BUSINESSMEN FALL BEFORE INDEPENDENTS

The Tawas City Independents wound up their schedule for the season last Sunday by defeating the Tawas City Businessmen by a score of 15 to 9 at the local athletic field. This game, which was staged as a final treat for fans, was all it was forecast to be. A large crowd was present to witness the contest and to see the "old timers" again in action and were well repaid with an afternoon of fun.

Besides Smith, Laidlaw, Musolf and DeCou, who have been members of the Tawas City nine this season, the Businessmen's line-up included the following irregulars: Wm. Hatton, Roy DePott, Ernest Moeller, Read Smith, J. E. Steinhurst, and Jas. H. Leslie. The last mentioned six made a valiant if not successful effort to establish themselves as baseball players. That the businessmen's fielding was not completely off color is shown by the fact that they had (only) eleven errors out of 47 possibilities.

To complete the picture—as heads of the department of umpiring, were Burley Wilson and J. A. Brugger. They executed their duties in a business-like manner—with no "continued next week" decisions—and although a few plays slipped by unnoticed by them, they did remarkably well.

Doc Smith started on the mound for the businessmen, but was quite unsuccessful in his attempt to stay the bats of the Indies, and relinquished the mound after the fifth inning to DePott. Roy went through the remaining four frames with real class. Boulder occupied the rubber for the Independents, and, as it is quite unnecessary to say, performed in his usual fine style.

WORK ON SHORE ROAD IN COUNTY INCLUDED IN HIGHWAY PROGRAM

Included in the $1,200,000.00 highway department program approved by the State Administrative Board last week is the grading and draining of the seven miles of the proposed Shore Road between East Tawas and Oscoda. Bids for grading will be asked for soon.

They approved the cancellation in Isosco county of U. S. 23 to Tawas City, a distance of 1.7 miles, also cancellation of the present route of U. S. 23 from its intersection with the east and west road, Baldwin township, Isosco county, northerly, easterly and northeasterly to its intersection with the line of the proposed Shore Road in the village of Oscoda, a distance of 18.5 miles.

In lieu of the above cancelled mileage, the board approved of the establishment of a road following generally along the lake shore from East Tawas to Oscoda, a distance of 14.4 miles; also the so-called Tawas cut off from the intersection with the present route of U. S. 23 easterly two miles to connect with the present route of U. S. 23; also the remaining 3.2 miles made available for re-establishment by this cancellation to be used in the establishment of a trunk line from U. S. 25 north of Whittemore directly north of Hale.

TAWAS CITY SCHOOL NOTES

Prepared and Edited by a Committee of the Student Council

High School
From the talk about town there seems to be considerable interest in the P. T. A. this year. Complete details of the first meeting of the year which was held Thursday night will be given in the next issue.

The district meeting of the Michigan Education Association will be held in Flint October 27 and 28. All of the Tawas City teachers are planning on attending.

Each member of the botany class is being given an individual field test covering all the work of the fall. This work consists of becoming somewhat familiar with many weeds of the community.

Our baseball team defeated the St. Joe nine last Friday on our diamond by a score of 9 to 5. Louis Frank, our pitcher, kept our opponents' hits well scattered, but was very wild at times. Four of St. Joe's runs were the result of wild pitches. This victory brings our standing up to two games won and one game lost for the season.

The annual Sophomore reception for the Freshmen was held at the high school Friday evening, October 3. Games were enjoyed and, of course, many pranks were played upon the less prudent Freshmen who had not heeded the Sophomores' warning to display their colors during the week preceding the party. Many of the Freshmen now declare that limburger cheese will never be selected as part of their regular diet. The refreshments served were appropriate to the tender years of the guests. Mr. Bolinger, Miss Coon, Miss Bird, Mr. Forsten and Mrs. Forsten chaperoned the party.

The commercial club known as "The Commercial Vagabonds," has organized with the following officers: President, Delta Leslie; vice-president, Beulah Hitts; secretary and treasurer, Gertrude Bessey. The club will meet monthly and now plans to have some entertaining and instructive meetings.

The advanced English class completed their study of Chaucer with the writing of an imaginary story, which might have been ascribed to (Turn to No. 1, Back Page)

JAS. F. MARK ELECTED GRAND SENTINEL O. E. S.

Word came from Lansing that Jas. F. Mark of this city had been elected Grand Sentinel of the Order of Eastern Star at a meeting of the Grand Chapter held in that city on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Mr. Mark was elected on the first ballot taken.

SUPERVISORS WILL MEET MONDAY, OCTOBER 13

The board of supervisors for the county of Isosco will meet at the court house Monday, October 13. This is the long session of the year as many important matters will come before the board for disposition, including the annual report of the board of county road commissioners and the superintendents of the county poor commission. After their reports are submitted and accepted the ways and means committee makes up the annual county tax budget for the fiscal year 1930-1931 which will be spread on the several tax rolls of the county to be paid into the county treasury in January to defray the running expenses of the county government for the next year.

NUTRITION CLASS HOLDS FIRST MEETING OF YEAR

The second year Nutrition class held its first meeting for the project leaders Thursday at the court house. The topic for study this year is meal planning and table etiquette. The project leaders, Mrs. Murray and Mrs. Swartz will have charge of the Tawas City class and will have their first meeting at the home of Mrs. John Swartz, Jr., on Tuesday, October 14.

EAST TAWAS HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

The Sophomore class held its first party at Dillon's cottage at Tawas Lake. Some of the Sophomores invited members of other classes as their guests. Many interesting games were played and refreshments were served. The party ended at 8:30 and was voted a 100% success by all.

CLARA BOW HERE AGAIN!

Clara Bow lays aside her flaming youth role for a more sensible characterization with the result that she puts over a neat little picture, "Love Among the Millionaires," showing at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Sunday and Monday, October 12 and 13, is a comedy with music that sets off Clara Bow in a new type of role. Although her singing voice is not what would be called good, it is not bad and with able support by Stanley Smith, Clara makes a very acceptable comeback.

Stuart Erwin, who can be dumb to perfection, and Skeets Gallagher, the blond-headed former team-mate of Jack Oakie, make a good pair. But Mitz Green almost steals the show. This five year old girl has all the sophistication of a girl five times her age. She's a winner.

Stanley Smith, the hero of "Sweetie," has a good role and makes a pleasing leading man.

See it sure. Also showing a good comedy.

NOTICE

Next Sunday will be roll call at the M. E. Sunday school. Every member is requested to be present, and answer the roll call with his favorite verse of scripture.

Mrs. Davidson, Superintendent.

LOCAL LEGION POST HOLDS ANNUAL ENCAMPMENT

Jesse C. Hodder Post, American Legion, held their annual encampment at Pinnacle Point, Ausable river, last Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Favored with beautiful weather, this year's encampment proved very enjoyable. Hiking, fishing, hunting and games during the day and stories and singing around the campfire in the evening filled the program of the meet. Meals were served army style.

About 25 members and guests were in attendance.

