TAWAS CITY SCHOOL NOTES

High School
The annual election for the president of the student council and a representative from each of the four high school classes took place last Friday afternoon.

Regular ballots containing the names of the respective candidates were prepared, and all of them were properly numbered, initialed, etc. The election board found that the following were the successful candidates: President of Student Council—William Leslie; Senior Representative—Marcella Low; Junior Representative—Viola Burtzloff; Sophomore Representative—Clare Thompson; Freshman Representative—The one Lincoln.

Some of the defeated candidates threaten to demand a re-count, but we trust that the undoubted efficiency of the election board will prevent this action.

The botany class made its annual pilgrimage Tuesday in search of the common barberry plant. The means of identifying this harmful plant from the harmless Japanese variety, which is used as an ornament in some sections of Tawas City, was noted.

Preparations are now being made for eleven car loads of high school students to attend the football game Saturday at Ann Arbor as guests of the University of Michigan.

Report cards will be given to the pupils in all departments next Wednesday. Parents and pupils are requested to co-operate with the faculty in order to secure the prompt return of these cards.

The painting of the school house is progressing finely. This is a much needed improvement, and one which will add considerably to the appearance of the school plant. More playground equipment has also been added to the grounds at both the main building and the Ward school. All should appreciate the effort which the Board of Education is making to improve conditions for the pupils.

Our baseball team was defeated by the Iosco County Normal team last Thursday by a score of 12-9. Our team outthrew the Normals, 13 to 7, but the inability of our boys to field and the wildness of our pitchers were enough to offset all our advantages in hitting. Allan Herriman and Louis Frank divided the pitching for our team, while Ferris Brown, who pitched for us last year, performed a similar duty for our opponents. Our line up was as follows: Martin Zollweg, third base; Allan Herriman, pitcher and shortstop; Louis Frank, shortstop and pitcher; Alvin Cholger, first base; Albert Zollweg, second base; James Mark, right field; Hugo Wajohn, left field; Clair Thompson, catcher; William Leslie, center field; Marvin Mallon, left field; Albert Quick left field.

Seventh and Eighth Grades
We have been studying the British Isles the last week, in seventh grade geography class. George Tuttle gave a very interesting report on ship building in the United Kingdom.

Several of the boys from our room played on the high school baseball team last Thursday. They were Marvin Mallon and Albert Quick.

The attendance in this room has been very nearly perfect this far. Report cards will be given out Wednesday. Parents and pupils are requested to co-operate with the faculty in order to secure the prompt return of these cards.

LOCALS LOSE IN HOT CONTEST; SCORE 8 TO 6

Tawas City was again defeated by the East Tawas nine at the local athletic field last Sunday in one of the most hotly contested battles in which either team participated this season. Sunday's victory for East Tawas, which came as the result of an 8 to 6 score, marked the third defeat they handed to the locals this year.

Smith of Tawas City, and M. Lixey, of East Tawas, were the opposing hurlers in this contest. Behind them, the boys of both squads were tensed with battle and fighting hard for the lead, accompanied by loud acclamations and tumultuous outbursts from the large crowd of excited fans, which more than once raised havoc with the progress of the game.

Smith pitched good ball, and well deserved to win. He allowed but seven hits, and when he relinquished the mound to Boulder at the end of the eighth the tally stood 6 to 6. Boulder went through the ninth without allowing a hit, but errors by his mates gave East Tawas their winning runs.

M. Lixey went the entire route for East Tawas in good style. Although the locals hammered him hard for a total of thirteen safeties, including two triples and a double, he was never in a very dangerous position, and accumulated a total of twelve strikeouts during the course of the contest.

Next Sunday Tawas City will play a return game with National City at the local athletic field.

CAMPFIRE GROUP HOLDS FIRST MEETING OF YEAR

Chickagaumi Campfire group held its first meeting for the year at the Horton cottage at Sand Lake Friday, September 19, with seventeen members present. Mrs. Wm. Leslie, guardian, Mrs. McLean, assistant guardian, Mrs. Horton and Janet McLean were also in attendance.

Directly after their arrival a sumptuous dinner was served on the large porch, after which the council fire was held out of doors around a large camp fire, and an excellent program was enjoyed.

The wood gathers rank was then conferred to the following girls: Dorothy Roach, Dora Mark, Lulu Robinson, Mina Brown, Anna Metcalf, Jessie King, Agnes Roach, Mildred Quick, Doris Brugger, Arlene Leslie.

The fire extinguishing ceremony was in charge of the younger girls of the group.

Following this each girl told why she enjoyed Campfire.

The girls greatly appreciated Mrs. Horton's kindness for entertaining them so royally. They are planning a hike next week and to cook supper out of doors, after which three members of the Blue Bird group will be taken into membership in Campfire.

EAST TAWAS M. E. LADIES SPONSOR MUSICAL PLAY

You will enjoy the rural comedy, "Miss Blue Bonnet," with its music, beautiful costumes, and clever plot. Dr. and Mrs. Evans have an old maid daughter, Magnolia, whom they wish to marry off. Dr. Evans suggests that Magnolia take Hickory Stout, who chances to be the laughing stock of the community because he spends his time fooling with a lot of frogs in a muddy pond. Mrs. Evans prefers Burton Hills, the gospel singer, for a son-in-law. She is at a loss to know how to bring this match about, when suddenly one day her prayers seem to have been answered.

"Miss Blue Bonnet," appears lecturing on "Psychology," telling the people how to get anything they want. The men are crazy about her, the girls are jealous, everybody is excited, one amusing incident follows another, until in the last scene Stout starts everybody by coming in with his clothes wringing wet and announcing that Magnolia sassed him and he pushed her in the frog pond and has just fished her out, and they are on their way to the minister to be married. So all ends happily.

The Doctor's chorus and the Frog chorus, composed of small boys and girls in fancy costume, are sure to prove popular. Also the chorus of older girls.

"Miss Blue Bonnet" will be presented under the auspices of the East Tawas M. E. Ladies Aid October 3 and 4, 8:00 p. m., Central Standard time, at the Community Building. Single tickets, 25c and 50c; family tickets, $2.00.

The cast of characters includes Mrs. Frank R. Dease, Mrs. Robert Newman, Mrs. J. S. Harrington, the Misses Clara Bolen, Edith Davey, Cora Davey, Helen Misener, Dorothy Bigelow, Bessie Metcalf, Arthur Bigelow, Jas. King, Norman Merschel, Squire Wood, Frank R. Dease and others.

COMPLETE CONSTRUCTION OF NEW CONCRETE BRIDGE

The beautiful new concrete bridge at the mouth of Tawas river was completed last Thursday by Walter Toebe & company, contractors, of Shingleton, Michigan. The work was under the personal supervision of Emmet Welch.

The construction of the bridge was started April 15. It is 70 feet in length, 30 feet wide with a five foot walk on each side. The bridge was built in anticipation of the proposed Huron Shore road. A survey of the right of way for the road is now being made north of East Tawas.

WHITTEMORE P. T. A. HOLDS FIRST MEET OF YEAR

The Whittemore Parent-Teachers called the first meeting of the new school year last Monday night. More than sixty attended—a wonderful start toward a large membership.

Mrs. Chas. Schuster, president, conducted a very interesting business meeting, during which members offered many profitable ways in which the association might dispose of some of the treasury's surplus. Several goals were suggested toward which we might work in the future. Members were asked to consider the latter until the next meeting, that a more definite conclusion might be reached.

Supt. F. L. Stelter described to the few members the purpose and aim of the association. He urged all present to be with us again on October 13 at 8:00 o'clock in the evening, and bring their friends and neighbors. An evening of fun and profit is assured. Come in and get acquainted. We want to meet you.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES

The Normal and Tawas City high school met in a fast baseball game last Thursday, the Normal winning by a 12 to 9 score. The following is the line-up for the Normal: Brown, p; Wendt, c; Durant, ss; Lomas, 2b; Siegel, 1b; Bigelow, lf; Bowman, cf; Turner, 3b; Robinson, rf.

On October 3 we will play Oscoda high at Oscoda. Again we are looking for an exciting game.

