The final score stood 31 to 28, in favor of Harris-ville. Cuyler himself led the attack of the Alcona county boys and account-ed for most of their points. His fast passing, which resulted directly in a number of Harrisville's goals, was the feature of the contest. East Tawas was greatly handicapped due to the fact that several of the regular players were not present. However, the boys put up a gallant fight. It was nobody's game until the final whistle; the lead see-sawed from one team to the other during the entire course of the contest, the margin either team had seldom being more than three points. It is the story of a unreasoning, magnificent ruthless, unreasoning, magnificent fervor, dwarfing all other emotions. Every great production is more than a human drama told in pic-tures. Back of that drama is an in-tangible fascination of locale,

to lift a picture to greatness. "Morocco" has those things. It surging romance is portrayed against the sensuous, colorful background of North Africa, in Morocco, a city of weird masonry, twisted, uneven streets, veiled women, swaggering Legionnaires; seething with unrest and hate; peopled by a cosmopoli-tan collection of humans, turbaned tribesmen, smartly tailored officers, richly gowned women, tipsy soldiers, the wealth and scum of the world. Back of it all lies the cruel, relentless, mysterious Sahara, its parched, searing breath all but felt.

Palace for American Embassy in Rome

This palace on the Via Veneto in Rome has been bought from the Fascist party by the United States, together with another residence and a small park, for $1,000,000 and they will henceforth house the American embassy to Italy.

serious difficulty, for no one could say with certainty in what sort of house Washington was born. There were a wide variety of opinions, some asserting that the Wakefield house was only a mere cabin, others that it was a real colonial mansion, and still others claiming that Washington was not born at Wakefield at all. Students of history, however, under the auspices of the association began researches which led them to what they consider the truth of the matter. No stone was left unturned (and this familiar saying is literally true in this case) in the quest and no document, however remote in its bearing, was left unexamined. When all the evidence had been collected, sifted and used in entrusted with the task of reproducing the house and the plans which he drew up have been approved by the National Fine Arts commission.

The next task was to acquire the land upon which the restored home was to stand, and this was made possible by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who purchased 267 acres of the Wakefield estate and organized a corporation to hold the tract in trust for the Wakefield organization. The actual site of the house where a monument was erected with funds provided by a congressional appropriation has been under the jurisdiction of the War department, but early last year the War department turned it over to the national park service of the Interior department, which has officially designated it as the George Washington Birthplace National monument. The national park service is co-operating with the Wakefield association and the United States Commission for the Observance of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington in the plans for rebuilding Wakefield.

The Washington family first settled on a part of the present Wakefield estate in March, 1665, a full century before the Revolution. Col. John Washington, the great-grandfather of George Washington, had come to Westmoreland, Va., in 1656. He died and was buried there in 1676. Maj. Lawrence Washington and Maj. John Washington, his sons, succeeded him In the ownership of Wakefield.

After their marriages, the family lived on separate parts of the Wakefield estate until the house in which George Washington was born was burned, in 1780. After that, the Washingtons continued in other houses on the land, and descendants still live on part of the same Wakefield estatea continuous possession, in whole or In part, for 266 years, eight generations.

It was at Wakefield, then, that George Washington was born on February 22, 1732, according to the modern calendar. Between three and four years later the family moved to their estate of 2,500 acres which embraced the present Mount Vernon. There Washington passed about four more years of his boyhood. Then he moved again with his parents, this time to King George county, Va., to an estate (with a "mansion house") which had previously belonged to William Strothar, located approximately two miles naccessibility in the past, Wakefield has been neglected during most of the years that it has been known as Washington's birthplace. His step-son placed a small tablet to mark the spot after the fire. A farmer who later owned the land saved it from the hands of the souvenir hunters. The state of Virginia planned to build a memorial, but the Civil war prevented this plan from being carried out.

ginia," as the historian expresses It,

he went back to Mount Vernon again, having inherited it in 1752, and other members of the family lived on at Wakefield until the fire on Christmas day in 1780.

So far as the United States government is concerned, the first official action came in 1879, when congress appropriated $3,000 for a monument. Two years passed. Then the resolution was redrafted, making the appropriation ten times as much. More years passed. Finally, in the 90s, the monument was built.

