"MANY A SLIP" IS FINE ENTERTAINMENT

"Many a Slip," Universal production with Lew Ayres and Joan Bennett in the featured roles, will be shown at the State Theatre Sunday and Monday, May 24 and 25.

Naughty, but nice entertainment is this newly tinselled version of an old story of the boy and girl making love in a cabin. Stories dealing with delicate subjects are difficult to handle, but Director Vic Moore deserves credit for keeping within the bounds of good taste. The cast is interesting and has much to do with the success of the picture. Joan Bennett's distinctive personality shows to advantage and Lew Ayres gives evidence of having equipped himself admirably for the leading male role. The picture is an outstanding achievement in sophisticated entertainment.

WIN 1ST PLACE IN STATE SCHOLASTIC CONTEST

The scholastic team representing the Tawas City high school made its annual journey last Thursday afternoon to Mt. Pleasant where it entered the State Scholastic contest which was sponsored Friday by the Central State Teachers College of that city. It returned Saturday morning, entering the city with much flaunting of colors and acclaim, and bringing the plaque which represented first place in the academic division of the contest among the high schools of its class.

A total of 106 high schools and 1132 students entered the contest. These were divided into three classes; that is, class AB consisting of high schools enrolling 300 or more students, class C consisting of high schools enrolling from 100 to 300 students, and class D high schools enrolling less than 100 students. As Tawas City had an enrollment of less than 100 in the high school, its representatives contested in class D. Forty-six other high schools and 416 students were placed in this class. It is easily seen, therefore, that there was plenty of competition.

The Tawas City championship team of ten consisted of Dora Mark, Eileen Nevanpa, Viola Burtzloff, Nathan Lincoln, Irwin Schlechte, Alvera Goedecke, Marcella Low, Arnold McLean, and William and Arlene Leslie. Mr. Forster and Miss Crosby accompanied the students.

First place was secured in algebra, English XI, written composition, botany, second year typewriting, and second year shorthand. Second place was secured in physics and advanced civics, and third place was secured in geometry and first year typewriting. These places gave Tawas City a total of 27 points in the academic division of the contest, as many points as the next two nearest schools combined, as fourteen points secured second place and thirteen points secured third.

When announcing the winners, President Warriner made special mention of the fact that Arlene Leslie had not only written the best paper in algebra in class D, but also a better paper than any of the contestants in any of the classes. He made note of the same fact in regard to Irwin Schlechte in second year shorthand. (In explanation of the above, it should be mentioned that all of the contestants wrote on the same questions.)

The Tawas City high school has sent teams to the above contest for four years; that is, 1928, 1929, 1930 and 1931. The team of 1928 consisted of four members, and returned with several places. The teams of the last three years have all consisted of ten members, and won the academic plaque in 1929, the vocational plaque and third place in the academic division in 1930, and the academic plaque in 1931.

It is rumored that it soon will be necessary to make an addition to the school building in order to have room for the trophies which the loyal sons and daughters are consistently securing in the "battle of brains."

STATE OFFERS DOUBLE BILL DURING MID-WEEK

Beginning next week Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the State Theatre will offer a double feature program for the price of one. Next week's offering for the above mentioned days is "One Heavenly Night" and "Derelict."

"One Heavenly Night" has Evelyn Laye, John Boles, Leon Errol and Lilyan Tashman as principals in a large cast. The story is concerned with the cabaret and night life of Budapest. It is thoroughly modern, a romantic comedy told in action, dialogue and song. Evelyn Laye, famous light opera star of the English stage, here makes her American screen bow.

"Derelict," the George Bancroft starring vehicle, is real drama, filmed on a spectacular scale. Mountainous ships battling monster catastrophic tropical storms; a rescue at sea; two vessels crashing head-on in a dense fog. Paramount went to sea to film this picture, which was taken, almost entirely aboard ship, off the coast of southern California.

It took Standish ten innings to defeat the local boys. The game was nip and tuck all the way. In the extra inning an error by Hill paved the way for defeat. East Tawas had many chances to win when the ball game, but could not hit when hits were needed. Both teams played an excellent brand of ball.

St. Martin pitched a fine game for the locals, allowing seven hits and striking out ten. Orr, on the mound for Standish, yielded only six hits and struck out 17.

EAST TAWAS SCHOOL NEWS

At the meeting of the P. T. A. Monday evening, the County Normal department had charge of the program. Miss Margaret Worden gave a very interesting talk on "The Place of the County Normal in the Michigan Educational System." Miss Parker spoke briefly on "The Practice Teaching Program" and introduced in turn, Lois Leslie, Lloyd Bowman, and Stanley Rescoe, who explained the use of Subject and Lesson Plans. Charles Robinson conducted a sixth grade English class. All parts of the program were much enjoyed by the audience. During the business session which followed, plans for the annual picnic were discussed. It was decided to serve only ice cream cones to the children this year. The basket dinner will be at eleven o'clock on Wednesday, June 17, following the sporting events for which prizes will be given as usual. This is the last of the series of very successful meetings for the year 1930-31. The next meeting will be held on the third Monday in September.

Miss H. Huhtala is leaving for home May 22. She will go on a concert tour to Europe, being accompanied by a Lutheran chorus. The greatest part of her time will be spent in the Scandinavian countries. The boat sails June 6.

These tests included the Detroit Word Recognition, the Detroit Reading, the Stanford Achievement, primary and regular. Grades 1 to 8 were given these tests. Though having their limitations, the educational are for each subject has been determined. Parents interested in the results achieved by their children can call at the school any afternoon and go over the same.

The last of the spelling and penmanship tests with Pinconning were also given this week. Mr. Race, penmanship instructor of Bay City, corrects the writing tests, while Mr. Goodman, county school commissioner, of Bay county, and Assistant Superintendent Hamilton of Bay City submitted the final spelling lists. Grades 4 to 7 were included in these tests.

East Tawas high's baseball team broke even last week, winning from Whittemore, 23 to 8, and losing to Standish in a ten-inning encounter, 8 to 6.

In the Whittemore game East Tawas collected 19 hits, St. Martin getting four, Kasischek, Roach and Klenow following with three hits apiece. Ed. Davis started on the mound for the locals, allowing six hits in the six frames he twirled. St. Martin followed and allowed no hits and no runs.

It took Standish ten innings to defeat the local boys. The game was nip and tuck all the way. In the extra inning an error by Hill paved the way for defeat. East Tawas had many chances to win when the ball game, but could not hit when hits were needed. Both teams played an excellent brand of ball.

TAWAS LOSES FIRST GAME TO TWINING

The Tawas City Independent baseball team opened the season's campaign last Sunday with a game in which Twining was its opponent. The contest resulted in favor of Twining, 8 to 5. After grabbing off a five-run lead in the early innings of the contest, they meekly allowed Twining to walk over them in the last three frames to annex the game.

Doc Smith started the hurling for the locals and showed first class form. During the four innings he occupied the mound he held the visitors hitless and scoreless. Boulder relieved him in the fifth and went along in the same manner until the seventh, when his mates "blew." Lack of support in the last three frames cost him the game.

March, southpaw Twining hurler, went the full game for the Arrac county boys in fine shape. Although the locals tapped him for eight safeties, he was never in danger, excepting the second and third innings when Tawas City scored four of its five runs.

