Albaugh, state director of Promotion, who will be leaving shortly to take up educational work in India, also Dr. A. W. Rider and Miss Martha Mixer, will speak at both meetings.

A large delegation of members of other churches is expected. The ladies of the local church will serve supper to all visitors.

DR. A. W. RIDER

Dr. A. W. Rider, of Los Angeles, field secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, is a man of wide and varied experience in the field of religious service. As pastor and organizer of a Los Angeles church; as a traveler through the mission fields of Latin America, China, Japan and the Philippines, as well as a secretary; as a Y. M. C. secretary; as a Sunday school organizer and as a promoter of home and foreign mission enterprise, he has seen and touched the world of Christian activity at all its points.

MISS MARTHA MIXER

Miss Martha Mixer, who is director of Strong Place Community House, a Northern Baptist institution in Brooklyn, New York, has given her life to work among the children of Italian immigrants and to the young folk from that country who have come to America to make their homes. She has brought to this work a thorough educational background, as a B. A. of Mount Holyoke College and an M. A. of the Teacher's College, Columbia University. Prior to taking her present post in 1922, she taught at Mount Holyoke, was attached to the home service department of the Red Cross, New York, and did field work in religious education at the Fordham Italian church of St. John the Baptist.

NORMAL CLINCHES DOUBLE VICTORY OVER ARENAC

Iosco County Normal boys' and girls' basketball teams emerged victorious from an encounter with the Arenac County Normal at Standish last Friday night. Both games were fast, clean and hard-fought.

After being defeated by the Arenac representatives earlier in the season, the local Normal teams were out for revenge. And revenge they got. The Iosco boys defeated Arenac, 7 to 6, in a thrilling battle that extended into one overtime period, and the Iosco girls defeated Arenac girls by the same score, 7 to 6, in an equally exciting contest. The close scores made it doubly hard for the Arenac teams to accept defeat.

IOSCO CHURCH SCHOOLS

The third of a series of interesting rallies is to be held by the young people of the county at the Alabaster church, Sunday, January 25th, 2:30 p. m., Central Standard time. Reports from the rally at McIvor last Sunday afternoon are most enthusiastic. Young people, these are your meetings, and your loyal support insures their success.

Sunday, January 25th, 8:00 p. m., Western time, the young people present "The Challenge of the Cross" at the Hale M. E. church. Mr. E. O. Putnam, superintendent of the Hale M. E. Sunday school, will act as chairman of the evening, and the drama will be preceded by a musical program by local talent. The public is cordially invited.

The Reno Baptist school is the first to forward their 1931 pledge. Thanks for the five dollars received. Miss Mae Crist and Miss Roberta Jansen of Rose City have enrolled in the Saturday afternoon Pageantry and Dramatics class. STATE THEATRE WILL SHOW RARE FILM TREAT

The management of the State Theatre announces a rare treat for its patrons on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Ruth Chatterton and Olive Brook will appear in another fascinating talkie—one which is said to contain an even greater amount of dramatic and romantic punch than the two earlier successes of these capable favorites. The picture is "Anybody's Woman." It is the story of the vagrancies of a misfit marriage.

Brook is seen as the prosperous young lawyer who indulges in a prolonged orgy after his wife divorces him to marry another man. One morning, after a night of insensate drunkenness, he wakes to find that he has been married to Ruth Chatterton, an unrefined, tawdry, down at the heels actress. His friends forsake him after he "straightens out," and begins again his respectable pursuit of business. Ruth sees him losing his prestige and decides that she will leave him for the sake of his standing in society. She goes away, although she loves him more than anything else in the world. He carries on without her, but before long discovers that there is an emptiness in life that can only be filled by this woman. After a series of dramatic episodes they are brought together again for a finale that is pleasing to all.

VETERANS OPEN NEW BUILDING MONDAY NIGHT

Audie Johnson Post, American Legion, opened their new building with an oyster supper and social evening Monday. About 40 ex-servicemen from the Tawas, Oscoda and Alabaster were present.

The members of the East Tawas Post can be proud of their fine building which was formerly the G. A. R. hall, now completely remodeled and redecored.

One of the features of the evening was a series of songs rendered by a quartet composed of Hosea Bigelow, Ed. Furtaw, George Klump and Lawrence Gardner.

A handsome large replica of the American Legion emblem was presented to the Post by George Klump.

HERBERT A. HORNE

Herbert A. Horne, a former resident of this city, died suddenly Wednesday afternoon, January 7th, in Benton Harbor.

Mr. Horne was proprietor of a large barber shop, a member of the Masonic order, being a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and was prominently known in the business and fraternal circles in and around St. Joseph and Benton Harbor.

Many of the older residents will remember Mr. Horne. Mrs. Horne was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. McDonald.

JACK OAKIE, DEAN OF WIT, AT STATE THEATRE IN "LET'S GO NATIVE"

The great Jack Oakie grin invasion which began, for the delectation of millions of talkie-goers, a year or so ago, continues its irrepressible spasms of laughter at the State Theatre Sunday and Monday in "Let's Go Native."

This smiling dean of slang and wise-cracks who began wowing audiences in "Close Harmony," and continued his veritable panic of mirth in "Hit the Deck," "Sweetie," "The Social Lion" and others, is a bigger and better than ever, riot in "Let's Go Native" in which he is co-starred with Jeannette MacDonald, the princess of "The Love Parade," and supported by Skeets Gallagher, Kay Francis, William Austin and Eugene Pallette.

Oakie is seen as Voltaire McGinnis, the goofy but go-getting taxi cab driver who gets all mixed up with Miss MacDonald's plans for her troupe of show-girls who are making a trip to South America to put on a revue for a millionaire. When Oakie's cab runs smack into a police station in New York he is bound to seek refuge on the ship. He gets a job as a stoker, but later is promoted to a mess attendant. On the boat are William Austin, society ne'er-do-well, James Hall, disinherited young blue-blood in love with Jeannette MacDonald, and the 75 girls of her show.

HOLBECK WOULD HAVE BUILDING ACT REPEALED

Repeal of the Hartman institutional building act which appropriated approximately $24,000,000 over a period of four years for construction of new buildings and improvement of old institutions is sought by Representative Fred C. Holbeck of Long Lake.

The act appropriated $11,000,000 for institutional building for the years 1930 and 1931 and attempted to bind the present legislature to the four year program instituted at the request of Fred W. Green, former governor.

The program for the two years, governed by the act of the 1929 legislature, is virtually completed but there remain binding additional expenditures. Representative Holbeck believes the present administration should be bound in no way by the acts of the past legislature and administration relative to building projects. Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker has stated that he would encourage limitation of the building program set up by his predecessor.

"With reference to my bill introduced January 13, repealing Act No. 324 of 1929 session," Rep. Holbeck said, "I wish to say that when this Act was passed two years ago I did my best to kill it. Failing in this, I tried to cut it in two, and although the amendment offered by me to have the terms of the bill apply to only two years instead of four received considerable support, the bill finally carried and by so doing placed the largest state tax on the people that ever was known in the history of the state."

