HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Lost Tribes of Israel

THE mystery of the "Ten Lost Tribes" has been a subject of absorbing interest for many centuries. but, despite the investigations of countless historians and the excavations of archeologists in all parts of the globe, the question of what became of this great mass of people is still unsolved.

Hundreds of volumes have been written on the subject and many explanations have been advanced as to the probable fate of the people who severed their alliance with the tribes of Benjamin and Judah, the latter remaining in southern Palestine and establishing Jerusalem as their capital. The Israelites who seceded went northward. Some into Samaria and others into the country which lay outside the narrow stretch of land which then made up the known world. As to the fate of those who populated Samaria some little is known, for, about eight centuries before Christ, Sargon, king of Assyria, swept down upon Samaria and carried many thousands of its population into captivity, replacing them with Babylonian and Syrian colonists and scattering the former residents throughout the kingdom so that their identity as a nation was completely lost.

With their captivity, the remaining members of the ten tribes disappeared as completely as if they had been swallowed up by the earth and no definite trace of them has ever been discovered. The descendants of the two remaining tribes were also conquered at a later period and while they, too, were finally driven away, they possessed so strong a personality and a racia' cohesion that they have endured, despite the bitter oppression to which they have been subjected, 'hroughout the centurieskeeping intact their religion, their history and their customs.

This being the case, it is doubly remarkable that the other ten tribes, numerically greater than the tribes of Juda and Benjamin, should have vanished so completely. They could not all have been slain or perished in captivity, leaving no descendants and it is to be presumed that they migrated somewhere-but where? This is the question which has puzzled archeologists and historians for centures. Some writers are of the opinion that the "lost tribes" long afterwards appeared as the lawless. gallant -Anglo-Saxons, a race whose origin is still more or less obscure. Other European nations have also been "traced" to the missing Israelites, while a few commentators believe that they became n.erged into the nationalities of other conquerors and those of the peoples among whom they settled.

Of special interest to Americans is the opinion of a number of writers that the lost tribes in some wayprobably by means of the vast overland "bridge" which later sunk below the surface of the Pacific-found their Spanish priests who settled in America, as also did Roger Williams, Cotton Mather and many later theologians and scientists who found Indian dialects which had words and phrases singularly suggestive of Hebraic origin.

In 1768 Charles Beatty, a missionary, wrote that he was certain that he had found traces of the "lost tribes" among the Delaware Indians, declaring that he had seen an ancient scroll that contained portions of the original Hebrew law.

But, despite all the theorizing and guessing as to the "ten lost tribes," no really authentic discoveries have been made with respect to their fate. There are many sections of the globe where they could have settled and flourished as an independent nation, yet the archives of no known people such races as the Indians, the Hawaiians and the Aztecs-no trace is to be found anywhere of the missing Israelites.

Toil in 1495 By a satute of 1495, laborers in England were required, from the middle of March to the middle of September, to be at their work before five o'clock in the morning, and they were not to depart until between seven and eight o'clock in the evening. During this period they were to have half an hour for breakfast, an hour for dinner and half an hour for "nonemete." From the middle of May to the middle of August they were to have half an hour for sleep in the day. From September to March they were to be at their work "in the springing of the day, and depart not till night of the same day."

It is nothing less than amazing what has been accomplished in the way of giving a suppleness, a lightweightness, a sheerness and a daintiness as alluring as that of chiffon or other of the delightsome weaves which women "love to wear." Some of the new materials are actually that light in weight they are referred to in fashion circles as "weightless woolens." Place a frock of the fashionable wool crepe on the scales and it will probably not weigh more than a pound.

To the color enthusiast the new woolens are all that fancy pictures. The warm reds deep greens radiant browns carry the glories of autumn in their rich tones. Often they are flecked or nubbed with white as if snowflakes had touched them with winter beauty. Not infrequently the effect is climaxed with a youthful beret of white fur, set at a jaunty angle on the head, the picture completed with a bit of white fur. a col lar or a bow or a tiny scart.

It is usually in front of the Hotel Plaza that you will find Patrick Egan. He is still straight, as he sits on the box, but when he takes off his coachman's hat, silver hair glistens in the sun. Patrick's hair wasn't silver fifty years ago, when his stand used to be down at Madison square. Gradually, Patrick and New York moved uptown. But, when Patrick Egan moved, he drove, formally and sedately, as a gentleman should. The old Waldorf came and went; Sherry's and Delmonico's rested a while at Forty-fourth street, and then moved along; Patrick Egan slapped the reins gently on his horse's back, and kept pace with them. FIND COTTONSEED MEAL SAFE FEED

Used as Substitute for Tankage for Hogs.

How much cottonseed meal can we feed steers? That was the question asked within the animal husbandry department of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical college, when they planned last year's feeding experiments.