BETTY JO RAPP

Betty Jo Rapp was born March 9, 1930, and departed this life on October 1 at Omer hospital, after nearly three weeks of illness. The little one was brought to her home on the Hemlock, from which place the funeral was held Friday afternoon, Rev. Metcalf officiating.

Those left to mourn her loss are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Rapp, two brothers, Deloise and Kenneth, and two sisters, Virginia and Vera, besides a host of other relatives.

Once we had a darling baby, she was our joy and pride; we loved her, Oh, perhaps too much, for soon she slept and died. Gone from our home forever, the darling of our hand, crossed over the mystic river into the summer land. In days to come it may be we shall see, just why was sent this bitter test; 'till then we can but bow in tears, and say, "God knoweth best."

SECOND OFFENDERS WILL RECEIVE JAIL SENTENCES

Second offenders who violate the game laws will receive jail sentences, states G. R. Hogarth, director of the Department of Conservation. This was made mandatory by an act passed at the last session of the state legislature.

PRISON RIOTS, SMASHING DRAMA IN "THE BIG HOUSE"

"The Big House," which comes to the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on October 14, 15 and 16, is based on the original story by Frances Marion and finds its inspiration in the prison riots which have colored the daily press recently.

It is a gripping presentation of the psychological drama underlying prison breaks. The three central figures are Kent Marlowe, a boy jailed on a manslaughter charge as a result of a drunken automobile crash (Robert Montgomery), Butch a hardboiled killer with more brains than brain (Wallace Beery), and Morgan (Chester Morris), forger and gentleman crook, who falls in love with Marlowe's sister, goes straight and turns out the best man of the lot. The cast includes Lewis Stone, George Marion, J. C. Nugent, DeWitt Jennings, Karl Dane and Leila Hyams.

The picture is masterly and intelligent entertainment. It is not the story that holds one's interest. Instead, it is the fine direction of George Hill; the exceptional performance by Wallace Beery and others of the cast, the naturalness of the dialog and the good photography.

Beery easily walks away with the picture, and apparently without any effort. He is the comic when comedy is necessary. In the dramatic episodes he is a finished actor. When his role demands pathos he lives up to the requirements. His role is that of a cruel murderer, one who sees humor in his deeds, and he convinces you.

This picture had a six weeks' run in Detroit. Be sure to see it. Three days, October 14, 15 and 16. Shown with News and Vaudeville.

CONG. WOODRUFF SPEAKS AT KANOTIN CLUB MEET

On Thursday last Roy O. Woodruff, representative from this district in Congress, was the guest speaker of the Kanotin Club. Not only was it ladies night, but a goodly number of visitors were present, making a total of seventy-three in attendance, including the East Tawas high school orchestra.

The meeting exhibited a wonderful spirit and much of this was due to the excellent group singing led by Rev. C. E. Edinger. President John McCray called upon Judge Herman Dehnke and T. F. Marston, secretary of the North-eastern Michigan Development Bureau, for short talks.

Before beginning his talk, Mr. Woodruff complimented Miss Neva Butler, who sang two very fine numbers, and the high school orchestra members upon their excellent ability as entertainers. Since he is a high ranking member of the Naval committee, Mr. Woodruff chose for his topic, "National Defense." The stand he took on various points pertaining to national defense proved of considerable interest to his audience.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB HOLDS FIRST MEETING

The first meeting of the Twentieth Century Club was held Saturday, October 4, at the Horton cottage at Sand Lake. A large number of members were present. The business meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Braddock. It being ex-president's day, Mrs. Osborne and Miss Worden gave short talks on their administrations.

Princess Watassa from the Michigan Tuberculosis Association gave a splendid address on Indian customs and Indian ways of curing sickness. She told about the costume she was wearing and the Indian relics which she had with her. We were glad to learn about the excellent work she is doing in Michigan and we are very grateful to the association for sending her to Isosco county.

A delicious pot luck supper was enjoyed by the members and their husbands.

The next meeting will be held on Saturday, October 18, at the home of Mrs. Jas. Leslie.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES

Last Friday a fast, exciting baseball game with Oscoda ended in the tenth inning with the score 3 to 3. The Normal boys have a fine record in winnings this year.

The class listened to a very interesting talk about health from Princess Watassa of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association. She showed the class many of the Indian trinkets and told legends illustrating the gospel of health.

After an exciting trip from Flint, with flat tires and clouds of smoke on the road on Sunday night and Monday morning, Lillie Adams was able to be at school on Tuesday.

Miss Worden brought the class some fine pictures of Theodore Roosevelt and Old Ironsides, which will hang in the classroom.

Goldie Shellenbarger has returned to school after a week's illness.

Muzzles have been recommended for the physical training class, while playing, to protect their noses. Lois, especially, would like one.

LANDING OF ROGER WILLIAMS. From the painting by Chappel

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE various tercentenary celebrations which have been held in Massachusetts this year have revived public interest in the historical events of long ago, and have brought again to the attention of Americans the names of many men who are all but forgotten. Some one has suggested that the Bay State might well round out its tercentenary program with one more celebration of an important event which took place 300 years ago. Such a celebration would be held next February, for it was in February, 1631, that a man named Roger Williams arrived in Boston from England.

The only trouble with that suggestion is that Roger Williams is a man whom Massachusetts is little likely to honor with any special ceremonies, even though it would seem that after three centuries had passed all ancient prejudices should be dispelled and the harsh judgments of those far-off days considerably softened. At least, one might logically draw such a conclusion from these facts:

In 1635 the Great and General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony wrote upon its records the following: "Whereas, Mr. Roger Williams, one of the elders of the church of Salem, hath broached and divulged divers new and dangerous opinions against the authority of magistrates; and also writ letters of defamation, both of the magistrates and churches here, and that before any conviction, and yet maintaineth the same without any retraction; it is therefore ordered, that the said Mr. Williams shall depart out of this jurisdiction within six weeks now next evening, which if he neglect to perform, it shall be lawful for the governor and two of the magistrates to send him to some place out of this jurisdiction, not to return any more without license from the court."

In 1928 the Massachusetts house of representatives accepted without debate a report by the judiciary committee recommending "leave to withdraw" on a bill by Representative John W. Hawkins to revoke the sentence of banishment of Roger Williams. This the Bay State passed up its chance to make a graceful gesture which would show that the spirit of intolerance which once characterized Massachusetts; the colony, had been succeeded by a more generous spirit in Massachusetts, the state, and it missed an opportunity to utter even this smallest thanks for Williams' service when at the greatest risk to himself, he dissuaded the Narragansett Indians from joining in the Pequot war against the colony which had expelled him from its borders.

But, quite aside from this question of whether or not the Massachusetts of today is likely to pay belated honor to the man whom the Massachusetts of 300 years ago considered dangerous, feared and sent into exile, is the question which one might logically ask as the result of recalling the name of a man who has been gone from the American scene these 247 years—"Why is the arrival of Roger Williams on the shores of New England important enough to justify a celebration 300 years later?"

