Program Held Tonight

The Vacation Bible school presents it₅ commencement program at 7:30 p. m., Central time, at the M. E. burth Friday (tonight). The deceased was born near Port Huron. In his young manhood he moved with his parents to Wilber, Mich., and a few years later mar-AE church Friday (tonight). The Beginners and Primary de-partments give "A Morning in Va-cation Bible School." This includes the "Bluebird Welcome," "Returning Thanks," motion songs, and a dra-matization of the "Story of the Baby Moses." The dramatization is very interesting, as the little folks impersonate both the scenery and characters of the familiar Bible story, including the rushes which hid the baby safely, the wicked king, the mother and Miriam, the princess and her maids. by profession and a husband by avocation, is front-page copy for the Warsaw newspapers, and his genius deserves even wider attention. Although he is sixty-one years old and the owner both of a red beard and an ugly face, he has been married eight times and his offspring number 46.

When his eighth wife appeared be fore a magistrate recently in a plea for a divorce she brought with her five other wives, all undivorced, to aid her cause. But she did not consider that all were women of tender hearts and stanch attachment to her philandering mate. The moment Weidenberg was brought in all the former Mrs. Weidenbergs started a fight for him. During the scramble Weidenberg modestly disappeared and for all anybody knows is marrying again.

Decides to Travel.

Meantime, stories of his escapades lengthen. Forty-three years ago Weidenberg, then a youth of eighteen, resided in Warsaw as a tailor's apprentice, known among his chums as "Red' because of his flaming hair. He married Rebecca Frol and during seven years of wedlock five children were born.

Then he disappeared. All search for him was in vain and his wife and children suffered great need. Weidenberg had decided to travel. He went to Russia and after changing from the Jewish faith to Russian orthodox, he married a girl and hegat five children

WORLD WAR YARNS by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

"The Unknown Porter" Nearly every combatant nation in the World war has erected a monument to its Unknown Soldier and a British historian (Capt. B. H. Liddell Hart) has suggested that a "statue in Whitehall to the Unknown Porter is overdue." For it is easy to build up a chain of evidence that will prove that this Unknown Porter won the first Battle of the Marne, brought about the downfall of the German war plan and changed history.

It all came about when a British railway porter with a vivid imagination and no more evidence to back up his theory than the fact that the occupants of a troop train through England one night spoke an unfamiliar language started the rumor that a Russian expeditionary force was coming to the western front to help crush the Germans by a flank attack through Belgium. As a matter of fact the troops which the porter heard talking were Scotch and the language they spoke was Gaelic, but after the porter had spoken of his discovery, that busy old lady, Dame Rumor, did the rest. She had able allies, however, and those were the unspoken fears in the minds of the German commanders. During the drive towards Paris "they were constantly looking backward apprehensively over their right shoulders, fearful of an Allied stroke against their ever-lengthening communications in Belgium and northern France." The fertile brain of Winston Churchill was also busy. He had succeeded in having a brigade of British marines under Brigadier eneral Aston sent to Ostend and ordered that this move be given the fullest publicity. They stayed ashore only a few days, but they made themselves very much in evidence.

The final result was that the Germans became very nervous at a moment when a determined push would have won through to Paris. From the German supreme command came Colonel Hentsch to the "threatened" German flank army with the news that The English are disembarking fresh troops continuously on the Belgian coast. There are reports of a Russian expeditionary force in the same parts. A withdrawal is becoming inevitable." Gradually in the mind of the supreme command those 3,000 marines grew into 40,000 and the Russian numbered 80,000. So the withdrawal started, gathered momentum and speed and the Allies won the battle of the Marne.

The "Fast Mail" to Paris

Isolated instances have been noted in recent months where letters mails during the war-torn days of more than a dozen years ago are only now reaching their destinations. Such cases usually may be explained by shifting addresses or some other reason.

Delays during the war, however, were often not so easily excused as witness the correspondence received attorneys contended that Edna and in Paris from a soldier situated not Fred Schieck, children of the victim, more than 100 kilos away from that lost their opportunity to get a coldelightful haven of the war weary. lege education when their father was The writer, who evidently was familiar with the problem of getting for being deprived of the schooling. in and out of Paris, wrote as fol-Edna is nineteen and Fred sixteen.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.) RAVELING along a route made famous by Alexander the Great twenty-two and a half centuries ago, the Trans-Asia expedition has Just crossed isolated Afghanistan from west to east. The expedition, with which the National Geographic society is co-operating, found the caravan tracks in poor condition for wheeled vehicles in many places; but even the worst stretches were traversed with relative ease by the special cars equipped with a tanklike band drive in place of rear wheels.

The three major stops in Afghanistan were made at Herat, metropolis of the western part of the kingdom; Kandahar, in the south; and Kabul, the capital, in the east.

To locate distant Herat on the world map an American may start in known territory at Knoxville, Tenn. A line drawn due east will almost bisect Herat, seventy miles from the western Afghan border.

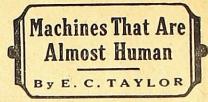

No one knows how long Herat has been dominating the broad plain in which it is situated. Remains of buildings strewns over the plain nearby were ancient to the ancients. Alexander the Great is credited with the building of the Herat walls. If that is a fact, Herat is at least two thousand two hundred and fifty years old. A sort of hub for caravan routes leading to many parts of central Asia, and one of the so-called doorways to India by land, Herat has been a tempting "plum" for rulers of nearby countries and imperial strategists of the eastern hemisphere bent upon annexing portions of southern Asia to their domains.