We have just signed application for the series of health lectures connected with the State Department of Health, which will start sometime this fall. The series will include the discussions of personal health, prevention and control of the classroom contagion, inspection of school children, mouth hygiene, organized play periods, visual aids in teaching health, and the new state course of study in health education for rural schools.

BILLY HAINES COMING IN HIS LATEST PICTURE

"Way Out West," showing at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Sunday and Monday, September 23 and 24, has some bright moments—especially when Cliff Edwards is present. And Lella Hyams is excellent. In fact everybody in the cast does good work.

The picture moves along at the usual Haines wise-cracking rate of speed and then gets real exciting during a pursuit over the domiciles of Indians in what looks like Arizona or New Mexico.

Bill Haines is a side show barker with a circus and takes some cowboys for a trimming on a crooked roulette game. Just come and see what happens to Bill. It's very funny. Shows at 7:00 and 8:30, Central Standard time.

NOTICE

All dog taxes should be paid to the county treasurer or sheriff before October 20. Chas. W. Curry, Sheriff of Iosco County.

DAVID M. LOW

David M. Low, for many years a resident of Iosco county, passed away on Tuesday morning, September 16, at the age of 56 years and 12 days.

The deceased was born at Midland on September 4, 1874. As a young man he removed with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Low, to the Hemlock road, where he spent his childhood. On April 6, 1910, he was united in marriage to Mary Esy Freel. To this union five children were born. His wife and one child preceded him in death. The family resided on the Townline until the death of Mrs. Low on May 9, 1920. For several years Mr. Low has been a patient sufferer from epilepsy, caused from an injury which he received when a young man. For the past five years he has been a patient at Wahjamega, where he was at the time of his death.

Those left to mourn are: four children, Mrs. Sarah Champagne of Ypsilanti, Marcella Low of Tawas City, Myrtle and William Low of Ypsilanti; an aged step-mother, Mrs. Daniel Low of Plymouth; two sisters, Mrs. Martin Long of Tawas City, Mrs. John Kennedy of Flint; a step-sister, Mrs. William Parks of Ypsilanti; four brothers, Thomas and Al. Low of California, Dan and James Low of Stratford, Canada; also two grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Friday afternoon from the L. D. S. church, Rev. M. A. Sommerfield officiating.

Out of town relatives who attended the funeral were, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Champagne and two children, Myrtle and William Low, Mrs. Daniel Low and Mrs. William Parks of Ypsilanti, Mr. and Mrs. John Kennedy and son, Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Forbes of Flint, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McARDLE of Alpena.

COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS WILL MEET

It is the earnest desire of the committee in charge, that this year's gathering of Sunday school workers be something more than "just another convention." It is fitting that our worldwide plan, observe the anniversary of Pentecost, Nineteen hundred years ago, following the ascension of Christ. His followers gathered together "with one accord" to await the gift of the Holy Spirit. We are all familiar with that history-making event, Peter's great sermon, and the receiving of three thousand souls into the church.

In the spirit of this Pentecost of old, the Sunday school forces of Iosco county are asked to meet, "all with one accord in one place," for mutual inspiration and renewed consecration.

The opening session of the convention meets Friday evening, October 10, 7:00 o'clock Central Standard time, at the East Tawas M. E. church. A beautiful pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross," will be presented by seven young ladies. Those who have seen this pageant in other cities assure us it is a production worth going a long way to see. A short address by one of Bay City's outstanding speakers will follow the pageant.

Promptly at 9:30 Saturday morning the group will re-convene for a devotional service, followed by the business session and an informal talk by one of the visiting speakers.

The noon recess is planned to mean much socially. A basket dinner, with plenty of time for good fellowship, is sure to prove most enjoyable.

At 1:30 p. m. two conferences will meet. Those who are workers with children are promised a real treat in the presence of the leading children's workers of Saginaw county. Of equal interest will be the general conference led by Rev. Halpenny of the state staff.

At 3:00 p. m. the groups will assemble for a brief devotional period, the presentation of the pantomime, "Spring in the Brown Meadow," and a short talk by the children's worker.

The climax of the convention will come at the Saturday evening session, when some twenty-five Juniors present the lovely candle light drama, "The Light of the World."

Honoring Two Great Chieftains

CHIEF QUANAH PARKER OF THE COMANCHES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
AMERICAN Indian day, which is being celebrated on September 20 this year, is a day for honoring the virtues and achievements of the original inhabitants of this continent. In connection with that celebration it is worthy of note that an enduring monument has recently been erected to one of the greatest leaders of the red men and that plans are under way for erecting a monument to the memory of another.

Down near Cache, Okla., in the shadow of the Wichita mountains where he spent the last years of his life, both red men and white gathered a short time ago to unveil a monument to the memory of Quannah Parker, chief of the Comanches. The monument was made possible by congress, which appropriated $1,500 for the purpose some time ago, but this memorial came into being through the efforts of a patriotic woman, Mrs. Lena Banks of Cache, Okla., for whom its completion represented the paying of a debt of gratitude.

Many years ago Mrs. Banks' parents lived near Cache. One day her mother fell ill and lapsed into a coma from which her family feared she would not recover. Chief Quannah, who was their neighbor, came in while the mother was ill. Looking at her, he turned to Mrs. Banks' father and said: "All right, judge, you wait. Me be back pretty quick." Mounting his horse he rode away, but returned within a short time with some native medicine which he administered. Then he remained by the white woman's bedside until the crisis had passed and her recovery was assured.

Quannah died February 23, 1911, and was buried on a high knoll in an Indian cemetery near Cache. Several years ago Mrs. Banks visited the cemetery and found that the Indian chief's grave was unmarked, although a large memorial had been placed over the grave of Cynthia Ann Parker, his mother, a short distance away. The white woman who remembered with gratitude how the Indian had saved her mother's life immediately began to work on the project of erecting a memorial over his grave. She enlisted the aid of the Oklahoma senators and congressmen and after many vicissitudes saw her ambition realized in the monument which now marks Quannah Parker's grave.

The story of this Indian leader is one of the most romantic in all American history. Although he was a great war chief of one of the wildest tribes of the plains, Quannah was not a full-blooded Indian. He was the son of an Indian father and a white mother. The story goes back to the early thirties when John Nathaniel Parker led a party of settlers into Comanche county in Texas. Associated with him were several brothers with their wives, sons and married daughters. For two years they lived in peace in their new home. Then, one morning when most of the men were in the field, about 600 Comanche warriors swooped down upon their fort, destroyed it, killed most of the colonists who remained and carried off a number of women and children. Among the captives were a girl of nine, Cynthia Ann Parker, and her six-year-old brother, John.

One day in 1860 Major L. S. ("Sully") Ross of the Texas forces attacked a Comanche village at the head of the Pease river. The Indians, taken by surprise, scattered in all directions.

Among the captives was a fair-haired, blue-eyed squaw, who was weeping and lamenting. She had with her an infant girl. During the raid her two small sons and her husband had disappeared. She was distressed by the fear they had been killed. However, they had all escaped.

The Texans were familiar with the Parker story and thought perhaps this woman might be the long-lost Cynthia Ann. They took her and her daughter, Prairie Flower, back to Texas with them.

During her captivity her parents had died. Her uncle, Col. Isaac Parker, took her to his home and then her story became known. After the Parker raid she was carried to the hunting grounds of the Comanches in the Wichita mountains. There she grew up among the tribe, learned their language, adopted their customs, forgot her native tongue, and became bronzed and featured like an Indian. When she became of marriageable age—probably about her fifteenth year—she became the wife of Chief Nacona, one of the most noted and warlike men of the tribe. Three children were born to her, little Prairie Flower and the two boys who had escaped in the raid. One of the boys was Quannah Parker, who succeeded his father to the chieftainship.

Quannah—the Parker was added later—was a leader from boyhood. In his early teens he headed a band of fearless raiders. He stole horses from Mexicans numbering into the thousands. While still quite young he became the great war chief of the Comanche nation.

