Win Battle on Child Diseases

Expectation of Life at Birth Is Increased From 48 to 58 Years.

Washington.-Up to the present time, according to the United States public health service, the most significant advances in public health achievement have been manifested among the lower age groups. It is true, of course, that the great sanitary reforms, such as the filtration of water supplies, have remarkably diminished diseases of certain kinds among all ages and classes of persons, but the actual saving of life has been most pronounced among children, and especially little children and infants. It is for this reason that the expectation of life at birth-that is, the average length of time that all children born at a given time will live-has increased from 48 to about 58 years in the last 20 years. This is very encouraging, because it shows clearly that much of the disease from which the human race has been suffering, and many early deaths, can be avoided if specialists put their best existing sanitary knowledge into practice. But while it is gratifying to know that the nation is on the right track in the battle against disease, it is true that there is another side to the picture—a great wastage of health and life still continues, due to the failure to apply existing knowledge.

Avoidance Still Is Need.

There are some diseases which may be controlled and eventually eradicated by general measures undertaken by the community in which the individual citizen is seldom called upon to take part. There are a great many other diseases, however, for which as yet no general measures have been devised, and in the avoidance of which the individual is called upon to exert his own initiative. Conspicuous among such diseases are those conditions which are prevented by immunization.

It may be freely granted that the inoculation of individuals in order to render them immune to one disease or another is not an ideal procedure. Health officials wish as much as any one else does that there were some simpler general measure which would make this procedure unnecessary; in fact, for many years they have been attempting control by such means as quarantine, isolation and disinfection to check the spread of communicable disease,

These efforts have met with some measure of success in the case of certain diseases. For example, it has been possible to reduce typhoid fever to the disappearing point by the sanitary control of water and milk supplies, and yellow fever and bubonic plague may readily be controlled in progressive communities by measures against the mosquito and the rat, respectively. On the other hand, smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever and a number of shown much amenability to control by any means other than by actually immunizing each susceptible individual. Disease Unnecessary.

According to the public health service there is really no need for any one nowadays ever to have either small pox or diphtheria, and those diseases as is well known, have been in the past among the most deadly of scourges. Vaccination against smallpox, repeated in a few years, will protect against smallpox.

Such great improvements have been made since the introduction of this method that no one should hesitate to have his children vaccinated during the first year of life.

X-Ray May Determine Old Painting Existence

Philadelphia.-The X-ray method of determining whether an old painting is genuine may be utilized to learn if a Gilbert Stuart masterpiece hides under the more recent coat of paint applied to the sign of the old king of Prussia tavern.

The sign is now owned by the Germantown Historical society. Local traditions say that Stuart painted the original, and many old residents of Germantown believe that the ancient sign, which witnessed the march of the continentals under Washington. was covered with paint during the last 50 years.

Car; Driver Dies Los Angeles.-A "stop" sign flashed at a boulevard here and Frank D. Lovett, sixty-one, brought his automobile to a halt. When the "go" sign came the Lovett car failed to move.

Other motorists honked horns for a time and then investigated. Lovett had died from heart disease.

Pigeons Coo at Guests, Lose White House Home

Washington .- The eaves of the front portico of the White House are being remodeled to dispossess a horde of cooing pigeons that had established themselves there. Across from the White House is Lafayette park, which is almost as famous an abode for pigeons as St. Mark's square, Venice. The birds found that fresh peanuts were being placed on the White House lawn for native squirrels and moved across the street to dip into the squir-

Carpenters were put to work to place pasteboard across the eaves in order to keep out the unwelcome visitors, who at times set up a din of cooing when famous guests and statesmen were arriving and departing from the White House.

36 States Use Central Buying

Survey Shows Big Saving Results From This New Practice.

New York,—Centralized purchasing has been adopted in 36 states and in more than 200 cities of the United States and in three privinces and 25 cities of Canada, according to a survey just completed by Dr. Russell Forbes, secretary of the National Municipal league and associate professor of government at New York university, for the National Association of Purchasing Agents.

"A sentry at the tax exit gate" is the phrase with which Doctor Forbes describes this system of governmental buying. It is "the delegation to one office of the authority to purchase supplies, materials and equipment needed for use by all the several branches of the organization.'

A billion dollars a year is spent by federal, state, county and municipal other common infections have never governments for this purpose. Doctor

Forbes estimates, and entralized purchasing can save on he average of 10 to 15 per cent of the total, he be-

He cites many illustrations as proof. of this. Under the old system of decentralized purchasing he found different branches of the same government paying different prices to the same dealers. He found favored dealers, rebates to politicians and all sorts of expensive methods which favored private instead of public interests.

Under the new system, in one contract for gasoline for the state high way department, the purchasing department of California saved more than three times the annual cost of operating the purchasing system. On a long-term contract, the State secured a base price of 12% cents per gallon of gasoline; at the same time the dealer's price was 16 cents per gallon f. o. b. refinery and the retail market price was 20 cents per gallon. The saving on this gasoline purchase will approximate $382,500.

In Maryland virtually every item used by the state was reduced in cost under centralized purchasing. On mimeograph paper the price was cut 26.6 per cent. Bond paper was cut 24.2 per cent. Bacon was reduced 21.7 per cent.

