the week end, dropping the Fourth of July tilt to East Tawas by a 5-3 score and Sunday's contest with the Berdan Bread Co. team of Bay City

Saturday's contest was one of the most exciting games played between East Tawas and Tawas City. After keeping a lead of three runs until the seventh frame the locals "blew up" to the extent of five runs for their opponents. "Reg" Boudler and M. Lixey staged one of the finest pitchers' battles ever seen on a local diamond.

In Sun'day's game, Bay City annexed six runs in the first two frames of the game. The locals then settled down and held them scoreless for the remainder of the contest. An almost entirely new line-up started the game for the locals, but met with little success in holding back the Bay Cityans in the early part of the game.

On Sunday, July 12th Tawas City journeys to Rogers City to play the Rogers City Y. M. C. team. The locals expect Sunday's game to be one of their stiffest battles of the

"SKIPPY," CARTOON CHARAC-

Although "Skippy," Percy Crosby cartoon character who comes to life with all his adult and kid friends on the State Theatre screen Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in the Paramount talking picture of that title, like Peter Pan, never grows up, his cinema bow is in the nature of an eighteenth birthday party.

The rapidity with which the beloved boy rogue of Crosby's creation has attained nation-wide favor during the past few years tends toward the illusion that "Skippy" is one of those sudden inspirations.

In reality, he was conceived in the mind of Crosby when the cartoonist was a youth of nineteen trying to crash his way into permanent work as a newspaper artist. For years. editors passed up a chance at Skippy until he finally won editorial favor and became an over-night public

Crosby, thirty-seven years old, reviewed the past career of his boy hero as Paramount began the filmization of "Skippy," with Jackie Cooper as the lad; Robert Coogan, five-year-old brother of Jackie Coogan, as the well-known Sooky, and Mitzi Green and Jackie Searl in the

REMAINDER OF SEASON
The following is a schedule of games to be played by the Tawas City baseball club during the remainder of the season:
July 12—Tawas City

Stopped

Sto City; October 11—Tawas City Second Team vs. Regulars.

We now have the hardest part of our schedule to play and we feel the fans some good fast action.

As there are a number of strong outside teams desiring games with us, the last part of the schedule from Sunday, September 20 is not yet authentic. However, we believe those games will be played as listed. Teams that we have played in the rast are all asking to play us again this year. Our schedule being complete for Sundays, it will likely be Dittenber, 3b. 4 necessary to play games that are rained out as double-headers, dates of which will be announced later.

book of junior officers of the navy. Although others share with him the title of "Father of Annapolis," and there were those who anticipated him in urging a naval academy, it must be admitted that his insistence was largely responsible for the founding of such an institution. All this time Maury was trying to get back to sea duty, but an unfortunate accident in a stage coach which made him a cripple for life prevented his return to active duty. By this time his scientific fame was so great and his usefulness so evident that the secretary of the navy, in order to take full advantage of those qualities, made im superintendent of the depot of charts and instruments which-later became that institution of inestimable value, the United States naval observatory. There Maury went further into the study of astronomy, so closely associated with navigation, and be came one of the leading astronomers of the period.

But this was only a minor part of his work. Recalling his dismay when, as sailing master of the Falmouth, he had sought in vain for information which would aid him in sailing that vessel, he set about examining all of the log books which had been tossed aside as rubbish within a short time after the voyages were completed. In these he discovered a veritable gold mine. By charting the courses of all the vessels recorded there, he saw that it would be possible to figure out the prevailing winds and currents at each season of the year over any portion of the high seas. Realizing that it was too big a job for one man he sought aid from the higher authorities but, as is so often the case with projects of immense importance, he could not communicate the extent of his vision to his superiors. So he went at it alone and after five years of most painstaking labor he published his "Wind and Current Chart of the North Atlantic."

To supplement this he issued an abstract log for navigators, made up of advice upon what he had already learned, with blank pages in which they were to make observations each day. The filled-in blanks were to be returned to Maury for compliation of more sailing directions. To get the co-operation of captains of the various ships, he told them that he could cut the sailing time of some of the voyages from ten to fifteen days, and thus it was to their advantage to aid him in making further studies. Within a year navigators had taken out five thousand of his charts and three years later he had manuscripts recording over a half a million days' observations in every corner of the globe. By 1853 his work had won such world-wide fame that a naval conference was called in Brussels, Belgium, to which naval experts from many countries came to help work out this marvelous new science, and Maury returned to America laden with honors and inspired to new endeavor. He had shown the seamen of other nations how to win in their race against work, long the standard, as the text | time. For instance, previous to Mau-

York to San Francisco around Cape Horn was a voyage of 180 days. Maury first showed how to cut this to 133 days, then to 110 days and in 1851 when the famous Flying Cloud made its trip it did it in exactly 90 days.

The value of all this was immediately evident to all maritime nations. Profiting by Maury's work, British commerce was already saving ten million dollars a year and his "Sailing Directions" were becoming increasingly valuable as he added new data and made new computations. One more triumph was to be added to his career before it went into something of an eclipse. During his study of the log books he had discovered much interesting information about the Gulf Stream and this suggested a study of that current and other currents. The result was a book "The Physical Geography of the Sea," a title suggested by the great German scientist, Humboldt, who told the American that it was his observations that founded this new science.

From his study of the soundings recorded in the log books Maury discovered the "Atlantic Plateau" or "Telegraphic Plateau." At this time Cyrus W. Field was trying to lay the first Atlantic cable. Field gave him full credit when he said "Maury furnished the brains, England the money, and I did the work."

Maury was fifty-four years old, at the height of his fame and the hight of his powers, when the rumblings of Civil war gave notice of the tragedy and killed by their exasperated tribeswhich was so soon to follow. Lame men, and only a few, mostly women and past the age for active service, who were especially proficient in the he might well have remained in his observatory far from the raging conflict, making his charts and carrying on his scientific work. But instead, loyal Virginian that he was, he chose to cast his fortunes with his native state. At three o'clock on April 20, 1861, Lieutenant Maury (for despite his worldwide fame he was still only a lieutenant in the United States navy) with tears in his eyes, turned the records of the observatory over to the next in authority and left the building forever. He served as a commodore in the Confederate navy, spending the greater part of his time in England in an unsuccessful attempt to secure recognition of the Confederate states. Before going to England he had been support for his plan of having the Confederacy afloat before the North's growing navy could overwhelm it. But again the lack of imagination of higher-ups made his efforts useless.

When the Civil war ended Maury found himself an exze in England. The emperor Maximilian invited him to Mexico and he became imperial his projects was for a colony of Virginians south of the Rio Grande, but it never materialized. In 1868 the act of amnesty made it possible for him to return to the United States. He had been offered the directorship of the Imperial observatory at Paris by Napoleon III, with a large salary and every facility for carrying on his researches. But he chose to return to professor of physics at the Virginia last five years of his life still investigating and still writing books on geography and astronomy. He died in 1873 and his body was buried temporarily at Lexington. It had been his wish to be buried in Goshen Pass on almost his last words were "Carry my body through the Pass when the rhododenron is in bloom." In June of that year his body was born through Goshen Pass, the coffin covered with rhododenron blossoms and carried on to Richmond where in Hollywood cemetery, he now lies. The Hopi

canyons, they have partaken of the nature of the country, and are aloof, implacable, and wary of the outsider. They consider themselves capable of attending to their own affairs, and resent interference. Long ago, they moved from the villages at the feet of the mesas, building their picturesque homes on the elevations, where raiding enemies could not surprise them. Farming in the land below must have been a very exciting and dangerous occupation sometimes, when the fields must be cultivated almost furtively, and the farmer must have his weapons as close to hand as his digging sticks.

Farming under primitive conditions In scanty soil is a tedious work at best, but the Hopi know how to make the most of what they have. It is related that an agricultural expert was sent to the province of Tusayan, as Hopi-land is called, to show the Indians how to farm. They allowed him to experiment, but when growing time came it was their own scanty corn, watered by hand, that made the crop, and the "expert's" field burned up under the ardent Arizona sun.

