(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THIOPIA (Abyssinia), which has itherto got along without a money of its own, is taking steps toward establishing a currency and coinage system on a gold basis. Most of the citizens are now using for their purchases bars of salt, rifle cartridges, and even empty bottles and tin cans. The money necessary in international dealings has been furnished in limited supply by Maria Theresa Thalers, introduced a number of years ago from Austria, and by a small amount of paper money issued by a branch of the National Bank of Egypt established in Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia. This bank is to be purchased by the Ethiopian government as a first step in its program to set up a currency and coinage system.

When Ethiopia issues her first bank notes and certificates, these bits of inked paper will represent the latest link in the very long chain of the evo-lution of money. In earliest times man traded or bartered one product or article for another. But the need for a common denominator of value became apparent even with the first glimmerings of civilization. The skins of animals served in this way when man was still a hunter, while shells became the first money of tribes living near the sea. When man settled down and became an agriculturist or a herdsman, grain and cattle came into use as his measures of values. The ox was "big money," the sheep "small change."

There were certain disadvantages in using live stock as money. For one thing, it might walk away in the night; for another, it consumed much provender. There were difficulties about very small change for the purchase of such edibles as kettles of fish and messes of pottage.

The human geography of the Near East, which had been pastoral, about this time got an industrial urge. A way had been found of extracting a metal from the earth of the island of Cyprus, handily set in the eastern Mediterranean. The Romans later twisted the name of this island in such a way that the modern word "copper" was derived from it.

How Copper Became Money.

Copper pots began to appeal, and. like cattle, were universally prized. Merchants would exchange whatever they had in their stalls for copper pots, and the demand for them was more nearly universal than for any other object. The copper pot was, therefore, money.

Then into this region came one imbued with an idea of importance. Instead of presenting pots for use in facilitating barter, he would tender the copper of which they were made. He would offer it in a convenient form, made up into a strip which he called obolus. No definite idea of its size survives, but it was said that six made a handful. The obolus marked a great advance toward the use of coin.

The scene shifted to the west. Italy, as it awoke from barbarism, adopted a unit of copper as a measure of value. It called the unit as, a Roman pound of 12 unciae, or ounces, and it came into general use.

Copper served the purpose of money because of its intrinsic value. The as had the value of a pound of copper. Human nature being the same then as now, it soon came to pass that people made the as in a weight a little less than a pound and profited to the extent of the metal thus saved. They learned to mix certain quantities of baser and cheaper metals with the copper and their currency deteriorated.

Thus a step toward the development of actual money was forced on the nations. Governing powers found it necessary to step into the breach, to test metals used as money, to put their stamps guaranteeing quality and weight upon them, and by this avenue copper coins arrived.

As the centuries passed in the Mediterranean area, copper became plentiful and its purchasing power decreased.

Rome was getting much of the earth of Cyprus. Thus it developed that an average householder of ancient Rome, going to market to buy for a feast day, would need to pack a donkey to bear the weight of the copper for his shop-

The Invisible Policeman

R ECENTLY in New York city a $50 bill was offered to any person who could pick it up without causing an invisible policeman to sound an alarm. No one got the $50.

The invisible policeman on guard was an unseen ray. It was set up at a meeting of the New York Illuminating Engineering society in the Westinghouse Lamp company.

The bill was put in a five-foot safe with the door closed but unlocked. Somewhere athwart the safe, probably across the door, an ultra-violet ray of light was placed. The ray could not be seen. It was harmless; it could not be felt by the human

The ray "shone" upon a photo-electric eye some distance away. Anyone attempting to take the $50 bill from the safe would interrupt the ray, thereby casting on unseen "shadow" upon the electrical eye. Thereupon the eye would loudly ring a burglar

"With these rays," said Mr. McCoy, "It is possible for jewelers, bankers and other custodians to add greatly to the security of their valuables. It can be made impossible for an intruder to move about without detection, as the rays can be placed at various angles in a room. They may operate a tear gas barrage, or set off a silent Then can be projected far enough to protect the entire mouth of a harbor in war time with a warning signal belt."

One of these invisible policemen now stands at a gate in Springfield, Mass., and counts automobiles as they pass on the adjoining road. The robot has no physical contact with the passing automobiles. No wires stretch across the road to flash a signal when a car passes.

The unseen ray of light is used. When an automobile passes, it breaks the ray, and the mechanism within the robot adds another to the total of the cars that have passed.

This new "black light" is being used more and more extensively to expose fraud. It can disclose forgeries and counterfeit money. It has been used even to trap bootleggers. The makers of industrial alcohol can put a very small dose of some flourescent dye in their alcohol, and the dye will "shine" when the unseen ray is directed on it, no matter how much the bootlegger had "cooked" or otherwise tried to disguise his product.

