Another program will be given by the school Friday evening, April 17th, at the State Theatre. The River," the Fox Movietone maserpiece of mirth that opened there resterday and continues tonight and Saturday, March 27 and 28.

Unquestionably one of the funniest talkies ever made, "Up The River" sets a new style in comedy, and one that will probably be copied extensively in the future. Director John Ford has taken a sprightly tale, half farce and half satire, by Maurine Watkins, selected a huge but thoroughly competent cst, and evol-yed a film that for sheer hilarity has seldom been approached. It deals primarily with two amateur Cupids tough eggs and champion breakers, who appoint themselves custodians, guides and mentors to r pair of youthful inmates and conduct their romance to a satisfactory conclusion.

A simple enough story, but in its working out Ford touches the heig of ludicrous situations and side split ting dialog. The cast, headed by Spencer Tracy and Warren Hymer as the assistants of Cupid and with the charming Claire Luce and handsome Humphrey Bogart as the voung lovers, is perfect. William Collier, Sr., Joan Lawes are also featured. Sharon Lynn, Richard Keene, George MacFarlane, Mackintosh, and Morgan Wallace have the leading supporting roles, and many noveltie- have been deftly inserted into the nlot to keen the Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gest of Saginaw spent Saturday and Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Birt Fowler.

Easter in the Nation's

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

LTHOUGH Easter is celebrated in various forms all over the United States, there is no other city which has a more interesting variety of observances than the nation's capital, Washington, D. C. As As in other places, there are special church services on Easter morning; its broad streets and avenues witness the annual "fashion parade" when everybody dons his or her new attire; and the familiar Easter symbols of lilies, eggs and rabbits are much in evidence everywhere.

Washington is a city strong in tradition. One of the most interesting of these and one which makes the observance of Easter there unique, is the annual Easter egg rolling on the spacious lawns of the White House. On Easter Monday thousands of children gather at No. 1600 Pennsylvania avenue (that is the White House street number) and swarm over the grounds secure in the knowldege that "Keep off the grass" and kindred ad monitions are null and void for that

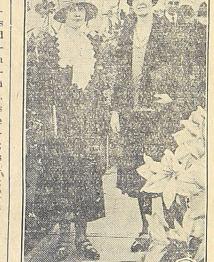

Dressed in their best clothes and carrying with them their cherished burdens of tinted Easter eggs, the youngsters are the welcome guests of the President and the First Lady of the Land who give as much thought and energy to arranging for this event as they do for any great state dinner held in the stately rooms of the White House. There the children enjoy some happy hours rolling their Easter eggs, while their elders look on enviously. For this is strictly a children's party and no adults are allowed on the grounds unless they are accompanying a child. But it is a familiar sight to see some grownup asking a youngster "to take me in," and for once the young may say to the old, "yes, you may go." or "no, you can't go," instead of the old saying that to the young.

But the grownups are not entirely shut out of the White House Easter festivities. For on one day of Easter week the executive offices of the White House are thrown open to Easter week visitors in Washington, and the President shakes hands with the long line of people, usually numbering from two to three thousand, which pass through his office to greet the Chief Executive of the nation.

Easter sunrise services have become a familiar custom in many parts of the country and some of them, staged on mountain tops, are curious reversions to ancient ceremonies of communing with nature in recognition of the rebirth of all life in the springtime. One of the most interesting of these services is one held in Washington on the morning of Easter Sunday, a ceremony in which there is a touch of pathos amid the spirit of rejoicing in the promise of rebirth which such a service symbolizes. This is the service held at the Walter Reed hospital, the home of hundreds of men whose bodies and minds were broken in the World war. A feature of this service is the forming of a great human cross on the lawn by the orderlies and nurses in their white uniforms.