The Hopi religion includes fire-and sun-worship, and also ancestor worship, and it is a thing to which they cling as closely as to their lives. At one time they were practically forced into adopting the Christian faith, but during the great Pueblo rebellion of 1680, they returned to their own beliefs, and only one Hopi pueblo, that of Awatobi, continued in the new re-

Awatobi was thus a thorn in the side of the other Hopi villages. With the white man's religion, these people had also acquired their troublesome disposition, and were constantly harassing the people of the other pueblos. They would not return to the ancient faith, though they grafted some of it onto their new beliefs, and adhered to this mixed religion with a tenacity seemingly inspired by the love of annoying their tribesmen. These chafed more and more under the continued harsssing, and accordingly, one night when many of the Awatobians were gathered in a large kiva, their neighbors crept upon them, suddenly pulled up the ladder-their only means of escape-and threw down upon the trapped men firebrands, greasewood, and crushed red peppers, which they pulled down from where they hung drying on the houses. The other converts in the pueblo were hunted down Indian arts, and children, were spared. Peaceful People, indeed!

This happened in 1700. That it is not a legend was proved in 1895, when Dr. J. Walter Fewkes of the Smithsonian institution excavated the ruins of Awatobi, and found the fire-blackened remains of the once flourishing pueblo and its inhabitants.

Now the Hopi live very quietly on their mesa-tops. They cultivate crops on the land below, as they have done for centuries, and they cling to their old beliefs and ceremonies. People come from far lands to witness the famous Snake Dance, in which the "little brothers" of the Hopi are called upon to aid in prayers for rain, and so efficacious is their assistance, that, engaged in a strenuous effort to gain | it is said, never more than three days elapse until it rains.

The Hopi raised cotton before the advent of the whites, and one of their early manufactures was cotton cloth, beautifully woven and often embroidered. Pottery making is another art for which they are famous, and although at present their skill in decoration does not flourish as it once did, commissioner of emigration. One of they copy and adapt designs centuries old with considerable effect.

So they are once more the Peaceful People, but perhaps, if necessity should arise, they would again show the world that they know how to fight.

United States Can Launch More Planes Than Any Other World Power.

Washington. - The United States navy now is in a position to place more planes in sea combat than any other world naval power.

From the decks of three great aircraft carriers, and from the catapults of cruisers and batleships, hundreds of fighting, scouting, bombing, and torpedo planes can take off for an aerial offensive so powerful that navy experts hesitate to prophesy the effect of a concentrated attack.

This development of navy aircraft strength comes as the result of a carefully planed and well executed fiveyear building program inaugurated in 1926 and reaching its climax at the end of the present fiscal year.

Cost $63,000,000.

The program has been effected at a cost of approximately $63,000,000, nearly $25,000,000 less than the original estimates approved by congress. In the brief space of five years the navy has raised the effective force of its aircraft by over 200 per cent and has increased the number of its planes from 350 to over 1,000.

However, the completion of the program will find no letup in navy aeronautical activities.

Navy officials are hopeful of securing additional appropriations from future congresses for at least 500 more planes and four new aircraft carriers.

In recent public anouncements, Assistant Secretary Ingalls has stated the aircraft carrier is the most efficient and powerful weapon of offense and defense yet developed by the navy Admiral Moffett in a recent speech declared that "surface vessels that put themselves within range of aircraft will assuredly be obliterated unless adequately protected by aircraft." Authoritatively representing the views of a large section of naval experts, Admiral Moffett later declared that "our navy should have the maximum possible number of aircraft on its ships. Aircraft had a comparatively minor role in the last war, but it will profoundly change the methods of all future wars to an infinitely greater degree than we can vision today." Gas Bag Expansion.

Naval officials also are wholeheartedly in favor of rapid expansion in lighter-than-air craft. They point out that with the virtual monopoly of helium, nonexplosive lifting gas, this country is in a position to seize dominance in the military dirigible field.

The favorable showing of the veteran dirigible Los Angeles in the recent war game off Panama greatly heartened navy officers who were losing faith in the military value of the building program is the construction of two additional dirigibles. One of these, the Akron, is rapidly nearing completion, and is expected to be ready for trial flights in July. The second, designated as the ZRS-5, will be assembled by the Goodyear-Zeppelin corporation as soon as the Akron has been formally accepted by the navy.

The Akron and its sister ship will be equipped as the most powerful fighting aircraft the world has ever seen. They will be in a position for combat as well as scouting and observation work, carrying powerful batteries of supermachine guns and five fighting aircraft.

BIG VARIATION IN VALUE OF ALFALFA

Time of Cutting and Weather Conditions Count.

For those who buy alfalfa it is well to bear in mind that there is a very considerable variation in the feed value of the different grades on the market, brought about principally by the time of cutting and the condition of the weather at the harvesting period. At the Kansas experiment station, for example, it has been found that when alfalfa is cut in the bud stage the hay may contain as high as 20.2 per cent of protein, as compared with 15.4 per cent when cut in the tenth bloom and up to full bloom and 13.1 per cent when cut at the seed stage. Feeding tests accompanying these different cuttings indicated that it required 1,628 pounds of hay to produce a hundred pounds of gain on beef animals with bud stage hay, 2,086 pounds of tenth bloom stage hay, 2,163 pounds of full bloom stage had and 3,910 pounds of seed stage hay to produce a hundred pounds of gain.

At the Nebraska experiment station it was found that when alfalfa was cut when in one-tenth bloom the hay contained 56 per cent of leaves and when cut in full bloom, 33 per cent. Here again the earlier cuttings showed a higher percentage of protein than the later cuttings.

The effect of climatic conditions at the time of curing the hay was shown clearly at a number of tests made at the Colorado station. Hay that was put up under favorable weather conditions without rain contained 18 per cent of protein, while the same kind of hay damaged by rain during the process of curing contained only 11 per cent of protein.

These facts emphasize the importance of the buyer of alfalfa paying close attention to the grade of hay he selects. Leafiness in alfalfa is an important factor to consider. The more leafy alfalfa is, the greater the percentage of protein it carries and the higher, therefore, its feed value.

Dairy Cows Need Water for Production of Milk

(By JAMES W. LINN, Extension Dairyman, Kansas State Agricultural College.)

Cows should have water where they can get to it easilt in the middle of the day. If the pasture is large much energy is wasted by them in coming back to the barn well at noon.

Dairy cows need water in the middle of the day when the weather is dry. Probably there is nothing cheaper nor as often neglected for good dairy cows which get their forage in a large pasture as the water supply. For the cows which eat on a small pasture near the barn one well is enough, but for cows which have a large range to spend a reasonable amount of time the lace being one as sheer as the securing feed.

The well at a distance from the barn can usually have a windmill and pe controlled by a tank float so that it requires very little attention. Water should be clean. Cows relish clean, fresh water as much as any animal. Since they have to drink five pounds of water to each pound of milk produced it is essential to see that they have it clean, fresh, and at a reasonable distance from the place where they graze.

Raising Dairy Calves

by Using Dry Skimmilk Bulletin 410, the annual report of the Wisconsin agricultural experiment station, contains a summary of work done by I. W. Rupel and G. Bohstedt on raising dairy calves with dry skimmilk. Following are a few interesting

"In the calf-feeding trial conducted this past season, calves fed dry skimmilk at the rate of 0.8 pounds daily made an average gain in weight of 1.4 pounds daily from birth to six months of age."

"When two months of age, one lot of calves was fed the dry skimmilk mixed with the grain ration and the daily gains were just as good as for the lot where the material was mixed with water until the calves were six months old."

"Whether farmers can afford to buy the skimmilk powder for calf-feeding purposes rather than to separate the milk and sell cream will depend on the price they are offered for their whole milt as compared to the cost of the dry skimmilk."

"There undoubtedly are locations in the state where whole milk is marketed where such a practice would be profitable at present prices."

Valuable Sire

It is not the scales that tell the value of a dairy sire. Nor yet is it the texture of the skin nor the type of the animal. The value of a sire lies in his ability to stamp his offspring with valuable characteristics. That ability is difficult to understand. Most farmers fail to know it, much less to appreciate its value. This accounts for so many good bulls going to the block before their merits are known. Testing cows for production reveals these animals.

BE YOUR prettiest and you will be chic is the message to which fashion's followers are "listening in" for summer. As every woman knows there is no more effective way of carrying out this order than to wear flattering, flower-printed chiffon. This summer these gay patterned sheer weaves which we love so well are more than ever in the picture.

Materials which have a deep soft luster through perfected mercerizing processes, in the final analysis often reveal themselves to be every thread cotton, although one would never have thought it possible at first glance. Being cotton means that they are not only durable but though their high-lustered looks may belie, they can be tubbed to look as good as new.