Next Sunday the D. & M. team of Bay City will give battle to the Tawas City squad at the local athletic field. The game is called for 2:30 Central time.

IOSCO YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROGRESSIVE SOCIETY

Our meeting on May 1 was well attended. Miss Cowgill gave a very interesting health talk. We hope she will honor us by her presence at the meeting again.

Mr. Doak of East Tawas was the speaker for the meeting held on May 15. The title of his address was "Following the Crowd." This certainly was a splendid talk. Mr. Doak also led the recreation hour. We hope he, too, will be with us again soon.

Everyone is welcome to these meetings. Come and enjoy yourself with us.

"TRADER HORN" DEPICTS THRILLS OF JUNGLE LIFE

Mighty drama of a primeval world; of atavism rampant in almost unknown spots of the globe; thundering adventure, strange rites of a savage people in the jungles—these are the background for an everlasting story of devotion, love and romance, in "Trader Horn." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's gigantic filmization of the famous book, playing at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, May 24, 25, and 26.

There is drama that grips the heart in the play—and drama equally as gripping in the savage death-clance of the wild Isorg—a ceremony thousands of years old in the pathless jungle that the picture brings, with sound and all, to the screen.

Wild animals fight to the death; one sees a zebra worst a lion in a death struggle; leopards routed by a pack of hyenas; the deadly charge of the ferocious rhinoceros; hairbreadth escapes from gigantic crocodiles. And through it all runs the love of a boy and a girl. W. S. Van Dyke gave us "White Shadows of the South Seas" and "The Pagan," but never before such thrills, such entertainment, as in this great chronicle of his 25,000 mile trip that took him and his company into dark places never before trod by white men.

Harry Carey gives a magnificent performance in the role of Trader Horn, the guardian of Peru. His friend's son, and of the golden-haired Nina, "White Goddess" in a temple of a savage tribe. Duncan Renaldo plays the role of Peru convincingly and Edwina Booth is beautiful as well as dramatic in the heroine's role. Olive Golden and others are in the cast, not to forget Mutia, the giant native, who enacts Rencher with all the skill of a trained screen actor.

They Also Served and Died

Below—The cenotaph in Arlington National cemetery commemorating the 23 army chaplains of all faiths and creeds who lost their lives in the World war.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MEMORIAL day is a day for decorating the graves of our warrior dead. Established originally in memory of those who lost their lives during the Civil war, it has been made the occasion for recalling those others who died in other wars, and since 1918 the day has had a deeper significance for more Americans than ever before.

When we speak of our World war dead, we usually think of the soldiers, sailors and marines, the fighting men who gave their lives on the battlefields of France or in the fathomless depths of the Atlantic. But there were others besides soldiers, sailors and marines who also served and died for their country, and it is fitting that they, too, should be honored on Memorial day.

The title of chaplain brings to the mind the picture of a man of peace rather than of a man of war. Yet, written in the annals of the great conflict of 1914 to 1918 is the record of more than one example of heroism in battle, of indifference to danger and of unselfish devotion to duty by these "soldiers of the Cross." And in Arlington National cemetery stands a cenotaph which recalls the fact that 23 chaplains of the United States army, men of all faiths and creeds, gave their lives for their country. On the bronze tablet affixed to this stone marker are inscribed these names:

Albert D. Bell. Aurenst Howard. John G. Boone. Michael W. Keith. John G. Breden. John C. Kerr. Thomas M. Bulla. John F. McCarthy. Patrick P. Carey. Arthur H. Marsh. H. A. Chouinard. Timothy A. Murphy. William B. Cornish. C. E. O'Flaherty. Walton S. Danker. Charles D. Priest. William F. Davitt. Wilbur S. Sewell. John A. Deaver. Daniel S. Smart. Harry Deiman. William H. J. Wilby. Herbert P. Doyle.

Below the names is inscribed this epitaph for them: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" and "To you from falling hands we throw the torch—be yours to hold it high."

In Arlington also stands another memorial recalling the sacrifice of men who served in a branch of the United States service which is too little known to most Americans. This is the stone obelisk, erected in 1928, in memory of the 192 officers and enlisted men of the United States coast guard who lost their lives during the World war.

The average American citizen, perhaps, thinks of the coast guard mainly in terms of its newspaper notoriety gained in chasing "rum runners," little realizing that its task of preventing the smuggling of contraband liquor into this country is only one of the many services which it performs. For the coast guard has a record of 140 years of honorable service under its proud motto of "Semper Paratus" (Always ready) in performing various duties.

The coast guard was created by act of congress in 1915 which brought about a merger of the revenue cutter service, and the former life-saving service. The revenue cutter service, to which the coast guard traces back, was established in 1790 during the second session of the First congress upon the recommendation of Alexander Hamilton, the first secretary of the treasury. The Continental navy had been disbanded at the close of the Revolution and there was no organized armed force to protect the coasts of the new republic and to enforce the customs laws.

In every war in which the United States participated the revenue cutter service, ancestor of the coast guard, performed brilliantly. During the War of 1812 its vessels, assisted by small gunboats, protected our coastal trade from the ravages of the hostile ships sent out by Great Britain, "the Mistress of the Seas," to harass our coast towns and our shipping. In the Civil war it had a part in both naval engagements and in blockade work.

Thirteen revenue cutters co-operated with the navy and seven with the army during the Spanish-American war. One of these, the McCulloch, helped Dewey at the Battle of Manila Bay and won special commendation from the admiral and another, the Hudson, took part in the action at Cardenas, Cuba. The officers and the crew of the Hudson were awarded medals by congress for their rescue work of the torpedo boat, Winslow, in this engagement.

This fine tradition was carried on by the coast guard service during the World war. On April 11, 1917 President Wilson mobilized the coast guard and the lighthouse service under the command of the secretary of the navy for the express purpose of resisting the submarines, which it was virtually certain that Germany would send to attack our coast. How real that danger was and the important part which the coast guard played in curbing the ravages of these deadly under-sea fighters was revealed for the first time two years ago when Little, Brown and company published William Bell Clark's book, "When U-Boats Came to America."

In addition to operating in home waters, the boats of the coast guard service also served on the other side of the Atlantic. Six of its cruising cutters were sent abroad to join the naval forces in the war zone, principally as ocean escorts working from England to Gibraltar. While engaged in this service, the Tampa was sunk by a submarine and 115 of the coast guard's 192 casualties were recorded as the result of that disaster.

Chaplains, coast guardsmen—they also served and died. But there is still another group whose sacrifices are too little known and whose memory should be honored on Memorial day. They are the 271 heroic women, members of the army nurse corps, who laid down their lives. Although none was killed in action, three were wounded by enemy fire. Two lost their lives and one was seriously wounded in an explosion in target practice on one of our transports at sea. A hundred more had a narrow escape from death when the transport on which they had just embarked had a collision in New

Most Treacherous, Wicked Whirlpool in World Conquered by Engineers.

New York.—To reach New York city through Long Island sound ships must sail the East river, which is not a river at all but a tidal strait. And right in the middle of this misnamed stretch of water is Hell Gate, the most treacherous, wicked whirlpool that ever sucked a boat into Davy Jones' locker. For 62 years man and dynamite have nibbled at the rock bed of this channel, and now it has been tamed. Army engineers now announce that the raging current has been slowed down to six miles an hour, says Tome Petey in the Chicago Tribune.

