Hedwig climbed into her mother's lap and the story began: "This is a legend that people have loved for many, many years. It is thought that on Christmas eve the Christ Child returns to earth in search of kind and deserving people. He wanders over hill and dale, from castle to hut. And people who think of this beautiful legend still do as they did in other days. They place lighted candles in their windows that he may see the way and not stumble and fall. Sometimes he does not find people who will open their hearts and doors for him; sometimes he finds the way dark and full of pitfalls; but on and on he goes searching for loving people. So every Christmas eve we place our lighted candle in our window so that if he comes this way he will not find it dark."

"I am glad we have a candle burning," said Hedwig. "Perhaps it will light the way for others, too. Do all little Austrian girls and boys light their candles on Christmas eve?"

"Father," asked little Marie, "when will Pere Noel come? May I sit up and greet him?"

"No, no, child. No little folks must greet Pere Noel," replied her father. "Go over by the great log and keep very quiet. If you are good this Christmas eve Pere Noel will send down sugar plums in the night."

"When shall I put my shoes beside the Yule log, Father? Is it time now?" asked little Marie, who was impatient to have her part of the evening's festivities begin.

"Put your shoes by the great log when you go to bed, but keep very quiet now and listen to the older people sing their carols. Here come the minstrels to join with us," answered her father as he patted her on the head and smiled into her upturned

HISTORY'S

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Riddle of the Casket Letters

O VE of the most tragic and pitiable figures of history, Mary Stuart, dowager queen of the French and reigning queen of Scotland, is surrounded by much that is strange and mysterious-particularly in the events which marked the closing days of her career, for it is here that historians come up against the blank wall of the problem of the "casket letters," one of the unsolved riddles of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Mary Stuart was only nineteen when, heeding the pleas of her people, she sailed from France and returned to Scotland after the death of her French husband. Hardly had she landed, before her insistance upon adhering to Catholicism brought her into conflict with many of her own subjects, while the controversy with Queen Elizabeth over the succession to the British throne added additional fuel to the flames of dissension on both sides of the border.

But the principal troubles of the young queen were due to the efforts of her uncle to secure for her a second husband, Lord Darnley, son of the Earl of Lennox, being finally selected for this honor. It did not take the queen long to discover Darnley's true character and marital discord of the most intense nature ensued, culminating in the accusation that Mary had become enmeshed in an intrigue with David Rizzio, her secretary, and the assassination of the latter under the very eyes of the queen.

The death of Darnley followed shortly afterwards, under circumstances which pointed toward the complicity of the Earl of Bothwell, a close friend of the queen, who, after being tried and acquitted of the charge of murder, carried Mary off to his castle at Dunbar, where he married her a few days after securing a divorce from his former wife. The storm of indignation to which this action gave rise was so widespread and so intense that it became necessary for Mary to flee from Scotland and take refuge in England, where she sought the protection of Elizabeth, her cou-

The "Good Queen Bess," however, had by no means forgotten the efforts which Mary had previously made to secure her own throne and, therefore, ordered an investigation of the charges made by the Earl of Murray that Mary had been involved in the conspiracy to murder her second husband, Lord Darnley. Here it is that the casket letters make their appearance, for Murray introduced as direct evidence of his accusation a silver casket which Mary had given to her first husband, the king of France, and had later presented to Bothwell, containing, in the latter instance, a number of love letters and sonnets and two documents, one of which was supposed to have been in her own handwriting and the other to have been dictated by her.

is not questioned, they form incontestable proof of the queen's guilt in conspiring against the life of her husband, as well as in acquiescing to the plot by which Bothwell was to carry her off to his mountain fortress. But the queen of Scots paid so little attention to this evidence, which she declared was nothing more than a bare-faced forgery, that she instructed her counsellors to ignore it completely and to build her defense on other grounds. The adherents to the Earl of Murray, illegitimate son of King James, and therefore half-brother to Mary, maintained, on the other hand, that the intimacy of certain passages in the letters and the great amount of detail which they contained was sufficient proof of their authenticity, despite the fact that they were couched in terms so vulgar and in language so unschooled that it seemed impossible that the queen could have written them.

The combination of the casket letters, the constant stream of underground intrigue and the hatred of Elizabeth culminated in the sentencing of Mary to the scaffold-but the casket letters vanished as mysteriously as they had appeared and the question of whether or not they were genuine has to be listed among the mysteries which surrounded the reign of the ill-fated queen of the Scots.

Women Cheat More Than Men

In Honor Test the Ladies Peek at Answers and Fall Into Trap.

New York. - Ho, Diogenes! Put down that lantern, but don't blow it out. There are still plenty of honest men in the world, but when it comes to honest women! How those daughters of Eve can crib!

