TAWAS CITY QUINT EASILY CONQUERS EAST TAWAS INDIES

The East Tawas Merchants were handed a crushing defeat on Monday night at the Community Building, when a pick-up team from Tawas City completely mastered them to gain an easy 27 to 11 victory over the east siders.

The game was all Tawas City. The "pick-ups" rushed off to a considerable lead before the baffled and surprised East Tawas boys regained their composure, and by the end of the first half had established the score at 15 to 6 in their favor.

A revamped Merchants team took the floor in the third quarter, but met with no success in furthering the interests of East Tawas, and were replaced by the regulars in the fourth quarter. Meanwhile, the Tawas City representatives were romping over the floor and scoring at leisure—which was often. After grabbing the lead at the start, they were never in danger of losing it throughout the course of the game.

Scoring for the Tawas City squad was led by E. Kasischke, who quacked the encased bladder for 12 points, followed by "Hap" Swartz and "Scotty" McDonald, while Jack Decon and Ronald Curry played a splendid game at the guarding positions.

Competition between East Tawas and Tawas City on Monday night came as a result of the late cancellation of the game between Tyler-Lowery of Bay City and East Tawas Merchants by the Bay City team scheduled for that evening.

A preliminary between the Iosco County Normal and Alabaster Independents resulted in the one-sided score of 33 to 7 in favor of the Normals.

RECENT SERRADELLA FARM RECORDS

For the past two years the Serradella Farm has discontinued the short time test. The entire milking herd has been placed on semi-official test. Today every member of the herd of milking age has one or more S. O. records or is on test for the same. The following have recently completed yearly records:

Serradella Sylvary 906000 produced 18508.2 lbs. milk, 624.8 lbs. butter fat equivalent to 781 lbs. butter. This is Sylvary's third yearly record. Up to date she holds two state records, one for 30 days and one for a year's milk as a three year old. This record was made in Class B (three times milking).

Serradella Eco Preella 1142248 produced 14668.9 lbs. milk, 471.7 lbs. fat (589.6 lbs. butter) at two years, five months and 21 days.

Serradella Canary Eco 1142233 produced 12320 lbs. milk, 453.2 lbs. fat (604 lbs. butter) as a two year old.

These three are daughters of Eco Sylv King Walker.

Holland Segis Pauline DeKol 922861 produced 17567.5 lbs. milk, 548.3 lbs. fat (735.4 lbs. butter).

Holland Segis Pauline 1145445 produced 15262.2 lbs. milk, 503.3 lbs. fat (620.1 lbs. butter).

Holland Colantha Mercedes Segis 922835 produced 15818.6 lbs. milk, 525.2 lbs. fat (656.5 lbs. butter).

All these records were made in Division B. There are still a number to complete record before the year is over. Most of them have calved to qualify in the 305 day division.

"THE GORILLA" AT THE FAMILY JANUARY 6, 7, 8

You can brand "The Gorilla" as good entertainment.

It is packed with plenty of hair-raising thrills and there are laughs, most of them smashed across by Joe Frisco, the eccentric dancer and funny man who is a natural before the microphone and lens. Harry Gribben, the graduate of comedy shorts who were good in themselves, is a clever foil, boastful and noisy as ever.

Because gorillas are scarce and quite rough in manner, it is necessary to fur-line a man for the part. Nevertheless, the excellent camera work, which sends shadows of the gorilla onto the walls of the mansion where almost all of the action takes place, sends shivers up backs of the audience.

William H. Philbrick, as the frightened Negro servant, is good for almost as many laughs as are Frisco and Gribben. His lines are clever, built around the tendency to make his feet work when danger is in the offing.

The best comedy scenes arrive when Joe dresses as a gorilla to attract the male of the species, and when he gets into a tree only to find the male climbing after him. Joe forgets to coo in gorilla manner, and shouts frantically and vainly for help instead.

Lila Lee is stunning, and Walter Piggeon, as her sweetheart, is smooth in his part.