There are new charts in the pilot houses of the Boston bound steamers, and the tug captains will haul their fleets of sand scows safely under Brooklyn bridge with never a fear of piling them up in some tenement house back yard. Battleships will move safely and excursion steamers this summer will be able to tie up at the foot of Forty-second street in midtown Manhattan.

High Toll of Lives.

In the last 12 months 51,708 cubic yards of rock have been blasted from the bed of Hell Gate and, inch by inch, the winding, dangerous "S" passage has been straightened. Depths which as late as three years ago ranged from 19 to 23 feet now have been increased to 36 feet and gradually the channel is widening.

So far the struggle to tame Hell Gate has cost 16 lives, but the whirlpool itself has claimed almost 2,000. Since 1869 more than 1,200 craft have been whirled to destruction against saw-tooth rocks and projecting reefs.

The work of engineers of the United States coast and geodetic survey in Hell Gate in 1930 cost approximately half a million dollars, and the struggle has been going on since 1869.

The casual passenger on a sound steamer these days would never know that dynamite crews had to blow the nose of the "frying pan," blast "Way's reef" skyward, blow "Balheaded Billy" rock to bits before the days of comparative safety arrived.

It was Brig. Gen. John Nelson who began the job back in the 1870's that the army engineers corps now is finishing. Present-day dredging and blasting is of great magnitude, but it is not so exciting as the job General Nelson did in 1875. His problem was to trim Hallet's point so that passing vessels could swing far away from the "Gridiron," the center of the whirlpool. Others had attacked the rock from the top and side. General

Nelson took one look and attacked from the bottom. A shaft was sunk from the Long Island shore and for almost a year miners and sappers drilled and bored until they had made Swiss cheese of the sawtooth tip of Hallet's point. Then they packed the holes full of dynamite, set fuses, and crawled ashore.

First Great Peril Removed.

There was a general warning of the approaching blast, and residents along both banks of the East river fled to the streets, fearing their homes would tumble down. General Nelson's young daughter set off the charge in such a ceremony as might have marked the launching of a battleship. More than 300 feet of rock poured into the water, to be hauled away by dredging scows, but not a single house fell. The tide rushing in from the sound broke smoothly on a straightened shoreline and part of the threat of the "Gridiron" was tamed.

Since that day the dynamiters have pecked away at the rock lined shore and the channel bed and the East river from Long Island sound to the navy yard in Brooklyn grows straighter year by year. The army engineers say the job will be ended in ten years.

Einstein's Relativity Is 4th Great Step of Science

Los Angeles.—The four great landmarks of science which mark its forward progress are, according to Prof. Albert St. John, astronomer of Mount Wilson observatory, the following: The Copernican system dealing with the relationship of sun and planets; Sir Isaac Newton's law of gravitation; the theory of evolution by Darwin and Wallace, and Prof. Albert Einstein's theory of relativity.

Mouse Up His Leg and Out His Sleeve

Meriden, Kan.—Elver Clark, farmer living near here, never has been fond of mice. He is less fond of them now than ever. He was working in a corn crib. A mouse, startled and seeking escape, ran up his trousers leg. He made a grab for it, but missed and the mouse continued his upward journey.

Mr. Mouse reached his shoulders, with Clark still grabbing and missing. The little rodent ran down his shirt sleeve and jumped out right over his hand, lighting on the floor. It dodged Clark's foot and scampered away to safety.

Speediest Rail Engine to Go to a Museum

London.—The railroad engine City of Truro, which holds the world's speed record, is to retire and be preserved in the York Railway museum.

This powerful engine, looking somewhat out of date compared with modern streamlined types, made the highest authentic speed ever recorded—102.3 miles an hour—while competing for an American mail contract on the run from Plymouth to London as far back as 1904, and she still holds that record.

At that time there was a great fight between three railroad companies for the contract of the ocean mail traffic, lines serving Liverpool, Holyhead and Plymouth being concerned. The City of Truro's record run finally decided the issue and established Plymouth as best port for transferring New York to London mail from ship to train.

Ambulance Crew Refuses to Put Husband to Bed

Bridgeport, Conn.—When Robert Wheeler, fifty-one, refused to obey his wife's command to go to bed and walked out of their apartment, Mrs. Wheeler called the emergency hospital. A doctor and ambulance driver responded to the unusual request and found Wheeler in the cellar, sitting near the furnace, smoking his pipe. Wheeler still refused to go to bed so the hospital attaches decided he was old enough to know his own mind and left.

KIDS BECOME REAL ACTORS ON MODERN SCHOOL STAGES

Theatrical Equipment in Some Institutions Rivals That of Broadway Houses.

New York.—Has your child succumbed to the lure of the footlights? He probably will soon, though he may be only kindergarten. Children of all ages are taking to the stage, for modern schools all over the country are transforming their bare old assembly rooms into intimate little theaters, whose scenic and lighting equipment rivals that of many Broadway playhouses.

As a result, stage-struck daughters of five or six may not be uncommon in the near future. It is a delight for almost any child to act on a stage equipped with asbestos and close-in curtains, drop scenes, spot and footlights and other elaborate fittings which used to be found only in big theaters. Moreover, the opportunity to participate in and see real plays is stimulating in children an enduring love of the theater.

The development of the old assembly room from a barnlike hall with a bare rostrum to a modern theater, is described by Frank A. Childs, Chicago architect, in the American Architect. Mr. Childs, who has specialized in designing school stages, describes some whose curtain and lighting equipment cost from $8,700 to $13,150.

"In the modern school, the old barnlike assembly room has given way to the intimate theater of 700 to 1,000 seats, where various activities require its use every period of the school day," he writes. "While taxed to capacity during the day, its use at night by the community has reached the point where, at the Haven Intermediate school in Evanston, Ill., for instance, bookings must be made one year in advance."

New Design Sought for American Quarter

Washington.—Secretary of Treasury Mellon soon will invite artists throughout the country to submit designs for a new 25-cent piece which will be issued next year in connection with the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington.

The coin will be the first to bear the image of Washington. It is authorized by legislation passed in the closing days of the last session of congress.

On the front of the 25-cent piece now in use is a full-length figure of a woman, while the back is engraved with an eagle in flight.

TALES... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Pawnee

The Pawnees break into history with a dramatic story—that of "The Turk"—in 1541.

Coronado, that greedy and not over-intelligent explorer, found the Turk at Pecos, N. M., and from him heard of the province of Quivira, far to the north, where there was much gold. Whether the Pawnee was anxious to return to his people, and chose this manner of safe conduct, or whether the Pueblos, fearful of Coronado's unsympathetic domination, sought to lose the Spaniards on the plains, is not certain. Perhaps both points must be considered.

It is certain that the Spaniards wandered for some time on the Staked Plains, without knowing where they were or in what direction to go. Then Coronado put the Turk in irons, ordered Ysopete to lead them to "Quivira," and after 42 days of travel northward, they reached Ysopete's country, the home of the Wichita, beyond which lay the land of the Pawnees.