The answer to that question may be found in these words: "Roger Williams was the first prophet of freedom in America, the 'land of the free,' a man whose liberalism was not confined to religion alone but who stood staunchly for civil liberty as well." Surely in these days when Americans are becoming concerned about the liberties guaranteed them in the foundation stone of our Republic, the Constitution, to know something of such a man is worth while. Recently there has appeared a biography of him which brings out strongly the importance of this man in American history. It is "Roger Williams, Prophet and Pioneer," written by Emily Easton and published by the Houghton Mifflin company.

If Roger Williams had been no more than the pioneer, he would still be interesting and worthy of study. But it is in Roger Williams, the prophet of freedom, that our main interest lies, and with him in this role his new biographer is chiefly concerned. The year of his birth is uncertain. It was probably 1602 or 1603. The scene was in London on the edge of Smithfield where were held both the fairs and the executions of the day. His father was a merchant tailor, but young Roger does not seem to have had any desire to follow in his father's footsteps. He began the study of stenography and became an adept at writing shorthand, taking down sermons at Saint Sepulchre's church and speeches in the star chamber, the awesome and terrible court at Westminster hall, where offenders against the crown were summarily and secretly tried.

Williams' talent attracted the attention of Sir Edward Coke, the great judge and leader of the Puritans, who saw to it that the boy was admitted to the Charter house school. In 1626 he received his degree from Pembroke college, Cambridge, and became chaplain in the country house of Sir William Masham. Naturally a free thinker, he allied himself with the most extreme of the Puritans. Belief in the separation of church and state prevented his taking a parish in England and he resolved to come to America. He arrived in Boston on February 5, 1631, but soon found that he was no better off in New England than in Old England. So he went to Plymouth, the pioneer settlement.

The Plymouth people "could not agree with his 'strange opinions,'" so he went to Salem, where he was repeatedly summoned and finally banished. It was in January, 1636, that Roger Williams was compelled to leave his wife and babies and tramp through the snow-covered forests. He was saved through the aid of Indians toward whom he had ever assumed a kindly and generous attitude.

Chief Massasoit of the Pokanoket Indians gave him a tract of land on the Sakonk river, where he was joined by old friends from Salem, and a settlement started. But upon receiving friendly hints that complications were liable to arise with the Plymouth colony, he moved to the present site of Providence, R. I., and in June, 1636, started the settlement that was destined to become Rhode Island. The land there was given by his old friends, Canonicut and Miantonomi, sachems of the Narragansett.

Williams soon had a chance to return good for evil for such was his influence over the Narragansett that he easily prevailed upon this powerful tribe not to join the Pequots under Sassacus in their plan to destroy all the English settlements in that part of the country.

Williams, in 1638, assisted John Clarke and William Coddington in purchasing Aquidneck, or Rhode Island, from the Indians. He saw to it that the Indians were not swindled but liberally paid for their holdings.

In 1648 he went to England and obtained the charter for the Providence and Rhode Island settlements. While there he blossomed forth as an author of some of the "best sellers," producing "Key Into Language of America," "The Bloody Tenet of Persecution for Cause of Conscience," and "Mr. Cotton's Letter Examined and Answered." Williams made such a hit in England that several members of parliament gave him a letter which was virtually a passport through Massachusetts upon his return in 1644.

In 1651 he was obliged to again visit England in order to obtain the revocation of the commission of William Coddington as governor of Rhode Island and Connecticut. He not only got what he went after, but found some time to do some more writing. He returned home in 1654 and participated in the reorganization of the colonial government, and accepted the presidency of the colony which he held until 1658. In his administration he obtained toleration for the Quakers who were then coming to New England.

It seems a somewhat strange paradox that the settlers of Massachusetts, who fled from England to secure religious liberty, should become so intolerant toward others whose religious ideas did not agree with theirs. But it must also be admitted that the Quakers gave them plenty of provocation, for, unlike the gentle, peaceful persons whom we are accustomed to associate with the idea of the Society of Friends today, the Quakers of the Seventeenth century were firebrands and disturbers of the peace wherever they went.

Williams himself had little more use for them than did the Puritans. "Amongst Jews and Turks, Protestants and Pagans (with all of which I have conversed)," he wrote, "I never met with such a judging, censuring, reviling spirit as is the spirit of the Quakers." But, though he disliked them, he would not deny them the right to worship as they pleased any more than he would deny that right to any others who were driven out of Massachusetts because of their beliefs. Rhode Island had very little trouble with the Quakers, for the simple reason that they were allowed to talk all they wanted to, hence they had little desire to cause a disturbance. Just the opposite was the case in Massachusetts. The more they were persecuted there and their right of free speech suppressed, the more determined they were to exploit their views. There is food for thought in those days in considering some present-day problems in America!

Not only did Williams stand firm for religious liberty in his colony but for civil liberty as well. He had revolted against the theocracy which ruled New England, and in revolting he rebelled against the magistrates as well as against the clergy. Eighteen years after he had founded his islet of defiant freedom he could boast, in a letter to Sir Henry Vane: "We have not felt the new chains of the Presbyterian tyrants, nor in this colony have we been consumed with the over-zealous fire of the (so-called) godly Christian magistrates. Sir, we have not known what an excise means; we have almost forgotten what tithes are, yea, or taxes either, to church or commonwealth."

A new charter was granted Rhode Island in 1663. This charter established such liberal republican government that the Revolution in 1776 made no change in it, and it was not superceded until 1842. For the next 14 years he was actively engaged in public life.

The death of this remarkable American pioneer was announced in this quaint fashion in a letter written May 10, 1683, by John Thorndyke of Providence to Rev. Samuel Hubbard: "The Lord hath arrested by death our ancient and approved friend, Mr. Roger Williams, with divers others here." (© by Western Newspaper Union.)

DAIRY FACTS

CHOICE OF DAIRY SIRE IMPORTANT

Greater Need for Using Bull of Tried Ability.

Selection of the dairy-herd sire is perhaps the most important factor to be considered in the development of a high-producing, economical dairy herd, says C. A. Smith, extension dairyman at the Colorado Agricultural college.

Cow testing association records so far tabulated throughout the United States show, he says, that about one-third of the pure-bred sires are lowering the production of their daughters in comparison with the production of the dams of those daughters; about one-third are raising the production, slightly; but the great increases are coming from only the remaining third of the sires in use.

The higher the production of the herd, the more difficult it is to raise production through the sire, and the greater the need for using a bull of proved ability, it is pointed out.

"Economic production of milk is an important factor in profitable dairying," Mr. Smith emphasizes, "and cow testing association records are showing the way to such economical production. Continued practice of close selection, coupled with better feeding and management, will raise the average production of our dairy cows with a corresponding increase in the economy of that production. But still greater improvement may be made by paying close attention to the quality of the herd sire."

Cow Forced to Depend Upon Pasture for Feed

Spring and summer are the seasons when many farmers "put their cows in the milk pail." They do this by trying to keep cows on either too green or too ripe pasture. Green grass carries better than 85 per cent water and a cow cannot consume enough of it to provide the substances necessary for milk production. For the average cow, it would be necessary for her to consume 100 pounds of grass daily. On the ordinary farm pastures, it would require approximately four acres to supply her with that much. It is impossible for her to utilize this bulk.