Implacable, he refused to compromise with the whites who sought by treaty to deprive his people of their lands. Although half white, Quannah Parker was all Indian in sentiment; fiercely he rejected the Medicine Lodge treaty, refusing to sign away the Indians' rights. Gathering such kindred spirits about him, he walked out of the conference. But though he refused to sign the treaty, Quannah Parker determined no whites should pass the boundary. And when the buffalo herds of the North diminished and disappeared, he knew it would not be long before the white men would forget the treaty and again invade Indian land. So Quannah Parker waited and watched, and when the hunters crossed the Arkansas river, Quannah Parker knew that the time had come for war.

He resolved first to attack a party of hunters who had established themselves at an old trading post on the Canadian river, known as Adobe Walls. The result was the now-famous battle at that place where the hunters with their great Sharps buffalo guns successfully withstood repeated attacks by Quannah's warriors and finally caused Quannah to retire, baffled in the first objective of his campaign. Within a short time Gen. Nelson A. Miles was in the field with a body of troops which forced the surrender of most of the hostiles.

But Quannah refused to surrender. For nearly a year he held out, then realizing the futility of trying to resist further, he gave up the struggle and declared his intention of "following the white man's road."

The other great Indian whose memory is to be preserved in an enduring monument is Chief Joseph of the Nez Percés, one of the greatest military leaders ever developed on this continent and a man who won for himself the title of the "Indian Napoleon." Two years ago congress created a national monument in Montana, the site of the battle of the Bear's Paw where in 1877 Gen. Nelson A. Miles captured Chief Joseph and his tribesmen after one of the most brilliant retreats in the history of Indian warfare. During the last congress a bill was introduced providing for the erection of a monument there which would commemorate the achievements of the great Indian soldier and preserve for future generations the memory of him as a patriot and a man.

Here briefly is the achievement of Chief Joseph during that remarkable retreat: Encumbered with women and children, which he refused to desert and allow to fall into the hands of the soldiers as he might have done several times to facilitate his flight, and having a fighting force that never exceeded 300 warriors, he fought eleven engagements, five of them pitched battles of which he lost but one; in the other six skirmishes he killed 126 and wounded 140 of the 2,000 soldiers who fought him, but he lost 151 killed and 88 wounded of his own people. Then having distanced his pursuers and knowing that he was only 50 miles from the Canadian line and safety (for he did not know of the approach of General Miles' troops) he made the fatal mistake of stopping for a little while to give his weary tribesmen a chance for a brief rest.

Here in the Bear Paw mountains, where the memorial to him is to be erected, General Miles attacked on September 30, 1877. For five days Joseph and his little band, greatly outnumbered, withstood the attack of Miles' soldiers. Finally artillery was brought to bear upon their defenses and on October 4 Chief Joseph gave up the contest. He never fought again.

LEADER IN GERMANY

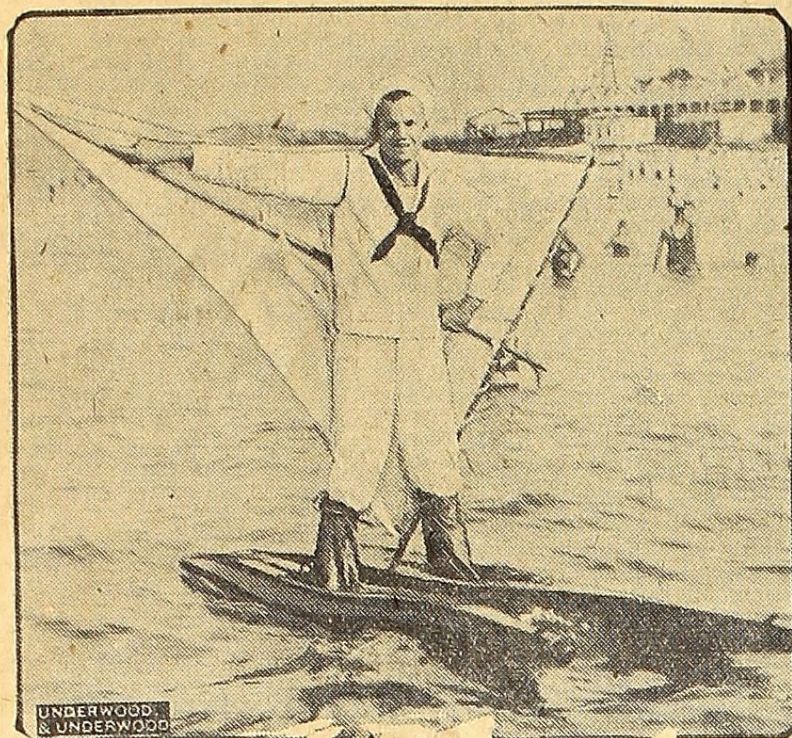

Sensational to a degree unequaled in German post-war politics is the sudden rise to leadership of Adolf Hitler, Austrian author of the Munich Putsch in 1923, who has become a political power of the first rank as a result of the Fascist landslide in the recent reichstag general election. The party's power advanced from 12 to 107 seats. The Fascist party ranked second only to the Socialists in the official final totals and, with the Communists, who also advocate overthrow of the young German republic, has more backing than any other party excepting the Social Democrats.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

George, famous headwaiter at the Algonquin, came to New York from one of the happy isles of Greece, by way of Constantinople. George is acquainted with practically everyone who enters his dining room, so when Frank Case, owner of the hotel, saw a man eating there one day whom he never had seen before, he asked George the customer's name. George replied that he was Mr. Soandso.

"No," said the man, "it just looks as if he did." Mr. Case followed directions and found his way without difficulty.

James Montgomery Flagg was driving down Long Island to visit friends at East Hampton. He also lost his way, but finally arrived, in a state of some indignation.

"They should find some other name for these Long Island towns," he said. "Hampton gets a little wearing. I've been in South Hampton, West Hampton, and Hampton Bays. Now I'm here in East Hampton. The fact is that I have visited all the Hamptons, except Ben Hampton and Walter Hampton."

Most visitors to New York, including the prince of Wales, manage at one time or another to get to Long Island, which is a body of land entirely surrounded by history.

This history goes further back than the formation of the United States is attested by the fact that the north end of the island was built by deposits along the front of the continental glacier. Birds from the arctic and the tropics visit its shores. Indian tribes gave their names to the island's towns. There is, for example, Montauk, Shinnecock, Manhasset, Patchogue, Canarsie—they sound like Scotch Indians—Setauket, which took its name from the Sealot tribe, and towns derived from the Nesaquages. There also are Dutch towns, such as Flatbush, which originally was Vlacte-Bosch, and Brooklyn, which was Breucklen. Bushwick, first settled by Swedes and Norwegians, once was Boswilek. Hempstead, the Hamptons, Hastings, Brookhaven and Oyster Bay, of course, were English. Other towns, such as Rockaway and Blue Point, gave their names to oysters.

Long Island always has been a great place for artists and writers. Take, for instance, the town of Bellport, named for that old sea captain and ship builder, Thomas Bell. There, at various times have lived Mary Roberts Rinehart, Walter and Louise Cross Hale, James and May Wilson Preston, P. G. Wodehouse, Heywood Brown, Ernest Lawson, William J. Glackens and Everett Shinn. Such actors as Harry Warner and Ernest Lawford have resided there. Elmer Sperry, of gyroscopic fame, lived there. Bernard Baruch spent some time there. So did Arthur M. Hopkins. This well-known producer now has a summer home at Great Neck, where he can cast any play merely by calling the names of actors from the porch of the golf club.

Out toward the further end of the island, at Easthampton, you will find homes belonging to Irvin S. Cobb, Ring Lardner, Percy Hammond, and Grantland Rice. Arthur William Brown has a place there this summer, and here at Easthampton was the house where John Drew lived for so many years. I used to sit on his porch with him while he told me stories of how, when he was young, he used to school horses to jump in the adjoining lot.

Long Silence Between Business Partners

Findlay, Ohio.—Brothers-in-law and partners in business in this town have worked side by side without speaking for twenty years. They are E. A. Moser and E. Meyer, pharmacists, and makers of a secret formula chocolate soda.

The drug store, located at the junction of the Dixie and Benjamin Franklin highways, has been visited night after night by the people of Findlay and the adjoining towns for the last 20 years, and in all that time the townspeople assert they have never heard Mr. Moser directly address his brother-in-law.