The basic ration consisted of ground corn, alfalfa hay, and enough ground timestone to make 2 per cent of the grain ration. To this was added cottonseed meal in different amounts for different lots of steers. The lot which received one and one-half pounds of cottonseed meal per steer daily, made the largest gains, an average of 1.91 pounds a day, and their gains were made at a cost of $7.08 a hundred pounds, which was the cheapest rate of gain.

Although limestone was included as a part of the ration no advantage was noted.

One additional lot of steers was fed prairie hay instead of alfalfa hay. Both these lots showed a gain of 1.75 pounds a day per steer, but the lot fed prairie hay gained 100 pounds at a cost of $7.91 while it cost $8.22 with alfalfa hay. The steers fed alfalfa beat the others on market, bringing $12.50 a hundred compared to $12 for the lot fed prairie hay.

Alfalfa hay was figured at $15 a ton, prairie at $8, cottonseed meal at $38, and corn at 65 cents a bushel.

Cottonseed meal was also tried as a substitute for a part of the tankage lot actually getting three parts of cottonseed meal to one part of tankage. Gains were satisfactory and costs of gain were uniformly low. It appoking into their peaceful village, and peared that the price of cottonseed meal must be less than half the price of tankage if it is to be profitable. One lot that received cottonseed meal but no tankage made much smaller gains at greater cost.

Artificial Respiration

Useful to Save Lambs Immersing a lamb which has been chilled at birth in a dish of hot water so that all parts of the body except the head are submerged, will often save it. Immediately after removing the lamb from the water it should be wiped dry and kept warm until it has gained strength.

Lambs failing to breathe at birth are saved frequently by artificial respiration. To do this, rub the sides, move the front legs forward and backward, and blow in the nostrils.

Feed two tablespoonfuls of the ewe's milk every two hours to a weak lamb. After a few artificial feedings the lamb will develop sufficient strength to look after himself.

which has lost her lamb may be induced to adopt an orphan if the skin of the dead lamb is placed on the back of the orphan. Another method is to dab a bit of kerosene or winter green oil on the nose of the ewe and on the back of the orphan lamb.

Should a ewe refuse to own her lamb, bring a strange dog into the shed; the danger often stimulates the protective instinct of the mother to the point where she will forget her stubbornness and go to the lamb.

Fall Pigs Profitable if Given Attention

"Vigorous fall pigs that are properly fed and handled probably will make pork just as cheaply as spring pigs," says W. E. Carroll, chief of swine husbandry, University of Illi-Some persons can hear nothing nois, "If fall pigs become infested with worms the losses are almost sure to run high and in addition the growth of the pigs will be seriously stunted, thereby increasing the cost of making pork with fall pigs. Fall pigs handled under the swine sanitation system will have a vigor which will mean economical pork production when the animals are turned into the feed lot, and in addition the sanitation system will save many pigs which otherwise would be lost during the suckling period because of worms." If the pigs are farrowed in the permanent hoghouse or around the premises, the sows should be washed thoroughly with soap and water so that their sides and udders will be clean. Then pens should be thoroughly scrubbed out with a solution of hoiling water containing common household lye at the rate of one pound to 30 gallons of water. This is the same treatment that is recommended for spring litters.

Save Finished Hogs

After a bog has been finjshed for market, he should be saved. Often for lack of careful handling, he dies enroute from the farm to the packing house. After being warmed up by a long drive, the animal is in condition to contract pneumonia; and he is usually taken out at the other end of the journey dead Every farmer who delivers hogs to be shipped should handle them very careful Handle carefully, loar slowly, and ship quick

Ferguson was considered a very good lawyer. He had made scores of wills for other people, and he had urged upon many others of his clients the wisdom of making a will. He was a married man with no children, and in very moderate circumstances. He had always intended that his wife, when he died, should have all that he possessed, as she, by all rights, should have had, for she had carried her half of the domestic load for twenty-five years or more. But Ferguson made no will; he just meant to do so. His wife received only a part of his estate, the rest-going to relatives whom Ferguson had never seen, and for whom he did not care a picayune. As it was, the wife was left with a very meager and inadequate income, as her husband never intended should happen.

"I'm too young," I hear a good many people say, ,"to make a will. What I would do now, twenty-five years from now I might not want to do at all." Well, it is quite possible to change a will and quite easy. If you don't make one somebody may have a lot of trouble in deciding just what to do with the thousand and one things which a man leaves behind

Six Foreign Countries Receive Red Cross Aid

Relief was given by the American Red Cross during the year in six foreign nations in disasters ranging from a tidal wave in Newfoundland, an earthquake in Persia, floods in France to help for refugees from Russia and prevention of a smallpox epidemic in

The $5,000 Red Cross contribution to Newfoundland, following the tidal wave, which took twenty-six lives and destroyed many homes and fishing boats, was the first from an outside country to reach the distressed people.

The sum of $5,000 was given to the fund for the relief of the Mennonite refugees of German descent, who had determined to leave Russia for new lands. About 13,000 passed through Germany, where the German Red Cross, aided by Red Cross societies of other nations, helped them. The majority are being transported to new countries in the western world and the American Red Cross has transmitted contributions from individuals in this country.