Herat Often Besieged and Taken.

As a result its 25-foot walls surmounted by 150 towers, have withstood many sieges, but it also has often fallen before attack. In the Thirteenth century Genghis Khan and his horde of Mongols swept down upon the city, leaving only a half hundred of its hundreds of thousands of inhabitants alive; and these survived only because they feigned death. One hundred and fifty years later Tamerlane, no less merciless, nearly duplicated the annihilation.

modern capital city which former King The Persians frequently took Herat and remained in control for many years at a time. Today Persian blood flows in the veins of about one-half of the Heratis. In 1837, some 35,000 during past centuries, are carried on Persians set out to take Herat. After in old Kabul. a siege of 'ten months, the Heratis,

The Wireless Light

T WILL not be many years, scientists predict, before we will go home, press a button, and a crystal globe, having no wires inside or out, will cast a pleasant light in our homes.

This wireless light is now a fact, and is used in several robots that surprise us by their human-like performances.

The new wireless light loooks like a crystal sphere when not lighted. It has no filament inside it to burn up and break, and has no metal inside or out. It contains gases rendered highly luminous by a high frequency electric current in a near-by coil of wire. In homes of the future mechanical age, these coils could be placed in the walls, and no lighting apparatus or wires, only the crystal lighting globes, would be exposed.

One of these wireless lights, a huge one, operated by radio, recently was mounted on a tower in Schenectady, N. Y., and it threw off sufficient light to read a newspaper two miles away. These wonder lights cost little and give off almost no heat.

The new magic lights are similar to the neon tubes used for the new type of outdoor advertising lights, but cast a soft glow instead of the glaring red or blue of the neon outdoor tubes. The neon tubes need wires, but the magic light has no wires, and the crystal globes could be carried from one place to another and set down where one wants it.

This magic wireless light utilizes the principle of the ordinary electric doorbell, where by pressing a button, a current of electricity is sent through a coil which repeatedly pulls a hammer that rings the bell.

Scientists discovered that in the neighborhood of a rapidly changing magnetic field, electrons in a gascharged bulb started first one way and then another, thus producing light. The wireless light can be used only in proximity to changing magnetic coils. For home lighting these coils would be placed in walls, and they could be started agitating by pressing a button, just as the doorbell is made o ring.

This principle of magnetic coils is used to make a robot work in the United States government assay office in New York city. That robot literally picks gold out of the air.

A considerable quantity of gold formerly was lost in the fumes that passed off during the smelting process in the assay office.

Now these fumes are forced to rise between two metal plates. These plates are charged with a high voltage electric current. The gold particles in the fumes become electrified and settle on the near-by electrodes. Then they are shaken into a collecting chamber below.

Hundreds of ounces of gold, worth many thousands of dollars, have been recovered in this way by the robot. Another magnetic robot now used by railroads detects broken rails and prevents accidents.

The robot is housed on a small car

Lips and Eyes Tested as Keys to Character

Oxford, England .- The theory that lips and eyes are a key to vocation and character, suggested by Professor Bettmann, the Heidelberg dermatologist, was tested at a gathering at an Old Students' reunion at Oxford university. Many men distinguished in different walks of life were chosen for the test. It was found that while there was some link between certain features and character, the theory appeared correct only in the generalized sense, but there was one exception. The legal profession, it was found, had one predominating facial feature-the thin lip.

Professor Bettman maintains that deep thinkers have the thinnest lips.

War Lord Explains the Aerophone

General Minani, Japanese minister of war, explaining the workings of the aerophone, an innovation in the Japanese army, to members of parliament.

"The attached envelope postmarked Paris, April 21, was received by me today, May 1.

"It contained a letter dated April 21 which acknowledged receipt on April 19 of my letter dated April 10. "While I can readily understand the difficulty of transportation between here and that far-distant city of delight, I have found it more difficult to get there than to get away.

"The fact that an efficient postal service can deliver a letter in nine days in a place I have been unable to reach in three months should, of course, not be overlooked and is fully appreciated.

"I cannot, however, understand why it should require an extra day in returning. Only nine days to go, but ten days to come back. I suggest an investigation."

Army records fail to reveal if his suggestion was complied with.

"When Will the War End?"

Who wrote it or where it came from, nobody knows. But it became a "classic" which went the rounds of the newspapers, and, like the famous "Litany of the Poilu," was a little flash of humor that lightened somewhat the burden of many in those tragic days. Because of that and because it reflected somewhat the "smile-smile-smile" philosophy that made the war endurable, it deserves to be preserved. So here it is:

with the help of British forces, defeated the Persians. Herat then became an independent city, but in 1861 a quarrel between the rulers of Herat and Afghanistan resulted in the city's passing of the latter.