The story of their strange conduct causes many patrons to park their cars along the old-time hitching railing in the hope of seeing the two men and Mrs. Moser, who acts as a go-between.

Customers enter the store and carry out their trays to the waiting automobiles. Usually Mr. Meyer takes care of the soda business with the assistance of his sister, Mrs. Moser, while Mr. Moser is seen in the drug department. Conversations, if any, are along business lines, and Mrs. Moser, a little old woman with snow-white hair, carries the answers back and forth.

It is said that an altercation twenty odd years ago over certain transactions caused a rift but did not break up the partnership nor the household arrangements.

Mr. Meyer, a bachelor, has lived with his sister and brother-in-law for many years. Friends state that during all those years they have left the store singly at closing time. Mrs. Moser starts first, and when she has reached the Gorrell hotel her husband is seen coming out of the drug store. Shortly afterward his brother-in-law locks up the store.

When confronted with this story in the drug store, where the two men have kept shop twenty-three years out of their thirty-four together, Mr. Meyer, who is red-haired and much younger than either his sister or brother-in-law, said in a shy and embarrassed manner that he, too, had heard such talk.

He admitted that maybe at one time there were differences between the two. He became much more loquacious when asked about his discovery of the soda formula.

On Mondays, when he does his mixing, the back door is barricaded and the front door watched. No one is permitted to see even so much as a stirring.

"No one knows the formula except my sister," he said, standing between glass cases and ceiling-high mahogany open shelves that date back to the early history of drug stores. "I experimented and experimented twenty years ago and I perfected it. Twelve years ago I became very ill, and during that time the store could serve no chocolate sodas, because no one knew the formula. I was too sick to talk, but I wrote down the directions, so that my sister could carry on the work."

er self-reliance and independence of thought.

Before I attempted to gain entrance into college I had but one teacher who had ever progressed farther than the grammar school before beginning to teach, and while in college I was under the instruction of but one man who had ever earned in course a higher than the bachelor's degree, and yet I cannot feel that I was particularly handicapped. I might be much wiser today than I now am if I had had better teachers, but perhaps I should have weaker powers of independent thought.

Brown was in to see me a few weeks ago concerning the scholastic progress of his son. The boy isn't getting on well and the father thinks that the cause of his son's mediocre accomplishment is the fact that he is being badly taught. The intellectual road is hard for him, and no one is making it as smooth and easy as he would like, and as he thinks should be done. The boy wants to be shown; he wants to be taken by the hand and led sympathetically through the confused mazes of education. He has no inclination to blaze his own trail, to find his own way, to climb unassisted over the obstacles which lie in his intellectual path. Neither Brown nor his son assume an unusual point of view. They have the general attitude that education should be made as simple and easy as possible. But that is not the way that either the mind or the body is trained.

The greatest scientist and the greatest teacher I have ever known—one of the greatest in this country and one whose name is familiarly known over the civilized world, died a few months ago. He was a specialist in a half dozen fields when most men are quite contented to star in one. He could read and speak a half dozen languages, and though he was par excellence a scientist, he was versed in history and philosophy and literature.

"In no one of the various subjects which I have taught," he said once, "have I ever had one hour of formal teaching. I have worked things out for myself."

No one had ever made the road easy for him. He was eager for knowledge, and he blazed his own trail.

As I said, no one stands for good teaching more than I do. It is helpful, but it isn't essential if one is really eager for an education.

Ancient Chinese documents were sometimes signed by fingerprints impressed into clay seals.

Joffre Monument to Be Comrades' Gift

Paris, France.—Marshal Jacques Cesare Joffre, victor over the onrushing Germans at the Marne river, refuses to have another statue erected in his honor unless it is financed by the soldiers he formerly commanded. A limit of one franc apiece, approximately four cents, is the maximum which any ex-service man can contribute.

For some time there has been agitation for construction of a monument to the savior of the Marne at Rivesaltes, in the department of the oriental Pyrenees, where the marshal was born seventy-eight years ago.

M. Rene Mannaut, under-secretary of the interior, was charged to ask Marshal Joffre's permission for erection of the statue in his home town. The old marshal smiled grimly and told the government agent he would consent only on the condition that every cent of the money be collected by voluntary subscription from the soldiers he commanded. He set the limit of each contribution at one franc.

His terms were accepted and already contributions of one franc are pouring in from every province in France and from many corners of the world, because the marshal included the allied soldiers in his stipulations.

The monument is now being executed by the famous French artist, Mailland, and it is expected it will be dedicated before the end of the year.

A 16,000-Mile Migration

Most birds, although not all, migrate from climate to climate yearly. The record is said to be held by the golden plover, whose breeding ground is the shores of the Arctic ocean. Each year it migrates 8,000 miles southward to the north coast of South America, or an annual round trip journey of 16,000 miles.

GOOD TEACHING AND EDUCATION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK, Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

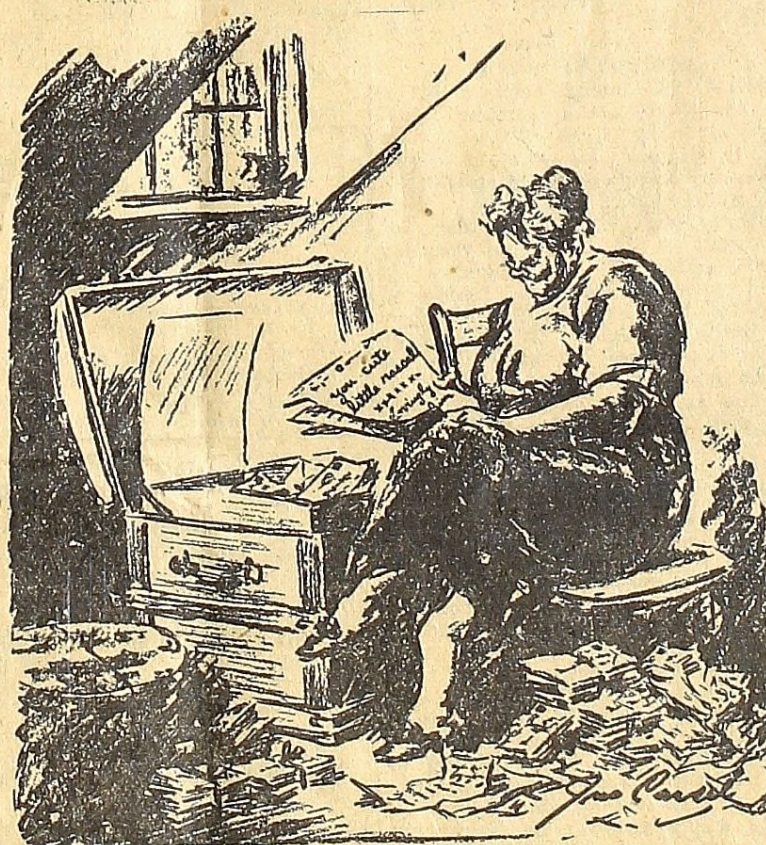

No one believes more than I do in the desirability of having good teaching in our schools and colleges and no one more than I deprecates the fact that so many of those engaged in teaching are not adequately prepared and not especially interested in those they teach. And yet I am convinced that the intellectual progress of a child or a youth depends far more upon his own interest and persistence and determination to improve his mind than it does upon the sort of teachers he has. A poor teacher may even be a stimulus to greater effort upon the part of a student than otherwise and may result in his great-

MOTHER PROBLEMS

By Mrs. Dorothy Coffeen

Taking Children Too Literally

THE other day a visitor came to our house and Bobby with true instincts of hospitality, endeavored to entertain her while Mother engaged in a lengthy telephone conversation. When she returned she was just in time to hear the last of an appalling tale in minutest detail by Bobby. "An' along I came with a gun, no I mean a sword and out from behind a bush jumped a horse as big, as big—as a mountain! An' I killed him 'fore he could kill the lady."

"Why Bobby," said our visitor, "you mustn't tell things that aren't true." "But it was true," cried Bobby, and he burst into tears. He had been taught that an untruth was a dreadful thing.