A new "fever tube" giving off rays similar to this, developed in the radio research laboratory of the General Electric company at Schenectady, N. Y., has aroused in the mind of its inventor, Dr. W. R. Whitney, director of of the California Institute of Technolthe laboratory, the thought that radio may eventually be used to heat the roomers instead of the room.

It may be possible, he holds, by using an adaptation of the fever tube to supply heat to the occupants of homes and office buildings instead of heating the homes or buildings themselves. We heat thousands of cubic a body warm. Maintain sufficient heat in the person instead of an excess of steam in radiators.

Doctor Whitney's fever tube sends off unseen rays of heat that are absorbed by the body upon which they are directed, but which are not felt in the sense of being hot to the touch.

His suggestion is that his device might be placed in the walls of a room, the rays directed across the path of greatest activity, and then, with windows open, no furnace in the cellar and no radiators to look after, the inhabitants would be comfortably warm. Scientists are making wide use of these unseen rays and variations of it. A weird light has been produced that causes moving objects to slow down or appear still. This light, resembling a huge flash light, turned on a whirling electric fan, caused it to look as though the blades were at

Engineers have used this to find out what caused erosion on the tips of airplane propellers during a rain. The "light" made it possible to see the cracks forming in the blades when artificial rain was turned on while they were in motion, and this showed how to protect propellers against this.

Curious Colloquialisms

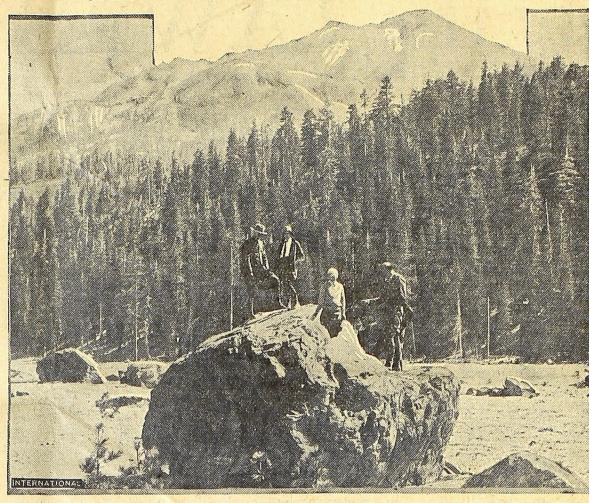

Queer names are given to the local holidays in northern villages in England. The district round Huddersfield alone supplies a rich variety. At Slaithwaite the strange title of "Sanjemis" was used to the end of last century, and it still lingers, maybe, At Honley they have a "feast," at Almondbury a "rush," at Longwood a "thump," and at Kirkheaton a "rant." Meltham has one almost as curious as Slaithwaite: it is, or was, called a "bartleby." There must be dozens of others, although the "wakes" and the "feasts" are probably in a huge ma-

Man Resided Here 20,000 Years Ago

Life in North America Is Traced to Ice Age.

Pasadena, Calif.-The time man has ived in America was pushed back to at least 20,000 years ago by reports to the American Association for the Advancement of Science here recently.

Archeologists and geologists told how they have read the record written in earth deposits that give strong evidence that highly developed man hunted strange red haired and large clawed ground sloths, primitive horses, buffalos unlike those known to early white men or Indians, and other strange beasts. Man was contemporaneous with these creatures when the last great ice sheet of the glacial age still covered northern United States. That man existed at a time more remote than generally credited is the conclusion of leading authorities, including Dr. H. M. Harrington of the Southwest museum, Dr. Barnum Brown of the American Museum of Natural History, and Dr. Chester Stock

Scattered Over America.

Doctor Harrington and Doctor Stock told of explorations of a gypsum cave near the site of Boulder dam in Nevada, where the camp fires, weapons, and torches of early man were found imbedded. They concluded that this feet of space, he asks, merely to keep only from his tools, since none of his bones have been found after two years of excavations, greatly strengthens scientific suspicion that man was widely scattered over America in the last stages of the Ice age. This is a greater age for man in America than most scientists have considered possible heretofore.

At Folsom, N. M., Dr. Barnum Brown found a kill of extinct buffalo made by men using stone weapons that are different from and superior to any hitherto discovered in Amerca. He dated the deposit in which the bones were found as 20,000 years

Heat in the Stratosphere.

There is a possibility that instead of man being as ancient as these new discoveries indicate, the extinct animals associated with them existed until more recent times than scientists have proposed. This view was expressed by D. A. S. Bomer of the University of Chicago. A report from Dr. Philip S. Smith of the United States geological survey showed that Alaska in the Ice age was a pleasant place to be, and offered a good reason for primitive man to migrate across the narrow Bering strait from Asia to America.

