ORIC EVANGELINE OAK ON BAYOU TECHE

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE other day several thousand people gathered in the little town of St. Martinville, La., to participate in a ceremony which rolled back the pages of history to events that took place more than 175 years ago. The ceremony was the unveiling of a statue and when it stood revealed there was recalled once more a great tragedy in American colonial history, and one of the tenderest love stories in American literature, the story of the quest of Evangeline for her lover, Gabriel, immortalized in a poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. For the statue was a life-size image of the famous "Maid of Grand Pre" and most of those who had gathered there to pay her honor were her own people-Louisiana descendants of the Eighteenth century Acadians and a delegation of several hundred Acadians from Moncton, Grand Pre, Montreal and other Canadian cities and towns who made a pilgrimage to this shrine for this occasion and who were also repaying a visit made by the Louisiana Acadians to Canada last year.

Erecting the statue over the spot near the left wing of the old St. Martin Catholic church in St. Martinville where the real Evangeline lies buried is one of the steps in the project of establishing a national reservation there to be known as the Longfellow-Evangeline National Memorial park, a public recreation center which will perpetuate the memory of the American poet and the Acadian girl, in particular, and the Acadians, their sufferings, their romance and their faith, in general.

When 650 delegates, representing 111 garden clubs from Maine to California, attended the annual meeting of the Garden Club of America at Glen Cove, L. I., Mrs. Harold Irving Pratt, president of the North Country Garden club of Long Island, entertained the guests at tea and at the same time her garden of azaleas and tulips was adjudged the best in achievement for 1931. For this honor Mrs. Pratt received the Emily B. Renwick medal.

The name of the real "Evangeline" was Emmerline Labiche, the faithless "Gabriel" was Louis Arceneaux, and their life story is a part of the tragic tale of the simple folk of Acadia who were deported by British soldiery from their homes away back in 1755. The Acadians were French colonists who had settled in what is now Nova Scotia in 1607, and who lived a happy, contented existence in their homes in the New world until caught in the maelstrom of world politics, stirred up by the contest between England and France to decide which nation was to dominate the North American continent. In the series of wars between the two countries which began in 1689 Acadia was a pawn on the international chess-board, now held by the French and now by the British. As for the Acadians themselves, they were in the main neutral. In fact they were often referred to in the official papers of the time as the "Neutral French." While the sympathies of most of them no doubt leaned toward their own countrymen and some of them supported the French cause, for the most part they wished to be left alone in their peaceful pursuits as farmers and fishermen.

In that year the British, who then held Acadia, decided that the Acadians were "an enemy encamped in the heart of the province" and determined to get rid of them. Accordingly this was done by methods which seem to have been unnecessarily harsh.

The principal responsibility for this rests upon the lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia, Charles Lawrence, who was acting governor until the lords of trade in London' should pick a successor to Gov. Peregrine Hopson, who had resigned.

By harvest time in 1755 the expulsion of the Acadians began when Colonel Monckton, acting under Lawrence's instructions, gathered in 400 of the inhabitants of Chignecto. Colonel John Winslow will live in history as the officer sent to "the little village of Grand Pre, on the shore of the Basin of Minas."

Winslow arrived at Grande Pre on August 19. September 2 Colonel Winslow issued a proclamation informing the people that the lieutenant-gover-semblage in French. With the pronouncement of the terrible words, "That your lands and tenements, cattle of all kinds and live stock of all sorts are forfeited to the crown with all your other effects, saving your money and household goods, and that you yourselves are to be removed from this, his majesty's province," a murmur of anguish escaped the dumfounded Acadians Until aroused by the sharp command of an officer, the bewildered inhabitants sat mute and staring, as though unable to comprehend the significance of the fate they were consigned to. Recovering from the shock of Winslow's words, the Acadians' first thoughts were of their families, with whom they had no means of communication and who would not understand the reason for their detention. After a lengthy conference Colonel Winslow permitted the prisoners to choose 20 of their number to break the news to the families and to bring in food for the prisoners. They were to be held accountable for the behavior and safe return of the 20. An effort was made to keep families intact. But a lack of transports; the natural confusion and terror that necessarily followed; Winslow's fears that his force, greatly outnumbered result. by the Acadians, might be overpowered, and the barrier of language all contributed to the separations that made the sufferings of the exiled Acadians so tragic.

Three ships, the first to sail, left the Basin of Minas October 13, bound for Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania. The last ship to leave Acadia sailed southward December 20. To prevent any stragglers that escaped to the forests from finding a place of refuge, squads of soldiers attended to the work of burning every house, barn or building that would in any way furnish shelter.

