The object of the new organization is to promote things for the betterment of the city.

The officers elected are as follows: Eugene Bing, president; F. F. Taylor, vice-president; M. C. Musolf, secretary; Jas. Robinson, treasurer; Jas. H. Leslie, H. J. Keiser and Charles Moeller were elected members of the board of directors.

The list can't get too long. Each one boosts not only its particular locality, but East Michigan as a whole.

Every community which makes the best of the resource for sport or recreation or agricultural development which is peculiarly its own is a valuable ally of the East Michigan Tourist Association.

DRAIN ON OAK STREET UNDER CONSTRUCTION

A drain for Oak street, leading to the new depot, was authorized Monday night by the city council and construction was commenced at once.

It is being built in anticipation of the paving of this street next spring.

The drain met with some opposition Monday night when a number of citizens filed protests.

After consideration, the drain was adopted by a vote of 4 to 1. The matter had been previously considered by the street committee and it was deemed advisable to drain this street before spring.

TAWAS CITY HOME NUTRITION CLASS HOLDS SECOND MEETING

The second meeting of the Tawas City home nutrition series was held at the home of Mrs. J. Swartz, Jr., Tuesday evening, November 4, with 23 ladies present.

The business session was in charge of Mrs. Mae Dease, chairman. Roll call—your favorite vegetable. Food score cards were distributed and reports handed in on some.

Those present at the last meeting were asked to explain what benefit they had derived from the last series. An oral test of true and false statements was enjoyed.

After the business session, the project leaders, Mrs. G. Murray and Mrs. Swartz demonstrated five kinds of salads and served all present with a sample of each. Great praise is due our leaders for the time they are giving to bring to the class so many interesting helps from the leaders' meetings.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Mae Dease on Monday evening, November 17.

"LOVE IN THE ROUGH" HAS ROMANCE AND COMEDY

Romance, buffoonery, golf, slapstick, music, dancing—here's a hodgepodge that emerges as a welcome dose of laugh-antidote for that blah feeling you get from seeing too many sentimental things.

Bobby Montgomery and Dorothy Jordan supply the love interest, while Benry Rubin and co-comeikers run off with the film. You'll like it if you don't take it seriously. See it on Thursday and Friday at the Family Theatre, East Tawas.

A POETIC TRIBUTE TO A WELL LOVED POET

No more fitting tribute could be paid to Joe Dermody by the East Michigan Tourist Association than its resolution passed at the annual meeting recently to plant forty acres of the Huron National Forest in his name.

He thought and spoke and wrote of East Michigan in the phraseology of the poet. The rivers and lakes and shores and woods were poetry to him. One of the last articles which he wrote was "Afloat on the AuSable," a story which was keenly alive to the beauty of stream and forest but also sensitive to the need for reforestation in that region.

Forty acres—with a suitable stone marker—a gesture of beauty to a man who loved the beauty of Michigan.

EAST TAWAS HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

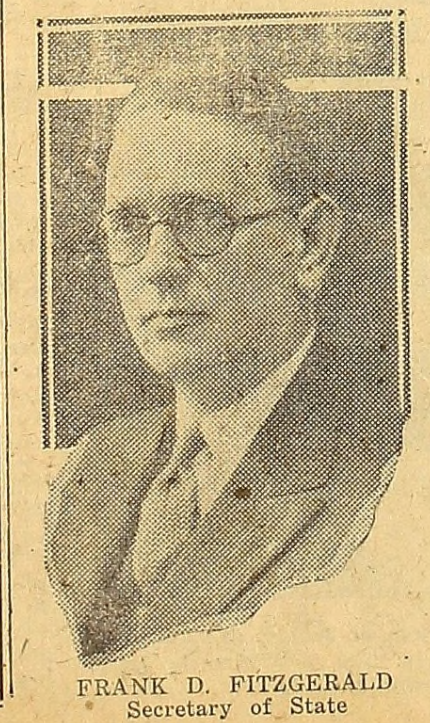

Professor Joseph Maddy of the music department of the University of Michigan gave two splendid illustrated lectures on "Enriching Life Through Music." One was to the student body Monday afternoon and the other to the P. T. Association in the evening. At the former Professor Maddy traced a development of music in the high schools and what music contests are doing to promote better music and to develop better musicians. Being president of the National High School Orchestra Camp Association, he explained in detail the success of that project at Interlochen, Michigan. In the evening Professor Maddy spent his time explaining the economic importance of making good use of leisure time. The participation in musical activities in the home, school and community is one of the solutions of the grave problems, according to Professor Maddy. In closing his speech he promised to return some day and assist in putting across a music participation project in the community. About seventy-five people were present and the lecture. The high school orchestra furnished special numbers in the evening and the band in the afternoon.

DO YOU KNOW HOW RED POPPY BECAME ARMISTICE SYMBOL?

It was a group of women in a little town in Georgia whose act of decorating with flowers the graves of both Confederate and Union soldiers at the close of the Civil war led to this act becoming a regular part of the national observance of Memorial Day. And it was another Georgia woman who at the close of the World War inaugurated the wearing of the red poppy as a symbol of Armistice Day. Do you know that story? If not, you will be interested in the illustrated feature article, "The Red Poppy—Symbol of Armistice Day," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Herald.

FRANK D. FITZGERALD Secretary of State

The Red Poppy-Symbol of Armistice Day

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WITH the coming of another Armistice day men and women all over the world will pin flaming red poppies over their hearts as symbols of the blood which was shed on the battlefields of the World War. For the red poppy has become the emblem of Armistice day and we wear it on November 11 as a memorial not only to the men who died during the war-torn years of 1914-18 but also to those who came back to their homes alive but bearing upon their bodies and in their minds the scars of that holocaust—the disabled veterans.

The story of how the red poppy became the emblem of Armistice day goes back to November, 1918—even before there was an Armistice to lighten the burden of a war-weary world. In it there is a curious parallelism between the establishment of this custom and another custom observed on another day when we honor our war dead. It was a group of southern women in Columbus, Ga., who in 1865 banded together to decorate the graves of soldiers, both Union and Confederate, thus originating a custom which is perpetuated in our Memorial day observance. And it was another southern woman, Miss Moina Michael of Athens, Ga., who originated the idea of adopting the red poppy as a symbol of the sacrifices of the fighting men of the World War and whose efforts have resulted in this flower's being adopted as the Armistice day emblem.