When the project for the bicentennial commemoration was formulated it was at once pointed out that the event should take into consideration the birthplace of the man whose birth is to be celebrated. Great importance has attached to the place where he died, Mount Vernon, but it is his birth that is to be commemorated in 1932. Until the Wakefield association began its work seven years ago, this historic estate had been sadly neglected. As a part of its plan for the restoration, the association secured permission from the War department to make excavations on the site of the house, and these excavations established the fact that the house was of brick, not, as had ben erroneously reported, of wood. Quantities of brick had escaped the hands of visitors eager for souvenirs because it was buried in the ground. It was established that the brick had been made on the Wakefield estate. The bricks for the new Wakefield will be produced from the original clay pit. In fact, so close will be the adherence to the model of the past that bricks of a peculiarly mottled surface, burned with a liquid acid that forms a grayish fireproof glaze, which were used where the heat was greatest around fireplaces and chimneys, will be reproduced just as they were in the original. The exterior view of the house was decided upon only after research had established the details. A frontage about double the depth was indicated by the extant foundations. These walls extend down only a few feet below the surface, and the fact that the surface at the present time averages at least a foot above the level it had when young George Washington ran tion walls, indicating that it was large enough to roast an ox in. The caretaker will live there. It was in that spot that the excavators found many pieces of broken crockery and bones. Some of these pieces are now on exhibition in the National museum at Washington.

A round table, saved from Wakefield at the time of the fire, and which tradition in the Washington family says was brought from England in 1660, has been presented by Mrs. H. L. Rust, president of the Wakefield association, for placing in the house when it is restored.

The broken Washington platter, in the salt glaze in vogue in 1735, has been restored by potters and duplicates will be soon available. Other pieces of furniture and other belongings from the original house are doubtless extant in various parts of the country, and the association hopes by purchase or by gift to acquire them for the memorial. These will be entered in the Golden Book of Wakefield, as a record of the donor.

Among the pictures that will be placed on the walls are a replica of Gilbert Stuart's portrait of Washington as President, and Rembrandt Peale's Lafayette, painted in Paris, which have already been presented by Mrs. L. K. Graves and Mrs. H. P. Woodruff.

Another project, apart from the rebuilding and refurnishing of the house, which the Wakefield association has undertaken, is the rebuilding of the ancient log house. It will stand on the site of a log house that used to be on the estate. Furthermore, the association has purchased, by formal deed of conveyance executed by the present Washington heirs, title to the family burial ground. In the ancient arched vault ten members of the Washington family, including the father of George, are buried. The Wakefield Memorial association has asked the United States government to dredge and improve the harbor, to admit visitation by boat from the Potomac river, to build an adequate wharf and to landscape the grounds, after the present granite shaft has been removed from the site of the birthplace. It is expected that such co-operation will be given, so that everything will be ready for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth ir 1932.

Any number of the southern resort | midwinter coat is the latest message from headquarters. However, its colorful appearance in midseason is but a prologue to the spectacular career which is assured for it, seeing that the suit is being made a theme of tremendous importance for spring-and where there is a suit there is a blouse.

For the new blouse to wear with the new suit choose plaid, stripes or lace (wool or fine alencon) and your reward in terms of chic will be great. Not only are plaids and stripes creating a furore in the realm of the blouse but everywhere in the spring style pageant these gay patternings hold the center of the stage.

Plaid taffeta, plaid crepe, plaid linen or chiffon, they are one as important as the other for the making of the blouse, and the same may be said in regard to weaves that are striped. The models in the picture are typical of the new trends. Note in the blouse to the right at the top how the designer plays up verticals, horizontals and "on the bias" in manipulating the striped crepe. The little godets inserted about the hipline achieve the now-so-modish peplum silhouette.

The plaid taffeta blouse below features the surplice fastening which is

HERE is no unemployment in the Hawaiian Islands. Instead their citizens of all ages are busy sending a flood of gold in the form of Hawaiian pineapple all over the United States and also to many far distant lands. There is romance in the story of how these semitropical islands happen to be one of the busiest parts of our country at this time when unemployment is so widespread. It is the romance of how the thought of one man greatly enlarged the whole economic aspect of these islands which we were once so reluctant to annex.