In all from Grand Pre and other places more than 6,000 Acadians were deported. They were scattered in the English colonies from Maine to Georgia and in both France and England, Many died; many, helpless in new surroundings, sank into decrepit pauperism. Some reached people of of Louisiana and Canada. Among those who came to Louisiana was young Louis Arceneaux who had become separated from his sweetheart, Emmerline Labiche, and who settled on Bayou Teche, a stream which winds in and out like a snake, H. L. C. was Horace Lorenzo Conolly, then a neighbor of Hawthorne at Salem. He had been rector of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal church in South Boston, But Hawthorne was probably in error in stating that Conolly obtained the story directly from a French Canadian.

At any rate some time later Hawthorne took Conolly to dine with Longfellow at Cambridge. During the dinner the clergyman told Longfellow that he had been trying in vain to get Hawthorne to write a story based on an incident told him by Mrs. George M. Haliburton, a former parishoner, who had formerly lived in Nova Scotia. Conolly then related the story briefly. Longfellow said to Hawthorne: "If you really do not want this incident, let me have it for a poem." His friend willingly consented, and "Evangeline" was the

The other account--and this is the one which you will hear in the Acadian country of Louisiana-is that Longfellow, while he was an instructor at Harvard, was told the story by a handsome young Acadian, then a student at Harvard, Edward Simon, later a judge in Louisiana, who had learned it from his friend, Judge Felix Voorhies. Judge Voorhies had been told the story by his grandmother, Madame Anne Bastarieche, who brought Evangeline to the Teche country. Madame Bastarieche died in 1830 at the age of 103.

It was Madame Bastarieche who told of how Emmerline Labiche sprang forward with a glad cry when she met her former lover and of how the faithless lover told her that he had married another and was happy. On the lands of the ancient Duke DeBois Blanc Louis Arceneaux settled with his bride and there many of his descendants live today. The heartbroken girl, Madame Bastarieche told her grandson, lost her reason and, until death came to her, she wandered about the banks of the Teche, gathering the water hyacinths and weaving bride's wreaths of them, (C) by Western Newspaper Union.)

Farthest Outpost of Uncle Sam's Domain.

Washington .- The Philippines, Uncle Sam's farthest outpost, will be the subject of special study by members of the territories committee of the United States senate this summer. Tours of the islands and visits to factories, schools and homes of the Filipinos will be made by the visiting senators.

"The Philippine islands constitute the most unusual and the most distant domain under the American flag," says a bulletin from Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society. "The Philippines are American property, yet they are neither territory, colony, nor naval base of the United States. The Filipinos have 'Only the governor general and the auditor of the islands are now appointed by the President of the United States. American officials comprise but 11/2 per cent of the total personnel in the Philippine government.

"The Philippine islands are, as a group, the most populous unit under the American flag. New York state, carefully-*planned summer capital has coording to the 1930 census, has 12,

"Most famous of Philippine products, however, is 'Manila hemp,' or abaca, for the hemp plant of the Philippines is a species of the banana family and is not really hemp at all. Its leaves are like banana leaves, and its fruit rssembles the banana, although it is filled with black seeds and is not edible. But it yields the longest and strongest cordage fiber known. Although third on the list of Philippine exports it represents a monopoly, for abaca will not grow elsewhere in commercial quantities. The $28,000,000 crop in 1929 provided a living for more than a million Filipinos. Less than half of the output was sent to the United States.

"Copra, or dried coconut meat, tobacco and embroidery are other important exports from the Philippines. The principal needs of the islands, judging from the value of imports, are cotton goods, iron and steel manufactures, meat and dairy products, automobiles, wheat, flour and silks.

Manila Really Three Cities. "An American on his first visit to Manila, picturesque capital of the Philippines, might have difficulty in discovering what part his country has taken in the development of a city it has held for 30 years. Manila is really three cities, the Spanish city, or Intramuros, within the old stone walls; the native, more or less Malay, town of nipa palm shacks, and cascos or wicker-roofed native boats; and the modern American developments

The Modoc "Once upon a time," there were two tribes that lived in southwest Oregon so closely related that they were like branches of one family-these were the Modoc and the Klamath. But just as branches of a family differ greatly in some ways so the Klamath were at peace with the whites, while the Modoc were often at war with

Every year, the two tribes conducted a raid across the California border against the Achomawi, and captured as many women and children as possible, whom they kept as slaves or sold to the Chinook, north of them. This was their principal warlike

In 1864, the tribes united in ceding their lands to the government, and settled on a reservation on upper Klamath lake. The hardy Klamath became used to reservation life, and began to assimilate members of other tribes and former slaves, which increased their population.