Another Easter sunrise service in Washington which is unique is described by Joyce MacArthur in the Washington Star as follows:

This Easter Sunday good pilgrims are ascending the slopes of Mount St. Sepulchre, in Brookland, to join the Franciscan Fathers in annual ceremonies commemorating the last triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem and in honor of the sepulcher. And as the pilgrims come upon the arched gate they stand worshipfully before these words graven in

"Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

This is the holiest day of the Holy week. Begun with Palm Sunday, the Franciscans have observed impressive ceremonies which lack nothing save historic setting to make them conform with devotions at the Savior's tomb in Jerusalem.

Pealing chimes proclaim the triumphant resurrection. The great sorrow is past, and the faith of His followers is verified with a resounding "Alleluia!" in the universal anthem of joy.

Elaborate Easter ceremonies are observed by many churches and faiths, but none so exacting as those in Washington's "Memorial Church of the Holy Land," on Mount St. Se-

On Palm Sunday the brothers distributed palms to the faithful, recalling thereby the manner in which the people greeted Christ as He passed into the city. They invoked divine protection by surrounding the blessing of the branches with all the impressive ritual ordained by the church. After which the pilgrims, preceded by friars of the community, knelt before the celebrating priest to receive the blessed palm. This writer then tells of the ceremonies and processions on Holy Thursday, on Good Friday and on Holy Saturday, all leading up to the climax of the observance on Easter Sunday. The events of that day he describes as fol-

TALES ... of the TRIBES By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Blackfeet

The "terrible Blackfeet" are a tribe whose early contact with white men has colored most of the pioneer history of the plains. Tales of their daring, skill, and ferocity are to be found in abundance, so that it is easy to picture them, the terrors of the prairies, ambushing the enemy or hunting buffalo in great bands.

The significance of their strange name is not certain. It may refer to moccasins painted black such as were worn by the Pawnees and other tribes. or it may have reference to footgear blackened by the ashes of prairie fires, and this latter is the more probable theory.

This is a confederacy, rather than a single tribe, as it consists of the Siksika (Blackfeet), the Piegan and the Kainah (Bloods). They probably included about half a hundred bands. Each of the three divisions had its own chief and council, and held its own Sun dance. The Atsina and the Sarsi were allied tribes.

The Blackfeet have been called "the most dangerous banditti of the mountains." They were always found with weapon in hand, eager for a fight The young men went to war to acquire horses and the means to set up a lodge and become leaders in the councils, while the older men fought for the love of battle and to add to their prestige.

Blackfeet legends mention a time when they had neither horses nor guns, and hunted on foot, but it was their acquisition of these that caused them to become the "terrible Blackfeet." Horses were stolen from other tribes with great adroitness, and Washington Irving relates a story showing their boldness. Some Black feet went into a Nez Perce camp and cut the horses loose where each had been tethered by one foot before the lodge of its owner. The Nez Perce were all asleep except a party o gamblers, who were so engrossed i

The Blackfeet territory included the upper part of Montana and north to the Saskatchewan river. The six or seven other tribes whose ranges adjoined theirs, especially the Crows, were their bitter enemies, but some of them held the Blackfeet in great respect, and they were not often aroused to attempt retaliation for the constant harassing to which they were subjected.

Smallpox, measles, and starvation due to the government cutting down rations at a season when game was unusually scarce) reduced the number of the tribe materially in later days, but in modern times they are reported to be increasing in numbers and prospering. At present they are settled on reservations in Canada and one in Montana, and have been publicized until they are one of the best known tribes of modern times, who enjoy their limelight and play up to it cleverly.

The Siksika must not be confused with the Sihasapa, or Blackfeet Sioux. This is a part of the Teton Sioux, whose range was southeast of the Siksika. They and the Hunkpapa were responsible for many of the depredations along the Platte river. This band, however, was small and could not compare in any way to the "terrible Black-

The Culver house has been standing for a good many years. It was one of hen, for the Culer family was one of the oldest and most aristocratic in the community. Like all such families are likely to do, they had disintegrated.

Marriage and death and a desire for change had each done its work and there was no member of the family left, and the house had passed into other hands.