"In my argument before the house two years ago I called attention to the fact that building costs were at the peak of all known costs in the history of the country, but that everything pointed to the fact that we were due for a fall and to make appropriations covering a four year period at the then high schedule of costs was not only bad business but questionable from every standpoint. I pleaded with the legislature in a first effort to make the appropriations apply for only two years so that we could reconsider the subject two years hence when in all probability building costs might be a third less. The bill finally passed, adding $24,000,000 to our state tax covering a period of four years. Two years of this period have passed; in other words, ten million has been added to the tax rolls. Just how much of this money has gone into new buildings for our state institutions I do not know, but it is strongly hinted that not all of this money has been used for the purpose for which it was intended. The repeal of this bill will clear the decks and leave the Legislature free to consider a future building program under our present conditions, both as to low cost of building and also as to the present high scale of taxes and I predict that not half the amount called for in the old bill will be appropriated for the coming two years, and in this connection will coincide with the recommendations of Governor Brucker in his message to the Legislature a few days ago."

"PASSION FLOWER" PLAYERS CHOSEN FOR FIDELITY TO NOVEL'S CHARACTERS

When a best-seller is adapted to the screen, it is noticeable that exceptional care is used in the casting. The reason undoubtedly lies in the fact that the book-reading public and moviegoers have already made their own judgments as to who would be best as the characters concerned.

This fact accounts for the unusually interesting list of well-known names in William de Mille's cinema version of the Kathleen Norris best-seller, "Passion Flower," which will be shown at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, Saturday and Sunday, January 24 and 25.

There has been much discussion as to the premise of this book on marriage, particularly anent the role of the deserted wife. This part was given to Kay Johnson, recently seen in "Madam Satan," and "Billy the Kid."

Dulce, "the other woman," has been called by critics one of the most typical of modern characterizations. Kay Francis assumes it, coming direct from her successes in "Raffles," "Street of Chance" and "The Virtuous Sin."

The story of "Passion Flower" revolves about the reactions which follow upon the domestic upset of Dan, a sincere but somewhat blundering young man of powerful physique. The role was given to Charles Bickford, who performed to such excellent advantage in "Dynamite," and with Greta Garbo in "Anna Christie." Morado, husband of Dulce, a dramatically important character, fell to that craftsman of emotions, Lewis Stone, recently seen in "The Office Wife."

Zasu Pitts, who has a comedy technique all her own, plays a whining landlady; Winter Hall has a role of the stern parent; Dickie Moore, accomplished child player, is seen as the son of Dan and Cassy. The scenario was written by Martin Flavin, author of the New York stage success, "The Criminal Code."

EAST TAWAS HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

At the Parent-Teachers meeting on Monday evening, Dr. Ketcik, in charge of the dental division of health, District No. 2, explained the work he is doing in the four counties in this district. Five hundred children have been examined to date and out of this number only twenty were found to require no dental work. He emphasized the necessity of caring for the baby teeth and also the need of preserving the six year molar. This tooth is the first of the permanent set to appear and is often mistaken for a baby tooth. Several questions regarding the work were answered by Dr. Ketcik following his talk. Four high school boys, Walter Klump, Lloyd McKay, Blaine Christeson and Alfred Gurley gave reports on the Older Boys' Conference held in Bay City in November. The reports showed considerable ability in public speaking on the part of the boys and an intelligent interest in the subjects under discussion. The Girls' Glee Club, under the direction of Miss Hulthala, rendered two selections which were highly enjoyed by the Association. Refreshments were served to about fifty people after the meeting. The February 16 meeting will feature several talks on the use of leisure time by the boys and girls of school age.

Have You a "Double"?

Which is Lindy?

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

TAKE a look at the top two pictures shown above and answer the question, "Which is Lindy?" Now check your answer with this: The famous aviator is shown in picture No. 1. The young man in picture No. 2 who so closely resembles the "Lone Eagle" is Diederick Ramke, twenty-three years old, who was graduated from Louisiana State university last year. Not only is he "Lindy's" double in appearance but also in courage, for despite the fact that he is stone blind it could not hinder him from his determination to get an education and as a result he ranked third in a class of 221 and was elected valedictorian by his fellow-seniors.

Now take a look at the lower two pictures shown above and answer the question, "Which is Buffalo Bill?" Whether you answer "No. 3" or "No. 4," you will be wrong for neither is a picture of the famous scout, Indian fighter and Wild West showman, despite the fact that both resemble Colonel Cody so strongly as to be able to pass for him among most people. No. 3 is Col. C. L. Alexander of Hastings, Neb., an old-time stage-coach driver and contemporary of Cody's. Now 4 is James Beitel, Civil war veteran who is spending his last days in the State Soldiers' and Sailors' home at Sandusky, Ohio. Several years ago Beitel attracted considerable attention by his claim that he was a friend of Cody's and that he often substituted for Buffalo Bill in the arena during Cody's Wild West show career.

Interesting as are the above cases there's nothing especially remarkable about them for scientists tell us that every one of us has a double—somewhere. The only reason why that fact is not more commonly known is that our path, or the path of our friends who are likely to notice the striking resemblance, doesn't always happen to cross the path of our double so we don't know of his existence.

To account for such doubles, Doctor van Bemmelen, a professor at the University of Groningen, Holland, has advanced the theory that they are blood relations, though the family connection is often remote. In many instances of striking resemblance Doctor van Bemmelen established a common ancestry. He calculates that, going back eight generations, a man has 256 ancestors, and in 30 generations 1,000,000! Hence, there would not be enough forebears to "go around" unless many of us have the same ancestors in common.

But perhaps the most interesting case of a double in which Lindbergh is concerned is the striking resemblance between him and another transatlantic flyer, almost as famous as he. Only here it's a case of a man and woman being doubles, for this example of some one who "looks like Lindy" is Miss Amelia Earhart, sometimes referred to as "Lady Lindy."

Following Lindbergh's rise to fame and her own interest in aviation, Miss Earhart's friends often commented on her resemblance to the international hero of the air, and this may have acted as a stimulus to follow his flight. If there is some connection between ambition to be like some one else and a physical resemblance between those two, then it may account for the unusual likeness that has been found to exist between Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion, and Max Schmelling, the German heavyweight. But how can this be applied to account for the resemblance between Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York and Senator Hiram Johnson of California. Did Mr. Copeland have an ambition to be like Mr. Johnson or vice-versa? Or does the fact that they are in the same calling, i. e. being a United States senator, have something to do with it?

Almost every famous man, it would seem, has a double, and some of them have more than one. Sir Charles E. Madden, former commander of the British fleet, is declared to be a "perfect double" for King George V of England, as is Sir Henry Whitehead, British textile manufacturer, who resembles the English monarch so closely that, arriving in New York some months ago, he had difficulty convincing shipnews reporters that he wasn't the king incognito.