Despite frequent revolts and attacks, Herat continues to rank with the greet cities of central Asia. Frequent rebuilding of the city within the walls has brought little change to its people and daily life. No railroad approaches nearer than 80 miles; the telegraph key has never clicked within the city's walls. Unsightly ancient graveyards outside the walls have been put in order, new defense works have been built, and a new extension of the city with broad streets flanked by modern shops is rising outside of the north wall; but the original moat, 45 feet wide and 16 feet deep, still is there today as it was centuries ago. Inside the walls Heratis live in low mud and sun-dried brick buildings as did their ancestors. The streets are mere passageways. They are playgrounds for children and stages for debate by bewhiskered, beturbaned men. Some of the streets are covered to keep out the sun. One chronicler was not far wrong when he compared them with rabbit warrens. Hard Route to Kandahar.

South and east of Herat the expedition encountered difficult terrain over which few motor cars have passed. Many swift streams had to be forded and three mountain ranges crossed. The only major river encountered, the Helmand, had to be crossed by means of an ancient ferry. The transfer of the 21 cars, trailers and trucks across the Helmand consumed two days.

To Kandahar, important trade center of southern Afghanistan, caravan roads converge from several gateways into Persia from Turkestan, from Herat and Kabul in Afghanistan, and from Baluchistan and India. Geography has given it trade value for two millenniums.

The town lies on a level plain between two rivers, the Tarnak and Arghandib. To the north and northeast lie barren hills, but south and west of the city the plain is irrigated by numerous canals and is highly productive and thickly settled. This irrigated land about Kandahar is one of the best fruit growing regions of the Middle East. Peaches, apricots, grapes, figs, melons, and pomegranates grow to perfection. Fruits, both fresh and on the floor. Saw off its legs!"

Kabul Big and Busy.

Kabul is one of the three of the least known capitals in the world today. The others are Lhasa, capital of Tibet, and Riad, capital of the newly recognized country, Nedj, in central Arabia. Kabul granted the Trans-Asia expedition permission to enter, but customarily it hangs out no "welcome" signs to visitors, distinguished or otherwise. The Afghan capital, like the rest of the Asian monarchy of which it is the largest city, asks little from the outside world, and would like the attitude reciprocated. Yet Kabul is far from crude or primitive. It has electric lights from a hydroelectric power plant, telephones, many automobiles but few roads, machine shops, munitions works, and factories for making soap, shoes, and cloth, all built under English supervision. Its tanneries, established through the co-operation of outside experts, are sources of especial pride:

Kabul itself is a busy city of about 100,000 people. One can only guess at the population because the single effort at a census failed before the innate exclusiveness of the Afghan. Rather than tell their names and ages so many Kabul residents either left the city or hid away that business was disrupted and the census was abandoned. Kabul's flat-roof dwellings rise in sweeping tiers from the banks of the Kabul river to sun-parched foothills, 7,000 feet above the sea, higher than the peak of Mt. Mitchell, loftiest of the Appalachian chain. The peaks of the Hindu Kush, three times as high, jut into the skyline not far away. Hence its winters are cold and its summers mild.

Piano players and phonographs give the ear an inkling of the home life of Afghanistan's capital-a home life which is screened from the eye by interminable mud walls. Probably nowhere in the East is the seclusion of women more complete than in Kabul. The extent of man's walls is the barometer of his social station. When a western idea finally reaches the Kabul home the impact often leaves a strange anticlimax. The story is told of one wealthy Kabulian who would have nothing less than a grand piano in his home. After many months it arrived, but minus a bench for the player. "That's all right," said the purchaser. "I'm accustomed to sitting resembling a handcar, that is towed slowly over the rails. As it passes along the rails it sends an electric current through the rails directly beneath the car.

When a break in a rail is encountered, the current is interrupted, and the robot squirts a dab of paint on the spot where the break is indicated.

This device detects flaws of so minute a nature that they could not be seen by the human eye. Countless railroad accidents have been averted by the use of the robot.

The magic light is helping to perfect television, that remarkable device that brings pictures of actual events along with sound over the radio. Scientists have progressed so far in this, that six-foot screens have replaced the fourteen-inch screens of a short time ago, and many more persons now can see the radio talkies and movies than formerly. With a development of the new magic light, it is predicted that two-way television will be speeded. Demonstrations already have been made, showing both parties to a telephone conversation, and it will not be long, say scientists, before you can see the person you are talking to over the telephone. You also will be seen, though. (@, 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Best Wood for Chessmen

The forest products laboratory says that the best chessmen are probably made from genuine boxwood. This wood is imported in relatively small quantities because of its scarcity and high price. It probably can be readily had, however, in the small sizes required for chessmen. West Indian boxwood should also be suitable for chessmen. The wood is much more common and is considerably lower in price. Among American species holly is probably best suited for chessmen. This wood is light colored, rather heavy, and quite hard. It carves well and takes a smooth finish.

