TAWAS CITY SCHOOL NOTES

Prepared and Edited by a Committee of the Student Council

High School
All should remember the entertainment which will be given by the entire school at the State Theatre Friday evening, March 20.

Mention was made last week of the Civics tests put out by the publishers of the text used by the Senior class. The results show that some of our present members are capable of receiving grades in this subject considerably above the average of those received by the many hundreds of students in the United States who have taken these tests.

Report books were given out this week in all departments of the school. These reports should be signed by the parent and returned promptly to the school by the student.

A meeting of all members of the faculty was held Wednesday afternoon at 3:45. Mr. Forsten gave a talk concerning the teachers and the public.

Those people who had a mark no lower than a "B" for the month of February are: Viola Burtzloff, Alvera Goedecke, Arlene Leslie, Delta Leslie, William Leslie, Jr., Nathan Lincoln, Dora Mark, Jack Mark, Arnold McLean, Irwin Schlechte, Dorothy Ulman.

C. C. Barnes, registrar at Central State Teacher's College, Mt. Pleasant, will speak at the P. T. A. on March 12.

Irwin Schlechte received the competent typist certificate and gold pin from the Gregg Writer for writing 65.7 net words per minute for ten minutes.

The first year typing class is helping the art class prepare programs for the local oratorical contest to be held next Tuesday evening.

The preliminary oratorical and declamatory contests were held at the high school auditorium last week. The people in the oratorical contest who took places were: Viola Burtzloff, Elsie Mueller and James Mark; in the Sophomore declamatory contest: Rose Watts, Dora Mark, Clair Thompson, and Glen Barnes; in the Freshmen declamatory contest: Albert Zollweg, Martin Kasischke and Herbert Zollweg. This group will compete with the other for honors in the local contest which will be held at the T. C. H. S. auditorium on Tuesday evening, March 3.

We are anticipating keen competition as the boys and girls who are taking part are putting forth great effort to win. We wish to thank all the ladies who assisted us as judges.

LOCAL LEGION POSTS WELL REPRESENTED AT DISTRICT MEETING

Jesse C. Hodder and Audie Johnson Posts, American Legion, of Tawas City and East Tawas, respectively, were well represented at the tenth district meeting of the American Legion held in Bay City on Sunday. The Tawas representation was the largest group from out of town with the exception of Midland. About 140 were present at the meeting.

The meeting, which was held at the parish house of the Trinity church, was called to order by Carl Smith of Bay City, who acted as toastmaster. After luncheon, the speakers were called upon by the toastmaster. Matters of vital interest to the Legion were touched upon. Motion pictures were shown of the children's billet at Otter Lake.

The question of time and place at which the next meeting will be held is to be settled at a later date. It was the most successful meeting held in the district up to this time.

Jesse C. Hodder Post was represented by the following members: Ernest Burtzloff, Hymie Friedman, George Hosbach, G. D. Soderquist, Martin Musolf, Hugo Keiser, Fred Luedtke, A. E. Giddings, Jos. St. Aubin and H. Read Smith.

Those who represented Audie Johnson Post were as follows: Nathan and Joseph Barkman, Jay Platt, Ed. Erickson, Wm. DeGrow, Ed. Donoghue, Arthur Dillon and George Klump.

IN MEMORIAM
In loving memory of our dear mother, Frances Louisa Wilberger, who died two years ago February 24th.

The moon and stars are shining
On a lone and silent grave;
Beneath lies one we dearly loved
But whom we could not save.
She is gone but not forgotten
And as dawns another year,
In our lonely hours of thinking
Thoughts of her are always near.
Days of sadness will come o'er us,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But they little know the sorrow
That lies within our hearts concealed.

JACK OAKIE AT ROARING BEST IN "SEA LEGS"
There are more laughs in an Oakie grin than the whole hyena family could muster in a lifetime of laughter. There are more laughs in Jack Oakie's "Sea Legs" than in any Oakie picture to date. It's a swell sea swell capped with the Oakie wise-cracks.

"Sea Legs" which will be shown at the State Theatre Sunday and Monday, gives Oakie everything he needs for his mirth-making. It has a cargo of comedy lines it would be hard to beat, anywhere. George Marion, Jr., slang-slinger de luxe, wrote them. It is equipped with a series of hilarious situations. And "Sea Legs" is manned, and womaned, with a great fun-producing cast, Harry Green, Lillian Roth, Eugene Palette and others.

"Sea Legs" takes Jack Oakie into the navy of a tiny republic of which no one has ever heard. He's shanghaied to fill the berth of a young millionaire slacker. Harry Green is the wily lawyer who arranges the situation for Oakie. And the ship is home to a dozen of the captain's beautiful daughters, from which Oakie selects one to take care of his heart. Forced to continue under the imposed name, Oakie finds much compensation in trading on his principal's name, but the whole affair gets him into a ticklish situation and results in an impromptu battle between two opposing sailor groups.

WOULD FIX MAXIMUM RATE FOR INDIGENTS AT U. OF M. HOSPITAL

Rep. Fred C. Holbeck of Long Lake said last Friday that he is preparing a bill to fix a maximum rate for care of indigent patients in the University of Michigan hospital and to enable counties to check all claims against them to the hospital before they are paid by the auditor general.

The auditor general now pays such charges, when claims are filed by the hospital, he said, and deducts the amounts from the delinquent taxes of the counties affected.

Holbeck said he is conducting an independent investigation of charges made by the hospital for indigent patients and that payments by counties have increased from $140,000 for children and $195,000 for adults in 1921 to $974,000 for children and $760,000 for adults in 1930. He said the hospital's charges for indigent patients are in excess of those made for care of private patients in other hospitals.—Grand Rapids Herald.

IOSCO YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROGRESSIVE SOCIETY

Miss Worden, on February 20 at our last meeting, addressed a group of over sixty people. Her subject, "Grandmother Brown's One Hundred Years," was well received. We are indebted to Miss Worden for giving such a splendid address.
Our next meeting will be held on March 6. The topic will be "Progress of the Century." Everyone is welcome. Come.

FAMOUS PLAY, "EAST IS WEST," NOW ON SCREEN

Definitely cataloging herself as a most versatile actress, Lupe Velez is seen in her latest role, that of Ming Toy, a Chinese girl in Universal's "East Is West," which comes to the State Theatre next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.
In the past Lupe has been seen as a Mexican, a Spaniard, a South American, a French girl and a Canadian, but this latest role definitely proves her ability as a delineator of difficult and decidedly varied types.

Based on the Fay Bainter stage success of the same name in which that famous actress played for three years, "East Is West" proves a charming story of a little Chinese girl who is purchased from a love boat in China by an American youth, played by Lewis Ayres, and set free in the United States. Here she falls in love with her benefactor and he with her. The natural complications and prejudices against an interracial marriage are brought up by the boy's wealthy family but they, too, are won over by the genuine sweetness and charm of Ming Toy.

Attractions coming to the State Theatre in March: "Raffles," "Monte Carlo," "Lion and the Lamb," "The Cat Creeps," "Whoopie," "Rain or Shine," "Resurrection," "Abraham Lincoln," "Africa Speaks," "Hell's Angels."

EAST TAWAS INDIES FALL BEFORE FAST OSCODA FIVE

The East Tawas Indies fell down before the accurate shooting and fast passing of the Oscoda Indies at the East Tawas Community Building on Tuesday night. East Tawas held the short end of a 26-14 score at the sound of the final gong.