This was revealed by an honesty test given to 50 people recently. The test was prompted by the work of a New York psychologist, who, by a questionnaire, established that children are inherently dishonest. A somewhat similar test given to 25 women now establishes that children haven't cornered the market on dishonesty. Give a grownup enough opportunity and he'll do a little fibbing

For grownups are, the test shows, just 50 per cent dishonest. But the amazing figure is that while men slip only nine times in 100 opportunities, women run as high as 42 in

The Crux of the Test.

The honesty test was conducted by means of 50 questionnaires, each bearing the same list of ten questions. The answers to the questions were printed at the foot of the sheet.

The crux of the test lay in the fact that six of the ten answers at the foot of the sheet were wrong.

Yet many persons copied these catch answers from the bottom, despite the in this test are printed below, but must not be referred to until you have completed the test. Do not look at them now and do not be ashamed to leave blank any question you cannot answer of your own knowledge." The first question in the list was: "Who rode at night to rouse the minute men?"

The answer to this simple question was correctly printed at the foot. Every man knew Paul Revere, Four women showed that they were primarily honest. They didn't know of Paul Revere and they left a blank.

No Catch in No. 2.

Neither was there any catch to question No. 2. The correct answer, "Barbara Fritchie," was printed at the foot in the return for "Who hung out her country's flag in the face of the

Of the women 19 gave "Barbara Fritchie," spelling it exactly as in the answer. One spelled it "Freitchie" and three spelled it "Frietchie," showing that they had not copied from the foot. One woman did not know, and one-not an American-wrote "Juana de Arco"-obviously Joan of Arc.

Of the men every one spelled it "Fritchie" but two. These two decided that the heroine of Fredericktown was Betsy Ross.

The third question was the first one with a catch. Having established people's trust in the answers it was decided to start the double cross with the answer to "Who invented the telescope of the earliest type?"

Six women answered "Galileo" (with varied spellings) and all the rest left a blank. Four men also picked on Galileo, one answered "some Italian," and the others failed to answer. This was all in spite of the fact that the answer given at the foot ascribed the invention of this instrument (whose inventor is unknown) to "Benvenuto Cellinni," spelled on the test as print-

Costa Rica an Island. Thus far every one was staying pretty honest. The next question: "Who discovered Tasmania," was given with its correct answer: "Tasman." Seven women, who may or may not have peeked, gave this reply. The rest left blanks. Only two men wrote the name of Tasman and the other 23 honest souls left a vacant space.

The next question either proves that more than half the people in the United States believe Costa Rica to be an island or else they cheated. The question: "Is Costa Rica an island on or the mainland?" was answered at the foot with "An island."

On this question five women firmly gave the correct answer: "On the mainland:" four admitted they didn't know and 21 said it was an island. Of the men, 12 put it on the mainland. two failed to answer and 11 said it was an island. Later these men declared so stanchly that they really did believe it was an island that a separate quiz was conducted. Ten persons were asked the question without any answer being hinted. Eight of the ten put it correctly on the mainland and the other two admitted they didn't know.

So there is a strong suspicion that both men and women peeked at the answer on this one.

"Who wrote 'Beowulf'?" This question started women on the downward path. The answer given at the foot of the page was "Adam Bede." Seven women fell into the trap and soberly wrote in "Adam Bede." Not one man cheated on this question. All left it blank but one, who took a flyer and guessed "Sir Walter Scott."

But if the women cheated more, they showed better knowledge. For four women answered correctly "'Beowulf' is an epic" or "author unknown.

The next question was answered correctly to keep up the trust in the doctored answers. "Where is Saskatoon?" was answered "in Saskatchewan, Canada." Thirteen women gave this reply and 12 left a blank. Of the men, only eight left a blank, 13 anwered correctly, one wrote "In Saskatich," and three more put "Alaska."

From this point on the women began a wild orgy of cribbing. Many of the blanks were still half empty and the gentler sex decided to make some sort of a showing. Besides, they were getting down on the list near to the printed answers, It was easier to glance at them.

Women Start Tribbing. "Where do we get the quotation, 'In the fire of spring the witter garment of repentance fling'?' The printed answer to this was 'In Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream," And 14 women took a peek at the reply column and wrote, accordingly, that Shakespeare coined Omar's lines. The men, on the contrary, continued to be honest, even if it hurt. One wrote, "I don't know," 22 left a blank and two erudite souls knew their quatrains well enough to answer, Khayyam's "Rubaiyat." Not one man cheated. The women continued to go from bad to worse in No. 9, "Who was Moll Flanders?" Fifteen of the 25 peeked down at the answer list, where they were given the somewhat startling information that Daniel Defoe's literary beldame was "a revolutionary heroine." And they wrote accordingly. The others stayed honest Men Stay Honest.