I walked by it one day recently and there was a "To Rent" sign on the porch and in the window. The house sengers on the bus could sense that.

But it was unkempt. Whoever now owned it, had not recently spent any money in keeping it in repair, hoping, I suppose, to get a reasonable return upon his investment without sinking anything further in the property.

And yet there were great possibilities in the house. Its lines were excellent, its situation attractive, situated as it was far back from the street amid pine trees and overhanging elms. A little paint, a few repairs, a clearing up of the yard, and a few hours given to trimming the shrubbery and the trees, would have made the place beautiful as it had once been, As it is, it will stand a long time bearing the sign "To Rent." He could see more possibilities in a skinny ill-groomed horse than anyone else I have ever known. He would pick up one of these crowbaits, feed him well, curry and brush him until, he used to say, he could see his face in the animal's glossy coat, and then sell him for three times what he cost. He believed that if he had anything to sell he should first put it into the best possible condition to attract attention. He put up no "To Rent" signs on run-

STARVING DAIRY COW IN SPRING

Better Way to Avoid Milk Surplus Is Suggested.

Cutting down the feed allowance to reduce the output of milk in the spring is not only bad for the cows but also bad for the pocketbook, figures presented by the New Jersey College of Agriculture indicate. A better way for avoiding the spring surplus and market glut is suggested. Of twelve dairymen in a middle western cow-testing association, seven fed less than $30 worth of grain per cow and five fed $61 worth. The seven got an average yearly return of $77 per cow over feed cost. The five men who spent twice as much for feed got a return of $176 per cow over and above feed cost. In other words, the liberal feeders collected $98 more income per cow than the stingy feeders.

It is well known now, that if cows are constantly underfed during their producing period they permanently lose their ability to produce large quantities of milk. Thus, the dairyman who follows this practice as a check on spring production, also checks production for the following lactation period.

The best way to avoid the spring market with its low prices, suggests the college of agriculture, is to have the cows freshening throughout the year rather than all in the spring. A general adoption of this practice among dairymen would go a long way toward solving the spring surplus

Ground Soy Beans Make Good Source of Protein

Ground soy beans are a very satisfactory source of protein on many dairy farms. Usually only favorable comment is heard from men feeding beans during the cold weather. In summer, however, a lack of palatabil-Ity in the ration containing the ground beans is often reported. In most cases however the beans are not refused by the herd when first ground but rather after the feed has been ground two weeks or more. It appears that the finer the beans are ground the more trouble experienced.

Soy beans are rich in ofl. When the bean is ground more of the oil is exposed to the air than before grinding. As the weather grows warmer there is a greater tendency for the fats to become rancid than at lower temperatures. The same condition occurs in butter. Low temperatures do not favor the development of rancid flavors which increase rapidly at higher temperatures.

The laxative nature of the beans renders them less desirable as a protein supplement when the herd is turned to pasture. If they are to be fed from now on not more than one week's supply should be ground at one time. Fine grinding is not essen-

Judgment of Cow Feeder Is of Much Importance

There is more to economical feeding than a correctly planned ration. Success, after all, rests with the skill and intelligence of the individual farmer. It is the eye of the feeder that keeps every cow right up in condition and always looking for her feed. Roughage will be fed in such quantities as a cow can clean up but not more. Grain will be fed in proportion to production. If the meal mixture is about as suggested above, Holsteins will be fed at the rate of one pound of grain to each three and a half to four pounds of milk produced; Ayrshires, one pound to three of milk. If the cows are milking heavily they may get more grain than this. Here is where the judgment of the feeder comes in. Where home-grown grains are largely fed, more grain will be required to maintain milk flow and it is because of this that the heavy feeding of homerown chop is not always economical.