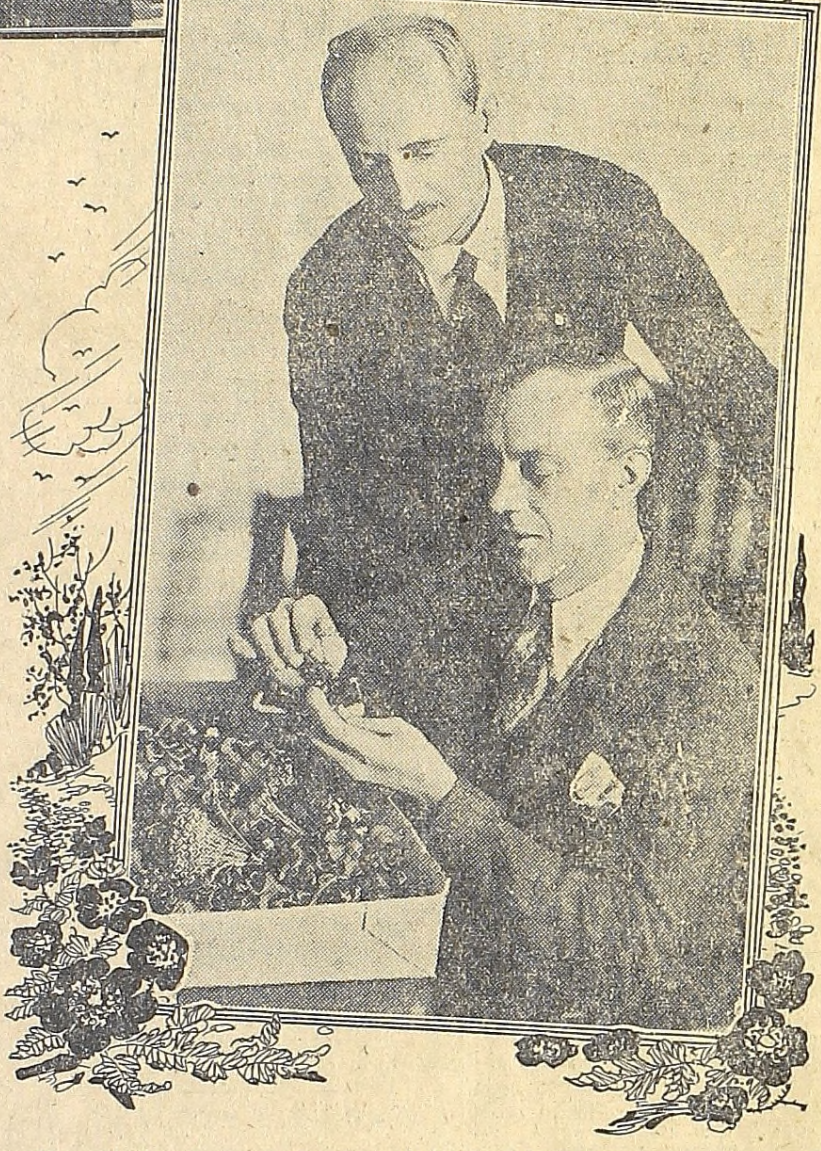

The idea came to Miss Michael while she was serving on the staff of the Y. W. C. A. overseas headquarters at Hamilton Hall, Columbia university, in New York. On Saturday, November 9, 1918, she was sitting in the headquarters office when a soldier came in and placed a copy of a monthly magazine on her desk. In it she happened to read Colonel McCrea's now-famous poem, "In Flanders Fields." She was so stirred by the lines that she re-read it several times and then with a sudden inspiration she wrote this reply to it:

Oh! You who sleep in Flanders Fields,
Sleep sweet—to rise anew!
We caught the Torch you threw
And holding high, we keep the Faith
With all who died.
We cherish, too, the Poppy Red
That grows in fields where valor led:
It seems to signal to the skies
That blood of heroes never dies,
But lends a lustre to the red
Of the flower that blooms above the dead
In Flanders Fields.
And now the Torch and Poppy Red
We'll wear in honor of our dead.
Fear not that ye have died for naught;
We'll teach the lessons that ye wrought
In Flanders Fields.

As she wrote, she decided that she would wear a poppy for remembrance and she would also ask others to do the same. While thinking about this three overseas Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. workers, who had been attending a conference at Columbia, came in to bring her a check for $10 in appreciation of her efforts to make a model hostess house of their headquarters. She immediately told them that she would use the money with which to buy poppies and then explained her idea. They were as enthusiastic about it as she was and, returning to their conference, spread the news. As a result, all of the workers at the conference that afternoon were wearing poppies which Miss Michael had provided.

The next morning Miss Michael went to see her friend, Dean Talcott Williams of the Columbia school of Journalism, and confided to him her poppy-thought. He was very much pleased and offered to pass the thought on that afternoon to a war workers' committee on which were Mrs. Preston, the former Mrs. Grover Cleveland, and Rodman Wanamaker. He attended the meeting of the committee and brought back to Miss Michael enthusiastic reports of the manner in which her plan had been received.

Then came the armistice and Miss Michael turned all her energies to spreading the idea of the poppy as a national emblem. She presented the plan to other conferences and they straightway adopted it. Home-coming programs were made and the poppy idea was introduced into them.

The pictures shown above are photographs taken in a disabled veterans' hospital where the patients make Buddy Poppies to be sold throughout the country by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, the proceeds being devoted exclusively to welfare work among disabled veterans and ex-service men.

Miss Michael wrote her congressman, Charles H. Brand, and he replied on December 10, 1918: "I am writing today the War department in behalf of your suggestion that the poppy be adopted as the national emblem in commemoration of our soldiers who died in France."

Miss Michael wrote to many institutions of education, women's clubs and other organizations, explaining that as it was impossible to have triumphal arches or great memorials in all places from which came the heroes of the World War, she begged them to adopt the poppy as a tribute to the men who won the victory.

"Out of every great event of the world has come an emblem," she wrote, "Lest we forget! Into this war went many emblems: The flags of nations, the Red Cross, the Red Triangle, the service flag and pin. Now out of this war should come some symbol perpetually to remind us and unfailingly to teach coming generations the value of the light of liberty and our debt to those who so valiantly saved it for us."

On the eve of the Georgia State convention of the American Legion, August 19 and 20, 1920, in Augusta, Miss Michael went to the Legion headquarters in Atlanta and turned over to them her arguments concerning the adoption of the poppy. Charles M. Gallene of Post No. 1, Atlanta, took charge of the material and presented the movement to the convention. It was adopted and the delegation to the national convention was instructed to present it at Cleveland, Ohio, and to support the resolutions. The resolutions were presented to the national convention in September, 1920, and the poppy became the National American Legion Memorial Flower.

The happy inspiration which this southern woman had has not been confined in its result to this country alone. For her idea has spread to other countries. Madam E. Guerin of Paris read Miss Michael's poem pledging to "Keep the Faith," and her plans for wearing poppies to memorialize the sacrifices of the war. She immediately organized the American and French Children's league and sold poppies for the benefit of the orphans in France.