When Costa Rica was menaced by a smallpox epidemic, the American Red Cross sent fifty thousand tubes of vaccine, in two airplane loads, undoubtedly saving the country from a serious outbreak of the dread disease. MORTGAGE SALE

CHAPTER XIII -12-

Hankerings

Prosperity was good for Will. He worked regular hours. He looked fresh and well. He adored the children and enjoyed them more than he ever had, and no woman ever had a more loverlike husband than Ernestine. Two or three times a week they went to the theater, or to concerts. satisfying a long-starved hunger for beauty of sight and sound, for movement and color. Ernestine had picked up easily the old threads of social contact, as though she had been living in another city all this while. The old friends closed around her as naturally as though she had never been far from them, and in a little while the jargon, the familiar jokes, the odd intimacies were back with her again.

The money flowed in uncontrollably. They bought a second car, and there were beautiful clothes, new jewels and furs for Ernestine, charge accounts, a pony stabled at an expensive riding academy for the children. They talked of buying the house they were in, but already it seemed small. Will thought he would like to be nearer the lake and farther north. He felt that they needed more room.

One day in the fall when "Billy the Baby" was two years old, Ernestine entertained her bridge club and that afternoon seemed to her a perfect example of what life might be for a woman. She was proud of her home, proud of her thin china, her beautiful silver, her gracious friends. The new maid was well trained. The cook, stimulated by flattery, had outdone herself. The children came in and spoke to the guests who all exclaimed over them. They went out with their nurse to walk to the lake. Even Lil-Han, who had become silent and remote since her last trip to New York, displayed some of her old gay spirits. The talk fell into happy reminiscence of their childhood and girlhood.

After the guests were gone and Ernestine was helping the maid to tidy the living room, putting cushions In place, folding the card table covers, as the girl set the furniture back, Lillian stayed on, lying back in a chair of red velvet, her fair head pressed against the fabric, her arm hanging taxly over the side of the chair, smoking a cigarette, watching Ernestine. As the maid went out with the tables and covers and a tray of ash boxes, Ernestine flung herself down with an exclamation of weariness. Lillian as-loses weight in hot weather." "But it's October now. It hasn't been really hot for weeks. I saw him on North Clark street today while I was waiting in the car for Loring, who was visiting one of his Greeks. He came and talked to me. He looked very white and thin, I thought-and his eyes were too bright-feverish. You must give him milk and eggs. Will is the type, linear I think you call it, that runs easily into T. B. He's indoors too much."

Ernestine was silent, thinking swiftly. "Will's all right, I think," she said a little shortly, but she looked grave. Lillian arched her brows in disbe-Hef, but said no more. After a while she left in her own car, while Ernestine sat on the big couch, the silk and gatin pillows, the wide low room with its charming furniture and carved fireplace forgotten in an instant.

What was Will doing on North Clark street? He and Mr. Poole had had an office there long ago. Will had been strange of late.

Ernestine rose abruptly and went to her room to change her dress before the children returned to climb upon her. Her mind went reluctantly to Will, as though forced against itself to consider dangers. Perhaps he needed mothering. He was subject to periods of nervous and mental depression because he could not remember that he had a body long enough to take care of it. She wondered if he were worried about money. They were spending it like water, but there seemed so much of it.

The children came in, rosy and laughing from their walk, and crowded upon her. She loved to have them close. They chattered eagerly as she sat down with them to their simple, appetizing supper, the nursemaid smiling and talking to her with a pretty deference. She and Will had dinner together, later, after the children had had half an hour with their father. and gone up to bed. But Will did not come in at their bedtime as he usually did. Disappointed, they finally trailed off up the stairs, and Ernestine wondered if she had missed Will.

"Has Mr. Todd been in, Molly?" "He's in the garden, ma'am," the maid replied. Ernestine went out through the dining room windows, across the tiled west porch and paused at the garden steps, to stare. Will stood about fifty feet away from her, leaning against the corner of the garage, his hat off, his head tilted back and his eyes fixed on the one tree that stood on the lot, a tall narrow poplar 'mag.

Ernestine had never seen him look like this. The slight habitual twist of satire that had become set on his mouth was gone. His lips were relaxed and full, like a child's. His black eyes, always so bright and alert, were soft now and strangely luminous in his pale thin face. And in his countenance was such yearning, such poignant beauty, that Ernestine could scarcely forbear crying out.

He had not noticed her, and silently she turned back to the house and silently closed the door behind her. For what was Will hankering there in the dusk? What did he worship? Something she did not know, see nor feel. Something beyond her. Again, in the absorption of life he had slipped away from her, into some secret path he had to follow alone. Again his mind had escaped while his body only remained by her side. The poplar tree-he was ailing, as he had ailed before.