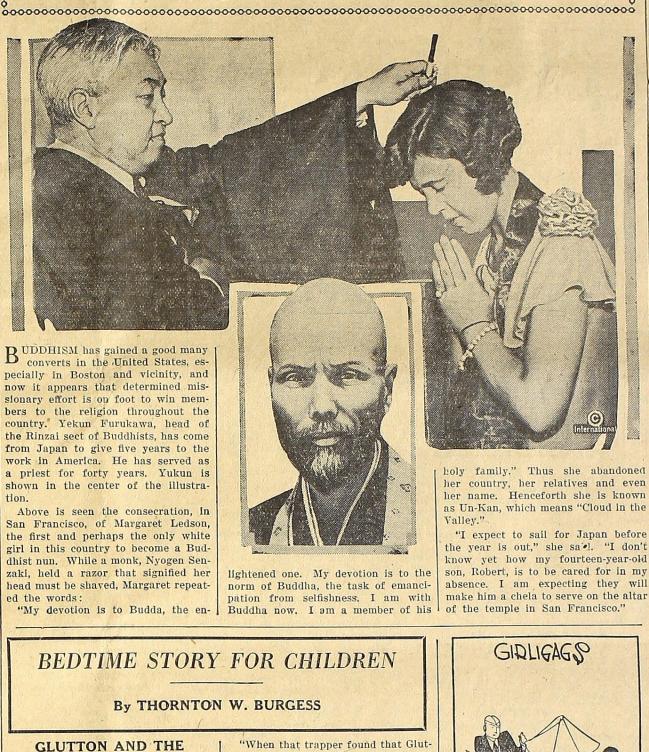

Opera Stars' Pay Limited

Opera stars of Germany are to receive not more than $160 a night nor more than $6,500 a year, according to a recent decision of the German Stage society. This limitation of compensation is caused by the bad financial condition of most German operas. It is feared, however, that famous foreign artists will refuse to appear in Germany at these rates.

THE old-fashioned dish which has L been called various names, comes down to us as the Squaw Dish.

Cook together small new potatoes, new onions, carrots and peas, adding each in time so that they will all be tender at once. Add one-half cupful of diced browned salt pork cut into small cubes with the fat, a pint of milk and pepper and salt if needed. Serve in vegetable dishes.

Codfish a la Mode.

Flake one cupful of codfish that has been soaked in cold water. Mix the fish with two cupfuls of mashed potatoes, two cupfuls of rich milk and add two well-beaten eggs. Season well and pile into a well-greased baking dish. Bake 25 minutes. To brown, brush with melted butter the last five minutes of baking. Serve hot from the baking dish.

Cook a fried egg in a greased frying pan, adding a tablespoonful of water; cover and steam in the pan.

Eggs in Peppers.

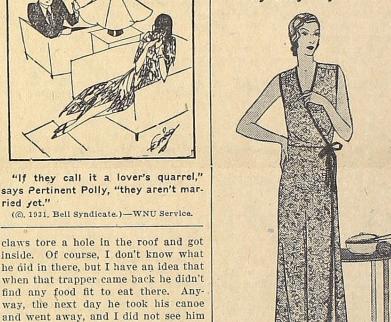

Cut a thin slice from the stem end of peppers and take out the seeds. Drop an egg into each and bake until the eggs are set. Serve well seasoned with butter, salt and pepper, on buttered toast.

For a quick luncheon on a hot day beat the yolk of an egg, add a glass of orange juice and serve very cold.

World Follows Lindy's Exploits

Plans for Trip to Orient Interest All Peoples

Washington .- Where Lindbergh goes the world's imagination follows-an axiom of American journalism-has received new confirmation incidental to announcement of the aviator's plan for a flight to Japan and China.

Over four years have elapsed since Lindbergh "hopped off" from Roosevelt field for the first successful nonstop flight to Paris. The tremendous interest that attended his trans-Atlantic flight has persisted during successive years, owing to a well timed series of aerial accomplishments. These have belied any possibility that the first transcendental exploit was mere-Ly the result of luck.

In four years since he startled the world he has been the object of attempted exploitation in every field, despite which he still is best identified for his contributions to aviation.

After his return to the United States in 1927 he soon embarked on a nation-wide tour, under auspices of the Goggenheim foundation, which aimed to build up popular interest in aviation-in a word, to help make the pub-Lic "air minded." This eventful and safe tour was estimated of great importance as an encouragement to commercial aviation.

His next great effort, semidiplomat-1c in character, was a "good will trip" to Mexico and countries in the Caribbean region.

Lindbergh's next important contribution to the progress of aviation was as consultant engineer in the projection of transcontinental joint air and mail service, which was inaugurated successfully.

In 1929 Lindbergh piloted the inauguration of an air line down the Antilles to Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, on the north coast of South America. In the next year Lindbergh had a new thrill in store for the country, a 20 seconds, at an average of 180 miles per hour, beating the previous record of Capt. Frank M. Hawks by 2 hours 52 minutes and 44 seconds. The Lindberghs' transcontinental flight was made at high altitude, from 10,000 to 15,000 feet, and for the announced purpose, "to test the theory that airplane speed and efficiency are to be sought above storm areas, in rare atmosphere." This achievement kept the Lind-berghs at the peak of national esteem, from a technical as well as popular standpoint. It proved to aviation authorities that Lindbergh was not inclined to "stand still" in his profession, but disposed to press onward for new successes which would be of practical value to aviation.

Aviation experts now are convinced that Lindbergh's far eastern flight aims at specific technical results of which the public has not yet been fully apprised. The flight, therefore, ancestry would naturally include the riffraff that came over with the Pilgrim fathers and those ne'er-do-wells who ultimately developed into the first families of Virginia. I've never gone into the matter, but that's what he said, and I have no doubt that it is true, though I can't see that it is any credit to us. I've never been interested in any great degree in my own ancestry. His father is president of the Jones Manufacturing company, and his mother, the daughter of the head of our leading bank here. "And the boy?" I ask. "What about the boy?" "Why, I don't know so much about the boy. I guess he's all right."