Seeing that these are the very qualities which are desired in materials for the making of little folk's clothes, their wide popularity with creators of

One of the newest trends in fabrica is that of novel mesh effects. Now that these lacy weaves, some of which look almost like coarse net, so pronounced is their openwork patterning, have become so vital a style topic, dressmakers and designers are expressing no little enthusiasm for the beautifully mercerized quality-kind durene mesh cottons which are as smartly attractive as they are thoroughly practical.

The wee maidens in the picture herewith know "style," for they are wearing frocks of durene cotton mesh with net yokes. The camera caught them "all dressed up," but not in the oldfashioned sense of being starched stiffly, and told not to sit down. Modern little ladies of very young years have a much better time of it being all dressed up now, that their dresses are made of soft cottons.

As to the frock which the youngster to the left is wearing, it is made of maize-colored "pineapple mesh," the yoke-shaped deep collar is white. Inverted pleats both back and front achieve neecssary fullness.

ARTISTRY IN COOKERY The cook who really enjoys mixing ingredients as a painter does his colors, will find no limit to the delightful dishes which one may originate or enlarge upon with the materials at hand. One must follow a few fundamental principles in cookery, and after that let the imagination soar, for there is no end to inspiration.

After some experience with handling foods, most toothsome dishes may be prepared from bits of leftovers. The cook who wastes nothing, but serves her food in a dainty, appetizing manner, is a real genius and her talents are ever in demand.

It is not always wise to tell all one knows as to the contents of a dish, for some conscientious objectors will refuse to try a madeover dish, or rearranged food. Now, who will dare to call a steamed pudding a leftover? Yet one may prepare a most tasty one with a few squares of corn bread, cupful of leftover cocoa, a bit of oatmeal, a few raisins and a couple of egg yolks left from some icing or dessert.

Use the things you have at handanyone who knows little about foods can prepare a good meal if the market can be called upon with no regard to expense.

Do you use the half-cupful, more or less, of leftover ice cream in a cake or pudding?

Leftover custard may be used the next day for a pudding sauce.

As we should regard a good meal as important in itself, we will learn to appreciate and value the food that makes a good meal.

Accident is often the mother of new things, as the discovery of one woman when making a sponge cake that it was more fetching when the egg yolks were added unbeaten and stirred in to make the cake streaked gold and

A "lemma" is a thing taken for granted (from the Greek word "lambano," to take). A "dilemma" is a double lemma, a two-edged sword which strikes both ways, or a bull which will toss you whichever horn you grasp. A classic illustration of a dilemma is given in the following ancient story: A young rhetorician said to an old sophist, "Teach me to plead and I will pay you when I gain a cause." The master sued for payment and the scholar pleaded, "If I gain the cause, I shall not pay you, because the judge will say I am not to pay; and if I lose my cause I shall not be required to pay, according to the terms of our agreement." To this the master replied, "Not so; if you gain your cause you must pay me according to the terms of our agreement, and if you lose your cause, the judge will condemn you to pay me."

A FEW TRUTHS

This old earth knows few laws that are universal. However, it knows one law that is both universal and immutable. It is the law of cause and effect.

In the last few years particularly, the tourist and resort business in Michigan has been very definitely increasing.

Twenty years ago tourists came in scores and hundreds. Ten years ago they came in thousands. Now they come in greater numbers. A count has never been made, but it is safe to say they constitute a vast army.

From almost every section of the United States and from parts of foreign countries, travelers have found their way to Michigan—to our parks, our streams, our roaring rivers, our forests, our traveled roads and lonely bypaths.

Their coming was an effect of some cause.

That cause is no will of the wisp, no uncertain, indefinable something. THEY CAME—THE MEMBERS OF THAT VAST TRAVELING ARMY—BECAUSE THEY SAW, HEARD OR READ ABOUT MICHIGAN.

Our parks, streams, roaring rivers, forests, traveled roads and lonely bypaths possess no mystical power. Our natural advantages could lie here unseen forever, except by native eyes, if no word was spoken, no phrase printed, that brought the thought of them to those outside.

The traveling army came because in this state there are four officially recognized tourist associations that have been doing everything within their experienced ability to bring the strong lure that is Michigan's before every prospective

This supplement is a condensed but slight indication of what the East Michigan Tourist Association is doing to place its particular territory before the minds and into the imaginations of the most likely prospects. Every inch of the material presented herein-excluding this treatise-was printed in one of the newspapers or magazines that constitute the media that brought these messages to a reading public running into tens of millions.

The East Michigan Tourist Association supplied these newspapers and magazines with stories and pictures of Michigan, and they printed them because of their intrinsic merit and because their editors have been educated to the exceptional advantages our state actually offers.

Newspapers and magazines are not the only means used to bring people to Michigan for their own good. The radio with its intensely interested audience of millions, the street car with its multitude of ad readers, are now and constantly being used by the association to make America "Michigan minded."

Day after day, through personal contact, through real help and kindly encouragement, the organization is building up Good Will—an incomprehensible factor in attracting people here and making them glad to stay.

The results have been encouraging, it is true, but we do not move toward the contention that the ultimate is within sight. What has been done is merely a certain indication that the possibilities are tremendous.

The East Michigan Tourist Association is an organization formed to promote the conservation and development of Michigan's land and water so all may use them to fruitful advantage. Every real Michigander has the same interest planted within him.

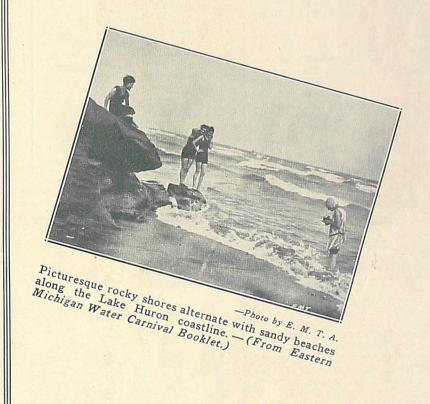

Working together they can make Michigan "The Playground of the World."

TAWAS CITY, MICHIGAN, FRIDAY, JULY 10, 1931

ADVERTISING MICHIGAN'S TOURIST ATTRACTIONS.

THE four development bureau and tourist associations of Michigan are now engaged in raising funds to spend in advertising Michigan as a state of good roads, excellent weather and interesting touring possibilities. For this purpose they have been granted $100,000 this year by the legislature, and a similar sum next year; but this money, which is in charge of the Administrative Board, will only be paid if a similar amount is raised by the four organizations. Thus to open the state's money for advertising, the associations must collect private funds of a similar amount. The legislative act specifies clearly that the money is to be spent for advertising alone, and not for personal services.

Clearly, it is up to the organizations named in the act to sell this advertising idea to their clients and constituents. The money will only be forthcoming if these people believe that the advertising will achieve objects for which it is intended. In the past two years, when a similar plan was in operation, some diffi-culty was experienced in raising money, and a few days ago the state still had some $50,000 which had not been matched by the associations, and which was destined for return to the general fund.

Surely Micigan has much to interest the tourist, but if our own people do not believe in this state's advantages sufficiently to pay for advertising them, they can scarcely expect the people of other states to become interested in our remarkable assets. The tourist business is highly competitive. If we want our share, we shall have to go after it. To raise $100,000 a year should not require a great effort, especially when it is argued to prospective beneficiaries that every dollar they give for advertising will be duplicated

-Editorial from the Detroit News.

WHAT'S IN IT?

A FEW days ago a Bay City-built yacht docked here for a week. When it left, business men amazed to discover that $1,500 had been spent with Bay City merchants by the yacht owner for that week, not counting what the crew spent in incidentals.

Last year, a druggist in Bay City was at home while his clerk was taking care of the store. The druggist nearly expired when he returned and saw C. F. Kettering's check for more than $600 in the till. It was in payment for drugs, flashlights, and odds and ends that go into owner's and guests necessities on a cruise. The yacht that was here for a week will make this one of her cruising ports this summer. Her choice of Bay City-due to the acknowledgment of the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the pleasure felt in having the yacht here for a week-will mean approximately $5,000 or more to Bay City merchants.

Another yacht, leaving here for New York, stocked up with two truck loads of fruit and groceries bought in Bay City.

Downtown stores here during the year have filled several orders running into thousands of dollars because of yachts coming to Bay City.

And this is one phase of the "tourist business." It seems different, doesn't it, when the big fellows are spending big money? But a lot of the smaller ones mean as much. The difference is that it is possible to get these figures in the cases of the yachts. The purchases are concentrated. The other is guesswork of a sort, but it is there just the same.

