URGESCAREFUL VOTE ON TWO AMENDMENTS

Rep. Fred C. Holbeck last Saturday addressed the Board of Supervisors, in session, relative to the various proposed amendments to the constitution which will be voted on November 4. His address was as follows:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: I want to thank you for the privilege of speaking to you for a few minutes on a subject that is of the greatest importance to this section of the country. I refer particularly to two proposed amendments to the constitution that we will vote on at the coming election.

There are four amendments to be voted on. One gives a few of the larger counties the privilege of electing their county officers in the fall at the general election instead of in the spring. We are not interested in this amendment. Another proposition is the proposed law to put a tax on cigarettes and I will not discuss this at this time.

Now we come to the remaining two proposed amendments, one of which we should vote for and support in every way possible, and the other we should fight to the limit. So it is very important that we have these matters very carefully in mind when we go to the polls on election day.

The amendment which gives the state the authority to "improve or assist in improving rivers and streams," as well as the public roads, is something we should vote for. Under the present constitution, the state cannot assist in any way in the cleaning out of rivers or in building any drainage structure. The cost of all our drainage in the past has been always directly assessed on the land. The tremendous cost has in many sections of the country driven people from their homes and raised the taxes tremendously.

There is no reason why the State and Federal governments should not help to build our trunk line drains the same as is now the case with our trunk line roads, and both the State and the Federal government would be willing to do so if permitted by our constitution. At this time will give us the help we so badly need. So I say once more, every man and woman in our part of the country should vote "Yes" on this amendment.

The other amendment that I want to call your attention to is the proposition to change our present method of apportionment. The present constitution says that this work shall be done by the legislature. The proposed amendment gives this power to the Secretary of State.

If this amendment is passed it will give complete control of the state to Wayne county, because it will increase the Wayne county membership in the legislature to such an extent that this one county will completely control all legislation.

For years Wayne county has been trying to get control of the legislature. In the last legislature this was tried in several different ways, all of which were defeated. One of the propositions was the amalgamation of counties, and you will recall that it was proposed to join Arenac, Ogemaw and Iosco in one county, and similar amalgamations were proposed with reference to all our northern counties. This bill was introduced and pushed by the Wayne county delegation in the legislature, and if it had passed it would have meant about six less Representatives from the northern part of the state and about the same number more in Wayne county. This proposed amendment on apportionment is just another proposition of the same kind and we should vote "No."

I know there is a general tendency not to vote at all on proposed amendments. This, of course, is all right if you do not know what you are voting on. However, in this case it is important to vote, and be careful how you vote. Wayne county will vote yes on this apportionment amendment, and we should vote no.

Every man and woman should not only vote, but work right up to election day. Your own best interests and the best interests of this section of the state demand that you go to the polls and vote on these two propositions, and not only that, but you should work among your neighbors and friends and make sure that they understand the importance of these matters and the danger that threatens at this time.

The following endorsement was unanimously adopted by the Board of Supervisors:

To the County Board of Supervisors: Gentlemen: We heartily endorse the remarks of State Representative Holbeck in recommending to the voters of Iosco county to vote for the proposed amendment to Section 14 of Article X of the Constitution, authorizing the state to improve or assist in improving rivers and streams. Vote "Yes."

Further, that we vote "No" to the amendment to Sections 3 and 4 of Article V of the Constitution, relative to number and apportionment of representatives and senators in the state legislature. Further, that we recommend and urge every voter to get out and vote.

Carried unanimously. Clark Tanner, Chairman. Frank E. Dease, Clerk.

JOHN ROBERT BROOKS

John Robert Brooks died in Wilber on Tuesday evening, October 14. Death was due to typhoid fever. The young man was taken sick on September 30 and passed away two weeks later.

The deceased was born in Wilber township, Iosco county, on July 25, 1905, and departed this life at the age of 25 years, two months and 19 days. He was the fourth son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Brooks of Wilber, and made his home in Wilber all his life.

Funeral services were held Friday afternoon from the Wilber M. E. church, Rev. Jones officiating. Interment was made in the family lot. He leaves to mourn his loss, besides his parents, three brothers and two sisters—Hubert and Helen at home, Byron and Jeannette of Flint, and Harry of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Those from out of town who came to attend the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brooks and family, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Brooks of Flint; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Von Dette of Detroit; Mrs. Chas. Schreiber, son and daughter, of Pontiac; Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Schreiber and son of Detroit; Charles and Dan Corner of Flint; Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Chattaway, and Alexander Murray of Petoskey.

HEMLOCK

Samuel Bamberger of Muskegon spent the week end here with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Waldo Curry spent Sunday in Saginaw with the former's sister, who is seriously ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brown and daughter, Leona, and Russell Binder spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. John Katterman.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Long spent one day last week in Bay City. Mrs. Amelia Bamberger spent the week end at Omer with her grandson, Charles Hayes, who is a patient at the hospital here.

Some from here attended the horse sale in Twining Saturday.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Emma Peck, who passed away one year ago today.

She bid no one a last farewell—she said goodbye to none. Her spirit flew before we knew; the blow was hard and the shock severe. Only those who have lost can tell, the pain of parting with no farewell.

Her loving husband and children.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends for their kindness during the illness and death of our dear son and brother—to the minister and choir, and to those who loaned their cars and for the beautiful floral offerings. We are taking this way to thank you.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brooks, Hubert and Helen Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Byron Brooks and family, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Anderson.

PLANNING OF MEALS IS PROBLEM FACED BY NUTRITION GROUPS

How to plan and prepare meals that will please the family as well as provide all essential elements, is the problem being considered by more than one hundred Iosco county women, under the direction of Miss Muriel Dundas, nutrition specialist, Michigan State College.

The second leaders' meeting of the series will be held on Thursday, October 30, at the home of Mrs. H. T. Swanson, East Tawas, at 9:30 a. m., Central time.

Leaders will report on the meetings which have been held in their local communities at which they demonstrated correct methods of table setting and service, and discussed "Courtesy in the Dining Room."

Since age, size, and occupation as well as requirement of the individual to vary, the thoughtful mother realized her need of study on the problems of providing the necessary elements in just the right proportions for each member of the family. A consideration of the needs of the body with regard to the various food elements, protein, calcium, iron, phosphorus, the vitamins and the energy yielding foods, brings out many points of vital interest in the planning of the day's meals.

An understanding of the functions of food in the body leads each individual to a different attitude with regard to the food which he selects as well as helping him to maintain a standard of normal weight.

In addition to the discussion of the full value of foods, a food demonstration will be given by Miss Dundas on the making of fruit and vegetable salads and salad dressings. That green vegetables are now available during the winter months, in even the most remote communities, bears testimony to the fact that people are everywhere realizing that they are essential to health and well-being.

Following the training meeting similar discussions and demonstrations will be given in the local groups throughout the county.

HALE

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Short on Monday, October 20, a 9 pound boy.

Miss Florence Williams of Saginaw was the guest of Miss Bertha Ward last week.

Mrs. M. M. Mitchell, who has been visiting at the home of her aunt, Mrs. W. E. Glendon, left for her home in Akron, Ohio, Monday.