She gathered herself together with a spiritual gesture. She strengthened herself. Something was imminent, something was to befall them. She realized with horror that they had not saved a cent, in all their new prosperity. She was confronted with the necessity to cease her butterfly whirling and turn squirrel again. For Will's run of luck would inevitably end in disaster of some kind that she could not even forsee.

Thinking of the longing and the sorrow of his face, Ernestine forgot for the moment how but a short time ago she had loved her house and blessed her possessions. Was there nothing she could do for Will? Nothing. She had learned this hard fact once, and let her not forget it now. Was he always to be lonely? Could not her body encompass him, her love enfold him? At times she could be close against his heart. At other times he would be remote from her, from all of them. Her spirit cried out in protest against the sense of alienation that was sweeping down upon her. Her throat ached bitterly.

She shook herself. This was nonsense. Because Will stared at a tree and a star she was invoking disaster. He had come in early and gone out in his garden to enjoy the evening, and the light had made him look wan.

But these thin mental comments lied unheeded. Nothing could shake the deep fatalistic conviction that had laid itself upon her heart.

Ernestine watched Will during the winter months that followed without making much headway in her efforts to understand him. His abstraction at times was so intense that he moved like a somnambulist. The children bloomed. Peter was a tall strong boy with a lively mind and body. It was evident that Elaine would be able to start with her lessons in another year The baby would be three in the summer, and he was every one's darling. Mamma was always sending him things from New York. She could not shop without remembering him.

But none of Ernestine's joy in her children could compensate for Will's strangeness. Sometimes he came out of his absorption and was feverishly bright and active. He was guarded with her, and put on an artificial nonchalance. She accepted this casually, without the irritation that had almost disrupted them before. His whole air and manner were the air and manner of a man who is pursuing a secret love affair, but Ernestine knew that Will's grief was not so simple as that.

Nevertheless, she began in a quiet unobtrusive way to spy upon him, being compelled by the need to know something more. His habits away from home were revealed to her by small patient inquiries.

He spent every morning at the Sun office and kept his strip well ahead, did his work in an orderly, workmanlike manner. In the afternoons it was the common belief that he went to the small outside studio where a youngster named Hobbs worked on the movie cartoons for him. He spent some time there, and then either played bridge at the Press club, or at one or another of the clubs on Michigan boulevard where men had money and leisure to spend around the card tables in the late winter afternoons. One day, downtown shopping, Ernes tine went over to this movie studio, but the boy greeted her inquiry for Mr. Todd with such astonishment that she knew Will was seldom there.

"But the movies?"

"He comes in once a week or so and works all afternoon. He can do more work in an hour than anybody I ever saw. We keep them up, Mrs. Todd."

"I'm sure you do," said Ernestine, smiling at him. She talked to him for a while about his work and told him how Will had received his training doing just such chores for John Poole. Poole was little more than a legend to this joungster, she saw, but he was interested and flattered by her Ernestine went away, filled with conviction, without more logical reason than the instruction of instinct. Lillian had seen Will on North Clark street. He was not spending his time at the outside studio. He was probably not playing cards as much as she thought.

He had opened the old studio where he and John Poole had worked for over two years and he was working there now, nearly every afternoon and sometimes probably at night. What was he doing?

She thought she would ask him, but that evening when he came in she was just coming down the stairs with Elaine, naked, on her arm. She was going to the kitchen to get some olive oil to warm, for she had found the skin dry on the child's arms.

Will had come in the front door and stood, drawing his scarf from within the collar of his great coat, staring up at her. His face flashed at her and he said imperiously:

"Stand still." She stopped, in amazement, and stood poised on the stairs, the child on her arm, her simple house dress falling against her long limbs, and Will looked up at them with concentration, power in his eyes. After a strange interval he began to fold the silk scarf about his throat, to button his coat, to draw his gloves over his fingers, still staring at them, and then without a word, but with a smile of excitement, he turned and left the house.

It was very late when he returned, but Ernestine was awake, waiting for him. He came directly to her in her room, and his face was like a drunkard's, flushed and relaxed and happy. He caught her in his arms and kissed her passionately.

The Office Was Empty and She Entered and Shut the Door Behind

"Will-where have you been? Why are you so strange?" she asked him. For answer he pressed his lips against her throat, he put her short dark hair back from her brow and stared at her, entranced with what he

"You're so lovely," he said, "so beautiful, Ernestine. Not even the old masters have a face as lovely as yours. Your eyes-your eyes are sad, my sweet. Why are you sad?" He ran his fingers over her face, his strong fingers that could touch lightly, won-

Ernestine felt as if her heart would

"Will-tell me. What ails you?" she implored him. "You haven't noticed me for weeks and weeks-all winter you haven't even seen me, and nowyou come in like this."

He moved away from her. He was erect, triumphant, under the impulse of strong excitement.

"I've done it. Ernestine." "What have you done?"

He made a gesture with his fingers -a stroke in their air, either with brush or pencil.