Mother had to smooth the situation as best she could for the time being but the visitor had missionary tendencies and could not let what seemed to her such a dire crime go unnoticed. When Bobby had gone out to play she took great pleasure in painting in vivid red the results of such stories, and then she left. That night when Mother was undressing Bobby for bed, because it worried her a little, she opened again the subject of the "horse as big as a mountain."

"Bobby, what made you tell Miss So-and-so about a horse as big as a mountain?"

"Because there really was one mother, and what do you think?" Whereupon Bobby went on for fully five minutes more about this extraordinary creature, the details growing larger and more impossible every minute. Finally he stopped—"And wasn't it good he was killed, Mother?" And mother being an exceedingly human person just took him up in her arms and laughed. "I'm sorry he had to be," she said, "but Bobby, where did you ever hear such a thing?"

"Of course it's just a story, Mother," he replied, "But really that horse was as big as a mountain."

And suddenly, somehow, Mother did not feel at all alarmed that her son should fabricate so impossible a story. She felt a certain joy that he was able to do so, and she was right.

Bobby's imagination is a tremendous power for good development and a wise parent will recognize it and use it as the most perfect teaching assistant known. A wise parent will also study it and watch it, however, to see that it is not unbalancing the child's ability to adjust himself to the world of facts.

Making Childish Efforts Important

THERE was a day not long ago when every available space in the kitchen was completely hidden by preserving kettles, mountainous piles of fruit parings and glass jars. It was a day for saints. We were not saints. In the midst of our confusion we tripped over a dustpan full of dirt, scattering its contents into nearly every corner of the room. Then, at this critical moment the four-year-old son in our house offered his assistance.

"I'll help you Muvver," he said. So we took one broom and he took another and together we went at that pile of dirt. Every time we succeeded in collecting the pile, Johnny in his efforts to sweep the particles a little closer only managed to scatter them all over again. Soon we saw the hopelessness of getting it done quickly with Johnny around so we rather hastily took the broom away from him with the words, "Mother can do it best, Johnny," and then we bustled him out to play.

That was in the morning when everything seemed against us. But that night when Johnny was curled up in his bed with his favorite shabby old teddy bear reposing snugly under one arm, we said something else, something like this: "How I wish my baby need never grow up!" and suddenly as we bent over to kiss him we remembered the hurt look of disappointment that had crossed his face when we had so hastily taken the broom away from him and ignored his willingness to help.

What we had done? Only a little thing it seemed at the time, but now as we reflected, we had deliberately and thoughtlessly belittled his ability to serve us. The next time he would be a little less quick to offer his help at all. But that was not all we had done. We had deprived him of the opportunity to control and conquer a thing that was unwieldy for him, and difficult for his childish hands to do. He had wanted to, both for us and for the pleasure in achievement but we had forestalled his effort by taking the broom out of his hand.

When nerves are on edge, patience lessens. A multitude of duties are calling to be done and we are blind to the moment's importance. It becomes easier and easier to do things just for "peace sake." If only we could remember how vital are these little incidents to the full and rich development of the children how much more we would strive to believe that in the great chain of circumstances of which life is made there are no such things as trivial moments for each is connected with one before and one after and their connection cannot be ignored.

Worm Rain Hits London

Worms rained on Brentford gardens, London, during a recent thunderstorm. Thousands of them were found afterward. They were from 4 to 6 inches long and almost transparent, varying in thickness from the size of a human hair to that of a horsehair. Instead of keeping to the soil, they immediately mounted the stems and leaves of small plants. Thirty-five were found on one carnation stem. An entomologist declared he had never seen worms of the type before.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescription product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Keeps Floors Warm
So Children Can Play

Cold floors are often responsible for winter illness among children. Glow-Boy—the heavy-duty parlor furnace—protects against this danger by keeping floors always warm. This remarkably compact heating plant, with its Heat Amplifying Casing Shield, sends a constant flow of moist, warm air to every room in the house. Even distant bedrooms are kept warm. Glow-Boy has the heavy, durable inside construction of a basement furnace, and has 46% greater heat circulating capacity than other parlor heaters. Usually requires attention only twice each 24-hour day. See the beautiful Glow-Boy on display in our store.

DAIRY FACTS

USING PASTURES TO REDUCE COST

Dairy Cow Pays High Returns for Good Grass.

Pastures that will provide at least seven months of good grazing, and a plentiful supply of legume hay for the winter months are the two principle items needed to reduce the cost of producing milk.

"If our dairymen are to compete with those from other sections, the cost of producing milk for market must be reduced," says A. C. Kimrey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college. "The best way to do this is to provide more and better pastures which will supply profitable grazing for at least seven months of the year and to grow an abundance of high quality legume hay for winter feeding. Grass is the cheapest source of nutrients for milk production. This grass may be grown anywhere in North Carolina where the dairymen use fertile land for the purpose. It is impossible to build a good pasture on poor soil just as it is impossible to secure a profitable corn yield on poor soil."

Mr. Kimrey says this does not mean to use the more desirable fields of the farm as pasture; but there are many farms with good rolling land which will wash badly when cultivated that may be profitably planted to grass. Good creek bottoms could also be used.

The dairy cow will pay a high return per acre for good pasture. Records kept on four North Carolina herds, embracing 123 cows, showed a return of $48 an acre for the grass consumed during a grazing season of six months. This was an average of more than $7 an acre for each month. In securing these figures, the milk was valued at the average wholesale price paid by milk plants. Mr. Kimrey says similar returns can be duplicated on any dairy farm in North Carolina. He claims also that pastures are essential in growing out the young stock so badly needed.

After 40 Bowel trouble is Most Dangerous

Constipation may easily become chronic after forty. Continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles—and a host of other disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. When they need help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

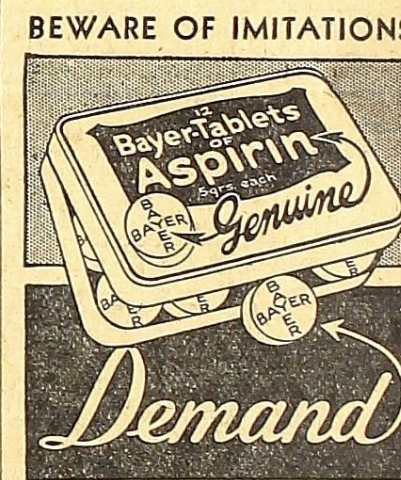

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Next time just take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative. See how good it tastes; how gently and thoroughly it acts. Then you will know why it has become the world's most popular laxative. Big bottles—all drugstores.

was in the six months since her marriage. She was satisfied with her lot and herself. There was almost danger—a challenge to fate in her complacency. She was gentle and kind to Ernestine, but subtly patronizing. It was especially noticeable since mamma had gone, for mamma kept Lillian in check.

But if Lillian was changed, Loring was startlingly so. He seemed to Ernestine bigger, handsomer. His blond strength was now set in a robust vitality which was very different from Will's volatile excitability. He kissed Ernestine affectionately, told her she looked well and admired the baby.

Mamma had trained a maid for Lillian, and she served in silent competence an excellent dinner, but the bright vivacity of the afternoon was gone. The interwoven volubility of the three women, their constant interruption of one another, their exclamations and cries of astonishment or sympathy, now disappeared, and Loring talked and the two girls listened.

He assumed Ernestine knew all about their European journey. Over there, he said, he had got a new slant on things. It was a good thing for a man to get away from his desk for a while. Now he had decided to forego the idea of the bench and go in for crime.

They laughed and he twinkled at them, but all the same, he insisted, he meant it.

"The judiciary qualities are excellent, but not remunerative—unless one becomes a corrupt judge, from which fate Heaven deliver me! The criminal lawyer is the important lawyer of today. He is the man with power in the courts. It will be a new kind of litigation for our office, but if I can get the business I can handle it. I went to see that Greek chap—Pastano—this afternoon, and recalled to him our acquaintanceship and our mutual friends. He remembered me perfectly and asked about you. He seems much interested in you and Will. He's the man to see, Tom Kelly told me, at the City hall. He has the say about all that Clark street colony. There's no end of money there and I'm going to dig some of it out for us."

Ernestine's face was flushed. She could not deny her anger.