W. E. Glendon was a business visitor in Saginaw on Tuesday. Elzie Ewing has leased his farm and is leaving for a trip to the western states within a few days.

IOSCO CHURCH SCHOOLS

At the invitation of Rev. C. E. Doty, the sacred drama, "The Challenge of the Cross," was presented at the First M. E. church of Bay City last Sunday evening. Those making the trip were the Misses Lois Chambers, Isabelle King, Bessie Metcalf, Rosemary McKay, Ruby Evans, Alice Johnson and Hazel Hallanger; the Mesdames Harry Felton, Frank R. Dease, and R. A. Hamilton; and Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Shattuck. The Reno young people have also invited the group to present the drama at the Reno Baptist church in the near future.

The following delegates have registered for the State Sunday School convention at Kalamazoo October 28 to 30: Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Colby, Rev. and Mrs. Frank Metcalf, Miss Kate Dease, and the Mesdames W. A. Evans, Jas. Chambers and G. N. Shattuck.

In the interest of the county young people's work, Mrs. W. A. Evans and Mrs. G. N. Shattuck spent Tuesday evening with the young people of the Reno Baptist church. Under the able leadership of Mrs. Fred Latter, these young people are enjoying some splendid semi-monthly meetings.

The afternoon Leadership Training class, which has proved so popular during the past three years, will meet every Friday afternoon from 2:00 to 4:00 o'clock, beginning November 7th, and continuing for six weeks. The study topic will be "Principles of Teaching" an accredited course; place of meeting, the City Hall of Tawas City; instructor, Rev. Frank Metcalf. All teachers and workers in the church schools are urged to attend.

The newly elected executive committee of the county council met Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. G. N. Shattuck.

RIVER IMPROVEMENT HEARING HELD OCT. 22

A hearing of petitions for the improvement of Tawas and AuSable rivers for the protection of small craft navigating the Great Lakes, also the construction of a break-water at Point Lookout was held Wednesday before engineers of the War Department. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Bay City Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Wenonah.

The following delegation from Tawas City attended the conference: Hon. Fred C. Holbeck, C. L. McLean, J. A. Murphy, H. J. Keiser, Mayor L. H. Braddock, Jas. H. Leslie, Charles Moeller, M. H. Barnes, M. C. Musolf, W. E. Laidlaw, Louis Callahan, Stephen Ferguson. Other sections of the district interested were present.

Stenographic notes of the meeting were taken for the department and written petitions were received. The following is the text of the petition presented by Tawas City:

At a well attended meeting of the leading citizens of Tawas City, held at the City Hall on the evening of October 21, 1930, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, for presentation and your consideration, respecting the improvement of Tawas River:

We respectfully submit the following data: The present depth of the water at the bridge located at the mouth of the river is 8 1/2 feet. The clearance under the bridge is 8.8 feet. Span of bridge between piers is 68 feet.

About 100 feet below the bridge, out towards the Bay, a clay bar crosses the mouth of the river with a low-water clearance of two feet; from this point seaward the bottom of the lake has a gradual slope to an eight foot depth at 1000 feet from shore.

Above the bridge, for perhaps a thousand feet, the water continues at a depth of about six to eight feet on the average. The benefit to be derived from a dredging or deepening of the water to the entrance of the river mouth would be the allowance of yachts and fish boats and trading craft of small tonnage to find shelter and anchorage therein; and

The completion of the improvement, and piers now in course of construction at the mouth of the river, and the proposed erection of a yacht club house thereon, would be one of the things which would be very much benefited and improved and appreciated by those interested who live in Iosco county, and visiting yachtsmen who are members of such club but reside in Detroit, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Bay City, and elsewhere in the state.

For the people of this vicinity, we earnestly and urgently request your kindly consideration of the above matters.

"THE DAWN PATROL"

A MIGHTY AIR DRAMA "The Dawn Patrol" showing at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, is a story without a feminine player in the cast and consequently without romance. Yet, it carries through it the fine theme of brotherly love.

Three members of the cast have won new laurels in this dramatic and spectacular episode of the war. Our hats off to Richard Barthelme, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Neil Hamilton, with the latter given an opportunity for his finest portrayal since "Beau Geste." Gardner James, too, is excellent as the fear-stricken kid aviator who finally escapes death as a man.

Despite the absence of feminine players it is as much a woman's picture as it is a man's. In dealing with a different phase of fighting it creates sympathy and therefore feminine appeal.

The air fighting is spectacular and thrilling. These scenes represent a technical accomplishment. Two of the most gripping sequences are the flight, in defiance of orders, of Barthelme and Fairbanks over the German lines, and the solo flight of Barthelme during which he destroys a munition dump, but is doomed never again to reach the Allied sector.

It is the story of two pals in the air service, and a squadron commander who looks upon himself as an executioner because his responsibility in sending inexperienced youths into the air and over the German lines to death.

The introduction of this phase of war, the sending of young men who know only the rudiments of flying into the air to combat experienced enemy fliers, introduces into the picture a sympathetic strain that will visibly affect both men and women.

No one will want to miss "The Dawn Patrol," Saturday, Sunday and Monday, October 25, 26 and 27.

The Spirit of Halloween

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Pale tapers glimmer in the sky.
The dead and dying leaves go by;
Dimly across the faded green
Strange shadows, stranger shades, are seen—
It is the mystic Halloween.

ALTHOUGH this writer is no seventh son of a seventh son and therefore possessing "second sight" and the gift of prophecy, he feels perfectly safe in making a prediction. It is this:

On the night of October 31 there will be unusual activity among the juvenile population of the United States of America. Parties of them will gather in houses in which the decorative scheme will include grinning jack-o'-lanterns, dry and yellowed stalks of corn, black cats, witches et cetera. But the principal activity will be outdoors rather than indoors. In the cities and towns white-sheeted figures will roam the streets, and other figures, lacking any special costume, will flit furtively among the shadows in alleys and back streets. In the country the roads and lanes will see more night traffic than usual and dogs will bark at shadowy intruders in farm yards.

The next morning merchants in city and town will find the front windows of their stores decorated with long scrawling lines of white—soap put there, but not to clean the panes. Gates will be missing from their accustomed places, benches and chairs will have disappeared, water will be gushing forth from unguarded taps and in general there will be such a transposition of any object left outdoors by the careless householder as to cause one to wonder by what strange magic have hitherto-inanimate things come to life. Farmers, finding wheels missing from their wagons—hung, perhaps, high up in a tree, or even, perhaps, discovering the wagon itself perched astride the ridgepole of the district school—will mutter the same thing that the merchant is muttering under his breath—"The little heathens!"

They shouldn't call the children that, however. "Pagans" is the word, rather than "heathens." For October 31 is Halloween and on that night young America is a throw-back to their pagan ancestry of thousands of years ago. For the boys and girls who go about on Halloween playing pranks on their elders, even though probably not one out of a hundred knows it, are simply keeping alive a custom born in England in the far-off days of the Druids—with this difference: their ancestors of ancient days observed this custom to keep away or propitiate evil spirits, whereas their descendants assume the characters of evil spirits, or at least, mischievous ones, and act accordingly.