While the local boys were finding it difficult to "get going," the Oscoda five was rapidly piling up a huge margin. It was late in the first half before East Tawas began tallying, and the half-way mark found them trailing in a 13 to 5 score. The second half saw a more even battle, with Oscoda collecting 13 points to East Tawas' eight.

HAND WASHING IN THE RURAL SCHOOLS

As the county nurse visits the rural schools, among other things mentioned in talking to children, is ways and means of promoting cleanliness. All children are urged to wash their hands before lunch, but in many schools washing facilities are not entirely satisfactory. A simple method is suggested which conserves time and materials.

Equipment—1. A quart container with a spout; 2. Liquid soap; 3. Oil can for soap container; 4. A pail; 5. Paper towels.

Method—Three pupils act as monitors. First, with the oil can, helps the child to soap as he passes by; next pours water over his hands, and the third hands out a paper towel. Thus the whole line passes by and is washed in 5 or 10 minutes.

The following is the schedule of the county nurse for the week of March 2 to 7:

Monday—Grant township; East Tawas school, 3:00 p. m., meeting with women of East Tawas interested in welfare and health activities.

Tuesday—Hale, school and home visits.

Wednesday—A. M., office, Tawas City; P. M., home visits, Tawas City.

Thursday—East Tawas, school and home visits.

Friday—Tawas township, school and home visits.

Saturday—A. M., West Branch; P. M., Whittemore.

FIVE CHANNEL TO HALE ROAD IS ASSURED

According to reports received from Lansing, the proposed Federal Aid road between Hale and Five Channels will be built. An enabling act which will make this road possible has been drafted under the direction of Grover C. Dillman, state highway commissioner, and will be introduced to the legislature by Senator Ben Carpenter. Both Representative Fred C. Holbeck and Senator Carpenter are doing everything possible to the end that the road will be built.

Congressman Roy O. Woodruff has given assurance that he has done much and will continue to give his attention to the road.

The proposed road will be of special benefit to the territory on the north side of the AuSable river through which the abandoned AuSable and Northwestern railroad ran. It will also connect up the river road built by Oscoda township and the county road system in Plainfield township.

MRS. JOHN MCINERNEY

Funeral services for Mrs. John McInerney, who passed away February 17 at St. Mary's hospital in Saginaw, were held last Thursday morning from the St. Joseph church, East Tawas. Rev. E. Kirchhoff officiated.

Henrietta Anne McInerney was born in East Tawas on May 10, 1879, and spent the early part of her life here, graduating from the city school in 1898. On October 10, 1900, she was married to John McInerney, who survives her. She is also survived by eleven children, James, Magdalene, Aloysius, Harry, Catherine, Patrick, Georgina, Frederick, Eva, Eugene and Charles, all of whom reside in Saginaw; her mother, Mrs. Mary LaBerge, three brothers, Roul LaBerge of East Tawas, Harry LaBerge of Yakima, Washington, Roy LaBerge of Detroit, and four sisters, Mrs. Charles Wesendorf and Mrs. David Bergeron of East Tawas, Mrs. James Hughes of Lansing and Mrs. Eugene Lange of Detroit.

Out of town relatives and friends attending the funeral were: Mrs. J. O. LaBerge, Mrs. James Hughes and son, James, of Lansing, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lange, Fred McInerney, Mr. and Mrs. Vallee, Mr. Francis Simon Beach and James Beach of Detroit, Mr. McCarthy, Mrs. Mary Flood, William, Hanna and Emil Saue of Alpena, Mrs. E. LaBerge of Bay City, Mrs. S. E. Ostrander and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Smith of Saginaw.

IOSCO CHURCH SCHOOLS

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Iosco Council of Religious Education held last Saturday afternoon, plans were made to include on this committee all pastors and church school superintendents of the county and one delegate from each school, as well as the officers of the organization. The committee will meet on the first Monday evening of April, July and October. An invitation from Mr. Wm. Latter for the July meeting to be held at the Reno Baptist church was accepted.

Anticipating the Easter season, a series of four rallies is being arranged by the young people's division, the time and place of which will be announced later.

The council treasurer reports all bills paid to date and a very small balance in the treasury. Subscriptions have been received from thirty-three individuals and from three church schools for the present year's work. The pressing financial need at present is for the promotion of Vacation Bible Schools.

The number of such schools to be held throughout the county this summer will depend almost entirely upon the financial response of the individual friends of the council and of the various church schools. In order to adequately promote such a county-wide project as Vacation Bible Schools, it is necessary to make definite plans at once. You can help materially by sending your individual pledge, or that of your church school, (not necessarily the cash, but the pledge) to the secretary, Mrs. W. C. Davidson, Tawas City, so that the committee can plan Vacation Schools in accordance with available funds. You are most urgently requested to respond to this appeal at once.

The study of the use of dramatics in religious education has proved so interesting that the Saturday evening parent-teacher class is continuing indefinitely. Members of the class are now writing a dramatization of the book of Esther.

A leadership training course in "The Study of the Prophets" is to be offered Saturday afternoons at the city hall of Tawas City, beginning April 11th. Rev. Metcalf will instruct the class. The price of the required textbook is $1.00, the registration fee 50c.

AMAZING COMEDY HIT, "OH, FOR A MAN," AT FAMILY

Coming here preceded by the most glowing praise from every city in which it has been shown, "Oh For a Man!" Fox Movietone production at the Family Theatre, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, promises to delight and entertain local audiences to a greater degree than any picture which has been shown in many months.

The cast is headed by Jeanette MacDonald and Reginald Denny, with an all star support.

The story is of a beautiful, successful and much courted prima donna who rejects suitor after suitor only to fall in love with and finally marry a burglar. They separate but strange circumstances enter into their lives which result in their reunion and continued love.

"Oh, For a Man!" was directed by Hamilton MacFadden. There is not a dull moment and the song numbers, including the closing aria from "Tristan and Isolde," rendered by Miss MacDonald, are logically interpolated.

The settings, especially of an Italian villa and garden, are beautiful to the eye while the feminine portion of the audience will find the gowns worn by Miss MacDonald worth more than a passing glance of notice.

"Oh, For a Man!" is one of the gems of screen entertainment that come too rarely. To miss it is to miss the smartest treat of the season.

Recalling "Little Phil"

SHERIDAN AND HIS STAFF

PHILIP HENRY "LITTLE PHIL" SHERIDAN

SHERIDAN'S STATUE IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

SHERIDAN'S GRAVE IN ARLINGTON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS just 100 years ago, March 6, 1831, that there was born to an Irish immigrant couple in Albany, N. Y., a boy who was destined for lasting fame as an American soldier and as one of the great cavalry leaders of all time. Philip Henry Sheridan was his name but American tradition has preserved his memory in two nicknames which his devoted followers gave him—"Fighting Phil" and "Little Phil." And like another horseman of an earlier war, Paul Revere of the Revolution, Phil Sheridan, the dashing cavalryman of the Civil war, owes some of the perpetuation of his name and fame to a poem—Thomas Buchanan Read's "Sheridan's Ride."

SHERIDAN'S RIDE

Up from the south at break of day,
 Bringing to Winchester fresh dismay,
 The affrighted air with a chattering bore,
 Like a herald in haste, to the chieftain's door,
 The terrible grumble, and rumble, and roar,
 Telling the battle was on once more,
 And Sheridan twenty miles away.

And vivid still those billows of war
 Tauntered along the horizon's bar;
 And louder yet into Winchester rolled
 The roar of that red sea uncontrolled,
 Making the blood of the listener cold,
 As he thought of the stake in that fiery fray,
 And Sheridan twenty miles away.