Five hundred tourists need groceries, shaving cream, kodak film, flashlights in about the same quantity that one yacht will need it for a single normal purchase.

And that is "tourist business." Does it pay to advertise Bay City? Is there money in this more or less neglected field? These figures we have cited are answers spoken in the cold blooded tones of dollars and cents.

Recently, the city wanted to know what it ought to charge for dockage to one of the boats tied up here for some time. In the case of Detroit or other large ports, where waterfront property is valuable and easily improved, there is a logical reason for such charges. But, in the case of Bay City, until such time as our waterfront facilities get so important that dockage is a tax upon us, we ought, almost, to pay these yachts to dock here. If we did, our merchants would be ahead of the game.

—Editorial from Bay City Times.

"Water, water, everywhere and every drop a drink," just about describes Ogemaw county. It seems that wherever someone drills a hole water shoots forthclear as a crystal and cool as an autumn breeze. There's a strange fascination in watching these flowing springsday after day, year after year, the water pours forth, gurgles, and goes laughing into history.

CLARE AND GLADWIN COUNTIES

Clare county, adjacent to Midland county on the northwest, has the finest of natural endowments, with more than 100 lakes and many fine fishing streams.

The more famous trout streams are the South and Middle branches of the Tobacco river, the West and Main branches of the Cedar, and Littlefield, Mosterrer, Floodwood, Red, Thirteen and Clear creeks. Clare county has a fine state park, Wilson, located at Harrison, on Budd Lake.

Gladwin county, a few hours' ride from Flint, Saginaw or Bay City, on a direct route to Houghton Lake, also has many attractions for the tourist. Gladwin state park, on the Cedar river at Gladwin, long has been a favorite spot for tourists and campers. The city park at Beaverton, on Ross lake, which is formed by power dams at the junction of the Cedar and Tobacco rivers, also is an inviting site.

Parks Offer Wide Appeal

(Excerpt from Cincinnati Times-Star-Written by E. M. T. A.)

There are many state parks in Michigan for those who desire to camp out on their summer trips. Throughout the state are scattered 66 of them. Practically all of them are located on water, contain virgin stands of timber, and every one is maintained as a wild life refuge. Each is a beauty spot preserved for the recreation and pleasure of the people. Each is equipped with free camping accommodations. stoves, bath house, rest pavilion and shelter, water, firewood, and in many cases, electric lights. They are open to resident and non-resident alike.

The State parks offer a wide variety of appeal. At P. H. Hoeft State park, near Rogers City, are the shifting, singing, fascinating sand dunes. The Hartwick Mem-orial Pines Park contains the last remaining stand of virgin cork pine in Michigan. Here trees 100 years old tower 100 feet toward the sky. And here stands a memorial to the old lumberjack in the form of a fully equipped lumbering camp, maintained as it was a half century ago.

TOURISTS BLUE BOOK IS IN GREAT DEMAND

(From The Detroit News)

Requests for the 1931 Blue Book of the East Michigan Tourist Association indicate the coming season will be the biggest tourist season Michigan has ever wingessed.
The Blue Book offers the recommended hotels, clubs and cottages in East Michigan, contains strip maps with cities and villages clearly marked, and presents an alphabetical list of points of interest within the territory.

Those who have seen the book have praised it enthusiastically and have called it a valuable aid even to the experienced traveler in Michigan.

Ohio Likes Lakes, Parks

Michigan, "Ohio's Playground," Center of Vacation World; Parks Convenient.

(From Ohio Motorist) By KATHERINE BANTA for E. M. T. A.

E are convinced in Michvigan that our most apt title is "Ohio's Playground."

An Ohioan last summer said that in his Michigan camp he was bounded on the north by a car-load of fishermen from Missouri, on the south by an Indian-legend hunter from New York, on the east by hay-fever refugees from Indiana, and on the west and south-south-west by families escaped from the summer heat of

It is safe to conjecture that three-fourths of the cars passed on any given highway, around any given hotel resort, or in any given tourist camp along lake or river, are pleasure-seekers from the Buckeye state.

What brings them here it has been easy to gather from the na-ture of the spots they choose for their stays of a week to six weeks. They travel on our network of splendid highways with the vision of our waters in their eyes; they come to our supervised state parks, preferably those which have good fishing lakes and rivers within their boundaries.

Michigan has 66 state parks, ranging from those of a few acres to those of several thousand of acres. These are all open to the public and are equipped so that they offer the greatest enjoyment to those who wish to idle for the season as well as for the week-

PRIMITIVE BEAUTY

Most of them the state has provided with cooking places, with convenient tables, always with pure drinking water, many of them with shelters, with bath houses and with the supervision of caretakers. Yet in no instance has the primitive beauty of the groves or of the banks of streams and lakes been spoiled by so-called improvements.

The woods are clean and fresh and fragrant, many of them made interesting by the protected smallanimal wild life. The native shrubs and wild flowers and mosses and picturesque birches and balsams and scores of other decorative trees, have been landscaped by the hand of none but Gitchee Manitou, the Mighty.

Year after year more lovers of the out-of-doors are visiting

Photo and Story from DETROIT THIS WEEK, which is Placed in Hotels, Stor's and Business Houses All Over Detroit.

THROUGHOUT Michigan there are thousands of miles of broad ribbons of concrete, long stretches of smooth macadam and seemingly endless networks of wonderful gravel roads. There is a highway to everywhere and everywhere a highway. The greatest of these is Woodward avenue, a 204-foot double-tracked superhighway which runs from Detroit to Pontiac and merges with a trunk line which leads into the playgrounds of the north. It is an inspiring sight to see four lines of traffic going in each direction over this masterpiece of road building.

However, all of Michigan's improved roads are amply broad and inviting. Many of them cross the entire state in one direction or the other or penetrate interesting sections. For example, the Rainbow Trail runs from Saginaw west to Muskegon on Lake Michigan. Michigan avenue, Detroit, becomes a paveway to Chicago either via U. S. 112 or U. S. 12.

Route U. S. 21 crosses the state from Port Huron to Holland and U. S. 29, the Algonquin Trail, encircles the Thumb district from great trunk highways, U. S. 23, U. S. 27, U. S. 131 and U. S. 31 traverse the entire length of the Southern Peninsula from south to north, all converging at Mackinaw from which point state-owned ferries connect at St. Ignace with the fine road system of the Upper Peninsula: Michigan's glory is not in highways alone. It lies also in safe and inviting trails to fairyland-gay memories of log roads and game trails which seem to wander like aimless rivulets through rich farming sections over plains never touched by the plow, between palisades of stately pine, under arches of birch or where poplars dream knee-deep in the Three miles an hour or thirty.

the trails unwind their gossamer of shade and dappling sun, with here a lake and there a waterfall, streams, rivers, rocks in endless and surprising vista-and there a break to open heights where the fire rangers watch and the panorama of hills and forests lies dreaming, remote and beckoning to adventurous wheels. Then home again to hotel or campsite with the headlights searching the hazels circles the Thumb district from and a lonely porcupine lumbering Port Huron to Bay City. Four from the onrush of the car.

Towns With Transients Lead in Retail Trade

(From Alpena News-Written by E. M. T. A.)

That it pays communities to make known their advantages in order to attract visitors and that it will pay Alpena to make definite plans to advertise its special attractions, and to make a program for the building up of its recreational facilities, is proved by the comparative per capita expenditure figures for Alpena and other Michigan cities compiled by Charles E. Boyd, secretary of the Detroit Retail Merchants' Association, from the 1930 census statistics.

Ann Arbor with a per capita expenditure of $968.06 leads the list. Mt. Clemens with $937.71 is $827.97 is third. Alpena is listed with an average expenditure of

The figures were computed by taking the total retail sales in the communities and dividing them by the number of inhabitants.

EASTERN MICHIGAN VACATION SIGHTS!

(From the Detroit Free Press.) Here are just a few of the sights in Eastern Michigan to greet the vacationist: Army air field, north of Oscoda; John Jacob Astor house, old fur trading post, Mackinaw Island; Capitol, Lansing; coal mines between Saginaw and Bay City; Hanson Military Reservation, 18,000 acres at Lake Margarethe, near Grayling; Hartwick Pines Park, Grayling; Fort Holmes, Mackinac Island; Huron Na-tional Forest, 616,000 acres in Northeastern Michigan; Indian treaty signed by General Cass, 1819, near Saginaw; limestone quarries, near Rogers City and Alpena; Fort Mackinac, Mackinac Island; site of the founding of the Republican party, Jackson; Sacred Rock, Indian Shrine, on Lake Huron shore, south of Rogers City, Straits of Mackinac, connecting Lakes Michigan and Huron, and separating upper and lower peninsulas.