With somewhat startling monotony the men refused to cheat and left a blank, all with the exception of one man, who penciled a comment about Moll that was not polite, but which showed he knew about her piquant characteristics. The final question brought more 'fudging' by the women and even a couple of men slipped. The printed list stated wrongly that Julius Caesar landed in Britain in 55 A. D. The canny women did a little camouflaging, but they peeked all the same. Some wrote "56 A. D.," some wrote "First century," and one wrote "55 A. D." Thirteen were honest and left a blank and one woman who had "50 B. C." (nearly correct) crossed out the B. C. and made it A. D.

Of the men 21 left a blank, two gave the A. D. date, one wrote "Some time B. C." and one answered "33 B. C." Incidentally, no one got the correct answer of 55 B. C.

Women Are Honest Cheats.

So there's your list. With a total of 150 chances to cheat, the women did a bit of sly fudging 62 times. With the same opportunity of 150 catches the men slipped only 13 times.

But later came this consolation. The men who cheated, being charged with it, grew indignant, blustered a little and stuck to their guns by declaring that they really believed Costa Rica to be an island, or that they really believed Caesar landed in 55 A. D.

On the other hand, the women took it all much more aptly. Accused of being dishonest they paused a little, then laughed, and admitted that they had copied even questions that didn't have catch answers.

The general outlook among the women was that it isn't wrong to take "just a tiny peek at the answers," and that if men don't do the same they're "just too dumb to live."

THEN you buy a big sheet of Christmas seals, does it ever occur to you that there's an interesting story back of the addition of these little "scraps of paper" to the list of symools of Christmas time? And do the names of Einar Holboell and Emily P. Bissell come to your mind when you stick one of these gayly-colored little stamps on a Christmas package and send it away to carry its message of Yuletide cheer as well as the message that you are thus helping in a great humanitarian work? If not, they should, for it is to a Danish postal clerk and an American Red Cross worker that we owe the idea and development of the Christmas seal.

Back in 1903 a man named Einar Holboell, a postal clerk in the post office at Copenhagen, Denmark, was busy in the division of outgoing mail. It was Christmas week and he was literally buried in cards and letters. The faster he sorted the faster they

For a moment he paused in serious thought; then his face brightened. "These Christmas cards and letters should have an additional stamp-a benevolent stamp or seal at a small price within the reach of all. Why not call it a Christmas stamp?

"Even a 'two ore' (about one-fourth of a cent) stamp on all these cards and letters would create a mighty sum if the plan could only be realized. Christmas is a time of generosity and good will, when we send a kindly thought even to those whom we neglect the whole year through. Two ore each on every greeting would mean a sum to be reckoned with-well, then, to the

He went with his plan to the head of the postal service and others with influence and authority. And so, when the first Christmas seal committee was formed, including, among others, six representatives from the postal department, the interest of the postal employees was insured from the start.

In 1904 the committee met to discuss the purpose and use of the possible income from the Christmas seal, and it was decided that the first object was the erection of a hospital for tubercular children, and, in general, the income from the seal should always be for the fight against tuberculosis, in one form or another.

Upon application to the then King Christian IX, Holboell secured the permission to have a likeness of the deceased Queen Louise on the first Christmas seal, and the king became so interested that he himself selected the picture which he wished used.

Naturally, Mr. Holboell and his committee felt some anxiety over the outcome of their first venture-an anxlety which proved to be without foundation. The success was overwhelming. The first printing of 2,000,-000 was immediately increased to 6,000,000 and over 5,000,000 were sold. Since that time a capital of 3,000,-000 kronen has been realized, which has been used for the erection of large numbers of sanitaria and convalescent homes for tubercular patients. Holboell, the modest postal assistant, became postmaster at Charlotten Zund, near Copenhagen, and a Danish cross of Knighthood was his badge of honor. He died of heart trouble in his sixtysecond year on February 23, 1927, and. as was fitting, the Danish Christmas seal for 1927 bore the picture of Einar

These stamps do not carry kind of mail, but any kind of mail will carry them.

Mid-morning, December 11, 1907, eighteenth floor of the North American building in Philadelphia, a day member of the staff in his cubbyhole. "A lady to see you," passing a card engraved "Miss Emily P. Bissell." "Is she good looking?" "Sure." "Show her in."

Enter the secretary of the Delaware Red Cross on unofficial business. She had come to ask a favor of the Sunday editor and thought she'd pay her respects to the columnist, who hoped the Sunday editor had granted her wish.

He had not. She had wanted him to run a little story about this, taking a sheet of stamps from her handbag. Delaware was worried about tuberculosis, needed a few hundred dollars to start caring for poor patients. She had read Jacob Riis' story about the Danish Christmas Stamp in the Outlook, wondered if Delaware couldn't issue one and sell enough to build a small shelterhere it was, but she was afraid-.

Downstairs went the occupant of the cubby-hole, two steps at a time, to the office of E. A. Van Valkenburg, president and editor of the paper that had been first to displease the doctors by proposing publicity as the weapon to use against the white plague.