Special Vault Guards Nation's Timepieces

Washington. - A special vault has been built underground at the naval observatory here to house the clocks which keep the nation's time. It is a vault within a vault. The inner vault is constructed of hollow tile made so that hot water can be run through it in order to keep a standard temperature of 85 degrees. There is an 18-inch air space between the inner vault and the outer one, which is constructed of stone or cement. Both yaults are placed below the frost line.

By the time the new clock vault is in operation the navy hopes to have two more "Shortt" clocks. The clocks now in use have been telling the country what time it is for the past 30 years, and while still in good running order, will not suffer from the augmentation of two new clocks.

The 1929-'30 survey shows that less soot fell than in 1923-24 when the previous survey was made, but there still was more than in 1912-13.

entered, place the males in individual coops and the females either in these individual coops or small group coops," advises C. F. Parrish, extension poultryman. "Those having many birds to condition may equip a building for the purpose, though most small exhibitors use temporary quarters. The important thing is to have the birds where they may be handled easily at any time without the possibility of making them wild or breaking the plumage."

Mr. Parrish does not advise force feeding to get the birds in shape. There are times, however, when a few extra ounces of flesh may turn a decision in a bird's favor. Extra feeding may also help to develop a better plumage. The best way to go about getting these desirable attributes is in the addition of a more concentrated and palatable feed to the regular ration.

Practically all white birds are washed before exhibiting. One that has not been washed looks out of place in strong competition. Four tubs are needed to do this effectively. In the first, the water must be warm and plenty of soap suds used. This is rinsed off in gradually cooler water in the other three tubs, with bluing added to the last one. After washing, allow the bird to stand in a dripping coop for 30 minutes before going into the exhibition coop to dry completely.

Use of Artificial Light in Henhouse Indorsed

The use of artifical light in the houses of the laying hens in September and October is proving a profitable practice on many New Jersey farms, reports C. S. Platt, research specialist at the state college of agriculture. New Brunswick. It has, explains Mr. Platt, the advantage of prolonging the length of the day in the early fall and seems to give an increased egg production in the months when large eggs are demanding a premium price. This is an extension in the use of artificial lights, which heretofore have been used exclusively on pullets and solely in the winter. Any system of artificial light may be used, starting it when the daylight or working hours for the hens fall below thirteen. If the morning system a used, the lights are put on from 4:30 a. m. until daylight. The evening system calls for lights from dusk until 6:30 or 7 p. m., and the evening lunch system from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. The purpose of the light, of con is to increase the food consumption. For best results 100 birds should consume from 10 to 12 pounds of grain daily and an equal amount of mash. Moist mash may be fed to good advan-

The light should be discontinued about November 1, and the birds allowed to go through a resting period of two or three months.

No Place for Roosters Among the Laying Hens

"Farmers of the central states lose

$30,0000.000 to $50,000,000 a year on account of producing eggs that are fertile. When they move into commerce they are removed and destroyed," says Paul Mandeville, secretary of the United States Egg so-

"A more serious loss occurs," Mandeville says further, "from slowing down consumption of all eggs while these poor eggs are being forced on unwilling buyers. It is well known that a chief advantage of handling California eggs is the fact that they are infertile.

Remove all roosters, young and old, from the laying flock.

Poultry Hints

Unless the range is clean, chickens may be kept in a house as surgically clean as an operating room yet die from filth diseases. Not the food put before them but what they can get outside is responsible for intestinal disorders of poultry.

The use of barley to replace yellow corn in poultry rations should be determined by the relative prices of the two grains and the availability of sources of vitamin A.

In the opinion of many poultry specialists broilers should be sent to market as soon as they are salable. As the chick makes the most rapid growth during the first few weeks of its life, it costs more and takes longer to put on weight after it has reached a pound

Ground barley is a satisfactory substitute for ground yellow corn in a standard laying mash when the scratch grain is composed of a large per cent of shelled yellow corn and green feed is available for the birds.

"Branding" Babies Ends Mix-Ups

SCIENCE, through the ultra violet ray, has discovered a means of safe guarding the iden tity of new-born babies and it was tried for the first time when the ini tials of two baby girls were "burned." by means of the ray, upon their thighs immediately after their birth The experiment was performed at the Shore Road hospital in Brook lyn, where the initials also were placed on the arms mothers to make doubly certain that there would be no mix-up in the identity of the babies. The rays of a large violet ray machine are directed upon a tin disk in which have been cut the proper initials, which is placed against the baby's thigh. It requires four minutes to bring out the identification marks, which remain for ten days.