"But you see it's the boy we have to do business with; it isn't his ancestors."

"Well, I hope you'll give him a chance.'

And the boy himself, though he has nade a failure of a very easy job, some way feels that because his grandfather was a successful business man he should be given special consideration. He looked upon his ancestors as an asset and not as an obligation. (C). 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Fall Fairs of Benefit to Dairy Cattle Breeders.

Comparative judging of live stock brings out the weak as well as the strong points of the animal judged and helps the breeder to develop a better grade of stock.

"This is one reason why we advise breeders of dairy cattle to exhibit their animals at the fall fairs," says John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist. "The show ring is a good place for breeders of pure-bred cattle to compare the merits of their animals. Add ed to this is the advertising value of a good fair exhibit, which often results in many sales of breeding stock.

Mr. Arey suggests that dairy breeders prepare for showing at least two months before the cattle are to be exhibited. This amount of time is necessary to fit and properly train the cattle, even when in good condition to start with. Each animal should be taught to lead well; to stand squarely on its feet, and hold up its head. Animals that are not well trained and properly fitted usually receive low placings, though they may be good individuals.

It is not difficult to fit an animal for the ring, if it has received good care and feed. Plenty of balanced grain and a mixed hay is needed for feeding. If the hair is long, the animal should be clipped all over six weeks before the first show. Washing about once a week improves the condition of both hide and hair. Neat, shapely horns add much to the appearance. It is also advisable to brush and rub the animal each day. This gives a glossy appearance to the hair. Mr. Arey further suggests that the switch be washed clean and braided up and plays fine. Sets are offered the night before the show. Combed for sale which are supposed to be out the next morning it gives a striking, fluffy appearance.

Above all, he concludes, be courteous and a good sportsman.

Photographic Perfection "camera-mirror" which reflects a person's image as that image will appear when photographed has been invented by Dr. Peter Schlumbohm, a Berlin chemist, and is expected to become a useful adjunct to photography, especially to film production. The mirror is based on the principle that the camera's eye takes in only a certain part of the light spectrum, giving a different tone in a photograph from the image as it appears in natural light. Doctor Schlumbohm has produced a special glass which reflects the same tones as a camera; the tones which do

POTPOURRI Heat

Heat results from the agitation of molecules of which every substance consists. Most of this earth's heat comes directly or indirectly from the sun, and all life depends on it. The sun has an estimated temperature of 10,-000 degrees (F.) and if it should cool all life would eventually cease to exist and the earth would become cold like the moon.

Care of Pails and Cans Normally, milk pails and cans are not used immediately after washing, They are "enerally set away to drain and to dry for a time. This is all right, especially if they are thoroughly dried, for bacteria cannot grow and multiply where there is no moisture. They need air, moisture and food for their growth, the same as other plant life. Remove any one of these factors, and the germs cannot multiply. The important thing for the dairyman wl sells milk or cream or converts these products into butter or cheese on his own farm is to provide a convenient place and an abur 'nce of hot water for washing and rinsing all utensils. Unless this is done, will be difficult to produce a superior product.

Pasture Not Sufficient Dairy calves under six months old will not do well on pasture. It takes some time to develop the digestive sys-tem of a calf sufficiently to enable it to get a large proportion of needed nutrients from roughage. Grass is a succulent roughage relatively high in water content and therefore relatively low in nutrient content for its bulk. It takes some time for calves to learn to graze pasture grass to the extent that they are able to satisfy their requirements from this bulky roughage. There is advantage in giving calves a grass paddock for exercise but one should not depend on the grass to supply any great portion of needed nu-

CHAPTER XII—Continued -12-

Forster was still in his swivel chair sitting almost as he had sat when Martin looked at him before, but in the act of relaxing back into it as if he had just meant to get up and then had changed his mind. The Cleveland woman had only that moment seated herself in a chair at the end of the desk which faced the fireplace and the two watchers behind the glass.

"She's looking wicked," Martin commented. "What do you suppose she's up to?"

Rhoda squeezed his hand hard and said, "Don't talk! Listen!" And though this struck him as absurd, her earnestness enforced obedience.

The woman was worth watching, anyhow. It was his first good look at her. She was dressed as she'd been when he'd seen her descend upon Max and Babe in the station that afternoon. She had put on her hat and coat since leaving Max Lewis' sitting room, and as she sat down in the chair she opened her wrist bag before she put it down in her lap. There was something so insolently and viciously feline in her look-like a cat with its ears back-that Martin didn't wonder at old Forster's cringing in his chair and shooting a look at the picture behind which he must still suppose his spy to be on watch.

However, if she had a revolver in the bag she was content to leave it there for the present. What she produced from it now was a long amber cigarette holder and a package of. cigarettes, one of which, very deliberately but with rather shaky hands, she proceeded to light. It appeared that these preliminaries irritated Forster, for he spoke with an impatient jerk of the head, telling her, no doubt, to state her business and be quick about it.

Her only response to this was a theatrical laugh, not very convincing, and an elaboration of the processes of making herself comfortable in the chair. When presently she did begin to talk, it was with an effectation of lazy good humor, her eyes not upon him but upon the shred of blue smoke from the cigarette.