"I've made something new and different. Something I've wanted a long time. I'll tell you about it some day, when I'm ready. But now, don't question me. Just love me. As you used to, Ernestine. Can't you come to me as you used to come? My love, and mine alone?" He wooed her, and she yielded to him, finding an instant's hurting joy in his old eagerness-his old flaring enthusiasm. This tide of human love was not new to her. Its sameness was like an enchantment. But after he was sleeping by her side, she wept secretly. He was so strange. Even in his argor, deep honesty warned her that not her beauty, not her love, not her dearness had allured him-he had been impelled toward her by something within himself. His deep and secret springs of artistry were awakening, stirring. Solitary even in his passion and his love. The next morning she rose with her heart hardened with determination, and after he had gone downtown, she hunted out among her possessions the old office key he had given her, so long ago. She took the bus and went back to Erie street, walked the old familiar way again and came to the old office, fitted her key in the lock and opened the door. The office was empty, and she entered and shut the door behind

The light in the place was fine. A long window crossed the back of the room, and here was a slanted table and stool. Ernestine moved to this and calmly, deliberately, she began to hunt for Will's secret. She had no more scruple about it than she would have had if he had been her son and in some trouble she must learn about,

In the middle of the drawing board, on white rice paper pinned down with tacks at the corners, was a sketch. Only a few strong lines in charcoal, She saw herself, coming down the stairs, the naked baby on her arm, one hand at the balustrade. The long lines of her limbs bore a subtle and flowing exaggeration. It was beautiful. It was alive. It moved and in its motion were poetry and sound. It was new, work of a kind she had never seen before. But she understood it. The outlines were clear and hard-the work had authority, fire, but nobody else had made a picture like this. Understanding filled her. Last night, Will had not loved her. Her heart had told her truly. It was this picturethis bright mental image of womanhood that he had loved, had taken into his arms and caressed.

"No, no," she whispered. "That's morbid. It is I whom Will loves. It is only his way."

On the corner of the sheet, like a signature, were the round hard splotches of tears. Ernestine wept, too, standing there and looking at this new work and thinking of Will-and the Todd cats.

She looked through everything and found material with the dust of a year upon it. In a pile were pictures of the poplar tree. He had made the tree again and again. She caught a hint of desperation. He had been deliberately careless. He had distorted the limbs, but neither the carelessness nor the distortion had given him the quality that lay now on the board with the charcoal sketch of herself on the stairs-a thing called Life. Vitality!

Months of work. Months of struggle. Secret, silent-a new idea, a new stirring pain goading him out of his

And every morning he had to go and make the cat cartoons. He had to go from the Sun to the movie studio. When he was longing to experiment with this new conception. He was ready to leave satire for a new form of beauty. He was ready to establish a new and modern school of work.

It was not an unnatural development. Looking back, it seemed to Ernestine that the years had conspired in order to accomplish this. She'remembered the little boy with his leg in a brace, who had made the book of bird pictures for her-a book she still loved and possessed, and which she had been showing to Peter only a day or two ago. Will had so loved the color of wings.

She recalled the water colors on his mother's walls: the smudged pictures of John Pryor when he was a babycrude but warm. She remembered what Mrs. Todd had said-all the neighbors thought Will would be a great artist some day. If he were not subjugated to her biological necessities!

Through the newspaper environment and his hero worship of John Poole he had become a cartoonist. And he had had hard work and desperate struggle to accomplish that. But the very things this success had brought him had been a means of releasing this deeper, more sincere impulse. The comfort, the affluence, the sense of security, all had enabled him to begin to give heed to another voice.

And Will had thought in his simplicity that he could have a secret! He had imagined that he could, in his idle hours, pursue this new and delightful gift of artistry. He had experimented here alone with new tools, new methods, and thought that no one would ever know. Ernestine was wiser. She knew the consequences of activity, secret or open. This studio was going to destroy the cats as certainly as love destroys infatuation.

She stooped and brushed lightly with her lips the charcoal image of herself descending the stairs. She locked the door and went away, her lips firm, her eyes glowing in her love-

"Whenever you are ready, Will, Y will be ready, too."

But Will did not seem to be ready. He had changed. He had become silent, morose, irritable. There was no question now as to where he was spending his time, for he played bridge hours every day. He won constantly, Ernestine kept him as clean of money as she could, subverting all that she could lay hands on to her own purposes. She did not know how much money he won at cards, but his mania was a new thing, and she could not understand it. One night at a dance in the club to which he belonged she saw him through the open door of the cardroom, sitting at a heavy round table, his face absolutely set, his dark eyes watchful, playing in an intense absorption,

"How does he play?" she asked her partner, a friend of Will. "I've played with him, of course, but always with women, and he seemed indifferent-

"I wish I could get him at a table when there were women there," the man, a middle-aged illustrator, answered. "He has a great deal of my money. Why, he plays an extraordinarily good game, and every one likes to play with him because he minds his own business. He plays for study, but he doesn't row. He makes no mistakes, but he doesn't jump on the fellow who does. And cards! Oh, boy-he has them. He has an absolutely marvelous memory."