"PEACH OF A PAIR" TOGETHER AGAIN IN LOVE COMEDY

Black haired, black eyed, handsome Charles Rogers and red haired, blue eyed Nancy Carroll, the lovers of "Abie's Irish Rose," of "Close Harmony," make a "peach of a pair" in Paramount's all Technicolor moving picture production of the famous Schwab and Mandel stage hit, "Follow Thru."

"Follow Thru," which will be shown Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at the State Theatre, is a love story with a golf club setting and a world of comedy. Laurence Schwab, himself, went to Hollywood to direct it in conjunction with Lloyd Corrigan, taking with him everything he needed from the original two year Broadway hit, including Zelma O'Neal and Jack Haley, Zelma taking with her her talent at love-making, but Nancy refuses to give her any advantage there. Rogers has an eye for golf champions, so that Nancy, to win a husband, has first to win the golf crown.

SNOW REMOVAL PROGRAM OF STATE IS INCREASED

It is announced by the State Highway Department that in addition to the 7,400 miles of state trunk lines maintained for wheel traffic by snow removal during the winter of 1929-30, the snow removal program for the present season calls for an extension of 114 miles on old trunk lines and 159 miles of new trunk lines.

New trunk lines to the extent of 227 miles are to be placed under maintenance January 1. 159 miles of which will be maintained for wheel traffic snow removal.

This makes a total of approximately 7,672 miles of the state's trunk lines which will be kept free of snow for wheel traffic after the first of the year, and increase of 272 miles over last year, and is approximately 95 per cent of the entire trunk line mileage which will be under maintenance in 1931.

According to B. C. Tiney, Maintenance Engineer for the State Highway Department, last winter was an unusually hard winter for the state at large and the cost was about 20 per cent higher than for the previous winter. It will be recalled that one of the worst storms in years struck the southern half of the lower peninsula the middle of December, 1929.

It is anticipated that the cost per mile this winter undoubtedly can be reduced from last season's cost. Considerable new equipment has been purchased by the state and by the counties under contract with the state, and the Department is entering this winter much better prepared than ever before.

In 31 counties the State Highway Department has its own maintenance crews, and in the remaining 52 counties snow removal is carried on by the county road commissions under contract with the state for maintenance of state trunk lines.

Mr. Tiney states that the treatment and removal of ice from the highways, particularly in the south half of the lower peninsula, will receive increased attention. Experimental work will be conducted to develop further information on the most efficient and economical methods of dealing with the ice problem.

REPORT OF COUNTY NURSE FOR DECEMBER

During the month of December, the county nurse made home calls on 21 infants, 41 pre-school children, 45 school children and 11 calls on pre-natal or post-natal cases. 20 school visits were made, 11 classroom talks given and 124 school children inspected. Dr. F. T. Zieske examined 121 pupils in this county and gave 205 treatments for immunization against diphtheria, completing immunization of school and pre-school children at Alabaster. 24 children were vaccinated against smallpox.

The report of F. A. Reagan, sanitary inspector, shows five school wells to be contaminated. The schools have been notified so they will not continue to use water not considered safe.

Miss Cowgill will attend the State Public Health meeting at Lansing January 7, 8 and 9. The staff of The Children's Fund will have a regional conference at that time.

During January the nurse will continue her school work and home visits as well as assist the staff dentist in his dental survey of the school children.

Iosco county has been remarkably free from contagious disease this month, one case of pneumonia being the only reportable disease recorded during December.

ONE OF ENGLAND'S MOST FAMOUS ACTORS IN "GRUMPY" CAST

What George Arliss was to "Disraeli" and "The Green Goddess," until Maude is to "Grumpy."

The famous old play, built around the character of a cantankerous but inwardly soft-hearted old man, has become the success that it has been for the past 17 years because Cyril Maude made it so.

Maude is one of England's greatest actors. He spent 46 years of his life in the theatre as producer, owner and actor. He retired four years ago from active stage work, but Paramount persuaded him to appear once more in the renowned role of "Grumpy"—this time, of course, on the talking screen.

And so, "Grumpy" comes to the State Theatre on Sunday and Monday next, the same "Grumpy" who has delighted young and old in all the English-speaking countries of the world.