At least he was when I left on my way here. It seems queer that such a big fellow as he should have anything to worry about, but when I last saw him he was so worried that he was thinking of leaving all his favorite places because he didn't feel that they were safe any longer."

"Why not?" demanded Peter Rabbit, his eyes round with curiosity and his long ears standing straight up with interest. "Is he afraid of traps?"

Railroads Cut Round Trip Rates To the State Fair

In fulfillment of plans for the enlarged Michigan State Fair and Exposition to be held at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit September 6 to 12 the railroads entering the city are playing an important part.

As an inducement to out-state residents to attend the fair a special one-fare round trip rate is to be in effect over a two-day period just decided upon-Wednesday, Sept. 9, which has been designated as Governor's and War Veterans' Day, and Sept. 10, to be observed as Detroit and Farmers' Day. During the other days of fair week a one and one-half fare round trip rate will be authorized.

In addition, the Pere Marquette, Grand Trunk, Pennsylvania, Michigan Central and Wabash Railroads are co-operating with the fair management and the advisory committee of 14 Detroit business and industrial leaders appointed by Gov. Wilber M. Brucker in spreading the message of the fair's added attractions this year.

BIGGER DISPLAY

EARLY STEPS ARE TAKEN TO BUILD UP THIS MAJOR DEPARTMENT

In line with the greatly broadened outlook this year of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, now the official title of the annual state exhibition, efforts directed toward a pronounced revival of interest among representative livestock breeders and exhibitors promise a wider range of entries than ever before achieved.

Outstanding business and industrial leaders of Detroit having aligned themselves solidly behind the whole fair project, which has been enlarged to embrace a fascinating display of Michigan's foremost manufactured products, a minimum attendance of half a million is now assured.

Plans for the 82nd anniversary of the state fair to be held Sept. 6 to 12, every visitor, whether from the city or farming community, man or woman, livestock exhibits, special attractions galore and a premium list that totals $96,924, there is every reason to believe, according to Secretary John L. McNamara, that the 1931 fair will set a high water mark of success.

Conferences already held by members of the fair board, associations of stockmen and members of the advisory group augur well not only for finer exhibits this fall but important strides in years to come. Matters such as premiums and better facilities for exhibitors will be taken up from time to time, with every viewpoint taken into consideration.

fewer cylinders again. Their answers explain why sixes are so popular today.

Drivers of sixes are spoiled for anything less. They would no more think of giving up "six" performance than of giving up any other real advancement of motoring. For them, the whole cylinder question has been settled, once and for all.

Drive a Chevrolet Six, and you'll know the reason why. Step on the starter, let the motor idle-and notice how silently it runs. Throw in the clutch, shift into "low"-and feel that smooth flow of power. Change into "second," hit a faster clip, slip into "high," sweep along at top speed - then throttle down always get are six-cylinder smoothness, six-cylinder flexibility. Annoying vibration is gone.

Then, before you leave the six-cylinder Chevrolet, raise the hood while the engine is running-take a look at the source of its performance. The firm, steady operation of six cylinders means lasting dependability. Wearing vibration is reduced. There is less need for repairs.

Over two million owners have proved the value of Chevrolet's six-cylinder design. They have found that Chevrolet costs less for gas, oil and upkeep than any other automobile. They have found it smoother, quieter, more enjoyable in operation! They know a six is better-and would never be satisfied with less!

Athens, Greece.—Treasure amassed | workmen hired by Ali and killed by the notorious Ali Pasha of Tepe- | him so that he alone would know the hiding place.

The splendor of Ali's court at Janina has become almost a legend throughout the Balkans. Ambassadors of the great powers came to him and the poet Byron was his guest. He was successively the ally of Napoleon and Lord Nelson. At the peak of his career his glory outshone that of the sultan in Constantinople.

Yet Ali arose from a humble beginning. He was born in 1741 at Tepeleni, a hill village in Albania. His father, who held the hereditary office of bey of Tepeleni, was killed by neighboring chiefs who seized his territory when Ali was fourteen years

Ali was left in the care of his mother Khamko, a woman of extraordinary character. She herself formed a brigand band and inspired the boy with her own fierce temper.

Within a few years he regained possession of Tepeleni and took vengeance on his enemies. Then, in secure his own power, he murdered his brother and imprisoned his mother on a charge of attempting to poison

In 1787 Ali took part in the war against Russia and was rewarded by being made pasha of Trikala in Thessalv and Derwend-Pasha of Rumelia. His power was augmented when he succeeded in being nominated pasha of Janina.

It was only natural that his power should arouse the jealousy of the Sultan Mahmud II, who had formulated a policy of curbing the strength of the provincial pashas.