But it was Forster's face that Martin's gaze rested upon. He appeared at first to be genuinely, even blankly, puzzled as to what the woman was getting at, and he broke in upon her two or three times with sharp impatient questions to which she paid no ttention whatever continuing to eve the cigarette and to go evenly on with her narrative, if that were what it was. But it wasn't long before Forster's appearance changed. His body was rigid in his easy chair, and the laugh by which he attempted to dismiss something she said as an absurdity was a ghastly failure. Now though, Martin's attention was sharply diverted from both actors in the play to a sob from Rhoda. Turning to her in consternation he saw her trying vainly to blink away the tears that were blurring her vision, She said furiously when he asked her what the matter was, "Don't talk! Give me a handkerchief, if you've got one." He had a fresh one in his pocket and he was handing it over to her with dignity, inclined to feel a little hurt by the way she was treating him, when, with a suddenness that literally almost took him off his feet, she flung herself upon him, put her head down upon his chest, and hug ged him as hard as she could. This a mazing and blissful state of things last ed while she was drawing about three long breaths and then, just as sudden ly, she went, so to speak, into reverse again, flung herself away from him, snatched his handkerchief, dried herr eyes, and began watching the scende through the glass with the most intrense concentration. The woman had abarhdoned her affectation of lazy amus ement and at something he must have said to her, had burst into a rage. She had sprung fairly pouring to her feet and was h vituperation over him by the bucketful. It was plain that the was terrified of her. If she'd been less absorbed in her own passion, 5 she must have seen that he was signaling for help, for, feebly but with n o concealment at all, he was looking and waving his shaky hand straight toward where Martin and Rhoda stood. There was a comic element in this scene which Martin htad been enjoying, but now the woman made a move which startled him. She stepped back out of the possible re ach of Forster's hand and, snatching up her wristbag from the corner of the desk, jerked it open. open. "If she's got a gun ir i that bag she'll shoot him," Martin sais i to Rhoda, and would have jumped for the little door m if she hedn't which led into the roe² m if she hadn't stopped him by clutch, ing his arm.

would shoot him, though. I'd like to myself. He deserves it."

She had told what the woman's intentions were with a degree of confidence that was almost convincing. All the same it struck Martin as rather uncanny when seconds after Rhoda had finished speaking he saw Claire actually produce a letter from her wristbag, and, still taking care to keep out of Forster's reach, began reading it aloud to him.

"Rhoda, darling," he cried, "how did you know she was going to do that?" She stood looking at him now, face flushed, eyes bright with tears, leaving the scene they had been watching so intently to play itself out unregarded. 'I know all about it now." She stood wavering a moment and then came into his arms again, clinging to him, her face buried against his chest. He couldn't make out the muffled words very well, but he thought she was saying, "Aren't you glad we know? Aren't you glad the nightmare's over?"

Mystified, but none the less blissful, he said he was, and as he bent down over her she held up her face for his kiss with a simplicity that brought unexpected tears into his own eyes. This was something settled, anyhow, for good.

A raucous voice now broke in upon them-Conley's! declaring with profane elaborations that he would be d-d. They'd forgotten his very existence and had allowed him to come to. There could be no doubt of his intentions, particularly toward Martin, as he came bounding up the steps toward them, but an outcry and a gesture from Rhoda deflected his attention toward what was happening in the big room. Forster, rummaging desperately with his half palsied hands in the shallow drawer of his desk, had pulled out a long-barreled, old-fashioned revolver, and when, directed by Rhoda's cry, they looked, they saw the old man trying to point it at Claire. She flung herself upon him and grappled with him for the possession of it. This was a clear call of professional duty for the detective and he abandoned, though with visible reluctance, the private project with Martin to go to the rescue, springing down the steps and bursting open the door beside the fireplace just as the old-fashioned revolver, with a prodigious bang, went off.

> CHAPTER XIII The Frame-Up

said. "That's the conspiracy you went into with Claire Cleveland-only she was called Clara Bowman then-and the man who was your secretary-I think his name was Stafford." Martin held his breath as he looked from one of their faces to the other. "You don't know what you're talking about." Forster wheezed. But the consternation in his face proclaimed that she did know. "You had your secretary hire her," Rhoda went on. "That's why you didn't know who she was when she came back here and got a job in your office. You didn't know that Stafford had told her who you were. And when he died you thought you were safe. You thought you didn't have to pay the money you'd promised her for ruining my father." She turned away from him as if the sight of his goat-like face had become unendurable to her, and went on speaking to Martin. "That's what he did. They hired this woman-Stafford found her-to go west on the same train my father was going on. She was to cry and pretend she'd lost her ticket and her money, and get him to take pity on her and pay her fare. They must have known how kind he was and how innocent he was or they wouldn't have thought the trick would work. It did work, partly. He paid for the ticket and her berth and loaned her some money besides to buy her meals with on the train. The rest of the plan didn't work. He didn't even look at her. She said so herself tohim, just now. He never even guessed what she was trying to make him do. But she went ahead just the same-I suppose they'd promised her more money-and made her complaint before the district attorney. And she testified against him at the trial, only the jury didn't believe her and set father free. But enough other people believed her so that he had to resign from the university and come out here, like a man in hiding, to go to work, without knowing it, for the very man who had ruined him." She whipped around upon Forster again, her eyes blazing with furious anger. "I wish she had shot you, instead !" she told him deliberately. "I wish she'd shot you dead. You deserve it, if anyone ever did." She happened to be standing, without knowing it, almost over the revolver, where she had only to stoop to pick it up. Forster knew it, though. He was staring at the thing in a perfect nightmare of terror. Rhoda, pulled up by the look in his face, followed the direction of his stare and glanced down too to see what he was looking at. That glance was all it needed to demolish him completely. He flopped out of his chair and sprawled down upon his knees on the carpet, holding out his palsied hands, imploring mercy "Wait!" he pleaded. "Wait! I'll tell you all about it. It isn't what you think. It's nowhere near as bad as you think. I didn't mean him any real harm. I thought he'd thank me for it."