For our government was far from cordial to the idea of receiving Hawaii under its flag back in 1895 when an annexation treaty was first negotiated with President Harrison. This was withdrawn by President Cleveland in April of that year, but brought up again after President McKinley's election, and Hawaii was not finally admitted into the Union until July 7, 1898.

trolled about 25,000 acres, but he rightly believed the demand for canned pineapple would in a few years exceed the capacity of the industry's entire acreage.

So he sent men into the Philippines and down into Mexico, and investigated Fiji, San Domingo, Malaya and even Queensland, Australia, before coming back to the Hawaiian Islands and buying for $1,100,000 Lanai, considered up to that time a hopelessly barren island beaten ten months in the year by northeast winds beneath the blasts of which the scattering trees on it were permanently bowed.

There was no harbor then, no roads, no towns, no labor, and much of the good soil was covered with enormous cactus. But the soil tested well and the climate was propitious. The altitude, average rainfall and natural drainage were about right. Dole solved the problem of fighting the obstinate cactus by hitching a cable chain to heavy tractors and literally dragging the dense growth down.

ing the numbers "one" or "two" or "three" together with his name in the tops of the cans. This is a pioneer procedure which will undoubtedly extend to other canned products in the course of time.

When the housewife uses fresh fruit she can look at it and see its condition. When she uses canned fruit she has to depend on the labels to tell truthfully what quality of fruit is inside. The cans of pineapple with "one" stamped in their tops contain the best fruit in appearance, texture, syrup and color; those stamped "two" contain fruit just as fine but not quite so shapely and packed in syrup slightly less sweet; and those stamped "three" contain good, wholesome fruit, packed in the same syrup as "two," but

busy season, but their children are cared for in the connery

There was good reason for this reluctance. Just for the sake of acquiring a Pacific naval station this country did not want to assume the permanent financial liability which these islands seemed likely to prove. As late as its 1907-1908 edition the Encyclopedia Americana stated that "the danger of depending upon a single crop (sugar) has long been recognized, and persistent efforts have been made to develop minor industries" in Hawaii.

One Man Did It

To understand how Hawaii developed a second important crop which goes out as a flood of golden pineapple and forms one of the two great industries of the Hawaiian Islands, it is necessary to go back thirty years to the beginning of the career of one James D. Dole. It was in 1899 that this man, just graduated from Harvard, set out for the Hawaiian Islands from a suburb of Boston known as Jamaica Plain.

He went there to grow coffee. He knew nothing about pineapple culture. Neither did he know anything about canning. But, after various experiments, he went back to Boston to get an expert canner and raise some capital, and he succeeded in both attempts.

After that the pineapple business began to prosper. The company which he formed packed 1,893 cases of pineapple in 1903, 8,810 cases in 1804, 25,000 in 1905 and more than 100,000 in 1907. Its pack grew to 500,000 cases in 1912, 1,000,000 in 1918; 2,000,000 in 1923; 3,000,000 in 1926; and from 3,247,204 cases in 1929 it grew to more than 4,000,000 last year.

Once this man had demonstrated that pineapples could be profitably grown in Hawaii, he naturally had competitors. There are now nine chief growers who packed a total of about 11,300,000 cases last year, nearly all of which were shipped to the United States and had a value of $45,000,000. No, there is no unemployment at present in Hawaii.

Room for More

In spite of this vastly increased production, the consumption of pineapples in the United States amounts to only a trifle more than two pineapples per capita a year. So there is room for even greater production if it can be brought about, but all of the good pineapple land in Hawaii is now taken, and when the island of Lanai, recently bought and developed into a huge pineapple plantation by Dole's company, is brought to full production, that will be about all the pineapple that Hawaii can supply.

The story of the acquisition of this island of Lanai is a whole romance in itself. Back in 1922 Dole was facing the problem of the need of more land for the growing of pineapples. It was estimated at that time that there were only about 89,000 acres in the islands adapted to pineapple culture. Of these his company then con-

He Bet $5,000,000

Dole was willing to bet $5,000,000 that his judgment in buying Lanai was right, and that he was right is proved by the fact that the yield of Lanai pineapples is today nearly equal to the combined yield of all the rest of his plantations. But all this was not accomplished without a struggle. By cutting away the cliffs on one side, running a heavy breakwater out into the ocean on the other, and then dredging, he created the harbor of Kaumalapau, at a cost of $750,000. He built a road for heavy trucking, seven miles back and 1,600 feet up into the island, along which five-ton White trucks hauling ten-ton trailers now travel, each carrying in all a net load of twenty-three and a half tons of fruit. At the harbor these are hoisted in eleven and a half ton lots onto barges which are towed to Honolulu some fifty miles away.