Ernestine knew this. Will's memory was part of his equipment as an artist He would be able to visualize each trick that had fallen, without error, she knew. But she was troubled. She understood the psychological use of the word "substitution," and it occurred to her in connection with Will at the bridge tables, but she could not get the thing clearly. Will was drugging himself with the mechanical occupation of cards. The cards interested, absorbed, fascinated him. The mesmeric fascination of the game were useful to him as a means of stilling something-she could not quite get it. She could not ask him whether he had ceased going to the little office. She felt balked and wounded.

One day when he telephoned that he would not eat at home, and came in after midnight, he flung down on the table a roll of bills.

"I've been playing for ten cents a point. Won rubber after rubber," he said indifferently.

Ernestine picked up the money and counted it. "This will pay for-" she began, and

Will exclaimed passionately: "My G-d, Ernestine, what do you do with the money? I never see you that you don't have your hand held out to me." Her fear gave her sudden fury.

"Am I to account to you for every penny?" she exclaimed. "I did without, long enough. Now that you're earning, are you going to be niggardly with me? Don't you dare ask me what I do with my money!"

He made no answer, his face bored and scornful. She had been thinking that when he came in she would try to talk to him, but now the moment was passed. He undressed and got into bed, and said in his quick irritable way:

"Either turn out the light or go somewhere else. I'm tired."

"From working?" she asked, and then regretted swiftly. That was too much like that other time-that other

Will did not answer, but turned his back and flung his arm, in the blue pajama sleeve, up over his eyes. Ernestine put out the lights except the small lamp at her side of the bed, and sat on the bed for a while, her feet drawn up and her arms clasped around her knees, thinking, her mind turning this way and that, her heart full of pain.

Wealth Showered Upon Favorites of Fortune

An American artist named Mott traveled to the Pribilof islands in a sealing vessel a year ago to paint some pictures of seals in their native home, and one day noticed a curious bank of sand lying close along the shore. He dug into it, and found beneath the sand a mass of bones. They were seal bones-millions of them-which had been flung up by the sea in the course of centuries. Further search has shown that there are miles of these bone deposits along the shores of the islands. One pile is a mile long, half a mile wide, and six feet deep. Now, bones are one of the best of all fertilizers, and the value of the find is simply gigantic-far greater than that of any gold mine.

Simple Blackboard

Blackboards on any size are usually quite expensive, but one woman found a way to make one that costs less than 75 cents. She bought an inexpensive dark-green window shade and a can of flat black paint. Two coats of the paint were applied to the shade, which when dry became a blackboard that could be rolled up out of the way when not in use.

This brings to mind the case of the wandering prospector who, years ago, while crossing a desert in Wyoming, came across the body of a hores which, though it must have died long ago, was still fresh and sweet. The body was covered with a layer of fine dust, which the prospector recognized as borax. He saw the value of the discovery and sold it to a large packing firm in Chicago, who kept the secret for a long time. Today the uses of borax are innumerable, and range from the preservation of food down to dressings for tired feet and lotions for inflamed eyes.

the best friends the Indian ever had. The date of his birth was November 8, 1830; the place was on a farm near Leeds, Maine; and his name was Oliver Otis Howard. It would seem that from the beginning Destiny ruled that his career should be closely linked with the fate of the red men, not just those of one tribe but of many tribes. As a boy he heard from the hps of his grandfather stirring tales of Indian warfare during the Revolution. When he went to West Point as a cadet at the United States Military academy he came in contact with many army officers who had served on the frontier against the wild tribes beyond the Mississippi, among them Maj. George H. Thomas, who had received three brevet commissions for gallant conduct in Indian fights and who, as General Thomas, was to be hailed as "the Rock of Chickamauga" in the Civil war.

Howard himself rose to the position of major general of volunteers in the Civil war, and repeatedly distinguished himself during those four years. He left his right arm on the bloody field of Fair Oaks during a gallant charge at the head of the Sixty-first New York infantry and won for himself the medal of honor. He received the thanks of congress for his "skill and heroic valor" at Gettysburg, and for his gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Ezra Church and during the campaign against Atlanta, Ga., he was brevetted major general in the

His contact with the red men began almost immediately after he was graduated from West Point in 1854. In December, 1856, he was ordered to report to Gen. W. S. Harney, a distinguished Indian fighter, in Florida, where a remnant of the Seminoles who had refused to go west with the main portion of the tribe after the close of the second Seminole war, were continuing their raids on white settlements under their leader, Chief Billy Bowlegs. Howard was placed in command of an expedition to round up these recalcitrants and although it failed of its immediate object, it resulted eventually in the surrender of Billy Bowlegs and permanent peace in the Everglades for the first time in many years. Howard was next detailed to duty at West Point and was there when the Civil war began. At the close of the war he was made commissioner of the bureau of freedmen and refugees and served in that capacity until 1874. Then with the inauguration of President Grant's "Indian Peace Policy," Howard was detailed as a special commissioner to Arizona and New Mexico and especially to make peace with the Chiricahua Apaches under Chief Cochise whose reign of terror in the Southwest was holding back the settlement of that region. After holding councils with the Yumas, the Pimas, the Maricopas, the Arivipas, the Mojaves, the Tontos and the White Mountain Apaches, and settling the troubles between them and the whites, Howard next went among the Navajoes for the same purpose. He accomplished this by establishing a force of Indian police and inducing their great war chief, Manuelito, to be the head of the force.