The sultan's pretext for an attack on Ali came in 1820 when the "Lion of Janina" violated the sanctity of Istanbul itself by attempting to procure the murder of an enemy in the very precincts of the sultan's palace. The bulk of the turkish forces under Khursid Pasha were sent against

Although Ali was known to have amassed much treasure, the existence of a buried hoard was considered legend until the recent discovery of the document. Now the discovery of the tunnel has stimulated efforts to find the treasure.

Explosion Creates a New Process

Harry A. Clanton, shown above, World war veteran of North Carolina, has discovered a new glass decorating process which has been described as revolutionary. An accidental explosion of chemicals that spattered a con tainer with a marvelous pattern of variegated colors enabled Clanton to work out the process. Three vases treated with the new coloring process were taken to Washington by the war veteran and submitted to Dr. Walter Hough, one of the curators of the Smithsonian institution, who declared he had never before seen anything like the color work on them. The designs are accidental and could not be copied.

Uses "Cry'ng Chair" to Cure Whining Children

"In our family of four children." writes a mother in the Parents' Magazine, "there are numerous disappointments, frequent bruises and occasional quarrels. Any of these," says she, "is likely to cause crying spells more or less prolonged, and sometimes prolonged according to the amount of sympathy and attention received. To reduce the crying to a minimum we placed a small odd chair in the corner of the sewing room and designate it as the 'crying chair.'

"Now when anyone has to cry he is sent, or frequently goes of his own accord, to this corner by himself to cry until he is finished. The rest of the family goes quietly about its business and pays no attention to the crying one. Naturally the child soon discovers that he is wasting his time and making himself ridiculous, and the crying spells grow shorter and less frequent. In fact they have almost disappeared at our house."

Two-Purpose Dress Is in High Favor Just Now

The double duty or two-purpose dress is in high favor just now. By this we mean the type of frock that can be worn with equal success and sartorial assurance in town and country. These frocks are not too easy to find, as most frocks are designed. to fit and fill a very definite niche in the wardrobe. But this season, more attention has been given to this type of frock and so we now have frocks that we can wear in town and then motor out to the country without having to change.

RAIL TRANSPORT

About one hundred and twentyseven years ago there was great excitement at Merthyr Tydvil, the occasion being a test run with the first steam locomotive that ever pulled a train of loaded trucks upon iron

At that time the use of steam power was being firmly established in the tin, iron and coal mines of Corn wall and south Wales, mostly for pumping water from the mines and gradually superseding the old horsedriven "whims" for winding pur-

Richard Trevifhick, the Cornish mining engineer, had constructed two experimental road engines at Camborne in 1801 and 1802, and the following year he ran a steam coach in London, but the rough state of the roads of those times rendered them unsuitable for this new method of locomotion, and nothing more was done toward its development as a means of road transport till some years

In 1803 Trevithick was in south Wales constructing his "high-pressure engines" for working various appliances in the iron works of Merthyr and the surrounding district. After the iron had been worked up into bar, it was conveyed by means of horse-haulage along the old Penydarren tram road for a distance of about ten miles to the Glamorganshire canal.

A far-seeing engineer like Trevithick could not fail to realize that here was a chance to put into practice the experience gained with the "traveling engines" at Camborne, by constructing another to run on the iron rails of the tram road, and so demonstrate the possibility of steam power for locomotion.

Having suggested this idea to Sam Homfrey, of the Penydarren Iron works, he started the construction of the celebrated "wagon engine."

Meanwhile Sam Homfrey and Rich ard Crawshay, the two great iron masters, discussed the possibilities of this new method of transport, and the outcome of their deliberations was that Homfrey bet Crawshay 500 guineas that he would get a load of iron taken down to Abercynon by steam power.

Trevithick's engine successfully accomplished the task, by hauling ten tons of iron, and numerous people who had climbed on to the "trams," and thus became famous as the first railway passengers.

What a fearsome monster it must have been, yet it had most of the essential features found in the modern locomotive-high-pressure steam, coupled wheels, steam blast to urge the fire, feed-water heater, and relying upon the friction between wheel and rails for its ability to haul a load, thus obviating the necessity of a rack rail, such as was introduced some years later by Blenkinsop.

When first tried, the engine was fitted with a brick chimney, a fact which is scarcely credible when one realizes what a clever engineer its designer proved to be; but the reason for such construction was Trevithick's eagerness to get a trial run. Rather than wait till the iron chimney was finished he had a temporary one created of bricks.

The fate of this germ of the modern locomotive is as great a mystery as is its general appearance. Owing to the cast-iron rails being of insufficient strength to withstand any weight and shocks the engine was only used as a locomotive for a few months, being afterwards converted to a stationary engine, and set to work a hammer in the Penydarren works .- Montreal Herald.