The origin of Halloween goes back to the respect and homage paid by ancient nations to the sun. The pagans of those days, whether Egyptian, Greek or Roman, assigned a place of great importance in their pantheon to the sun god, the giver of light and heat and life. The sun marked out for them the time of work and the time of rest; it divided the year into seasons; it made possible hounteous crops of grain and fruits and under its warming rays flourished all that was beautiful and splendid and wonderful on this earth.

So it was only natural that the early pagan should set aside a day of grief for the ending of summer when his beauty and splendor declined under the frosts and winds of the coming winter, when the earth fell under the spell of the evil powers and was not to be free from them again until the coming of spring. But mingled with this grief over the passing of summer was the joy which he felt as he beheld the golden harvest of the autumn and in his heart he felt a song of thanksgiving for the ripened grain and fruit. The deity to whom the Romans were accustomed to render their thanks for these gifts was the goddess, Pomona, and they were accustomed to set apart October 31 or November 1 in her honor as a festival day in which nuts and apples, representing the winter store of fruits, figured prominently.

The Celts, the original inhabitants of the British Isles, worshipped the spirits of the forests and streams. Their priests, the Druids, held their rites beneath the great oaks which are characteristic of that land, since this tree was held in special veneration by the Celts. The Druids in time became skilled prophets in interpreting the will of the gods. They kept their sacred lore from the people and handed it down only among themselves. They taught that souls were immortal and that they passed from one body to another when life became extinct.

On October 31 the Druids taught that the Lord of Death gathered together the souls of all those who had died during the year just passed and assigned to them bodies of the animals they were to inhabit the coming twelvemonth, according to their condemnation.

Samhain, "summer's end," was November 1 to the Druids. Flocks were the Roman Pantheon to the Virgin and all the saints and martyrs of the church. The latter day assignment was made by Pope Gregory IV in 835 in order that the crowds which came up each year to Rome for the religious services might be fed sufficiently from the bountiful harvests of the year. In the Tenth century November 2 was made All Souls' Day.

Since America is the melting pot of the nations it is only natural, perhaps, that this observance, like so many others, partakes of the customs and traditions of many lands. Hence our Halloween lore is a combination of Irish, English, Scotch and German traditions, not to mention contributions from the French, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, Austrian, Italian and Slavic states as well as Nordic. The original celebrations in this country were mainly English in origin, even though in Colonial times the day was not much celebrated. A few of the English in the colonies kept up the mother country tradition but for the most part it was let pass. This was due largely to the wide settlements, the hardship of communal association and the necessity for the colonists to be busy at this time of the year laying in the harvest and provisions for winter. But despite this one could find now and then old Halloween customs in full force. There followed then such games as apple dicking and apple snipping as well as apple peeling and throwing the peel over the left shoulder, comb and mirror tests and ballads topped off by a round of ghost stories.

A party of twelve may learn their future if one will get from a churchyard a clod of earth and set twelve candles in it, naming them as he lights them. The future of each is governed by the light the candle emits, wavering, steady, sputtering or going out.

Fairies come in for especial attention in Ireland. Good and bad they hold the Irish their in their power, and, so the story runs, St. Patrick was not immune to their wiles. One lured him to sleep before Samhain. These spirits dwell in grassy mounds and in streams and on the eve of All Saints' Day troop forth to work their will on countryside. To this day one may hear authentic accounts of the appearance of fairies in Ireland and the necessity of doing certain things in order to hold their good will.

Scottish Halloween traditions seem to be more clearly defined and more purposeful than the Irish ones. There is a lightness in Irish character that is not to be found in the Scottish, and for this reason the Scots take more seriously the traditions in regard to witches, evil spirits and fairies, all of whom they believe to be abroad on Halloween.

The Scotch invented the idea of "Samhainach," a goblin who comes out just at "Samhain." It is he who in Ireland steals children. The fairies pass at crossroads, and in the Highlands whoever took a three-legged stool to where three cross-roads met, and set upon it at midnight, would hear the names of those who would die in a year. He might bring with him articles of dress, and as each name was pronounced throw one garment to the fairies. They would be so pleased by this gift that they would repeal the sentence of death.

English Village Coming to the United States

This is the famous old Forge of Cookington, near Torquay, England, a charming rural village, which will soon be sent to the United States. It was recently bought by an American whose identity has not been disclosed.

The weapon, which is the largest seacoast defense gun used in this country, will fire a 2,100-pound projectile to a range of about 30 miles with a charge of 702 pounds.

HEADS THE LEGION

Ralph Thomas O'Neill, an attorney of Topeka, Kan., was elected national commander of the American Legion at the convention in Boston. He entered the World War military service in August, 1917, trained at Fort Sheridan, went across with the Eleventh infantry as first lieutenant, and was promoted to captain in the Argonne forest. He is forty-two years old, married, and has two sons.

Now Lindbergh Is a Policeman

"You're a cop now, colonel," and with these words Boulevard Commissioner Kleffman of Jersey City, N. J., pinned a police benevolent badge on the usually camera-shy "Lindy." Lindbergh's draft into the ranks of the police force was one of the highlights of Jersey City's tercentenary celebration.

OLD-FASHIONED HOG LOSES OUT

Feeder Should Select Breed He Likes Best.

Usually the best breed of hogs for any one man is the breed that he likes best.

Thirty or more years ago the wide, thick, short-bodied, short-legged type showing extreme refinement were in demand.

The present-day type of hog has length of body, long legs, and large but not coarse bone.

The type can easily be carried too far, however, and develop the "gun barrel" type of hog.

To Keep Animals Free From All Parasites

Clean herds, clean ground, clean stables, clean barns, clean pastures, properly drained, are the chief weapons to keep animals free from parasites.

Careless methods which repeatedly expose susceptible animals to polluted and infected soil, may ultimately bring on parasitic diseases.

Every Beast and Fowl Favors Its Own Vermin

An expert on lice can tell the kind of bird or animal that acted as host to the louse by examining the louse.

The old idea that the cattle were infested with lice because the chickens roosted in the cow stable is false, he says.

Live Stock Facts

Don't let animals go thirsty.

Don't forget to salt all animals regularly.

Don't feed frozen, moldy, or spoiled silage.

Don't feed milk from tuberculous cattle to your animals.

Don't allow pregnant breeding animals to become too fat.

The number of calves raised per 1,000 cows is increasing.

Don't feed animals of widely different ages and sizes in the same pen or lot.

Don't let strong and aggressive animals rob the weak of the proper amount of feed.

Dry cows should be wintered as cheaply as possible, but it will pay to provide a better ration for the cows which calve in the fall.

Steers are now generally being marketed as yearlings and two-year-olds where they were formerly being marketed as three and four-year-olds.

It would pay the farmer who has been selling only cash crops to consider the use of live stock as a means of storing and marketing grain and forage crops.

OLDER PEOPLE Must watch bowels Constantly!

As we grow older the bowels become more sluggish. They don't get rid of all the waste.

When your bowels need help remember a doctor should know what is best for them, and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your druggstore.

Take a spoonful next time your tongue is coated, or you have a bad taste in your mouth.

Has New Theory of Longevity

Paris.—Search has been renewed for a Russian couple suited to the strange experiment by which an elderly American philosopher hopes to prove that man's natural position, like that of the four-footed beasts, is reclining.