Nearly half of the Modoc, however, had not left the Lost River country, but wandered about getting into mischief and terrorizing the white settlers. They were led by a subchief named Kintpuash.

It was not until the spring of 1870 that Kintpuash and his followers were finally induced to join the other half of the tribe on the reservation. They remained on the reservation only a short time. Kintpuash was too restless to settle down, or to let his followers do so. He decided to lead them back to Lost River. Here he demanded that a reservation be established, for the reason that it was not possible for the Modoc and the Klamath to live together in peace. He was arousing the Indians and inciting an outbreak, and to avert this if possible, it was decided to arrest him.

On November 29, 1872, Captain Jackson with 36 cavalrymen made the attempt to take the belligerent Indian leader into custody. The Modoc resisted, and as soon as possible fled with their leader to the lava beds on the shore of Lake Rhett, just across the border in California, killing settlers whom they encountered on the way, and showing indubitable signs that they did not intend to surrender. The lava beds were honey-combed with caves and passages, and formed a practically impenetrable stronghold for Kintpuash and his band. They could retreat to this position and be almost immune from danger. Thus secure, they attacked an ammunition train and caused some damage, and Sufficient Feed, Shade and cities, where the pastures and lounging lots are small, he advises that the milking herd be stabled during the middle of the day. Flies are also a source of great annoyance to cows in summer, and Mr. Arey says unless some method is used to combat them the best results from the herd cannot be obtained. Flies are controlled easiest by destroying the breeding places, he says.

Stalls and pits should be cleaned at least once each week and the manure hauled from the barn direct to the field. Any accumulation of litter or garbage furnishes ideal breeding places for flies and should be cleaned up as often as possible.

Because it is impossible to destroy all flies in the larvae stage by cleaning up the breeding places, it is further necessary to use poison, fly traps and sprays to kill off the younger brood after hatching, recommends Mr.

Arey.

Favored for Dairy Cow (By J. C. NISBET, Extension Dairyman, Kansas State Agricultural College.) Sweet clover when planted in a rotation of corn and grain crops may be utilized to advantage by dairy cows.

Sweet clover planted in the spring in an oat crop may be ready for light pasturing in July. One or two cows may be kept on an acre for the balance of that year. The following season the sweet clover will offer early pasture. It will last through the hot dry season. Second year sweet clover pasture should furnish pasture for two or three cows per acre.

Sweet clover as a convenient night pasture is of value to many dairymen. A practice very commendable is to provide an oat straw stack in the sweet clover pasture. Cows show a desire for some dry feed. The feeding of dry alfalfa hay before turning out to pasture reduces damage from bloat. It is important that cattle become

"If the Philippines were under British rule they would probably be known as a protectorate. The department of insular affairs of the United States War department, which takes care of matters relating to the Philippines in this country, refers to the dependency as a 'nonincorporated territory.'

"Unlike the residents of Alaska, Porto Rico, the Hawaiian islands, the Virgin islands, the Canal zone, Guam, Samoa, and other scattered pieces of American territory, the Filipinos make all their own laws, have their own qualifications for voters, their own currency, their own postage stamps, and even their own schedule of tariffs.

No American state stretches over as much territory as the Philippine archipelago, which, if it and the water between were laid on a map of the United States, would cover a quarter of the area of the country. From north to south the Philippines extend a distance equal to that between New York and Miami. The land area of the Philippines equals Arizona's, fifth largest state in the Union.

In Good Financial Condition. "In contrast to the Virgin islands and Porto Rico, each of which is struggling with peculiar economic problems. the Philippines are in a good financial condition. The latest insular government report shows a surplus of revenues over expenditures of nearly $40,-000,000, and a favorable balance of trade of some $17,000,000. 'Sugar leads the exports of the Philippine islands by a wide margin. More than 600,000 long tons were shipped in 1929, almost all of which was sent to the United States, where it may enter tariff free. Second in importance is coconut oil, which recently has become a bone of contenbeen completed at Baguio. This truly occidental community, amid pine groves and grass lands, has become one of the most popular spots in the Orient, the 'Simla of the Philippines.' The streets of Manila are now lighted with electric current generated in the mountain gorges of Laguna, 52 miles away. American engineers waged 16 months of warfare against the tropical torrent of Botocan falls before the tempestuous stream was harnessed to serve man."

Dam Waters to Submerge Prehistoric "Lost City"

Las Vegas, N. M .- The famous "Lost City" of prehistoric times will be submerged under the waters of the Colorado river as soon as water begins to accumulate behind the Boulder dam.

The waters of the river will cover the city 50 feet. Thep resent town of St. Thomas will be under 70 feet of water and the adjoining village of Koalin will be under 25 feet of water. Compensation for damages is now being adjusted. The 300 residents of the Mormon town, St. Thomas, will move farther up the valley.