Give Cow Adequate Rest in Lactation Periods

Dairy cows may produce their ogn weight in solids in the milk during one year. The ordinary farm cow that will produce 7,000 pounds of milk, produces 910 pounds of solids in a year. This is almost equal to the average

When you think of the amount of mineral, fat protein produced by this cov. in one year, you begin to see the importance of giving the cow an adequate rest period in order to build up her body for this year of strenuous effort. Many good dairymen allow their cows two to three months' rest either on good pasture or on feed be-

Kill Ox Warbles

| Responsible | It is time to watch for warbles in the backs of cows, advises C. C. Hayden. chief of the dairy department of the Ohio experiment station. These warbles contain the grubs which torment cattle so much in hot weather in the pasture. Some of them remain in the cows' backs until June. These grubs should be pressed out of the skin by placing one's thumbs beneath them and working them out through the opening in the skin directly over them. They

Kills His Brother And Hides Body

Boy Confesses to Ghastly Murder Following Quarrel Over Car.

Stevens Point, Wis .- The murder of his brother, in cold blood, was confessed here recently by Anton Riske, seventeen, after a neighbor's boy on the way to school found pools of frozen blood on the road, mingled with bits of brain tissue which proved upon examination to be human. The body of the slain youth was recovered later from the Wisconsin river.

Riske said that he and his brother John, twenty-five, who lived with their widowed mother, Mrs. Mary Riske, on a farm in the town of Carsons, had been having trouble over use of John's car and that he determined to kill

"When we went out in the car," he told District Atorney John Meleski and Sheriff John Kubisiak, "I took my shotgun along and sat in the back seat. I said I would use it to scare some dogs that always ran out at us I loaded the gun while John drove and when we got by a big stubble field I aimed at the back of his head and Put Body Through Ice.

"John didn't move, but the car ran into the ditch and stopped. I could see some lights coming and I was afraid somebody would see that he was dead, so I dragged him around back of the car and fastened him by the leg to the bumper with a tire chain. Then I drove away back in the stubble field and turned out my

Anton said that he unfastened the chain in the field and loaded the body into the back seat of the car. Then, when the approaching car had passed, he drove out of the field and over to highway 10, from which a small side road took him to a river landing. He drove a mile up the river on the ice to a spot where he knew a hole was kept open to water teams.

With a pole kept there for the purpose, he broke the thin ice on the water hole and pushed his brother's body head first into the river. He pointed out the place and at the first lunge with a long pike pole a deputy sheriff brought up the body. John Riske had been shot in the right temple.

Anton went home and wiped out the car with rags. He hid the bloody rags, including his handkerchief, under the hay in the barn, with one of John's oxfords which had come off in the car. He put his brother bloodstained overshoes in the house.

Then the slayer wrote a note and signed his brother's name, saying that John had gone away with another fellow and would never return. He addressed it to his mother and she found It the next day.

SIGNS OF DECAY SHOWING IN WASHINGTON MONUMENT

Engineers and Architects Worried Over Condition of Building

New York .- The marble of which the Washington monument is constructed is showing rather alarming signs of decay, to the worriment of engineers and architects. There is, of course, no danger to the monument yet, writes D. W. Kessler, bureau of standards engineer, in the American Architect, but the fact that the marble is cracking and chipping-architects call it spalling-gives one to think about the material of which structures designed for the centuries should be built.

The old story of frost breaking up the stone is not taken too seriously by Mr. Kessler, although that may have something to do with it. He looks upon the spalling marble as simply decaying and proposes no remedies.

Among other things, the unnatural gases and acids which modern cities pour into their air are seen as an important factor in the decomposition of building stone.

tury of Progress exposition.

There are not enough old buildings in this country for the various kinds of native stones to have been thoroughly tested. The bureau of standards issues reports on building stones as the results of tests under simulated weather conditions but there arises the question of whether these tests really approximate the effect of weathering on building stone. The tremendous load strain on the stone of the Washington monument may have some part in the spalling of the edges of the stones.

"Many writers on the subject of masonry decay have been inclined to place most of the blame on frost action," writes Mr. Kessler in the American Architect, but he adds, "Since this does not occur to slate we must conclude that such dense materials are not stressed appreciably by frost."