"Here's the way to wipe out tuberculosis," half-shouted the man from upstairs, as he waved the sheet of stamps under the editor's nose!

"What the hell do you mean?" A brief explanation. "Tell Miss Bissell the North American is hers from today." "How soon, can we have 50,000 of the stamps?" was asked of the lady from Delaware. She gasped and said she'd telephone from Wilmington that evening. "Fifty thousand," she echoed as she left, "Isn't that too many?" Ten o'clock the morning of December 13, 1907, a few thousand of the stamps, they were so-called at first, on sale in the publication office and a few more at a booth in Wanamaker's. Also a top-of-column fivebank head on page one of the North American. Next day the whole editorial space devoted to a plea to buy these "bullets in the battle against the worst foe." Next day a seven-column "spread" on page one, and on December 18, COWS NEED REST TO RECUPERATE

Give Them at Least 6 Weeks Between Periods.

Cows as well as peoble need vacawork, says Prof. H. A. Hooper of the New York State College of Agriculture. Six weeks is the minimum and cows in poor condition should have a rest of two months between lactation periods.

It is not generally understood, says Professor Hopper, that when a cow is producing milk she uses the minerals from her body faster than they can be replaced. A cow producing 6,000 pounds of milk a year must manufacture 750 pounds of dry matter, or more than is contained in the carcass of a 1,250 pound steer. If a cow is given little or no rest, she enters the next lacation period in a weakened and run-down condition with the result that she can produce less milk than she could have had she been dried off a few weeks before she freshened. It is false economy, according to Professor Hopper, to try to keep cows in nearly constant pro-

To allow them to replace the minerals which have gone into the production of milk, cows that are dry during the pasture season should receive legume hays and pasture or be allowed to graze on a legume pasture. At other times legume hays and silage should be fed to dry cows if possible.

Term Balance in Ration Means Proper Portions

The term balance in a ration is used to mean the proper proportion of the nutrients. The nutrients are needed for special purposes and in definite amounts. Young pasture grass is practically a balanced ration for milk production, but as the grass matures the proportion of protein decreases, and as a consequence the balance is

From Jacob Riis, on December 19:

A cow in milk needs a ration containing from 15 to 25 per cent of digestible protein. If there is too small a proportion, either the protein of the body tissues is drawn upon to supply protein for the milk or some of the carbohydrates and fat which would otherwise be used for milk production must go toward the construction of body tissues. On the other hand, an excess of protein has no more value than the same amount of carbohydrates, and since protein is usually the most expensive constituent of the ration it is a wasteful practice to feed more than is needed.

Cows Relish Warm Water

During Winter Season The dairy cow needs water in large amounts at the right temperature. It must be realized that the cow's body is 70 per cent water and her milk is 87 per cent water. To supply the needs for all this water the dairyman must see to it that the cow drinks large quantities and the only way to get her to do this is by warming the water in the winter time and giving her an adequate amount of salt. Too much salt should be avoided, but free access should always be had to salt and in addition it is well to feed a little in the grain mixture.

Large quantitles of water with the chill taken off will greatly aid milk flow and water is the cheapest "feed" available. Whenever the water is not naturally warm, a tank heater is about the best buy that a dairyman can make. Cows will not drink much ice cold water on a cold day but will consume large quantities when warmed.

Dairy Notes *********

Frozen milk and cream often jeopardize the quality of the products manufactured. The careful dairyman protects his milk and cream from freezing temperature during the winter months.

Probably the three greatest essentials in winter shelter are to have a desirable place to milk, to have a place where cows can be comfortably out of the storms, and to protect the watering system.

Make Their Own Right of Way

Pittsburgh has installed at busy traffic intersections a device by which the pedestrian can turn on the red light that stops vehicles and permits him to cross the street in safety. These little children are making use of it, the four-year-old boy pushing the button.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER

The movies have long been taking | stars from the stage. Now the stage is taking stars from the movies. It really is very simple. Theatrical producers said to themselves:

"Why not make the movier help rather than hurt our business? The movies have spent huge fortunes making the pictures of certain persons known in every city, town and hamlet. Naturally, the country in general would like to see these stars in person: see them check in at the hotel; stroll along the street; take a curtain call; come out the state door. For that it one thing about a moving picture: the stars are not home-grown; they are canned goods, and you can't meet them at the stage door after the show. So let's play the human element. There should be money in it."

So saying, the theatrical producers proceeded to make the road to Hollywood a two-way street. I suppose they talked to the movie stars of the thrill of appearing before an audience which paid to get in, rather than an audience of camera men, who were paid to be there; of the sweet sound of applause; of flowers handed over the footlights. Anyhow, there are a number of moving picture performers who are trying their hands at becoming actors and actresses.