Plan to Show That Regular Airship Service to That Section Is Feasible.

Friedrichshafen .- The Graf Zeppelin will make her first nonstop flight to South America in August, according to Capt. Hans Lehmann, second in command of the airship.

The Graf's trip, which will be one of three in connection with the Lufthansa, will be made to demonstrate that the South American traffic can stand regular airship service, and also that airships are the best means for the trans-Atlantic part of that service. The Graf wil fly direct from Friedrichshafen to Pernambuco, where the Condor planes will pick up the mail. "The halt at Sevilla last year, as is known, was made at the request of interested parties in Spain," Captain Lehmann said in referring to the

is some special reason this year, the first trip will be direct to Pernambuco. We probably shall lay a course over the Bay of Biscay, instead of over the Mediterranean," he said. "That of course depends on the prevailing weather, but that course also would be a test of the Graf's airworthiness. "Otherwise, the trip will be carried out much the same as last year's," he continued. "Preparations for landing in Pernambuco, tuning up and provisioning for the return journey are already made there. Of course, if there is a request for a stop at Sevilla, either on the outward or the return journey, we will stop there."

The mails from Friedrichshafen to Berlin on the return journey will be carried by Lufthansa planes.

"The purpose of these trips," said Captain Lehmann, "is to demonstrate again the feasibility of maintaining Graf's May, 1930, trip. "Unless there | regular airship schedules between Europe and South America. The journeys will also give opportunity for further aeronautical observations which should be of advantage to airship operations in general. The time is in sight when the airship and airplane will work together to mutual advantage in speeding up air communications."

The trips are also intended as an effort to place the German Lufthansa air mail service at a greater advantage in the South American traffic.

Trout With Two Heads Hatched in California

Marysville, Calif.-If you catch a two-headed trout in the North Yuba river next year, don't break your flask of snake-bite on the rocks. Several dozen of these double-headed trout were hatched recently at the Yuba river hatchery, 12 miles west of Downieville.

According to Guy Tabler, foreman at the hatchery, about sixty of these freaks make their appearance out of about 200,000 eggs hatched.

prove the strength of their position by defending it against 400 men and a howitzer battery, under Colonel Greer. This impasse continued for more than four months. Soldiers dreaded the task of entering the desolate region. They were lost in the tortuous passages, shot at by unseen enemies, and could accomplish nothing. Finally, in April, it was decided to have a meeting betwen the Modoc leaders and a commission headed by Gen. E. R. S. Canby. It was agreed that neither side should bear arms, and peace was to be the subject of the parley.

But Kintpuash was not in a mood to discuss peace, that April day. It meant giving up all he had hoped to gair. He knew, too, that there would be punishment for the murdered settlers and the soldiers killed among the lava beds. He had heard talk before; he was tired of talk. As soon as the parley began, then, he pulled a revolver from his bosom and shot General Canby dead.

The Modoc, ready for this surprise attack, sprang forward at the shot. Another of the commissioners was killed, and the rest fled, hotly pursued, to where the troops waited. Winema, Modoc woman whose sympathy was with the whites, managed to get the Modoc to retreat by calling out that the soldiers were coming, and thus saved the lives of those in danger.

It was now decided to push matters to a conclusion, and a company of Indian scouts from northern Oregon was brought. These, backed by the howitzers, drove the Modoc from their stronghold in the lava beds. The rehellious Indians, moreover, were growing less in number, as many had been killed, and many more deserted. The troops kept up a grim pursuit of the Modoc band, which began to come over to the whites in numbers to give up their arms, and at last, on June 1, 1873, Kintpuash and the rest of his followers surrendered. Kintpuash and three of his leaders were hung, and the remainder of his band was not allowed to return to the Klamath reservation, but was sent to Okiahoma. This was the end of the Modoc war, which Bancroft characterizes as "their brave and stubborn fight for their native land and liberty-a war in some respects the most remarkable that ever occurred in the history of aboriginal extermination."

accustomed to the taste of sweet clover while the stems are still small. A bitter element, coumarin, develops in more mature sweet clover to which cows may object.

Well Developed Yearling Bull Ready for Service

At about a year old, the well-developed bull is ready for light service. Three services twenty days apart for the first two months will prove about the maximum if the bull is to be kept in long service. At eighteen months ten services about fifteen days apart, and at two years twenty services eight days apart will cause no harm. The bull in full service needs just about the same amount of feed as the cow in milk. This means that a grain allowance of from four to eight pounds a day is necessary. On lighter service, of course, the lower limits of grain are satisfactory.