The story deals with a robbery which is committed in "Grumpy's" home, and the subsequent detective work of the old man in tracking down the culprit. After a series of amusing and exciting adventures, the cranky but crafty and kindly Grumpy catches the robber and regains the lost diamond.

A delightful romance runs like a silver thread through the pattern of this well-knit play. Phillips Holmes, the lover in "The Devil's Holiday," and Frances Dade, ingenue beauty from the New York stage, play the roles of the lovers.

Andrew Jackson and His Rachel

THE HERMITAGE, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

RACHEL JACKSON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

JANUARY 8 is a day for recalling a famous American fight and a famous American fighter. The fight was the battle of New Orleans, which took place on January 8, 1815, and which is unique in history as being a battle fought after the treaty of peace ending the war had been signed. The fighter was Gen. Andrew Jackson, frontiersman, lawyer by profession, but a natural military leader, hailed during the war with the Creek Indians and the war with the British by his fellow-frontiersmen as "Old Hickory" in tribute to the toughness of his fiber as a man, and later triumphantly elected by them to the Presidency as the first representative of the new American democracy to occupy the White House, after a long reign there by Virginia and Massachusetts aristocrats.

Andrew Jackson is a symbol of something so intensely American that, in the words of a recent biographer, "The people still delight in the legends of his prowess, of his lurid language, of his imperious and dictatorial temper. . . . As a small boy he comes reeling into American history with a saber cut on his head and as the years gather upon him they gleam with steel and blood. It was a roaring career, resounding to the roars of cheering multitudes, of musketry, of artillery. . . . He was a great duelist, a great soldier and a great lover. He was fiery, quixotic, honest and loyal. He was curiously romantic. . . ."

The picture of red-headed Andy Jackson, the boy, and "Old Hickory," the man, "cutting and slashing his way to power, a raucous fellow, an explosive, heavy-handed fellow, but with a man who had a code and lived up to it," is too familiar to Americans to necessitate calling it up again on the anniversary of his great victory. In the light of these characteristics it is more interesting to call up that other picture of him, because of the vivid contrast which it presents—the picture of "the great lover" who was so "curiously romantic." For the story of Andrew Jackson and his beloved Rachel, the woman he loved to the end of his days, is one of the most beautiful romances in American history.

The story of this romance goes back to the year 1779 when Col. John Donelson, a well-to-do Virginia planter, led a party of 200 emigrants on a 2,000-mile trip by flatboat from old Fort Patrick Henry in East Tennessee (near the present city of Kingsport) to the Middle Basin of Tennessee. The trip was made down the upper branch of the Holston to the Tennessee river, down its whole length to the Ohio, up the Ohio to the Cumberland and thence up that stream to the bluffs where Col. James Robertson and an earlier party of settlers had established a frontier outpost which was to become the city of Nashville. It had taken Donelson's party four months to complete their journey and during that time they had known the horrors of Indian attack, bitter winter weather and the scourge of smallpox. Among the party was Donelson's twelve-year-old daughter, Rachel, who, despite the hardships of frontier life—or perhaps because of them—grew up to a superb womanhood. "Those who knew Rachel Donelson never tired, in their day, telling of her beauty, her goodness, her sweetness and natural charm," says John Trotwood Moore, a Tennessee historian. "She is described as being a brunette, with olive complexion and high coloring, black eyes that danced and sparkled; vivacious, kindly; lips that were true carmine; a rare wildness beauty."

Colonel Donelson was killed by the Indians during the early years of the settlement and his widow moved to Kentucky. There she rented a house from another frontier widow, a Mrs. Robards, whose son, Lewis, would win Rachel Donelson. But the marriage was a failure from the beginning. Robards was moody, temperamental and intensely jealous of his wife. So Rachel eventually left him, returning to her mother, who had in the meantime gone back to Nashville to live. Faced with the necessity of making her own living after her husband's death, Mrs. Donelson had taken a few men boarders into her home. One of them was a young lawyer named John Overton, who brought about a reconciliation between Rachel and Robards, who then came to live with his wife and her mother.