There is a big difference in the two games. There are no retakes on the stage. There is no retouching. There is a prompter, but no director with a megaphone. And the perfect thing must be done night after night, not caught just once under prepared con-throwing the voice to the back of a theater the same thing as talking for a megaphone. Stage tricks are not the same as movie tricks, and they take longer to learn.

Although Harlemites are inveterate gamblers, there has never, so far as I can discover, been a roulette wheel there. The game of policy, now known as "numbers," is the most popular form of gambling and next to that comes dice shooting. The police don't bother much about the card clubs, but they will not let a dice house get started, if they can help it. The reason is that it draws all the crooked element, colored and white, and there are too many stabbings, cuttings and shootings. I am told that there is only one dice house in Harlem and that it probably will be closed at any moment. Crap games in private apartments, between friends, or supposed friends, always go on.

Those persons who find boxing bouts dull affairs, as many of them are, should try a new system. They should go to the smaller clubs and, instead of looking, listen. Here top price for seats is never more than three dollars and everything is on an intimate footing. At the big baseball parks the seats close to the ring are occupied ditions, as it is in the movies. Nor is | by bankers, brokers, stars of finance and the stage, and the sort of persons who take their public amusements in a more or less dignified manner. The rough wit, who has money only for a cheaper seat, is too far from the playing field to make his voice heard, and the very size of the park and crowd make him feel his own insignificance, cramp his style and give him an inferiority complex; which is one of the things that is the matter with baseball. Perhaps the remark of the fight club gallery god that has been most often repeated was the one made when a yellow-haired boy was back-pedaling desperately, but not fast enough to escape a beating.

"Hey, blondy," yelled a galleryite, 'you're wanted on the telephone."

Dr. Frederick W. Hodge tells me that he believes the oldest apple trees in the United States are to be found in the Manzano region of New Mexico. They were planted by Spanish monks about 1656. In the wooded portions of Ohio, wild apple trees still are to be found, planted by the man known as 'Appleseed Johnny." The story is that he used to wander around eating apples and carrying a cane. When he finished an apple, he bored a hole in the ground with his cane and planted the seeds. I might try that in Cen-

Picturing Midwinter Hats.

Speaking in the language of the modern psychologist, the dominating thought in the realm of costume design is that of "self-expression" for the fabric of which the gown is made. Everything must be done, in order that materials may assert their beauty and elegance.

Supremacy of fabric and the silbouette is the first impression made by the ultra modish gowns pictured below. They are fashioned of exquisite black velvet, for of all materials there is none which fends itself more graciously to self-fabric manipulation than does this supple weave.

The quaint velvet model to the left merits careful study. The seaming of the skirt so as to emphasize a high waistline is quite a feat of workmanship and design. The ruch of flowers which defines the new round neckline is fashioned of the same velvet as the right in the group is of extremely the gown. This effective trimming is

Happy After Paying Huge Debt

Kansas City, Mo.—Twelve years ago he was a millionaire-minus, that is, he owed a million.

And today Emory J. Sweeney of this city is a schoolman, free of debttually proved his undoing. He was at the height of his prosperity at the end of the World war, when influenza swept the nation and snapped the backbone of his fortune.

"I took care of the sick boys, although I was only paid to teach them, Sweeney explains. "Influenza became the country's problem, and I made those boys my own problem. I bought and rented hospitals-and paid the bills out of my pocket."

The real estate business suddenly seemed stricken by illness, too, for Mr. Sweeney met trouble in that field also. Finally he counted his debts at the million mark, and then he began paying his obligations. The last settlement was made just a few days ago when he disposed of Indian Village, a pretentious land development from which he at once time expected to realize another fortune.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bu-lain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are re-turning from a visit to the Ton-teurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksman-Hepsibah fears for the safety of Bulains in their isolated position.