A half block away from the roar of the Grand Central terminal in New York city, a man who is a "dead ringer" for Thomas A. Edison wears a porter's badge and pushes a baggage truck. A humble moujik was the double of the late Czar Nicholas of Russia, and a petty swindler of Count Leo Tolstoy, the great novelist. A delicatessen dealer, a dentist and even a chimney-sweep have been mistaken for former Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany.

Lincoln had a double in Colonel Elmer Loomis of Girard, Kan., whose presence on the streets used to send school children home declaring that they had seen Abraham Lincoln in the flesh.

He served in the Civil war and always appeared on the streets in a high silk hat and long coat, similar to that worn by the President. His friends had often commented upon his likeness to Lincoln.

"Out in Girard, where I lived for more than forty years," said Colonel Loomis once, "they called me 'Honest Abe'! They sent me for three terms to the Kansas legislature and I am proud of my resemblance to Lincoln. I try to live as Lincoln did."

An actor who took the part of Lincoln in a play of some years back was a double of the Great Emancipator. Impressed by his own impersonation, he began to delude himself with the idea that he actually was Lincoln. He grew a full beard, he assumed the Lincolnian mannerism of dress, gait, speech and personal habits and in time he seemed to believe that his appearance ought to have been greeted with the respect due so important a personage. So painstakingly did he imitate Lincoln that a cynical friend finally remarked: "That actor will never be satisfied until some one assassinates him!"

The uncertainty about the death of John Wilkes Booth, assassin of Lincoln, made many people believe he was still alive when one of his doubles appeared. Booth, after his flight from Washington, was trapped by soldiers in a barn at Bowling Green. The barn was set afire and several shots were fired into it. The charred body of a man, presumed to be Booth, was afterward found, but it was beyond identification.

One of the poses who fired into that barn was Lieut. William Allen, and he may have been Booth's executioner. Some years later Lieutenant Allen was passing the stage door of a London theater in a cab just as Edwin Booth, brother of the slain assassin, emerged. The actor caught sight of the face peering from the cab window.

"Wilkes!" he shouted. "Wilkes!" Lieutenant Allen was a double for John Wilkes Booth! But he passed on and never declared himself. For years Edwin Booth believed his brother to be still alive.

There were several known doubles of President Roosevelt, L. M. Garfield, a manufacturer of Xenia, Ohio, used to be mistaken for Teddy and camber often refused his fare, saying they were repaid by the honor of driving him about, while in Chicago, when T. R. was scheduled to be in the city, newspaper men besieged Garfield in the hotel, insisting he was the President.

In Florence, Italy, Pietro Cassini, a woodcutter, used to put on spectacles of the kind worn by Colonel Roosevelt and delight American tourists with his imitation of Teddy's grin. He did not speak a word of English. The colonel's most conspicuous double was F. G. Huddleston, general manager of a mining company at Los Angeles, Calif. His travels in the western states caused many, even former Rough Riders, to think he was T. R. incognito, as he had the same keen eyes, prominent nose, heavy jaws, wore his mustache in a similar manner and had many personal characteristics of the colonel.

Thomas Merton, a newspaper man of Canton and Pittsburgh, who reported McKinley's "front-porch" campaign in 1896, was often photographed as the candidate, and many of the daily and weekly magazines carried snapshots of McKinley which were really reproductions of Merton's face and figure taken with the tacit consent of McKinley, who once remarked that they were "just as lifelike and often better-looking than the real article."

Five hundred persons, all of whom knew Merton personally, saw him do his first posing of this sort. A famous publication which had always prided itself upon the accuracy of its pictures sent a corps of men to Canton in the early days of the campaign to get up a big pictorial issue. They arrived on Saturday afternoon, only to learn that the candidate was not feeling well. While bewailing this delay, the leader of the picture corps saw Merton passing and captured him by main force.

"I want you to get up on the porch and pose as Mr. McKinley," he shouted.

The newspaper men thought the fellow was crazy when he began to take off his Prince Albert coat. In a few minutes, Merton, dressed in the silk hat and coat, mounted the steps of the McKinley home and, while the future President was slumbering inside, he posed for pictures which afterward became famous. Mr. McKinley, when told of the incident the next day, laughed heartily and later declared that they were among the best he had ever had taken.

President Wilson enjoyed the luxury of several facial counterparts. A tremendous commotion was caused in New York city in the spring of 1913, when one of them, Deputy Fire Commissioner W. Holden Weeks of New York, dropped dead in the street. Grief-stricken crowds with bared heads blocked the thoroughfare. So pronounced was the resemblance to President Wilson that police had difficulty in convincing the people of their error.

Another Wilson double was a New York man named Fleming who, it is said, was refused a life insurance policy during the World war because his strong resemblance to the President made him a possible target for an assassin's bullet and therefore a poor "risk." The familiar features of Calvin Coolidge have a replica in those of Charles Hitz, a Philadelphia waiter whose resemblance to the former Chief Executive was so marked as to give him a chance to play the part of the President in a motion picture, and friends of George McKelvey, an attorney in Ohio, declare that he is the "very image" of the present head of the nation, Herbert Hoover.

Diverting the Waters of the Mississippi River

The Bonnet Carre spillway, 28 miles above New Orleans, is rapidly nearing completion, and when finished will divert the waters of the Mississippi river into Lake Pontchartrain when swirling floods threaten the city. All that remains to be done on the $3,000,000 safety valve is the completion of side levees from the spillway to the river. This interesting airview shows the expanse of concrete.

MAYBE HE'LL STICK Yes, Melvin Maas Was Down in Panama

Dr. Jose Maria Reyna Andrade, the provisional president of Guatemala, who took office on January 2, the fourth man to become head of the republic in the short space of two weeks. First Gen. Lazaro Chacon was elected president, but he being incapacitated by illness, Baudilio Palma was appointed provisional president. Then by a coup d'etat, Gen. Manuel Orellana set himself up as head of the country. The United States' refusal to recognize Orellana led to his resignation and the subsequent election of Andrade. It is believed that Andrade will hold office until an election can be held.

Proudly sporting a hat that makes Calvin Coolidge's world-famous tennagon lid look like a skull cap, Representative Melvin Maas of Minnesota returned to the National Capitol following an air tour to Panama and back. The hat, acquired by the congressman during his trip, measures four feet across and two feet from top to bottom.

FASHIONS IN KNITTED WEAR PLACE EMPHASIS ON STRIPES

Charming Sports Costume

SENTENCED to receive many stripes of many gay colors—such is the decree handed down for knitted fashions. In all the advance showings of things knitted, stripes are made a theme of special importance, not only for sweaters and accessory scarfs and such, but for the costume entire as shown in the illustration herewith.

Suits on the order of the model pictured declare emphatically "what's newest" in knitted togs for midseason wear and for spring. This fetching two-piece is of light woven knit. The skirt with its inverted box pleats and the little jacket are striped in pink, white, and green.