Similar savings were revealed by the survey in virtually every government which had adopted centralized pur

Savings in the price of goods are only one of the many advantages of this system, Doctor Forbes reports. Others include better delivery service, reduction in overhead cost through reduction in personnel; reduction in the volume of "paper work"; centralized supervision over deliveries and stock, closer accounting control over expenditures, saving of discounts through prompt payment of invoices and the elimination of favoritism in buying.

Man Carries Piece of Copper in Head 11 Years

Ellington, Conn.-Eleven years after J. B. De Carli, garageman, lost an eye in an explosion, he suffered pains in his throat. X-ray pictures were taken at Hartford hospital and a large piece of copper was discovered near the root of his tongue. An operation was successful.

store. The car was built in 1857.

Paris.-The ancient bills of lading show conclusively that George Washington, not Martha, was the first interior decorator in America.

It was he who furnished Mount Vernon, planned the type of furnishings to be used, where they should go and even selected the curtains and draperies to hang at the many windows of the great house.

This information came to light in an interview with Miss Frances Wolfe, who is in charge of the interior decorating and furnishing of the French Mount Vernon erected in the Bois de Vincennes for the French colonial ex-

"England supplied practically all of the furniture as well as the clothes used by George and Martha," said Miss Wolfe, while Grand Rapids has equipped the Mount Vernon of Paris. Fourteen different furniture companies have donated fine reproductions of the original Presidential mansion setting. The electric light furnishings and all of the mantelpieces have come from Detroit, and many authentic bits of silver and accessories have been picked up, or donated, or

"New York has furnished us with all the fabrics to be used in the mansion here," said Miss Wolfe, "and the designs and materials have been copied as nearly as possible from the originals. We have had to search for samples of the originals in museums and private collections, make sketches of them and then have them made up. It has all been terribly interesting but we have had our troubles," she added.

"Martha may have had a lot to say about what went into the orig inal Mount Vernon, but it was George who did the ordering, and in search ing through old records and documents we found that he did most of the arranging when the furniture arrived from England."

Monument Man Rules City With Undertaker

Maquoketa, Iowa.-This is not a dead city by any manner of means, despite the fact that it is run by an undertaker and a monument dealer. The city, through Mayor J. B. Harrison, undertaker, has just hired as its manager P. C. Wray, who has been engaged in the monument business for years. Both men promise to inject new life into the city and cut down its running expenses.

Thornburg, Ark.-The largest wolf caught in this part of the state was exhibited recently by Bud Woodward, veteran state trooper. The wolf weighed 75 pounds.

preparations are going forward rapidly for the world's fair, which it will hold in 1933. It is to be called the Century of Progress, and the keynote of the exposition will be a visualization of the part that the marvelous advance of science in the past century has played in industrial progress and in human welfare. In the way this is done, the exposition will be unlike any world's fair that has ever before been held. Accordingly, the exhibition buildings which are now in the process of construction will be different from any others that have ever before been erected. They will represent not only the architecture of today, but the architecture of the future. They will be "modernistic" to the last degree. That is, all of them will be-except one.

Along the lake front where the exposition will be held there already has been built a little structure of roughhewn logs-Fort Dearborn of tragic memory, risen, phoenix-like, from the ashes of more than a century ago. And visitors to the world's fair in 1933 can look upon it against its background of skyscraper-lined Michigan avenue and in it, surrounded by the modernistic architecture buildings, see not only an epitome of the history of Chicago, but also an epitome of the history of the whole United States.

Marvelous as has been this transformation of a lonely frontier outpost with less than a hundhred white inhabitants to a metropolis of more than three million, the fourth largest city in the world, there remains one amazing fact to make the story of Chicago's growth sound like a scarcely-believable fairy tale. For all of this has taken place within the span of one man's lifetime! That man is Nah-neenum-skuk, a one hundred and twentyone-year-old Pottawatomie Indian living on a reservation near Mayetta, Kan., who waos born in an Indian village on the present site of Chicago in

Since he was only three years old at the time of the Fort Dearborn massacre and the burning of the fort, he does not have any recollection of that tragedy, but he does remember the reestablishment of a military post at Chicage when the second Fort Dearborn was built in 1816 and the departure of the Pottawatomies from their ancestral lauds for a new home in the West a few years later. It is problematical whether Nah-nee-num-skuk will still be alive when the world's fair is held in 1933, and whether he will be able to come back to the scene of his birth if he is still alive at that time. But the fact rengins that today there lives a man who could stand in a city of teeming millions and recall the time when this spot was but little changed from what it must have been when the caravels of Columbus first touched the shores of the New world. er 11 days of wairy travel through

1. A photograph (taken at night) | which illustrates vividly the contrast between the Old and the New. In the foreground is one of the blockhouses of the replica of the first Fort Dearborn, built for the World's Fair of 1933. In the background is the famous Chicago skyline, as seen from Lake Michigan, with its towering skyscrapers and its myriad of lights.

2. Nah-nee-num-skuk, one hundred and twenty-one-year old Pottawatomie born in an Indian village on the present site of Chicago, still living on an Indian reservation at Mayetta, Kan.