THE SEALED TRUNK

Henry Kitchell Webster

CHAPTER XIV—Continued -14-

Except for the expedition to recover the trunk there was no reason why she shouldn't have gone to work this morning as usual, although it had been fun to pretend to be asleep while Babe was making all sorts of sudden and calamitous noises in her effort to get dressed and get her breakfast in perfect silence, and really to fall asleep again for another twenty minutes after the studio door had slammed behind her. But by half past nine she'd finished her own breakfast, washed the dishes, put the studio to rights and, dressed for the street, was wishing that Martin had set his hour earlier. He had said ten o'clock, hadn't he?

When ten o'clock passed without bringing him, she began getting cross. Had he just gone off to work as usual and forgotten all about her? At half past ten she stopped being cross and began to be frightened. Had Uncle William done some horrible thing to him to get him out of the way? Or Claire, with a pearl handled revolver, this time, in her little wristbag? Or Max Lewis, or Conley? He's been making formidable enemies in her cause, hand over fist, during the last twenty-four hours.

When finally a few minutes after eleven she heard a step she thought was his come bounding up the studio stairs and had darted to the door and flung it open, she was so glad to see him intact that her eyes filled up with silly tears again and she was in his arms before she knew it.

By and by, over on the divan, Martin made a confession. "I'd fully made up my mind," he told her, "that I'd be very calm and brotherly this morning and at least give you a chance to think, if you wanted to, that the whole thing had been a bluff for Uncle William's benefit. I told myself I'd be a dog to take advantage of you. It wasn't the money I minded so much-I mean the chance that you're going to be horribly rich. That was what was worrying Uncle William, of course. But I reminded myself that you'd only known me about a week, and you were a mere child and probably didn't know what love was about, and how much nobler it would be if I showed you I wasn't just greedy and was willing to wait. And I will wait; I'll wait seven years if you want me to. But do you think that could make you any surer?"

"I think," she told him, "that if you'd said that first night at the Alhambra, 'Will you marry me!' instead of 'Do you want to be rescued?' I'd have nodded my head at you just the same. Anyhow, I've known since then."

"Well, then," he said, "that's settled, anyhow," and he let go one of her hands to fish a ring out of his waistcoat pocket and slip it on her finger.

It was a blindingly beautiful thing, and she sat gazing at it, spellbound, for about a minute, trying to realize what it was and what it meant. But when she turned back to Martin to thank him with a kiss, she caught him in the act of looking at his watch. Even without that she could have told from the way his kiss felt that he had something on his mind.

"What is it?" she asked. "Are you thinking about that old trunk? Does it matter if we don't get it this morning? Does anything matter?"

"There's only one thing that matters," le said, getting up and moving away a little to put himself out of temptation, "and that's your father. I think perhaps we can do something if we strike while the iron is hot. I haven't got it clear enough to talk quite good sense about it, but it's a little like the old woman and the pig that wouldn't get over the stile. Do you remember, 'Stick won't beat dog, dog won't bite pig'? You see, the only person who can set your fahter's memory right before the university worldand that's the only world he cared about-is Uncle William, who is president of the board of trustees out there. Uncle William's the pig, all right. He knows the facts and I think he believes them. But he won't get over the stile until somebody bites him on

"Who's going to bite him?" she asked. But when he answered, "Forster," she echoed the name in simple astonishment.

"I can't guess that it is, darling," he told her, "but there's something in that little trunk of yours that Forster thinks he can't live without. I want to find out what it is and hurl it at him while he's still frightened. He is frightened half out of his wits. He's making May marry that Cleveland woman. I saw them, this morning, down at the elty hall, she with her face all bandaged up and Max looking as glum as if he was waiting to be sentenced to a term in the penitentlary, with Conley on guard to see that he didn't do a bolt, waiting for the marriage license bureau to open up."

Gazing at him wide-eyed she saw him flush like a schoolboy, and at that she flew at him and hugged him. She couldn't help it, "Did you get ours, too?" she asked.

He nodded. "I thought it was better," he said. "-just in case of emergency. That's what I told myself at the time. But will you, Rhoda, now? Before we go and get the trunk? St. Timothy's is just around the corner. know the curate and he'll be there."

"I'll get my hat and coat," she said. And it wasn't more than ten minutes before she found herself being married by a hearty young man who had, it seemed, put out his pipe just before he'd put on his cassock.