Competing with the very new stripes are charming flecked effects. For instance, the alliance of white, black, and gray is noted in a stunning knitted suit for spring. Contrasting patterning and color arrangement in the yoke and scarf make the costume unusually attractive.

Angora embroidery is another decorative feature in the knitted realm. Tailored knitted suits designedly worked with angora are highlighted throughout resort collections, which is assurance of their prestige for spring.

The tunic blouse and lace-wool sweaters are also contributing factors to knitted modes for now and for the season to come. Bouclé tunic dresses are proving very great favorites. One model in particular has captured the fancy of style-minded women—that with angora stripes in its sleeves and the scarf which finishes the neckline.

Lacy wool sweaters are advanced, especially in white, at the present moment, for resort wear to complete modish white flannel ensembles.

Particularly noteworthy are the sweaters which space lacy knit with embroidered patterning.

It is interesting to note the emphasis placed on such styling features as the peplum, the bolero and the flaring skirt in knitted fashions.

For Party or Resort.

Half the urge of going south is the prospect of wearing the lovely sheer frocks which are being so temptingly displayed at this time of the year among resort fashions. Likewise half the fun in staying home is the lure of wearing frocks just as airy-fairy, to parties and dances which are so happily fitting in the winter night hours for those who remain in the north.

Every one knows that sheer cotton makes one look very young whether it be under southern, sunny skies or in the dine and dance environment of midwinter festivities in the north. The frock illustrated is a timely theme

FOR THE BUSY HOUSEKEEPER

In many homes fresh cookies are so much more enjoyed than a large amount baked at one time. Here is the ice-box cooky which may be kept many days and when a tin of fresh cookies is wanted, slice off a few, put them in the oven and bake them as brown as you like.

Ice Box Cookies.—Take one cupful each of butter, brown and granulated sugar, two eggs, one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, one cupful of nutmeats, one teaspoonful each of almond and vanilla extract and four and one-fourth cupfuls of flour. Cream the butter, add the sugar, eggs and other ingredients. Roll into two rolls and let stand on a cloth in a pan placed in the ice box. The cloth keeps the dough from flattening and sticking to the pan and thus losing its round shape. Slice very thin, decorate with half a nut meat, a raisin or cherry as one's taste suggests.

Another food so much liked in all our homes is fresh rolls. It takes time to prepare a light and crisp roll. Here is a recipe which will keep for a week or longer in the ice chest and a pan of biscuits may be baked any time one cares to serve them:

Ice Box Rolls.—Dissolve two compressed yeast cakes in one-fourth of a cupful of warm water, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Add two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of sugar to a pint of boiling water. Beat two eggs and mix all together with four cupfuls of flour. Beat well, then add three and one-half cupfuls more of flour, mix well with a spoon but do not knead. Set away in the refrigerator until the next day at noon, when it will be ready to use. Handle the rolls quickly, brush with melted lard or sweet fat when they are placed in the pan. Let stand until more than double their bulk; keep covered while rising in a warm place.

With these two mixtures in the ice box, one may be ready for the unexpected and need not worry.

World Pays Tribute at Shrine of Bobby Burns

Many places have been "made" by the genius of a great writer. Scott has done more for the tourist agencies and the railroads of England than any of his countrymen, because his range was so wide. He discovered the Trossachs and Loch Katrine, and even made the Peak of Derbyshire world-famous. But there are no more hallowed spots than those which dot the Burns country.

The country town of Ayr lies in the center of a fine sandy coast, with wonderful sea view across the great firth. There is no house in the kingdom, no palace or castle or great mansion, that has half the attraction for the world as the little thatched blygin at Alloway where Robert Burns was born. In its visitors' book are inscribed the names of men and women famous in literature, art and statercraft, the names of peers and peasants and of kings, all come to worship at the shrine of genius.

Close by is the Auld Brig o' Doon, leaping in a single gray and graceful span the little stream whose name has gone round the world. Close by, too, is the haunted kirk, where Tam o' Shanter saw witches and warlocks holding revelry in its churchyard. In the town itself can still be seen the Auld Brig of Ayr, the theme of one of his finest poems, whilst the river Ayr is forever associated with the ode.

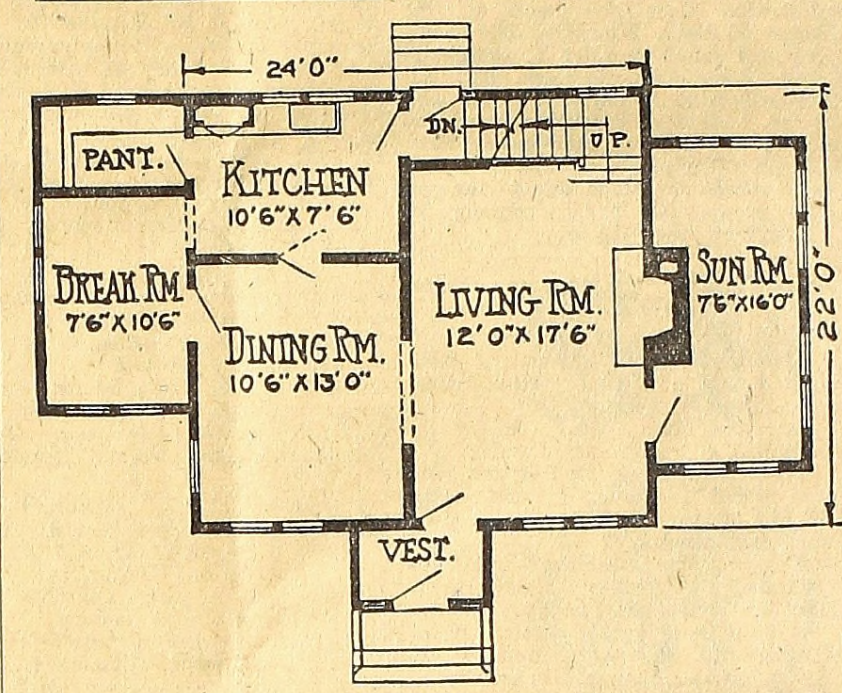

Man's Better Half

The correct expression as used in the Bible to describe a man's wife is helpmeet. In Genesis 2:18 is this: "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man shall be alone; I will make him a help meet for him." Meet is here used to mean fit or suitable—a helper suitable for him. The words were combined as helpmeet to mean a wife, and changed by popular misuse to helpmate, and both words now are recognized as proper.

New England Colonial Style of Architecture Always Satisfies

First Floor Plan.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Here is an excellent example of the New England colonial style of architecture, in frame construction and with such modifications as are required to adapt it to modern standards and tastes. The house is a simple, practically square, two-story with gable-roof type, but with a wing added at each end to relieve the boxlike effect and to provide space for a sun room and a breakfast room.