3. A century of mail transportation progress was dramatized in Chicago recently when a message was borne from the replica of the first Fort Dearborn to New York by horse, automobile and airplane. In the photograph John Manson, a great-grandson of the builder of Fort Dearborn, is shown receiving the message addressed to the postmaster of New York from Col. John Sewall. He carried it to the Chicago post office where it was placed with other mail in an automobile truck and taken to the municipal airport. where it was placed on an air mail

But the survival of this one hundred and twenty-one year old "native" of Chicago is not the only evidence of the amazing transformation that has taken place on the shores of Lake Michigan. Recently there took place in Chicago an incident which afforded a dramatic contrast between the Old and the New. Through the gates of the rebuilt Fort Dearborn one morning rode John Manson, dressed in the military uniform of the style worn by his great-grandfather, the builder of the original Fort Dearborn. He was carrying a letter addressed to the postmaster of New York city. Through the maze of automobile traffic on Michigan avenue he made his way to the Chicago post office where his leiter was dropped into a mail sack which was tossed into an automobile truck and rushed out to the municipal airport. There it was taken aboard an air mail plane and that evening the letter was placed in the hands of the New York postmaster-less than 12 hours from the time it had left Fort Dearborn.

Had such a letter been dispatched from the Fort Dearborn of a century ago it would have been weeks-and possibly months-before it was delivered in New York. For as one historian has put it "From November until May Fort Dearborn was as isolated from the outside world as though it were on another planet. We have in epitome the story of the failure of one attempt, made by Captain Whistler in December, 1809, to break this isolation, He obtained a month's leave-of-absence to journey to Cincinnati, Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 24 hours. Whistler left Chicago the last of November and reached Fort Wayne, Ind., December 10, 'much fatigued aftrain and snow,' as he tells it in a letter. The water was so high that his further progress was prevented. Finding it impossible, should he proceed, to be back at his post by the end of the month, he prepared to return to Fort Dearborn, grateful to his superior for the opportunity accorded him as though he had succeeded in making the journey." The historian quoted in the forego-ng is Milo M. Quaife in his book "Chicago and the Old Northwest!" That book was published only 18 years ago. But how soon in these modern times may a statement be out of date! "Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 24 hours" writes the historian in 1913 But the historian of 1931, after consulting the time-tables of the air transport companies which now carry passengers to all parts of the United States, would write it "Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 12 hours." And if you would retrace Captain Whistler's journey to Fort Wayne and do it in an airplane, you could cover in a little over an hour the distance it took him 11 days to

What was true of the isolation of the first Fort Dearborn was nearly as true of the second. "One day in October, 1817, a year after the establishment of the second Fort Dearborn, Samuel A. Storrow, who was making a tour through the Northwest, appeared on the north bank of the Chicago river, and shortly after entered the fort, where he was received 'as one arrived from the moon," writes Quaife. "The little establishment at Fort Dearborn constituted a miniature world, with interests and ambitions quite detached from those of the larger world outside." Such were the conditions which ex-

sted during the early history of Chicago—the era of the two Fort Dearborns. That era came to an end in 1833 with the events, the centennial of which furnishes the reason for the exposition two years hence. One of these was the incorporation of Chicago as a town, decided upon at a meeting held on August 5, 1833, at the Sauganash hotel, Chicago's first hostelry, where a total of 12 votes was cast for incorporation and one against and the town election held five days later when 28 votes were cast, electing four trustees and a president of the town board. (By way of contrast it may be remarked that in the recent election to choose a "world's fair mayor" for Chicago, more than 1,000,000 votes were cast.) The other events was the convening in September, 1833, of the greatest Indian council ever held in Chicago at which the Pottawattomies and allied tribes ceded all their lands west of Lake Michigan and their remaining reservation in southwestern Michigan, a tract of some five million acres, to the United States and agreed to remove beyond the Mississippi river within three years.

LOVELY FROCKS OF COLORFUL SHEER PRINTS WIN POPULARITY

may go, but the flattering and ever lovely frocks of colorful sheer print remain with us, let us hope, forever. Coming prettier, more alluring, more entrancing every day in every way as summer approaches are these airyfairy flowery creations.

Now that so many of these delectable summery gowns made either of printed sheer voiles or chiffons are taking unto themselves flocks of perky bows and other trimming touches of velvet ribbon, especially the girlish tie-around-waist effects which are so popular this season, they are making

Work for Crochet Needles. Let's get out our crochet needles in a hurry and stock up on a goodly supply of mercerized crochet cottons for here comes Dame Fashion telling her world-wide audience that handcrochet lace edgings are in vogue again. A recently returned stylist declares that these dainty hand-crochet finishings are all the rage in Paris.

The edgings most in use are the extremely narrow sort which makes them easy to crochet and the work goes very fast. Some of the very

womankind fall in love with them all |

All that was needed to make the charming dress shown to the left in the picture a "perfect dream" of a gown was the piquant little velvet ribbon bows which the designer posed so cunningly here and there midst the ruffles and fluffles on bodice and skirt. The drop-shoulder decollete couldn't be prettier if it tried and it's well worth copying when you go to make up the next party dress. Here's a secret: while this adorable dress looks like it cost aplenty, the truth of the matter is that it is not at all extravagant for it is made of smartest lingerie collar-and-cuff "sets" feature crochet edges, while not a few designers are trimming simple daytime frocks and frilly blouses with hand-crochet.

As every woman knows, a touch of hand-crochet works wonders in imparting an air of gentility and refinement to the simple little daytime frocks which are so important a part of the summer wardrobe. The charming neckline which graces the ladylike print dress pictured tells a pretty story of an alliance between finely tucked white organdie and dainty crochet edging. The printed crepe is rose color with a tiny white floral rayon voile which is surprisingly inexpensive.