When the cow is forced to depend entirely upon pasture for getting the nutrients necessary for milk making, she is compelled to use her reserve to make up the deficiency of the various milk-producing substances. This practice results in a loss of flesh, which will eventually decrease the lactation period and lower milk flow.

Cost to Feed Milk Cow on Dry Concentrates

According to Prof. Henry Morrison of the University of Wisconsin, it costs around 22 to 24 cents a day to feed a milk cow on dry concentrates. Today's cost is higher. Let's see what it costs to feed her on grass. Taking an average of $175 an acre for your grass land, $25 a year an acre would give good returns including the cost of proper fertilization. On the basis of 200 days or seven months' grazing a year, and only one cow to the acre (just half of what Europe does), it will cost only 12½ cents a day to keep the cow. Even if you use some concentrates it will not cost over 15 cents a day, or a difference in cost of butterfat of at least 5 cents a pound, as a good cow should produce at least a pound of butterfat a day.

Dairy Notes

For young calves, hay free from mold is desirable.

Good pasture grasses simply will not grow without plenty of plant food; therefore, fertilize the pasture lands.

A good dairy cow probably consumes more water than any other domestic animal. The more feed consumed, the more water the cow requires.

The richness of a cow's milk is a matter of inheritance and not of feed. Certain factors do influence the test, such as breed, stage of lactation.

A study recently completed showed there was very little relationship between the records made by a bull's daughters and that of his own dam while there was a very close relationship between the records made by his daughters and those made by his sisters.

Records show that fall freshening cows will produce 15 per cent or more fat, than where spring freshening is the rule.

A temporary surplus of dairy products caused by low buying power on the part of the consumer makes necessary a dairy program that includes more rigid culling of the dairy herds, feeding in proportion to production, reduction or saving of labor on the care of the dairy herd, and weaning of all calves except those from the best cows.

Dig for Gold on Missouri Farms

Farmers in the region of Fox Creek Valley, Mo., are frantically digging for gold on the strength of an assayer's report that a recent strike is the richest yet found in Missouri. The gold discovery came about when August Poertner and Charles Shields, farmers, became curious about a brownish looking substance in the soil. They sent samples to a metallurgist and received reports that the yield averaged $112 to a ton of clay.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

It was John Oliver La Gorce who, on his last trip to New York, told me about "Old Sow." He had been fishing and on this trip heard the story.

Sacketts Harbor nestles on the shore of Lake Ontario, across from the mouth of the St. Lawrence and the Thousand Islands. Here, on July 12, was fought the first battle of the War of 1812. The British attacked from the water with five ships, the largest of which was the Royal George, carrying twenty-four guns and 260 men. The other four ships carried eighty guns.

The defenders on shore had only one gun. They called it "Old Sow." It was a thirty-two pounder, and had proved to be too big for a small Yankee schooner, so it had been brought ashore and left for months in the mud. But, when it looked as if it would be needed for defense, Colonel Bellingier mounted it in a field facing the water.

There was no dearth of powder, but all the cannon balls on hand were intended for a twenty-four instead of a thirty-two pound gun. This was like having only 22-caliber cartridges for a 32-caliber revolver, but the old inhabitants of Sacketts Harbor were a resourceful lot. They wrapped the cannon balls in pieces of carpet, which they tore up for the purpose, and in this manner were able to fire them.

Still, that artifice doesn't appear to have improved their aim. For around two hours, the ships shot at the shore and the shore shot at the ships with small damage on either side. The shore had the better of it, because ships offer a large target, while "Old Sow," at which the sailor gunners undoubtedly were firing, offered a small target indeed, especially with guns of that day.

Finally, the Royal George almost got the range, and with a thirty-two pound shot it buried itself in the ground near "Old Sow" and the defenders dug it out, probably with great rejoicing. They at last had a cannonball which would fit their gun. They chucked it in the muzzle, rammed it home, and aimed with great care. Their former practice must at least have given them the needed data, since they hit a ship fairly on the deck, where the crew were gathered thickest. That one shot killed fourteen men and wounded eighteen, and the British fleet retired. At least, that is what the people of Sacketts Harbor say, and it is their story, so they are entitled to stick to it. (Note: Historians will please not write.)

But their gratitude to "Old Sow" does not appear to have been profound, for there the old gun rests in sun and rain, with never a tablet or a monument to tell of past accomplishment. The grass and weeds grow high around it and the only road to it is an overgrown and rutted wagon track. To be sure, Sacketts Harbor is no financial center; but these associated sons and daughters of various wars are always concerning themselves with some sort of memorial. It seems as if they might make a proper road to "Old Sow," and give her a bit of smooth lawn on which to rest, and rub away a little of the dust and rust of years. In the face of odds, she did her stuff and she rates a little recognition.

George Gershwin, the famous composer, is a golfer of long standing and, until recently, of high scores. But Mr. Gershwin is improving. The other day, playing the Lakeville course, he not only, for the first time in his life, broke 100, but shot an 85. From now forever more, any time Mr. Gershwin fails to shoot in the low eighties, he will be off his game.

Stock market crashes and unemployment bring strange results. The army, for example, never had less trouble getting enlistments. The same is true of the other branch of the service. The slogan now seems to be: "Join the navy and see three square meals a day."

Hailed as Jewish Cultural Revival

Tel Aviv, Palestine.—This thriving city at the eastern end of the Mediterranean is singular in the world as the first all-Jewish city since the dispersion of the Jewish race in 70 A. D.

In outward appearance Tel Aviv greatly resembles a prosperous California seaside town, but it is the economic and cultural center of the most modern political experiment—the attempt to establish a Jewish national settlement in Palestine.

From many viewpoints Tel Aviv is the most remarkable city in the Old world. The rapidity of its development is astonishing, judged by Old-world standards. The town was founded on barren sand dunes north of the ancient city of Jaffa in 1909, and the census of 1913 showed only 908 inhabitants. In 1919 there were 2,862 inhabitants, but today there are more than 40,000 and the city has outstripped its neighbor, Jaffa, which has existed since biblical times.

Other features of the first modern Jewish town are that the ancient Hebrew language is the official and generally spoken language; it is inhabited by Jews from about 40 different countries, it was the first local authority in the Near East whose council was elected by direct voting of the entire population and the first town to grant full woman's franchise.

Since the famous Balfour declaration in which England promised to facilitate the foundation of a national home for the Jewish race in Palestine, Tel Aviv has grown by leaps. In 1919 the area of the town was about 220 acres; today it is more than 1,400 acres.

To the casual observer the busy streets and boulevards considerably resemble a newly built American boom city. The streets are thronged with well-dressed people, with shiny motor cars, mostly of American manufacture, and motor busses. The traffic policemen are dressed much like the summer uniforms of American policemen. The shops are bright and modern. The homes are either of the California bungalow type or flat buildings. Compared with the dirt and squalor of an Arab town like Jaffa, the contrast is striking.