And this was not all. He brought water across the mountain range on the windward side of the island to the reservoir near the town of Lanai City which stands today a model community of its kind. Its population now consists of 3,000 orientals and thirty-two whites, and it boasts its own bank, stores, schools, a hospital, a Buddhist temple, and even "movies" and a "Mayor."

There is no unemployment on the Islands of Lanai, and neither is there any contract labor. The pineapple picker who wants to quit his job can draw his week's wages (from $14 up to as much as $28) and his transportation back to whence he came. The labor is a polyglot lot. Chinese, Filipinos and Hawaiians, even some Russians and Portuguese, live tranquilly in a community which is free from race problems largely because of thorough intermarriage.

A battery of shelling machines, known as "ginacas," removes the pineapple's skin and punches out its core in a single swift operation; a set of knives cuts the skinned and cored cylinders into uniform slices, and in a few seconds from the time the pineapple enters the Ginaca machine, it is skinned, cored, sliced and ready for grading and canning.

Speed is the essence of proper pineapple canning. The quicker you can get this luscious fruit out of its jacket and into the can, the better. Something more than food is preserved by this celerity. It is the only way to preserve the elusive flavor of the fully ripened fruit.

Still a Pioneer

This matter of grading is important. Dole wants the housewife to know exactly what she is buying in his cans. So he devised a system of stampslices that have been broken so that they cannot be included in the first two grades. These first two grades are both packed in sliced, crushed and tidbit forms, but the third is packed only in broken slices.

Real Food Value

Is this large production of pineapple a real contribution to our diet in food value as well as in taste? According to scientists, it is.

"There are better sources of a single vitamin," says a bulletin of the University of Hawaii, "but as an all around source of vitamins the canned pineapple takes an unusually high place. No other canned product, except tomatoes, is as rich in vitamins."

But the fruit has to be handled right. There is a marked difference in its sugar content, depending upon whether it has been allowed to ripen on the plants or is picked for shipment after it has reached its full size but has not yet ripened. Analysis shows, according to this same authority, an average of 12.06% of sugar in the naturally ripened fruit, against 3.66% in that picked green and allowed to "ripen" off the plant. As a matter of universal practice among Hawaiian packers the fruit is allowed to ripen in the field.

The sugar content of pineapple is of a type which is ready for human assimilation, according to Dr. A. L. Dean, Director of the Experiment Station of the University of Hawaii, and pineapple has a higher food value than most fruits, largely because of its high sugar content and its vitamins.

Rich in Calories

The analysis of pineapple contained in the following table was made on a composite sample of both fruit and syrup made by commuting and mixing the contents of six cans of "Fancy" sliced pineapple taken at random from the pack of six different canneries:

Moisture
Total Sugars
Sucrose 9.99%
Reducing Sugars12.31%
Protein 0.44%
Crude Fiber 0.30%
Mineral Matter (Ach) 0.33%
Fruit Acids (Calculated as Citric Acid) 0.59%

"It will be seen from the above," the bulletin states, "that the food value of canned pineapple, as measured by calories contained in it, is by no means negligible."

So James D. Dole, whose name is indissolubly connected with the pineapple industry in Hawaii, both as pioneer and developer, not only turned a possible liability into a proved asset, but this industry is making a distinct contribution to our national diet in a form that is both nutritious and popular. And that is why there is no unemployment at present in those far flung Pacific islands average life of a horse or mule used in gold rush packing was five weeks. The odds were against a longer span. The cold weather, one of the greatest hazards to all concerned, was probably a new experience for the animals, just as it was for the majority of miners. Great demands were made upon the animals and little care and food could be given in return. Often, just as in the Eldorado rush, tralls were marked by skeletons of the unfortunate animals. No war has been complete without horses and mules. The cavalry alone accounts for the horses, while hauling cannon, food and the indispensable water were part of the mule's job. In the War and Navy building in Washington is another bronze tablet, dedicated this time to the mules and horses-numbering nearly 250,000 -which served with the A. E. F. in the World war.