She wondered later, when she had time to think things over, about how vague an impression this service made upon her. She was barely able to remember anything about it. On the other hand, every word Martin had said during their walk to the church was etched deep upon her memory. The force of his purpose to set up her father's name again in its proper place, cleansed of the mud of scandal and suspicion; the fact that he had a plan and that until he had set that plan in motion everything else, even love-making, would have to wait, put a new dimension into her love for him. From the church door they took a taxi to the railway station, found the trunk without misadventure, and took it back to the studio. By that time they were both wildly excited over the mystery of its centents.

What they found was just what Rhoda dimly remembered the contents to have been, sheets of yellow paper covered with notes, equations and diagrams. Some of them looked to her like gigantic magnifications of a child's game of naughts and crosses. Pictures of molecules, Martin said he guessed they were, but it was all, he frankly admitted, considerably worse than Greek to him. There was an enormous amount of it, thousands of sheets. Several thousand. They began taking them out reverently, one at a time. Then they took them out hy handfuls. There was no sort of order to them, apparently. It wasn't conceivable that this mass of stuff was anything that Forster wanted.

Well then, what else was in the trunk? They got to the bottom of it at last and gazed at each other with eyes blank with disappointment. It seemed there was nothing in the trunk but those yellow sheets.

Rhoda got up stiffly and announced her intention of getting lunch. "I'm going to cook my husband's first meal." She made coffee and heated up a can of corned beef hash and set the little table while he continued to sit on the floor in a brown study, shuffling his vellow papers.

They were so occupied when Babe, it being Saturday, came home from work, unaware that she was looking at a married couple. Rhoda told her promptly and her exuberant joy over the news combined with her fury at not having been invited to the wedding produced the effect of an active young tornado. She hugged Rhoda and kissed Martin, and berated them both in her best manner all the time.

It was right in the midst of this tumult that Martin announced a discovery. "There are about a hundred of these sheets that are written in lead pencil, but all the others are carbon copies. The penciled sheets aren't different in any other way that I can see from the carbons. They're in the same handwriting, anyhow. Can you make anything of that?"

Rhoda was busy opening the hot can of hash and she said she couldn't. Just after Babe went out she saw him get up, in a preoccupied sort of way, and go over to the telephone. He called the Worcester hotel, asked for Uncle William and got him. Then he said, "This is Martin Forbes. Rhoda and I were married this morning. We're going to have a conference this afternoon at three o'clock and we'd like you to be here if you can, and bring the contract between Forster and Professor McFarland with you."

It seemed strange to Rhoda that she didn't see any blue flames from the receiver licking about Martin's ear. Uncle William was even, judging from Martin's fragmentary replies, being polite. "What's happened to him?" she asked as Martin hung up. "Didn't he breathe any fire at all about our being married?"

"Oh, no, he took that all right. I thought he would,"

He spoke absently and she saw he was getting ready to telephone again. | duplicate of when you took possession

This call was even more astonishing. It was the Worcester again and he asked for Mr. Forster's apartment. He recognized the answering voice, for he said, "Conley? Take this message for Mr. Forster. Say that Miss McFarland has recovered her father's trunk and if the contents of it interest him, as we believe they will now we've examined them, he can come to her studio this afternoon at three o'clock and discuss what's to be done about them. Find out if we're to expect him, will you?" There was a breathless pause of about a minute. Then Martin said,

"All right. Three o'clock," and hung up. There was a queer, rather scared look in his face as he turned back to her. "Martin," she cried, "have you found it?—have you found the thing he wants?" He shook his head. "I haven't found a thing," he told her, "But now, you see. I've got to find it. There's nothing like a deadline to stimulate the wits of a reporter."

As soon as he had swallowed what was on his plate he took his cup of coffee and went back to the floor.

He was still there when Uncle William came; so strangely transformed an Uncle William that Rhoda forgot all about Martin for several minutes. There wasn't a trace of the ogre left about him. He jocosely claimed the right to kiss the bride and did it, said, as he patted her on the back, that he thought she was going to be very happy, and reproached her playfully for having kept him in the dark about something, though what it was she couldn't at first make out. It was not, it seemed, her unpremeditated marriage this morning. He said he quite understood their acting as they had done about that and thought that in the circumstances it had been wise.

Then he began apologizing to Martin. He was afraid his manner last night when he had been quite in the dark as to who Martin really was, he having merely been told that he was a reporter, hadn't been quite appropriate.

"But," said Rhoda blankly, "he is a reporter." "Yes, yes, of course," Uncle William agreed uneasily at a sudden movement of impatience on Martin's part, "but I want to acknowledge that my momentary suspicion that his interest in you was heightened by his knowledge of the possibility that you might turn out to be, so to speak, an heiress, became grotesque as soon as I looked up what he spoke of on the way home as his references and learned that he had an independent fortune of his

She turned a bewildered look on

"It's nothing to bother about, darling," he said. "I wasn't keeping anything dark. I'd have told you if there'd been time. But there's always been something more important to talk about. As a matter of fact, there is now. Forster will be getting here any minute. Rhoda, what was the date of your father's death? Do you remember exactly?" She did and she told him.