Following the Goat

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was sheep shearing time when I was in Montana. All through the Galatin valley the sun was shining, the buttes were green from the abundant spring rains, and the sheep were feeding thousands of them, tens of thousands, in fact, ready for the yearly shearing. It is not an easy matter to get them into the pens where the shearing is done. They listen reluctantly to the voice of the shepherd, but they are followers. If there is a leader among them without thinking, they will follow him anywhere. On one of the big ranches, I noticed a goat wandering about among the sheep, and I remarked on the fact. "The goat is trained," one of the natives explained to me, "he can be led anywhere, and the sheep follow him, peacefully one after another without thought or questioning. It is quite easy."

Very much like human beings, these sheep, I thought. Most of us have a goat or two which we follow without working our brains at all. Flora is smoking. Now she doesn't like it; she doesn't do it well, and she knows it is a dirty habit and not at all good for her nerves.

"Don't you smoke?" Della asks her. Della is the goat, coarse, vulgar, but the leader of the flock, the one who sets the pace, and gets all the rest into the corral. "How strange," she says, and laughs a little satirical laugh, and Flora drops into line and follows the goat.

The Glens did not taste liquor in pre-Volstead days. They had been brought up differently. It just wasn't respectable to have liquor about. Then things began to change a little. When they went out to one social affair or another there were cocktails served and the odor of gin in the air, and scarcely a social evening passed without a chance to get a shot or two of something stimulating. Respectable people, too, church members and the once-conservative members of society did not say no when the cocktail shaker came into the room. Well, what were the Glens to do? It would look queer and people would laugh if they hung back, so meekly and quite in line they followed the goat.

Lawton had never been a financial plunger. What modest sums he could gather together to invest he put into government bonds or the most conservative of securities. He was wise enough not to fall for any of the get-rich-quick schemes to which some of his friends became an easy prey. When some smooth-tongued salesman expressed a willingness to let him in on something that would net him 15 per cent, Lawton shook his head. He would not know what to do with the money, he averred, if it came in that fast.

But stocks were booming, all his friends were taking a chance, and counting their profits. It was the opportunity of a lifetime, and he was being ridiculed for not being a sportsman, so Lawton followed the goat; he was taken into the corral. The bottom went out of the stock market and Lawton was sheared close to the skin like any other foolish sheep.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. A runaway marriage follows. Loring Hamilton wins Lillian's consent to become his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in humble surroundings. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Ernestine and Will have their first quarrel as a result. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married. Will's mother dies almost immediately after Ernestine's baby is born. Changes in Will's office fall to bring advancement. Ernestine again is looking forward to motherhood. Will loses his job and Poole resigns. Ernestine faints on the street.

"Mr. Hamilton's got a taxi for us out there—had it since six o'clock. I don't know how much this'll cost him."

"That doesn't matter," said Lillian impatiently, and tried to control her perturbation. She was disturbed anew at the thought of Loring violent, uncontrolled—she had never seen him so, except on the other occasion of his quarrel with Will. But this was worse. He had always been so fond of Ernestine—as though she were his own little sister. She felt a great relief to think that he had taken charge of the search. He would find Ernestine if she were to be found.

But the thought of her sister out in these hot streets, lost, ill and alone, caused her such anguish that she could scarcely breathe. What would mamma say to her? Mamma loved Ernestine the better—always had. Mamma had really left Ernestine to her.

The door was flung open and Loring stood there. His eyes were glittering with fear or fever. He looked at her as if he scarcely knew her.

"Lillian!" he exclaimed.

"I drove," she told him, "all the way. I've been so worried."

"You had cause to worry," he said grimly. "When we find Ernestine she is going home with us—to stay. Don't you agree? She's got to have somebody to take care of her."

"Of course, Loring."

"I've news of a sort," he said slowly, and they stared at him. "I don't know what it's worth. There was a woman taken to the County hospital this afternoon—from this neighborhood. She was a young woman, and she was to be confined. It might have been Ernestine. I've sent Will out there, and I came by to see if you were here"—to his wife—"and to wait here for a phone call."

The telephone shrilled, and the sound leaped through them all. Mrs. Bennett picked up the receiver with a trembling hand, while they all watched her in straining silence.

"Yes—yes—this is Mrs. Bennett. . . . Oh, he did. . . . Oh, thank you. . . . Her sister is here. I'll tell them."

She turned from the phone.

"It's the hospital office. Will has identified Ernestine, and he's there with her. Oh, Mr. Hamilton—you found her!"

"Get your hat," said Loring. "And come with us. Never mind your keys, Lillian. We'll take the taxi."

At the hospital an interne was very businesslike.

"Her husband has identified her. Yes, he is with her now. No, you can't come in—well, only for a moment."

There lay Ernestine in the stiff, long-sleeved, hospital shirt, her hair black between her white face and the white pillow, a nurse beside her counting her respiration. Will crouching there, his face against the covers. Her eyes were opened, flushed with fever. She was talking—pleading—in delirium. Ernestine, the darling sister—in this dreadful place!

"You will all have to go," said the nurse, snapping shut her old-fashioned watch and darting a resentful look at the interne. "We cannot have anybody in this ward after hours. Mr. Todd, you will have to go."

"Ernestine," cried Lillian, and Ernestine said quickly:

"Will's coming. I tell you my name is Briceland B-r-i-c-e-l-a-n-d—I think there's more. The bus ran over me—it leaped at me—"

"She was crushed?" exclaimed Lillian, and the nurse said:

"No—she's just delirious. Please go." "Can't we have her moved to a private room? Can't we move her?" It was Loring now.

Will had lifted his face, and he stared at Ernestine and gently smoothed her cheek, while her bright eyes turned on him.

"Papa—you must find Will—he'll worry," she urged him.

"I can't say about moving her. You'll have to see the floor doctor. She is very ill to be moved—please leave the ward now."

The nurse was definite. Training and authority were behind her, and they withdrew. Even Will had to leave her, but Ernestine made such an outcry that the nurse permitted him to come back until Loring should make arrangements to move Ernestine.

the only woman in the room. A black man stood near her, twisting a cloth cap in his hands, his lips moving soundlessly. There was another man, shabby, unclean, suffering in patient silence, and they were joined by a third and then a fourth vague quiet figure.

Lillian's feelings were not of pity but revulsion. She could not bear it—Ernestine here with the scum of the earth—mamma's baby—their beauty—in this place that smelled of lye, that was as full of the sounds of sickness and suffering as purgatory is full of groans. This place was hell, it was nightmare. There came from the streets the clang of an ambulance—and a stretcher moved in the hall. Loring was beside her, beckoning.

"We are taking her to the Presbyterian hospital. They'll have a room and a nurse for her when we get there. Also a good doctor."

Lillian followed him in confusion. The ambulance she had heard was for Ernestine. The taxi threaded after it through the streets, and again there was delay. Mrs. Bennett left them to go back home. Will was with Ernestine and the stretcher. But now, at last, a small freshly painted room, as clean as a scalded dish, a high narrow bed, by an open window, an electric fan on a white dressing table, a chair or two, and a graduate nurse, capable, cool. There was a doctor, too.