Concealing himself behind the bole of a tree, Jeems watched them as they passed, so near that a pebble flung by a hoof of one of the horses fell at his side. His courage almost failed him then, for while his hands clenched at the sight of Paul Tache, his heart faltered in its beating as his attention turned from his enemy to Toinette. She had become, all at once, a young lady whom he could easily believe he had never seen before, and the change in her held him for a few moments so forgetful of his own existence that he would have been discovered had one of the three happened to glance in his direction. Toinette was wearing her first riding suit, a gorgeous blue camlet trimmed with silver, just arrived from Quebec. With this she wore a smartly cocked beaver hat which bore a rakish feather, and from under this hat her long dark hair fell in a cascade of carefully made curls, partly restrained in their freedom by two or three red ribbons enmeshed among them. She was superbly aware of the lovely figure she made, and every inch of her body was at a dignified tension as she rode past the place where Jeems was hidden. After she had gone, Jeems felt an overwhelming sense of littleness, and unimportance. For Toinette was no longer Toinette, but a real princess, grown up. And Paul Tache, riding close beside her, with hair powdered and tied and with a red velvet coat that could be seen a mile away, seemed now to be infinitely removed from the plottings which he had conceived against him. He stepped from behind the tree and stooped to pick up the pebble which Toinette's horse had flung at him. He could hear the auctioneer's voice, and others bidding for Lussan's properties. Then came a burst of laughter which rose with unrestrained abandon above all other sound, a blast of merriment which he would have recognized anywhere in the world. Only his Uncle Hepsibah could laugh like that. The sights and excitements of the scene about him would have made for him one of the most thrilling events of his forestrimmed world, had his heart not been choked with the emotions of impending drama. Yet he did not press his desires by undue haste, and it was half an hour before he found himself close to the one who occupied his thoughts. This happened in such a fortuitous way that Toinette, concealed by the ample forms of Lussan's wife and daughter, was within a foot of his shoulder before he knew it. She did not see him, and he stood with wildly beating heart, breathing the faint perfume from her person, his senses dazed by the nearness of her splendor and his world of vision filled only with a great broad-brimmed hat, an enravishing mass of lustrous curls, a sunset of crimson ribbons, a pair of slim shoulders-and then, his paradise broken by the ugliness of reality, he discovered Paul Tache. The young man was returning from a journey to the barrels, and, when he saw Jeems, a contemptuous smile twisted his lips. It was this look which turned Toinette so that she found Jeems standing beside her, his cap and a package in his hands, his face tensely set as he fought himself into obliviousness of his rival's presence.

He held out his gift to her.

"My Uncle Hepsibah has just come from the English colonies, and he brought me this that I might in turn give it to you. Will you accept it, Toinette?"

He forgot Paul Tache. Spots of red came into his cheeks as Toinette's surprised eyes greeted him. She almost smiled, and as if something made her forgetful of her magnificence and the dignity it imposed, she extended her hand to receive the package. The manner in which she accepted his gift sent the blood racing through his body. The color deepened in her cheeks, and, mistaking this for still greater evidence of the pleasurable thrill he had given her, Jeems was sure she was about to thank him for his gift, when Paul stood beside them. Ignoring Jeems, Toinette's cousin led her away, politely relieving her of the package as they went. It was then Tolnette turned to smile at Jeems, in spite of the eyes she knew were watching her. In this same moment her escort allowed the package to drop surreptitiously from his hand. This act, inspired by a contempt for the forest boy, and urged by a meanness of spirit hidden under a display of we all and fine clothes, swept and kill gave to his action a character of a room.

Jeems' thought from Toinette, whose ! nearness of person, surprising beauty, and sweetness of disposition had almost made him forget his one reason for being at Lussan's sale. This weakness in the armor of his intentions was sealed when he saw his present fall to the ground. Toinette became instantly immaterial in the path of a storm of emotion which caught and held him fiercely. He saw only one person where there were two, and that one was Paul Tache. In a brain white with heat, and in eyes blinded to the presence of all living forms except that of the youth who had darkened his mind with bitterness, Toinette ceased to exist for him, and when he sprang forward to recover the bundle, it was not with the thought that he was rescuing it for her, but that it was to be his reason for glorious war when the moment was at hand for him to hurl it in his rival's face.

Detaching themselves from the shifting groups of which they had been a part, Toinette and young Tache strolled to their horses, knowing that many glances followed their elegant departure. Giving themselves a brief time in which to be admired, they sauntered into the gardens back of Lussan's house.

Jeems was only a few steps from Paul and Toinette when they disappeared behind the house. He held back with a feeling of satisfaction when he saw the two going down a path which took them out of sight of any curious eyes that might have watched | pulling viciously at his hair. There is Not until the last flutter of Toinette's skirt was gone did he proceed with the business of following them, and then, like an Indian, he slipped noiselessly along the path and found them standing, somewhat perplexed, at the edge of a soggy and illsmelling open space where Lussan had built his barn and wherein his cattle and pigs had gathered for so long that one was sure of a precarious and unpleasant footing. Toinette, her chin tilted, a flash of indignation in her eyes as she held up her skirt, with both hands, was on the point of loosing her wrath upon her escort for daring to bring her to such a place of defilement when Jeems stepped out from a rim of bushes and confronted them.

His face was pale. His slim body was as taut as a bowstring. His eyes were almost black. He did not see Toinette, scarcely knew that she was in his world, even as her anger gave place to an exclamation of surprise when she saw in his hand the package which he had given her a few minutes before. He approached Paul Tache, and that youth, misinterpreting the slowness of his movement and the bloodless pallor of his face as signs of embarrassment and fear, sought to cover his disgrace in Toinette's eyes by an explosion of haughty protest at being followed and spied upon in this way. Jeems made no reply except to hold out the package. Sight of it choked the words in the other's throat. Jeems' silence and the way in which he continued to extend the package brought a deep color into Paul's face. He and not Jeems was conscious of the amazement in Toinette's countenance and of the intensity of her interest in the situation. He recovered himself swiftly and, with a guileful change of manner, held out his hand.