Another boarder at the Donelson home was a red-headed young Carolinian, named Andrew Jackson, who had arrived in Nashville in 1788 and began the practice of law. Again Robards' jealousy flamed out and he accused Rachel of being in love with Jackson. The young lawyer's protest to the husband, when he heard the accusation, only made matters worse and Robards returned to Kentucky. Through Overton's intercession Rachel went there to live with him again, but finding the situation impossible, soon returned, resolved never again to live with Robards.

Robards then applied to the legislature of Virginia (since Kentucky was still a part of that state) for a divorce, and on December 29, 1790, that body passed an act permitting him to go into court to seek a divorce from his wife. Back to Tennessee came the report that the divorce had been granted in the summer of 1791, while Rachel was visiting in Natchez, Miss. Jackson, who had fallen in love with her but had not spoken of his love while she was still Robards' wife, sought her out and they were married. The young couple soon returned to Tennessee and went to live at the home, Hunter's Hill, which Jackson, now United States attorney and already marked as a man who would become famous, had established in Nashville.

Two years later Jackson and his wife learned that she was not legally divorced from Robards when the marriage ceremony in Natchez had taken place. The scandal mongers and Jackson's political enemies became busy with the tale. Robards had waited three years, after filing his first application, before finally securing the final decree of divorce. Immediately afterwards, on January 17, 1794, Jackson remarried his wife. Then he bought two dueling pistols and served notice upon his enemies that he would kill any man who assailed his wife's name or the purity of their motives when they were first married.

For a time the tongues of his enemies were silenced. Then, as the result of a dispute over a horse race, a young man named Charles Dickinson, who seems to have been made the tool of Jackson's political enemies, after a session of heavy drinking denounced Jackson as a coward and a poltroon and added the further insult of declaring that, "He lived two years with his wife before he was married to her." The result was the now-famous Dickinson-Jackson duel in which Dickinson was killed, Dickinson fired first and seriously wounded Jackson. Later Jackson said to his second, "If he had missed me, I intended to shoot in the air, but when I felt his ball plow through my ribs, I would have killed him if he had shot me through the heart."

The death of Dickinson silenced Jackson's enemies for awhile and he and his wife enjoyed a period of happiness at Hunter's Hill. Then he lost the major part of his estate of some 50,000 acres through debt, but on the part which he retained he built a group of log houses and one frame building. To the new estate he gave the name of The Hermitage. Some time later he built a handsome two-story brick house to care for the increasing number of guests who were coming to visit this rising young frontiersman. In 1796 he was elected to congress and the following year he accepted an appointment to fill a seat in the United States senate, not so much because he was ambitious himself, but because he wanted to lift his beloved Rachel to a social position which would show his pride in her. Within a year he resigned, served a short time as a judge of the Supreme court in Tennessee and then, happy in the thought that he was through with public life, looked forward to spending the remainder of his years as a gentleman planter at The Hermitage.

But the outbreak of the War of 1812 called him into service again—as the commander of Tennessee volunteers to fight the Creek Indians who had gone on the warpath. In January, 1814, he defeated the Creeks in two pitched battles and ended the war in March at the Great Horseshoe Bend on the Tallapoosa river. As the result of his splendid campaign he was made major-general in the regular army. Then came word that the British were preparing to attack New Orleans and Jackson with his small army of 2,000 men there won one of the most astounding battles in history—defeating Pakenham's British veterans and inflicting upon them a greater loss than Jackson's own force.

This victory made him the hero of the old French city and in his triumph Rachel Jackson shared. For he sent for her to come to New Orleans and there this daughter of the frontier won the hearts of the granddaughters of Louisiana with her naturalness and her lack of self-consciousness. They presented her with a set of topaz jewelry and gave a grand ball in her honor at which the "Victor of New Orleans" proudly led her out as his first choice as a dancing partner.

By this time Jackson had become a national figure with the promise of further public honors in store for him. His devoted Rachel hoped that he would return to Tennessee and in the quiet of life at the Hermitage recuperate his health which had been shattered by his arduous campaigns. But she soon realized that her ambition was not to be realized. As the Presidential campaign of 1824 drew near Tennessee was clamoring for her favorite son to be a candidate. He made the race, won the largest popular vote, but in the electoral college John Quincy Adams, aided by Henry Clay, was the winner.