Lillian stood just inside the door. The doctor was silent for a long time, examining Ernestine, reading the copy of the chart that had been sent with her.

"Uremia—and some albumen," he said as though any of them knew what he meant. "The baby will be premature—if we can get her through her confinement now swiftly, she'll be all right. When did you say she was expectant?"

Will named the date. The doctor nodded with satisfaction as though his worst fears were confirmed.

"Well, it's a nasty case," he said, "but perhaps we shall pull her through. Miss Nana"—he turned to the nurse with a rapid fire of instructions and requests and laid his coat aside.

"Now—there's nothing any of you can do but give us elbow room and quiet. She's already had two convulsions. When the next comes we shall be ready for her." The horrid word shot through Lillian's mind like a sword thrust. No—no—only idiot children—only diseased and terrible people—only the poor and helpless were so afflicted. Not Ernestine—O, God—not Ernestine!

The doctor put them out with deliberate firmness, allowing Will to stay.

"If you go across the street, there's a nice little hotel there. Tell the clerk I sent you, and go to bed. Miss Nana will call you if there's any change, or if she's delivered. The battle is ours, now."

Lillian knew that it was as hard for Loring as it was for her to accept this dismissal and leave Will behind. Will was so futile! He would have left her in that other dreadful place.

In silence they crossed the street, registered at the hotel, and were assigned a room. They moved about in silent misery, looking out of the windows at the walls of the hospital.

"Did you know Will lost his job?" Loring hesitated. "Yes," he said at last. "I knew it."

"But why—"

"I didn't know how Ernestine would take it, if I butted in. I thought she would let us know if she needed us."

"You know how proud she is—"

Loring moved restlessly. "I think I'll go back to the hospital. You stay here. No need for both of us to go. I'll call you if you're needed."

Wearily and confused, Lillian took off her clothes, bathed in the tiny bathroom and lay down across the bed, partly dressed again. Her whole thought was strained at first toward the hospital and the possible issue of Ernestine's illness. Then her thoughts turned and turned, from Loring to Ernestine, to Will, to mamma and papa and Ernestine and back to mamma again. Mamma had allowed papa and Loring to dictate to her about Will's father. That had really separated Ernestine from them long ago. They had offered Ernestine their love and help only at the price of betrayal of her marriage. Tears came to Lillian, and even. "I'm tired and sad, she fell asleep.

Daylight streaming over her bed wakened her. She rose, dressed, went across to the hospital and asked for Will, wondering as she did so whether or not she should have asked for Loring.

Will came to her in the reception room, looking at her from dull heavy eyes, silent, waiting.

"How is Ernestine, Will?" she asked him softly.

"She is still very ill," he answered, and added as an afterthought: "The baby is a girl."

He was exhausted, unshaven, sad and avry. As he stood there looking vaguely about him he seemed to Lillian the most forlorn and helpless human being she had ever seen. She pitied him, but he vexed her.

"Oh, Will," she said impulsively, "you shouldn't have allowed Ernestine to have this other baby—so soon, when you wasn't prepared. You should have protected her." He averted his face, but she saw his flush.

"I've got to go back upstairs," he said, and added, as he turned to the door, "Loring has already lectured me on birth control. He's left the hospital. You must have missed him."

Lillian was ashamed. She had not intended to say such a thing. It was none of their business, really. At the hotel she stopped at the desk for the key, but Loring had it. She went up in the quiet elevator. When she opened the unlocked door of their room and went in, Loring was lying back in a chair by the open window, his hat on the floor beside him, his collar and tie lying upon it. He was staring straight before him, and when Lillian came to his side he looked up at her with a piteous expression.

For a moment, standing there, a dart of such pain went through Lillian that she cried out. This was what Ernestine could do to Loring. She knew, with a gripping pang of conviction, that nothing that could ever happen to her would cause him such anguish—such rout. This was what Will meant when he said that he knew what was the matter with Loring! She fell on her knees beside him, sobbing, and laid her face upon his knee. His hand fell on her shoulders. He mistook her fear and pain.

"She'll be all right, Lillian," he whispered. "God grant she will! The doctor said that a day or two will tell it's uremic poisoning."

He sat forward in his chair, and his clenched hand fell on one knee, while the other arm held her convulsively.

"Thank God you weren't there. Thank God you will never know how she suffered. Will fainted once, and the nurse brought me into the room. They were fighting death like a physical foe. I helped to hold her—"

He gave a stifled cry and tore the buttons from his shirt as he expanded his lungs against the crushing fear that lay upon him.

"Oh, Lillian," he cried to his wife, "I don't see how she can live—after last night. The doctor thinks she will, and so does Doctor Grey. He's with her now. But I don't see how she can survive that struggle. But one thing is settled for us, for ever."

He pulled her tear-wet face up from his knee, and looked at her with blazing eyes. "You and I will have to be enough. No child is worth such anguish. No life is worth—death. No children—for us."

She hid her face against him. Her arms held him close.

"I don't care, if only you will love me."

He pressed her to him but his eyes had flown to the windows of the hospital, and she felt a tremor pass through his big frame.

Ernestine stayed in the hospital until the baby was a month old. Will borrowed the money from Mr. Poole and paid the hospital bill, paid the nurse and the two doctors, the day she was to be discharged. Loring protested in vain. The removal to the expensive private hospital had been his suggestion—it was he who got the nurse, who got the two doctors; he had planned to meet all these expenses. But Will was deaf to him. He was going to pay Ernestine's hospital bill, he declared, if he had to rob a bank. What business was it of Loring's? It was Will's wife—Will's child.

Legally the debt was Todd's. There was nothing that could be done about it, but the argument increased the bad blood between the men. Ernestine wanted to go to her own home, she told Lillian. Mamma was hurrying back from Europe. The house at the lake was closed. Lillian remonstrated with Ernestine's determination to go back to the house out in Mayfair.

"But what will you do?" she asked, and her face grew red. "Will isn't even working."

"Yes, I am," said Will. "I started today. Mr. Poole is going to open an independent studio, and I am going to work for him. He's got hold of the copyrights to his old strip and we are going to syndicate it ourselves. It will bring us in a lot of money. I'm to get fifty dollars a week to begin with . . . and we'll be all right."

Lillian's dismay was increased, not diminished, by this news. The combination of Will and Mr. Poole was worse than nothing, it appeared to her. "I don't know what mamma will say," she protested feebly, but neither Ernestine nor Will seemed to be moved by that.

It was a wonderful day when Ernestine went home. All the way home in the taxi Will held the baby in one arm and Ernestine in the other, and his face was shining with joy when at last they stood in their little kitchen, she weak and trembling in his arms. He was starved for her, but he kissed her gently, got the rocker and filled it with cushions and placed it by the open kitchen door. She sat there and watched him prepare supper.