At the center of the front there is an entrance vestibule opening into a long living room at the right. At one side of this living room is a fireplace and a door opening into the sun room, the latter almost wholly inclosed with windows on three sides. At the far end of the living room the stairway to second floor rises directly from the room.

An arched opening connects the living room with the dining room, which is at the other side of the house and off of which opens the breakfast room. There are also doors from the dining room and breakfast room into the kitchen, which is placed just at the rear of the dining room. A portion of the breakfast room wing, to the rear of the breakfast room, is occupied by a large pantry opening off the kitchen. The kitchen itself is small but compactly arranged to facilitate the housework. At one side of the kitchen a door leads to a small rear entry and this also leads to the basement stairs.

The upper floor contains three bedrooms and bath. These bedrooms are all of about the same size and each is provided with a closet equipped with the most modern type of clothes-hanging equipment which greatly increases the capacity of the closet. All the second floor rooms are grouped about a central hall and the bedrooms are all conveniently close to the bathroom.

Ventilators in Kitchen Are Desirable Adjunct

There are three general styles of kitchen electric ventilators, each style designed to fit a specific set of circumstances.

First of all there is the portable type especially adapted for use by people who rent their homes. These ventilators come all ready to be hung up over a window and may be easily removed when the family moves to another residence.

When you wish to start it you merely draw the window down from the top a bit and turn the switch which operates the motor.

The cup-shaped blades of the ventilating fan suck out all the unpleasant heat and fumes and steam and smoke and send them forth into the great outdoors. When the cooking is finished you just turn off the motor and close the window.

The "built-in" type of ventilator is a cabinet model designed to be installed in the house when it is being built. It must be specified in the plans of the house.

Its advantage over the portable type is that it cuts off none of the light from the principal windows, as it has its own little windows, both inside and out, and a single operation opens both windows and starts the fan going. Another motion shuts them and stops the motor.

The third type of ventilator, which is very, very scientific and which supplies the truly ideal form of ventilation, consists of a hood which is placed directly above the range and a pipe leading to the outdoors. The ventilating fan is in the pipe, and as the heat and fumes rise from the stove they are sucked up into the hood, along through the pipe and forced outdoors.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Fair Quakeress

WHAT were the relations which existed between George III of England and Hannah Lightfoot, generally known as the "Fair Quakeress"? Much has been printed about the attachment of the young prince for the pretty Hannah Lightfoot, and still more has been whispered behind closed doors, but, despite the records and the gossip, it is an extremely difficult matter to state to what extent these stories are true or false.

Hannah Lightfoot was the daughter or niece—even here the relationship was not clear—of a linen draper whose shop was in St. James' market. A beautiful and attractive young girl, Miss Lightfoot was the toast of the section of London in which she lived and numbered her admirers by the score, finally—or so it is stated—even attracting the attention of the prince of Wales, later destined to become George III. Some chroniclers of the time declare that, through the intervention of Elizabeth Chudleigh, who later became duchess of Kingston, the prince of Wales persuaded her to leave home and go through the form of marriage with a man named Axford and that he secretly married her and that the couple later had a daughter who became the wife of a man named Dalton.

One version of the story declares that the prince fell in love with the "Fair Quakeress," as she was widely known, about 1753, while she was living with her uncle, Henry Wheeler, and that her mysterious disappearance soon afterward was owing to the fact that she started to live under royal protection. Many scandals were told of George III when he was still prince of Wales, for the reason that a number of the eligible ladies at court were intent upon marrying him. Olive Wilton Serres, who later became the princess of Cumberland, and who was one of the greatest gossips of the court, is said to have flooded the imperial circles with all sorts of wild rumors, and some maintain that she alone was responsible for the "legend" of Hannah Lightfoot. However, John Heneage Jesse, one of the best informed historians of this time and author of three large volumes dealing with the "Memoirs of the Life and Reign of King George III," was evidently convinced of the truth of the major portion of the story which connected the name of the prince and the beautiful Quakeress. In fact, Jesse located the precise date of Hannah Lightfoot's marriage to Axford and discovered that on March 3, 1756, testimony was brought against her and she was expelled from the Society of Friends.

The following is an extract from a letter of a cousin of the "Fair Quakeress," which outlines a story to which her relatives have always adhered: "Hannah Lightfoot, while residing with her father and mother, was frequently seen by the king when he drove by going to and from the house of parliament. She eloped in 1754 and was married to Isaac Axford, which my father discovered about three weeks after, and none of her family have seen her since, though her mother had a letter or two from her, but at last died of grief. There are many fabulous stories about her, but my aunt, her mother, could never trace any of them as being true."

Sir Nathaniel Wraxall, in his "Historical Memoirs of My Own Time," says: "Stories were generally chronicled of George's attachment to a young woman, a Quaker, just as it was whispered many years afterwards that he distinguished Lady Bridget Tollemache by his particular attentions. The former report was probably well founded and the latter assertion was unquestionably true, but those who have enjoyed the opportunity of studying the king's character are most inclined to the belief that in neither instance did he pass the limits of innocent gallantry and occasional familiarity."

In Daunt's "Personal Recollection of Daniel O'Connell" it is said that the Irish statesman in his youth conceived the idea of writing a novel founded on the "affection evinced by the prince of Wales for the beautiful Quaker named Hannah Lightfoot" and, in the "Gentleman's Magazine" during the early part of the Nineteenth century, were several statements which showed clearly that the story of George and his fair Quakeress was generally accepted before the close of the Eighteenth century.

But, in all fairness, it must be stated that an analysis of the available records and a careful sifting of the evidence leaves the impartial investigator undecided as to whether nothing more than a casual and harmless flirtation resulted from the royal friendship or whether the affair was one of those "matters of the left hand" which are recorded only in the private archives of the reigning house of England.

Drowns Motor Horns

The mayor of St. Nazarre, in France, has ordered the suppression of all loud speakers operating on the streets, on the ground that they might interfere with hearing the motor horns and are therefore a source of public danger. In Paris the blowing of motor horns at night has been prohibited and the suggestion is being considered to prohibit the blowing of all horns, either night or day.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

A girl, pretty and young, rented a room in Brooklyn. It was in one of those houses where lodgers are permitted to cook their own meals and the girl was particular to see that the little gas stove was in working order. She paid a week's room rent in advance, as is the custom in such cases, went out and bought a small bunch of flowers, came back and put them in a glass, plugged the keyhole and door cracks, lay down and turned on the gas.

When at last they opened the gas-filled room, the girl was asleep forever. Her purse held a little money, but neither there nor on her clothes could any identifying mark be found. The police finally discovered, in the waste-paper basket, a torn and crumpled sheet of paper with the names of some illustrators on it. They visited the first one on the list, told him he would have to go to the morgue and see if he could identify the girl.