CHAPTER X-Continued -19-To Jeems and Toinette there was nothing spectacular in their first day or in the many that followed. After the triumphal night, the Indian town fell once more into the routine of its existence. Men hunted, women worked, children played. Warriors met in solemn councils and smoked incessantly as they discussed the affairs of their commonwealth and planned for the future. The "Dark Year" was upon them. Winter threatened. But there were other matters to be settled. Tiaoga had brought unusual news. The English, under a general named Braddock, had been defeated and massacred. The French had been destroyed on Lake George. Sir William Johnson, the White Father of the Sioux Nations, was victorious, and the Mohawks were profiting greatly. This brought somber looks into the faces of the Senecas. The eastern wilderness was bound to run red with war. Tiaoga was sure. His warriors were sure. The long-expected struggle between the English and the French was at hand, and there would be no rest for the tomahawk until the land was free of one or the other.

Tiaoga and his councilors in Chenufsio faced war-and famine. If their fighting men went into the east, who would keep the people from starvation? It was decided that Tiaoga should take the warpath again with thirty men chosen by lot, while thirty of his braves should remain to fight hunger and death during the winter months. The drawing came, but Jeems was not included. Shindas was doomed to leave his sweetheart again.

These were days when misgivings assailed Jeems and Toinette in spite of their hopes and plans, yet no cloud more than temporarily darkened their visions. In the heart of each was the prayer that a wandering priest might come their way, so that the ceremony could be performed which would make them husband and wife. In the town were a number of white women who had accepted Indian husbands in the Indian way, but against this practice Toinette revolted. She prayed and Mary Daghlen prayed with her, for through the years since her mother had died the Thrush had kept her faith unbroken. The Seneca, worshiping her, honored it.

Early in November groups began to leave, each with the small amount of food which remained as its share. of eight people under the protection of Thunder Shield, a valiant warrior and a splendid hunter. They were going toward Lake Ontario. Toinette was given to Ah De Bah, the Tall Man, a relative of Tiaoga's.

Hiding their disappointment, Jeems and Toinette encouraged themselves with visions of a future which they tried to paint in bright colors. The months would pass quickly. With the earliest days of spring, they would return to Chenufsio. Every hour they would live in each other's thoughts, and at night their prayers would cross in the wilderness. Next year there would surely be a way. Fate would not separate them again. In their final moments together, Toinette's eyes glowed with a depth of faith and love which it was impossible for Jeems to measure fully.

In this way they parted. He went north and west with Wuskoo toward the Tyanagarunte river which emptied into Lake Ontario. Odd struggled between his devotion for Jeems and for Toinette. He followed his master a distance, then hesitated and turned back. A lump rose in Jeems' throat, and he could not see clearly as his comrade sat in the trail and watched until he disappeared. Wuskoo led the way to a hardwood country in which he was sure there would be hunting that would last through the winter. There were plenty of raccoons, and the mergansers, or fish ducks, would come to the swiftrunning headwaters to feed as soon as ice closed the lakes and the mouths of the streams. Here they made their lodge of saplings. It was a new kind of home for Wood Pigeon. Jeems built it with a cooking hearth and a chimney and a tiny room set apart for Wood Pigeon herself. The child's eyes glowed with delight at this possession. Each day Jeems told her more about Toinette-how Soi Yan Makwun cared for her beautiful hair, how it was part of her religion to keep herself clean, how and why she did this thing and that, until thoughts and desires grew in Wanonat's head, and she employed the comb and the brush which Jeems made for her until her sleek black hair was never untidy.

Heavy snow and extreme cold came early in the season. By the middle of December, Jeems was compelled to hunt on snowshoes, and so bitter were the nights that the first of January found even the headwaters freezing out the mergansers.