Dairy Notes

Highly flavored feeds should be fed to milk cows after milking, instead of before. It will also keep down that dust in the barn if all feeding is done after the milking.

Conveniently located milk houses save time for dairy operators. Construction is also important. Smooth floors and walls which can be easily cleaned will prove a good investment.

Remove scrubs from the next generation of dairy cattle by using only good breeding animals now, say Pennsylvania State college dairy specialists. Buy bulls on production records only.

A healthy well-fed cow has no more need for a tonic than does a healthy person for medicine.

The average dairy herd improvement association cow in Iowa produces 2,800 pounds more milk and 114 pounds more butterfat than the average dairy cow in the state.

The owner of a low-prouncing dairy herd has no choice-he must send the poorest cows to the butcher, or else he will find himself working for nothing, or less than nothing.

The New Chevrolet Sport Coupe

Matchless economy with six-cylinder smoothness

"Better than 20 miles to the gallon." "Its cost-per-mile is the lowest of any car." "Never have to add oil between crankcase changes." "Drove from Ohio to California on a repair expense of $1.05." "It just runs and runs and runs."

-typical comments from owners of the Chevrolet Six

Why is it that Chevrolet-a big, power-GHEVEDIEL ful, smooth-running Six-actually costs less to operate and maintain than any other car you can buy? The answer lies in five outstanding factors of Chevrolet economy:

1. Efficient Engine Design makes Chevrolet fuel consumption so low that 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline is nothing unusual for a Chevrolet owner.

2. Modern Chassis Design increases the ability of the Chevrolet Six to run dependably. This modern design is typified by Chevrolet's long heavy frame, four parallel-mounted springs, and smoothrunning six-cylinder engine.

3. Excellence of Manufacture also adds to Chevrolet dependability and long life. Chevrolet pistons, for instance; are built so carefully, and held true to such close limits of precision, that many owners have gone 20,000 miles or more without having their motors opened for major servicing.

4. Migh-Quality Materials are used throughout the Chevrolet car-costly nickel steel, chromevanadium steels, chrome-nickel steels-to assure trouble-free, low-cost service for tens of thousands of miles of operation.

5. Economical Nationwide Service, with its low flat-rate charges on labor and genuine parts, is available at 10,000 dealers throughout the country. Remember-in addition to all these basic economies -Chevrolet offers the extra advantage of one of the lowest delivered prices on the market.

Chevrolet passenger car prices range from $475 to $650. Truck chassis prices range from $355 to $590. All prices f. o. b. Flint, Michigan. Special equipment extra. Low delivered prices and easy terms.

Far-Sighted Bootmaker

Heads Large Industry Thomas Bata, of Zlin, Czechoslovakia, is no ordinary bootmaker. Since the war he has been largely instrumental in developing in his country an industry which has now reached enormous proportions. Looking ahead, he saw that there must be a vast demand for boots and shoes throughout the world, and in his own country vast supplies of leather were available. Since that time his factory has grown until it now employs 2,500 hands and turns out 100,000 pairs of boots and shoes a day. To house his workers he had to build a town which now has 15,000 inhabitants. Mr. Bata has for years made use of airplanes to convey his commercial travelers all over Europe with samples of his wares. He maintains a small air force of his own, with a staff of trained pilots.

TO STOP

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK

In old Norse mythology there is the story of a poor man who through bargaining with the devil came into possession of a quern, which is a sort of ancient coffee mill. This quern was capable of grinding out anything that 'it was told to grind -meat and drink and dainties of all sorts. It would grind lights and cutlery and tablecloths and gold even if it were told to do so. The poor man had a rich brother who, when he saw the luxuries with which the once indigent member of the family was now surrounded, became curious and envious. "Whence in h-l's name have you got all this wealth?" he asked, and so persistent was he in his inquiries that he finally wormed from his brother the secret of the quern. Seeing its possibilities he was not satisfied until he had possessed himself of it, which he did upon the payment of a large sum of money. It was evening when the rich brother got the quern home, and next morning, it being the time of hay harvest, he sent his wife out into the hay field to turn over the hay which was being

As you gaze up at the interior of the dome, upon which synchronized and moving objects of light are cast, you have no feeling of being under a roof. It gives you the feeling of looking at the true sky. When the machine is run at speed, you feel decided apprehension for Venus, desperately trying to keep ahead of the sun, and considerable sympathy for little Mercury, trying just as desperately to catch up. Saturn, a lonesome planet, nods eagerly to Venus as she flashes by, but, contrary to any mythological scandal, she neither pauses nor notices him. Jupiter and Mars must be tired business men. They stay out all night. Betelgeuse is apparently a cop on fixed post.