But his main objective was still ahead of him-that of bringing Cochise, the Apache, in off the warpath. After several unsuccessful attempts Billy Bowlegs, the Seminole to get the chief to come in for a conor Scott knew persocally so many ference, Howard, accompanied by a noted red men as dic Howard. To noted frontiersman named Tom Jefread his two books, "My Life and Exfords, took his life in his hands and periences Among Our Hostile Indians" visited Cochise's stronghold. Among his most interesting rem-iniscences are those of Geronimo, the notorious Apache leader. "Geronimo was with Cochise when he decided that the Great Spirit wanted the Indians to make peace with the white men and eat bread with them," writes

Howard in his "Famous Indian Chiefs of the Indians were very happy to have peace, and Geronimo seemed quite as pleased as the others, though

I believe he was not yet quite sure that it was time for peace to come.

At any rate the great Cochine said it was, so Geronimo was ready to ride with us to meet the soldiers, and as I was willing, he sprang up over my horse's tail and by a second spring came forward, threw his arms around me and so rode many miles on my horse. During that ride we became friends and I think Geronimo trusted me, although he trembled very much and his warriors were held as prisoners of war), and the first man I saw there as I got out of the train was Geronimo. He had a bundle of canes of different sorts of wood, which he had peeled and painted and was selling them one by one. When he caught sight of me he passed his canes to another Indian and ran to meet me.

I could not understand his Apache but he embraced me twice and called his short time later.

the Pacific Northwest where he was one of the chief actors in the Nez Perce war. It was during this short war that Chief Joseph of that tribe made his epic dash for freedom toward Canada which has come down as one of the greatest military exploits in American history. No less brilliant than Joseph's retreat was Howard's pursuit of the fleeing Indians, a pursuit carried on through some of the most difficult country on the North American continent. But when the Nez Perce leader was at last brought to bay in the Bear Paw mountains in Montana by Gen, Nelson A. Miles and forced to surrender, Howard, who at last had caught up with the fugitives, displayed a rare magnanimity at the surrender of Chief Joseph. The Indian leader extended his rifle to Howard in token of surrender, but Howard waived it over to Miles, thus declining in favor of his brother officer the honor which he had so richly deserved after his trying and difficult campaign.

No sooner was the Nez Perce war over, however, than Howard was again in the field against the Piutes and Bannocks in the campaign of 1878 which was nearly as arduous as was that of 1877. This war resulted in the death of two important chiefs, Egan and Buffalo Horn, and Howard was again the victor in another conflict with savages. His next service was a series of councils with the Colville Indians, the Spokanes, the Okanagans and the Coeur d'Alenes whose high regard he won by his efforts to right the wrongs which they had suffered at the hands of the whites. The attitude of Chief Lot of the Spokanes toward Howard was typical of the Indians of that region. When he learned that the general had been ordered east he protested against it. "You must not go; you cannot go!" entreated the Indian chief with tears in his eyes, "You are the Indians' friend. If you stay everything will go on right, but if you go the white men around me will get my land and there will be trouble. You must not

No doubt many another Indian leader would have concurred in Chief Lot's words, for until General Howard's retirement from the army in 1895 and his death in 1909, he was looked upon by most of the red men with whom he had had any contact as one white man whom they could trust. In his wide experience with the Indians and their confidence in him he has probably only two rivals-Gen. George Crook and Gen. Hugh L.

But it is doubtful if either Crook

BALANCED RATION NEEDED BY COWS

Animal Must Be Supplied Right Amount of Feed.