But there is a road from Winchester town,
 A good, broad highway leading down:
 And there, through the flush of the morning light,
 A steed as black as the steeds of night
 Was seen to pass, as with eagle flight;
 As if he knew the terrible need,
 He stretched away with his utmost speed;
 Hills rose and fell, but his heart was gay,
 With Sheridan fifteen miles away.

Still sprang from those swift hoofs,
 Thundering south,
 The dust, like smoke from the cannons' mouth,
 Or the trail of a comet, sweeping fast,
 Ere and faster, the doom of disaster.
 The heart of the steed and the heart of the master
 Were beating like prisoners assailing their walls,
 Impatient to be where the battlefield calls;
 Every nerve of the charger was strained to full play,
 With Sheridan only ten miles away.

Under his spurting feet, the road
 Like an arrowy Alpine river flowed,
 And the landscape sped away behind
 Like an ocean flying before the wind;
 And the steed, like a bark fed with furnace fire,
 Swept on, with his wild eye full of fire;
 But, lo! he is nearing his heart's desire;
 He is snuffing the smoke of the roaring fray,
 With Sheridan only five miles away.

The first that the general saw were groups
 Of stragglers, and then the retreating troops;
 What was done? What to do? A glance
 Told him both, and then he rode on,
 Then, striking his spurs, with a terrible oath,
 He dashed down the line, 'mid a storm of huzzas,
 And the course of retreat checked its pace,
 The sight of the master compelled it to pause.
 With foam and with dust the black charger was gray;
 By the flash of his eye, and the red nostrils play,
 He seemed to the whole great army to say:
 "I have brought you Sheridan all the way
 From Winchester town to save the day!"

Hurrah! hurrah for Sheridan!
 Hurrah! hurrah for horse and man!
 And when their statuses are placed on high,
 Under the dome of the Union sky,
 The American soldier's Temple of Fame,
 There, with the glorious general's name,
 Be it said, in letters bold and bright:
 "Here is the steed that saved the day
 By carrying Sheridan into the fight,
 From Winchester—twenty miles away!"

—THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

heights in 1864 when he was made chief of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac and started upon his famous campaign in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia. There his problem was to checkmate another brilliant cavalry leader, Gen. Jubal A. Early of the Confederate army, and to devastate this rich country so that it could no longer feed the Confederate army.

It was during this campaign that the incident occurred which inspired Read's famous poem and gave rise to one of those popular legends so dear to the heart of Americans—and so filled with inaccuracies as to historical fact! That legend tells how Sheridan at Winchester, hearing heavy firing in the direction of Cedar Creek, where his army was stationed, suspected something was wrong, sprang to the back of his coal black charger, "Winchester," and made a mad dash of 20 miles to find his army being routed by Early's surprise attack. Then, according to the school book histories, "Swinging his hat, he dashed along the line of battle, shouting 'Never mind, boys, we'll whip them yet!' The 'boys' responded by throwing up their caps and hurrahing with the wildest joy. Before night set in they drove Early out of the Valley."

A reference to Sheridan's "Personal Memoirs" and other standard authorities, however, will show that the legend can stand considerable correction. In the first place Sheridan did not ride any 20 miles, as the poet has him doing. It is only 13 miles from Winchester to Cedar Creek and he had his first view of his disorganized army at Mill Creek, less than a mile from Winchester. From there to the actual "front" it was not much more than nine or ten miles. Not was his ride made alone nor covered at top speed all the way, as the poet would have us believe. He was accompanied by two of his aides-de-camp Maj. George A. Forsythe and Capt. Joseph O'Keefe and at various places along the route of his progress toward the enemy he paused long enough to give orders to various officers about rallying the retreating Union troops. As for the "Turn, boys, turn! We're going back!" type of exclamation so often attributed to Sheridan, these words from his "Memoirs" speak for themselves: "I said nothing except to remark as I rode among those on the road: 'If I had been with you this morning this disaster would not have happened. We must face the other way; we will go back and recover our camp.'"

Although Sheridan is known to more Americans because of this incident than any other in his career, that career continued long after the Civil war. It included service on the Mexican border in the days when the Maximilian incident was a threat to our peaceful relations with European countries, during the Indian wars on the plains when he was in command of the operations which finally brought about the subjugation of the warlike tribes, as guest observer on the staff of King William during the Franco-Prussian war and as commander in chief of the United States army after the retirement of Sherman. Sheridan died in 1888 at the age of fifty-seven years with the rank of full general, a grade which had been restored by congress that year in his favor.

Automobiles in New York Receive a Blessing

Automobiles were blessed in front of the Roman Catholic Church of the Holy Family in New York city, known as the "Church of the Motorist." It was the first such public ceremony to be held in this city. Here is seen Rev. Daniel De Nonno, pastor of the church, blessing the cars.

Sue Government for Many Millions

What is believed to be the largest suit filed against the federal government since the celebrated Alabama and French spoliation claims, amounting to $68,707,000, filed by the Blackfeet and several other Indian tribes, is now being heard by the United States Court of Claims at Washington. The photograph shows the members of the Blackfeet tribal council; left to right: Joe Brown, president of the council; Robert J. Hamilton, chairman of the board of directors of the Indian Protective association; and Richard Grant, a member of the tribal council.

This Seems to Make Flying Quite Safe

Here is the airplane of a new type, designed by Albert A. Merrill and successfully tested at the Glenn Curtiss airport on Long Island. Apparently it cannot dive, stall or spin, and the pilot, cutting off the power several hundred feet in the air and taking his hands from the controls, landed it gently and slowly.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

This summer, backgammon has taken a prominent place in the conversation. Stores all are carrying ornate backgammon sets, and one Fifth Avenue establishment has the champion backgammon player giving lessons to patrons. They say this man won 35 straight games against picked opponents and has written a book proving that backgammon is as scientific as bridge. Yeah? Well, I know a little colored boy I'll back against any champion who will let him use his own dice.

One of the largest New York hotels has fifteen pianos, which have to be moved on an average of 200 times a month to meet the demands of musical guests. The boss of the movers is John Ravatino, formerly a page boy, who is not yet four feet tall. It doesn't take physical strength to boss—Napoleon and Julius Caesar were comparatively small men, and John knows all about pianos. He says an upright piano is harder to handle, because his men can't get such a good grip on it, and unless you are on the job the movers will push it along the floor. Take the legs off a grand piano, throw it on its side, and it's a cinch.

I know an upright piano is hard to handle, because Arthur William Brown and I once tried to move one. We got it stuck in a door and this was serious, because we were on the inside of a room, which had neither beds, stove nor icebox and which was a couple of stories from the pavement. We didn't even have a basket we could lower for food. If we had not been rescued it might have been another of those mysterious tragedies of a big city.

An actor, out of work last season, is lucky enough to have a big part in a real Broadway success. A friend commented on his prosperous appearance.

"Isn't that a new hat?" he asked. "Certainly," said the actor, "the whole outfit is new. Last year, when there were hard times, I couldn't afford to dress so well, but this year, of course, I get what I want." It is all in the point of view.

Norman Stevenson was riding down Park avenue behind a florid-faced and talkative taxi driver, who remarked that it was fine, healthy weather.

"Yes," said Mr. Stevenson a bit nervously, for the driver was looking backward and the traffic was heavy, "you look healthy."

"I should say I am," said the taxi-man, "there is only one man in the city whose blood is as good as mine."

"Indeed?" said Mr. Stevenson, supposing that some one with the blue blood of the Vere de Veres was at the wheel.

"Yes," said the taxi driver, missing a limousine by an inch, "I certainly have good red blood. I make good money selling it for transfusions."