One reason I never had seen a planetarium is that the only one in the United States is the gift of Max Adler to the city of Chicago. It stands on a little island in the lake, near the Field museum, and has the general form of an observatory. I believe there are several planetariums in Germany, and there is soon to be one in Philadelphia in spite of the cost, which they tell me is considerable. I can't see why there is not a planetarium in every large city in the country. It is one of the greatest educational factors I ever saw. The institution in Chicago is constantly a place of pilgrimage for school children, as well as adults, and teaches them more about astronomy in an hour than they would learn from any ordinary course in months. It is an impressive demonstration, making an indelible impression. Never was a scientific lesson more skillfully sugar-coated. Why so rich a city as New York hasn't a planetarium, I can't imagine. * * *

The head of the Chicago planetarium is Doctor Foxx, but frequently there are visiting lecturers. Doctor Baker, professor of astronomy at the University of Illinois, lectured the day was present, He showed me a board, which had more gadgets on it than the control board of an airplane, and told me that the speaker regulated the artificial heavens to suit himself by means of rows of what seemed to be electric buttons and switches. THE STORY

At a public dance Martin Forbes, a newspaper man, cuts in on Rhoda White's dance with Max Lewis, whom Martin in-stinctively dislikes. He over-hears a conversation between Lewis and a woman, which he realizes concerns Rhoda. He re-calls a "blind ad" inquiring the whereabouts of "Rhoda McFar-land" and senses a newspaper story. He believes that is Rhoda's real name. She refuses to deny or admit it. However, it recalls her childhood in Cali-fornia. Her mother dead, she had been happy until misfortune befell her father, Professor Mc-Farland. Associated with the blow is her uncle, William Royce. They move to Chlcago, where her father is engaged in mysterious work. Rhoda takes up stenography. Her father dies suddenly, vainly trying to give her a message about "papers" in a trunk. Rhoda goes to live with a fellow-worker, "Babe" Jen-nings. Their apartment is broken into and $300 of Rhoda's money taken. Martin learns that "C. J." of the "blind ad" is Charles J. Forster, uncle of Lewis, Rhoda admits her name is McFarland, A mysterious "Claire Cleveland" asks Rhoda for an interview.

CHAPTER III-Continued -5-

Rhoda read the thing straight through without making any pauses for reflection and analysis, and it wasn't until she got to the postscript that the false note began to sound loud enough to arouse her suspicion. Down to the first signature she never thought of doubting that the woman had worked for her father and had given him a paper to take care of for her. She wondered how the woman had found her and noted the fact that this wasn't explained, but she put it among the details that had been too numerous and complicated to write in a letter and assumed that it would be explained as soon as they met at lunch.

But with the beginning of the postscript she began to feel herself bristling with suspicion. Nevertheless she went on and read it through to the suddenly affectionate "Yours, Claire" before she let herself begin picking it to pieces.

This treacherous trick that some man had played upon her father, in order to make himself rich-had such a thing ever happened? In itself, it sounded fishy. Her father had never told her anything specific about his affairs, but she knew he must have been trying to discover or to invent something. The man might have stolen her father's discovery-if her father had ever succeeded in making it. But he hadn't succeeded. He'd gone on hoping to make it right up to the day he died.

ing goodby after him to find herself [standing face to face with Martin, she perceived at once from his flush and his frown of annoyance that he hadn't liked it. He had even the air, she thought, of waiting for a justly to be demanded explanation. There was one ready to hand as far as that went. She'd never have got into that car if Babe hadn't already committed her to it. But she wouldn't have told Martin that for anything.

Babe's contribution didn't help matters either. She said to Rhoda, after tossing a negligent hello to Martin, "What do you suppose the old billygoat picked us up for, anyway, making us sit on those folding seats all the way? Mostly they want you to cuddle up a little, no matter how old they are."

She didn't wait for any answer from Rhoda, and left them.

"I'm glad you happened to be here," Rhoda said to him in the coldest tone she could produce. "I wanted to ask you about the woman you heard talking night before last at the Alhambra."

If he'd answered her properly she'd have forgiven him for looking annoyed over the limousine. She would have told him, when she got around to it, how it had happened. But he didn't answer her at all-flashed back at her, instead, with two questions of his own. "What's she been doing since last night? Was there a letter from her in that bunch I brought upstairs?" It was annoying to have her thunder stolen like that. "I don't know," she said. "That's what I'm trying to find out. There was a letter for me from some one who signed herself Claire Cleveland, and I thought she might be the person you told me about." He asked three questions, all in a breath.