This didn't make much of a hit with him, as he is naturally a highly-strung, nervous fellow, but he took a friend with him and accompanied the police. For purposes of this story, we will call the friend John Doe. It was night. As the party reached the street, the policeman saw a large automobile and evidently knew the chauffeur, because they asked him to drive them around to the morgue. He said he would, as he was on his way back to the garage and had nothing to do. They told him the story and the name of the artist and his friend.

It seemed to the artist that the morgue was a dark and mysterious place.

They showed him the girl, and it was a bit of a relief to him to discover that he never had seen her before. When they came out and shut the door behind them, the automobile was still waiting. They started toward it, when suddenly from the dark doorway they had left, came a wailing voice, saying:

"John Doe! John Doe!"

To say that the artist and his friend were startled would be to understate the case. Pale and trembling, they lunged on to each other. A laugh came from the waiting car.

"Don't be scared," called the chauffeur. "I just couldn't resist it. I once was a stage ventriloquist. I called 'John Doe,' because I couldn't remember the other guy's name."

That is the end of the story, but I might say that the police never identified the girl. None of the artists whose names she had written down had ever seen her. Apparently she had thought of trying to get work as a model and had copied their names out of magazines or a telephone book. The car, by the way, was said to belong to a dignitary of the church.

Those who turn out articles under the name of some prominent person have become commonly known as "ghost writers." A new wave of interest in the collection of autographs, especially among schoolboys, has given this profession a new twist. There are now "ghost autographers." If some of those most in the public eye stopped to write their names for all who ask, they wouldn't have time for anything else and also would develop writer's cramp. So substitutes autograph practically everything except their checks.

Here Is the Navy of Panama

Here is the steamship Panquico, which alone comprises the navy of the Republic of Panama. Originally it was a British trawler; then it became a rum runner and, being chased into the harbor of Cristobal by American gunboats, was purchased by the Panamanian government for $20,000. The Panquico is chiefly used in awing the coastal Indians who at times threaten rebellion.

Coeds Careless as to Diet

Columbia, Mo.—Smearing lipstick on too thickly, failure to manicure the finger nails properly, not eating fruit daily, being hungry too often between meals and contracting colds easily are just a few of the things which may be the tell-tale indications that a college girl is not overly intelligent—or, to be scientific about it, not very high in her "I. Q."

These facts and many other intimate glimpses into the life of college girls have been brought to light by the research of Mrs. Esther Stearn, professor of chemistry at Christian college, a girls' school here.

The investigation showed that 36 per cent of all college girls are dieting to reduce their weight.

In making the study, the twenty-five students ranking highest in the intelligence tests were compared to the lowest twenty-five. Two hundred and twenty-five other cases were considered.

Ninety per cent of the low "I. Q." group use lipstick, while only 70 per cent of the other group employ it, the report showed. Over 50 per cent of the high group give daily care to their finger nails, while only 25 per cent of the lower group do their daily manicure.

Seemingly the mentally bright get that way by practice, for they spent an average of fifteen hours each week at their studies, while the lower ranking students spent only 11.9 hours.

It would also seem that being intelligent is another manner of keeping the doctor away, for 48 per cent of the high group never went to the infirmary, while only 28 per cent of the low group escape medical attention.

While both groups use candy in about equal quantities, only 50 per cent of the low ranking students eat fruit each day, as compared to 75 per cent in the other group.

POTPOURRI

Few Young Presidents

Only six of our thirty-one presidents were under fifty years at the time of their inauguration—Polk, Pierce, Grant, Garfield, Cleveland, and Roosevelt. The latter was the youngest, forty-two. The oldest was William Henry Harrison, sixty-eight, who served but a month before he died, and Buchanan, sixty-five, who served one term. As ex-presidents, Adams lived longest, reaching ninety years. Prepared for Second Flood Olympia, Wash.—A dry land Noah is continuing preparations for his personal escape in an ark when the Pacific coast feels the wrath of the Lord and sinks into the Pacific ocean.

There is no question in the mind of William Lound Greenwood, sixty, but that folks along the Pacific slope are going to get a surprise some fine day after the year 1932.

Mount Hope, in British Columbia, will sink into the Fraser river, according to the grizzled "Captain Billy" Greenwood, who never skipped a boat in his life. The coast line will disappear. Victoria, Seattle, and all cities as far south as San Francisco will be swallowed up by huge waves. There will be a second inundation, and then California will get what's coming. In the north the ocean will be halted by the Cascade mountains, but in the south the land will sink as far back as the Rockies.

Panic and death will be everywhere, but "Captain Billy" will calmly knock off work in the sawmill where he is employed, board the "Ark Second" and sail to safety in a craft that sailormen say couldn't float in a calm lake.

Greenwood told all about it, in the astonishing cabin of his astonishing craft.

Eight years ago he started the ark. It will be completed by 1932, when he expects first forerunners of destruction of the Pacific coast to start.

Unlike Noah, "Captain Billy" will take no animals along, aside from his two dogs.

EARLY HABITS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Mac was going to get married to a very nice girl indeed, and he was looking forward to the new life with a good deal of enthusiasm as he told me his plans for the future.

"I'm going to be a lot different next year," he said, "than I've been before, and I could see that all his careless, objectionable habits were going to slip away from him and that in some magic way marriage would make of him a new creature, would give him a new slant on life and a stronger control of himself.

"What's going to make you different?" I asked. Mac was twenty-five years old and was pretty well confirmed in certain ways, and I knew that it would take a spiritual upheaval to cause him to hang his pajamas up in the morning, or to keep his closet in order, or to be on time at meals, or to calculate accurately how far this month's salary could be depended upon to pay last month's bills.

"She will," was his confident reply. "She'll straighten me out and make a new man of me, I am sure."

"I shouldn't be so sure," I said.

"She'll have all she can do to manage herself without bothering a great deal about you, and besides folks don't change a great deal after they are eighteen, either for good or bad. We have our habits of life pretty well established before we are twenty and all the most of us do after that is to follow more surely the path that we have marked out for ourselves."

Mac shook his head. He didn't believe me. The new relation, he was sure, would strengthen all his weaknesses and eliminate all his faults. That was a long time ago. Mac is the same sort of fellow he was before he was married—sweet tempered, irresponsible, always in debt up to his ears, never on time to an appointment, and constantly hopeful that the future will bring greater success than the past has done. I don't know whether or not his wife has ever tried to change him. I imagine it has been as I said, and that she has had more than she could do to make herself what she would like to be.

Habits of life are pretty well established in youth—good or bad—and we seldom break them. It is a satisfaction to me to have realized that good habits are quite as persistent as bad ones. The main thing is to realize early in life how tenacious our habits are.

I meet occasionally the boys whom I knew in my youth—fifty years ago, some of them. Physically they have changed. They are fatter or thinner or more bald or gray haired, but the plous are still interested in religion, the tricky are still dishonest, the procrastinators are late as usual, and the profane have only increased their irreverent vocabularies. They haven't changed much, nor do we.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain.