This was the memorable winter of 1755 and 1756, the story of which the Senecas handed down from father to son for many generations—a winter in which all game seemed to have gone from the face of the earth, and when hardship and starvation killed a tenth of the three westernmost of the Six Great Nations, the Senecas, the Cayugas, and the Onondagas.

At first Jeems was partly prepared, because he had killed a buck, and with Wuskoo's shrewd assistance had marked a number of trees in which raccoons were sure to hibernate. But late in January famine drew closer about the cabin on the Little Selus, and Jeems traveled farther in his hunts, until he was gone two days at a time. In February, he made four of these hunts and found no game. The cold was terrific. Trees cracked like rifles in the woods. Bitter winds continued night and day. Wood Pigeon's eyes grew larger and her body more fragile as the weeks passed. Each time Jeems came in from his hunts she blazed up like a fire in her happi ness, but he could mark the steady fading of her strength. He hunted with almost insane energy. Everything was for her when famine clutched at them hardest.

Torturing fears assailed Jeems. Toinette was never out of his mind, for even in his sleep he dreamed of her. She, too, was a part of this fight to hold life together.

At night, when the wind howled and trees wailed in their distress, he sweated in fear, and more than once the thought came to him to abandon his family and go in search of Toinette. His visions of the fate which might be overtaking her became almost unbearable. His hunts were not long now, and seldom took him more than three or four miles from the cabin, for his own strength was ebbing. His only hope was to kill an occasional bird, and it was in the darkest hour that an answer came to his prayers. In a blizzard against which he was working his way in half-blindness, he stumbled upon a doe as weak as himself and killed her. Without this stroke of fortune, Wood Pigeon and Wuskoo must have died. When the thaws came, they were alive. Raccoons began to appear and fleshy roots could be gathered out of the opening streams. Early March brought a warm break in which Jeems and his companions started for Chenufsio. Food was plentiful on the way, and each night they gathered strengthening sap from the maples.

They arrived at Chenufsio. The people there had lived frugally on their supplies, and from the first running of the maple sap had been making sugar. Only four families had preceded Jeems to the village, and of their number, which was twenty-eight, five had died. No word had been received from Tiaoga and his warriors.

The maple sap ran steadily. In spite of this opening grace of spring, there hung over Chenufsio a grim specter whose shadow grew darker with each day that passed.

This specter was death. Scarcely a family returned which did not bring grief with it. And Ah De Bah, the mightiest hunter of them all, did not come. No one had heard of him. No one knew where he was. Fiftyseventy-a hundred-and then a hundred and fifty of those who had gone in the break-up were accounted for by the end of March. Among them was Mary Daghlen. Of their number, thirty had died. Still Ah De Bah, the Tall Man, did not come.

Then he appeared one day. He was nized. Behind him trailed his people. Jeems counted them before he could tell one from another. Eleven! He ran toward them, and Toinette swayed from the line at the head of which the Tall Man marched. He might not have known her at first if she had not met him in this way, for those who were behind Ah De Bah walked with bowed heads and dragging steps like death figures in a weird parade. Her eyes stared at him from a face so strange and thin that it choked his joy. Her body was not heavier than a child's when he clasped her. Then she began to cry softly with her face against his breast. He carried her to the tepee. Her clothes were in tatters, her moccasins worn to shreds. She was so small a burden that her lightness sent horror through him and his eyes were blinded by a hot fire when she raised a cold hand to touch his face. He placed her on the soft skins in the tepee, then he was conscious of Wood Pigeon near him, in a moment Mary Daghlen came in. Jeems made way for them. He went outside, and in his path was a creature who leapt weakly against him. It was Odd, a skeleton with red and watery eyes and jaws falling apart. Jeems waited until the Thrush came out and told him she was going for warm water and food and that Wood Pigeon was undressing Toinette. Then he sought the others. All but Ah De Bah had disappeared and were being cared for. The Tall Man could scarcely stand as he told his story. He had brought his eleven people back alive-the dog and he. Like the truly great, he gave credit to his inferior. Without the dog, he would have failed in his struggle to feed eleven mouths -and Jeems knew why Odd had not been eaten.