"But it seems inconsistent to me," she said quickly, "for you to take advantage of his friendship for Will when you disapprove so of our knowing him. I don't understand."

"What has friendship got to do with business?" Loring asked, and his own face flushed with resentment. "I tell you I've got to make new contacts if we're to bring a different kind of clientele into the office. Besides, I didn't disapprove of Will knowing him. It was only his taking you to that dive. Do you think I would mix Lillian up with that crowd?"

"I can't see any grand difference," retorted Ernestine. "Lillian isn't a baby. She's your wife, anyhow. Besides, the Pastanos are all right—all of them. I know them well, and the two girls are as fine as any I have met. There's not a month passes that we don't visit them, or they don't call. Mr. Pastano admires Will. He once hurt my feelings, and he's been making it up ever since. We've been friends without asking about his political activities or how he makes his money."

"It's all very well for you to take an attitude with me," declared Loring, "but I've come home with the determination to make money—and a lot of it. Chicago is rich. I may as well take some of it as others. And if an acquaintance with a powerful man like Pastano falls to my luck, I'll pursue it. Will would want me to."

"Will would," admitted Ernestine, but her looks were cold. "You've changed, Loring. You used not to be so ambitious."

"I've acquired a new sense of values," he admitted. "Of course I'm not saying at all that a man should stick at nothing to make money. That's a mistake, and no good anyhow. But I've been around—I saw one thing everywhere. It is the passion for the possession of money—as much as a man can lay hands on."

"Don't be silly, Loring," said his wife mildly. "Look how happy Ernestine is, and she's as broke as broke."

"I am happy," declared Ernestine.

"Yes," admitted Loring, "but that is because your capacity for happiness is great. Your pleasure in your marriage and your child wouldn't be spoiled at all by more comforts."

"I don't want anything changed."

"Not now—not at this moment. But if you'll be honest with yourself, you'll find that one reason for your contentment is your great expectations for the future. You feel that your condition is only temporary. Come now, Ernestine—isn't that so? You are confident that there will be money for you and Will, when Peter grows older, and Will's work develops into more importance. Being poor can be a game if it's only an interlude. But if you had to look forward to nothing else—"

The truth of his logic hurt Ernestine unbearably.

"I don't care whether Will ever makes money or not," she declared passionately, almost in tears.

"You think you don't," said Loring inexorably. "But Will wouldn't say that. Every man wants money—every woman wants her man to have it. It's a symbol of power. If Will doesn't get it he'll feel that he's failed your confidence in him."

Ernestine found herself trembling. Lillian picked the baby up and dandled him and spoke quietly to Loring. "You are disturbing Ernestine and it isn't a bit nice of you. All this shouting makes me wonder if you doubt your own ability."

She took the baby and put him in his mother's arms.

Loring apologized.

"It's a bad habit I have—arranging my own thought in an argument. It doesn't mean a thing—sophistry pure and simple. I know you are sincere, Ernestine. Don't pay any attention to me."

The talk fell into safer lines, but Ernestine was no longer happy. Loring got out his car, and with Lillian and Ernestine in the back seat with the sleeping baby, he drove to her home. They left her now as they had left her in Erie street, disrupted, unhappy and at odds with Will.

She was awake when Will came in, and she fixed a light supper for him and told him all that Loring had said, with some small editing.

"He's a capable lawyer, I suppose," Will said. "And if Ruby wants to give him work to do, and Loring wants to do it, what's the difference? He's not the only lawyer that would like to get his fingers into Pastano's pie. But anyhow, I've got something to tell you. Underwood's going to New York, and Tucker's to be head of the art room."

Ernestine felt a cruel shock of disappointment. She knew Will had expected this—had hoped for the job himself.

"But Tucker's so young," she protested.

"It isn't that—his capable. I'm glad he got it," said Will.

Ernestine thought of what this job might have meant. The pay was nearly double. They could have rented this house and, with the rent and the increase, moved into an apartment in Ravenswood.

"Oh," she cried to Will, agabst at her own mental processes. "It's so hard not to consider money. Not to want it! Not to care! I don't want to be greedy and grabby. I don't want to crave success. But I am—I do. Isn't it horrible?"

He looked at her with some humor. "You aren't greedy and grabby, sweetheart. And as for success, there's a legitimate way to want that—not for the money but for the work. I don't think this has any effect on my future. It's really an executive position, and I'm a solitary worker. I'd be no good at bossing. It's an editorial job, and Tommy has an editorial slant on things. He's fitted for it."

A few days later he came home with a shining face.

"I'm to be Poole's assistant," he said. "Do you realize what this means to me? It's worth ten thousand in cash—to work under him. If a person went to him and offered a hundred dollars a lesson, he wouldn't teach him to draw, but would curse him out of the office. And he'll teach me, and I'll be paid for it. It means no more night work. Ten till six. I do detail in the art room until Mr. Poole comes in and then I work for him all afternoon. He does a copy for a New York syndicate every day, and there's always work to plan ahead and sketches to lay out. He's been boozing a lot lately, and I think McDermott feels that if he has somebody to help him he'll keep ahead and not run so close to publication. Wiston didn't want to send me in there—but Poole insisted on me." He sighed with happiness and added, as an afterthought, "It means another five-dollar raise—maybe more later."

He was so thrilled and excited that Ernestine commanded her heart to yield its disappointment over Tommy's job. But she could not see any real future for Will in losing himself in the great man's shadow.

"I don't want mamma to know," Ernestine said. "I'm afraid she won't go to Europe. Besides, you know what a fuss there'll be."

"Then don't tell her," said Will in his simplicity. "It isn't really any one else's business, is it?"

Ernestine sighed. "You don't know how they'll take it. Of course it's their business—they'll have enough to say. And I feel embarrassed with mamma. She'll wonder why I didn't tell her."

Will kissed her cheerfully and went away to his beloved job. He was radiantly happy and his happiness seemed to affect her inversely. Every day was an adventure to him.

"Tommy gives me plenty to do," he admitted one evening. "Tommy's a good boss. He keeps us all humming, and gives every fellow the kind of job he can do best. But it's the work for Mr. Poole that makes up for any chores. Ernestine, I tell you he is a great man. He comes in there—sometimes he doesn't know whether he's eaten or not, but as soon as he gets in that little office, which fits around him like a glove about a hand, he begins to function—the way his mind works is always a surprise. What's the matter, honey?—you're not eating."

Ernestine leaned on her hand and her eyes filled with tears.

"I hate to have mamma go away now," she said.

Will's methods were infantile.

"Then tell her. You know she'd stay in a minute."

"Go on talking about the office, please—so I can think."

Will laughed. He took a half-dollar from his pocket and spun it on the kitchen tablecloth.

"I won me fifty cents, shooting craps at the office," he said. "We can go to the movies."

CHAPTER VIII
Will and Loring

Loring succeeded in securing for Ruby Pastano the deed and title to the old LeQuinne place in the restricted colony at Langley lake. Ernestine was filled with indignation that he should do such a thing.

"Mamma won't like it at all," she told Lillian. "LeQuinne's land runs right down to ours with nothing but Stone creek between the two places. You know how it will be with the Greeks there. The house will simply be bursting with visitors all summer. They will have speed boats, and there will be children in the water from morning till night."

"But I thought you liked them," protested Lillian. "You are friends of theirs. Mr. Pastano is so happy about it, I thought you would be delighted, and so did Loring. In fact he counted on your help in calming mamma if she objected."

Ernestine shook her head.

"He can do his own calming. It's plain to me that Loring's ideas differ from ours. Will and Ruby Pastano are real friends, yet Will would never have thought of selling that place to Ruby. He fits into his own place, in Chicago, but he won't fit in there. The people—the Hendersons and the Mayces and the O'Tooles won't be kind to them. They'll not belong to the country club, nor be in the tournaments. I suppose it's not my place to worry about it, only I am thinking of mamma."

"Mamma won't go there after this summer, or next. Didn't you know, darling, that this stone-merger thing is going to make papa rich? You know, papa owns altogether nearly seven quarries in Indiana where some of the best limestone is cut, and then he has proxies for the Langley quarries. For the last year he and Loring have been buying options and small interests in other quarries. Now they have made a merger. The quarries are worth at their present rating five or six million dollars altogether, but the merger will be worth twenty-five million. Don't you see what it means?"