It is obvious that cities which have educational institutions and those which draw large numbers of tourists lead the purely industrial or purely agricultural communities.

The size of the trading area served by the local merchants accounts for the high per capita expenditures in some cities. A town may have a small population yet draw buyers from a wide surrounding area and the reverse is also true.

TOURIST ASSOCIATION SENDS 2 TONS OF MAIL

(From The Detroit News)

Bay City, Mich., June 13.-The East Michigan Tourist Association, in receipt of more inquiries than ever before, has in the week ending today sent out nearly two tons of mail, the bulk of the weight being caused by the thousands of tourist guides requested.

The guide which has proved to be one of the most popular in the country is in four colors and contains a short description of each county in the eastern territory with points of interest noted. It also contains lists of the state parks, of Michigan birds, flowers, trees, fish and mammals.

Tourists who have already used the guide have called it indispen-

Good Home Sites Abound

Advantages of Michigan Acreage To Be Shown To City Dwellers.

(From The Detroit News) Written by E. M. T. A.

Greater effort than in former years is to be put forth by the East Michigan Tourist Association this year, to interest summer vacationers in obtaining home sites, according to J. E. Richards, president of the association.

More and more we wish to point out to people that summer property is not necessarily water frontage," Mr. Richards said. 'There are thousands of acres available for summer homes where city people with small children will find wonderful places for play. A small acreage where children may enjoy the pleasures of gardening, of raising animals and chickens, of playing in the wildflower filled plains and hills, is as well recommended by child psychologists as are spots where water sports are the chief diversion."

A special effort will be made to present to city dwellers the comparatively small expense of summering with their families on small farms.

"And none of these places in our territory are far from the marvelous fishing which attracts the grownups," Mr. Richards points out. "It's never very far from anywhere in Fact Michigan from anywhere in East Michigan to a fish-filled lake or stream. "Now that the relicted land question has been settled, we believe we can look toward a better demand for shore property, both on inland lakes and on our long shore line of the Great Lakes. So long as there was uncertainty as to ownership, people who were prospective buyers did not care to buy shore property even where the meander line was not in ques-

According to Mr. Richards, many of the most attractive lands in East Michigan, as well as much of the desirable shore on Lake Huron have never been settled at all by spring and summer cottages. Pioneering on beautiful water front is still possible for many hundreds of those who want the peace and quiet of these woods and waters.

Purified Air Brings Pep

(The following is an excerpt from a story which appeared in The Highway Traveler, written for that publication by E.M.T.A.)

"Oh! It's nice to get up in the morning When the sun begins to shine At four or five or six o'clock In the good old summer time."

THE Scotch songster is right, particularly if he is talking, or singing about Michigan. The only fault to find is that he failed to include spring and autumn.

A certain Scotchman, and he may or may not be related to Mr. Lauder, was expressing his wonder at the enthusiasm and activity of Michigan people. Looking at a map of the state, his eye jumped from lake to lake with dizzying rapidity.

"Why," said he, "this state is as much an island of the seas as my native heath. You breathe here the air of purity and freshness that comes only with close proximity to great bodies of water. No wonder your people and your visitors have the 'pep,' as you Americans call it, to get up early in the good old summer time!" As a matter of fact, no map has ever been made of the state of Michigan that shows how many lakes it contains. The best estimate places the number close to five thousand. And to abet these is the influence of the greater bodies of water that wash the shore boundaries of the state. If one attempts to draw in, in pencil, all of the rivers and smaller streams, he finds himself marveling that there is enough dry land left for the great forests and parks that are such a famous part of the summer playground of this

State Holds Tourist Lure

Outdoor Enthusiasts Dream of Vacation; Michigan Offers Attractions.

(From Central Ohio Motor Travel)
By R. G. SCHRECK For E. M. T. A.

E VERY outdoor enthusiast with the approach of spring and summer is pawing over fishing tackle, camp equipment and maps and is dreaming and planning another outdoor vacation, and as he paws and dreams, the vision of East Michigan presents itself. There is its varied appeal, its vast extent and its particular wonders.

No casual examination of the section can afford an indication of its advantages. No map can picture the great number of lakes that exist. It can only show that water is a most important factor and that the Great Lakes lap its shores and cool and purify its bracing air. The numerous fishing streams and forested areas, its unending roads, its state parks, its state forests and the great Huron National Forest all tend to make it an outstanding summer

VARIED INTERESTS The wonders of Michigan begin to unfold immediately after entering the state. There is Detroit that has startled the world with its marvelous industrial growth, and Flint, a great automobile city. The smiling Irish Hills will beckon to you. The attractive parks of Jackson County are noted for their conveniences and you may camp in one or more of them enroute. The Capitol Building and State College at Lansing are always visited. The farming district around Ithaca displays some of the finest farms in the state. The oil wells at Mt. Pleasant, the chemical works at Midland and Midland's unique county building, the industries at Saginaw continue to register the many and varied activities and attractions of the state.

MICHIGAN LAKES HAUNTS OF FISH

The fame of Michigan as a Vacation Land spreads afar. The following story appeared in the New Orleans Times-Picayune along with an ad.. placed by E. M.

Trite as is "fisherman's paradise," no other expression adequately describes the waters of Michigan. The area contains many acres of rippled blue lakes, large and small, and countless rivers and streams cross the entire territory. No wise angler need ever return disappointed from these far-spreading haunts of hungry, fighting fish.

King of battlers, perhaps, is the tigerish muskellunge, which is always ready to give the fisherman a struggle and a thrill. And yet for fighting fury in proportion to weight, there are many who will award the palm to the belligerent black bass which, in these waters, often attains five or six pounds in weight and is a delicious table fish. Pike and pickerel are everywhere, and provide good sport. In some of the colder, more dashing streams, the trout lurks, and in a few of the big deep lakes the land-locked salmon is

Preparing to Salvage Sunken Gold

San Francisco.—A little gray haired | was supposed to be on board, but who | man with small quizzical eyes and a determined mouth sat in the lobby of the Palace hotel recently and told of a treasure hunt on the high seas as full of adventure, thrills and suspense as anything ever conceived by Stevenson or Conrad.

Capt. Charles O. Haskell, inventor and veteran salvager, who announced to the world a short time ago that he had located the old Pacific Mail liner Rio de Janeiro that went down off the Golden Gate in 1901 with 131 souls aboard and a reputed $6,000,000 in bullion, when he filed a claim at the recorder's office, was the speaker. But as to where the claim actually is or exactly how he found it, Cap-

SAILING TROPHY

The George Brock perpetual challenge trophy for eight-meter boats is shown as it is completed and placed on display at Los Angeles, where it has been posted for the national midwinter sailing championships, staged each February. The first name to be engraved on the beautiful masterpiece of silver, gold and marble, is that of Owen Churchill and his "Angelita," which won it in the last races, before the silversmiths and artists had completed their task in turning out what is said to be one of the most beautiful prizes of its kind in the world. Miss Adrienne McKenzie is shown with the perpetual challenge trophy.

••••••••••••••• AGAINST ODDS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was a thrilling story that they told of Buchanan at the services which commemof duty, a stronger determination to win the battle of life even against Buchanan had always shown a strange faculty for doing things which he undertook to do, no matter what it might cost in personal labor and effort, or even danger to himself. If he assumed an obligation, he met it. He was a young naval officer in charge of a detachment of marines in Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan town which he was guarding was attacked by a band of guerillas ten times the number of men at Buchanan's disposal. He might well have hesitated to engage them in battle. Ten to one the odds were against him and the attackers knew the country in which they were making their onslaught far better than he did. It was his duty, however, and there was no hesitation, he put the guerillas to flight. He won hir battle, notwithstanding the odds s linst him, though he lost his life. It takes courage to engage in any sort of contest against odds.

"I am willing to try you out on the job," the superintendent said to Craig, "because you show much enthusiasm for your work, but I want you to understand that you haven't one chance in ten of making good.

glance, thereby saving the pilot ready for a cross-country jaunt worry and trouble in choosing the best course, has been designed by Lieut. J. B. Anderson, U. S. N., meteorological officer at the Anacostia Air station.