After a time, Mary Daghlen let him see Toinette again. She was in her bed of skins. The look which had frightened him was gone from her eyes, and they were bright with the joy of his presence. She held out her arms to him, and he knelt beside her. Wood Pigeon looked at the two with shining eyes, and a soft mist gathered in Mary Daghlen's. After this, Jeems did not see Toinette again for an afternoon and a night. During this time she slept, and the Thrush and Wood Pigeon were never far from her side. The next day she walked with him about the town.

What was in Toinette's heart was also in Mary Daghlen's. The young girl who had known no other life than that of her adopted people since babyhood, but whose mother had kept God and Church alive in her soul, watched with increasing anxiety for the return of Shindas, and she told Toinette that at last she was prepared to yield to her environment, and if no priest came that spring or summer she would marry Shindas in the Indian way. This thought now held less of horror for Toinette. She had seen the fidelity and courage of an Indian family in its struggle against death; she had seen the Tall Man gnaw at bitter bark that his women and children might have scraps of skin and flesh; she had seen a mother hide her portion of food day after day that she might save it for her children; she had witnessed a faith and devotion which could have been inspired by nothing less than the strength of God in their souls. Her prejudices melted away in spite of their background of unforgettable tragedy, and she began to experience emotions which had not come to her before. And though she said nothing of it to Jeems, the conviction was growing in her heart that she would not allow another winter to separate them, even if a priest did not come to Chenufsio. But he came, following closely the months of starvation. He was a gaunt, death-faced man, on his way to take the place of a brother who had died among the Indians of the Ohio. That was what he said. History was to relate otherwise, for a year later he was the force behind the Abenakis in their slaughter of the English at Fort William Henry. His name was Father Pierre Roubaud. He was a cold, terrible man of God. Yet he was the Church. He would have died a thousand deaths for the Cause of which he was the spiritual if not the moral representative. He would have eaten human flesh in defense of it. He did see such flesh eaten by his savage disciples at Fort William Henry. He remained in Chenufsio two days. On the second of these days he married Jeems and Toinette according to the ritual of the Catholic church, The gloom he brought with him was dissipated by this event. Chenufsio gave itself up to a few hours of rejoicing in honor of Tiaoga's daughter and the son of Wuskoo.

Girls of Arabian Race Eager for Instruction

Beirut, the leading center of education in the Near East, has more schools and colleges, native and foreign, than any city of its size in the world. But its girls' schools, before the World war, were all foreign and more or less of a missionary character. That is why Moslem parents refused to send their daughters to them.

But during the war, when all the foreign schools were closed, a Syrian woman, Mary Kassab, opened a native school in the building of the English mission. The success of this school was such that the attendance in a few years rose from 20 to 300, and an enthusiasm for education was kindled in all the neighboring countries. From Irak, from Palestine, from all parts of the Arabic-speaking world, girls of all creeds-Moslems and Christians and Druses-come today to the Ahliyah school of Mary Kassab. The secret of its popularity, according to a writer in the New York Times, lies principally in the fact that, besides being native, it is non-sectarian. Technically and executively also it enjoys an unusual reputation.

Influences on Prices

As Macauley said, with the exception of the alphabet and the printing press, no set of inventions has tended to alter civilization so much as those which abridge distance-such as the railway, the steamship, the telephone, the telegraph, and that conveyor of information and advertisements, the newspaper. These all tend, therefore, to decrease prices.

TURNING CATTLE ON GRASS RISKY

Better Plan to Sell Animals Directly From Feed Lot.

It is better to sell directly from the feed lot cattle that have been heavily corn-fed during the winter and spring than to turn them on pasture. Tests at the Ohio experiment station and elsewhere show that such cattle turned on grass lost heavily during the first few weeks and even later fail to make large gains.