"Will," she said, when they had eaten, and he had closed the door against the fall dusk, "you're like you used to be. You're like you were that day we met upon the street, when I first fell in love with you. Tell me, what is it?"

"The new job, I guess. I'm crazy about it, Ernestine. In the first place, to be working again is good—and to be working for John Poole. And then, Ernestine, I think we're going to do it—I believe we'll make a success—a big one."

His enthusiasm was boundless. While he washed the dishes he talked to her, and then they put the children to bed, and he drew Ernestine onto his knees.

"Tell me, Ernestine—it was an ungodly business—but you aren't sorry, are you? Now that you're both home again—you're glad we've got her—aren't you?"

They sat looking at the baby. Will pressed his cheek against Ernestine's shoulder.

"Tell me," he implored her.

Ernestine understood his need for assurance. He was still suffering from the humiliation Lillian and Loring had heaped on him.

"They said—I shouldn't have allowed—allowed," he exclaimed sharply at the word. "I never thought about it."

"We're married, aren't we?" asked Ernestine, and as his bright look questioned her she shook her head a little.

"That's all," she said. "That's the answer. I'm your wife—I love you—of course I'm glad."

He kissed her passionately. It seemed so long since she had been in his arms like this—close, close.

"Oh, Ernestine," he said, "I don't deserve you. The future is uncertain. But if ever a wife deserved a good husband, you do. But, sweetheart, it's hard, it's been harder for you than for me; don't think I don't know it. But it's been worth the risk, hasn't it?"

"As long as we hold together," she whispered. "As long as we love."

And he poured his kisses upon her thin flushed face.

"I'll make up to you for everything—you'll never be sorry," he told her. And she lay against him, yielding, trembling and in love, forgetting everything else for him as she had forgotten again and again.

CHAPTER X

Will Has a Vision

The firm of Poole and Todd found itself at the end of two years established beyond question. It owed its success to Will's terrific efforts. He had met and overcome one after another of their natural foes: Mr. Poole's idleness and intemperance. By a kind of fierce affection he had dominated and controlled the old man and kept him working. The profits were divided, after he had his fifty a week, and Poole his hundred. And out of his share of the profits, Will repaid his partner for the loan for Ernestine's hospital bill. He repaid him the exact half of the amount Poole had sunk into the business at the beginning.

And after two years he found himself face to face with the one enemy he could not conquer. Ernestine noticed that he grew thin and pale, that all that the baby, Elaine, was two.

"What is it, Will?" she asked him. "I thought everything was fine now."

"It's Poole," said Will. "He's not drawing—his boozing, but, of course, that's not new. Only—he's lost interest."

"What do you mean, Will?"

He seemed reluctant to put his thought into crude words.

"He's failing—his health. His eyes are bad."

"You mean—he's old?"

"Yes," said Will. "That's what I mean. He can't help it—poor devil—he struggles against it—but it's showing on him."

"But, Will, what are you doing?"

"Why, I'm managing—but that's all. When I can get him to help, we work together. We've got the strip all planned out for another year, the general sequence of things. But I don't feel that I can do Poole's stuff. My own ideas would be different. I can do the drawings well enough—nobody would notice, probably—but—"

"You don't want to go on—without him?"

"The stuff is his, Ernestine. I don't want to—there's something fundamentally wrong—even when I'm his partner, and all. For a while, as a makeshift, I can go ahead, and take care of the mechanics of it, and do the conversation—but actually, we haven't any business at all. We only have him—and when he's gone—"

Will sighed, and then squared his shoulders.

"Well—here's hoping," he said, and grinned at her. "I guess the old boat will sail another season. You see—it's hard for me to crowd him, Ernestine. He is old, and his eyes are about gone, and he hangs on me—it's like making a sick old horse pull in the harness—for us. Of course, it's for him, too, but it is really for us. We are the ones that will enjoy the money—not him. I find myself soft with him."

"I know," she understood this exactly, and her young face was troubled.

She was blooming again with beauty and vitality. She had been a lovely bud but now she was in flower—in her middle twenties—young with beauty and grace, but with poise now, too, and a strong sense of accomplishment. She had background now of a new kind—not the background of parents and school—and a fine home, but the background of effort and self-control.

"I'll take Peter," she said. "You can look after Elaine."

She was going to Lillian's, to see mamma who was home from New York for another visit.

Will watched the family away, Elaine perched on his arm. Elaine was happy with her father, and they made a game of supper. Now, at two, she was beginning to be a bonny baby. They had had a long struggle with her. But at last her heart was beginning to beat a rhythmic tune—a healthy organ instead of an undeveloped heart in an undeveloped body. It almost seemed that they could breathe again.

After the little girl was sleeping Will sat beside her, smoking and watching her—dreaming those things a father dreams for his little daughter. The daylight was going, and the last of the light seemed to gather in an iridescence about the baby's face. Suddenly Will was shot through with an emotion more powerful than anything he had ever felt. For just an instant the baby face seemed the only thing in the world—the lashes down in a smudge against her cheek—he saw not flesh, but color—not bony structure, but pure line—idea—

He stared at her, and saw not the child but her picture. In that moment he sensed the true identity of her being, as one hears in astonishment clear tone and harmony where there is no sound. He was profoundly disturbed. Why, he could paint her—this was new—this feeling; he had not felt like this before, not even when he dabbled so constantly in colors as a child. He had never felt this; he could paint her; he knew that he could.

During the whole month of January Mr. Poole did not draw a line. He came to the office and sat there, but Will could not get him to work and found himself incapable of much arguing.

Odd Formation of Moss Forms Human Skeleton

Nature has evidently attempted to mark one of the sharp curves on the Daniel Webster highway in New Hampshire.

Near the summer home of the late Benjamin Piscopo of Boston at Lake Winnisquam the highway winds along the shore in the shape of a letter S. On one of a group of trees near the shore front the moss has grown so that it looks much like a human skeleton in white against the dark background of the tree.

It is very noticeable at night when the lights of a car going north are at just the right height to flash upon the skeleton.

It is also plainly seen in the daytime and has attracted much attention from passing motorists. The tree is on the south side of the Daniel Webster highway between Tilton and Laconia about four miles north of Tipton.—Boston Globe.

SATIN FOR EVENING ENSEMBLE; DIGNITY IS SOCIAL SEASON NOTE

Handsome Exponent of the New Fashion.

MORE and more fashionable folk are becoming satin-minded. Even the woman who heretofore has expressed no special interest in satin is almost sure to acquire a taste for it before the season is far spent. The new satins are that enchanting one cannot but yield to their lure. Not only are daytime modes fashioned of satin but in the formal evening program satin is called upon by style creators to play a most flattering role. The new panne satin which has a high luster is a favored type. It comes in exquisite colors, also in the much-beloved white.