"Doesn't it weaken you?" said Mr. Stevenson, politely.

"Not a bit," said the taxi driver heartily. "Of course, I can't do it too often; but they take a test and, as soon as the haemoglobins are right, I do it again. A lot of persons in this town are carrying my blood around."

This sounded a little gory to Mr. Stevenson, but it seemed the time to say something, so he inquired: "How much do they take from you?"

"Oh, about 100 c.c.s," said the taxi driver and then, seeing that he had been a bit too technical, "cubic centimeters, you know."

Mr. Stevenson wished to ask whether that was a pint or a barrel, but didn't like to appear too ignorant, so let it pass. Besides, he had been lucky enough to arrive at his destination without accident. But, if he ever needs blood he knows where to go.

Twin Rulers of Eastern Country

The young Queens Thasa and Insaï of Laos, in French Indo-China, photographed in the drawing room of their palace. Their state is independent, although they have a French political adviser. Laos is a Chinese word meaning "ancient." The people of the country are called Shans by the Burmese, but by themselves Tai (the Elder Tai), in contradistinction to Tai Noi (the Lesser or Younger Tai), the name which they give to the Siamese. In habits, customs, religion and language, the Laos people resemble the Burmese and the Siamese.

Nations Find Women Spies Useful

Paris.—Half of the spies in Europe today wear skirts. Spying is a profession to which many stenographers aspire, and the only stock in trade needed is a stony heart, impervious to love and flattery, beauty and the face of a baby doll, to throw the police off the track.

Many of the chiefs of Europe's underground espionage services believe that where secrets of national defense are to be wormed from young officers, one black-eyed, raven-haired beauty can do more good than a platoon of men well versed in the art of drawing fortifications in invisible ink.

It is true also that other chiefs feel as strongly the other way. These hold that no woman is able to keep a secret in all circumstances. They employ no women spies in responsible posts. To take care of other nations' women spies they use personable young men. These young men seek and make love to the women. The theory is that when the woman lets herself fall in love she tells all she knows.

Thus these men use the love lure precisely as do the women spies.

Spying seems to be more natural to women than to men, especially to women who like intrigue. Ever since Mata Hari went to work for Germany during the World war and used her art of making men fall in love with her, she has been looked upon as queen of the spies.

Mata Hari, like other women spies, made the fatal mistake of falling in love herself, and before long she was caught and faced the firing squad in the moat of Vincennes castle.

During and just before the war Germany used many women to get information. England, in the few years before the war, was swamped with German governesses and nursemaids, seeking jobs at any price, and generally in the homes of British army and navy officers.

One of the strangest of these was Emma Stubert, woman companion, who changed over and quit her spy job with the central powers and became one of the best spies in the service of the allies. Five spies of the central powers went to the execution post upon evidence turned up by the governess.

Since the war, no woman spy has been more successful than a French woman, Marthe Moreuil, before her arrest. She worked for the love of the game and for her lover.

Although she had never been in an airplane before, she went to several aviation fields and asked to be allowed to practice parachute jumping. Friendly soldier pilots took her for rides high over the field and allowed her to leap with her parachute.

Once established, she struck up friendships and was able to pass to her English friends an enormous amount of information, drawings, and documents before the band was arrested. Then she took her prison sentence of six months with closed lips.

ANNAPOLIS CAPTAIN

Midshipman Horacio Rivero of the United States Naval academy at Annapolis has won a scholastic rating even higher than "No. 1," hitherto regarded as top rating. He has been rated "No. 1/2," being followed by Midshipman Tom D. Tyra as No. 1. Rivero, who was appointed to the naval academy from Porto Rico, was co-swain of the varsity crew last year.

The First Winning Candidate

we refuse to let them go in they consider us cruel."

In front of the bleachers, toiling, sweating, putting themselves through the most exhausting physical exertions, were the cheer leaders. They were yelling until they were black in the face; they were leaping into the air; they were turning hand springs and engaging in the hardest sort of work for two hours or more.

"One of those wild Indians out there is my son," said the Colonel, pointing to a red faced perspiring youth whose strenuous physical exertions he had been following. "He follows the team wherever it goes just for the privilege of working like that and if I should ask him to wash the car or to walk down town to do an errand for me, he would grow pale with exhaustion. Aren't folks funny!"

PARTY GOOD THINGS

With the children the real party begins when the refreshments are served, and as we are all "children of a larger growth," we may be excused for liking tasty, nice refreshments.

For a bridge party the decorations may be in the color and design of the four suits of cards.

Canned pimientos may be cut in the form of diamonds or hearts to top an open or double sandwich, spread with cream cheese. For clubs and spades, raisins or prunes or dates may be used.

All Trump Sandwiches.—Cut thin slices of bread into oblongs to resemble playing cards. Spread lightly with softened butter and then with cream cheese which has been rubbed to a paste with cream. Make the spots on the cards, the red of pimiento and the black of stuffed dates cut into slices.

Grand Slam Salad.—Dissolve one envelope of gelatin in one cupful of boiling water. Drain a number two can of grapefruit and add it (one cupful of the juice) to the gelatin with a few drops of coloring and enough after-dinner mints to flavor the mixture delicately. Two dozen will be ample. When the jelly is of the consistency of egg white, fold in the grapefruit sections cut into halves with the scissors, one cupful of diced cucumber and pour into small molds. Surround when serving with water cream and serve with sour cream or cream or cream cheese dressing.

Chicken Ham or Croquettes.—Put one small sliced onion and two sprigs of parsley through the food chopper with two and one-half cupfuls of ham or chicken, add one cupful of rolled crackers and mix well. Add a beaten egg, three-fourths of a cupful of milk and two tablespoonfuls of cooking oil. Season to taste with salt and pepper and shape, roll in cracker crumbs, then in egg beaten with one-fourth of a cupful of milk, then in crumbs again and fry in deep fat after chilling well. The fat should be hot enough to brown a cube of bread in 40 seconds, or 385 degrees Fahrenheit.

Prince of Norway to Visit America?

Lake Placid, N. Y.—Crown Prince Olav of Norway, himself an enthusiastic winter sportsman, may visit the III Olympic winter games to be held at Lake Placid in February, 1932, coming as a good will ambassador of Norway, according to a cable received by the III Olympic winter games committee here.

The cable advice came from Bjorn

Blix, international secretary of the games, following an audience granted him by Crown Prince Olav in Oslo. Mr. Blix is now visiting the major capitals of Europe, aiding European groups in making arrangements for the winter Olympics.

Norwegian participation in the games is practically assured, Blix cabled after meetings at Oslo with leading sports groups. Twenty-five contestants and five group leaders probably will comprise the Norwegian delegation, together with a substantial group of Norwegian newspaper and magazine correspondents.

W. G. Howard of the New York state conservation department, also a member of the New York State Olympic commission, has further advised that the conservation department is at once starting work on the construction of an Adirondack leanto on the summit of Mount Van Hoevenberg, which may be used by skiing parties visiting the bobrun. Numerous shelters and sheds are being built by the commission at the base of the course.

Doing Disagreeable Things

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

The colonel is rather a hard smoker. He had a half dozen dark colored, heavy cigars in his pocket when he came to take me to the ball game, and he was puffing away at them in a way that presaged their rapid disappearance into smoke.

"When did you learn to smoke?" I asked him. I have a theory that whatever habits we have are picked up pretty early in life.

"I suppose I was fifteen," he said. "It didn't come easily to me. Gracious! how sick it made me. Over and over again I thought I should die, but I persisted; I kept at it; I was determined to smoke like a man, and finally I conquered."