For this reason, G. Bohstedt, head of the animal industry department at the Ohio station, holds that the turning of corn-led cattle on grass in the spring is financially a risky practice, especially with poorly bred cattle. A feeding trial under his direction last year showed that corn-fed cattle would much better have been sold directly out of the feed lot than later after having been turned on pasture. Sometimes cattle 'eeders are tempted to change their original plan of shipping directly from the feed lot. Perhaps heavier cattle command a premium; or, if young stuff i being fed, it may not be finished enough to suit the present market.

Cattle need roughage even for finishing, which cannot be done on corn and cottonseed meal alone. The supply of hay, silage, or shock corn may be low. But it is a mistake to turn the heavily corn-fed cattle on pasture, although the grass is abundant and cheap and palatable to the cattle.

It may be possible to spread the hay or silage a little farther. The steers may relish some bright oat straw. Grinding or crushing the ear corn to corn-and-cob meal will help provide roughage. A little bran and oats in the ration is splendid under such conditions. At the same time a liberal amount of cottonseed meal should be fed, especially now that it is cheap. Yearlings and older cattle will do well getting about three pounds daily per head. More has been fed at times with profit.

These or other alternatives may make it necessary to turn corn-fed cattle on new grass, and both practical experience and experimental evidence argue for selling directly out of the feed lot.

Use Formalin Solution

to Cure Cattle Bloat

Bloating in cattle, when reached in time, can often be relieved by drenching the animal with a solution of half an ounce of formalin in a quart of water. After the animal has recovered a second drench composed of a pound of epsom salts and half an ounce of ginger in a pint of tepid water should be administered. This treatment is being used with marked success in the Kentucky experiment station's herd.

When, in the spring, cattle are first the change should be gradual. This is best accomplished by having the cattle graze for 20 to 30 minutes the first day on pasture, and increase this period each day until the digestive organs become accustomed to the green, succulent feed.

During the early weeks of spring, cattle should not remain in the pasture overnight nor be turned on pasture while dew or frost is on the grass. An excellent practice is to feed cattle a little hay or other dry feed before turning them on pasture. Watchfulness during a week or two of early spring will prevent many cases of bloat.

Live Stock Reminders

Commercial swine supplements are also efficient producers of pork.

The roasts from the two-year-old and yearling steers are more palatable than the roasts from the calves.

Rapidity of gains is important. So is market topping ability. But neither of these two items is a safe guide to profitableness in cattle feeding.

A good substitute for any of the cereal crops on farms raising live stock is alfalfa, grown either alone for hay or in a mixture with grasses for pasture.

An idle horse will do very well during the winter period on a good quality of straw if given about ten pounds of clover or alfalfa hay a day in addition. Soy bean hay or sweet clover hay, if well cured, will also furnish the needed protein.

Beef from two-year-old and yearling steers is more desirable than beef from calves both in the feeder and finished stages.

Feeding the brood sows some potassium todide in their slop several weeks before farrowing will prevent hairless pigs.

There is considerable variation in the price of hay and other roughage in different places this year because of widely varying local supply and demand.

Children Know Good Peanut Butter

YOUNGSTERS say, "Be sure to get Mon-arch Peanut Butter. It tastes just like peanuts."

This Airplane Runaway Several years ago one heard of run-

A huge Caproni machine was basking empty in the sun, all set for a trial flight, when its mechanic, who had set the motor going slowly, was surprised to see the plane moving forward. A few more seconds of awed hesi tancy and the machine began to slide along the ground more rapidly, covered about 100 yards, gently rose from the field and headed straight for the barracks. Bewildered spectators foresaw an inevitable collision, but the robot Caproni made the grade, rose a bit higher and began a series of acrobatics which the most daring stunt birdman might have en vied.

After a few moments the wind caught it and it was seen to turn on one side and dive to the earth in flames. Aviators, in discussing the incident, conjectured that the mechanic accidentally opened the petrol lever as he was jumping out of the

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria - made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a neverfailing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants-as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.