Tests have been conducted successfully for several weeks, and two identical maps have followed the first device. One is located in the commanding officer's office, another in the pilot room and the third, which controls the three maps, is situated in the meteorological room. All three are worked simultaneously.

In general appearance, the electrical map is an ordinary chart of the United States extending from the Middle West to the Atlantic seaboard. A large map of the entire country could be arranged, but for experimental purposes only a small section has been drawn on the board.

Tiny lights showing white, green and red dot the ordinary routes extending from Washington to other sections. White indicates good flying weather; tions will confront the pilot; red shows storms, heavy fogs and gale winds, and means that under no conditions must a pilot attempt to fly over that particular area. Two different colored lights indicate that weather conditions are expected to change, and electric green means that undesirable condibells tinkle to call attention to the shifting colors. Prolonged rings warn of squalls, thunderstorms or line

The usual procedure followed by a pilot preparing to leave a military air station consists first in obtaining a trip map of the route to be followed. On a huge board in the operations room there are marked the names of the various military fields of the country, and under them are marked in chalk the flying conditions at that particular field, velocity and direction of winds at various altitudes and visibility obtaining at the time at which the report was received.

These reports are received every few nours, but it is left to the pilot to interpret changing conditions over the oute he expects to fly.

Thus great saving of time and greater reliability are afforded by the electric map. The shining lights instantaneously show the pilot just what he may expect, whether conditions are changing and where he should begin a detour in order to escape bad conditions if his mission is urgent.

The Navy department is enthusiastic about the new device and plans are

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

A mixed party of Manhattanites | languid eyes to stare at another paswere coming in from a hard week-end in Connecticut. Tired and wan from their rest in the country, they drooped in the chairs of the parlor car. One of the women of the party opened senger, who was wearing a coat with a fur collar. Suddenly she screamed. Now thoroughly awake, her companions looked to see what had alarmed her and almost echoed her cry. The fur collar was unmistakably in motion. A bit disturbed by the demonstration, the owner of the collar raised her hand, detached a tiny marmoset from her coat, and put it in her lap. The returning travelers were all immensely relieved to know that they all saw the same monkey and that it was real.

An important employee of big business made a mistake. It distressed him greatly and he said so to the head of the organization, a man who has the reputation of being pretty hard-

"Listen," said the latter. "I don't expect miracles. If you are right 51 per cent of the time, you are swell. If you are right 50 per cent of the time, you are good. But if you are right only 49 per cent of the time, you are a liability instead of an asset. As long as your average is good, don't worry over one failure."

A noted woman explorer recently registered at one of New York's largest hotels. Some time the next day she departed, but a housemaid departed several long, swift jumps ahead of her. In starting to clean the explorer's room, the maid discovered that one corner was occupied by an intertwined mass of sleepy snakes. The floor watchman asserted that a bullet had gone by him, but investigation proved it was only the departing maid.

I learn from Mr. Biascoechea of San Juan that I can purchase Porto Rican coconuts at $18 per 1,000, if I buy in 100,000 lots. The thing is, where to put them. I have looked at the pantry shelves, but they are so occupied with cans, boxes and bottles that there doesn't appear to be room left for a blueberry, let alone a coconut. It is the same everywhere else. All the closets are full of shoes and golf clubs, and magazines I have been hoarding for a few years. There are things in those magazines I want to save. After all, 100,000 coconuts seem a good many for an apartment. If I owned a farm, it would be different. A man on a farm with 100,000 good milky coconuts wouldn't have to keep a cow.

A man I know met Vicki Baum, author of "Grand Hotel," a blond, interesting Austrian, who started as a musician and became a playwright. As he spoke no German, he was afraid their conversation would be limited. but he found to his relief that she spoke English, with rather a fascinating accent.

"Just speak slowly," she said, "and I will understand. Already I have learned well your two most important words, "swell" and "lousy."

EARNS SOVIET HONOR

Although the United States and Russia "do not speak as they pass by," that attitude on the part of the Soviet government does not apply to George G. McDowell, formerly of Manhattan, Kan., who bears the distinction of being the first United States citizen to be cited for the order of Lenin. Mc-Dowell has been in Russia since 1923 and has done much for agricultural advancement in that country. He is a graduate of the Kansas State Agricultural college, having obtained his B. #### CHAPTER X-Continued -10-

It didn't startle Max, for he answered readily enough, "No, I just happened to run across her there." "So you helped her buy her ticket and check her trunk and then you saw her off on the train. And now you've heard my trunk has been stolen you think that must be the one you

"Well, it seems kind of queer, her going off to New York like that without letting you know anything about You said you'd lost some money, didn't you? She's got that, too, if you ask me. She certainly talked as if she had plenty. She told me she was taking her vacation late so that the big burg would be running full time when she got there."

Involuntarily Rhoda started at that. Babe had been talking about that sort of vacation ever since she and Rhoda had begun living together. She'd used that very phrase. Max couldn't have made it up. He had met Babe at the station then and she had made him think she was going to New York.

Why? Why had she gone to the station? Why, for that matter, had Max gone there himself? Had he meant to go to New York on that train? With her three hundred dollars and her trunk?

Wall, how about Claire? Where did she come in? Or didn't she come in? Had he ditched Claire, or tried to? Was that what the telephone message had been about? Never mind that now. Whatever Max had tried to do he'd failed. Rhoda remembered how he'd looked when he came into the

"I wish you'd tell me," she said, looking at him in as childlike a manner as she could manage, "what the terrible thing was that Babe did to you."

"Never mind about that!" he growled at her. "Get off it! It's no business of yours. You've got enough to worry about with what she did to you."

"I don't think," she told him cheerfully, "that I've anything to worry about at all. I think she's got my trunk back. You see I was talking to her on the telephone just now, when you came in here."

This proved one dart too many and he came for her; not blindly, either. He seized her arm with a wrench that made her want to cry out, and jerked her to her feet.

"Get out of here!" he said. "I'll make it worth your while to talk to me some other time, if you get out now before my uncle finds you here." For an instant she stared up at him blankly, the realization breaking over her that he didn't know she'd already seen his uncle; that he thought she was voluntarily waiting for him. right," she said, "I'll go. But you'll have to show me the way out." He didn't altogether release her, but his grip on her arm relaxed as he started leading her toward the door she had come in by. Half-way to it they were halted by Conley's voice. He had come in by one of the smaller doors.

Conley came up to them briskly. "Let the girl alone," he continued. "She's no affair of yours. Mr. Forster wants her to wait here."

Now Max did let go her arm, but it wasn't in obedience to Conley's order. "Lay off it," he said. "You aren't in on this. This young lady's a friend of mine and now she's talked to me she doesn't want to see C. J."

Conley agreed with a grin, "I guess she doesn't. But she don't leave this room until the boss comes back." Glancing up at Max, Rhoda could see that that word, "back" troubled him, though he hadn't yet made out the implication in it.

Rhoda started for the door, and she kept on going, though Conley barked at her, "Come back here, you!" She was aware that Max interposed to check Conley's rush for her. The last thing she heard before she closed the door after her was the thud of a heavy blow, and she inferred from the fact that she wasn't immediately pursued and dragged back, that the recipient of it must have been Conley.

She walked-it seemed safer somehow than breaking into a run-down the broad corridor and around the corner, retracing her way in, although it was a stairway she hoped to find rather than the elevator. However, by almost unbelievable good luck, she found the elevator there waiting for her, with both its own door and the outer guard gate standing wide open.

There was no attendant there. It was one of those mysterious little elevators you were supposed to run yourself. She swiftly scrutinized the little row of push buttons, and pressed the one marked "Down." There was a faint, protesting buzz, but nothing happened. In less desperate haste she might have reflected that an automatic elevator which could descend its shaft while its guard gate stood open would be a veritable death-trap, but on the verge of panic as she was, she couldn't think at all. Then she heard a door open somewhere and stepped back into the corridor, poised for flight but not knowing which way to flee. A big, booming voice swept over her and, even before | she consciously recognized it or took any meaning from what it said, all but paralyzed her with childish terror.

Very well. But I warn you, vou are making a serious mistake. I shall find her in spite of you, and if necessary, in spite of herself. She is a minor and I am her guardian-in effect, at any rate. Her interests are in my hands and I shall protect them." It was six years since she had heard those heavy menacing tones. It was her uncle, William Royce-the ogre! She fled now, as a child would, running blindly down one corridor, up another, turning corners at random.