Rhoda went a little whiter and turned her face away. "Do you mind picking him up, Martin, and putting him back in his chair?" she asked. Martin, feeling in his bewilderment like a man in a dream, tugged away and finally managed to haul the poor old ruin back into his chair again. It must have been a minute before the make him a rich man." "You didn't make his fortune, though," Martin said. "Why not? How did you trick him out of it?"

"I didn't trick him out of it," Forster answered, with more assurance than he'd shown before. "I gave him a perfectly fair contract. I fitted up a laboratory for him, paid all his bills for supplies, and gave him a hundred dollars a week in cash for his personal expenses. I kept that up for four years. It must have cost me altogether forty or fifty thousand dollars. He was always just going to find the thing he needed to make his discovery practical, but he never did."

Rhoda flashed into the scene. "Then why did you offer Claire Cleveland one hundred thousand dollars just now for the contract you made with my father?"

Forster had to gulp twice before he could answer. "I didn't mean anything they left the room. "She's got a bullet hole through her cheek and she's lost a couple of teeth, but that's all the damage." In his excitement he neglected to close the door, and the departing pair, before they rode down in the little private elevator, were able to hear how the old man took the news.

"That means more blackmail," he wailed. "Where's Max? He'll have to get me out of this."

Down in the lobby Martin and Rhoda paused. Knowing how tired she was and what a storm she'd been through, he felt that he couldn't bear to tell her she must come with him now to the railway station in the hope that they wouldn't be too late to prevent Max from making off again with that trunk of hers.

Luckily she spoke first. "I don't think I want to go home," she said. 'We'd better telephone Babe and let her know we're all right. She won't know what has become of us."

This was an obvious duty, and as five minutes wasn't likely to matter much, now, one way or the other at the railway station, Martin assented. Rhoda gave him something else to think about when she paused outside the door of a booth she'd been on the point of entering and asked him to telephone instead. She looked awfully white.

"Rhoda, are you all right?" he demanded earnestly. He must have shouted it rather, for a man turning the leaves of a directory at the desk looked up curiously at the pair of them. He went on, speaking lower, "I mean, are you faint or anything?" She said she wasn't. She juşt didn't feel like talking to Babe. She'd sit in that big chair over there and wait for him. She gave him their telephone number just before she walked away in case he'd forgotten it.

The promptness with which Babe answered the call suggested that she'd been sitting within hand's reach of the instrument ever since Martin had left her, and indeed she assured him passionately that this had been the case. She'd been having a perfectly rotten evening, she said. She'd been obliged to break an awfully good date in order to stand by the telephone, and then Max Lewis had come and really acted rough. She'd had to threaten to telephone for the police in order to get rid of him.

"What did he want with you?" Martin demanded. "Naturally," said Babe, "he wanted his ticket and his trunk check." "But he had them," Martin told her. "He took the envelope out of my pocket an hour ago, after he'd knocked me cold with a crack in the jaw."

"Well, he didn't think he had them fifteen minutes ago when he left here," she assured him.

"Wait a minute," Martin said, and laid down the receiver for a search of his pockets. "It's all right," he told Babe a minute later. "Tve got them. What he got out of my pocket was your dummy envelope. the one you fooled him with in the first place. I don't wonder he looked sick. Well, don't worry about us any more," he concluded, "and don't expect us till we turn up."

"How long is it," he asked Rhoda when he went back to her, "since you've had anything to eat?"

"I don't know," she told him absently. "Not since I had lunch at the Tip-Top inn. I don't remember whether

"Warm" Corpse Too Much for Nerves of Ghouls

About one hundred years ago a gentleman, well known for the mad pranks in which he delighted, was walking past a lonely kirkyard in Midlothian when he saw a well-ap pointed horse and trap standing un attended before the gate. Curious to know what this might mean, he crouched in the ditch by the wall and waited.

In a few moments two men came out of the kirkyard carrying in a sack a long object which they propped up on end on the seat next to the driver's. Then they said something about tools and went back. Quick as thought the watcher pulled down the sack, emptied its grisly contents into the ditch, climbed into the trap, got into the sack, and braced himself stiffly into position. Hardly had he done so when the two men returned and threw some tools into the trap, after which one got up in front and the other on the back seat. "Wud" as he was, our adventurer now began to repent of his hastiness, reflecting that one corpse was as good as another on the dissecting table, where, in those days, questions were by no means always asked. Suddenly the driver turned to his mate, and in accents of crawling horror gasped, "Mon, Jamie, the corp's warm !" The "corp' had presence of mind enough to moan in a hollow tone, "We're all warm where I come from." There were two wild yells, the springs of the trap bounced furiously, the horse broke into a gallop. and when he got out of his sack the gentleman found himself alone, heading for Edinburgh at a great pace. The horse, trap, harness and tools served him well for many years and no one ever claimed them .- Edinburgh Scotsman.