I could see that he had. "Now, if anyone had set for me the task of learning to smoke," he went on, "if father, for instance, had insisted that I go through the physical agony incident to the acquiring of such an objectionable habit, I should have left home, or reported him to the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, or done something desperate. It is unbelievable how much pain and hard work and generally disagreeable experience a young person will endure when he himself chooses the disagreeable task, and how he revolts when the job is wished on him by some one else."

We had reached the ball game by this time. It was a hot afternoon in October and the sun was pouring down on the bleachers and on the field. It was a rough game, and occasionally a man would be laid out or taken out with the breath knocked out of him, or a bunted-up eye, or a fractured bone, or a contusion of one member or another. They came out of the game with reluctance; they hung their heads in apparent shame; at times, even, they were weeping because they were not permitted to endure more pain. They took pride and delight in their bruises.

"If we forced our children into games of this sort," the Colonel remarked to me, "we should be considered savages by our neighbors, and if

 COMFORT

Every new Ford is equipped with four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers

ONE of the fine things about driving the new Ford is the way it takes you over the miles without strain or fatigue. No matter how long the trip, you know it will bring you safely, quickly, comfortably to the journey's end.

The seats are generously wide, deeply cushioned and carefully designed to conform to the curves of the body. Every new Ford has specially designed springs and four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers. These work both ways — up and down. They absorb the force of road shocks and also provide a cushion against the rebound of the springs.

Other features that make the new Ford a value far above the price are the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield, silent, fully enclosed four-wheel brakes, more than twenty ball and roller bearings, extensive use of fine steel forgings, aluminum pistons, chrome silicon alloy valves, torque-tube drive, Rustless Steel and unusual accuracy in manufacturing.

In addition, you save many dollars because of the low first cost of the new Ford, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation.

Ruins Tell of Viking Empire

Explorations in Present Baltic States Reveal Interesting Historic Facts.

Stockholm.—Archaeological research in the Baltic states continues to add supporting evidence to the theory that a powerful "Viking empire" was in process of forming in these regions more than a thousand years ago. It grows increasingly apparent that the whole Baltic littoral was more closely knit together by trade and communication than indicated by history as written in the past.

Important facts are also being supplied regarding the period of the great migrations and the southward wanderings of the Goths in the Fifth and Sixth centuries. In all the excavations specialists are stressing the need for co-operation. This idea was emphasized at Riga, at the Baltic archaeological congress, near the close of the summer, the first congress of the kind to assemble since 1912. And the idea will dominate in all accomplishment before the next congress, which is to be held in Kiel in 1934.

Tells of Buried Treasure.
In Sweden the two seemingly inexhaustible reserves of soil awaiting the spade and the measuring rod are the islands of Gothland, nearly midway in the Baltic sea, and Oland, just off the Swedish mainland on the southeast coast. Not that the horizontal area is so wide reaching. But on the island of Gothland, for instance, the excavation of the foundation of some ancient house or fort or cathedral may reveal traces of an earlier foundation beneath it and one still earlier beneath the second. Such is the case, as disclosed by this summer's work on the southern tip of the island, where Dr. John Nilhen, with a corps of workers, excavated an old "homestead," which legend attributed to Stavar the Great, a heroic figure dating approximately from the Second century of our era.

Rumors of buried treasure are being substantiated on a small scale as the foundations of the huge hall, sixty meters in length, are investigated. There are remains of glassware from the Roman empire, ceramics with classical ornamentation, and numerous silver coins identified by their images of Trajanus, Hadrianus, Marcus Aurelius, Crispina, or other Roman rulers or consorts. Arabian coins bear a later date and suggest that the enormous house may have been desolate and deserted during a part of the age of migrations, 400-700, to be utilized again by the Vikings and their associates. These finds therefore seem to substantiate certain hypotheses about other interesting sections of the island.

The Swedish island of Oland, with its sixteen known sites of ancient fortifications, has recently been surveyed for archeological purposes from the

BLEACHING FLIVVERS NOW DOT SOUTHWEST DESERTS

Take Place of Long-Horn Skulls; Smart Resorts Built in Arid Wastes.

New York.—The bleaching bones of steers and horses, once the symbols of suffering and lost hopes in the wide deserts of the Southwest, have been replaced by battered and abandoned flivvers.

Old trails among hummocks of ash-earthen earth, where once the traveler encountered the white skulls of long-horns, now run between twisted fenders and flat tires. That is the report brought back by Richmond Barrett, who has just inspected the smart resort colonies of the desert country for Harper's Bazaar.

The feature of the Arizona countryside that impressed him most was the sahuro, or giant cactus, a plant doomed to extinction. One specimen was 40 feet high, and 28 thick branches, and has been standing more than a thousand years.

"There are no baby sahuro," Mr. Barrett explains, "The specimens in existence today are barren survivals whose seed long ago became sterile."
Three of the smart colonies in the desert country are near Phoenix, Ariz.; at Chandler, in the same state, and at Palm Springs, Calif. One of the details that makes them popular, Mr. Barrett reports, is the air. It's not ordinary breathing air. "My whole body seemed to swim in it, as in a vast pool of double-distilled water," he says. "The idea of ever experiencing fatigue or becoming jaded in Arizona or Palm Springs strikes a lowland visitor as preposterous."

"The Arizona desert around the Apache trail," he writes, "is a vast tumbled waste of rock, through which a single road twists and coils and climbs, a mere thread thrown out by human pertinacity across primeval

Lost Dog Answers Blast of Horn

New Orleans.—A rabbit dog belonging to Frank Audibert and Paul Geory was lost for three months but returned because of the blast of a hunting horn.
Mrs. Audibert thought she saw the dog near Bayo St. John. Audibert took a hunting horn to which the dog, Ben, has answered, and went horning. He commanded a skiff, started blowing the horn as he rowed and finally found the dog in possession of two boys on an island.

equally important work on the continent to the south and southeast. Prof. Birger Nerman, Swedish archeologist, has concentrated on Grobin in Latvia. He has identified Grobin as the Seeburg of legend, where King Olaf came in the middle of the Ninth century, plundering first Seeburg and later Apulia, now identified with the section called Apule.

Hedeby, an old Viking center near Schleswig, is about to be made the subject of special study and will thereby become the first Viking town to be excavated on a comprehensive scale.

The connections between Hedeby and Birka, a Viking town once flourishing on the island of Bjorko—the picturesque and idyllic Swedish "island of birches"—are being stressed and various theories are offered as to the relation between the two. Either Hedeby was a transit port, established for the trade of Birka, or, according to one speculation, Birka was a far northern outpost of Danish trade.

Holy Cats! 5 Bucks for Mending "Holy Chicken"

Shanghai.—"Five dollars for mending the holy chicken." The quartermaster of the Fourth regiment, United States marine, now in China, scratched his head when he read this bill. Explanation was soon forthcoming from his Chinese clerk. The lectern from the marine chapel had been sent out for refurbishing. To the Chinese the proud American eagle was nothing more than a humble chicken, and since it came from a church it must be holy.

Bandits Beat Victim and Then Throw Him in River

Portland, Ore.—A wave of holdups and robberies here was climaxed in the attack of Henry Nyberg, forty, who narrowly escaped death when his assailants beat him unconscious and threw him into the Willamette river. After drifting a mile and a half downstream, he was rescued by Clare Barnhart, twenty-four, who plunged from the docked steamship Admiral Evans in response to Nyberg's cries for help.