Park Hammer of St. Louis, sixty-seven-year-old retired paint manufacturer and experimental philosopher, was revealed as the author of a series of unusual advertisements appearing in the newspaper La Renaissance.

Hammer said he wanted a couple who would go to the United States

Father Sage Says:

When a man's wife is away from home he feels free to act as he did when a bachelor, but he seldom does so, you'll notice.

for one year to live in bathing suits, eat vegetables and fruit and obey his instructions concerning sleeping.

In explaining his belief that his proposed experiments would aid in regaining the horizontal position he thinks natural to man, Hammer said that death is unnatural and that longevity is possible if a perfect balance of the body's action and inaction, recombination and decomposition is attained.

He said that such a balance could be attained through a raw herbal diet, fresh air and sleeping on a log.

"I believe sleep is unnecessary if the body functions properly and frequent rest intervals follow mental or body exercises," Hammer said.

"So far I have examined 100 candidates but have not found exactly what I desired."

The St. Louisian said he hoped the new advertisement in the newspaper would be successful and that he would be able to sail for the United States in the fall to start his experiments near St. Louis. Later, he said he planned to remove to a beach either in California or in Florida.

CONQUERING YOURSELF

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Carter was telling a group of young people something of the story of his life. He was what the world would call a very successful man.

never been questioned. I had singled him out when he came into the room, for he was a person of distinguished appearance—tall, straight, square-shouldered, and perfectly poised.

"My father taught me many lessons," he said, when he began talking, "and one of these which left a lasting impression on me was a sentence which he wrote in my copy book and which I was to produce in an effort equal my father's careful penmanship."

"Whip George Carter," he said. I am not sure that I fully understood its meaning at the time, but I understand better now. It is the problem of self-control. If one is to get anywhere in the world he must subdue himself—his body, his mind, his emotions."

I had watched a baseball game that afternoon. There was a long drive by the batter out to right field beyond the reach of the outfielder, it seemed at first, but he started for it.

"He won't get it," we all said in chorus, but we were mistaken. He had the trained eye, and the swift feet, and just as we thought that he had no chance, he reached out with one hand and snatched the ball from the air. He had learned perfect control of his body.

It was only a little later that the umpire made a decision which the on-lookers questioned. The official had called the runner out, when it seemed quite evident that he was safe. The coach, a husky middle-aged man, jumped to his feet, excited, abusive, shouting words which may not be printed. But the umpire was probably right, for he was in a better position to see than were the rest of us, and besides it was his business to make the decision. The coach was a man who had not learned to whip George Carter—his emotions were still unsubdued.

Grissold is young and talented, but the habit of drink has got possession of him. He does not always drink to excess, but every so often he comes home drunk. He knows it is a bad habit, and in his saner moments he knows that for him some day it will spell ruin.

"It is too much for me," he admits, "I can't manage myself. I suppose I shall always drink."

Wilson can't get down to work. He has a good mind, but it is stubborn, lazy, given over to moods, and he has never got it under control. He struggles with it at times, but it has never really been whipped.

It is a great fight, this, which we have daily with our minds, our bodies and our passionate emotions. Few of us have ourselves properly whipped.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

We had the jig-saw puzzle, mah-jongg, the cross-word craze, which swept the country like a tidal wave; but it is doubtful whether any of them ever exerted as much effect on the country at large as this midget golf game has done.

prairie fire. One of its peculiar aspects is that, unlike most crazes, which spread from the big cities to the country, this game started in the small towns and extended to the big ones.

Midget golf goes under many names. In some parts of the country it is called Putt-putt; in others Pee-wee; in still others Tom Thumb. There is a course just outside New York which bears the name of the Demi-Tasse Country club. But the game is the same at all of them.

The value of the game is, of course, the turnover. By that I mean that the players pass around in an endless chain, and when they get to the end, either have to get out or buy another ticket, as they might on a scenic railway. Moreover, the player behind always is trying to hurry the player ahead, so there is little delay. It is a game that a man can step right in off the sidewalk and play, without changing any of his clothes or making any special preparation. It also is a game that a boy can play with his girl, and at which she has an equal chance.

Horace M. Albright, director of national parks, believes that sooner or later landing fields will have to be provided for those who visit the parks by plane. Thousands of visitors now use the automobile, but it will only be a few years before families will put the tent in the airplane and start on a vacation.

This didn't happen in any village, but in the main post office of a large eastern city of the United States. A man took to the stamp window a package he wished to mail to a town in New Mexico.

It was one of those pathetic cases. Life never had given her a break. She never had anything; but she found something down in Wall Street. He was a chap with a big heart, who had sold short and put it away in bonds. So pretty soon the girl had the closet filled with fur coats and a

Exiled Mexican Leader Still Hopes

Tucson, Ariz.—There resides in this border town a rancher who has a good idea of how Napoleon felt when he was banished to St. Helena to ponder the vicissitudes of war.

He is the former General Francisco Robles Manzo, 260-pound ex-underecruary of war of Mexico, commander of Sonora and the conqueror of the Yaquis. Today he is a political refugee from his native country.

In the 1929 Escobar rebellion General Manzo served as a commander of all rebel forces in northwestern Mexico. With the defeat of his army by the federals he was driven across the international boundary, leaving behind him a fortune accumulated after years of labor in his home at Ortiz, Sonora, Mexico.

Despite his comparatively low estate here, the once noted military leader may look across the boundary of his mother country to a number of economic achievements which still stand as monuments in Ortiz to his enterprise.

In making his escape he left behind 5,000 head of cattle, a $25,000 light and power system, a modern water works which he founded, extensive ranching interests, some 200 miles of improved highways in and adjacent to Ortiz, and modern barracks housing some 2,000 soldiers whom he commanded.

"Whatever glory that was once mine was wiped out in a moment," he said, smiling sadly. "But I still have my wife and four children and I am a good rancher—so perhaps I should not be despondent. There still may be brighter days ahead."

And the once highly honored federal officer, clad now in dungarees, goes about his work as any other Mexican laborer. And occasionally from his lips sound Mexican national anthems he loves so well. Incidentally, one of General Manzo's favorite historic characters is Napoleon.

Mr. Gaddis was playing golf alone. A strange boy followed him around the course until Gaddis turned and said, "Son, you'll never learn to play by watching me."

"I'm not watching you," the boy replied, "I'm going fishin' as soon as you dig up some more worms."

The desire to wound him filled her with a burning fever. At least then he would not be able to go for weeks without remembering her. He would think of her. His attention, his desire would be hers. For an intolerable moment she yielded to the pain of this desire, then rose, wrapped her faded cotton kimono over her bathing suit and turned to face Loring. For a moment she was struck with a bright memory. His composure, his self-assurance were broken by the upthrust of some powerful emotion. She was a girl again, at her mother's house, running up the front steps, he stood at the top in her way, looking at her eagerly, his face so—alive, disturbing.

They stared at each other, remembering, caught and held together. But Ernestine thrust this clamoring thought away from her. This man was Lillian's husband. This was Jonathan Hamilton's son, her father's son-in-law and adviser. He was one of her own people.

"You haven't been kind to Will, any of you," she stammered, trying to bring the talk back to commonplace.

"He hasn't accepted our kindness," Loring answered slowly.