The claim that any proprietary feed is a scientifically balanced ration is absurd. A balanced ration is one which supplies the animal with exactly the right amount of food and In which the different classes of nutrients are supplied in the proportions in which they are needed by the animal. Before a grain mixture can intelligently be prescribed which will supply even an approximation of a balanced ration to a dairy cow, the amount and character of the available roughage (hay, pasture, stover, silage, etc.) must be known; also the approximate production of the animal. A grain mixture bulanced for feeding with clover or alfalfa hay and silage would no longer be balanced if the legume hay were replaced by timothy, or if the silage were discontinued. When it is realized that a 1,000-pound cow producing 20 pounds of average milk requires three times as much protein and twice as much total food material as she would need when dry or that when producing 40 pounds, her requirement would be five times as much protein and three times as much total food; or that when producing 60 pounds of average milk, her requirement would be seven times as much protein and four times as much total food as she would need when dry, the importance of production as a factor in balancing rations can be readily understood. The preceding brief statement will also serve to show that the heavy producing cow must have a much higher proportion of protein in her food than the lighter producer. A ration which is balanced for the light producer would be entirely inadequate and out of balance for the heavy producer, while one that was balanced for the latter would be out of balance and wasteful, especially of protein if fed even in reduced amount to a light producer or a dry cow,

Overfeeding Dairy Cows May Bring on Sterility

There is a tendency on some dairy farms to feed too much high protein grain to dairy cows, with the result that they have to be sent to the butcher within two or three years because of udder trouble or failure to breed.

If such practices meant increased profits, dairymen would be justified in following them; but such is not the case. There is too much money spent for grain, too little attention paid to the raising of the right kind of hay, and too heavy depreciation on the

The average lifetime of the cows in a herd should be five years, or five milking periods. When cows are fed properly they will calf every year, if there is no abortion in the berd, and produce well year after year. In other words, we will get the most milk from a herd of cows over a period of five years when the amount of grain fed is not too heavy, and when the grain ration fits the roughage fed. If we want a cow to stay in our herd any length of time, we must be careful not to overfeed her.

Strippings Are Richer

Than Entire Milking

It is known that the strippings from a cow are richer than the entire milking. The difference is found to be in the fat only, the remainder of the milk remains the same. Seven cows tested by the writer averaged 1.8 fat in the first milk and 6.2 per cent in the last

The variation from the first to the last is more with the heavily milking cow than one producing but a small amount. The practical value of these facts is to make clear the importance of getting the strippings in order to have the highest testing milk. The last pint is equal to the first two quarts in fat content.-C. H. Eckles.

Pasture Required for Dairy Cow During Year Under the method of pasture management still in general use, it requires two to two and one-half acres of pasture for each dairy cow or fattening steer, and even then in the case of dairy cows the pasture must be heavily suppremented by mill feeds and concentrates. During the past few years many experiments were conducted with a view to finding a remedy for this condition, and now a system has been evolved which offers great advantages to the dairyman as well as to the farmer who specializes in beef cattle and sheep.

Shelter for Calves

Calves should have a warm shed to "keep the hump out of their backs" this winter, according to C. W. Mc-Donald of Iown state college at Ames. Such care will prevent colds. lung fever and scours. A well bedded open south shed will provide the protection at a minimum of cost. A ration of grain and good legume roughage will furnish the necessary feed for growth and put the calf into condition for spring pasture or for the feedlot as the case may be.

of Still Small Voice

The case of the woman who has advertised for the owner of a gold pin set with small diamonds which she found 25 years ago, is described as one of troubled conscience. Through a quarter of a century the the justification, conscience is never woman must have been stilling the small voice within her that was reminding her that she was keeping something which was not hers and which she was making no effort to return to its owner.

What is this conscience which abides with all human beings and compels us to acts which we do not wish to perform? The dictionary definition is of no help in answering the question. "The knowledge of our own acts and feelings as right or wrong" explains nothing. The difference between right and wrong is so often a personal one, and when a person wishes to justify an act of his to himself it is generally easy. Wrong can be made to appear right to oneself if self-interest is allowed to become paramount. But despite wholly stifled.

It nags and nags at one and gives no peace until, like the woman with the pin, it finally forces what may be called confession. The cynical Talleyrand said that to be happy a man should have a good digestion and no conscience. Possibly, but if it is so practically no one is truly happy. Conscience may undoubtedly be fostered and what troubles one generation may not trouble another. But conscience is a fixed part of ourselves, something which is born with us. Saving Mothers and Babies Is Important Red Cross Task Saving mothers' lives and better babies were important features during the past year of the Public Health Nursing Service of the American Red Cross. About four-fifths of the 794 nurses in the Red Cross work made more than 100,000 prenatal and maternal visits, in addition to assisting doctors in the examination of 1,309,409 school children.

Statistics reveal that the lives of two out of three American women who die in maternity cases could be saved if they received proper medical and nursing care. As more than 15,000 women die in the United States each year from various diseases of the maternal state, this means that more than 10,000 of these deaths are pre-

Comfort Kits Sent 40,000 Service Men by Red Cross

Gay patterned cretonne bags, or comfort kits, containing articles useful and amusing, are sent by the Red Cross to 40,000 soldiers, sailors and Marines, on foreign service, as Christmas remembrances.

The little gift bags are donated and packed by women in Red Cross Chapters all over the country. They are despatched by Army transport in the early autumn in order to reach the foreign ports and posts of the U.S. services in time to be hung on the Christmas trees. Giving the remembrances from home is the outgrowth of a plan adopted by the Red Cross prior to the World War when so many National Guard regiments were on the Mexican border.