In an official report, which she issued on February 8, 1922, from Canada on Poppy days, she announced: "The great war veterans have sold 1,000,000 small poppies and 200,000 large ones, clearing $90,000 for their relief work, and for the French, $80,000 to go to the poor French children of the battlefields."

In England the poppy program flourished tremendously. Earl Haig's British Legion adopted the selling and wearing of poppies in 1921 and since that time more than $11,000,000 has been cleared for ex-service men. In 1927 alone the British legionnaires sold 28,000,000 poppies and made a profit of $2,522,000. In 1928 the sales reached the $3,000,000 mark. In every British community, no matter how remote from the mother country, anniversary of the armistice is observed by the sale of poppies. The full list of overseas collections from poppies, as printed in the 1927 report of the British Legion, assumes the appearance of a gazetteer of the world. There are listed there the Azores, Egypt, the Grand Canary Islands, Morocco, Nigeria, the Sudan, the Orange Free State, Bermuda, British Guiana, Trinidad, Borneo, British Malaya and dozens and dozens of other countries.

Instead of the poppy becoming a national emblem, as the Poppy Lady first dreamed, it has become an international emblem. In Europe, besides the British Isles and France, 19 countries wear the blood-colored blossoms in their lapels: Italy, Holland, Germany, Spain, Belgium, Sweden, Switzerland, Poland, Greece, Rumania and, oh, almost every corner of the globe. Poppies are even worn in Japan, China, Mexico, Asia Minor and in every country of North and South America.

The poppies are made by disabled veterans in hospitals in the East, at piece-work cost and the state departments of the Veterans of Foreign Wars all taken certain quotas. A small amount is deducted for national and state relief and the rest goes to the posts that sell the poppies to be used as their relief needs arise. The veterans are paid one and one-quarter cents for every poppy they make and some of them are skillful enough to turn out from 800 to 400 poppies in a day thereby earning about $5.00.

Powdered Her Nose, and Walks the Plank

Sheriff Gets Cold Welcome

Boise, Idaho. — Sheriff's officers emerged from the mountains after a preliminary skirmish with charity, their heads bloody but unbowed.

The battle began when Sheriff Art Stevens of Elmore county went into the isolated wilderness to bring succor to the family of William Long, starving. It was reported, on a gold mining claim.

He returned with Mr. and Mrs. Long, their four children and a variety of wounds and bruises.

The sheriff had taken a promise of food and charity and a court order for the removal of the children to the children's home here. The food and charity were accepted, but the court order was answered with shovels, rocks and bricks. However, he brought the family back.

In Boise the mother objected to authorities taking the children to the home. The officers responding to Sheriff Stevens' call for help, also were rained with plows. Finally the woman was overpowered and taken away. Then the children fought when bathing and hair-cutting operations were started. Then the family refused to eat, fearing the authorities were trying to poison them. Now authorities are waiting for the hunger cure to take effect.

Master Gambler Once Stable Boy

Deauville.—When Nicky Zographos, "the biggest gambler in the world," who runs the famous Greek syndicate at present, leaves the Royal hotel around 5:00 in the afternoon to go to the Deauville casino for the day's first session behind the green tables, his passage through the streets excites more curiosity and excitement than if the president of France or half a dozen European crowned heads should happen to go by. It takes a big bribe to one of the casino's liveried bellhops to be allowed to tiptoe up to the door of the room where "the inner circle" holds its session to catch a glimpse of the master gambler at his work.

As he sits there at the head of the table he gives the impression of one of these automatic machines or robots of which scientists have prophesied. His face is impassive and grouchy even. When he is playing he talks in monosyllables; short, cut phrases in a raw sort of tone as if he had a cold. His movements are so few that the onlooker gets the impression that the man is just an animated doll, placed there for show purposes.

The fortune that this thirty-seven-year-old gambler has managed to accumulate is variously estimated at from 100,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 francs. He began life as a stable boy near Athens. Then he became a shopkeeper's assistant, like his famous countryman, Sir Basil Zaharoff, "Europe's mystery man," who once controlled the Monte Carlo gambling concession. Zographos is barely able to write, but he is good at figures. When he has found some opponent worthy of him, he plays 10,000 franc stacks ($4,000). He has recently had a solid run of luck, stretching over 30 consecutive nights, when his winnings were seldom less than 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 francs (about $500,000) per night.

After he cleaned out ex-King Manuel of Portugal; Andre Citroen, the Henry Ford of France, and August Homburg, Parisian banker, in the same evening at Cannes last winter, the only sign of satisfaction he gave was to order a bottle of champagne. He didn't even smile. A talking film

There was no direct cable connection across the Pacific until 1902, when Canada, New Zealand, and Australia were joined. This cable, almost 8,000 miles long, has several sections, touching the Fiji Islands and other unimportant points. Bates is a young artist with whom I have been acquainted for a dozen years. He is a tireless worker and a rapid one and produces an amazing number of canvases. His studio is littered with them—oils and water colors, and pastels—and yet he keeps on working. Those who know far more about such artistic matters than I do say that Bates is a genius and that he will one day be recognized as one of the leading artists of the country. But the young man is not satisfied with what he does. He refuses to sell any of the pictures which he has so far painted.

"They are not good enough," he says. "If I should sell them now, I am sure that I should one day be sorry and ashamed of them. I can do better, and I do not want to sell anything that is not my best."

He, too, was working for perfection. I suppose it is the only way to do whether we are darned stockings or painting pictures, or trying to develop a character that is worth while, or working at any task which engages our attention.

The Has Been

A sinful heart makes feeble hand.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Have you ever stopped to consider what it would mean if 300,000 friends dropped in for dinner? I have heard the floating population of New York placed at that figure. They come from all over the world, and they have all sorts of varying tastes in food. The result is that New York has restaurants which cater to about every nationality on earth. Aside from the visitors, it is necessary to cater to the home folks, about 7,000,000 of them. I suppose there is no city in the world where as much attention is given to preparing food as in New York.

Stop and consider that most of us, in spite of farm troubles and crashes in Wall Street, still eat three meals per day. I know men who claim that they eat only two, but late at night you usually find them out by the ice box doing pretty well for themselves. So I think you can figure on a general average of three meals every 24 hours. Now, with 7,000,000 to feed, stop and consider how much you have to have in the kitchen.

I am not going to give you a lot of figures. There is a grocer's association, which will do that, and besides, it's more fun to use your imagination. Just start with 7,000,000 appetites and then figure the number of eggs, oranges and melons that must be consumed every morning. Consider the amount of oatmeal, bread, bacon and other things that one Greater New York breakfast consumes. Figure the meats and vegetables, the milk and cream, that is needed every day. Railroads, steamships, trucks, automobiles, wagons, bring their quota of food in each morning. Each day New York has to feed almost twice as many persons as there were men in the United States army during the World war.