"It isn't only that he's proud," said Ernestine. "He's vain as well. He's different. He's entitled to his vanity."

"At any cost?" asked Loring in a low voice. "I think there are men who would consider pride too dear—for your happiness."

Ernestine's thoughts were in confusion. Loring's words came back to her, nothing but poverty and child-bearing and distress. Oh, she had had more than that from Will. She had had life! But was there to be for her no permanent peace and security with Will? She doubted it. And this doubt brought another: Has my whole instinct concerning Will been false?

The family's judgment of him correct and my own mistaken? They think him erratic, trivial, unsteady, a failure—O God in Heaven, help me—

She turned away from Loring and took the path up through the shrubs toward the lawn about the house. She stumbled along as though to get away from the weakness, the tears, the fearful doubts that assailed her.

A motor had been humming along the lake road as she advanced from the water's edge, and now abruptly the car had entered the inlet road and swung about before the house. At this instant when she became conscious of it and its arrival, the air was still filled with the grinding of brakes, while the doors of the car spilled open and it disgorged three of four men who were carrying others. One of the two men lifted from the car was either dead or dying, for a thin bright stream ran from him as they laid him on the grass.

Bright red dripped from the running board. The other man was being carried indoors, while two tied their coats together to make a stretcher for the first man lifted out. A shout brought Madame Pastano from the house. The gardener, the houseman appeared on the run.

The whole household was instantly concentrated with skilled, practiced efficiency, so quiet, so quick that Ernestine was still gaping while it was all accomplished. The hose was running furiously across the lawn. The rug was brought from the floor of the car, and thrown into the lake, with rocks on top of it. The gardener put the hose inside the car and washed the floor and the running board. Another came from the garage with a different car rug, with a different license plate which he changed in a moment, and the driver of the car moved it up a little, so that the gravel could be picked up in a shovel, and carried and thrown into the lake, the fresh spot raked together.

Now old Grandmother Pastano, an ancient dame who spoke not a word of English, came from the porch, her head wrapped in a shawl, and got into the car and sat by the window, her thick jeweled hand resting on the edge of the glass. The car turned about and, with a different driver, moved sedately back along the lake road, whence it had come—as innocent appearing a vehicle as ever rode the highway.

No one had noticed her, there at the end of the lake walk, among the carefully cut shrubs. Ernestine moved back and came to the little summer house and sat down in it, for her limbs would carry her no farther.

The dreadful efficiencies of the Pastanos had all this time increased her wrath with Will. She could not bear it for him to be in a daze, to go about with the air which had exasperated Lillian the night Elaine was born—helpless, hopeless and confused. She couldn't stand the thought that he was a failure while these foreigners were thick with success.

to vexation beyond measure that Pastano should be so capable and Will so futile.

Now her tears fell from her eyes in great scalding drops.

What was she, Ernestine Briceland, doing in this band of cutthroats and thieves? All of Ruby Pastano's efficiency was to her nothing now but filthy rags. All her relationship with him and his family, from the beginning, had been built on misunderstanding. They were too far apart. Not even affection and liking, not even respect could bridge the gap, the difference in ideals, in standards, in purposes. This generous, unscrupulous man, bringing the victims of rapine so unflatteringly into the heart of his own home was Will's friend—not hers. She had nothing in common with these people, and she would never have. And she had shut the door of her heart against her own flesh and blood, because of Will's pride, and had opened it to these—these—She choked and her throat turned bitter with gall at them.

Abruptly she was conscious of an upsurging of patriotism. Her own people—her own kind! Americans, strong, decent, successful, ardent and clean. Kind—kind. Incapable of murder and plotting. These foreigners looked upon them all as fat geese to be plucked and did not understand the courage, the cleanness, the strength of kindness. She hated them with a furious hatred. The compulsion to be rid of them—of all of them, and Will as well—came upon her.

She was crying terribly. She ran back down the beach path and came to Loring playing in the water with Elaine and Peter.

"Get the boat," she said sobbingly, "I will go with you."

It was wonderful to relax in the comfort and security of home again. The children went off happily with old Annie, who had cared for Lillian and Ernestine when they were small, and who had always stayed with mamma, a privileged member of the household. Lillian scarcely left Ernestine's side a moment.

Papa planned softly about going into Chicago in the morning, to set through to a finish the details of the trust funds for his two girls. Loring kept his distance, reading and smoking by the table at the far end of the long porch.

Ernestine was almost asleep, relaxed and comfortable in her body for the first time in many weeks, and she was almost inattentive to papa's voice going gently on with plans.

"I will deed the Sheridan road house over to you, darling. Mamma and I will be in New York most of the time, but when we are in Chicago we will stay there with you. Loring told us that you would come back sooner if I withheld your settlement."

Something clicked in Ernestine's mind—a small sound, as though a lock had been unbolted. But she went on to sleep calmly enough, carrying down with her into unconsciousness her trouble and her pain. Loring said she would come back—papa had been so willing to obey her wish about not having her money, because Loring said she would come back the sooner.

She slept deeply, all through the long evening, all through the night. It was the first clear flush of dawn when she awoke, sat up under the light cover that mamma had thrown over her there on the porch swing and looked out across the water.

She awoke with a conviction. She could not do this. She could not leave Will. It was impossible. By what route she had come to this conclusion she could not have told. But in her sleep her true nature had asserted itself and her mind was fixed.

She had done what she had resolved never to do. She had denied her marriage.

"Oh, not I—not my true self—not my heart!" she whispered. "I never did deny Will nor my love. I'll go back today—to be his wife for ever—no matter what comes."

She felt calm and strong now and could look with impersonal horror upon her defection. In the clear light of morning, filled as she was with the conviction that she must for ever choose Will against all the world, further understanding came to her.

All these months that she had been hating Will and loving him and reviling him and saying such cruel things, it had been a deep unknown desire for her mother's home which goaded her. It had been rebellion against the continued humiliation of poverty and disappointment that their hopes and plans had not matured this time into success.

All her mental processes seemed loosened, open. Now from some canny instinct she was presented with a new enlightenment. She was—she had been—worse than the "gimme" women. She had been for months under the domination of a bitter jealousy of his work. She had been wounded because his activity was secret from her. She had loathed the mistress that he followed—his own career. So, wanting him to succeed and to earn money, she had not wanted him possessed with the preoccupation of such processes. She had seen in his gaze that inward adoration which is more obnoxious to a woman's greedy pride than another woman's lure can ever be—that love for what he was doing, that excluded interest in his own mind.

All her own mind clear at last in the limpid humility born of having failed Will, in intention, if not in conclusive act, she could reach a place on which to plant her feet for ever, as far as he and she were concerned.

"What have I to do with his work?"

The answer to this question in the clear logic of her mind released her for ever from the petty jealousies of the artist's wife. The answer was "Nothing." She had nothing to do with his work at all. It was his own, and she must know it. The old unity she had wanted to preserve was possible only as a kind of over-unity, not going into details. It was the ground on which love placed its feet, the sky above love's head, but not the secret of the habitations of the soul.