The mountains of Arizona are dead; but their unburied bones have been steeped in more gorgeous and barbaric dyes than ever the grave-wrappings of an Egyptian Pharaoh could boast. By some mysterious process, the sun and the storms have baked and tinted and toiled the whole region into the semblance of a heap of colossal pottery.
"The prevailing tone of the rocks is an autumnal purplish red, like that rich stain left by the trodden grapes in an old vat. The coloring is curiously dry now, almost as if it were flaking off. There is nothing oily or fat about the texture of it. It is the patina of the desert, I suppose."

ONE-PIECE DRESS WITH JACKET IS FASHION'S SPRING MESSAGE

VIEWING in the original the ensemble pictured, one is impressed first of all with its color scheme. The jacket and the skirt portion (it is a one-piece dress plus a jacket) is brown, the seamed-on blouse top is a creamy beige and the soft tie-griddle is lined with turquoise. So there you have it—a tri-color effect. Which brings us to the point we have in mind and which we wish to make very clear since it has such a direct bearing on fact, there is a delightfully old-fashioned air about them.

Coats for Spring.

There is everything in the way of smart details to make the spring coat a theme of fascinating interest. To consider this all-important subject in a properly style-minded way, one must, this season, think in terms of cunning fabric manipulation which involves such intriguing details as sleeves which boast of all sorts of an important feature of the new spring fashions. We refer to the working of several colors with a view to achieving striking contrasts. Throughout costume design color contrasts are exploited.

This charming outfit also calls attention to the fact that brown is regarded as an outstanding color for spring. Even the hat worn with this costume carries the message of brown, the fine straw of which it is made, harmonizing with the brown of the dress.

As to the material employed, it is flat crepe, the general consensus of opinion being that flat crepe will prove a leading fabric not only for daytime dresses and ensembles but in the lighter colors, it is very popular for evening wear.

The soft tie-griddle which holds the jacket in position is a styling feature which is giving a new aspect to the spring mode. Ties of self-fabric are playing a varied role. Not only are jackets tied about the waist in the manner illustrated, but any number of "tricky" cuffs and flares, scarf necklines which are unique and adjustable, while revers of generous proportion, some of them quite a la Directoire, are made a very special feature.

Note in the picture the broad revers, the wide belt of self fabric, the triple flare effect of the sleeves below the elbow—definitely style revealing are these details when it comes to new coat trends.

As to fur on the spring coat, it is entirely a matter of preference as to whether it shall be furred or go unfurred. Designers have a clever way, this season, of adding fur to the outer edge of cloth revers or shawl collars or perhaps novel cape-collars which admit of adjustable arrangements which place it up to the wearer to manipulate effectively. The cloth-plus-fur collar which styles the coat illustrated is of that sort.

Stunning scarf effects distinguish the new all-fabric coats. These are worked most ingeniously, sometimes having a wide end drawn through a slot cut so the streamer goes the new frocks, frequently with boleros, boast gypsy girdles which are brought snug about the hips and tied in a large soft bow to one side.

In this connection it might be well to mention that belted-in effects of every description are advocated in the new styles. Even narrow ribbons are tied around the waist in a naive fashion which is very demure looking, in

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

Who Was the Count St. Germain?

ONE of the greatest impostors of the Eighteenth century, the Count Saint-Germain, takes his place alongside Cagliostro, the Chevalier d'Eon, the Chevalier St. George and the man in the velvet mask as one of the unsolved enigmas of history. Who was he? Where did he come from? What finally became of him? The official annals of Europe are silent on all these questions—yet the mysterious chevalier was one of the leading figures of his time, a man who wielded power and spent money like water, who bent the powers of diplomacy to his will and exerted a marked influence upon the history of more than one nation.

Walpole says of him: "He is called an Italian, a Spaniard and a Pole; a somebody that married a great fortune in Mexico and ran away with his wife's jewels to Constantinople; a priest, a fiddler, a nobleman. But no one knows the details of his life and everything about his past is a matter of vague conjecture."

When Saint-Germain first appeared at the court of Louis XV he circulated a report, similar to that used by Cagliostro, that he was two thousand years old and that only one of his many remarkable discoveries was a magical liquid which would enable men to live practically forever. Most of the historians of the time credit him with having been a Portuguese Jew, but various surmises have been made as to his having been of royal birth, as he claimed. The "chevalier" could speak nearly all the European languages, including German, English, Italian, French, Portuguese and Spanish, and when he suddenly appeared at the French capital he was taken up by Louis who made him his boon companion, as did Mme. de Pompadour, who was then very prominent in affairs of state.

Grimm referred to him as "a man of the best parts I have ever known and, apart from his ability as a linguist, a musical composer and a violinist of the highest order, with a comprehensive knowledge of history and notable accomplishments as a chemist, in which latter field he based his principal claims to an international reputation."

Saint-Germain figured in a number of conspiracies at the various courts of Europe and played an important part in connection with the conspiracy which placed Catherine II on the Russian throne, following the forced abdication of her royal husband. So remarkable were his exploits in the diplomatic world that dukes and ambassadors came regularly to his house for advice, though he numbered quite as many of these among his enemies as among his friends. His intimate knowledge of the history of the entire Christian era and the details with which he surrounded his accounts of personal contact with many of the leading figures of past centuries, gained wide credence for his claim of being 2,000 years old and, according to one story which is apparently well authenticated, he allowed an old woman to drink some of his precious elixir of life and she immediately became a girl of sixteen.

The chevalier was also an expert in removing flaws from diamonds and one of the absolutely unquestioned feats of his career was the success which he had in taking the flaw out of a diamond belonging to Louis XV, a stone which would have been extremely valuable if it had not been for a marked defect. Saint-Germain, as is proven by unimpeachable documents, took the gem home and kept it for several months, finally returning it to the king without a blemish.

Another mystery surrounding him was the source of his income. He had no landed estates and no other apparent source of revenue, yet he always had plenty of money which he spent lavishly and without a thought for the morrow.

The last heard of the mysterious chevalier was in 1780 when he became the companion of the landgrave of Hesse and it is reported that he met his death in Schleswig-Holstein in the same year. But Grossley, a fellow of the Royal society, declared that he saw Saint-Germain in a French prison in 1794, during the Reign of Terror and various persons in later years believed they recognized him—among them Lord Lytton in 1860 and Van Damme a few years previous to this.

Possibly the best summary of the entire case of this unusual personage is that given by Andrew Lang: "Did Saint-Germain really die about 1790 or did he escape from the French prison where Grossley thought he saw him? Was he known to Lord Lytton in 1860? Was he the 'Major Fraser' at the court of Louis Napoleon in 1855? Who knows? He is a will-o'-the-wisp. Whenever you think you have a chance of finding him in authentic state papers he gives you the slip."

Word Wanted

As new pastimes and industries are created there are brought into the language many new words. For instance, to "zoom" is a word which was suggested by the noise made by airplanes when circling and rising and "pancake" suggests a particular kind of a landing but there is no word to indicate the operation of dropping a seaplane on the surface of the water. The French have a word for this, "amerri" but it does not seem to fit in well with the English language and has not been adopted in this country.

That the explosion of the gun would reach the ears of the Mohawks was in Jeems' mind as he comforted his shocked companion. For a few moments it was difficult for her to believe the combat was over and that the fiend who lay like a great spider on his back was no longer a menace to them. To her relief and her faith in Jeems was added an emotion of joy when she saw that Odd was alive. The dog had dragged himself to his feet and stood watching the slain man grimly.

The dead man stared up at them as they passed. In their path lay the arrow which had gone cleanly through him. Toinette could not keep back the hysterical sob which came in her throat, but she looked at Jeems with such wonder and love in her face that he heard only the throbbing tumult in his heart and brain. He had fought for her and won! And he had fought on that same ground where almost six years before he had failed to whip Paul Tache!