Sermon Much Easier to Write Than to "Cover" Before ex-Congressman John Finerty became famous as the great American British-lion-tail-twister, he was one of the best reporters in Chicago. He was on the Tribune, and one day a certain city editor (best known to fame as the man who always wore a straw hat and smoked a corncob pipe) decided that Mr. Finerty should be "disciplined."

It was Saturday and some time after midnight. Mr. Finerty was assigned to report the morning sermon of an obscure minister way down on the South side. Finerty was the senior, and his associates were thunderstruck. They expected an explo sion at least, but Finerty remained calm and dignified, although a trifle pale. "Then he will resign," they thought; but Finerty walked out and made no sign. To the surprise of every one, he reported the next day as usual, and turned in an abstract of the sermon. Every one read it on Monday morning, and it was certainly an eloquent and carefully reported sermon. That afternoon a man of clerical cut called on the city editor and asked to see the young man who had reported his sermon the morning before. Mr. Finerty was introduced. The man of the clerical cut would like to see Mr. Finerty alone for a

Prehistoric Mining

Evidences that man had reached a well-developed stage of mining activity even when mastodons and other prehistoric animals roamed the earth have been found through reports of the discovery of a series of ancient mine workings in Natal, South Africa. The character of the mine workings, as reported to Assistant Trade Commissioner Du-Wayne Clark at Johannesburg, indicates that they were being operated before the arrival of the Zulu nations in South Africa.

Rhoda confirmed that with a nod before she went on. "But then you told her to send for it. You said, Send for whatever you've got and have it brought up here just as it is.' That meant my trunk, I suppose, that you thought she'd stolen. You told her to send any messenger she liked; you told her to send your nephew Max. You said he'd been doing odd jobs for her lately and that he knew his way around her flat. You were trying to make her angry, but you held your breath while you waited to see whether she would send for the trunk or not?" Forster turned to Martin as one who makes another appeal to reason. "Why would I hold my breath? I knew she hadn't any contract. I knew the man who did have it. I'd seen him just this afternoon. I told him it wasn't worth a nickel, just like I told her."

There was a kink in this, Martin perceived, but he hadn't time now to try to straighten it out. He turned to Rhoda, meaning to suggest casually

'No, she won't," she³ told him. "It's a letter she's looking i for. I wish she

The report of the revolver was followed instantly by a scream from Claire. Rhoda and Martin, after exchanging one horrified look, followed Conley through the door, which he'd left open behind him. Claire lay on the floor moaning, apparently unconscious, her face so covered with blood that it wasn't possivie , see the exact nature of the wound. The revolver, a blue filament of smoke still rising from its barrel, lay on the carpet three of four paces away. Foster had fallen back limply in his chair. Evidently he thought he'd killed her, for he was bleating frantically, 'I didn't do it ! She did it herself! She pulled the trigger !" His voice rose to a yelp as he cried to Conley, "Take her away! Don't leave her lying there! Take her where I can't see her."

Conley picked her up in a matterof-fact sort of way which led Martin to think that he'd come to the same conclusion as his own, that she was not dangerously injured. Martin opened the door for him, but as soon as he'd gone out with his burden. closed it after him and turned back to Forster. The old man looked from one to the other of them in bewilderment, and at last weakly demanded of Martin, "Who are you? What are you doing here?"

"I'm the reporter from the News, Martin said, "who wanted an interview from you about the disappearance of Rhoda McFarland. I came up to your apartment and found her here. We happened to be where we could see everything that's gone on in this room since that woman Conley just carried out came into it."

"More blackmail!" Forster snared. "It's a conspiracy, that's what it is. You are all in it."

He looked as he said that like not ing in the world but a rat in a corner, darting helpless venomous glances this way and that; toward the picture over the fireplace, behind which he knew his bodyguard was no longer on watch; toward the closed door through which no cry of his could be heard; even toward the revolver lying on the carpet, hopelessly out of his reach.

So I saw him after the meeting and talked to him. I had Stafford with me and we came back with him as far as Chicago. Spent most of the night trying to get him to listen to reason. Here he was on the edge of a thing that might be worth millions to him personally, to say nothing of anybody else, and he was getting ready to broadcast it. I wanted him to leave the university and let me fit him up a laboratory. I'd pay all the expenses of his research and give him a contract that would make his fortune as soon as he had the thing on a practical basis.

"I never saw anybody as stubborn as he was. He'd hardly listen. Practically told me to go to h-1. He said the university had financed his researches up to now and it would be disloyal to leave them. It didn't do any good to talk big figures to him. He didn't know what money was about. He was throwing away a fortuneanyway that's how it looked at the time-like giving a nickel to a newsboy. I was about ready to quit, but Stafford had an idea.

"I don't say it was a very nice idea, but your father hadn't left us anything else we could do. Stafford said if there should happen to be some little scandal out at the university so that McFarland would resign, he'd probbly come back to us. "Well, that's all. He went ahead