English Treasure Trove

About a year ago a jar of rose nobles was unearthed at Broadhurst manor, Horsted Keynes, England. These are gold coins of the Fifteenth century and of great value from an antiquarian point of view. Even in London ancient hoards are found. A man digging a trench for a water main at Croydon found two earthenware pots, stuffed with coins, which proved to have been minted between A. D. 337 and A. D. 350. Though green with age, they were in excellent presorvation.

The Popular Blouse.

It's to be a "blouse season." There's no doubt of it. Wherefore in planning the wardrobe for spring, fashion bids you to consider the blouse in its every phase, for its program promises to be fascinating. Even at this very moment the vogue is under way, for a bright blouse with a smart velvet or cloth skirt under the now so popular. It also adopts a peplum about the hips but of rather conservative "lines." As to the handsome lace blouse in this group, this particular model hap pens to be made of a cream-white wool mesh, although every type of lace s favored from "sportsy" wool lace to lace of the filmiest sort, the latter of course for more formal wear with the dressy afternoon ensemble. Glittering outtons add charm to the lace blouse in most every instance.

Favor for sheer eyelet embroidered materials is expressed in the blouse realm.

THE NEW FORD is a splendid car to own and drive because of its attractive lines and colors, safety, comfort, speed, reliability and long life.

There are, in addition, three other features of importance to every far-seeing automobile owner ... low first cost, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation.

During the life of the car, the day-by-day economy of owning a Ford will amount to considerably more than the saving on the first cost. You save when you buy the Ford and you save every mile you drive.

The reasons for this economy are simplicity of design, high quality of materials and care in manufacturing and assembling. Many vital parts are made to limits of one one-thousandth of an inch. Some to three ten-thousandths of an inch. Throughout, the new Ford is an outstanding example of fine craftsmanship in automobile engineering.

The more you see of the new Ford-the more you talk to Ford owners and experienced mechanics-the more certain you become of this fact. . . . It brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

PRICES OF FORD CARS LOW $435 *66G to

EQUIPMENT

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

**** We came upon a group of Italian soldiers one day last summer as we were riding mets, canteens, everything that they would need if they were going into real battle. They were almost weighted down with their equipment.

What's the idea?" I asked.

"They don't know what they are going to come up against," some one replied. "They are taught to expect the unexpected and to be ready for any emergency which may arise."

It's very much like that in life. None of us knows what exigencies he is going to meet in life, what unexpected circumstances may arise, and just what mental or "physical equipment he may need. The best policy then is to accumulate and carry along

De la Cloche, which was the selfassumed name of the son of Charles II, was recognized by that monarch as his son, for there are existant records which tell of the expenses incident to the boy's education in France and of an annuity of £500 bestowed upon him by his royal parent, an annuity which at that time represented far more than the $2,000 or so which it would mean at the present day. In addition, Charles II, in the course of several letters, assured De la Cloche that he intended some day publicly to recognize him as his son and to se-SUPER-QUALIT cure for him the full enjoyment of

Texan Tells of Russian "Terror"

New York .- "We're very sorry but we'll have to take you out and shoot you." Three times during his three years in 22 Russian prisons Julius Chevalier, native Texan and former British soldier, heard this doom. Yet he lived to tell a tale of the tragedies even a close relation to racketeering. I and absurdities and grim politeness of the system in an address recently | apologies, three times, Chevalier saw before the Brooklyn council, Boy Scouts of America.

"Russians may be divided into three classes: Those in prison, those who have been in prison and the dwindling few who are on their way," said Chevalier. He explained that the police, working on the theory that the authorities expect a convict for every crime, "round up any number of innocent people and offer them their choice of crimes and evidence to take their pick of or go into the exile of the prison camp." Knowing the terror of the camp, they choose to plead guilty, Chevalier explained, and take a sentence of usually ten years. "But a ten-year sentence in Russia is not as bad as it sounds," he said. "Amnesty for holidays reduces it to about two and a half years. After half of this term has been served the prisoner may go home for week-ends, and after two-thirds, he may be paroled. Long waits for trial reduce it further. I know of one prisoner who waited ten months before receiving a ten-year sentence and was then released with an apology for keeping him waiting so long."