One of the pretty maneuvers which fashionists are making this season is to run bandings and wee ruffles and such horizontally. This around-andaround movement is effectively employed in the fashioning of the smart sheer print illustrated to the right in the picture at the top. It has a charm all its own.

The flair for pastel colors is very pronounced this season and the new sheer weaves for formal afternoon and evening wear especially reflect this influence. Not only in the patterning of the voiles and chiffons, the georgettes and thin crepes are lovely opaline tints accented, but the feelpatterning. The hat is white straw. The shoes are also white for the call of the present mode is insistent in the matter of white accessories.

Now that the lingerie blouse is playing a stellar role in the realm of fashion, it behooves the woman who loves to crochet to "get busy" and make up some neat little edgings for trimming modish wide collar and fanciful sleeves and soft frilly jabots. You can have no idea until you have tried it how attractively hand-crochet lace trims dotted swiss, and dotted swiss, as you no doubt know, has come into its own this season, now that such a high style value is being placed on dainty sheer cottons.

TALES... of the TRIBES By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Arickara In Indian sign language, the Aric-kara are called "corn eaters." They had a small-eared corn which was very delicious, and so popular that it was used as an article of trade. Corn was a prominent article in their ceremonials, and some of the ears were kept for generations and were regarded with reverence. The emblematic ear of corn was addressed as "Mother." Certain rituals were observed at planting and harvesting, as well as at certain times during the growth of the

It is hardly necessary to say, then, that from the earliest days of their legendary history, the Arickara were agricultural people, although they spent the winter season hunting corn. Even the picture writing symbolizing the people stressed the corn motif, and sometimes they were drawn as an ear of corn with human mem-

While a sedentary people are usually supposed to lack the courage of roving folk, it is evident that fear was an almost unknown emotion to Arickara hearts. They would capture disabled buffalo as they crossed the river, swimming up to the great beasts boldly. Early writers have often described the ferocity of a wounded buffalo, so that the temerity of the Arickara in catching these animals thus is beyond comparison.

Another extremely bold exploit which they performed yearly was the gathering of wood which they took from the river. In the spring, when the ice broke into cakes and floated swiftly and dangerously down the stream, these fearless Indians, men, women, and children, engaged in the occupation of hauling wood ashore. It required a sure foot and & quick hand to leap lightly across the shifting ice cakes, tie a cord to the drifting wood, and return to shore to pull the fuel in.

The Arickara, besides this fearless manner of providing meat and fuel, could boast considerable versatility in the more sedentary arts. They made boats of buffalo hide fastened over a round frame of willow, in which they could cross the Missouri three at a time. They made basket traps to catch fish. Pottery cooking utensils, basketry, stone mortars for crushing corn, horn spoons, flint knives, and hoes made from the shoulder blades of buffalo, were among the products of the Arickara, before these implements could be obtained from traders in simpler and better form. They had a manner of melting glass beads and pouring the colored liquid into molds to make ornaments, and they also embroidered garments with dyed porcupine quills, to make a very effective decoration.

One of their strange customs was that of "packing" meat on their heads and backs, instead of loading it an their horses. Heavy packs were carried in this way for great distances, and those who excelled in transporting the heaviest burdens sometimes gave the meat to the poor, that they might gain merit with the Lord of Life thereby.

The Arickara were also skilled in "magic," which is so remarkable when effected by a trained Indian wizard. Not every tribe was fortunate enough to have members who excelled in the art of legerdemain, but those who did regarded this talent with great reverence. Certain forms of magic were believed in by all Indians, and their legends often embody the use of this power.

Their history shows that this was once a southwestern tribe, closely affiliated with the Skidi. The two tribes moved north, but when the Skidi settled on Loup river, Nebraska, the Arickara continued northeastward, meeting some of the Siouian tribes, with whom they were sometimes at war and sometimes at peace. Long ago they built houses along the Missouri almost as far south as Omaha, and these dwellings were later occupied by the Siouian tribes, who were drifting west.

Lewis and Clark met the Arickara in Dakota in 1804, and found them not unfriendly to the United States, but later they became hostile, and, since the rivalry between trading companies caused many of their troubles, they even attacked a trader's boat, killing thirteen men. For a time after this, there was considerable unpleasantness, and to add to their unrest, their crops failed for two years.

They decided to leave the country where so many bad things had come to pass, and to go back to Loup river, where they had left the Skidi, but this became a stay of only two years, as their hostility to the whites prompted the request that they return to the Missouri, and by this time it was very certain that the whites were master. This was the last eventful move they made, for in 1880 the Fort Berthold reservation was established for the Arickara, Mandan, and Hidatsa. and in 1900 they were given land in severalty, and made citizens of the United States, subject to the laws of North Datoka.

Washington.-Stock markets may is just around the corner, and soon scores of tourist laden ships will sail for strange harbors. Passport statistics show more Americans traveled abroad in 1930, despite the depression, than in 1929.

Little Decrease. Officials see little diminution so far

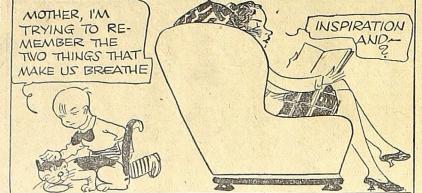

Last year 209,211 Americans re ceived passports, as compared with 193,372 in 1929. In both years our citizens mainfested a wider urge to travel than in 1928 when prosperity was moving along under full steam.