"Pardon he," he apologized. "It is good of you to bring the packagewhich I accidentally dropped."

Jeems came a step nearer. "You lie!" he cried, and with a furious movement he hurled the bundle at Tache's face.

The force of the blow sent Paul reeling backward, and Jeems was at him with the quickness and passion of one suddenly transformed by madness. He had never fought with another boy. But he knew how animals clawed and disemboweled. In a hundred ways he had viewed strife and death as the wilderness knew these things. And all that he had witnessed, all that he knew of torture and violence and the desire to maim of such lively ferocity that it drew a howl of pain from Paul Tache and a shrill little scream from Toinette.

Jeems heard the scream, but it held no significance for him now. His dreams were gone, and Toinette, her presence close to him, her eyes upon the battle just as he had imagined in the thrill of his mental visionings was forgotten in the more vital depths of his interest in the flesh and blood of Paul. In the first attack, his fingers clutched like small iron claws in the folds of Tache's cravat and coat, and the rending of cloth, a splitting asunder of gorgeous material almost to the other's waist, was evidence of the strength behind his assault. He followed this with a fury of scratching and tearing and both went down in the melee. When they rose, Paul heaving himself up with an effort which flung Jeems from him, they were such a sight of muck and stain that Toinette forgot her precious dress and covered her eyes in horror, But she was looking again in an instant, for the spectacle fascinated even as it appalled her. Jeems had landed on his feet with a fist loaded with mud, and this he projected with an aim so accurate that half of Paul's face was obliterated by it, and as he leapt with a roar of rage at his smaller assailant, he was such a shocking contrast to his usual immaculate self that Toinette nearly ceased to breathe. Then she saw and heard what her feminine eyes and instincts could not understand or keep proper count of, a mad twisting and tumbling of bodies, panting breaths, grunts, and finally a clearly audible curse from Paul Tache. With that sound Jeems flew backward and landed on his back.

He was up almost before he had struck, and with his head ducked low like a ram's in a charge, he hurled himself at Tache. This individual, having cleared his eyes sufficiently to perceive the blindness of the other's rush, stepped aside and swung a welldirected blow which again sent Jeems down into the muck. His hand filled itself with this sticky substance a second time, and as he returned to battle he let it fly at Paul. Profiting by experience, Paul dodged skillfully, and the volley passed over his head, spreading in its flight, and fell in its contaminating virulence upon Toinette. She saw her raiment spotted and defiled, and such a sudden fury rose in her that she sprang upon Jeems as he clawed and kicked in a clinch with Paul, and assailed him with all the strength and bitterness of her small fists and biting tongue.

Jeems had seen the tragedy of the misdirected mud, and he knew that Toinette's hands and not Paul's were a hurt which bears with it a sting of satisfaction, and this emotion pressed upon Jeems as he fought desperately in front and felt himself attacked treacherously from behind. For Paul was accountable for the mishap to Toinette. Had the other not dodged in a cowardly fashion, allowing the stuff to pass on to her, the thing would not have happened. It did not take more than a few seconds for the inspiration of this thought with its apparent justice and truth to fire him with a determination beside which his former resolution sank to insignificance. He was no longer fighting for Toinette's approval, but against her, against Paul Tache, against all the world. Toinette, pulling at his hair, beating at his back, had raised his struggle to epic heights. The strength of martyrdom filled his lean arms and body, and he fought with a renewed fierceness that made his heavier but softer antagonist give way before the punishment, and both went down to earth again. Toinette fell with them, her long skirt impeding the activity of their legs, her big hat hanging like a sunshade over her face; her beautifully made curls tangled and spotted with mud. her hands beating angrily at whichever of the two chanced to come in her way.

Those Happy Victorians One entry in the diary of Mary Gladstone (afterward Mrs. Drew), daughter of W. E. Gladstone, "Grand Old Man" of Victorian politics, reads:

"Quiet evening at home. I was in my room at 9:30 and heard him and mamma coming up the stairs singing, 'A ragamuffin husband and a rantipolling wife' at the top of their voices.

"Him" was her father, the prime minister of England, then seventy-four years of age. "Home" was No. 10 Downing street, official residence of the P. M.-Kansas City Star.

To Preserve Old Prints

Since old prints of flowers, birds and personages are now so popular for framing, it is also worth while to take suitable modern pictures or prints, perhaps from magazines, and antique them with a light coating of liquid wax. This treatment will give them a mellow, old tone and will preserve them. The pictures should be pinned firmly to a flat surface before the wax is applied. Simply framed they will look charming on the walk

So much to do that is not e'en be-So much to hope for that we can-So much to wir, so many things to be. not see.