"Why did you think she was? What did she say she wanted? Have you got her letter here with you?" She answered them, still trying to be cool about it, in reverse order. "No, naturally not. I put it away. Why, she said that a couple of years before my father died she'd given him a paper to take care of for her, and that now she needed it terribly, and she thought I might be able to help her find it. I don't know exactly why

I thought she might be the woman you told me about." "Well, she is, all right. Anybody could see that." This, she reflected, was as much as to say that she was a fool not to have seen it for herself at the first glance. He really was infuriating. He was staring at her now in a blank abstraction, as if he didn't know she was there. When he waked up it was to ask further questions.

"What does she ask you to do? Let up and came around the table to meet | what I couldn't. And I thought it her. "I'd know you anywhere, Miss would be easier to be let alone if I McFarland!" she said. an extravagant lunch, and the way she overrode Rhoda's protest was rather too self-satisfied.

"I guess the first thing you'll want to know," she began as soon as they were rid of the waiter, "is how I found you. It was pure luck-if there is such a thing as luck, really. I saw you the other night at the Alhambra -that is, I thought it was you, only it seemed too good to be true. she were believing it all, but she was Job at Least Spared afraid it didn't.

"I can see how badly you must want it," she said, when the story was finished. "I'll try my best to find it for you."

"Will it take very long?" Claire asked. "Before you can start looking for it, I mean. Of course you can't tell how long it will take you to find it."

"No," Rhoda assured her. "I'll go at it as soon as I get home this afternoon."

"That certainly is mighty sweet of you," Claire burst out, with a sudden suffusion of warmth, "It seems a shame to make you so much trouble-I'll tell you what we might do," she added. "Let me go along with you and help you look. I could probably find it quicker than you could because "Well, I'm glad it didn't bother you I know just what to look for."

The attempted casualness of the suggestion may have been a little overdone. Whether for that reason or another there flashed into Rhoda's memory, as clearly as if she were hearing it over a radio, a question Martin had asked her that morning: "What does she want to do; go over your father's papers and pick out what she likes?' It was a moment before she could trast her voice to answer and even then it didn't sound quite right.

"Oh, that won't be necessary," she said. "I'm sure I can find it if it's there. And it won't be any trouble at all."

Claire glanced at her watch and started a little. "Will you excuse me a moment, dearie?" she said. "I told a friend of mine that I didn't know whether I had a date for lunch today or not. I didn't, of course, until I knew whether you'd come. And I said I'd call them up before one o'clock and let them know."

Her departure worried Rhoda a little, principally because she had only two dollars with her. What if Claire had fled and left her with that enormous lunch to pay for! Really Claire wasn't gone very long but her return when she came was such a relief that for a moment Rhoda almost thought she liked her.

But that state of feeling didn't last long. Claire's manner had changed a little and had become vaguely disquieting. She talked between and during mouthfuls all through the rest of the meal, about anything or nothing. The meal seemed interminable. , It dragged to an end at last. But when, having set down her empty demion it. When she thought she could tasse, Rhoda moved back her chair a little as a preliminary to saying she must go. Aided by old-time "desert rats," a number of persons solved the unemployment problem at Yuma, Ariz., last winter. The nearby desert and hills contain a quantity of gold and the dirt covering it in many instances was washed away by heavy rains. Several hundred unemployed

"Oh, I see," Rhoda agreed brightly. "I remember how often he used to go back to work evenings. I always hated to have him do it." "You poor kid! You must have been lonesome!" Rhoda felt her face burning as if it had been slapped. This woman's profession of sympathy was an insult she couldn't stand. She looked down at her plate and managed to swallow for your father."

When she reread the injunction not to answer any communication of any sort, the heavily underscored words flashed like a real danger signal. The "communication of any sort" was the advertisement for Rhoda McFarland. She knew who the woman was now; the woman Martin had tried to tell her about last night who'd been afraid she would answer the advertisement in the paper before they had time to take whatever steps they meant to take. She wished she remembered better what Martin had told her.

Who was the man Claire wanted to force to make things right-"as far as money could make anything right"? (The slimy hypocrisy of that afterthought turned Rhoda a bit sick.) Wasn't he most likely the Mr. Forster whose advertisement she was not on any account to answer? Wasn't he the "C. J." whom Martin had heard them talking about?

Well, one thing was settled, anyhow. She'd see Martin and get the details all straight before she went to lunch at the Tip-Top inn. If he happened to be waiting again at the foot of the elevated stairs that would make everything easy.

Martin was waiting at the foot of the elevated stairs, but beyond that point, everything in Rhoda's program went as badly as possible. To begin with, she and Babe didn't come down the stairs but descended at the curb from a lordly limousine, instead. It was Babe who'd accepted the offered lift, but Rhoda had on this occasion followed her companion gladly enough, since they'd been hurrying and had seen their elevated train pull out of the station just about a minute before they got within running distance.