"The Indians have heard the shot and will return," he said. "This white man must have discovered some sign of us and came to do murder and have his spoils alone. Dear God, when I think—"

He was looking at Toinette's tresses, which had burst free from their plaited bonds.

"We must run," he said.

They passed the barn and went through the deserted field behind it, Odd following them.

"There is a stony ridge less than a mile from here," he encouraged. "If we can reach it, I know of twenty places where bare rock will let us throw them off our trail."

"We will reach it," breathed Toinette.

He pointed the way and let her go ahead of him, turning his head every dozen steps to look behind.

Along the hardwood knoll where the Lussans had gathered their fuel, Toinette sped like a graceful nymph, her long hair streaming about her in the sun until at times Jeems saw nothing but its beauty; and in the contemplation of its loveliness a shuddering horror ran through him. In the stumpy field at home Hepsibah had told him how both the English and the French had begun to make use of women's hair, and that many a gentleman and courtly dandy wore shining curls taken by the scalping knife in wilderness orgies of rapine and murder. In the narrowness of Toinette's escape, the thought oppressed him with sickening force.

Soon her lack of endurance compelled them to slacken their pace, and when they reached the rocky ascent which led to the crest of the ridge, Toinette's breath was breaking sobbingly from her lips and for a while she could go no farther. She gazed in the direction from which they had come, unterrified, and almost with challenge in her look, her breast wildly throbbing, her hand reaching out to Jeems.

Each of the few minutes that passed seemed an hour to him.

Then they climbed to the crest of the ridge. Here Jeems picked his way, choosing the places where their feet would not touch scattered stones or grass or soil, until half an hour of slow and tedious progress lay between them and the point where they had come from the valley.

"If they come this far, they will think we have taken the wider and easier country," he explained. "Can you hold out a little longer?"

"It was the running that turned me faint," said Toinette. "I am as strong as you are now, Jeems. But may I stop and braid my hair? It is cumbersome and warm, and I wish you would cut it off!"

"I would cut off my arm first," declared Jeems. "We will be safe farther on, and if you will wait until we have put ourselves beyond that mass of rocks off there—"

His words remained unfinished. From behind them came a cry. It was not fierce nor one that seemed to carry menace, and bore with it a strange and almost musical softness. Jeems knew its meaning. The Mohawks were on the ridge. One of them was calling his scattered companions to evidence of their passing which he had discovered.

Jeems hastened Toinette over the rocks.

"They have found some sign of us," he explained. "It may be one of Odd's claw marks on a stone, or the scratch from a nail in your shoe. Whatever it is, they only know we have come this way and will still believe we have taken to the plain."

Toinette saw how desperately he was trying to keep from her the real nearness of their peril.

"I have seen Indians climb over rocks and windfalls. They are like cats—and I am so slow and clumsy," she said. "You can move faster than any Indian, Jeems. Hide me somewhere among these rocks—and go on alone. I am sure they will not harm me if they should happen to discover where I am."

Jeems did not answer. They had come to the rocks which he had spoken of a few moments before. Here, if anywhere, was a place for concealment. It was filled with dark and cavernous refuges, and where the boulders met and crushed together were hidden pockets where their bodies might lie unseen. Toinette perceived these things with a heart that lightened with relief and hope.

A dozen steps from where they stood were three boulders apart from the others. One of the three had split itself so that one half of it was a slab that formed a roof for the crevice between the other two.

Jeems' eyes revealed a deeper excitement as he pointed it out to Toinette.

"We will hide—and in there!" he cried. "Make haste, Toinette! It is smooth rock and will leave no sign behind us. Go in and keep Odd with you!"

He began to throw loose stones about the huge boulder heap. Some he flung over the top of it so that they fell on the opposite side, and at last he sent a few into the edge of the valley, each farther than the other. He finished by shooting an arrow which descended in an open space at the foot of the ridge.

Toinette watched him in amazement and alarm until he commanded her in a stern voice to crawl quickly under the stones. She waited no longer but pulled herself a few inches at a time beneath the boulders. Jeems, thrusting Odd ahead of him, had greater difficulty in performing this same feat, and for a little while they squirmed and twisted until they found a dark recess in which they could crowd themselves and even sit upright. Jeems explained to Toinette the meaning of his strange behavior outside.

"First they will find the loose stones and the marks I made and search for us in every hole and cranny of the pile," he said. "When they discover the arrow I hope they will believe we have fled into the forest."

They waited in a silence wherein the beating of their hearts was like the sound of tiny drums in the gloom of their hiding place. A shudder ran through Toinette, but she whispered: "I am not afraid."

She felt Jeems fumbling for his hatchet and heard him place it quietly on the naked rock at his side.

Then the rock itself seemed to give forth a faint sound as if some one had tapped it gently with a stick.

This sound grew into others that were soft and swift, and Jeems knew that moccasined feet were all about them. Low voices added themselves to the pattering tread. Toinette fixed her eyes on the crack through which came the shaft of light, and occasionally it was darkened as a body passed it. The tread of feet came and went, and they heard the clatter of rocks. But for a time all voices died away, and it was this silence which became almost unbearable for Toinette. This clutch of a danger which they could not see or cope with seized upon her until each moment she expected to hear a ghostly creature stealing into their hiding place or to see a pair of flaming eyes on a level with her own. It was a feeling of horror instead of fear, and with it came a strong desire to cry out and ease her suspense in a scream.

Jeems, too, had almost found himself in the grip of something which he could not control. Not more than a quarter of an hour passed in this suspense, but it seemed to be a lifetime. Then there were voices again which increased in number and excitement until, above them all, a yell rose from the valley as one of the searchers discovered the arrow.

When Toinette raised her head, she heard no evidence of life other than their own on the ridge. "Thank God, they think we have gone into the valley!" said Jeems.

Toinette touched him with a cautioning hand, and in the same moment he was aware of the sound her ears had caught! Some one was near the rock! More than one—there were two! Their voices were distinct though low, and they stood so close that their forms shut out the light from the crevice. To his astonishment Jeems heard a language which Hepsibah Adams had taught him, and it was not Mohawk. These were Senecas. The discovery thrilled him. He hated the Mohawk hatchet wielders who were the scourge of the southern frontier, but the Senecas, also brethren of the Six Great Nations, he doubly feared, for while the Mohawk killers were the wolves of the wilderness, the Senecas were its foxes and panthers combined. One was a creature of darkness and surprise, the other a lightning flash that came and went with deadly swiftness. He might trick a Mohawk, but a Seneca was the cleverest of his kind.

He felt his blood turn cold as he listened to the two. One was arguing that the arrow was a ruse and that the fugitives were somewhere not far away; the other, whose mind was still on the huge pile of stones, discredited the thought that it had been thoroughly searched and set off to find some proof of his suspicions. The first of the two speakers remained, and neither Toinette nor Jeems could hear him move. It seemed an infinity of time before movement came again outside the rock. Metal scraped it as the Seneca made a resting place of it for his gun; footsteps went away, returned, and halted close to the narrow aperture through which they had squeezed their bodies under the stones.

The savage was looking at the entrance to their hiding place! Jeems pictured the warrior, his doubt and hesitation, and was as sure in his visioning as though no barrier lay between them. He heard a grunt. The Seneca was on his stomach, peering in, and the grunt was an expression of the foolishness which had made him grovel like this. In a moment, he would rise and go away. But the moment passed. One—two—three—a dozen. Toinette was like one dead—unbreathing. Odd, sensing a mighty danger, knowing that it was coming, crouched like a sphinx.