Chevalier's fate lay in the irony that his best man gave him away twice. In Russia, he explained, the wedding ritual demands that the best man give the groom over to the bride. The best man who delivered him to his bride later delivered him to the police. "Under present conditions, one doesn't know a friend there. A mother may be forced to turn against her son, and there is mistrust everywhere," he said.

Eight hours before he was scheduled to leave the Caucasus because his property was confiscated and he feared an imminent revolt, Chevaller was jailed "for staging a farewell party without permission, but obviously for abetting the revolution," he declared. Here he received and outlived his first death sentence and waived opportunities to escape, feeling secure as an American citizen. Taken to the execution ground, with hundreds shot. But as the others were hog-tied and bundled into the truck and he was permitted to sit with the driver, he had no fear. He was sentenced to ten years at Kem, where he organized a power plant and sufficiently distinguished himself to win freedom early last year. Meanwhile his wife had died in a camp at Constantinople.

Stark tragedy was in his story, under the humor of Russia's penal absurdities. He was assigned to register the prisoners as they entered the camp in the Caucasus. "Many were shot before they could report to give their names. They were shooting them downstairs and examining into their guilt upstairs a few days later."

De la Cloche left London. That much is certain. But he never arrived in Rome, as is clearly indicated by the records of the Vatican and the statements of historians of his day. Somewhere en route he disappeared, vanished completely, never to be heard of again save in the wildest of rumors or speculations.

Some maintain that the Imposter Giacopo Stuardo, who appeared at Naples shortly after De la Cloche's disappearance, was the son of Charles II, but this is disproved by the fact that the real son of the king of England would have no reason for posing as other than what he was, particularly as he confidently entertained the hope of one day being ruler of England. Other commentators hint that Charles himself, fearing the reaction which would follow his recognition of an illegitimate son and his formal adoption of the Catholic faith, saw to it that the young man was made away with and there are several who see in this theory a possible explanation of the mystery of the "man in the velvet mask." According to this solution of the two riddles, Charles II appealed to Louis XIV to help him out of his difficulty, and the Grand Monarch had De la Cloche kidnaped and sent to Pigneroi, when he was later transferred to the Bastille when M. de Sainte Mars was made governor of that prison. This, of course, would explain the fact that the masked prisoner was undoubtedly of royal parentage, but, like the disappearance of De la Cloche himself, the precise explanation of the entire affair must remain concealed behind the veils of royal intrigue and official mystery.

"Foxy" Trick

On one of the hunting trips of a Fairbury (Neb.) man his pack of hounds had given a red fox a hard run of two hours. He says he was standing near a brush pile when the baying came nearer and the fox came through the woods with his mouth open. Instead of passing the brush pile, it slipped under and instantly there came out at the other side a fresh fox that was off like a shot. The hounds, hot on the trail, smelled where the tired fox went under, ran around to the other side, took up the trail of the fresh fox and were soon out of sight. In a few minutes the tired fox came out, looked around and trotted off toward the den.

seemed a live thing that had barred all sound from solemn hours of meditation, and he soon began to feel its influence. Slowly and irresistibly it brought the desire to close his eyes and sleep, and he rose to his feet in a struggle to keep awake. Odd's teeth clicked and his eyes gleamed with undimmed vigilance.

For hours they watched together and marked every changing shadow. They skirted the edges of the open, advancing a step at a time and with as little noise as the owl wings that now and then floated about them, They scanned Lussan's meadow, and Jeems climbed a tall tree to see if he could discover a glow of fire. At intervals he returned to the house and looked in at Toinette. It was after midnight when he sat down again, and soon the stars seemed to be laughing at him and to be drawing nearer as if they had beaten him in a game. They closed his eyes. Odd rested his heavy jaws between his forepaws and gave a deep sigh. Exhaustion-then sleep.