"Went Tourist." The depression, however, has had one effect on travel. The Commerce department, delving into thousands of pleasure and business trips, found more persons "went tourist" in 1930 than in earlier years, when first-class accommodations were in wide demand.

Nevertheless, Commerce department researches were surprised to find spending "per class" was much freer last year than the one before.

In the first two months of this year the State department issued about 2,000 fewer passports than in January and February, 1929. But this is explained in part by a recent ruling prolonging the life of passports. Many persons went abroad without applying

Doctor Woodbury said this developed from cross section study of three types of hair; the mongoloid, or straight, black, coarse hair with round cross sections; the brown, wavy hair with oval cross section; and the kinky, kidney-shaped type.

The curator began his own study of measurements and ethnic study of hair on exceptionally well preserved mummies found in the Mesa Verde cliff dwellings. Hair from 14 adults was examined. Doctor Woodbury then procured samples from many living Indians from the United States' reservations. Results of both studies were compared. One of the most notable preliminary results of this investigation, he revealed, was the discovery that the hair of living Indians differed widely. Doctor Woodbury indicated he considered his study more important to possible future investigation of the Machines Stealing Butterfat Are Unprofitable.

One of the most unprofitable "animals" any dairyman can have is a cream separator that is not working properly, says H. R. Searles of St. Paul, Minn. Some dairymen who would not tolerate a single unprofitable cow have "leaky" separators that waste the profits of the entire herd. Just how prevalent faulty separators are is indicated by the fact that one out of every three machines used by new members of the Minnesota State-Wide Cow Testing association have been found to be "stealing" butterfat, as Mr. Searles puts it. Some of the skim milk samples sent in have tested as high as 16 hundredths of 1 per cent. This would mean that in every 10,000 pounds of milk, 16 pounds of fat would be lost. The loss on some herds has been more than $4 a month, figuring fat at only 30 cents. A separator should hold the fat loss in skim milk down to from 1 to 2 undredths of 1 per cent, Mr. Searles explains. Among the common reasons why separators fail to skim efficiently are bowls out of balance, bent disks, worr spindle shafts or bearings, machines not fastened to floor or not level, worn-out tinware, machine turned too slowly or too unevenly. These and other causes may usually be remedied without much trouble.

LEAKY SEPARATOR

IS WORST "ANIMAL"

To guard against losses, separators should be checked by a skim-milk test every month. When cream can be seen on the skim milk there is a loss of at least 10 hundredths of 1 per cent. The separator check which is provided members of the State-Wide Cow Testing association is proving of real value, according to Mr. Searles. The association gained about 400 new members during February. The total on March 1 was about 750 and growing rapidly.

Keeping Barnyard Free

of Fertilizing Manure One of the best dairy farmers in eastern Ontario is able to make the unusual claim that, in the past eight years, there has never been a single load of manure accumulate in his barnyard. He cleans his stables each morning and the litter carrier Is dumped directly on the sleds or wagon. as the case may be, and hauled to the field. This man has a sandy farm and it is not often that he cannot drive anywhere to spread manure. Farmers cult to follow this plan, but all must admit that a yard full of manure is not a thing of beauty and the clean yard of our eastern Ontario friend looks decidedly more sanitary as an exercising place for a dairy herd, says a writer in the Montreal Herald. The Ohio experiment station offers an additional argument for keeping the barnyard clear of manure: Over a period of 30 years, which should be long enough to be conclusive, it has been found that manure which was spread on the field as produced, increased the average yield of corn per acre by three-fourths bushels, of wheat three-fourths bushels, and of clover hay 400 pounds more than did manure which was left in the pile in the barnyard and spread in the spring.

Cows and He ers Soon

to Freshen Are Assets Cows and heifers soon to freshen are the dairyman's greatest assets. says E. J. Perry, extension service dairyman of New Jersey. Every effort should be made to feed and properly protect these animals from accidents. rough handling, and storms. Feed hay and grain while on pasture, he advises, and keep these cows and heifers near the barn and under close observation.

Any good commercial-fitting ration containing 12 to 16 per cent protein should give satisfactory results at this time, Mr. Perry advises. As a good home mixed ration, he suggests this formula: 100 pounds each of corn meal, ground oats, wheat bran, oil meal and 4 pounds of salt. The animals should also have access to water and salt in brick form. About two weeks before calving the grain mixture should be gradually changed by eliminating the corn and oats, so that only bran and oil meal will be fed during the fast ten days.

Heifers soon to freshen should be brought into the barn with the milking herd when the period of liberal grain feeding begins. They can be fed while ir the stanchion, which gets them accustomed to being tied in the barn, and also enables the feeder to keep close watch on their condition.

THE STORY

At a public dance Martin Forbes, a newspaper man, cuts in on Rhoda White's dance with Max Lewis, whom Martin instinctively dislikes. He overhears a conversation between Lewis and a woman, which he realizes concerns Phoda He rerealizes concerns Rhoda. He re-calls a "blind ad" inquiring the whereabouts of "Rhoda McFarland" and senses a newspaper

Later, but not until an hour or two later, going over the evening on foot, as it were, he was able to surmise that his complacency over the apparent success of this maneuver, getting rid of both Lewis and Babe with a single well-placed introduction, might have had something to do with his discomfiture in the scene which followed with Rhoda. She, of course, couldn't have known how much deeper he'd plunged into her affairs while she'd been finishing out the dance with the negligible Higgins. And it wasn't surprising if she'd felt when he came up and took her arm, detaching her from her most recent partner with barely a word, that his manner was assuming a good deal too much, as if their friendship had been a matter of months rather than of minutes. He'd been entirely unconscious of this manner at the time. All he'd been thinking I'd be nice to dance with." of was the importance of what he had to tell her and of what she in return would have to tell him. He was aware that she looked at him a little oddly as he started to lead her away, and he explained his action, adequately he felt by saying, "We've got to find some place where we can talk. Sha'n't we get out of this? I'll take you home if you like."