There must be a stairway somewhere. She was just getting over this panic and beginning to try to feel ashamed of it when it was renewed by the sound of heavy and, to her ears, ogreish footsteps coming briskly along the transverse corner which she was approaching. She was passing, at the instant, a door which stood ajar. Instinctively she pushed it open and stepped into the room it gave upon.

The room was dark, but she perceived at once it wasn't empty, since woman's silhouette was visible against one of the windows. The woman hadn't heard her come in since she neither spoke nor moved.

But the footsteps which had frightened Rhoda were now just outside the door and pausing there. The man was coming in too. She wasn't cornered yet, however, for another door communicating with the adjoining room stood open too, and she retreated through it just before the man switched on the light.

The next moment she heard Max Lewis demanding angrily, "What the devil are you doing here?" He hadn't seen her, though; he was speaking to the woman.

CHAPTER XI

To the Rescue

Babe and Martin stood staring at each other across a dead telephone. "What do you suppose made her voice sound so funny?" Babe asked. "Sure it was hers, are you?" he shot

"Oh," cried Babe disgustedly, "don't I know Red's voice? Look here, have you really got anything on your mind, or are you just generally cuckooabout her, I mean?" "I've got that Cleveland woman on my mind," he answered, "and a man named C. J. Forster, who wants to get hold of her pretty badly, and I don't know why. He's been advertising for her and somehow or other has managed to find her."

Babe asked, rather tensely, how he knew.

"It was Forster," he told her, "who brought you two down to work this morning in his limousine. Where did he pick you up? Just as you were leaving the building here?"

She answered with a nod. "I guess it's my fault, if anything's happened," she said, pretty humbly for Babe. "I know how he found her, all right. You see, I answered his ad myself. He telephoned one in, the morning after Max had brought me home. Max had asked me that night if her real name wasn't Rhoda McFarland. I took the ad over the phone and got Forster's name and address. I'd tried to get Red to answer it the night before but she wouldn't. It said 'something to her advantage' and I thought it probably was. So I called him up at lunch time at the Worcester and told him if he'd write her a letter, care of me, I'd forward it to her. I didn't see how that gave her away, but it must have, somehow. I suppose you'd like to beat me up for butting in like that." He patted her shoulder instead. "It's no use worrying about that now," he said. "I'm glad you told me. It's between him and the Cleveland woman, then. They are fighting each other, that's one good thing. But one of them has got her, somehow. If that had been a plain broken connection she'd have called again. . . ."

The telephone bell interrupted him. Babe was nearer and caught up the instrument before he could get to it.

"Red!" she cried, "is that you?" But it wasn't Rhoda. Babe was looking rather puzzled. "No," Martin heard her say. "She hasn't come back yet. We're expecting her. . . . This is her friend, Babe Jennings .- Say, who is this?"

Martin started over to take the telephone away from her, but she clung to it pressing the mouthpiece tight against her chest.

"Martin!" she cried excitedly, "I think it's the woman at the stationthe Cleveland woman! Listen and see if she sounds like she did when you telephoned to her this afternoon."

He'd been motioning at her frantically to take the transmitter away. "She can hear every word you say when you hold it like that. Talk to her! Ask her where she is. Give me the receiver so I can hear what she says." But all he was in time to hear was the click of disconnection. Claire had hung up on them. "Well," Martin remarked as he him-

trick of yours she knows how we | hat on his head and a brown overframed her and Max this afternoon. But she hasn't got Rhoda or she wouldn't have called up here to ask for her. That makes the Worcester our best bet. I'm going there now and try to find her. You stick-tight, you understand-to that telephone so that you can answer the second she calls, if she does call again."

With that he snatched his hat and fled.

Fifteen minutes later, in a telephone booth in the lobby of the Worcester hotel, he looked up Forster's number and telephoned from there.

When a man's voice answered with a "Hello? Who is this?" he said that he was a reporter from the News and he wanted a personal interview with Mr. C. J. Forster. The rather surprising answer came back, "This is Mr. Forster speaking. What was it you wanted to speak to me about?"

Apart from the fact that you wouldn't have expected Forster to answer his own phone, there were two queer things about this. The rhythm of his talk wasn't right. The man wasn't speaking for himself. He was being prompted. This meant, of course, that he wasn't Forster but was impersonating him under orders from some one else. The other strange thing was that his voice was one that Martin half recognized; felt, at least, that he ought to be able to recognize.

"I don't much want to talk about it over the telephone," Martin said, and "and I don't then added casuallybelieve you do, either."

Evidently they-whoever they were at the other end-had to go into conference over this remark, for it produced quite a silence. Finally the man who said he was Forster asked, "Who are you? What's your name?" On Martin's telling him he said: "If you've really got anything to say you can have your interview. But you'll have to tell me what it's about."

"It's about," said Martin, "the disappearance of Miss Rhoda McFarland. Do I get my interview?" There was a long silence at that.

Evidently they were having an argument about it. "Nothing doing," the voice said at last. "I don't know that she's disappeared. I don't know that there's any such person." "You don't want to say, then, why you've been advertising for her?" The only answer he got to that question was a click which meant that the other receiver had been slammed down on the hook. So Martin hung up, too, and left the booth.

The first thing to find out was the number of Forster's apartment, and of course, the obvious way would be to walk up to the desk and ask the clerk. But instinctively he shied at that. Forster was no ordinary transient guest here. A man as rich as he was, and permanently domiciled here, would have special defenses. You wouldn't be able to mention his name without starting something. The better way would be to drift into casual talk with somebody, a bell hop or the girl who sold theater tickets, lead up to his question and ask it idly.

But it wasn't so easy as it looked, to frame that question so it would sound casual. And if he failed, if his question roused suspicion, he'd be worse off than if he'd gone straight to the clerk in the first place. His gaze was questing about the lobby, noting everything that everybody did, studying faces in the hope of finding one dull and friendly and unsuspicious enough to suit his purpose.

The man who had just come down in one of the elevators and now stood talking to the captain hadn't a face like that; very much the contrary, in fact, bleak and rocky as a chunk of the great American desert and he talked as if he were biting off the heads of finishing nails.

Martin stared at him, regardless of the risk of catching his eye, until, in self hung up, "thanks to that chest | his own mind's eye, he had put a derby coat on his back and a little leather notebook in his hand, and recognized him. He was the man who had come to the studio last night, getting names for the new city directory. And this identification led on so quickly to another that it was like firing the second barrel of a shotgun. This was the man whose voice he had just now been trying to remember, the man on the telephone who had been pretending he was Forster.

It seemed a reasonable guess that the instructions Blue Serge was giving the captain were that any reporter or other inquisitive person asking questions about C. J. Forster or trying to get through to him was to be dealt with in a special manner.

Satisfied that the captain understood these instructions, whatever they were, Blue Serge left him and crossed the lobby to the desk. Here his business was not with the clerk but with the manager, who promptly came out of his little private office to talk with him. The manager was taking orders, too, with an alertness which showed he recognized their importance. Leaving the desk and a completely instructed manager behind it, the man in the blue serge suit now started across the lobby in a new direction; one that would bring him, unless he veered off, uncomfortably close to Martin's chair. But before this embarrassment became acute he was diverted by one of the bellboys who crossed his path. The boy seemed perfectly unaware of him, but Blue Serge, after a sharp look, turned on his heel and went back to the desk, summoned the manager again, brought him out into the lobby a little way, and nodded after the boy. Then he went off and disappeared into an elevator.

The manager, returning to his office, paused for a word to the bell captain. The bell captain spoke to the boy Blue Serge had pointed out. The boy, with a look of surprise, went into the manager's office to come out again a minute or two later flushed, indignant, and, withal, profoundly puzzled. Something had happened to him that he seemed utterly at a loss to account for; discipline, evidently, that he felt to be undeserved. He was coming along slowly in Martin's direction. That was luck.

But it wasn't until the boy was in the act of passing his chair that the significance of the little play clicked into a pattern in the reporter's mind. That boy had seen something. He possessed, probably without suspecting it, some piece of damaging information, and they'd taken measures to prevent his giving that information away. Martin rose from his chair just when his doing so intercepted the boy's progress toward the door.

"I guess you're looking for me," he

The boy stopped in surprise and answered, "I'm not looking for anybody, that I know of. What made you think

I was looking for you?" Martin took the plunge. "If they just laid you off," he said, "I think I can tell you why they did. Who's the hatchet-faced man in the blue serge suit who works for Forster? He pointed you out to the manager just now."