Summoning the Pawnee chief, who came to the border of his territory with 200 warriors, the implacable Coronado ordered the Turk strangled before their eyes, and then set out on his return journey.

This is the first historical mention of the Pawnee. These people lived in earth lodges, built with great ceremony. They raised pumpkins and beans and corn, that sacred gift to the red man, which they called "Mother."

Men had their heads shaved except for a narrow line of hair from the forehead to the scalp-lock, which was stiffened with fat and paint, and made to stand up like a horn. This very conspicuous adornment caused the tribe to be called Pawnee, or horn. Their name for themselves, however, meant "men of men."

They often wore a scarf wound turbanwise around the head, and this headdress probably was the reason for the nickname of the unfortunate Turk.

This was a confederacy, as so many of the more powerful "tribes" really were—a union of several tribes who spoke the same language and had similar customs. The confederacy council of this people was especially worthy of note. Strict rules of precedence and order had been established, and were observed punctiliously. Only those who were entitled to a seat were allowed to speak, but a few privileged men might be present as spectators. The head chief had powers matching his ability, and if he were able to qualify he was given undisputed authority. It was expected of him that he would be generous and hospitable.

The tribes were composed of a number of villages, each of which had its chief, and these leaders formed the tribal councils and the confederacy council. Each chief had a crier who announced matters of interest and orders. The chief headed, the warriors of the village in case of an attack, but when the men went on the warpath, it was under the leadership of some individual who proposed the raid, and service in a war-party was entirely voluntary.

The Pawnee seem to have been seasoned travelers. We find the Turk at Pecos in the first chapter of their history, and a hundred years later (and for two hundred years more) the white settlers of New Mexico were not ignorant of these people, who came to steal horses, and who were indifferent to overtures of peace.

For a long time the Pawnee country was undisturbed by the whites. It was not in the area of the Spanish and French contests, and the English had not moved in numbers enough to make any difference in the Pawnee manner of life. However, by the latter part of the Eighteenth century, the whites had increased their sphere of action to such an extent that the Pawnees were being troubled by them. New diseases were introduced which reduced their numbers and consequently their power.

The main trail to the Southwest ran through their country, and travel increased with every year and brought with it changes.

For some reason the Pawnee did not resist this encroachment as so many—in fact, most—of the other tribes did. They were patient and endured their troubles with fortitude, waiting until the government should attend to their needs. Their men served as scouts in the United States army and helped greatly in the subjugation of less friendly tribes.

This attitude did not preserve them, however, from the common fate of Indians. Disease and dissipation traveled the emigrant trail across their land. Enfeebled by these insidious foes, they were not able to throw off the Sioux, who constantly attacked them. Cholera accounted for many of them, and removal to a reservation for more. The glory of the Pawnee confederacy had departed down the trail ahead of the white men.

COME TO DINNER

There is no dinner dish that is more popular, if we except chicken, than Baked Ham.

Soak a ham over night. In the morning put it into a kettle with one onion, one carrot, six peppercorns, one bay leaf, six cloves and water to cover. Simmer for three or four hours until tender.

Devised Lobster.—Cook three table-spoonfuls of onion, one table-spoonful of green pepper, three table-spoonfuls of butter very slowly until tender.

Fig Cake.—Beat three egg whites with one-half cupful of sugar and add a table-spoonful of vanilla. Beat three egg yolks with one-half cupful of sugar, the grated rind of an orange, a table-spoonful of baking powder sifted twice with a cupful of flour, add three table-spoonfuls of orange juice and fold in the egg mixture.

In Old Celtic Lands

Of all the interesting trips in France, Brittany should be included, especially the south coast, with its sea resorts. This is the land of the "Pardons," those semireligious and semipagan festivals, when the villagers don the costumes and play the ceremonies which go back to the days of the dolmen and menhir of their wild moorlands.

Chemists of Olden Days

The Egyptians appear to have possessed greater knowledge of chemistry than any other of the ancient nations. For one thing, it takes unusual skill to preserve a corpse for centuries in such perfect condition as the ancient mummies unearthed in Egypt happen to be.

Duties of Statesmen

"Our Government," by Garner & Capen, says that members of the cabinet cannot at the same time be members of either house of congress. They could, however, be allowed to occupy seats for the purpose of advocating or opposing the enactment of laws affecting their department and for giving explanations to congress and defending their policies against attack.

Famous Civil War Poem

The poem, "Sheridan's Ride," was written by Thomas Buchanan Read. Gen. Philip Henry Sheridan's famous ride through Winchester, his enthusiastic reception at the hands of his troops, his remarkable success in turning a disastrous rout into a brilliant victory, formed a dramatic episode of the Civil war.

BORROW COSTERMONGER IDEA FOR LATEST STYLE IN SPORTS WEAR

Smart Costermonger Suit.

THREE hundred buttons! And all of them used to trim a single costume. Yes'm, that's how high enthusiasm is running, this season, in regard to buttons as a style theme, especially in the realm of sports clothes where some of the frocks and pajama ensembles have, so to speak, buttons all over 'em."

If you follow the ways of fashion as the summer advances you will be impressed more and more with the importance of ocean pearl buttons, buckles, slides and novel fastenings as a trimming feature.

As to the muchly be-buttoned spectator sports suit which we started to tell about, see it pictured herewith. Buttons to the number of three hundred outline the edge and armholes of the bolero jacket and form gleaming military stripes from the hipline to the bottom of the skirt.

The story of how this smart "costermonger suit," as it is called, came to be, is interesting. For generations (far back in history) London costermongers (sellers of various wares) have attended the Derby day events wearing costumes covered with ocean pearl buttons. This curious custom gave an American designer an idea and he made up a spectator suit which you will agree is at once novel, attractive and wearable.

Another costume suggested for a model vacation wardrobe is the new beach pajama of white linen, the wide en who love pretty and becoming clothes.

To go through the summer without at least one of these flattering cunning wraps made of sheer velvet, either black or in colors, well, anybody that is anybody among fashion's followers would never for a moment entertain such a thought.

There are as many ways of making these fanciful transparent velvet jackets as there are jackets. The same may be said in regard to their colors. After one acquires a black velvet model to wear whenever and with whatever frock one may please, the urge begins to stir within to try colors—a coat of bright green to wear with one's green and white print, or a delicate blue or an ivory white to top this or that costume.

Although transparent velvet wraps vary in length, the hipline is the popular stopping place. Particular attention is given to sleeve detail. In the elaborately tucked model shown in the group illustrated, elbow room is ample. The finely tucked rolled collar which distinguishes this model is unusual, as the majority of the little velvet wraps go collarless. The color for this charming fantasy is lettuce green and the velvet is, of course, the thin-to-the-point-of-transparency sort.

The idea of velvet flowers posed at the back of the neckline as you see to the left in the picture, is fetching. This simple wrap-around hip-length coat is of coral transparent velvet. The huge loose sleeves are brought in sharply at the elbow in a series of soft shirtings. One of the roses is black and the other is coral.

Pistachio green is the color of the artistic velvet wrap pictured in the oval. It features a smart draped neckline and deep cuffs, the latter held in place with straps of self-velvet. The bodice is softly bloused over a smooth band at the hips.