It always appears to me that New York taxi-drivers have done about everything on earth, before they began to drive a car. There is, for example, Harry Moesson. Harry was an infantryman with the First division in France. He didn't get hit, but he got gassed. Then Moesson came to New York and started driving a taxi. He still is driving it. There probably isn't a trade or profession which hasn't a representative on the driver's seat of a cab.

Walk on Broadway at any hour of the day or night and you usually will see something out of the ordinary. For example, the other day, in the space of five blocks, I saw a girl in the middle of the afternoon walking along in an evening gown; a man with long curls and a sweeping beard carrying a small watermelon under his arm; a woman with what looked like a star tattooed on her forehead; a man in shorts and an undershirt; a girl carrying the case of what appeared to be a bass viol; a man on stilts.

WORKING FOR PERFECTION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Edna was darning some stockings as I came through the living room of her house the other day. I am no connoisseur of needlework, but even to my untrained eye it was evident that the work was being crudely done. The edges of the hole were being drawn together rather than filled in, and the stitches were uneven and irregular. She was making of the job, as my mother used to say, "A short horse soon curried." She noticed that I was watching her, and she gave me a half-embarrassed, half-ashamed look.

"I know I'm not doing it well," she explained, "I'm in a hurry and it takes time and patience to darn a hole like that well. Besides what difference does it make; it's inside my shoe and it won't show."

"But you'd know about it," I suggested. But Edna was not longing for perfection and so was not likely to attain it.

Albert was a healthy young Hawaiian, who drove the automobile in which we rode around Oahu. He was married and had five children, he explained to us, and incidentally was an enthusiastic supporter of the Mormon faith. It was when he was showing us the beautiful Mormon temple at Laie that I discovered this last fact. Only members of the church are permitted to enter the temple.

"Have you seen the inside?" I inquired of Albert.

"No," he replied. "I am not yet worthy. I am not so good a man as I should be and not so good as I one day hope to be. I am working for perfection, but just now I am too far

NINETY DISASTERS CALL FOR RED CROSS RELIEF, AT COST OF $1,200,000

Vice Chairman Fieser Cites Readiness to Act of National Society, Which Lessens Loss of Life—3,500 Chapters Aid in Work.

Readiness to act in an emergency, should a disaster strike, has become part of the Red Cross Chapter program in thousands of communities. The need for this training of local committees was revealed last year, when more than ninety communities required disaster relief work by the Red Cross.
As in former years, tornadoes brought the greatest damage. Twenty-four serious tornadoes occurred. Fire also took toll of life and property in twenty-four communities. Seven forest fires did great damage; eighteen areas were affected by floods, and nine storms caused heavy losses. Other disasters were cloudbursts, cyclones, epidemics, mine explosions and shipwrecks. In the insular possessions of the United States the Red Cross gave relief in twelve disasters, chiefly from hurricanes. In foreign countries relief was given by the American Red Cross in six instances of earthquakes, floods and to refugees.
The disaster relief work of the Red Cross cost $1,208,151 last year. Statistics showed an approximate death rate of 790 persons in these disasters; buildings destroyed or damaged, 19,578; persons injured, 1,487, and persons assisted by the Red Cross, 96,872.
Through disaster preparedness of Red Cross Chapters, undoubtedly great numbers of lives were saved, and much distress and grief following the calamities was prevented, according to James L. Fieser, vice chairman in charge of domestic operations of the Red Cross.
"This type of work is supported by the memberships of citizens of the United States, their volunteer contributions, and their devoted work," Mr. Fieser said.
"Every man and woman is urged to join as a member of the local Red Cross Chapter, not only to be a partner in supporting the work through his membership, but also to serve should an emergency occur."

Tennessee's Distinction

Tennessee is honored by more states than any other state in the Union, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. In this eight other states—Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky—Kentucky, bounded by seven states, is nearest rival in this respect. Maine is separated from the rest of the Union by a single state.

"Candle" Coal?

Cannel coal burns with a bright candle-like flame, and it is probable that the name is a corruption of candle coal. This coal is found in Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana, and some believe that it is a product of an accumulation of animal as well as plant remains. The same kind of coal is found in Scotland, where it is called parrot coal.

"Will?" she said at last gently, but he did not answer. She went around and stood beside him, looking down at him. He was asleep. His eyes and brow were hidden by the fold of his arm, but his wide mouth, his mobile, sensitive, excited mouth was in repose. Where had she seen that droop before? It was Elaine's. It was the gentle enduring fold of her mouth, when she had been little and sick so much, and had borne it all with such remarkable patience. Will's mouth was like that. Not in cut or form, but in the line of its expression. Will was bearing something. He was sick. He was enduring. Ernestine felt herself lost in a dark wood. Fiercely, passionately, she buried in herself her personal resentment and pain. She must find a way out for all of them. If she could see what to do! If something would show her the way!

Next morning Will ate his breakfast and went out, his manner more normal than it had been of late. He kissed her cheek, and said to her:

"Was I rough last night, kitten? You're pale. Sorry. I left the money in your desk drawer. Use it. It's all for you and the children, anyhow."

"Thanks, Will," she said indifferently, for now she did not care about the money at all. "Do you know anything about Loring and Lillian? We've not seen them for days. I've been spring housecleaning, and haven't even phoned her. I tried to get her just now, and no one answered."

"I think Loring and Pastano are having some trouble," said Will. "I saw Ruby a day or two ago, and he was black in the face about something Loring tried to put over on him. He'll be hard, if he gets turned against your brother-in-law. I'll call Loring at his office today, and see if I can find out what's up. Well, so long. I'm late."

Ernestine was busy with her family and household all morning, but with a sense of troubled foreboding in her heart. She went to the phone two or three times, but could not get Lillian's house nor Loring's office.

"Funny thing Lillian's maid isn't at home," she thought, but no one answered the prolonged ring at the other house. Ernestine went on about her work, and at eleven o'clock, Molly called her to the phone.

"Hello," said Ernestine. It was a woman's voice, crisp, young and businesslike.

"Mrs. Will Todd?"

"Yes."

"This is the Van Hueten Clark Street Savings bank calling. Could you come down here right away?"

"Why—I don't know. Why should I?"

"I'm afraid I can't tell you that. You're to come here for a private conference. I believe it's important."

"Why, yes," said Ernestine. "I can come. But I don't understand. There's not a run on the bank, is there? I've all my savings—"

"Oh, no," said the cheerful voice. "Nothing like that, I assure you. Can you be here about ten minutes of twelve? The doorman will take you to the private office."

"Well," said Ernestine, "it all seems very mysterious, but I'll come. I'll be there at ten to twelve."