As softly as the light, without a sob or cry, Jeems knelt beside him. He spoke his father's name, yet knew that no answer would rise from the lifeless lips. He repeated it in an unexcitable way as his hands clutched at the silent form. The starlight left nothing unrevealed; his father dead, his white lips twisted, his hands clenched at his side, the top of his head naked and bleeding from the scalping knife. Jeems slumped down. He may have spoken again. He may have sobbed. But the thing like death that was creeping over him, its darkness and vastness, hid him from himself. He remained beside his father, as motionless and as still. Odd crouched near. After a little, an inch at a time, he crept to the dead man. He muzzled the hands that were growing cold. He licked Jeems' face where it had fallen against his father's shoulder. Then he was motionless again, his eyes seeking about him like balls of living flame. Death was in the air. He was breathing it. He was hearing it. At last, irresistibly impelled to answer the spirit of death, he sat back on his haunches and howled. It was not Odd's howl any more than it had been Jeems' voice speaking to his father a few moments before. It was a ghostly sound that seemed to quiet even the whispering of the leaves, an unearthly and shivering cry that sent echoes over the clearing, with grief for company.

It was this which brought Jeems out of the depths into which he had fallen. He raised his head and saw his father again, and swayed by his feet. He began seeking. Close by, near the pile of apples which she had helped him gather from under their trees on the slope, he found his mother. She, too, lay with her face to the sky. The little that was left of her unbound hair lay scattered on the earth. Her glorious beauty was gone. Starlight, caressing her gently, revealed to her boy the hideousness of her end. There, over her body, Jeems' heart broke. Odd guarded faithfully, listening to a grief that twisted at his brute soul. Then fell a greater silence. Through long hours the burning logs settled down into flattened masses of dying embers. The darkness came which precedes the day, and after that, dawn.

Jeems rose to face his blasted world. He was no longer a youth but a living thing aged by an eternity that had passed. It was Odd who led him in the quest for Hepsibah Adams. He sought like one half blind and yet sensed everything. He saw the trampled grass, the moccasin-beaten earth at the spring, a hatchet lost in the night, and on the hatchet an English name. But he did not find his uncle.

In the same gray dawn, stirring with the wings of birds and the play of squirrels among the trees, he set out for Tonteur manor.

He carried the hatchet, clutching it as if the wood his fingers gripped held life which might escape him. Because of this hatchet there grew in him a slow and terrible thought that had the strength of a chain. The weapon, with its short hickory handle, its worn iron blade, its battered head, might have been flesh and blood capable of receiving pain or of giving up a secret, so tenacious was the hold of his hand about it. But he did not see the iron or wood. He saw only the name which told him that the English had come with their Indians, or had sent them, as his uncle had so often said they would. The English. Not the French. The English.

And he held the hatchet as if it were an English throat.

But he was not thinking that. The part of him conscious of the act was working unknown to the faculties which made him move and see. His thoughts were imprisoned within stone walls, and around these walls they beat and trampled themselves, always alike, telling him the same things, until their repetition became a droning in his brain. His mother was dead—back there. His father was dead. Indians with English hatchets had killed them, and he must carry the word to Tonteur.

Though which had been wrecked and beaten until now possessed him with a flame behind it that began to burn fiercely but which seemed to give no heat or excitement to his flesh. Only his eyes changed, until they were those of a savage, flinty in their hardness and without depth in which one might read his emotions. His face was white and passionless, with lines caught and etched upon it as if in bloodless stone. He looked at the hatchet again, and Odd heard the gasp which came from his lips. The hatchet was a voice telling him things and gloating in the story it had to tell. It made him think more clearly and pressed on him an urge for caution. As he drew nearer to Tonteur manor, the instincts of self-preservation awoke in him. They did not make him leave the open trail or travel less swiftly, but his senses became keener, and unconsciously he began to prepare himself for the physical act of vengeance.

To reach Tonteur was the first obligation in the performance of this act. Tonteur still had a few men who had not gone with Dieksau, and as Jeems recalled the firing of guns, a picture painted itself before his eyes. The murderers of his father and mother had swung eastward from Forbidden valley, and the seigneur, warned by Hepsibah's fire, had met them with loaded muskets. He had faith in Ton-teur and did not question what had happened in the bottom lands. Before this no doubt had crossed his mind as to Hepsibah's fate. The English hatchets had caught him, somewhere, or he would have come during the long night when he and Odd had watched alone with death. But now a forlorn and scarcely living hope began to rise in his breast as he came to Tonteur's hill—an unreasoning thought that something might have driven his Uncle Hepsibah to the Richelieu, a hope that, after lighting his signal fire, he had hurried to the manor with the expectation of finding his people there. His father must have seen Hepsibah's warning across Forbidden valley, and had waited, disbelieving, while death traveled with the shades of night through the lowlands.

He might see Hepsibah, in a moment, coming over the hill.

Hepsibah, and the baron, and men with guns.

Even Odd seemed to be expecting this as they sped through the last oak open and climbed the chestnut ridge. Beyond were the thick edging of crimson sumac, a path breaking through it, and the knob of the hill where they had always paused to gaze over the wonderland which had been given by the king of France to the stalwart vassal Tonteur.

Jeems emerged at this point, and the spark which had grown in his breast was engulfed by sudden blackness.

There was no longer a Tonteur manor. There were no buildings but one. The great manor house was gone. The looped church was gone. The farmers' cottages beyond the meadows and fields were gone. All that remained was the stone gristmill, with the big wind wheel turning slowly at the top of it and making a whining sound that came to him faintly through the distance.

Jeems, looking down, saw in the drifting veil of smoke a shroud that covered death. For the first time he forgot his father and mother. He thought of some one he had known and loved a long time ago. Toinette.

As he had stood at the edge of the Big forest seeking for a figure that might have been his mother's, he now quested for one that might be Toinette's. But the same hope was not in his breast, nor the same fear. Certainty had taken their place. Toinette was dead, despoiled of her beauty and her life as his mother had been. A fury triumphed over him that was as possessive in its effect as the color which blazed about him in the crimson bush. It had been growing in him since the moment he knelt at his father's side; it had strained at the bounds of his grief when he found his mother; it had filled him with madness, still unformed in his brain, when he covered their faces in the early dawn. Now he knew why he gripped the English hatchet so tightly. He wanted to kill. His eyes turned from the smoke-filled valley of the Richelieu to the south where Champlain lay gleaming in the sun miles away, and the hand which held the hatchet trembled in its new-born yearning for the life blood of a people whom he hated from this day and hour.