A Great State to Live in and
A Great State to Visit

Michigan is great in extent and in scenic beauty . . . great in its natural resources and its industries . . . great in its history, its traditions, and the character and spirit of its citizens.

Consider its mines and forests, its fertile fields and its productive orchards and vineyards. Think of its beautiful lakes and streams, its diversified industries and its splendid educational institutions.

Michigan is a good place to live. Here Nature is kind. We are not visited with flood, drought or other disasters to any degree. Nowhere else can people work more profitably or under better conditions than in Michigan.

And no state has more to offer the tourist, whether from outside or within the state.

Michigan is a great state to live in and a great state to visit!

73 of America's leading business concerns have bought 27,605 Chevrolets

Prominent among the thousands of concerns using large fleets of Chevrolets are many of the leaders of American industry. In fact, 73 outstanding business firms have purchased a total of 27,605 Chevrolet cars and trucks. And the list is growing every day.

The reason for this preference lies in the unexcelled economy of Chevrolet cars and trucks, as proved by official cost records. These records show that 20 miles to the gallon is a common occurrence among Chevrolet cars. That oil expense is practically negligible. That Chevrolet cars and trucks require only a minimum of service attention. That they give satisfactory low-cost service over exceptionally long periods of time.

Naturally, an automobile with such a fine record of economy represents an extremely wise investment for any buyer! Especially so, when you consider the many advantages that Chevrolet offers above and beyond economy. Come in and learn what these advantages are—what they mean in terms of style, comfort, safety, reliability and value.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month. If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, so use it freely. Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night. Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Wind Vane Insect Trap

Used by Entomologists

A new wind vane insect trap devised by entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture is proving useful in determining the source of beet-leaf hopper migrations, the department reports. Once the source of infestation is known, it may be possible to apply direct control measures before the insects migrate to the sugar beet fields, if the natural breeding area is small.

This new trap consists of a light wooden box housing a series of parallel upright screens, connected by a funnel with a jar containing cyanide. A weather vane attached to the box causes it to rotate so that it always faces the wind. The traps are mounted on high poles.

Insects flying with the prevailing winds are caught by the screens and carried by air currents down a tube, through the funnel, and into the jar of poison. By examining the jar at regular intervals entomologists can tell which winds bring the insects, at what height they are flying and the extent of the flight.

Preserve Historic Telegraph Key

Washington.—A new national heirloom has been added to the White House collection.

It is the gold nugget and marble telegraph key which five Presidents have used to open celebrations, tunnels, canals, newspapers, fairs and bridges throughout the country.

The key was given to President William H. Taft, June 1, 1909, to open the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition. Mounted on its five-inch marble slab were 22 nuggets of Alaskan gold taken from the Klondike August 16, 1896, when the precious metal was first discovered there.

The gold was offered for the key by George W. Carmack, discovered of the Klondike fields. Its original value was $500 but its historic value has been trebled and quadrupled by the ceremonies in which it has taken part.

The first ceremony was held in the East room nearly 22 years ago. Present were Mr. Taft and all the dignitaries of the cabinet and diplomatic corps. The key was mounted on a table, connected with a special wire to Seattle where the exposition was being held. Manipulating it was E. W. Smithers, White House telegrapher.

After Taft had pressed it, giving the signal for opening of the exposition, Smithers induced the President to let him be custodian of it. He has guarded it since. Recently it has been kept in the White House safe, as if it were a crown jewel. Smithers says he intends to leave it there to continue its historic career, although now it is his personal property.

In the entire key there is but one small point which is not gold. That is the contact point for transmission of the electrical impulse.

Among the famous occasions upon which the key has been used by Presidents are:

1913—Opening Gambo dike, Panama canal. 1915—The California exposition. 1927—The Holland tunnels under the Hudson river, New York, and the Moffat water tunnel outside Denver, Colo. 1928—The Hawaiian fair, the impulse being transmitted across the ocean by wireless; the Cascade tunnel. 1930—The Hoover-Longview bridge, Washington.

Stole Detroit's Tax Receipts

One of the most daring robberies of recent years resulted in the capture of one thief and the escape of another with $3,000 in cash and $25,000 in checks which they had taken from a cashier's cage in the city hall of Detroit, Mich. Theodore Crowley, captured (right), told how he and an accomplice had cut the wire caging and taken the money, mostly tax receipts, from the cage during an unguarded moment, although police assigned to guard the city treasurer's office stood less than 50 feet away.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

A zoological park is a great educational medium. There are many kids whose parents cannot afford to take them around the world, or even around the country, but they can go to the zoo and see strange animals from all parts of the earth. The other day Bugs Baer was walking through Central Park at dusk, an hour when many of the police have gone to supper. He heard a commotion in the direction of the buffalo pen, and paused to investigate. There were four or five small boys and a much annoyed buffalo.

"Get hot, Maggie," they would yell, and wham! one of them would sock her with a rock. Maggie got very hot indeed. If she could have broken out of that pen she would have made matters warm for the kids, but she could only glare and kick. Thus the youth of New York studies natural history.

I am told that the largest hand-tufted rug ever woven in a single piece is now being made by a firm in Czechoslovakia, which has furnished carpets to the White House and the royal courts of Europe, for the main lobby of the new Waldorf. The size of this adaptation of a Persian garden carpet will be 70 feet 2 inches by 49 feet 11 inches. I regret that they skimped that extra inch in width. They could just as well have made it an even 50 feet; but, at that, it will be a grand rug to drop ashes on. I don't see how a fellow with a cigarette could miss.

A girl became engaged to an aviator. He was starting a flight and she and the family went to see him off. The plane got away well and then the pilot circled around, flew above the heads of the family, rolled the ship and waggled the wings in salute. His fiancée began to cry.

"What's the matter?" they asked her.

"Can't you see?" she replied indignantly. "The poor darling's seasick."

Young people of today have plenty of courage. An art student on the Pacific coast married a girl of about his own age. Their assets consisted of a battered Ford and about $300. They drove the car East, where the girl had relatives. They decided that the boy's best chance lay in his studying art in Paris. He therefore took the bankroll and sailed for France, leaving the girl and the Ford with the relatives. She expects to get a job while the husband is away and feels sure that, on his return, they will be prosperous. How he is going to live over there and get back on that capital is a bit of a mystery, but neither of them appears to be worried about it.

A Brooklyn man recently stabbed his wife 16 times because she nagged him about coming home late and wouldn't let him go to sleep. The evidence would seem to indicate that she certainly got him wide awake.

Country's Storm Centers
The middle and northern plains and the region of the Great lakes have ters as New England.

a macadam road, and covered with short grass they spread out as far as the eye could reach. Sixteen miles we could see to the southeast over an unbroken plain to where a single cottonwood stood. But there were soft marshy places one found if he set out to ride far; there were gopher holes, and uneven dangerous spots where prairie wolves had burrowed into the ground or where groundhogs had slept during the winter. One had to be cautious and to remember that the apparently unbroken surface of the prairie had its uneven places where a horse might stumble and the rider's life be in danger.

But in spite of its spots the moorland is a very beautiful place; in spite of its gopher holes and its wolf dens the prairie had its fascinations; it was wonderful, impressive, romantic and satisfying.