"Do you mean Conley? I haven't done anything to him. Say, who are you? How do you know they laid

"Conley's expecting a reporter around here in a few minutes, a reporter from the Daily News who's trying to find out about the disappearance of a girl. He had you laid off because he thought you knew something about her."

"I don't know anything about any girl that's disappeared," protested the boy. "Say, who are you?"

"I'm the reporter Conley's expecting in about fifteen minutes. Didn't you see a girl-a red-haired girl? Didn't you answer some questions of hers or take her somewhere?"

"Sure!" said the boy. "Forster was expecting her. I took her up to the top floor, to the private elevator. Conley ran her up from there."

"How do you know Forster expected her?" Martin asked.

"Because we ran her right up the minute she gave her name. Miss White, it was. She didn't know Forster owned the hotel and she seemed sort of scared when she found she was going up to that bungalow of his on the roof. Conley came down in the private elevator to take her up." "What time was this?"

"I don't know," said the boy. "This afternoon some time. Say, do you think they're keeping her up there?"

Martin nodded. He hadn't thought so until a moment ago. But a bungalow on the roof offered opportunities. "I'm going up to see if she's there, anyhow." "How you going to get in?" the boy wanted to know. "The private elevator's locked up except when they run it themselves. The only stairexcept the service stair-comes down into Forster's office on the top floor. That's all locked up now."

"How about the fire escape?" Martin asked.

The boy's face lighted at this suggestion, but chiefly, Martin was disappointed to discover, in admiration of the reporter's nerve in contemplating it. "There's a five escape landing outside the window right at the end of the corridor on the top floor. And there's a steel ladder goes up from there that curves over the sort of stone railing at the edge of the main roof. That ladder must be pretty scary, climbing right up over the edge of nothing."

It may be confessed that it struck Martin that way. But all he said was that it looked like the best bet. He shook hands with the boy and walked away, with the best air of unconcern he could assume, to the elevators.

"As far as you go," he said in response to an inquiring glance from the elevator boy. He hoped the phrase would conceal his ignorance of the actual number of the top floor, and it did. He perceived, though, that even the briefest hesitation on his part when he stepped out of the elevator at the top would be fatal to his plan. The boy would ask him whose room he was looking for. He must choose in advance which way to turn. Very well, he'd turn to the right.

It seemed at first that he had made a disastrously bad guess, for he found himself walking straight toward a transverse partition of glass and oak with a door in the middle of it marked "C. J. Forster." The door was ajar and there was a light inside. The elevator hadn't started down. The boy was certainly watching him. The only thing he could possibly do was to push open the door and walk in and see what happened after that.

Nothing happened. A sense that he had no time to waste all but betrayed him into a mistake. The project that was on the rails of his mind was the one he'd come up in the elevator with, namely to get out the window at the end of the corridor on to the fire escape, and he had his hand on the knob when the thought of something else halted him. The helpful beliboy who had remembered Rhoda had spoken of a stairway leading from the office up into Forster's apartment. He turned back at once and started through the suite of offices looking for it.

When he saw it going boldly up from the second room he enteredevidently the stenographers' room, since there were four typewriter desks in it—his first thought was that this was too easy to be true. It wasn't as easy as it looked, however, for he found at the head of it a solid mahogany door locked. It would take a competent burglar with a full set of tools to get in through that door, he thought despairingly. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

to others which have appeared in popular or pseudo-scientific journals, we are told that green and blue-green are quieting, blue sobering, purple repressing, yellow cheering, red and orange exciting or stimulating. It happens, however, that this sort of systematization is mostly what might be called boloney, with just enough basis of fact to make it seem sensible to the lay-

The supposition that red is generally exciting (based entirely on association) runs contrary to the affects of roses and many other flowers, not to mention the sunset. Red cloths excite the bull, but black cloths are just as efficacious, for to the bull red actually looks black. The conventional red signal checks the motorist and green stimulates him to go. The reverse system would work just as well, if it were conventional.

"Tall" Fish Story

A record kept by Thomas Boosey. of England, in 1834, tells of a fish that lived to be fifty-three years old, the Golden Book magazine reveals. "W. Hossop of Bond Hall, Furness," the record says, "placed a small feltback trout, about 53 years ago, when a boy, into a well in the orchard belonging to his family, where it remained ever since until last week. Then it died, not through sickness or infirmity, but for want of its natural element, water, the severe drouth drying up the spring that supplied the well. The trout's lips and gills were perfectly white. He regularly came to be fed by his master's hand when called by his name of Ned."

give the best results. "Moodiness is a thing that definitev endangers a woman's happiness." declares Anne Bryan McCall in the Woman's Home Companion. "It also harms her standing with others and menaces her usefulness. Moody people are untrustworthy and unaccountable to others. They are gay and friendly one day, and the next may be sullen or discouraged or morose. "Why do they indulge a characteristic so obviously to their own disadvantage? Almost invariably moodiness is the easy thing, the unadult thing, the undeveloped thing. If you carry the analysis further, you can hardly fail to see that it is also the primitive thing, the uncivilized thing, the savage thing, as a matter of fact moodiness and unreliability are outstanding traits of savage tribes.

"The person who is still behaving in uncivilized ways, ways of moodiness, is a person who is not keeping up with civilization. This is a person who is taking the easy childish way out. It is the person who is not developing and who no matter how upto-date she may think she is, is in a profound sense tragically behind the times."

The remedy, according to the psychologists, is for the victim of moodiness to ask herself the following questions every day, and answer them honestly: "How moody have I been today? How savage? How childish? How undeveloped? In short how inferior and backward a person have I been?"

Virtue in Many Things One Cannot Understand

"Science," said a traveler, "has at last come to recognize that there is truth in spiritualism, occultism, clairvoyance and many other old, magical, eastern things that we used to laugh at. "Once in Peru a friend of mine fell sick. The best doctors could do nothing for him, and one day his Indian servant brought to his bedside an Indian medicine man. "The Peruvian professor in charge of the case laughed at the medicine

"'You know nothing about medicine. You're a bluff,' he said.

"The medicine man opened his quaint sack, took a small dried leaf from it and handed it to the famous Lima doctor. 'Smell that,' he said calmly.

"The doctor smelt it and his nose began to bleed. It bled and bled. Nothing would stop it. Then the Indian took another dried leaf out. 'Now smell that.' And at once the bleeding was over.

"After this proof of his skill the Indian medicine man was allowed to prescribe for my dying friend. By Jove, he cured him in two days."

Railroad on Which No Christian May Travel

The world's strangest rail carrier, officially known as the Damascus-Medina-Hadj railroad, according to the Wall Street Journal, is to be rebuilt. At any rate, a petition to that effect is before the king of Hejas. The road, which was destroyed during the World war, began in, traversed and ended in Near East deserts, It carried no freight and its only passengers were pilgrims going to or returning from "making the Hadj," the hope of every religious Mohammedan. The Moslems are still "making the Hadj" but by foot, and they have tired of the exhausting trek.

The railroad was ordered by the sultan in 1908, paid for by the Mohammedans, designed by a German engineer, built by Italian, Polish, Hungarian, and Turk engineers using Italian, Greek, Turk and Montenegrin labor. Its rails were made in America, France and Belgium and its engines in Germany. In other to suit you, pump up the tire.

Trees for Iceland

Treeless Iceland is being made into wooded fastnesses through the wholesale transplanting of trees that are secured from the northern parts of Canada. The experiment, tried some time ago, has proved successful and the Canadian trees that have been shipped so far have been warmly appreciated and carefully attended and found to be ideal for the climate. Spruce, pine, tamarack and balsam are the varieties which have proven most successful. The ability to secure wood will mean much to the inhabitants of the island, and efforts are being made to secure funds for the purpose from humanitarians of other countries.

After traveling extensively in the British isles, where he observed the conversations of men and women, Justice Alfred H. Coulter returned to Belfast, Ireland, recently, and declared that he had learned that men are as great gossips as women. In a lecture he said that it was a mistake to think that only women gossiped, for he had found men who could "talk the heads off women."

Automatic Tire Pump

A tire pump built into bicycle wheels, that works automatically when the pressure falls below the full inflation point, is a recent German invention. A cam mounted on the hub operates the plunger of the pump, which is held down by a latch when the pressure is high enough, but released when the tire begins to go soft.