"Thank you, Mrs. Todd. And, please, I was to ask you to come by the Clark street car, and leave the car at Ontario street, instead of coming in your own car."

The crisp voice was disconnected. Ernestine put the receiver in place wondering. Well, there was no answer to her questions until she was there.

She left the street car at Ontario street and walked south. The doorman at the bank greeted her with a stiff nod, left his place and walked back through the big downstairs room. Ernestine followed him. He paused at the foot of the wide stairs that led to the balcony.

"The last door, on the left side of the balcony," he said to her in a low voice, and Ernestine went up the stairs, half frightened with this secrecy, walked forward again, toward the street, passed indifferent employees and opened an unmarked door, entered a private office, and closed the door behind her.

Ruby Pastano was standing by the green-curtained windows, looking down into the street through a tiny slit he held open with his finger. He turned to her.

"Ernestine!"

"Mr. Pastano?" She did not know whether she was relieved or more frightened. At least, here was some one familiar.

"Will you shake hands with me?" He came to her, big, sober, non-committal and offered her his hand. Ernestine laid her hand in his big thick palm and noticed, as she did so, how extraordinarily long his fingers were, as he took her hand in both of his.

"I've been wondering, all the way over here, who it was that had sent for me," she said nervously. "I did not expect to see you—I don't know what I expected. I had a dreadful dream last night, and I've been frightened and nervous all day."

"Sit down, won't you?" the voice, silky, soft, as always, had in it a note of gentleness that went to Ernestine's heart, in spite of her formed and set prejudices against Ruby Pastano.

He drew up for her a chair upholstered in red pigskin, and she sat down, upright, ready for fight, on the edge of it. He seated himself before her on the empty desk.

"I didn't want you to come to my office, and I didn't want to go to your home, but I felt that I had to see you, Ernestine," he said gently, "do you believe that I am Will's friend?"

Ernestine felt that the occasion was momentous. She felt herself thrust back from the ordinary conventional judgments of her class and generation to something more fundamental. She answered naturally, honestly:

"Yes," she said, "yes, I do."

"Good," he said. "I've not done many unselfish things in my life, although I've done plenty that were dangerous—but for my own gain. But I'm going to do something for you now. I'm going to give you a chance to do something for somebody else. All last night I couldn't sleep, knowing that the plans that are coming forward today would hurt you. I knew that I must work some change if it were possible. I wanted to take into account the existence of little Ernestine, knowing that I must at least give her her chance."

"What do you mean, Ruby?" she asked, her thoughts turning to Will. How could he be involved with this man? He had never had any contact with Pastano except the free contact of friendship. He had never had a favor from him.

"No," he said, reading her thought, "not Will—but Loring—your sister's husband, Loring Hamilton. Did you know that he is ruined?"

"Loring—ruined? But how?"

"He will tell you, if he is fool enough to talk, that I have ruined him. I tell you that he ruined himself. He's in debt, he's in trouble, and he's under the shadow of an indictment—for bribing witnesses, in federal court—serious business, Ernestine."

"You mean—the grand jury? But how did this happen? Tell me, please."

"I cannot tell you everything. It's a long story, and involved, and besides, it is unwise and unnecessary. I can give you a few facts. A week ago today your brother-in-law was secure. His security was dependent on his obedience. He had placed himself deliberately in a position where he had to do as he was told, in return for all that he had—and wanted. A week ago he decided to take a step that had been in his mind for some time. I knew that it was there. I was expecting it. Loring decided that he would break faith with me, cash in on his knowledge and cut the ties. He was thirsting for the water that he carried, but could not drink."

He paused, and the red of old anger burned in his cheeks.

"I held notes on him as security for business that he transacted through his office—properties I could not afford to have in my name. He thought I would not dare to sell his notes, he having so much information about me. No use going into the ugly details. He woke up too late to find out that his transactions were with me—the company he was dealing with was mine—he sold my property to me. It was I who bought from him what he had no right to sell. I stopped payment on the checks he held, I had his notes, and he was holding—the bag."

"But how could you? That's not right. You couldn't do that."

"Why not?" asked Pastano. "I was cleverer than he. What could he do? What could he say? I called in his notes. Either he had to pay me, or I would sell them to his bank for discount. He put in his stone stock—sound property—and recovered his notes. Then he found all his debts due on the same day. He lost seven-tenths accounts in one afternoon—business taken right out of his office. He sold his car and yesterday he mortgaged his house. And today—unless it's stopped—he's going to be indicted."

Ernestine got to her feet.

"But, Ruby—how can you do this to Loring? He does know things about you—"

"Very little," answered Pastano evenly. "Fragments—nothing whole. Part of this deal—part of that. His own activities will shine much worse in court than his connections with me. Do you think I am fool enough to put myself in jeopardy with a man like Loring?"

Ernestine made a little moan, and he began to speak quickly, vehemently, with a strange sternness and justice in his face.

"He came to me—he sought the connection—he was eager for any work. He offered to do things for me that I wouldn't let him do. He was well paid, and he didn't play the game. His fees were big—business was thrown to him from a dozen directions—inaccessible to him five years ago. He sat where he wanted to sit—in the lap of city politics, and he grew weary of his mistress. He wished to exploit her—desert her. So he schemed and planned. But you cannot get into the whirlpool and then out again—"

Ernestine, looking at him, felt the sucking breath of the vortex. "But what have I to do with this?" she asked. "What can I do for Loring? You haven't told me this without some purpose."

"First let me show you why I can do nothing for him myself—it is easier to start a landslide than to stop it. It was my intention—no, my determination—to ruin him, to have him debarred, disgraced, sent to the penitentiary, if I could. It seemed necessary. Here, all about me, are these young men—lieutenants—gangsters, if you like the newspaper word better. They are my army. We must have loyalty in any army. We must have obedience. Loyalty and obedience, first, because they have confidence in me, that I am wise, that I will take care of them while they stay with me, that I am competent to meet all situations. But if a man is disloyal, all the rest must see what becomes of him. Loyalty, first, because of confidence; second, because of fear. When admiration fails, fear remains."

"But you are not going to ruin Loring now?" she said eagerly. "You have changed your mind—you have some plan?"

"No," he said slowly, "no, not I. I have no plan to save Loring Hamilton. I have no desire to save him. I would not lift my little finger for Loring Hamilton. It is inevitable that he should fall, should be punished. Even if I wanted to do something for him now, I could not. His treachery is known to others as well as to myself. Money is needed. If I should withdraw money from my own private sources, or if I should withdraw money from funds that are available for gifts, when it is necessary, it would be instantly known. No—in the first place, that I don't want to help Loring. If he were my own brother, I would feel that he must follow his course alone. Nor could I help him, even if I liked, but—he looked at her intently so that for a moment it seemed that she was lost, hypnotized by his great dark eyes—"you can help him, if you like, Ernestine."