Stopping his car for them must have been an act of pure benevolence on the part of the owner, a respectable old gentleman with a beard. As he sat, he took up most of the back seat, and instead of moving over he had had them turn down the two folding chairs to ride in. A pair or rubber shod canes in the corner gave Rhoda the idea he couldn't move about very easily. He asked them where they wanted to go, instructed his chauffeur to drive them there, and then apparently forgot all about them, submerging himself in his morning paper. He acknowledged their thanks at the end of the ride with a gruff, half-embarrassed nod, and that was all there was to it.

But when Rhods turned from smilher come and see you and go over your father's papers and pick out what she likes?"

"All she asked me to do," Rhoda told him, resolved to stifle her wrath until she burst, "was to come and lunch with her at the Tip-Top inn today as soon after twelve as I could, so that she could tell me all about it. And before I went I thought I'd ask you to tell me . . .

"Rhoda, you're not going?"

He had had the grace to put an upward quirk on that last word to make it sound like a question, but he'd started, she thought, to tell her she shouldn't.

"Of course I'm going," she said. "She may be all right even if she is the woman you heard talking to Mr. Lewis. Anyhow, I'm going to find out."

"You won't find out a thing from her. That woman's clever, Rhoda, and she's dangerous. You'd better let her alone. Why, she's got you half fooled already."

At that, since it wasn't feasible to shake him till his teeth rattled, she turned and left him with a rush.

Unreasonably she was a little disappointed that Martin was nowhere about, not even in the offing, when she set out at noon to her rendezvous. She mustn't waste time thinking about him now, though-except as a warning not to lose her temper again. Her only reason for going to lunch with the woman was, as she had told Martin, to discover what it was all about; why these people she'd never heard of before wouldn't let her alone. She'd get nowhere by acting suspicious or by asking skeptical questions. The more confidently this Claire Cleveland took her for a light-wit the more she'd

Martin Was Right

The first thought that flashed into her mind when she saw the woman who was sitting at the specified table was that there must be some mistake about it. Noting the black hat and the dark blue dress didn't altogether do away with it, either. She'd expected a very different-looking person. This woman looked-rather nice. The shades of early third-class | in the middle. There was a door to travelers ought to smile with satisfaction on hearing the report that first class railway travel is "doomed." The railways were planned for the wealthy. Down to 1845 the third-class passenger had no legal status at all, many companies refused to carry him at any price, while others put him in an open goods truck with movable seats placed across it and charged him 11/2 pence a mile for the privilege. He was conveyed with other unclean animals by cattle-trains, he was shunted about in his bufferless box for hours, and when at last he reached his destination, covered with dust and cinders, it was to see a notice that 'the company's servants are strictly ordered not to porter for wagon passengers." Third-class passengers, nevertheless, persisted in traveling. The companies

woman's voice sounded genuine, anyhow

"Maybe he isn't doing it," Claire went on, "but it's exactly the kind of thing he would do. He's old and he's got rheumatism so bad he can't walk without two canes, but I bet he still likes young girls as much as he ever did. He always has got them whenever he could."

Rhoda found herself getting frightened. The old man who had given her and Babe a lift this morning had two canes with him in the car. There was some horrifying admixture of truth in the lies the woman was telling her. "He must know about you," Claire went on smoothly, "because he was in business, in a way, with your father. I don't know very much about that except that he played your father about the dirtiest trick that a man could play on another man. For anything I know he may think your father left you something that he wantssomething among his papers-but I don't believe it's that. I think it's because he knows you're young, and pretty, and have no one to look after you. Anyhow, when I saw the ad in the paper for Rhoda McFarland, it came over me like second sight that that must be Forster up to his old tricks again."

"Forster?" Rhoda asked. Her lips felt stiff but she seemed able to talk all right. "Has he been advertising for me? What sort of advertisement?" "Oh, the regular sort that's in the personal columns, saying you'll learn something to your advantage by applying to so and so. That's good, if it's Forster who put in the ad. Of course I don't know that it's him. It hasn't got his name on it; just letters, like XYZ. That's enough in itself to show that he isn't on the level. Didn't your father ever tell you about him? I don't suppose he would, though."

Rhoda shook her head. It was under the fascination of terror that she asked, almost involuntarily, the question, "What sort of trick was it that he played on my father?"

"Why, it's my personal opinion," said Claire, "-though of course I don't know anything about it. It happened long before your father and I got acquainted-but it's my private opinion that Forster was somehow or other at the bottom of the whole thing: your father's trouble out in California, I mean."