At that she got rid of his hand rather bruskly and turned to stare at him, still half perplexed but in rapidly mounting exasperation.

"I don't want to get out of this." she said. "I came here to dance." Before he could speak, she added, more amlably, "We can talk now, though, can't we? And look, there's a place we can sit." The sofa she darted off to take possession of occupied perhaps the most public place in that entirely public dance hall, opposite the head of one of the flights of the grand staircase. "That is all right, isn't it?"

"I suppose so," he agreed discontentedly. "At least it's got its back to the wall and no one can hear what we say without standing right in front If us and listening"

"But what have we got to say," she don't know how serious it is. You'll know better than I. It sounded to me like something you ought to be told "'Sounded?' Do you mean you heard people talking about me?" "I think they were talking about you. I'm practically sure they were.' His chain of inferences had been straight enough once, but it was tangled now. "I'll start with something else," he said, after a moment's silence. "Do you remember asking me why I looked funny when you told me your name was Rhoda, and my saying I had an association with the name that I couldn't spot? Well, I have spotted it an advertisement in the personal column of the News for the address of Rhoda McFarland. The reason I'd noticed it was that it was always a blind ad; the advertiser, I mean, never giving his own name."

He had instinctively avoided looking at her while he was speaking, but the quality of the silence after he'd finished drew his eyes around to her face. He saw it deeply flushed.

"Well," she asked as she encountered his gaze, a sharpness that sounded like panic audible in her voice, "what has that got to do with me?"

He wanted to say, "You are Rhoda McFarland, aren't you?" but his nerve fulled him. He didn't try to answer her question. "Was it Rhoda McFarland you heard them talking about?" she asked at the end of another silence, her voice now In better control, "and did you think there couldn't be more than one person named Rhoda?" At last his mind was on the rails again. "I didn't hear any name mentioned at all. I'll tell you what I did hear. The man said, 'She's the girl, all right.' The woman asked him how he knew. He said the girl was a cagey little brat-meaning, I suppose, that she hadn't told him as much about herself as he'd tried to find out -but that he had got her first name. That name, apparently, cinched it, since the woman had already half recognized your face—the girl's face,

I mean." She noted the slip and pounceá apon it angrily. "Why do you keep talking about me? What makes you think it has anything to do with me?"

"I heard the woman call him Max," he went on doggedly. "He was Max Lowis all right. I got a look at him later. I don't know who the woman ! was. I didn't even see her properly. It came out in their talk that she'd been going by on the sidewalk just as-just as this girl they were looking for turned in. The woman thought she recognized her, got hold of Lewis somehow, and had him come to the dance just to scrape an acquaintance with you. I can't help it. I do think it was you they meant. I knew he told you his first name, but I didn't know until then that you'd told him yours."

"I didn't," she instantly put in, with the emphasis, he thought, of sudden relief. "The only person I told my name tonight was you. He might have heard me tell you, though," she added. "I saw him crossing the floor right near us while we were talking about it."

For a moment he thought she'd given in and admitted she was Rhoda McFarland. He moved his hand to cover hers as he said, "Then it's my fault really that he found out, and that makes me the natural person to help you."

He thought it wasn't his touch she minded, for it wasn't until he spoke of helping her that she snatched her hand away, "But I don't need any help," she told him vehemently. "I haven't anything to do with those people. I don't know who Max Lewis is, but I don't believe that he had any reason in the world for getting introduced to me except that he thought 'They were trying to find you," he stubbornly persisted, "before somebody else did; somebody they are afraid of or are trying to take advantage of; an old man they spoke of as 'C. J.' Do you know who he is?"

"I haven't the remotest idea in the world." There was no doubt she meant that. Apparently the question was a relief to her, for she added. "Can't you see now it's all nonsense?" "Sit still another minute anyhow and listen to the rest of it. Then per-haps you won't think it's nonsense. "It was the woman who seemed most excited about you. She told Max it was his job to find out where you lived, tonight. She said it didn't matter whether he took you home or followed you home. She said that as soon as they knew that, they'd have C. J.-whoever he is-where they wanted him. She said there wasn't any time to waste because you might see that ad in the paper any day and answer it."

She'd snatched her hand away long before he'd finished speaking. Now, in furious exasperation, she cried, "'I-I-I!' Why do you keep talking about me? Why should I answer an advertisement for Rhoda McFarland? Hemanded, "that anybody shouldn't I won't. I'll tell you that much, anyway. And I won't let Max Lewis take "Plenty," he told her. "Of course I me home, either, if that's any satisfaction to you."

"How will you keep him from following you home?"

He saw she flinched at that, and added, "Let me go with you now. We can give them the slip. Why not?

Why won't you?" "Because it's all nonsense," she said weakly. "Because I want to stay and

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. 'If you won't let me take you home, I'll follow you myself and see that he doesn't." She was angrier than he now, and apparently colder. "Why are you so anxious to find out where I live?" she now. For the last week there's been, asked. "Because you think I'm Rhoda McFarland? And there must be a story about me if I'm advertised forand you want to get it for the paper?