Four years later another campaign was on and again Jackson was a candidate. The campaign of 1828 was a bitter one and once more Jackson's enemies unearthed the charge of his illegal marriage. Jackson withheld his wrath until the election was over, but he desired more ardently than ever to win so that he could vindicate his wife by making her the First Lady of the Land. That would be her supreme triumph over those who spoke ill of her. The result of the election was a victory for "Old Hickory."

When the news came to the Hermitage, Rachel Jackson, after much persuasion, set forth for Nashville to obtain a wardrobe in keeping with her new station. The honor of being the President's wife was not one which she had coveted, but her husband's wish was her law and she planned to accompany him to Washington and share in his triumph. While seated in the back parlor of a hotel in Nashville she overheard herself discussed as the woman who was hampering a great man's rise to fame. For the first time there came to her horrified ears the stories which had been circulated about her and which her husband had succeeded in keeping from her knowledge. Her servants said she returned to her home looking stunned.

Within a few days she suffered a heart attack from which she failed to rally. She had lost the desire to live. For 10 hours a heart-broken man sat at her bedside helpless to aid her. Then she died and with her died all happiness for Andrew Jackson.

Rotolactor Washes, Dries and Milks 50 Cows

This Rotolactor, composed of a revolving circular table, 60 feet in diameter, on which 50 cows are washed, dried and milked while they make one complete revolution with the turntable, is an invention just developed at the Walker-Gordon laboratories at Plainsboro, N. J. Three times a day 1,680 cows are milked in this sanitary manner. At the completion of each 12½ minute revolution, each cow returns unguided to her place in the cow barn, an eighth of a mile away. By means of this equipment a degree of cleanliness and purity of milk never before attained is made possible.

FROM FAR AND NEAR

To put too much enthusiasm into a handclasp makes people suspicious. Some people derive a lot of satisfaction from their dissatisfaction. The best mothers do not get their ideas on child-raising from books. Boys will be boys; and that is the reason of our eternal delight to them. Misery doesn't know whether it loves company or not—it has so little. In a village, an eviled woman is one in front of whose house there are always two or three automobiles.

Experience to Remember

Ralph Westcott, twenty-five, of Whitehall, N. Y., can tell of how he was run over by a locomotive. Westcott, a railroad employee, stepped into the path of a switch engine and was knocked down. He lay prone between the rails and the locomotive passed over him without harming him.

BLACK-AND-WHITE STILL POPULAR; CREPE FOR GIRL'S PRETTY FROCKS

COLORS may come and colors may go, but black-and-white stays with us forever. At least it repeats its triumphs season after season.

Just now one of its new gestures is the costume either of a handsome black woolen weave or of black velvet with which is worn a beret, scarf and muff "set" of white fur.

next detail which claims attention is the modish footwear which plays so important a role in the assembling of this attractive costume.

Sculpture for Elks' National Memorial

This allegorical group, "Earth," representing a centaur and Pan, has been designed by Laura Gardin Fraser of New York for the Elks National memorial in Chicago.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

In the mechanical department of a New York newspaper, the men got up a pool, which ran to fairly large proportions.

Instead of that, the man went quietly and peacefully home. But in the meantime another employee of the paper, who was of about the same height and general appearance, passed the speakeasy on his way to work.

done with the $1,000. The poor fellow didn't know what they were talking about, but they wouldn't believe his protestations.

I am told that the women's rest rooms in New York's largest department stores are provided with ash trays and lighters. This may be a system for advertising such goods, but they are used freely.

Over on Third avenue, in New York, there is a shop which is run for purposes of charity.

poses of charity. Here various persons send anything they cannot use or wish to give away.

Not long ago this shop received a contribution in the shape of a small painting. One of the women, who volunteered their services, looked at the gift and then looked at it again.

This put the shop in an embarrassing position. Ethics demanded that somebody ascertain whether the donor of the picture knew who painted it, or had perhaps given it away in ignorance.

"There was no mistake," was the answer. The donor was doing over her apartment and the Whistler didn't fit into the new scheme of decoration.