"Tell me," she whispered. "What can I do?"

He put his hand in his pocket and took out his big silver watch. Laying the flat of his palm upon it, he twisted it, unscrewed the back of the watch and took from between the outer and inner cases a small piece of paper, folded once across. He sat, his dismembered watch in one hand, and the piece of paper in the other, and said to her:

"I know that you have your own standards of honor—I have exposed myself, in this talk, knowing your code. But now, I must ask you if you are capable of secrecy. No one but Will must know of this. He must know."

"I promise," she said at once.

He put the folded paper in her hand, and kept his finger upon it, so that it remained closed.

"There is a name here. This afternoon, within an hour after this bank is closed—before four o'clock, to be exact, twenty thousand dollars, in cash, must be placed in the hands of this person, and the indictment against Loring will be dropped."

Ernestine was very pale. "A bribe?" she said, her throat dry. "But that's—wrong."

He was very gentle.

"Wrong, yes—no doubt. But we are at a place now—where it is the lesser evil, which must be chosen—not right or wrong. A bribe—ugly word. Yes, there is a regular scale of prices for indictments. This money must be spread. It will take twenty thousand dollars to do it. You have the money. I take a great risk upon myself—in this talk, this name, this opportunity, but I wished you to have it."

He beamed upon her now—pleased as a child who has been good and waits for praise. Ernestine was very agitated.

"How do you know I have this money?"

"I am a director in this bank—you have it—here."

"But that money is for Will. I've been saving it for nearly two years. I can't give that money for Loring. It's Will's."

"I'll not pay for Loring," said Pastano sternly, and he shrugged, his face altered, hard. "Why should I? You can—if you won't, he's sunk—that's all."

"No, no," cried Ernestine, "not that—not Will's money. I won't do it, Ruby. I can't. Loring will have to go down in his own wreckage. Why should I pay a bribe for him? Why should I rob Will of his very chance, for Loring? This isn't just money—this is Will's future—his peace, his happiness—this is my marriage—this money."

He was silent. He stared at her. She could feel in him disappointment.

He was disappointed in her! He, monster that he was, dared to judge her!

"You see," she said desperately, "all isn't always going to be a cartoon. He's going to do something else. He hasn't any sense about money. I learned about money, when we were poor, but Will has never learned. He's extravagant, foolish. I found out long ago that if he had fifty cents in his pocket, or fifty dollars, it was all the same to him. And then—I discovered that Will wanted to be an artist, that he wanted to work in colors, that he hated the cats. And I began to save. I've kept up a front on a small amount of money. I spent less than twelve thousand dollars last year, and Will earned thirty thousand. But it's been for Will. I'm not naturally economical, or close, but I did it for Will."

"Perhaps Will would want you to do this—ask him."

"Perhaps he would. It would be like him to throw away his chance for Loring. But Will doesn't know I've got this money. Nobody knows, except the bank clerks. I thought a savings account was a private matter. Will has a studio down near here—if he could study—if he could go to Paris."

"I know," said Pastano. "He rents his workroom from me. I've seen some of his stuff. Well—Loring can go to jail then, for all of me, and if you are subpoenaed into court, to testify about things that happened at Langley lake three summers ago, don't say I didn't warn you."

He sighed. His eyes were sad and tired. The tears sprang down Ernestine's cheeks.

"Don't think I don't appreciate this—I know that you endanger yourself—your very life—by talking to me. I know enough about all this to know what you are doing—it's generous, but, oh, Ruby, it is Will I love—Will, all the time."

"Your sister—" he objected.

"Why should I sacrifice Will for Loring and Lillian?" she said passionately. "It will take me a long time to accumulate this money again. And simply to give it away—to send it out blindly, and not even know where it goes! Loring has always hated Will—has tried to harm him. And now you ask me to give up Will's chance! He can't wait forever. His gift will die, he'll go stale."

"Loring has loved you, Ernestine." She stopped her incoherent speech. She looked at him with dark eyes, and her face grew very pale.

"That time," Pastano said, "when you were ill—when Elaine was born, we would not have found you, if it had not been for Loring."

"But Will found me," she quavered.

"Yes—after Loring had torn the town up—had organized a search—had warned me. Will would still be wandering about Sheridan Park. And after Will found you, what did he do? You might have died there, without proper care. It was Loring's practical energy and ability—his decision and his efficiency which saved you."

He got up and moved about restlessly. He seemed almost to plead with her.

"That's why I couldn't sleep last night. It came to me all the time—he loves our Ernestine, fool and traitor that he is. He would give everything he has—for her. It is her sister, her family, her family name. She is mixed in it—she will be hurt by it. So, this morning, I came to town. I have seen the bank ledger from time to time. I have watched your private fortune growing with much interest, and known, or thought, that Will was ignorant of it. So this morning I came to town, and carefully I have made this possible. And now, you do not see it."

He was putting his watch together as he spoke, but he left the slip of paper in Ernestine's hand.

"It's one o'clock," he said. "The bank closes at three. Suppose you go and talk to Will. A woman ought not take a step like this, anyhow, without talking to her husband."

"I'm not going to give Will's money to Loring," Ernestine said despairingly.

Mr. Pastano opened the door for her, but did not answer her low "good-by."

Ernestine went swiftly down the stairs and out into the brightness of the street.

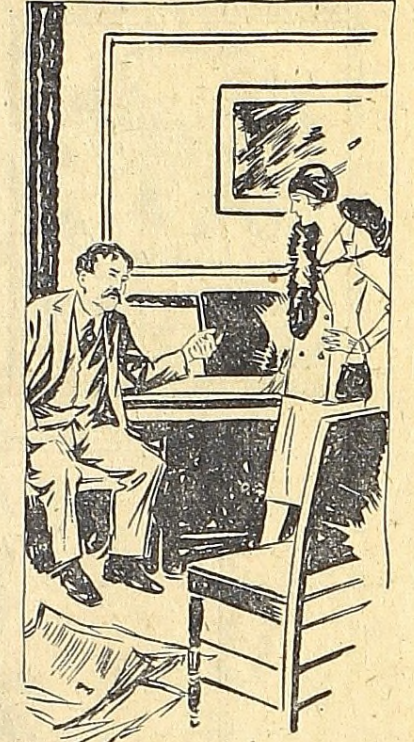

"I'm not going to ask Will," she thought stubbornly. "He'll just tell me to do what Pastano wants. I'm not going to do it."

She ran for a car going north and boarded it. She rode as far as Belmont avenue, jumped up suddenly and got out of the street car. A taxi stood before a drug store across the street. Ernestine ran across through the traffic and got into the taxi.

"Please hurry," she said, and gave him the address of the old office building near the river, where Will led his secret life.