At last the silence was broken so softly that the disturbance might have been that of a tress of Toinette's hair falling from her shoulder across Jeems' arm. The Indian had thrust in his head. He was listening—smelling—then advancing slyly and cautiously like a ferret on the trail of prey. There could no longer be a doubt. He knew there was something under the rocks and, with true Seneca courage, foreseeing glory for himself even if death paid for it, he was coming alone.

Every instinct reached its highest tension in Jeems as a danger approached which he would be able to touch with his hands in another moment or two. He removed himself gently from Toinette's embrace and prepared his arms and body for action. Their eyes had grown more accustomed to the gloom, and Toinette could see him as he crouched forward and gathered himself for the struggle which would mean life or death for them. Suddenly she understood that it would not be a struggle. When the Seneca's head appeared Jeems' hatchet would smash it in. She could see the hatchet. It was poised to strike. There would be no cry—no moan—only that terrible, hidden sound. She listened to the doomed man slowly coming.

The feathers of his tuff appeared first, then the long black scalp lock, the hair-plucked head, a pair of shoulders. Jeems put all his strength behind the upraised hatchet. He knew there must be but one blow—well placed in the middle of the skull. That would end it. He almost closed his eyes and the hatchet descended a little, an overwhelming sense of the horror of the thing holding back his stroke. It was not simply killing; it was murder. The Seneca turned his head and looked up. His eyes were trained for use at night, and he saw more clearly than Jeems. He saw the white face, the hatchet, the death behind it, and he waited, transformed to stone. No voice came to his lips and no movement to his cramped body in this moment of shock and stupefaction when he must have realized that all the power of his forest gods could not help him. The pupils of his eyes glowed darkly. He did not breathe. Conscious of his impending end, he was amazed but not terrified. His fine countenance did not shrink from the steel about to sink into his brain. Into Jeems' face as he paused for a moment to study the ground about them.

For a second more the blade did not fall, and in that second Jeems' eyes and those of the savage met steadily. Then the hatchet clattered to the rock floor, and with a protest of revulsion at what he had almost done, Jeems clutched at the Seneca's throat. The Indian was at a disadvantage, and though his powerful body strained and fought to loosen the choking grip, his position was so hopeless that in a short time he was limp and unconscious.

The Seneca's adventure, and the combat—if it could be distinguished by that name—had not terminated a moment too soon for those concealed under the rocks. The trail hunters were now aware that the placing of the arrow had been a ruse to delay them and began swarming back to the ridge. Half a dozen warriors gathered in a fierce and animated debate close about the rocks.

If Toinette's nerves were on the point of breaking, then Odd's were in no better condition when the Senecas returned to the ridge. His heart was breaking in its subjection to inactivity and stillness. Now he looked again on victory. His master was triumphant as the Indians returned and crowded about the rocks. Defiance rose in his soul in an overwhelming flood. He hated the smell outside. He hated the creatures who made it. Without warning, his passion broke loose in the howling rage of a beast gone mad. Toinette's arms and Jeems' hands were futile in their efforts to stop it.

The Seneca on the stone floor moved a little.

Outside there fell an awful stillness. Then Odd realized what he had done and grew quiet. They could feel rather than hear a velvet-footed, voiceless cordon gathering about them in a ring of death.

Expurgation

Cromwell's "Handbook for Readers and Writers" says that to "Bowdlerize" means to expurgate a book. Thomas Bowdler in 1818 published an edition of Shakespeare's work in which nothing is added to the original text; but those words and expressions are omitted which cannot with propriety be read aloud in the family. This was in ten volumes. Bowdler subsequently treated Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" in the same way.

DAIRY FACTS

LOW PRODUCERS
ARE LIABILITY

Cows Carried at Actual Loss Should Be Sold.

Tabulating yearly records from 2,326 cows in the six herd improvement associations in North Carolina, John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college, finds a difference of $54.08 in profits between high yielding and low yielding cows.

"Those animals producing an average of 300 or more pounds of butterfat a year gave an increased profit of $54.08 over another group which produced less than 250 pounds of fat a year," says Mr. Arey. "The average of each cow in the high producing group was 7,797 pounds of milk and 329 pounds of fat. In this group were 464 cows in 18 different herds. The average of each cow in the low producing group was 5,197 pounds of milk and 219.5 pounds of fat. In this group were 857 cows from 31 herds."

The average feed cost of the high milkers was $145.64 a year and of the low milkers was $108.72 a year. Therefore, says Mr. Arey, it cost $36.92 more to feed the high producing cows for one year, but in return an additional $91 worth of milk was secured.

Mr. Arey says he considered the feed costs only in making these calculations. He is convinced had he inquired too closely into all costs, such as the expenses of delivering milk and other items, the cows in the low producing group would not have returned any profit whatever. Some of them were carried at an actual loss and should be sold for beef if their production could not be increased by better feeding and care.

Avoid Blind Teats by Persistent Massaging

There are many three-teated cows that owe their condition to the lack of persistence in continuing to milk the quarter when the milk flow from that quarter first dropped to a small dribble, says a writer in the Montreal Star. Just recently we saw a fine Holstein cow that, a year ago, seemed to have lost the use of one quarter. The owner kept milking and massaging that quarter for the better part of a year. When the cow freshened again a couple of months ago the quarter had returned to normal production and has remained normal since. Had that quarter not been persistently milked, it would have almost certainly been lost. It seems like simple treatment but it is observed that, on most farms when a quarter gives only a trickle of milk it is quickly dried off. In districts where federal inspection of dairies for export of milk or cream to the United States is in force the care of three-teated cows is doubly important, as such inspection requires the elimination of cows with defective udders.

Cow's Worth Depends on Her Production of Milk

A dairy cow is worth only as much as she is able to make as profit in three years, F. S. Harrison, New York State college, states.

In a herd of cows milking at Cornell university those cows which produced only 7,000 to 8,000 pounds of milk failed by a few dollars to pay feed, labor and other costs.

The average productive period in a herd at Cornell was three years. A cow producing 9,000 pounds of milk made $60 more in milk than did the 8,000 pound cow, when milk was worth $2.60 a hundred. A cow able to produce 15,000 pounds returns $420 more income in three years than the 8,000 pound cow on this basis.

The value placed on the various cows in the Cornell herd according to ability are: 8,000-pound producer, $90; 9,000-pounder, $130; 10,000-pounder, $175; and the 15,000 pounder is worth $325.

Dairy Hints

It is a lot easier to milk and care for one good cow than ten poor ones.

Registered pure-bred cows not supported by ancestors of known production and reproduction values find hard going in public sales where discriminating buyers desire to improve the breeding value of their herds.

The thing for the dairyman to do is to grow alfalfa or some other legume crop for hay and let timothy severely alone. Timothy hay, like bright oat straw, makes a good enough filler, but an exceedingly poor milk producer.

Before feeding the dairy cow such feeds as root crops, potatoes, and apples, run them through a feed chopper.

Feed highly flavored feeds after milking instead of before; in fact, it is advisable to do all the feeding at this time.

Progressive dairymen who keep records and study their cows have learned from experience that the most profitable feed is that fed during the dry period.

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

Most of us have a hard row to hoe because we dislike hoeing. A man who really believes in free love rarely talks about it.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

in low-cost protection is the Metropolitan's Whole Life Policy—($5,000 to $100,000). The rate is low, and is further reduced by dividends. For example, if the present dividend scale is continued, a man of 35 may buy a $10,000 policy, keep it for twenty years and it will then have a value of $165.46 in excess of what he has paid.