-William Morris. THE CHILDREN'S LUNCH BOX

Where the child must carry a lunch at school, every effort should be made to make the food appetizing. Fresh fruit when it is possible should always be included. Jams, jellies, dried fruits such as figs, prunes and raisins or dates will help out when apples, oranges and fresh fruits are not available. Fruit Paste. - Thoroughly mix chopped dates, raisins, dry figs and finely ground nuts with orange juice and a little cream. Spread generously on thin, buttered bread. Quick Orange Jam.-Take two cupfuls of orange pulp and juice, one lemon, pulp and juice, and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Boil ten minutes. Put into jelly glasses and seal. Serve in sandwiches or with toast. A small glass of this jam makes a dainty addition to the lunchbasket.

For a wholesome sandwich, spread one slice of the buttered bread with orange marmalade and the other with cottage cheese. Put together and wrap in waxed paper.

Carrot, Celery and Nut Sandwich .-Mix ground raw carrots, celery and nuts with lemon juice and boiled dressing. Put the mixture into cases made by scooping out a roll cut in half. Fit the halves together.

Egg Sandwich.—Chop hard cooked eggs, moisten with lemon juice, season with salt and pepper, spread over a lettuce leaf, place on a buttered slice of bread. Cover with a plain buttered slice.

Party Sandwiches.-These should be served as soon as prepared. Mash bananas and fresh raspberries in equal amounts and moisten with sweet cream, add a pinch of salt and a bit of sugar if needed. Spread white bread with butter, then with the fruit mixture. Put the slices together and cut into fancy shapes. If the fresh berries are not obtainable, use raspberry jelly. If desired especially festive, decorate the top of small sandwiches cut into rounds with a spot of the jelly.

Little Mary Knew All

About Social Workers

Karl de Schweinitz, general secretary of the Family society, tells of a social worker who recently took Sammy and Mary, aged ten and six, respectively, in her car to a hospital clinic for examination.

It was the first automobile ride for both the children-and Sammy could not restrain himself. He had to see everything that passed, including street cars, people and even vacant lots. Kiddie-like, he had to stand up and lean far out the car window. The social worker repeatedly told him to sit down-but he was too interested in the passing scenery. Finally, in desperation, she said: "Sammy, if you don't sit down I'll never take you for another ride in my car." To which Sammy rather impishly replied: "Do all your children mind you perfectly, Miss X---?" But little Mary knew better than her older brother and she scornfully corrected him. "Don't you know, Sammy, that Miss X- doesn't have any children-she only has an office!" -Philadelphia Record.

Making His Last Stand

The ivory-billed woodpecker, king of its tribe, inhabiting the great cypress swamps, probably is making its last stand in Florida, says Nature Magazine. The last breeding record of this giant woodpecker was made by Dr. A. A. Allen, who found a pair nesting in central Florida in 1924. It is now against the law to kill this fine bird. The last stand of the Carolina paroquet was made in Florida. This beautiful little parrot was once abundant but was shot and trapped in such quantities and so persistently that not one has been seen for many years. The bird is now undoubtedly extinct.

Deadly Visitation

The "black death" is the name given to an aggravated epidemic of the oriental plague which swept over Asia, Africa and Europe in 1348-49. The disease turned the bodies of its victims black, hence the name. More than 25,000 people perished in Europe alone, and the death toll in Asia and northern Africa was much greater.

Trees Glow, Warn Autoists

To prevent accidents, such as have caused injuries to many autoists along tree-lined roads of the Rhine region, German officials paint the trees with a band of phosphorescent paint. At night the trunks glow so that drivers may see them far enough away to avoid swerving into them.

vonderful. We are proud of this

In the second game of the evening at Oscoda the East Tawas reserve team defeated the second stringers of the Oscoda squad. It was our only victory of the eventful evening and we are all rather proud of our second team for their victory. start the game off right, Earl Ben-nington "sunk a long tom" from the center of the floor. It was folowed by another pretty shot Bigelow, and to end the half Ed. Schanbeck "swished" one through he net to make the score 6 to 1. In the last period Oscoda opened up, but they could not overcome our boys and the game ended with Howard Durant sinking a nice shot

In the opening game of the evening the high school girls' team was defeated by the Oscoda girls, 20 to 8. Our girls put up an excellent fight, but it was hard for them to compete with the experienced Oscoda team. Oscoda had two fine forwards in Miss Ellis, who made 10 of her team's points, and Miss Eby, who made 8. The Oscoda team celled in experience and team play, but the East Tawas girls surassed them in fighting spirit. Intil Vera Carter, captain, was tacen out the game was rather close. It was hard for the opponents to reak through the fine guarding of Misses Deckett and Vera. Misses Neilson, Warren and St. Martin all played a fine game at their posi-tions. The East Tawas girls should give the Oscoda team a strong run when they play down here on the 16th of January.