She felt that she could not get to Will soon enough, now she was started. She paid the taxi driver at the door and went quickly into the dim and dusty doorway.

Hosiery of Mixed Colors Fad of Centuries Ago

The bright-colored hose worn in the fourteenth century roused the ire of even Chaucer, who declares that "the wrapping of their hose which are departed of two colors, white and red, white and black, or black and red and white and blue, make the wearers seem as though the Fire of St. Anthony or other such mischance had cankered and consumed one-half of their bodies."

The fashion of wearing two colors, "which rendered uncertain the fellowship of the legs," continued in spite of the ridicule and satire of the poets and chroniclers, until the middle of the sixteenth century.

The long hose or herlots worn by persons of quality at the time were made of the finest cloth or velvet, and there is record of Henry III ordering three pairs for his sister Isabella, which were to be of velvet embroidered with gold. Knitted stockings, or, as they were originally called, stocking hose, were introduced into Britain in the sixteenth century, and those of silk were considered such a luxury that they were thought a present fit for a king, so we find Sir Thomas Gresham presenting a pair of long Spanish silk hose to Edward VI.

Bees and Their Owners
Entomologists hold that there is nothing to the common notion that honey-bees recognize the beekeeper and distinguish him from other individuals. Although some bees hatched late in the fall survive the winter, the average life of a worker bee during the active honey season is only about six weeks, two of which are spent in the hive. It is not likely that a beekeeper would examine a hive frequently enough to be recognized by creatures with such short lives even if they had the ability to distinguish between different human beings. Good beekeepers do not provoke bees so much as others do because they are familiar with their habits and know how to handle them.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Black and Blue Spots
Those black and blue spots we sometimes find on various parts of the body are bruises. They are the most common of all injuries. Sometimes we find them and wonder how we got them. Bruises result when we receive a fall or are struck by a blunt instrument that doesn't break the skin. If the injury is slight no treatment is necessary, but cold compresses will help. In severe bruises apply the cold compresses, elevate the injured part to diminish the pain, then apply witch-hazel or some other soothing lotion. Be sure it is only a bruise and that no bones are broken.—Exchange.

Thunderstorms
The thunderstorm is owing to the rapid vertical convection of air containing a large amount of water vapor. The lower air must, therefore, be rather warm, say 70 degrees F. or over, else it would not carry the requisite amount of water vapor, and the temperature must decrease rather rapidly with increase of height, else there would be but little or no convection. Now, in the summer time the humidity in Oregon and Washington is rather low. Hence thunderstorms generally are improbable. In the winter time, when most of the rains come, the surface commonly is too cool to set up vigorous vertical convection. Hence thunderstorms are not likely. Thunderstorms are not frequent in Oregon and Washington any time of the year. Thunderstorms occur very infrequently in California.

Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

BLACK-AND-WHITE HOLDS SWAY; SHEER VELVET FOR FORMAL WEAR

THE black-and-white note continues to resound throughout the length and breadth of fashion's realm.

Particular emphasis is placed on the black daytime frock with a touch of white fur at neckline and wristlines. The idea works out to perfection when the dress is of sheer and supple black transparent velvet, and the fur is dainty white ermine. Not only is the ermine-touched black velvet gown style convincing, but there is a sprightliness and youthfulness about the combination which appeals to every woman who aspires to appear at her best.

The chic frock illustrated in the foreground is just such a type as the woman "who knows" will choose for her smart afternoon coming and goings. Its becoming neckline is achieved with softly draped white that crepe together with a band of snowy ermine. The same motif of fur and crepe is repeated for the cuffs.

At first glance this charming dress would seem to be styled very simply. In reality it has been put together by means of complex seaming, thus giving it a silhouette of sophisticated mode due to its suavely fitted lines. Which is one of the very interesting things about the better velvet frocks—their intricate fabric manipulation which arrives at simplicity.

Returning to that which we started out to talk about—the vogue for black and white—for one of its most fetching interpretations designers are combining black velvet with white velvet. A styling which lends itself effectively to this alliance is that of seaming a white velvet bodice top to a skirt or lower portion of black. In the picture the model thus fashioned is of a very lovely quality of transparent velvet. The skirt is pleated on adorned the most. Experienced dress-makers and leading couturiers in this "velvet season" have unflinchingly used velvet sans trimming, the texture and the luster of the fabric being in themselves adequately decorative.

In creating the beguiling evening gowns pictured below, the theory that "beauty unadorned is adorned the most," has no doubt been uppermost in the mind of the designers. The center model, for instance, of midnight blue transparent velvet is entirely a matter of artful fabric manipulation. Its three graduated circular tiers are deftly scalloped. The natural waistline with its quaint old-fashioned bodice is belted in and held by a jeweled buckle of sapphires and rhinestones. The necklace which accents the vogue for costume jewelry tuned to the color scheme of the gown, is also of simulated sapphires. The sandals are of the velvet of the dress.

The lovely frocks in the panels at either side in the illustration interpret the statey grace of the new silhouette with consummate art. There is no difficulty in tracing at a glance the sculptural beauty of early Grecian lines in the gown to the left. This costume classic is done in white transparent velvet. Its softly draped neckline, its sectional seamed neplum either side and rises to the bodice in a pointed movement. The frock is as dainty and lightsome as if it were made of chiffon.

For Social Functions.

Than all fabrics lovely for the making of frocks which will attend the dance, grand opera, and all the other functions and festivities which go to make up the list of social activities, there are, perhaps, none lovelier than this season's transparent velvets which, if possible, are more exquisitely sheer than ever.

There is that about the new gowns fashioned of this enchanting material which leads to the conclusion that when unadorned, handsome velvet is its long-limbed skirt with its undulating hemline all reflect the classic lines of ancient Greece. The décolletage is cut to the waist at the back.

Transparent velvet in the fashionable perveche blue is used for the gown to the right. It has that air of sophisticated simplicity which speaks a patrician mode. A side panel is knotted at the waist, the drapery maintained over the shoulder and again knotted at the back waistline.

One of the problems left to the individual to solve is whether to choose stunning black, lovely white or an enchanting color for the evening gown.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Royal Riddle

ABOUT no other ruler have there ever been asked so many and such pointed questions as about Elizabeth, queen of England. Was she a man? Was she really the daughter of Henry VIII? Was she dark or fair? Was she a murderess? Was she really the "Virgin Queen" or was she a mother?

All these and scores of other queries have come up from time to time, and, owing to the paucity of authentic information from contemporary historians and the veil of reticence which appears to cloak even the frank narratives of the Elizabethan era, it is extremely difficult to answer any of them authoritatively. Even the matter of the parentage of the queen is still largely one of conjecture and her parentage appears to be open to more than a shadow of doubt. But when historians begin to comment upon the relations between the queen and certain of her courtiers they find themselves lost in a maze of contradictory statements, a veritable labyrinth of lies.