It is not strange that when we examine the lives and characters of human beings we should find them like the moorland or the prairie—soft places, occasionally gopher holes, marshy spots, and it should not detract seriously from the strength and beauty of their lives to find that they were not perfect—nothing human is.

Recent biographers have seemed to take most delight in emphasizing the soft spots in the lives of the great men about whom they have written, rather than the beauty and the strength and the wide expanse of solid ground.

Prowling Owls Lured to Death

Chicago.—When the big horned owls and other feathered predators which prey on valuable game and song birds fly low through the Ogemaw forest of northern Michigan, they are apt to see several barnyard pigeons doing a swaying, intriguing dance about 15 inches above the ground.

These dancing pigeons are not placed in the forest for entertainment, says the conservation department of the Izaak Walton league. They are traps for the bloodthirsty predators, invented by Blaine Brannon, keeper of the Ogemaw refuge above Bay City, Mich.

Brannon took an ordinary barnyard pigeon and had it mounted with its wings spread. Then he fastened a slim coil of wire from the breast of the mounted bird and a spring trap which rests on the back and wings of the bird. A chain from the trap leads to a stake in the ground.

When this outfit is placed in an open place in the woods or around a farmer's barnyard, the wind will cause the bird to sway and tremble. It will catch the eye of a large owl or bird killing hawk. The would-be killer swoops to seize the stuffed pigeon, thrusts his claws into the bird and open trap, and thus is caught.

Constipation may very easily become chronic after forty. And any continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles and a host of other unpleasant disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. Whenever they need any help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, or when your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Few Human Voices That Are Exactly Similar

In the course of an explanation of the "phantom hounds," so often written of in British sporting literature, the sportsman brushes against a teasing subject. The phantom hounds, never seen of man, are a product of confusion; man and fox alike are deceived by the similarity between the cry of a flight of wild geese, borne over the wind, and the more familiar cry of the hounds. There are many recent instances of this confusion; even the acute hearing of the wild fox plays tricks.

It is true that almost every sound lends itself to description in terms of another. The distant airplane sounds like a hornet near at hand. Remote thunder sounds like the dislodging of lumber in some celestial yard. A water glass can produce a bell-like sound. The saxophone can contrive to ape the backyard cat. Yet one instrument of sound—the human voice—lends itself uncannily to shades and degrees of individuality. There must be identical voices in the world, or there may be in a township, for that matter; but they are so rare that identification of those we know can as often as not be made, sight unseen, from a few words spoken in the next room.—New York Sun.

SUCH IS LIFE—Wrong Twice!

The Sealed Trunk

THE STORY

At a public dance Martin Forbes, a newspaper man, cuts in on Rhoda White's dance with Max Lewis, whom Martin instinctively dislikes. He overhears a conversation between Lewis and a woman, which he realizes concerns Rhoda. He recalls a "blind ad" inquiring the whereabouts of "Rhoda McFarland" and senses a newspaper story. He believes that is Rhoda's real name. She refuses to deny or admit it. However, it recalls her childhood in California. Her mother dead, she had been happy until misfortune befell her father, Professor McFarland. Associated with the blow is her uncle, William Royce. They move to Chicago, where her father is engaged in mysterious work. Rhoda takes up stenography.

The only qualms of panic she ever felt when going about alone on her small excursions to the shops, the library, a near-by movie theater, took the form of a belief that she had seen him or that he was following her. If he was the source of the money they lived on, then it meant that he knew where they lived and that he was, for some reason she couldn't fathom, biding his time. But she was, as a matter of fact, too healthy and happy, even too well occupied, to think about him much.

Really she'd never lacked friends. But her father's often repeated instruction not to tell who they were or where they came from, to answer no personal questions at all, brought it about that most of her friendships were with members of the staff of the hotel, rather than with residents.

There was one exception among the guests: a middle-aged pretty woman who always wore black—a widow, Rhoda supposed. She didn't ask many questions because she was deaf, so deaf that you had to shout to make her hear. She was going to a school where you learned lip-reading so that you could tell what people said by looking at them without hearing their voices at all. The school was downtown in one of the big buildings of the loop, and Mrs. George, whose deafness had come upon her suddenly, hated to venture down into that confusion alone. Her need was a godsend to Rhoda, who volunteered to go with her every morning.

She went into the class with Mrs. George, and having nothing else to do, she sat and watched and learned lip-reading herself. It took Mrs. George three months to learn, but in half that time Rhoda was infallible at it.

It made life more amusing. She liked to ride in the elevated and watch people talk down at the end of the car. And when she and her father had dinner in the restaurant, his long preoccupied silences did not leave her restless. She would be sampling conversations from all over the room. It was a real bereavement when Mrs. George left the hotel and went to New York to live.

But the best friendship of those four hot years didn't begin until after Mrs. George had gone. It was with Miss Bacon, whose rather incredible first name was Florabel, the public stenographer. Rhoda had been saying good morning to her and sometimes stopping beside her desk for a word or two, for months. But in her loneliness after Mrs. George had gone, she formed the habit of making longer visits when she saw Miss Bacon wasn't busy.

Miss Bacon was not, Rhoda perceived, as old as she had thought; her being rather stout and her wearing spectacles made her look so. But she had a jolly young voice and a nice smile. She didn't ask any prying questions. She talked quite a good deal in a nice friendly way, about her own affairs. Probably she was rather lonely herself. Not that she hadn't any relations, but that they didn't do her any good. Her father, it seemed, had had several wives who had died, one after another, and the children didn't like one another very well, and quarreled. Florabel had been the youngest and she'd had a horrible time until she'd managed to learn a trade that made her independent.

Independence was Florabel's sacred word. Everybody, she said, even a girl who was almost sure to get married, ought to have a trade. Then if anything unexpected happened, she'd got something to tie to. "Of course, not if she's rich," she added. "I'm not rich," Rhoda said. "At least I don't think we are. Father expects to be pretty soon. I wish I could learn stenography. I suppose it's awfully hard."

"It's spelling that is most important," Florabel told her. "Can you spell?"

"Oh, I think so," Rhoda said. "Spelling isn't hard, is it?"

"It was for me, Florabel told her. But Rhoda, as it turned out, was one of those lucky people who simply can't misspell a word that they've ever seen in print.

"I could teach you myself," Florabel volunteered. "I'd like to, first rate. I haven't much to do, hardly ever, in the middle of the morning or in the middle of the afternoon."

There never was a more enthusiastic pupil, and Florabel seemed as excited about it as she was herself. She worked over the preliminary exercises until her hand cramped and then until it came uncramped again. She was determined, at every lesson, to surprise Florabel by how much more she knew—and she never failed.

By the end of two months she could write a clean page if she didn't try to go too fast, and she was taking slow dictation that Florabel read not from prepared exercises but out of the newspaper or anywhere.

Then one day a client appeared at the desk in the middle of the lesson. Rhoda caught up her notebook and fled, but not very far; only to the nearest sofa. When the man had finished dictating his letters and gone away she went back to Florabel. "Let me see if I can't write them from my notes," she pleaded. "He talked loud enough for me to hear him, all right, and I know I've got everything."