CHAPTER VI—Continued With an effort, Jeems roused himself. He saw Odd at his feet. Day And then he knew what had touched had come, and the sun was rising. today had become a tremendous living present. Gently her fingertips touched his shoulder. Then she looked with him toward the east and the Richelieu-and what lay beyond. From the moment they had risen to their feet, Odd had stood as rigid as carven wood in the white-coated grass with his muzzle leveled toward Lussan's meadow. Something definite had come within his reach, which made it unnecessary for him to measure the wind, and suddenly there rose above other sound the wild and raucous crying of a blue jay, and a cawing of alarm among the crows. A second and a third blue jay joined the first, and their tumult came to an end when a piercing bird call terminated sharply in a single screeching note.

"That was an arrow," said Jeems, beginning to string his bow. "More than once I have had to kill a noisy blue jay when creeping up on game." He drew Toinette into the shelter of the house and called Odd. A few minutes later-swiftly moving, somber horrors in a world of shimmering white-they saw the Mohawks come out of the edge of Lussan's meadow.

CHAPTER VII

The spectacle of death marching back over its trail brought no terror to Jeems. He had watched for it, had half expected it, and in a way it was like the answer to an unvoiced prayer which had followed his awakening associations are pure breds of good when he had found Toinette in his arms. To fight for her now, to rush forth from the house with a battle cry on his lips, and to be cut to pieces in her defense was not a prospect which dismayed him, but which, instead, inspired in him a fearless exaltation. It was Toinette who saved him from whatever folly was brewing itself in his brain as he stood with a long hunting arrow fitted to his bow. With a breathless cry, she drew him away from the broken door, and there. safe for a moment from the savages who were entering the clearing, she flung her arms about his shoulders. For in these tragic seconds a look had come into Jeems' face like that which had frightened her in the tower room of the mill, a look hard and vengeful with the desire to kill.

pleaded. "We must hide!"

The futility of trying to conceal themselves when their footprints were clearly left upon the frosty ground did not occur to him at once. It was her voice and the name it claimed for him that broke down the resolution which soon would have betrayed them. "I know of a place," she was saying. "We must hurry to it !"

She ran ahead of him and he followed her into another room where a stair was falling into ruin. The red killers had paused at the edge of the open. They stood motionless, like stone men, listening and watchful, the upper parts of their bodies still unclothed until colder days and glisten-

Bulls Should Get a Chance to Prove Merit.

"If a dairy herd sire is worth putting at the head of a herd, he is worth keeping until the effect of his breeding is known," says C. A. Smith, extension dairyman for the Colorado Agricultural college.

"In most cases herd sires are disposed of before their true worth is known," Smith adds. "Many a good bull has gone to the butcher too soon, because he was mean or the dairyman had a large number of his daughters in the herd and needed some 'new blood.' "

Dairymen with large herds can afford to have more than one herd sire, but those with small herds can exchange bulls with the neighbors or form bull circles, it is suggested. Such an arrangement would eliminate the necessity of purchasing a new sire every two years, and would keep many good bulls in service much longer.

Dairy bulls should be kept in a bull paddock at all times, it is advised. The meanest of aged bulls can be hundled with safety in a well constructed paddock.

Practically all of the herd sires in use on herds owned by members of the Colorado dairy-herd-improvement type and breeding, and in most cases were purchased to improve the production and type of the herds. Such good herd sires should be given full opportunities to show their merits, Smith concludes.

Watch Cream Separator

During Winter Months With prospects of high prices for butterfat, the saving qualities of a good separator will be worth more during the winter months. Close skimming is always profitable but becomes unusually important with a close margin in many sections between cost of feet and the price of fat. One of the important services rendered by testers of herd improvement associations is the monthly test on cream separa-"Jeems, dear, we must hide," she tors owned by members. Those who do not belong to testing associations are reminded that most creameries will gladly co-operate in making such a test for their patrons, Unfortunately on many farms least attention is given to the care of the separator during the winter months when butterfat is at the highest price. It has been found that the loss in skimming may be three times greater where the separator is not washed between each milking, yet during cold weather many make a practice of washing only every other day. Minimum losses and more regular tests are assured where the milk is separated before it becomes cold.

wide-eyed and a little afraid at first, and yet comforted by the nearness of that yesterday in their lives. The stars and the crickets and the rustling grass and the wind in the trees seemed to listen and move to the cautious tread of their feet. A rabbit ran ahead of them. An owl flew off the roof of the house. A bat dipped in spirals and curves before their eyes, and thorns caught playfully at their shoes and clothes. And they felt safe. A warmth crept through their blood, and with it a relaxation of nerves and eyes and brain. Here was sanctuary. Rest. Peace. They sensed these things without speaking as they approached the building. The door was open. Starlight splashed like the golden glow of candles on the floor. They entered and stood silent as if listening anxiously for the voices of sleeping ones whom their entrance might arouse. Emptiness was here, a spectral vacancy, but with it were neither death nor fear.