For the most part the satin gown has gone classic. That is, it is styled with a sophisticated simplicity which tests the dressmaker's art to the limit. In featuring the exquisitely simple, designers have turned to the styles of ancient Greece for inspiration. To offset the absence of trimming, women of fashion are wearing with their classic satins most gorgeous jewelry, needless to say, with striking effect. A moue which is being exploited by the haute couture in Paris is the formal evening ensemble made all of satin. The model illustrated is a handsome exponent of this fashion. It is made of mello-toe satin in the new mint-leaf green. The skirt of this charming decollete frock acquires its graceful flare through a series of shapely godets. While this godet and glittering jewels can make it. Particularly in the matter of formal evening wraps have creators of the mode grown lavish in their ideas. In order to keep pace with the dignity and elegance to which fashions have returned, formal wraps have necessarily taken on added length, their stately grace responding to the call for queenly styles tuned to the demands of la grande dame. The lower picture shows this trend to elegance in dress more eloquently than words can express it. Paton chooses to fashion this majestic wrap of handsome wine-red velvet, enhancing it with a lavish use of magnificent fox fur. The preponderance of deep red velvet for evening wraps is noted throughout displays in Paris salons. The sweeping lines of this wrap are significant, for floor length is the decree for sumptuous wraps of ultra formality. Not that the youthful short treatment requires expert manipulation on the part of the designer the result bespeaks almost an exaggerated simplicity; thus art conceals art which is after all the highest form of artistry. And that is the way with most of the smartest satin frocks: they are simple only in appearance. The fact that the coat which complements this formal satin gown is very much longer in the back is significant. The trend to stately dignity in the evening mode is reflected in the newer formal wraps, some of which are that long they almost trail at the back. The sleeves of this satin coat in the picture also carry a message of novelty and widening lines. Sleeves are proving an intriguing theme and designers are losing no opportunity to feature them in their unique and even eccentric moods. Dignity in Evening Wraps. A program of dress is in promise for the social season, as sumptuous, as regal, as fraught with dignity as the various gorgeous materials, magnificent and aristocratic furs, laces novelty wraps have passed from the picture. On the contrary, the fall season is opening with an array of captivating little novelty jackets in the styling of which ermine, gay velvets, satins, metal brocades and sparkling sequin embroideries play a dazzling role. All of which goes to show that the very long wrap and the very short wrap are to be friendly rivals during the coming season of formal dinners, opera, and other social functions. Designers are doing some very unusual things with black velvet and ermine this season. We refer to the long slenderizing coats whose fitted lines suggest that "old fashions have become new fashions." These types are not of simple construction, for they are molded to the figure to a nicety through intricate seamings, shirtings and various as complicated manipulations. The sleeves are the glory of these sleek-fitted wraps. To say that they are designful but mildly expresses it. JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

FARM STOCK

FARMERS SAVE BY BUTCHERING HOGS

Every Step Explained in Detail by an Expert.

Every step in butchering hogs on the farm is explained in detail and illustrated in pictures in a recently issued bulletin by Fred H. Leinbach, assistant professor of animal husbandry at the Colorado Agricultural college. Farmers can save the butcher's profit and the cost of butchering cutting and curing by doing the work themselves. It is pointed out. Two men can easily kill and dress six medium sized hogs in a half day, it is stated.

Among the various topics discussed in the bulletin, are: Necessary tools and equipment, which need not be expensive or elaborate; methods of killing, sticking, scalding, hanging the carcass, opening the carcass, splitting, chilling, cutting, rendering lard, curing, sweet pickle or brine-cured pork, smoking and storing.

Pictures in the bulletin illustrate clearly the method of sticking the cooled carcass ready to be trimmed, separating the head at the atlas joint, separating the ham from the carcass, removing the shoulder, separating the loin and side meat, the five main cuts from each half of the carcass, removing the neck bone from the shoulder, separating the Boston butt from the shoulder proper, trimming the shoulder, trimming the ham and the hamp trimmed and ready for curing.

Copies of the bulletin will be sent to anyone interested. Requests should be made for Bulletin 283A, "Farm Butchering of Hogs," and should be sent to the college extension service.

When to Feed Wheat to Various Farm Animals

Stock farmers who grow wheat are often tempted to feed at least a part of the crop, especially in years when the price of wheat is low. This brings up the question of just how low the price of wheat must go to make it advisable to feed the crop rather than to sell it upon the world market. Ordinarily the practice is to sell wheat and if necessary especially in the feeding of hogs, to purchase corn with a part of the money. This is due to the fact that the price of corn per bushel is usually not over two-thirds of the price of wheat per bushel. But some years large crops of wheat, or less than average crops of corn, bring about a situation in which the price of wheat and the price of corn are quite close together. It is impossible to avoid such situations occasionally; the reasons are entirely outside the control of the individual farmer. In 1919 there were about 75 million acres of land in the United States growing wheat. By the year 1924 but 50 million acres were seeded to wheat. On top of this fluctuation in acreage for the United States we have a fluctuation in average yields of about 25 per cent.

A Slowness Explained

"You English are slow to see a joke," said a forward young man. "Perhaps," answered the Londoner. "But, you see, real jokes are so scarce in our country that one has to take a little time to inspect any article that's offered."

Mange Cutting Profits From Pork Producers

South Dakota authorities estimate that one-fifth of all the hogs put on the market are infested with mange. This materially reduces prices because first-class hams cannot be cut from many hogs. Mange is caused by a mite which bores holes in the skin. A new generation appears about every 12 to 14 days and ermine lays from 10 to 25 eggs. The best treatment is to dip with a thick oil that will not run off quickly. This will kill all the live mites. Treatment should be repeated in about 12 to 14 days in order to kill all of the mites that have hatched in the meantime. A warm lime sulphur dip is also effective.

Live Stock Facts

The only sure way to kill lice and ticks on sheep is to dip each animal in one of the standard dip solutions.

Cattle for experimental feeding at the Iowa State college are generally purchased in the fall or early winter months. They are usually fed about 180 days.

It is estimated that hog cholera is responsible for the death of about 6,000,000 hogs a year. This year the situation is particularly acute on account of the smaller number of hogs which have been vaccinated.

Mange usually starts around the head or nose but soon spreads over the sides and finally over the entire hog.

Farm management records show that the amount of live stock per farm is one of the important factors in determining farm profits.

Pigs make the most economical gains while they are growing rapidly, and consequently require more feed to produce 100 pounds gain as they become more mature.

week looking up material in preparation for their try-outs for the high school debating team. The subject for debate this season is "Resolved: That the national chain grocery stores operating in the state of Michigan are detrimental to the people of the state." The debaters have had two meetings so far and much interest has been shown in their work. There are 15 candidates for the team. Only one veteran is back, but there is plenty of new timber that will very nicely take the places of those lost by graduation.

The agriculture classes have been kept busy of late studying apples, potatoes and live stock during their laboratory classes, at various farms in the vicinity. The field crops class numbers 19 members, while the animal husbandry class eight. The following are some of the farms visited: Charles Timreck's, John Burgenson's, William Phelps, John Davis', Waldo Curry's, and W. T. Hill's.

The members of the animal husbandry class, though not boastful of being experts, think they can be of considerable assistance in culling poultry flocks. Anyone wishing such aid can call the school, phone 295.