Florabel had been rather shocked and she made Rhoda promise not to do it again, but she did let her transcribe her notes on the typewriter and there were only a few small mistakes. What they did after that with clients they knew, was to ask permission for Rhoda to sit beside the desk and take the dictation for practice. They were mostly awfully nice about it.

People were like that, in the main, according to Rhoda's experience—kindly, glad to help one out of a difficulty if it didn't mean taking much trouble—and sometimes when it did.

The thing she couldn't understand was why they had been so cruel to her father. He never could have meant, whatever it was he'd done, to hurt anybody in the world. Yet as she remembered with better understanding some of the things that had happened in the last weeks before they left home to come east, the whole town must have turned upon him as if he'd been a leper. They'd broken him, somehow.

She couldn't believe, any more, that the happy time he'd used to talk about—the long holiday when they'd roam the world doing whatever they pleased—would ever come. But the scheme that was to make it possible obsessed him more and more. He almost never talked to her now; he didn't even want her to read to him. And he couldn't be very well, either. His face had a queer blue color sometimes that frightened her. He insisted it was nothing, and when she found out, accidentally, that he'd been to see the doctor who lived in the hotel he told her it was for a touch of indigestion. Florabel was urging her now to go out and find herself a regular job. She was better fitted for it than most of the graduates of the schools, and as good as she'd ever get until she'd had some actual business experience. Rhoda wanted to do it, but she felt she couldn't without telling her father about the plan before putting it in execution.

So she put Florabel off, saying she would go looking for a job some time, but that she didn't see that there was any hurry.

At the end of one of these conversations she saw something in her friend's face that made her ask, with a catch in her breath, "Is there any special hurry that you know about?"

Florabel visibly hesitated over her answer. "I sort of hated to tell you," she said. "Why, I'm not going to be here very much longer. You see, I'm going to marry Mr. Gage. You know. And of course that means I'm going to Denver to live. And oh, Lamb, I'd like to see you settled before I go!"

Rhoda hated to remember the little scene that followed. She'd said, in her half bewilderment, some pretty mean things, about independence and so on, and she'd made Florabel cry. They'd made it up, though, within the hour. She helped Florabel shop and she went to the wedding and saw the couple off on the train.

She liked Mr. Gage, herself. He was fat, like Florabel, and jolly. He looked rather solemn, though, when he said good-by to her. He gave her his card with his address on it and told her to keep it carefully. If anything ever happened to her, he said, and she found she wanted any help, she was to write or telephone.

She refrained from asking him what he thought might happen. Of course she really knew.

When, about a fortnight later, an hour after she and her father had finished their late dinner, the blow fell she hadn't been surprised at all. She had had the doctor there within ten minutes, but she'd known then that it was too late for his remedies to do any real good.

The one thing that it was unendurable to remember and impossible to forget was the way her father had pleaded with the doctor for one more day. He frantically believed that enough of the drug they were putting into his veins would give him the little handful of hours that was all he needed.

They did give him more stuff out of the hypodermic syringe, but this time it was morphine and under it he relaxed, so that for a while he talked to her, comfortably but confusedly. He thought it was just after her mother died, when she five years old.

But a little later after the nurse had come he roused, as from a sleep, stared at Rhoda in a frightened way and tried to speak to her, waving the nurse away as he did so. The only intelligible words she had been able to hear, when he lapsed into unconsciousness, were "papers" and "your Uncle William."

The doctor had been giving some instructions to the nurse. Rhoda intercepted him on his way to the door. "Will he wake up again?" she asked him.

He looked at her steadily a moment before he answered. "No, my dear child, he won't. This is the end." And then, surprisingly, his eyes filled up with tears. "You're only a little girl!" he said, as if it were a discovery. "Won't you let me get some woman here in the hotel to take you in until your friends can come and get you? And won't you let me telegraph now, for them?"

She told him, afraid her voice was betraying her sudden panic, that she would telegraph and that she'd rather go and lie down by herself in her own room. The words must have sounded all right, since he assented, though a little dubiously.

Even with the door shut she could hear her father's terrible breathing. She wanted to think, but she could not. She could only listen. It lasted a long time. When it stopped the cessation brought her bold upright in bed, unable to draw her own breath for a matter of seconds. It came at last with a sob of relief.

She cried, rather peacefully until, after a while, she heard the nurse coming to tell her. She buried her face in the crook of her arm and lay perfectly still, and the nurse, believing her asleep, went away again, shutting the door after her.

At that, quite suddenly, her mind went to work. What had her father been trying to tell her, in that last flicker of his consciousness? But thinking about that, she decided at last, wouldn't do any good. The fragmentary words worked out to two opposite meanings.

He might, of course, have been telling her to go to Uncle William and that she'd find his address among his papers. But he might have meant that she was to look out for Uncle William and not let him get possession of the papers. And since her uncle was almost as much an ogre to her as he had been four years ago, it was the latter interpretation that she adopted.

What the doctor had said was the thing that frightened her worst. "You're only a little girl!"

That, of course, was nonsense. She was sixteen and lots of people thought she was older than that. She could pass for eighteen, well enough. He'd said that only because he was sorry for her. But sixteen was still a child according to law. You weren't of age until you were eighteen—or was it twenty-one? And if Uncle William knew where she was and learned of her father's death, he'd come and get her, and she wouldn't be able to get away from him. Well then, the only safe thing for her to do was to disappear before he had time to find out what had happened.

Looking back now on those days, after the passage of two years so packed with life that they seemed longer than the four that had preceded them, she wondered that she, a mere child of sixteen, had been able to follow out that resolution so steadily that no one had tried to put an obstacle in her path.

Except for a telegram, purporting to come from Florabel in Denver, which she had slipped out early that morning and dispatched to herself, she had nothing to show anyone as a indication that she had a friend in the world—and the telegram wasn't much good since if you looked at it closely you saw that it hadn't come from Denver at all.

She couldn't have done it, of course, if she had not had plenty of money, and, likely enough, not then if the hotel people hadn't been accustomed to her paying the bills. She paid everybody in cash, that morning, and when this was done she had a little over three hundred dollars left, fifteen twenty-dollar bills and a few small ones.

The papers her father had tried to tell her something about had always

Cold Chickens Sought Warmth of Footlights

A London actor who toured in his early years, writes Peggy Wood in the Saturday Evening Post, tells a story of a road company of an English pig-and-chicken play—you know, "Shore Acres" and "The County Chairman" type we used to have in America—where they "traveled" a lot of chickens who were taken from their coops, which were always relegated to the dressing rooms up in the flies—and the ones, of course, without heat—and let loose on the stage in Act II to peck about at the corn scattered for them by the property man.

This was for atmosphere and held great advertising possibilities. The only trouble was that their legs were always so cold from their bitter dressing rooms that instead of pecking at the corn so temptingly spread, while the actors said their lines, the hens made a break for the footlights and been kept in a big leather hat trunk that must have been her mother's. She opened it and looked in with the idea of seeing whether her uncle's address was there, but as the trunk was nearly full she decided against going through it. She didn't much want to, anyway. She took it, as it was, along with her own small trunk in a taxi to a convenient railway station. It hadn't mattered much which station except that it had to be one that had a train that went to Denver.