Is that the way reporters do?"

It didn't occur to him until quite a bit later to wonder how she knew he was a reporter. For the moment he just sat and stared at her, stupefied at the gross injustice she had done him. Before he could get himself together to controvert the monstrous charge, he perceived the harmless, unnecessary Higgins standing before

Rhoda saw him too and sprang to her feet. "Do you want me to dance this one with you?" she asked him. "I'd love to."

Martin, boiling away inside like a teakettle, followed them as far as the edge of the dance floor and stood there a while making up his mind what he should do next. Not really that, perhaps, he conceded afterward, so much as fanning his perfectly righteous indignation and rather enjoying it.

Presently, though, his reflections ceased to be even dubiously enjoyable. A chill misgiving blew over him that Rhoda might be right after all. Lewis, he noted, was dancing with Babe Jennings with a contented absorption inexplicable under the hypothesis that his only interest tonight lay in taking or following another girl home. When Martin perceived this, he turned away disgustedly and went home himself.

CHAPTER II

Why She Changed Her Name Rhoda tried to tell herself she was glad she had snubbed Martin Forbes. She enjoyed after a fashion, the consciousness of his glaring at her from | never, even in after years, told her the edge of the dance floor, but when she perceived that he was no longer there and came to the conclusion that he'd really abandoned her, she found rather suddenly that she was tired of the Alhambra for tonight and wanted to go home. And although she maintained that Martin's suspicions of Max Lewis were wild nonsense, she was rather glad that Leander Higgins offered to take her home.

Their trip, mostly by trolley car, was entirely without incident. Of course it would be! Martin had made up the whole thing out of his own head. She was as friendly as she knew how to be to Leander all the way to the studio door but at that point she said good night to him firmly. It had been only by the exercising of a good deal of resolution that she'd kept her mind on him up to that point. And until Babe came home she wanted to be let alone.

As she glanced around the studio after shutting the door on Leander Higgins her eye fell on tonight's News scattered about the floor, as her roommate had left it. Was that advertisement really in the paper, or had Martin Forbes made that up, too? No, there it was in the personal column, just as he'd said. "Rhoda McFarland will learn something to her advantage . . ." She dropped in to Babe's chair and the section of the paper slid from a slack hand back to the floor.

It had given her a surprising shock to see her discarded name in print like that. It brought things back that she'd thought she was done with for ever; some things that she hadn't thought about in years.

Their yard at home, with the venerable live oak in the middle of it, in whose branches she and her three inseparable friends used to scramble about like young monkeys; the three A's they used to call them because their names all began that way-Ann, and Alice, and Amy. They were all in the same grade; seventh it was, when her father told her one morning that she wasn't to go to school any more for the present. For the present! She'd never gone to school again: not since that day. And Amy and Alice and Ann faded out of the picture. They didn't come to play in her yard any more. And she had understood that it was because of something that was spoken of, when it was mentioned at all, as the trial; her father's trial-Prof. Walter Whitehouse McFarland. She'd had a glimpse of his name once in black headlines in the newspaper. Her father had stopped being a professor at the same time she'd stopped going to school. He was at home all the time, and for a while-though whether it was days or weeks she couldn't remember-they'd made a sort of pretense of having school at home with him for teacher. Interrupted harassed days those were, with people coming to see him and being sometimes told that he was out, even when she knew he wasn't; reporters and men with battered-looking cameras taking pictures-of the house, when they couldn't get anything else.

There were a few days toward the end, just before they left California for good, when he had been away from home all the time and she had known, somehow, that the trial was

Also she had known before she saw him on his return, though again the source of her knowledge eluded her memory, that the outcome of it had been favorable to him, that he had "got off." She must be right about that since she still so vividly remembered her disappointment and perplexity, when she saw him again, over the fact that there was nothing triumphant about him; that he had been, if possible, whiter and more bitterly silent than ever.

She'd hoped he would tell her what the trial had been about. He had ing.

that. Only once, that she knew of, had his spirit flashed up.

This had happened when her Uncle William-he must have been her dead mother's brother; he couldn't have been her father's-had come to see them, after the trial and before they started east. She couldn't remember ever having seen him before, but she did remember the falsely genial smile with which he had reproached her for having forgotten him.

He'd been an ogre to her ever since. Her father had not been afraid of him. He'd sent her from the room on Uncle William's saying that her father could probably guess what he'd come to see him about. She'd obediently gone, but only as far as her bedroom, and the boom of the ogre's voice had come through the thin walls all too clearly. He'd come to try to make her father give her away, for ever, to him. He'd spoken of her, terrifyingly. as "the child"! But her father, though quiet and conciliatory at first, had finally defied her uncle and told him to go straight to h-l!

She'd never heard him swear before or since and she had thought that the reason of his asking her, after her uncle had gone, whether she had heard any of their talk. Anyhow, it had been why she told him she had not.

She hadn't understood much of it at the time, beyond her uncle's assertion that her father had disgraced himself and wasn't a fit person to bring up a child. She must, though, have stored up a good many uncomprehended phrases of that talk, or how could she have been so sure, two or three years later, when she read in the newspaper of a sensational prosecution of another professor under the Mann act that this was the kind of trial her father had had.