They were a little apart, and Toinette looked like a broken flower ready to fall. "Wait for me here," said Jeems. "I am going for an armful of grass."

He made a bed in a corner of the room, and Toinette sank upon it. He covered her with his father's coat which he had brought from the valley and went outside to watch and guard with Odd. He could hear her sobbing as tears came at last to give her comfort. He fought back a thickening in his throat and a hot flame in his eyes as the boy in him called out for his mother. He, too, wanted this easement for his grief. But he stood-a man. Odd watched tirelessly and sleeplessly with his master. After a long time, there was silence in the old house, and Jeems knew that Toinette was asleep. He went in quietly and replaced the coat about her. Her face was white and lovely, and wet lashes glistened on her cheeks. Timidly his fingers pressed the silken braid of her hair. He brushed a wisp of hay from her forehead. Unconsciously his lips moved. Hope and faith and prayer seemed to stir in the room as he dared to raise the soft braid to his lips, and then he returned to his place outside with something like a glory enshrined with his sorrow. He sat on the ground with the house at his back and his bow and sheaf of arrows and the English hatchet within reach of his hands. The stillness

Then she sat up straight beside him and faced the rising sun.

The air was so cold that she shivered. Every shrub and briar and blade of grass in the clearing glistened with frost. The coat she had brought from the house slipped from her shoulders, and Jeems drew it about her again. They stood up, and strength returned into the cramped limbs. For a little while they did not speak. That they belonged to each other was a truth which pressed itself on them without effort or confusion.

Toinette was not ashamed that she had come to him nor that her act had proclaimed what pride and false prejudice had so long hidden from him in her heart. Her eyes glowed with a light which shone softly out of fathomless depth of pain and grief. She wanted him to know how completely the folly of her pride was gone and how glad she was that it was he who stood beside her now. They might have been years older, so calmly did the sense of surrender and of possession hold them. Except for the tenderness in her eyes, Toinette was unchanged. But Jeems felt himself taller at her side and something had entered him which was like the spirit of a conquerer. It was another world now. A vast mystery ahead of him. Something to fight through, to win from, to live for. Mysterious, it was still very real. It set his heart throbbing with an unappalled and challeng-

The dancers carry either spears or clubs, and go through many of the movements of the battle-the stealthy approach to the enemy's lines, the hurly-bruly of the combat, and then the triumphant return when the warriors are greeted by their chiefs, their sages, and their women. For an hour or more, without the least interval, a meke will continue its way, steps made complaint as they trod upon them. Jeems looked down from the top and saw the marks of their feet in the dust below. Their fate was certain if the Mohawks came this far, but with only the narrow stair for their enemies to ascend he was, is to put a bull ring in the cow's nose determined, in this event, that each and two or three links of chain on the of his twenty arrows should find a home.

Toinette preceded him into the room above. She went directly to a panellike board which held a wooden peg and in a moment they were peering. into the musty gloom of a huge black hole under the roof, which the Lussans had used as a garret,

"Madame Lussan brought me to this room after your fight with Paul," she whispered. "I flung my spoiled clothes far back in there!"

Even with the savages so near, pathos and memory were in the tremble of her voice.

Jeems faced the narrow aperture in the wall which Lussan had left as a window and a gun hole for defense. He went to the window, and Toinette came close to his side. No eyes could see them as they looked through the rectangular slit shadowed under the eaves. The Mohawks had not moved, and from the steadiness of their attitude Jeems knew they had come upon the open unexpectedly. Not a hand among the silent savages had moved to hatchet, bow, or gun. This fact drew a hopeful whisper from Jeems. (TO BE CONTINUED.)