LUXURIOUS WRAP

The luxuriousness of mink fur is revealed in this lovely afternoon wrap. Made with a deep cape which can be worn close to the face or hugging the shoulders, the wrap continues downward in close fit until it flares at the hemline.

PRETTY MODEL IN BLACK-AND-WHITE

fully goodlooking with coats, suits or frocks in black. Every woman who can afford to keep white immaculate should indulge in one of these flattering fur ensemble sets.

Then there are the charming collar and cuff sets worked solid of diminutive white satin seed pearl beads, they are "a veritable fountain of youth" when it comes to giving a youngish look to the afternoon frock made of black canton or faille or be the material what it may.

Black-and-white even to the footwear is a favorite formula of the tendency is to feature decided contrasts. This is achieved with brilliant pipings or gay appliques and insets and particularly with touches of vivid embroidery and other forms of handwork, for there will be any amount of fagoting, smocking and other fine stitchery lavished on children's clothes, according to the new program.

The attractive dress pictured below is made of crepe de chine in a lovely shade of green, contrasted with rows and rows of narrow white ribbon. Details which give it distinction are its fancy scalloped hemline, the ingenious introduction of shirring at the waistline and the becoming round collar which is tied in front.

With the holidays over, mothers begin to feel a "do-it-now" spirit, stirring them to action in the direction of the family sewing which must be accomplished early to insure a care-mode. See it carried out to a nicety in the upper picture. In fashioning this stunning suit the designer uses heavy black crepe in combination with a like weave in pure white.

Again in this model do we see the bolero which gives emphasis to the report that bolero suits and frocks will be widely featured again this spring. Note the clever fringe about the skirt hemline. It is made of self-fabric. And having arrived at the hemline the free spring. Perhaps a few hints as to style trends in the children's realm will be helpful to those who are planning an early sewing campaign.

It is said in regard to the styling of little girls' dresses that both pleated and flared effects will be good, and considerable partiality is shown for bolero jacket effects. The majority of frocks in the early showings are short-sleeved models. Pretty little touches adorn the sleeves in the way of bows and frills and various handwork. Tiny puff sleeves are a favored type.

Color contrast, being one of the most important characteristics of dresses in high shade of plain crepes, finds expression in blouse and skirt treatments. Well-defined waistlines are sponsored. All sorts of little cape effect will be good.

"City" of London Small in Area

Washington.—In what city is the capital of England?

"The natural response is London. The precise answer in Westminster," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"If the word 'city' be omitted the answer, of course, is London, for the London of common knowledge, the London of some 7,500,000 inhabitants, is the county of London. It includes the city of Westminster, with its parliament buildings, and it also includes the original city of London, a tiny patch in the center of the great metropolitan district.

"The city of London proper came into the day's news recently through its time-honored lord mayor's show, which this year was enlivened by a band of real American Indians in full regalia.

"The city, with an area of only a square mile and a resident population of 13,000, is the smallest of the 29 divisions of Greater London.

"The city is by far the oldest and the most interesting part of London. While it does not contain the parliament building, nor Westminster Abbey, nor any of the royal palaces, it is the commercial and banking center, the newspaper center, and in St. Paul's cathedral and the Tower of London it has two of England's most famous institutions. It is still essentially the district in which the Romans founded Londinium. Walls, long since torn down, define many of its streets, and gates, such as Aldgate, Bishopgate, Moorgate and Temple Bar, are preserved in street names.

"Visitors to London are aware of a difference when their wanderings lead them from one of the other boroughs or cities of London into 'The City.' The streets are narrower and more winding, and the atmosphere is surcharged with activity and bustle.

"In the very midst of 'The City' broods that portentous dowager, The Old Lady of Threadneedle street, more formally the Bank of England.

"Directly across Threadneedle street from the bank is the Royal Exchange, a building as imposing as New York's Stock Exchange. But it is only a show place. The real stock exchange is almost hidden around the corner, between Threadneedle and Thromorton streets.

"One may feel the pulse beats of the world in Fleet street, London's concentrated newspaper and press association center.