He was vaguely conscious of the whine of the mill wheel as he went down into the valley. He did not feel fear or the necessity for concealing his movement, for death would not trouble itself to return to a desolation so complete. But the wheel, as he drew nearer, touched the stillness with a note which seemed to ride with strange insistence over the solitude, as if calling to some one. It became less a thing of iron and wood that was crying in its hunger for oil, and more a voice which demanded his attention. It seemed to him that suddenly he caught what it was saying: "The English beast—the little English beast"—repeating those words until they became a rhythm without a break in their monotony except when a capful of wind set the wheel going faster. It was as if a thought in his brain had been stolen from him. And what it expressed was true. He was the English beast, coming as Madame Tonteur had predicted. Toinette had been right. Fiends with white skins, who were of his blood, had sent their hatchet killers to prove it. And like a lone ghost he was left to see it all. The mill wheel knew and, even in moments of quiet, seemed to possess the power to tell him so.

With stubborn fortitude he faced the gehenna through which he knew he must pass before he could turn south to find his vengeance with Dieksau. Toinette belonged to him now as much as his mother, and it was for her he began to search.

In a ditch which had run almost under the eaves of the looped church, he stumbled on a body. It had fallen among tall grass and weeds and had remained hidden there. It wore a Mohawk war tuft, and in one of its stiffened hands was another English hatchet like the one Jeems had. A scalp was at the warrior's belt, and for a moment Jeems turned sick. It was a young girl's scalp, days old.

As he advanced, he could see there had been an alarm and a little fighting. There was old Jean de Lafon, the cure, doubled up like a jackknife, half dressed and with a battered old flintlock under him. He had fired the gun and was running for the forsaken church when a bullet had caught him between his thin shoulder blades. Jeems stood over him long enough to make notes of these things. He saw several more dark blotches on the ground quite near to where the thick oaken door to the church had been. There were Juchereau and Louis Hebert, both well along in years, and not far from them were their wives. Raudot was a fifth. He had been a slow-witted lad, and now he looked like a clown who had died with a grin on his face. These people had lived nearest to the church. The others had been too far away to answer the alarm quickly, but the result had been the same. Some had come to meet their death. Others had waited for it.

Between this group and the smoldering pile that had been the manor, a lone figure lay on the ground. Jeems went to it slowly. The sprawled-out form was Tonteur. Unlike the others, the baron was fully dressed. He undoubtedly had been armed when he rushed forth from the house, but nothing was left in his hands but the clods of earth which he had seized in a final agony. A cry broke from Jeems. He had loved Tonteur. The seigneur had been the one connecting link between his older years and the dreams of his childhood, and it was because of him that he had never quite seemed to lose Toinette. He crossed the dead man's hands upon his breast and loosened the earth from his fingers. He could feel Toinette at his side, and for a brief interval the sickness in his head and body overcome him so that he could not see Tonteur at all. But he could hear Toinette sobbing.

Eskimo Happiness as Pictured by Physician

With a happy brood of little ones squatting beside her in a cozy igloo, the modern Eskimo mother of Akivik in the Canadian Arctic turns a dial on an expensive radio set and beams as a crooning love song comes over the air from thousands of miles south. Her worries are few and far between, for there is plenty of meat and fish in the igloo, her children receive up-to-date schooling, and when there's sickness there are hospitals and nurses there to take those "heap big pains" away. This rosy picture of life in the Far North is brought by a Canadian government official, Dr. J. A. Urquhart, who has left his modest practice among the Eskimos extending over an area of 90,000 square miles to enjoy a breath of the joys of civilization. It is his first trip out in two years, a journey that would have taken months were it not for the airplane. Doctor Urquhart says that the Eskimo is a devoted father and husband. He does not abuse his wife nor ill-treat his children. Moreover, he is a hard worker, putting in from 10 to 12 hours a day at hunting or fishing.

Many Theories About National Flag Design

There are various theories regarding the origin of the design of our national flag, and most historians do not consider the Betsy Ross legend as trustworthy. It is true that Washington's family coat-of-arms contained both stars and stripes, but these had been used in other flags before 1776. The Grand Union flag, the first to float over the navy, consisted of 13 stripes, alternately red and white, with a union bearing the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, signifying the mother country. Some historians believe that the stripes were taken from the flag and the stars from the colonial banner of Rhode Island. Others maintain that the idea of the flag came from the Netherlands, as Franklin and Adams, who were sent to that country to borrow money for aid, told the Dutch that America had borrowed much from them, including the ideas represented in the flag. Another claim is that the stars were taken from the 13-starred constellation Lyra and signified "harmony."

The Sophomore class had a delightful "peppy" party at the school last Friday afternoon. The program was opened by a square dance. At this the girls excelled the boys. However, much pleasure was had in attempting to follow the "caller." Everyone in the class who was present (the attendance was almost 100%) also took part in many other games. This made them far more interesting, and more fun was derived from the pastime. Lunch was served, and the way the boys emptied their plates was proof enough that the "pudding" was extremely good—and the girls were not far behind. Everyone said it was a good party, and all had a fine time. We are hoping that more parties of this nature can be arranged for the future.

The ancient Oscoda "jinx" seems to be still in effect. Both the East Tawas varsity and the girls' basketball teams were defeated by those of Oscoda last Friday evening. Our second team, however, kept up its good record by defeating the "subs" from Oscoda, 11 to 3. We all hope this is an indication of what is going to happen next year.

Our varsity displayed a fine fighting spirit. At half time the score was tied at 6. Oscoda opened up with a great passing attack in the third quarter which our bewildered boys did not seem able to cope with. The closing quarter found East Tawas making a fine attempt to stage a come-back, but it was short lived, and the whistle ended the game with the final score at 17 to 12. The fans certainly witnessed a fine brand of ball—and after all, isn't that why we play basketball, to furnish good, wholesome entertainment?

The girls were up against a little too experienced outfit. The Oscoda team hasn't been defeated in several years, and is exceptionally good. Our girls, however, played a fine game. The team is composed almost totally of new players, and next year might tell a different story. Oscoda made every one of their attempts at the basket count, while our girls were not so sure of their shots. The game ended 25 to 9 in favor of Oscoda.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES

The Iosco County Normal basketball teams journeyed to Standish last Friday night and won two fast basketball games from the Arena County Normal. Both contests ended in the score of 7 to 6. Miss Becker, State Normal Supervisor, visited us on Wednesday. We are glad to have George Lomas back with us after a week's illness. The Normal class enjoyed a lecture at the Court House Wednesday afternoon given by Miss Rood.

National City—We have Sunday School at 2:30 p. m. every Sunday followed by the Preaching Service. The subject is the second of the series of the "Remarkable Conversions of the Bible." Wealth, rank and power have their very special perils. No doubt the extremes of conditions are unfavorable to Christianity—extreme riches or extreme poverty. Hence that wise and beautiful prayer, "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient."

Rev. George Smith commenced the above series of sermons last Sunday. He took for his text the 11th chapter of Hebrews, verse 31. His subject was "Rahab the Harlot." He came up to expectations, and also kept us the high standard as a Biblical student that he has made for himself since he came to Whittemore, and further we learn that for miles around he is known and loved and respected for his Biblical knowledge, and because he is a man among men. Will you not make an effort to come and listen to him?