He could not bear a child for her, though his love conceived it. And was not the business of bringing forth something new and bright, even if it were but a comic strip for the daily papers, as secret and silent a process as that in which she was now again engaged? They all knew she was to bear another child. But no one intruded upon her privacy save by the most discreet and apologetic kindness. And might not the creative processes of artistry be as secret, as involuntary?

She had been resentful as petty men were sometimes resentful of a woman's preoccupation and distress in-maturity. Will had been natural with her, casual and kind, and she could accord him the same courtesy. She wept afresh, but not the dreadful scalding tears of the day before. These were unselfish thanking tears distilled from a heart grown calm and good again.

"O God, help me to be a good wife—help me to be a good wife to Will, O God. Help me to understand him, to grow and change when life demands it of me. Help me to be a good wife."

She went to the desk in the corner and wrote a telegram:

"I have left Pastano's, and am at mamma's cottage with the children. Please come and get us today.—Ernestine."

She wakened old Annie, gave her money and sent her over to the hotel with the message.

They had a long talk on the beach that afternoon. Ernestine told Will everything, all that she had thought and felt, all that had happened the day before—Loring's talk with her, the murder car at Pastano's, her revulsion of feeling, how she had come home, and how, in the night, while she slept, everything had straightened out for her. Will lay beside her in silence, her hand in his, and again and again as she talked her fingers were pressed against his lips. They were back again in the cradle of love—rocked in magic which overcame all difficulties and healed all misunderstandings.

He told her then about himself and about what he had been through.

"I've made ten or eleven different developments of Poole's cartoon, altering them all, and I've made each one up for about six weeks, and planned the continuity out beyond that time, but I can't sell them. When I sat down to write to you what was there to say? I would resolve to try again, hoping to have some wonderful news for you. I've not been eating or sleeping—I missed you so, and I repented so my selfishness with you, and my attitude toward your family. I've not been reasonable, or fair—or generous. I felt that you were slipping away from me, because I couldn't hold you—because I didn't rate you."

These pictures moved Ernestine profoundly. Weeks of work, and nothing sold. The fear of losing her and the children, and the need to stick to the thing he was trying to do until he did it. She could feel in him a sharp pain of restlessness and discouragement, and her love poured out on him.

"Darling—it doesn't matter. I can stay here with mamma all summer. She understands. I can stay here until you get your comic strip right. They understand that it's you and I together always, Will!"

"Don't cry, darling."

"It doesn't mean a thing," she told him and added with some whimsicality, "it's my condition, darling. I am simply weepy, and when I think how near I came to doing something that would have ruined all my life and yours—"

"You couldn't—you didn't—not even nearly, Ernestine."

Peter had come up to them, and, seeing his mother's tears, he began to wail loudly, and Elaine crowded close and thrust out a trembling lip. Will drew their attention from Ernestine, and gravely, abstractedly, he began to amuse them. He marked out the old familiar squares.

"Make a cat, Daddy—make a cat," commanded Peter, and Will, listening to Ernestine, but only half attentive, began to put down the cats that Peter loved so, the squares for a drawing board, a bit of stick for a pencil, the firm wet sand making a good plaque.

The child screamed with joyous mirth, and Elaine, beside him, clapped her hands with delight.

"Tabby cat's got his head stuck in a tin can. Look, Mamma!"

Will's attention swerved from Ernestine. He sat staring at what he had drawn, as though at a stranger's work. His face wore a startled look. The small squares, in which two ridiculous cats went through a ridiculous adventure. Suddenly he leaped to his feet and gave a whoop which a Comanche Indian might have envied.

"Don't worry—our fortune is made. Can't you see—there it is. Not Mr. Poole's old comic strip in any way, shape or form, but my own darned old cats? Even the children can see it. Trust me a few days longer."

The cats were a great success. When fall came Will was working on the Sun again, in Mr. Poole's old office, under a three-year contract. The cat drawings were valued at sixty dollars a strip the first year, and more the second and third. Six days a week at sixty dollars a day. Small Girl's Positive Definition Is Good One

"Isn't that lovely?" said grandma to a three-year-old. "Yes," assented the minute granddaughter, "it's grandiful." Why not? The word is as good a hybrid as a thousand that have butted their way into the dictionary, and it gives full value, combining, as it does, the concepts of beauty and of grandeur. I think it is worth keeping.

So are some of the definitions invented by the same embryonic lexicographer. "A man and a boy was there," she was declaring; "not two men, just a man and a boy." Not quite convinced, her aunt inquired, "What is the difference between a man and a boy?" "Men spank boys," was the prompt and positive answer. How useless it is to deny that our whole Weltanschauung is based on social distinctions! Are all men born free and equal? Possibly; but they remain in that grandiful state of

A Balfour Anecdote
An amusing anecdote is recalled about Lord Balfour and Lady Oxford concerning her rather sensational "Autobiography of Margot Asquith."

In it she speaks of him in a not too kind manner.

Meeting him shortly after its publication, she said, "I do hope you will forgive me for what I said about you in my book." Lord Balfour answered, "What book? I did not know you had written one."—Weekly Scotsman.

equality only as long as they are unspankable. Once the age of spankability sets in, society splits into two strata, the spankers and the spankees, and remains thus cleft.—Charles Hall Grandgent, in "The New Word."

Burial at Arlington

The secretary of war has the power to authorize the burial of a woman beside her husband in a separate grave in Arlington National cemetery provided the husband was a commissioned officer. In the case of enlisted men, if a widow desires to be buried with her husband arrangements must be made with the War department to have the grave made deep enough so that a second casket can be placed upon that of the soldier; in other words, the soldier and his widow must be buried in the same grave. There would be no question that a former President of the United States, who was technically commander-in-chief of the army and navy, would be regarded as a commissioned officer, although actually President Taft was a civilian who never held a commission.

and prestige poured in on them in a startling way. The movie people made attractive offers. Will knew how to make animated movies.

The Todds moved into a Colonial home only about a mile from mamma's. They had rented the house "to see how they liked it" with the possibility of buying it in their minds. Will offered the West side house in on a trade, but Ernestine would not sell the little house.

"You never can tell," she insisted, and though Will laughed at this, he did not resist her tenderness toward the house.

Papa established the trust funds. Money poured in upon them in the ridiculous and unreasonable way in which money behaves. It seemed now that nothing was too nice for the Todds. The new baby was born under the most promising conditions, in the Colonial room in the modern and beautiful home. A boy, long limbed and with a pointed face, like Will's.

Lillian was with Ernestine every day, and Ernestine noticed for the first time that Lillian's beauty was fading. She hung over the new baby, she was gentle with Peter and Elaine, who visited their mother at every possible moment. Once when the two had been watching the nurse bathe the newcomer and wrap him deftly in binder and cloth, turning him about in her hands while he gave soft grunts and sighs of satisfaction, and then at last tucked him in snowy flannellette into the curve of Ernestine's arm, with a little spank and tender scolding, Lillian looked at Ernestine with tears in her eyes.

"I wish," she said, "that it had been this baby's birth that Loring knew about." Her voice trailed away and Ernestine tingled with a sense of guilt. So that was why Lillian had no children!

"It's hard for people who haven't children to understand how quickly all the woes of bearing them are forgotten. I never think of that old time any more, and I'm sure Will doesn't. Anyhow—if it had been worse, don't you think Elaine was worth it?"