"The London bridge of incipient, nursery-rhyme collapse is not the present stately, arched structure. Nothing short of an earthquake could fell its sturdy granite spans. London bridge connects 'The City' with the borough of Southwark, and marks the farthest point that ocean vessels may ascend the Thames. More than 20,000 vehicles and 120,000 people on foot pour over it daily.

"The Guildhall, or hall of the corporation of the city of London, would be known as the city hall elsewhere. Here the chief business of 'The City' is carried on. It should be pointed out, however, that this is not the administrative center for metropolitan London. While the lord mayor and his retinue were riding to receive the crown's approval and the crowd's huzzas, a quiet man, almost unknown to Londoners themselves, was sitting in the county hall in Lambeth borough, passing on the major affairs of Lon-

Europe's Numerous Ex-Rulers

London.—Twelve deposed kings and royal pretenders are living in exile in various parts of the world today, and political observers here are wondering who will be the thirteenth.

There is considerable speculation, too, as to whether the number may not be cut to 11 before the end of the present year. Several of the royal exiles—particularly King George of Greece, Amanullah of Afghanistan, and the former Khedive of Egypt—are known to be anxious to regain their thrones.

The first bid for a crown, however, will probably be made by a boy who has never known kingly power.

On November 20 the Archduke Otto of Hapsburg was eighteen years of age and then attained his majority, according to Hapsburg tradition. Otto has been carefully tutored for the role of king by his mother, the ex-Empress Zita. One by one she has won over the different branches of the Hapsburg family.

An attempt to place Otto on the Hungarian throne would create a new crisis in southeast Europe.

A coup d'etat on behalf of King George of Greece also might have repercussions in the Balkans. King George recently expressed a belief that he will be called back. In this respect he is like the former Khedive Abbas Hilmi, who still hopes the Egyptian Nationalists will offer him the throne he lost in 1914.

None of the royal expatriates exceeds in energy the unfortunate Amanullah who was driven from Afghanistan two years ago because of his modern ways. Secret Amanullist organizations are said to be active in Afghanistan in his behalf.

manage when old Bill Marshall passed on. He had founded the institution; he had established the conservative business principles upon which it had been run; he had been the president for forty years. We all thought him the whole thing and he agreed with us.

He has been gone ten years now and the bank still runs along as well as it always did. Young Bill is at the head of things and if there is any difference he is managing matters a little better than his father did. He has enlarged the business, he's improved the building, and the institution has quite as good a reputation as it did when old Bill was alive. I don't doubt that old Bill is annoyed, if he knows anything now concerning matters terrestrial, to see that his business affairs are being conducted quite as well without him as they were when he was on earth.

"Well, I don't know what we're going to do when the Holbrooks move away," the minister was saying. The Holbrooks had been the life of the church. They could be depended upon to carry anything through which they began, and now they were leaving. But somehow we seemed to get on better after they left than we did before. It wasn't a year until the minister's salary was raised, the church was completely renovated and redecored.

And that's just the way. Very few of us will be long missed when we are gone. The progress of the world or of any organization or institution in the world is not dependent upon the efforts or the genius of one man. When one man goes, there is quite likely to be just as good or even a better man to take his place. Joshua didn't need to worry.

WE ARE NOT SO ESSENTIAL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Joshua, in "Old Man Adam and His Chilluns" was a good deal concerned as to what was going to become of the children of Israel when he passed out of the picture.

He had been an aggressive leader; he had performed marvelous military feats and was, to put it into the common vernacular, just about the whole thing. But he was growing old, his strength was waning, he realized that his time was short, his regime just about at an end, and he was worried. What was going to become of the undisciplined mob when he was no longer its leader?

"Well," the Lord said to him, "it won't never a man which died which I didn't have another man to step in his place. Now, I ain't low-ratin' you, Joshua, 'cause you been a mighty good man. And I ain't blamin' you for gittin' de idea ain't nobody kin do de job good as you been. Everybody figures like dat when dey gets old. But when you dies, de Hebrew chilluns is gonter git along."

The Lord was right. Every man who occupies the position of head of a family or an institution or an organization is likely to get the idea that when he steps down and out everything is going to the bow wows, and often his friends feel the same way. We all wondered and the old man did too, quite as much as anyone else, how the town bank was going to