He looked down at the papers again with an intensity of concentration.

After perhaps a minute he drew a long breath. "Look here, darling," he said. "Look at the date on these sheets. They're carbons, you see, of the last notes he ever made. See what he's written on the bottom of his page. It's the last page of all. Try this tomorrow. Think it's right at last.' Well, it was right. Those few hours he begged the doctor for were all he needed, but the doctor couldn't give them to him."

Down at the foot of the long flight of stairs they heard the street door open. Martin turned suddenly to Uncle William. "Have you got that contract with you, sir? Right here in your pocket, I mean? Because if that's Forster coming up the stairs we're going to need it."

Uncle William, speechless for once, felt in his pocket and nodded.

Martin went out into the entry and looked down the stairs, "It's Forster," he said as he came back into the studio. "Conley's carrying him up." No one spoke after that and the wait while Conley struggled with his burden up those long straight flights of stairs seemed endless. Forster, by the time he'd been deposited in a big chair, was as breathless and as nearly exhausted-with terror that he'd be dropped, most likely-as the man who carried him. "Well," he panted, "I've come-on some fool's errand, I expect. I can't think of anything among the professor's papers that I'd be especially Interested in, now." But his look, darting rat-like about the studio, belied his words, and when it lighted upon the little but trunk surrounded by the heaps of yellow sheets, it remained fixed, fascinated.

"I thought," Martin observed, "that you'd be interested in these notes. You must have seen something very like them before-in the laboratory just after Professor McFarland died."

"Possibly," Forster admitted. "I'd been financing him for four years while he was trying to discover an oil process. He died without getting anywhere with it. I hired another man and he discovered the thing almost at once. It was a very valuable discovery and I've made a great deal of money on it. The professor didn't make it. He tried to and he failed. I don't believe that these papers you've got here are worth anything. But if they are worth anything and the professor held them out, they're my property. He was working under contract with me and he had no right to hold anything out."

"He didn't hold anything out," Martin said. "There was nothing in that trunk that you didn't find the exact of the laboratory. And to put it the other way around, there was nothing among the notes in the laboratory that there wasn't an exact duplicate of in that trunk."

"What's that?" cried Uncle William, so sharply that Forster started in his chair.

Martin turned to Rhoda. "Don't you see how it was? Your father safeguarded himself against the very thing that finally happened. During the whole four years that he worked in Forster's laboratory he kept a daily record, a sort of log, of everything he did, of his experiments, of his calculations, even his guesses as they occurred to him. He wrote them all down in tablets which had alternate pages that could be torn out, and he kept a carbon copy of every note and diagram, every pencil scratch that he made. Every night he brought home the dated carbon copies of that day's notes and threw them in that trunk.

"That's what he almost always did: ninety-nine times out of a hundred. But once in a hundred times it happened that what he brought home weren't the carbons but the original penciled notes. From his point of view it wasn't important which he brought home. He had with him in his personal possession all the time an absolutely complete record of all the work he had done, against the chance that Forster might some time try to beat him out of his dues. "Well, he completed his process right up to the outline of the last confirmatory experiments. He had it right, at last, the day before he died."

"You can't prove that!" Forster

"You're going to prove it for me," Martin answered, "within five minutes." Then he turned back to Rhoda.

"Forster had his process and he didn't doubt that he was safe in stealing your father's share of it. He made his deal and his contracts, collected his royalties. The probable existence of your father's copy of their contract didn't bother him a bit. He could say what he said to us just now and there was, he thought, no proof to the contrary. But at some time or other, not so very long ago I imagine, looking over the log that he'd found in the laboratory, he discovered here and there a carbon sheet in place of the original. And then he knew what your father had done. He knew that if these sheets hadn't been destroyed and ever fell into the hands of any friend of yours who recognized what they were, he could be forced to an accounting and made to pay every cent that the contract called for. When he realized that he began to advertise for the whereabouts of Rhoda McFarland." Forster's face was shining with sweat but once more he bleated stubbornly, "You can't prove it!"

"I said you were going to prove it," Martin reminded him. "You have proved it to my satisfaction by coming here today. But I'll tell you what I'm going to do. If you insist that the process you are using isn't Professor McFarland's process but something else. I'll publish these notes of his and make the world a present of them."

Forster sank back in his chair with a groan. "All right," he said. "I'll buy them of you. How much do you

In New York city it is possible to know an infinite variety of good citizens.