The next day she took her suitcase with her to the funeral and went from the cold little chapel straight back to the station. She spent that night at the Y. W. C. A., where nothing happened except that by inadvertence she picked her new name. She'd had one all chosen, but when they gave her the register card to sign she'd begun writing her old one, Rhoda Whitehouse McFarland. Half-way through she'd seen what she was doing and stopped. Well, Rhoda White made a good enough name, and she was glad that she hadn't discarded Rhoda. She'd have felt lonely, deprived of that.

The very next day she found a job and met Babe Jennings. The job was at the News, where Florabel had told her they took girls without experience in the stenographic department and trained them, themselves. If you were good you had a chance to be promoted to be private stenographer or even secretary to one of the executives.

The only technical untruth Rhoda told the employment manager was that her name was Rhoda White.

Her acquaintance with Babe had progressed slowly at first, and it wasn't until she'd been working for the paper six months that the older girl approached her with a proposal that they live together. Babe was excited about an ad she'd taken, of a studio for rent cheap; unbelievably cheap, seventy-five dollars a month. It was really a whole apartment; two bedrooms and a kitchenette, beside the studio itself. Her scheme was that they get two other girls and that the four of them should keep house in it, getting, that is, their own breakfasts and suppers. The other two girls were dancers, members of the corps du ballet of the opera.

They taught her to dance—the other girls had a phonograph—and it became a passion with her. She'd dance with anybody, who could dance well, in a perfect oblivion of delight.

She liked her job and wasn't long getting promoted to be special stenographer to one of the younger men on the executive staff. The only imperfection in her whole scheme of life was the little tremor of fear she felt, every now and then, that it was too good to last.

There was no real threat, was there, in Martin Forbes' imaginary discoveries? She didn't know any one named Lewis nor anyone who could be spoken of as "C. J." The only person who could be advertising for her was her uncle. For all she knew he might have been doing it for years; off and sat on the electric light bulbs until they got warm, making pitiful clucks all the while.

The leading lady complained that those wretched chickens were ruining her scenes, but the impresario knew they were worth a dozen leading ladies to the audience.

Japanese Eel Dinners
Eel meals are as popular among Japanese as are Maryland chicken dinners in Baltimore. In some Japanese cities eel houses are nearly as numerous as weiner stands at a county fair. When the diner enters an eel house he is led to a large tub of live eels. He makes his choice of the wriggling creatures, it is speared, split along the back, cut into small pieces and, with soy sauce, is cooked over a charcoal fire.

on ever since she'd disappeared. None of the girls knew her story, and they wouldn't give her away if they did. (The two dancers were away just now on tour with the opera, so she and Babe had the whole studio to themselves.) She wouldn't risk asking Babe any questions, though, about Martin. How well, she wondered, did Babe know him? The thing to do now was to go to bed, and to be sound asleep before she came home.

But she was only half undressed up in one of the little bedrooms that had been partitioned off the loft when she heard the click of Babe's key in the studio door. She listened and felt her skin pringle as she thought she recognized the voice of the man who was urging Babe to let him come in for a smoke. Babe was firm about it and sent him away.

Rhoda put on her bathrobe and slippers and came slithering down into the studio.

"Who was that who brought you home?" she asked.

"You ought to know, dearie," Babe told her. "He's your friend, not mine. When he found out I lived with you I couldn't push him off. He brought me home in his runabout, but it was John Alden stuff I was doing all the time, and I knew it."

"Was it Max Lewis?" Rhoda asked. "None other, darling," said Babe. "I had forgotten you had two of them on, tonight."

There was a silence for a moment after that. When Babe spoke again it was in a different manner.

"He asked me one queer thing about you, Red. He asked if your real name wasn't Rhoda McFarland."

CHAPTER III

Flat Burglary

Martin Forbes told himself firmly as he went to bed that night that he'd had his lesson. Rhoda had treated him not as a friend but as a reporter trying to run down a story. It must be a pretty good story if she was so afraid he'd get it. All right, by golly, he'd be a reporter, and the first thing tomorrow morning he'd go after that story and nail it down.

That maneuver he'd been so proud of at the time—getting rid of Babe Jennings and Max Lewis by introducing them to each other—appeared now as likely to have been a downright idiotic blunder. Babe and Rhoda might inhabit very different spiritual worlds, but wasn't it likely that if Babe knew her well enough to call her Red and get away with it, she'd also know the crude material facts about her—where she lived, where she worked, and so on—which were all that Max Lewis was interested in? And wouldn't Babe spill anything she knew to anybody who was interested in finding it out? Why the devil hadn't he thought of that last night?

Well, it was probably too late to repair the error now. He'd got to get hold of Babe, though, at the earliest possible moment. The more he thought about the possibilities of his blunder the worse they seemed.

Next morning he dressed, bolted his breakfast and was waiting at the foot of the elevated stairs a good quarter of an hour before Babe could be expected to appear.

By the time he'd finished his second cigarette he felt as if he'd been standing there for hours, as if everybody that came along wondered what he was doing there. And then, so surprisingly, that he had to blink and shake his head to make sure that his imagination wasn't deceiving him, he saw not Babe, but Rhoda herself coming down the stairs. What would she do when she saw him? Toss her head and walk scornfully by without speaking at all? Or pause to make some other blighting aspersion on his good faith in having tried to help her.

She didn't do either of those things. Her face lighted up at the sight of him, and when she came within reach she held out her hand.

"This is an awfully nice way for the day to begin," she said. "I'm sorry I called you a reporter last night."

"I am one," he told her.

"Oh, I know you are, but you weren't being one last night. I don't know why I said that. I suppose because I have red hair."

"This is turning out a much better day than I thought it could," he observed. "I wish I'd known last night that this was going to happen. How did it happen? Do you often come down these stairs about this time? Have you got a job near here?"

"The door's about fifty feet away," she told him. "I've worked for the News for two years."

"Look here," he demanded, when he'd digested this fact, "did you know who I was all along—last night, I mean?"

"I thought it might be you. I wasn't sure, though, till Babe called you Marty."

"Honest?"

"Honest."

She answered him quite simply, not seeming surprised at his pressing so minute a point. He didn't quite know himself why it was so important, but it was.

"Well," he said, "we've got a lot of lost time to make up for. If I'll agree not to talk about anything you don't want to talk about, will you have dinner with me tonight?"

"Yes," she said, "but I'll tell you what I'd rather do if you'd just as leave. I'd rather you come to supper at the studio. Give me a pencil and a piece of your newspaper, and I'll write down the address."

He'd have asked her what sort of studio it was if she hadn't glanced up as she handed back his paper and pencil and exclaimed, "There comes Babe! It must be getting late."

Famous Scotch Castle Passes to Strangers
Castle Menzies, one of the oldest and most famous castles in Scotland, was recently sold, adding another of the many estates changing hands in that country. The estate included the Sarleyer lodge and grouse moor, and salmon fishing on the rivers Tay and Lyon. The estate comprises more than 1,100 acres and is near Alberfeldy. Castle Menzies has been the scene of many conflicts and notable events. The castle was twice visited by Mary Queen of Scots, and in later days King Charles II and Bonnie Prince Charlie stayed there. The Menzies clan fought for the Stuarts in the '15 rebellion, and again in the '45. Castle Menzies is famous for magnificent trees, the Menzies family having devoted themselves to forestry.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.