It has been affirmed with some degree of authenticity that a child was born to the queen by the earl of Essex at Kenilworth castle and a writer in the British "Notes and Queries" during the last century states: "It is a tradition in the family with which I am connected that Queen Elizabeth had a son who was sent to Ireland and placed under the care of the earl of Ormonde, a distant relative of 'Good Queen Bess.' Papers are said to exist in the family which prove this statement."

Another story has it that the child was the son of Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, and that documents in the state paper office of the British government contain evidence of a conclusive nature about this, and, on October 9, 1572, Sir Edward Dyer wrote to Sir Christopher Haller a letter which has been carefully hidden from the public but upon which a leading historian comments in the following words:

"It is not lightly, nor upon slight grounds, that the character of any woman should be suspected, much less when that woman was one of the most powerful monarchs that ever swayed the English scepter. Notwithstanding all the explanations of historians and the unauthenticated stories so commonly promulgated against Elizabeth, the writer's opinion was entirely against the justice of the accusations, but the letter in question has produced a conviction of a different nature. This important conclusion, if just, affords a key to many acts of Elizabeth's life which have hitherto been irreconcilable with the magnanimity which she sometimes displayed."

An entry in the manuscript of a free school of Shrewsbury tells of a certain son of the earl of Leicester and Queen Elizabeth and there is a tradition that this mysterious son was brought up secretly at the free school, but what became of him is not known nor is it easy to account for this curious entry in the parish church book.

"The Tourist's Illustrated Hand Book of Ireland" refers to the same matter by saying: "One of the interesting features pointed out in the burial ground of the parish chapel of Carrick-on-Suir is the grave of Thomas Butler, the natural son of her maiden majesty, Queen Elizabeth," and Burke's Peerage gives an extract from the "Dictionnaire de la Noblesse," published in Paris in 1771, detailing the tradition that Thomas Butler, the tenth earl of Ormonde, and Queen Elizabeth were the parents of Piers Fitzthomas Butler, father of Sir Edward Butler who was created Viscount Galmoye in 1646.

Bearing on this same phase of the affair, a writer of the time calls attention to the fact that the earl of Ormonde was high in the favor of his royal mistress and that "he was a very comely and graceful personage and of a dark complexion which made the Irish give him the sobriquet of 'Duff' and gave occasion to her majesty's calling him her 'black husband.'"

On the other hand, there are quite as many and apparently as authentic statements to the effect that Elizabeth was entitled to be called the "Virgin Queen"—so that, in all justice, it must be admitted that the question of her maternity must at least be ranked among the mysteries which surrounded so many of the rulers of her time.

Stirring

They were undecided as to where they should go.

"Let's run along to the new cafe for a cup of tea," said George to his young lady.

"No, George," she replied. "I don't like the place—they never provide teaspoons there."

"I didn't know that," he admitted.

"Why don't they?"

"Well, I suppose it's because they consider the music so stirring that spoons are not needed," was the reply.—Weekly Scotsman.

Barber (having sold bottle of hair oil to customer)—Excuse me, sir, do you happen to play billiards?

Customer—Yes, why?

Barber—Then I must warn you, sir, after using this lotion to be sure and wash your hands before so much as touching a billiard ball.—London Opinion.

Rat-Catching Snake

Valued by Farmer

That snakes come in handy is evident from an experience that recently befell Sergt. William Mason of the Fifteenth district, Paul and Ruan streets, Frankford. Sergeant Mason, who is a noted automobile traveler, was in Maryland and stopped at the home of a farmer friend. The farmer took his visitor around the buildings and they were leaning against the corn crib when the police sergeant noticed a large snake, black as the ace of spades and about six feet long, upon a bench that was in a corner where the grain was kept. "Great patrol wagons, look at that!" Mason exclaimed, pointing to the reptile, which was evidently taking a snooze in the warm sun. "Oh, that's Bob," the farmer replied. "He's very useful here, for he catches every rat that comes around. I wouldn't in all the world have anything happen to Bob." When he had spoken the husbandman went into the corn crib and, taking a sugar-goodie out of his pocket, placed it in the snake's half-open mouth. The sweet stuff must have been appreciated by Mr. Snake, for he wriggled his tail in evident enjoyment, shot out his fangs a couple of times and then went fast asleep again. As the farmer pointed out, though, Bob was sleeping with one eye open. With one optic he was watching for rats.—Philadelphia Record.

Grain Turned to Charcoal

Samples of grain found by the Chicago Field museum-Oxford university expedition to Mesopotamia in 1928, in the ruins of the buried city of Kish, "the first city founded after the flood," have been declared by experts of the United States Department of Agriculture to be barley.

Three jars of grain were found in two ancient buildings that had been buried for thousands of years below the original surface.

One building was in a stratum just above the level where traces of a flood were discovered, which, according to archeological evidence, occurred about 3200 B. C. The grain is now practically pure charcoal.—New York Times.

During the past week the students of the high school, with the co-operation of the Crowell Publishing company, having been obtaining subscriptions, either new or old. The students hope to obtain enough money so they can buy basketball suits, both for the boys and the girls. It is an annual affair. Last year the school made $45 during the Educational Salesmanship Week, as it is called. There are rewards given the student who sells two or more subscriptions for the Crowell Publishing company. The rate for a subscription to any of their publications is extremely low this year, and the prizes that they offer to the salesmen are of very high quality—so really the pupils have an incentive.

A final selection of the debaters that are to handle the burden of work on the affirmative side of the National Chain Store question are: Alice Johnson, first speaker; Ellen Rickert, second speaker; Alfred Gurley, third speaker. The alternative speaker for the affirmative is Sylvia Weier, who is also assistant debating coach. Much credit is due her for the way in which she is aiding the other speakers. A practice debate with a group selected from those who were out for debating was held Tuesday afternoon. Everything seemed to go along all right. We are hopeful of winning our first debate.

Those who have survived the first cut in the basketball squad are: St. Martin, Wilson, Leitz, Davis, Carpenter, Klump, Kasischeke, Woods, McKay Schanbeck, Klenow, Durant, Alverson, Bigelow, Doak and R. St. Martin. The squad has been working hard in preparation for its first game, which is with the alumni Friday, November 14. The Independents also have a game scheduled with Oscoda Independents for the same evening. Everyone is anxious to start the season off in great fashion. The squad has been practicing three days a week. Since it would be impossible to turn out a winning team with a crew of 30 men, it was necessary to make the cut. We hope those who were eliminated will not lose interest, but that they will be out next season again. Those who were cut from the squad will still have two practices a week, from 6:30 to 7:00 on Mondays and Wednesdays. "Dewey" Durant is acting as their coach.