Ernestine stared at her. "Papa—worth millions?"

Lillian nodded with complacent pride. "Yes, and Loring is getting some of the stock. He is to be counsel for the merger, and he has a holding. You don't need to worry about mamma at Langley lake. I'm going down to open Lake Haven next week. Can't you come with me, instead of waiting for Will's vacation?"

"I don't like to leave Will alone in Chicago, in the heat—"

"But I am leaving Loring. Are you well, Ernestine?"

"My feet bother me," Ernestine admitted. "I asked Doctor Grey about it, but he didn't say much. He's put me on a diet. I'll be all right."

"I think you ought to stay at Langley lake all summer."

"It would be nice," said Ernestine vaguely, feeling hurt because she had not known about papa, or the stone-merger—feeling out of things, "but I want to be with Will."

In July they went to Langley lake, where Lillian was established and where somehow she appropriated the role of hostess, although it was not her house any more than it was Ernestine's. Will refused to worry about the Pastanos living on the point, and Ernestine saw that he lacked her own snobbish prejudices about the lake colony. He took Peter and went to visit the Greeks the first morning he was there, and stayed all day, romping with the young Pastanos, teasing Alexandria, who adored him, and eating Madame Pastano's pickled fish.

Do Bees Know Beekeeper?

One often hears the statement that bees know their master. This is not true. During the working season a bee lives for only about six weeks, two of which are spent in the hive. It is hardly likely that a beekeeper would examine a hive frequently enough to become known to such short-lived creatures even if they had the ability to distinguish between different human beings.

Ancient Road Builders

The ancient Romans were great road builders and were most active between the second and fourth centuries after Christ. These roads were universally straight and varied in width from eight to fifteen feet, going over hill and valley in spite of grades. Soldiers, slaves and criminals were employed in the construction of these highways, the durability of which is shown by the fact that, in some cases, they have sustained the traffic for 2,000 years without material injury. The Roman forum is said to have been the point of convergence of 24 roads, which, with branches, had a total length of 52,904 Roman miles. The Romans are said to have learned the art of road building from the Carthaginians.

Press Agents Unknown to Medieval Writers

"A striking feature of medieval literature is its general anonymity," writes W. H. Schofield in "English Literature from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer." Of the many who wrote, the names of but few are recorded, and of the history of these few we have only the most meager details. Nor is this a simple accident. Formerly, the importance attached to an author's personality was far less than now. In case either of a narrative or a didactic work, it was the substance above all that attracted attention. Originality of matter was deplored as a fault.

"Independence of treatment" meant to our forefathers contempt of authority, a heinous offense in their eyes. It was as unsafe for a storyteller to depart from the well-marked lines of inherited tradition as for him to disregard orthodox beliefs. And even the greatest dared not present new views without at least claiming august support. A prudent author sought a powerful patron in order to insure success, or fathered his inventions on some ancient worthy who could not deny them. But the last thing he would have deemed wise would have been to copyright them as his own."

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. A runaway marriage follows. Loring Hamilton wins Lillian's consent to become his wife. Ernestine and Will have their married life in humble surroundings. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Ernestine and Will have their first quarrel as a result. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married.

The Baby for Passenger

Lillian was in Europe. Mamma and papa and grandmother had gone to Langley lake for the month of August. Ernestine entered into a period of waiting, of passing through days of unreality and nights of patient endurance. Sometimes, waking after she had slept, she looked about the walls of the little room with a feeling of enormous surprise. Was this really she, Ernestine Briceland, in this dim room, with the curtains pinned back to admit any vagrant breeze, listening with her heart suddenly quick in the still night for her husband's footsteps?

Mr. Poole came often to visit them. Ernestine began to look for him for late Sunday breakfast. And the Pastanos were kindness itself. Their shining car, with the swart grinning chauffeur, was often at the door.

One day as Ernestine sat reading aloud, Will's mother laid a swollen, creased hand over the book, and Ernestine, looking up at her, smiled quickly and kissed her.

"What is it, mother?"

They talked a little about the coming baby, and the plans Ernestine and Will had made.

"It is hard for your mother," said Mrs. Todd, with a smile. "I think perhaps it is as great a mistake to be stiff-necked about favors as it is to be greedy."

"Perhaps," admitted Ernestine. "It is hard to be exactly balanced. One must choose a direction in which to lean."

They fell into a friendly silence. After a little, Will's mother pressed Ernestine's hand.

"About Will—" she said and hesitated, and Ernestine's heart beat a little faster.

"Be patient with him. He hasn't found himself yet. But he will. You are more mature than Will. Children will increase the distance between your wisdom and his childishness. Just love him. He'll come home."

Ernestine knew no answer, but the words fell into her heart as though there were more significance to them than their stereotyped importance. For an hour or more they sat in silence, Ernestine dreaming of Mrs. Todd remembering Will!

Mrs. Todd lived just long enough to see her grandson and to kiss his poppy silk cheek. Will laid him in the hollow of her arms, but after a moment, with a word of entreaty, she asked him to take the baby away. He did so and, calling the nurse to his mother, who seemed to be swooning, he took the little one back to Ernestine.

And so the parlor of the little house was a bower for death. The gray coffin, the room filled with flowers, the worn-out shell of the woman Ernestine had understood so little.

Will accepted his mother's death with more philosophy than Ernestine had expected of him. The long waiting, the clinging, had been harder for him than the final separation. Besides, the new little life cuddled against Ernestine's heart was so much more than any loss—it was such an appropriate compensation.

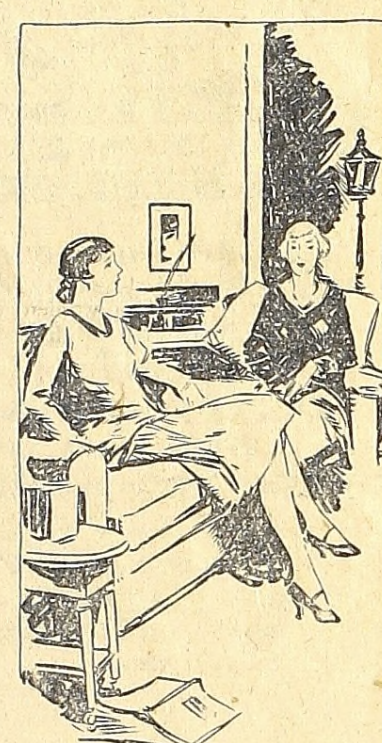

The baby had finally established Ernestine among her new neighbors. Slowly but surely they had come to respect her, and now, with Peter in her arms, with her house clean and by her own efforts, she found Mrs. Schluss and Mrs. Pryor and others showing her real affection, which she appreciated and respected in full. Ernestine felt that all sacrifice was justified, and they entered into a new phase of life, in their own small home, Will at the oars, Ernestine at the helm, and the baby for passenger.

It was harder to maintain the high level of contentment after Lillian returned from Europe and established herself in her new home on the road, out near Loyola. Will went across with Ernestine one noon shortly after their return. Mamma was there. Lillian was charming to Will, kissing him when she greeted Ernestine and the baby and fluttering him skillfully.

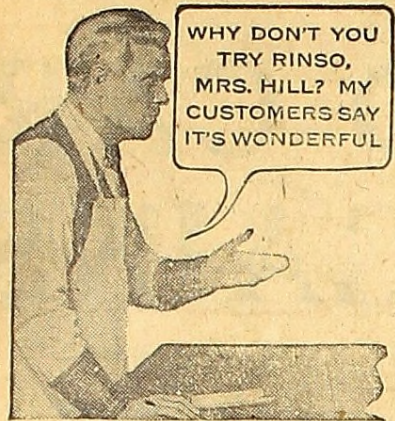

After Will had left for the Sun the three women followed one another about the house, passed the baby back and forth between them, and talked, talked, talked, all at the same time, all listening and talking, all intent on catching up the old intimacy. It was charming. Ernestine could not remember when she had spent such a happy afternoon. There was no one like mamma—no one!

"I've got to go, because papa is bringing a new stone-merger man home with him for dinner. I am going to put rock powder in the coffee!" Mamma kissed them all goodby, with tears in her eyes.