Her father, of course, hadn't been sent to prison. He had "got off." But why, if he hadn't done the horrible thing, hadn't he gone back to the college and she to school and Ann and Alice and Amy come to play with her again? Probably because people had thought he'd done it, anyhow. Their departure from the little university town out in California had felt like running away to her and, she was sure, to her father, also. There was one incident about the journey which she remembered very clearly. Her father's voice had flagged and she'd looked up to see if he'd fallen asleep. He wasn't asleep, but staring out over the desert with such a look of pain in his face that she burst into tears.

He'd comforted her very tenderly and had said to her the only thing, she thought, that he'd ever said in direct reference to the catastrophe: "I've got you," he told her, "and they can't take you away from me. And I'm going to see to it that you sha'n't be the loser by this thing that's happened to me. In the long run it may be just as well for you that it did happen."

At the time she'd had no idea what he'd meant by that. But the events of the later years of his life made it clear enough. He'd had a scheme of some sort, now that he wasn't a college professor any more, for making her rich. A scheme that he'd never brought off, to be sure, but one that down to the very night of his death he'd never lost hope about.

As it had worked out, it was that hope of his, always on the point of coming true, that had been the cause of most of her unhappiness during the four long years they had lived in that Chicago hotel. She didn't know that she regretted them now. That made a pretty hard sort of problem to work out. Most people, certainly, would say it was a horrible way for a child to be brought up.

The hotel itself was all right, one of the less pretentious ones of the new residential type. Their two rooms up on the tenth floor, furnished in imitation black walnut and taupe upholstery, especially perhaps the floor lamp with its heavy silk shade, had carried out the idea that they'd come to live in a palace. The kitchenette, with its electric stove, had seemed a marvelous toy to her; and their white tile bathroom, with its modern plumbing and its never failing abundance of hot water, had been a luxury.

She'd taken it for granted, during those first few days while breathless she explored the wonders of the hotel, that the wealth her father had hinted at was already in his pockets. It wasn't until he expressed concern over her loneliness-it was beginning to strike in a little-that she asked him why, now that he was rich, he had to work so hard and couldn't take a little time off to play with her.

He'd smiled and told her he was not rich yet, not rich at all, but that he thought it wasn't going to be long, not more than a few months at most, before he was. As soon as that happened he'd stop work and they'd go roaming the world together. Meanwhile she was to be patient and get along as best she could.

How many times during the next four years had they had that same talk, without essential variation? Dozens-scores! Toward the end, the note of it had got sharper, more like a cry of desperation, until her one care, with him, had come to be to avoid everything that could remind him of the life she led during the long days from the time he left her at the breakfast table until he came back sometimes long after dinner at night.

She didn't wonder now, looking back upon it, that as the months stretched into years the thought of the little girl left unoccupied and uncared for should have driven him frantic. And yet, somehow, it hadn't been horrible at all.

If she'd been a timid child, of course it would have been dreadful. Or if people hadn't naturally liked her and wanted to be kind to her. Or if her father had been the sort who asked nagging questions and told her she must never do that again. She'd begun doing things from the first day he'd left her there in the hotel that he probably wouldn't have approved if he'd known about. Most of the things she'd done had been sensible enough, she thought-and where she hadn't been sensible she must have been lucky, for she'd never got into any serious trouble.

One thing that went a long way toward making her situation tolerable during those four years was the fact that she'd always had as much money as she needed. From somewhere her father had had a perfectly adequate and regular supply. From her fourteenth birthday on, she'd known ex actly how much it was: a hundred dollars a week. At that time he'd begun handing it all over to her except what his small personal wants required, and had given her the job of keeping their accounts and paying their hotel bills. It had always been in cash—five vellow-backed twenties. There'd never been any sign of a change for better or for worse in their

She never knew where the money came from. Once she asked him outright, and he had so pointedly ignored the question that she never asked it again. She was afraid she'd

She was afraid it was her Uncle William-the ogre. Her whole capacity for fear was concentrated, focused upon that one point. She believed that it was he from whom she and her father had fled, thereby frustrating his intention to take her away. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

on exterior doors of buildings is the cylinder lock developed by Linus Yale, Jr., and this leads us back into history. Primitive prototypes of Yale's invention were in use in Mesapotamia and Egypt as early as 2000 B. C. These were huge wooden affairs requiring cumbersome keys, as we may gather from the Biblican passage (Isaiah 22:22) "And the key to the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder." This key, or muftah as it was and still is called in the East, is a stick of wood from 15 to 30 inches long, 2 to 4 inches broad and 1 to 2 inches thick. Into the face of one end are set a number of wooden or iron pegs about an inch long. These pegs correspond with as many holes in the wooden bar or bolt which locks the door and can only be lifted when these pegs enter the holes and lift a corresponding series of pins which drop home by force of gravity and keep

This street was shown as a street on the map of St. Augustine in 1737, and called Treasury street because the old treasury was on the corner of this cross street and St. George street. His Noise Brings the Coin

Begging for the funds with which to rebuild a temple, an old Chinaman has for 23 years been traversing the streets of Peiping. As an evidence of his holy character he wears a skewer passing through his cheeks and protruding on either side. His method of extracting the coin is unique. He carries a huge wooden gong which is known as "Buddha's Ear," and taking up a position in front of a native home he makes a deafening noise until some member of the family comes out and gives him an adequate coin. If the amount meets with his approval he will move on, otherwise he remains until the sum is increased.