"Yes," said Lillian, "of course she is. But it was a dreadful time, Ernestine. I don't believe you have ever known how near you came to dying. It was a terrible time for all of us."

"After all," smiled the younger sister, "in such a case an Inch is as good as a mile. That whole dark time—it was all so wrong, apparently, for me to have that second baby, and now wild horses couldn't tear her from us. You can't always plan things out."

Later, Will came in, and found Ernestine alone.

"Remember that murder car you saw at Pastano's last summer?"

"Of course. I'll never forget it."

"Well, the new district attorney has arrested six of Pastano's relatives. It seems those men were killed in a fight with another bunch of gangsters. But these fellows were Pastano's men, and the next night they got the others with a machine gun, and now they're all locked up—both gangs. Loring has undertaken to get bail for them and get them off. Of course, it's quite respectable in Chicago to defend the most notorious criminal before the bar, but mamma doesn't like this. It was too close to home."

Ernestine could not help but smile at the twist Will could give to that word "mamma." Yet strangely, her mother and her husband had arrived at a basis of mutual understanding and liking since Will had been making his comic strip. Will said mamma was right about things. "Of course she wanted her daughter to marry a good provider," exclaimed Will, "just as you will want Elaine to marry a man who can take care of her. Mamma Briceland is too good a mother to be satisfied with less. And besides, she's pragmatic. She's got something to be proud of now, and delighted to have it. I tell you, Ernestine, I think Loring has worn it a bit thin, with his greediness and bossiness and always reminding them that he made papa rich."

Ernestine wondered if she would want Elaine to marry a good provider, and suddenly she felt in her heart a strong loyalty to the difficulties that had beset their ways.

"I don't care whether the children are rich or poor," she told Will. "But I want them to love and suffer, and to have hardships—I want them to live—and value life. I do, Will. I don't want it to be easy for them. Having things too easy is one form of poverty when you think about it."

Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child. All druggists have Castoria; it's a genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

Search for "Cradle of Man" in Wild Regions

An expedition is in preparation which will go far into the jungles of Honduras to look for "the cradle of man." That, at least, is among the announced intentions of the explorer, F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, though he has also more definite prospects of discoveries in the remnants of a civilization some thousands of years old located in the province of Mosquitia by a previous search.

But the more romantic quest is that for man's first home on the earth. A great number of scientists have looked for it in all sorts of likely and unlikely places. Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews chose the Gobi desert; others have dug into Mesopotamia and central Africa. Nobody has so far found it.

It appears from the behavior of explorers and anthropologists that primeval man must have insisted on the least accessible part of the world for his first appearance. Expeditions in search of his traces seem always to go off to the other end of nowhere, far from gasoline stations and miniature golf courses. Probably there is no reason for this procedure except that anything is possible in unknown territory. While looking there for what may be found, the explorer may as well look for the cradle of man and thereby give an indisputable dignity and importance to his expedition.—New York Evening Post.

KILLS RATS NOTHING ELSE

K-R-O (Kills Rats Only) killed 238 rats in 12 hours on a Kansas farm. It is the original product made by a special process of squill, an ingredient recommended by U. S. Government as sure death to rats and mice, but harmless to dogs, cats, poultry or even baby chicks. You can depend on this. K-R-O in a few years has become America's leading rat and mouse killer. Sold by all druggists on a money back guarantee.

WHY, I NEVER DREAMED CLOTHES COULD WASH SO WHITE AND SWEET!

Easy to get whiter washes this safe way

I WAS so pleased the first time I saw my Rinso-washed linens. What a difference! With Rinso I run the washer only about half the usual time, and clothes actually come whiter than ever.

"What suds Rinso gives! Thick, creamy, lasting—in our hard water, too. I think it's marvelous soap!"

Great in tubs, too

The makers of 38 famous washing machines recommend Rinso for safety and for whiter, brighter clothes. Just as wonderful for tub washing—soaks out dirt and saves scrubbing. That saves the clothes!

Cup for cup, Rinso gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Exactly suds! Just try Rinso for dishes and all cleaning. Get the BIG package.

SHEER WOOLENS LEAD IN STYLE; EVENING CAPS AND DINNER HATS

OF SHEER WOVEN WOOL CRÉPE

AT THE turf meets, at the international polo matches, at the ball games, in fact everywhere that fashionable women are gathering, the new wool dress is the most prominent and the most pleasing style creation of the season—not the heavy wool dress of years ago, but something new and far more wonderful—a dress made of sheer woollens so soft and so supple that they meet the most exacting demands of graceful, flowing lines.

After years of untiring effort on the part of the world's leading experts, these new woolen fabrics have at last been perfected. Yarns of unbelievable fineness have been spun, colors have been dyed of a richness and a depth that personify autumn, materials have been produced of a softness and beauty often dreamed of but never experienced until now. Gone is all hint of bulkiness or harshness—and in its place are sheer, supple materials which combine the draping qualities of silk with the tailored aspect of fine wool. In the midst of this artistic perfection, the practical side has not been forgotten. These new fabrics wear without wrinkling or muzzing.

Fashion has decreed the short fur jacket for fall, and the wool dress is a welcome and necessary complement, sufficiently warm and stylishly right. This season is to be a galaxy of rich colors and increasing elaboration of detail. It is fortunate that the perfection of these new woolen fabrics has enabled the wool dress to take its place as a most fitting leader of this season's unequalled fashion pageant.

Lightweight, woollens lend themselves charmingly to the new Russian trend reflected in terms of the formal dinner hat, flattering dance hats and festive-looking evening caps.

The hats in the group pictured evidence that the trend is toward more formality. They are the sort which top the luxurious fabrics, the flattering furs and the rich jewels of the costume to perfection. These styles are particularly interesting in that they bear the stamp of approval of leading millinery authorities of America.

The first model is one of the new fur-trimmed types which are the choice of the smart set for fall. In color it takes its cue from the red and white print of the frock with which it is worn, being a brick red felt with a draped bandeau of white gailyak. Its side dip is infinitely becoming and supremely smart.

Everything must glitter, is one of the messages of the mode this season and the decree is carried out in ways as pictured to the right at the top. This stunning evening cap is made of sequin-embroidered banding. Glitter answers to glitter for the one-side shoulder strap of the gown is of brilliant and sequins.

The novel beaded and scalloped bandeau which gives "class" to the hat below to the left is being made a feature in millinery design. A favorite theme is turquoise beads with tunic frocks such as is shown in upper picture. This model is styled of sheer woven wool crepe in a clear tone of red. The versatile wool fabric fashions the fringe which trims the tunic as well as the chic little hat which is worn with it. White ball buttons add a smart touch.

Elegance in Millinery. As the costume so the hat must be. And now that fashion is ascending to heights of elegance and dignity, it needs most follow that this black velvet. The model in the picture sounds the chic black-and-white note which so dominates in the style picture this season. It is of exquisite felt with white beads.

The elegance of the times is accentuated in the last chapeau which is one of those genteel ladylike styles which tunes in so graciously with velvets and jewels and luxurious furs in the afternoon or at the dinner hour. It suggests the new tricorne which are so well thought of in Paris. A pert little black galyak bow poses at a piquant angle. The hat itself is black velvet.

