from his pocket with hands trembling so

"Why don't you go ahead and remind me that I proposed to you?" the said, too helpless in her own emotions to be sensible.

"Did you?" he asked coldly. "I thought the matter was spontaneous. I thought it was inevitable. Don't cheapen yourself with such a thought Didn't Leave You Unprotecture In Reality You Left Me."

But however it happened, it was not a sacrifice. I will not be sacrificed for I don't want anybody to give up ary thing for me. Understand?"

There was a moment of silence, and he went on swiftly:

"It may be that before we are through with this business of marriage it will be really hard for us. I don't know that I'll ever be what your fare ily considers essential in a husband-a good provider. I may never mar. more than a small living for us. Sometimes, like now, I feel such power in me that I could go out and take life by the throat. I feel at times that there are big things in me, Ernestine. But perhaps all human beings fee!

The name "jackaroo" was given to a youth sent by his parents to an Australian sheep or cattle station to learn stock and bush work. As he resided and had his meals with the manager, overseer and storekeeper, but had to work with the station hands, he was generally looked upon as a useless nuisance until he learned things. Having no special job and no status, he was given any job of work, hence a "jack of all work."

The old joke was, he was expected to "jump" at the call of the manager or overseer like a kangaroo. Most jackaroos, if they showed character or pluck, etc., became popular and after four or five years became overseers: or, if they or their relatives had money, they bought a sheep or cattle station or took up a section. -Lieut. "No, I do not understand. If my son is penniless; if he is an artist starving in a garret, and the great, the incredible good fortune come to him that he shall marry a girl of noble birth, who has a quiet voice, and gentle still hands, and a brow where breeding shows its lovely smile-If my son have the grace and the smile of fortune to marry such a girl, and he bring her to a place like this-" He looked about him with scorn. Ernestine's heart stopped beating | tired." in her astonishment. She felt that he put his own hand on her shoulder to steady himself. Loring winced and scowled at this contact, but Ernestine was now in complete command of herself and smiled steadily. Mr. Poole's heavy face, his confusion, did not dismay her. She bade him an affectionate good night, then turned to the others.

"Good night, all of you. I'm sorry to run away, from my own party, but somebody must start. If you will excuse me- Good night, Will. I'll see you later."

She gave Will a luminous look. He did not answer but stared at her silently, and she turned, sweeping her wrap about her, carrying herself like a queen of the realm, and went off, Loring's black bulk between the sisters, his face dark with forebodings. Down the wooden stairs they passed in complete silence. A new sedan stood at the curb, and Loring in majestic silence opened the car door for the girls who got in the back seat. He closed the door and got in the driver's seat and started the engine. Lillian and Ernestine sat close together in the warmth and comfort of the heated upholstered, glass-enclosed interior. Ernestine felt for the first time a poignant homesickness for comfort and convenience.

"Why didn't Will come with us?" asked Loring from the front seat. Ernestine decided to be frank. "You could see that Mr. Poole had been drinking too much, couldn't you? Well, Will felt that he ought to take him home and see that he got there safely. He often does that. They're good friends, you know. And you mustn't think badly of Mr. Poole. He's old, and, really, he is a wonderful man."

"But how about you? How would eral. you have got home? Our coming along was an accident."

"Tommy Tucker would have taken me," said Ernestine calmly. "Or the Wistons, or Monsieur Mostane. I'd have gone home all right."

There was a silence of disapproval and adjustment. The car rolled smoothly along the quiet streets. "Then everything's all right?" asked Lillian diffidently.

"Of course, darling." "I'm so glad. Will you come and have lunch with mamma and me tomorrow and let me tell you all our plans?" "I'll see," said Ernestine. "Now, I'l have to go home. I'm terribly such a place. She burned and trembled as she recalled Pastano's contempt. That strangers should need to instruct her as to her proper place-So absorbing were her thoughts, so wrapped was she in the resounding cadences of her own inner tumult, that she did not hear the outer door nor Will's soft step on the stairs, when at last he came.

"Up yet?" he asked in a husky whisper. "You should have been in bed two hours ago.. It's cold as the devil outside. But what's the matter, kitten? Aren't you well?" "Don't speak to me!" said Ernestine, and the fact that. like himself, she had to lower her voice in consideration for people sleeping on either side that when he lighted it he burned himself, and flung the match away with an angry exclamation.

"Ernestine," he said, turning to her, "there is one thing that I will never take from you. You are hysterical now, but no matter how angry, how sick or upset you are, there is one thing that you must never say to me. Never again. I won't take it from you."

He drew the smoke into his lungs with an effort at self-control, while she stared up at the blur of him, her dark eyes swimming with tears. "I didn't know that you gave up anything for me," he said. "I thought this marriage was on both sides the satisfying of a strong need. I never asked you to make a sacrifice for me.

that way. There are other moments when I'm not even sure that I can hold the job I have. What theu! Maybe there is worse ahead of us, instead of better. What of that? I'c we love each other, or don't we? Are we married, or are we simply having a lovely time and will go home when the party is over? You can do as you like. I will not interfere with your actions, but neither will I come home and account for my own. If Mr. Poole is drunk and it seems necessary to me to go home with him, you must allow me the exercise of my own judgment I didn't leave you unprotected. In reality, you left me." "It wasn't only that." She was actually defending herself. "It was everything. Lillian and Loring coming in on us, and Mr. Pastano-' Half weeping, still partly in the hold of anger, she told him all that Mr. Pastano had said to her. He listened attentively, but made nothing of it.

"What do you care," he exclaimed, "what that bully says? It's only a compliment. It's only a denial of his whole code of morals. The fact that you could sit in his dirty place and still be so clean that even he could see it, gives the lie to all he says."

"I don't understand anything," wailed Ernestine. "Only I was so hurt- I had to go off alone with them. You might have come with me. I was so happy, so thrilled, and then everything was spoiled without any warning. I can't adjust myself to things like you do-I don't under stand. Of course I care what Mr. Pastano thinks. I don't want bim to think you would take me out to associate with p-prostitutes !"

He sat on the edge of the bed now and held her hand and smoked another cigarette and thought about this. But they had come back into a calmer place. He began to reason with ack in his steady voice, looking down at her with his kindled, intelligent eyes. "You see, Ernestine, he's got the old line on things, and we, I believe, want the new. Pastano's morality and vit tue are only for women. I've been there often, and he's made me very welcome. How unreal it is. Virtue a woman's prerogative, and a stone wall about her to insure it. A harem! You don't believe in walled gardens for wives, do you, Ernestine? After all, no man can protect his wife'a virtue for her, if she is determined te throw it away."