Ernestine looked at Lillian and realized with a shock how changed she

WHY DON'T YOU TRY RINSO, MRS. HILL? MY CUSTOMERS SAY IT'S WONDERFUL

Mrs. Hill took her grocer's hint and gets whiter washes easily

"I'm so grateful to my grocer for getting me to try Rinso," says Mrs. Hill. "How easy washday is now... why all I do is soak and rinse! That saves mending, let me tell you! My clothes last much longer now. Rinso is just grand in our hard water; it gives such thick, soapy, lasting suds."

For dishwashing, too

Rinso is the only soap you need—for the wash, for the dishes, for all cleaning. So economical; cup for cup it gives twice as much suds as light, puffed-up soaps. And no softener needed, even in hardest water.

Wonderful in washers; the makers of 38 leading washers endorse Rinso. Safe for finest linens. Get the BIG package.

GAY YOUTHFUL BLACK FROCKS; STYLISH BLACK HOLDS ITS OWN

THE gay black frock, but you say, "There is no such thing as a 'gay' black frock." Oh, yes there is, and here is a picture to prove it.

This youthful dress is of black faille silk and, having sleeves of a contrasting color, it is very "gay" and debonair. And that's the secret of the gay black frock—the splashdash of color which designers are adding via contrasting sleeves and other enlivening details.

Other modish black gowns "get gay" in that they take unto themselves contrasting yokes patterned with all-over bead work, or else they add a collar-and-cuff set worked in turquoise blue, light green or pale pink beads. Just as often these beaded accessories are done in white, thus sounding the popular black-and-white note.

The matching scarf which adds so much to the attractiveness of the dress illustrated is a very significant style detail. The scarf neckline is accented not only in daytime frocks but evening gowns are graced very often with a "scarf to match."

As to this matter of novelty sleeves, there is no doubt as regards to designers having become sleeve-conscious to the extent that it is very often the sleeve that "makes" the gown. Sleeves of the peasant type, as employed in the fashioning of the gown illustrated, are especially cited in the fall style program. These full-below-the-elbow effects are interpreted in endless ways. Sometimes the lower portion of the sleeve is made of lace. Then again it is prettily beaded, or ing, stamps itself as distinctive. In this instance the theme of black is carried out to a nicety, in that milady's hat is black, her exquisitely fine and supple kid shoes are black, likewise her gloves are black kid.

Women who have always had a fondness for black broadcloth will be interested in knowing that this smart-looking coat is made of this "classy" material. The haute couture of Paris declare a revival of black broadcloth, in that they are fashioning many of their smartest afternoon ensembles and dressy coats of this handsome and ever genteel fabric.

The sleeves for the coat pictured invite special comment, for sleeves hold the center of the stage in the realm of fashions of today. Especially true is this in regard to the new fall and winter coats, the sleeves of which are telling a story of thrilling adventure, especially in matters of lavish fur treatments, which are that novel as to be almost eccentric at times.

perhaps embroidered. There is no end to the elaboration of sleeves.

And if you are looking for more style details in the costume which the young woman in upper picture is wearing, please to observe her voguish black pumps trimmed with white. There's her wide-brimmed felt hat, too—a perfect gem in smartness. It is one of those youthful poke-bonnet shapes which has such an exceedingly high crown, it sets the hat way back on the head so as to show quite a bit of the hair.

The Stylish Black.

Of course the new colors are alluring, but their enchantment does not detract from the importance of stylish black. A costume in all-black, such as the smartly dressed woman in the lower picture is wear-the tendency of fur to travel up the sleeve as far away from the wrist as it can possibly go. The trend to get away from stereotyped cuff treatments is made obvious in almost every instance. The sleeve illustrated shows a manipulation of its fur trimming along the new "lines." See how it describes a flaring effect at the elbow, also giving a generously large aspect, and that is exactly what sleeves are this season—anything but small or tight fitting in appearance.

One even sees dolman sleeves and sleeves which call to mind the old-fashioned leg o' mutton types, and if not these, then sleeves which go below the elbow. As to the latter, often the full part below the elbow is made of flat fur with cloth for the top.

VACCINATION OF PIGS PAYS WELL

North Dakota Expert Says It Is Good Business.

Many farmers are wondering whether hog vaccination is necessary or worth the expense.

Dr. G. S. Weaver, extension specialist in animal disease at South Dakota state college, believes that it is good business management to vaccinate the pigs.

Considering the number of outbreaks of cholera at the present time, there seems to be plenty of chance for exposure, he says. Probably fewer older hogs are now immune than for several years, which would mean a more serious outbreak if the disease gets a real start.

The best time to vaccinate is when the pigs average about 40 pounds in weight, or when they are about six to eight weeks old. It costs less to vaccinate pigs of this size than it does older hogs, and the pigs are easier handled. They are just about the right age to insure a permanent immunity. In case a pig dies after treatment the loss is not great at this age.

Successful vaccination depends on the thriftiness of the pigs, the efficiency of the operator and the sanitary conditions. Pigs that are affected with "necrosis" or infested with worms will not get along as well after vaccination as thrifty pigs. The man who puts in the serum should know his business and as a general rule the veterinarian is best qualified. Pigs that are kept in dirty pens and lots cannot be expected to do as well after vaccination since unsanitary conditions help them lose their resistance. A thrifty pig properly vaccinated will do well after vaccination if kept in a clean pen and fed on a light diet.

Use Creosoted Planks for Hog House Floor

If at all possible, either pressure or tank creosoted lumber should be used for the sills and floor of a hog house, because it will last several times as long in contact with the ground, is immune against damage from termites or white ants, and the creosote discourages the harboring of lice and mites. Individual and colony hog houses made entirely of creosoted lumber are now on the market at prices probably below what the farmer can buy lumber for and build them himself, while in other cases the sills and floor boards are creosoted and the rest heavily painted.

In some localities pressure creosoted lumber is available, or the farmer can cut his lumber ready to put together and then creosote by the tank method, using a long galvanized tank. If neither of these seem practicable, several heavy brush coats of creosote just before the parts are put together will help a great deal to prolong the service obtained.

Wise Farmers Raising Colts Well for Future

Since farmers are not raising half enough colts to take care of their future needs, it is wise to grow what are raised, well. The colts should be fed in addition to the mother's milk. When three or four weeks old, the youngster will start nibbling grain from the mother's feed box. In a little while it will take grain from its own box. Increase the allowance to take care of what the colt eats.

Then, exercise the youngster. Let him run with the mare at night in the pasture or with other colts during the day when the mothers are at work. Do not allow it to follow the mare through the day when she is at work as the colt then gets more exercise than it should have.

Live Stock Facts

Before winter sets on in earnest disinfect the quarters for swine.

The farmer with live stock is a manufacturer as well as a producer of raw materials.

A cheap bill is about the most expensive investment a live stock man can make.

The thrifty animals of whatever kind appeal to buyers and always at a better price.

Smaller amounts of feed are required for a pound of gain when pigs grow rapidly than when development is slower. Putting pigs on full feed early is a profitable practice.

Rape, because of its high protein content, is a desirable crop to be sown with corn that is to be used for hogging-off or sheeping-down.

Alfalfa pasture and shelled corn proved a better fattening ration for heifers in Nebraska tests last year than did alfalfa hay and corn.

Lime-sulphur dip is effective against hog mange. It is more effective when warm. It can be bought already mixed and it is only necessary to follow directions on the container.

East Tawas high was defeated by the strong Oscoda baseball team last Friday afternoon by the impressive score of 9 to 3. East Tawas played a listless brand of ball, making seven errors in the seven inning game. Don St. Martin, aided by Harold Ross, was able to strike out fourteen Oscoda batsmen, but without any support was unable to be credited with a win. George Roach saved the home team from a shutout by hitting a home run into right field. Klenow and Kasichke played their usual good game but the team as a whole was way off form. Knuth, Kennedy and McLean stood out for Oscoda; in fact, the whole Oscoda team seemed to be in good condition.

The tennis tournament to decide the championship of the high school has been in progress all week. There has been a vast amount of interest shown in the tournament so far.