DAD DY DAIRY

FEW REASONS FOR TEST VARIATIONS

Cream Separator May Be Blamed for Differences.

When cream tests vary there is usually a reason, and before doubting the test it is well to consider the things that will cause the differences, suggests E. S. Guthrie of the department of dairy industry at Cornell university.

A difference of ten turns each minute on the separator crank will change the test nearly three and a half per cent. The temperature of the milk at the time of separation, if at 70 degrees instead of 90, lowers the cream test and lets more fat go in the skim milk.

Cows which may be added to the herd or a fresh cow may change the herd test. Under uniform conditions at the college a 3 per cent milk gave a 23 per cent cream, a 4 per cent milk a 30 per cent cream, and a 5 per cent milk a 39 per cent cream. The percentage of fat in the skim milk increased with the richer milk.

Clearing the separator is not only a good sanitary practice but it is essential to efficient separation; clogged and dirty tubes hinder the normal flow. Mr. Guthrie cites Cornell extension bulletin number 151 as useful in the care and operation of a cream separator. It will be sent free to anyone who applies for it to the college of agriculture at Ithaca, New York.

Proving Dairy Bulls Is

Becoming of Importance

Proving dairy bulls is becoming an important and, apparently, necessary part of the breeder's program in his needs for better cattle. The dairy extension service of New Jersey recently reported some very good evidence of the breeding value of three bulls in that state.

Twenty-two daughters of a Holstein bull, sold by Henry Schmidt to the Newark Milk company farm, averaged 11,919 lbs. milk and 382.8 lbs. butterfat at an average age of three and one-half years.

"Old Contemptible," a Guernsey bull owned by Locust Lane farm, has 10 daughters that averaged 375 lbs. butterfat. Nine of these were two-year-olds. The average mature equivalent of these records is 528 lbs. butterfat.

The senior Holstein herd sire of the New Jersey Agricultural college herd has 10 daughters that averaged 13,500 lbs. milk on official test in Class C, 10 months' division. This was 11 per cent more than the production of their dams at comparable ages. This bull is a son of a proven sire and was secured from the United States government dairy farm at Beltsville, Md.

Importance of Quality of Legume Hay for Cow

Over in Michigan there is a herd that has a six-year average of 13,000 pounds of milk per cow. This is splendid production. It would be a creditable average for one year. For a six-year period it is wonderful. The owner of the herd, Mr. Hunt, was interviewed and gave his views on feeding to Hoard's Dairyman. His main emphasis was not on this or that grain mixture but on the quality of the legume hay fed. He believes there is an important relationship between the quality of the hay and the health of the herd. Well cured legume hay contains essential vitamins which aid in assimilation of minerals, and minerals have a very important bearing on health.

Dairy Hints

Cows in milk need plenty of water at all times.

Many of our dairy herds are unprofitable because of underfeeding.

Plenty of succulent feed for the dairy herd means more milk in the pail and a smaller expenditure for the more expensive grain.

Take a look at the heifers out on pasture. They may be short of water or feed or both. It pays to keep the young stock growing.

Soy beans, oats and peas, Sudan grass, and the millets are emergency hays. Of these soy beans are the best. They are nearly equal to alfalfa in feeding value.

Proper culling of dairy herds will help to reduce the surplus of dairy products and to increase the profits of individual herds.

An abundant supply of hot water is essential if the dairy utensils are to be washed and sterilized properly. Many farmers who are using a gas engine as a source of power for their milking machines or cream separators are finding that water can be heated quickly and economically by the use of an exhaust water heater attached to their gas engines.

Modern Life Compels

Virtue of Punctuality

Human beings, we suspect, are almost without exception tardy. The man who is always on time for his social engagements is regarded as a sort of freak by his friends; indeed, he is regarded as somewhat objectionable, for by his punctuality he makes them feel guilty when they arrive 20, 30 or 40 minutes late. As for the man who is on time for business engagements, he probably does not exist. There are a score or more time-clock companies listed in New York; all of them seem to be prosperous, and their wares are not bought, we may be sure, by companies whose employees are on time every morning to the minute. Left to their own devices, these employees would get to work anywhere from one minute to eight hours late.

Yet when you consider the human race in the aggregate as distinguished from human beings in the particular it is as punctual as an eclipse. It is more punctual than an eclipse, for if an eclipse were ten minutes late that would cause no particular surprise; but if the rush hour crowd at a restaurant were ten minutes late the manager would be out on the street running around to see where the parade was. Crowds can be predicted almost to the minute. Part of this, perhaps, is due to such compulsions as we spoke of above; time clocks, the necessity to eat lunch at a given hour and in a given length of time, and so on. But part of it is not. The big movie theaters run continuous shows, so that there is no special reason to get to them on time. If you miss the first part when you go in, you can always wait and see it before you go out. Yet the queues in front of these theaters always seem to reach their maximum length at about the same time; even here you could set your watch by the crowd. Inside, however, sitting about the foyer, you see many fidgety persons looking at their watches; they are waiting for somebody, and that somebody is late.—New York World.

Vatican Art Treasures

Worth Many Fortunes

Said to be the largest palace in the world, the Vatican contains 80 grand stairways, and 200 smaller ones, 20 courts and 11,000 halls, chapel rooms and apartments, and its wealth is so fabulous as to be beyond anyone's knowledge, writes James T. Nichols in an article in Successful Farming.

Within the Vatican, he continues, are tens of thousands of paintings and objects, many of which alone are worth a fortune. The single painting of the Last Judgment is 33 feet wide and 66 feet high. If a single one of the half-dozen marble bathtubs were put on the market, it would bring enough to build a good-sized church. In the library are single manuscripts that are priceless.

spring they expect to enter the declamation contest. They also are planning on giving programs every Monday. The following are the officers: President, Caroline Pheister; vice-president, Harry Hill; secretary and treasurer, Georgina Pringle; and the reporter, Ruth Alstrom.

A meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association was held at the school Monday, October 20. Miss Cowgill, the county nurse, was the speaker of the evening. She outlined briefly the work of the Children's Fund of Michigan and devoted the major part of her talk to the subject of improving the health habits of school children. Miss Applin and Miss Parker explained the work they do in that line in the Kindergarten and Critic rooms.

The members of the Association were urged to listen in on the radio talks on P. T. A. work which are given over WJL every Sunday at four o'clock p. m., Central time. Mr. Swanson gave an interesting report of one such talk by Prof. McClusky of the University of Michigan.

The next meeting, to be held November 3, will be a special meeting at which time Prof. Maddy of the University will speak on the subject "Enriching Human Life Through Music."

No More Waiting for the Range to Get Hot

Light the fire in this beautiful Glow-Maid and the newly invented Hot-Spot Top does the rest. Cooking temperatures are reached in a jiffy. Glow-Maid is the first thoroughly modern kitchen range—efficient beyond comparison and as beautiful and colorful as a china dish. The remarkable oven with the vibrationless door insures perfect baking results. Extra fuel capacity gives greater efficiency with less attention. You can clean the porcelain surfaces and mirror surface cooking top in a minute. Glow-Maid rivals the convenience of gas and electric ranges and cooks better. See the Glow-Maid at our store.
