RENO BOY GETS SPECIAL FISHER GUILD AWARD

Norman Sibley of Reno, an outstanding character in Michigan's 4-H Clubs, under the leadership of A. G. Kettunen at East Lansing, received a special award from the Fisher Body Corporation a short time ago.

Norman became interested in the Guild through Lloyd G. McKay, Chevrolet dealer of East Tawas, and completed his coach under the leadership of Samuel H. George, Reno's local 4-H Handicraft leader, in the spring of 1931. He displayed the coach together with fifteen other articles in his 4-H Handicraft work, at Isoco county's second annual 4-H Club Achievement Day at the Community House in East Tawas last May, and was awarded honorary state championships in both fourth and fifth year work. This gives him a record of the best work in the state of Michigan in five years' work, every year's work in which he has competed.

He will represent Michigan's merits of progress in 4-H Handicraft work in the International Harvester Company's university scholarship contest in Chicago next December.

The following is a copy of the letter which he received from the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild a short time ago:

Mr. Norman Sibley
Hale, Michigan
Dear Norman:

We have had your coach here in guild headquarters for some length of time and of course, as you know, being just over the age limit you were not eligible for the competition. LIFETIME OF EMOTION AND DRAMA IN "24 HOURS"

The amazing sum of drama, suspense, romance and adventure that is tallied in the big cities of today and most frequently is enacted all about us and without our senses fathoming the ever-present clues and symbols, is projected for our benefit, energetically and eloquently in the new photoplay being headlined Sunday, Monday and Tuesday at the State Theatre, "24 Hours," a Paramount picture.

As a novel and Cosmopolitan Magazine story called "Shattered Glass," this Louis Bromfield narrative of tangled lives and loves treated within two turns of the clock as modern New York City sees it, proves highly nutritious to entertainment appetites.

With a cast featuring Clive Brook, Kay Francis, Miriam Hopkins, Regis Toomey and a number of other stage and screen performers equally talented, "24 Hours" was destined to succeed.

The story, for those who have missed the novel or serial, transpires from eleven o'clock night, to the same hour, a span of the sun and moon later. A man who has sought the solace of an affair with a night-club girl to cover up the void of a straying wife, finds himself accused of his paramour's murder. The pressure of the social contacts of himself and wife is strangely turned to favor him, as he confesses his relationship with the slain girl. The scorned mate of the dead woman is brought to court for another crime, and unwittingly clears the accused. Freed of many incriminating shadows of the past, he is restored to his wife, whose own affair has gone on the rocks, and who is not without the sense to nurse the re-budding affection and trust of her mate.

Chief Justice Hughes In Tribute to Red Cross

One of the finest tributes ever paid the American Red Cross and its membership was that by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, of the United States Supreme Court, on the occasion of the fiftieth birthday anniversary of the organization on May 21 of this year. Mr. Hughes said:

"The American Red Cross represents the united voluntary effort of the American people in the ministry of mercy. It is the finest and most effective expression of the American heart. It knows no partisanship. In the perfection of its cooperation, there is no blemish of distinctions by reason of race or creed or political philosophy.

"However we may differ in all things else, in the activities of the Red Cross we are a united people. None of our boasted industrial enterprises surpasses it in efficiency. It moves with the precision and the discipline of an army to achieve the noblest of human aims.

"The American Red Cross is not only first in war but first in peace. The American people rely upon its ministrations in every great catastrophe. It has given its aid in over one thousand disasters. When, as we hope, war will be no more, still the Red Cross, in the countless activities of relief and rehabilitation, will continue to function as the organized compassion of our country."

RED CROSS ROLL CALL BEGINS NOVEMBER 11th

The membership roll call of Isoco County Red Cross Chapter will begin November 11th (Armistice Day) and close Thanksgiving. Ladies of your community will call on you in your homes and places of business to extend a personal invitation to join the organization for the coming year.

This support from you by giving your $1.00 will enable the Isoco County Chapter to render relief in our county. Please respond when you are called upon and be enrolled as a member. It should be considered a privilege to belong to this great humanitarian organization, and especially this year which marks the fiftieth year of Red Cross service to humanity.

Frank F. Taylor, Secretary, Isoco County Chapter, American Red Cross.

STAUDY-KASISCHKE

A quiet wedding was solemnized at Lannon, Wisconsin, last Saturday afternoon when Miss Gladys Staudy daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Staudy of Thiensville, Wis., became the bride of Rev. Emil Kasischke, son of Mrs. Emil Kasischke of Tawas City. Rev. P. W. Kneiske performed the ceremony.

The bride was very becomingly attired in a brown transparent velvet dress, with hat and slippers to match. Miss Luella Staudy attended her sister as bridesmaid. She wore a dress of pink chiffon, with hat and slippers to match.

The groom was attended by his brother, Walter Kasischke. A wedding supper served at the home of the bride's parents preceded a reception held in honor of the newlyweds.

Rev. and Mrs. Kasischke spent several days with the former's mother here before leaving for Yale, Michigan, where they will reside. Their many friends extend congratulations and best wishes.

IMPROVEMENTS MADE AT HOTEL IOSCO

REPORT OF COUNTY NURSE FOR MONTH OF OCTOBER

During October the county nurse made 36 visits to schools. In her classroom health talks she has been stressing health rules in general but especially urging the children to be sure to wash their hands before meals. At home we presume the child has the necessary facilities but at school they are not always adequate for the number of children. The nurse has been demonstrating a handwashing drill whereby three children, acting as monitors, dispense soap, pour water and hand out paper towels as the line of children pass in order. This plan saves time, materials and confusion, also we are sure each one has washed.

Of the 160 children examined by the staff physician, 47 had parents present at the examination. The staff feels it is much more satisfactory to have a parent or interested relative present for the examination or nurse's inspection of the children, as the defects found may be discussed rather than the parent depending on a slip stating the defect.

Along with school examinations an opportunity was given for those yet unvaccinated against smallpox to have it done. 63 school children were vaccinated, nine pre-school children and one adult.

178 home visits were made by the nurse in prenatal, infant, school, communicable disease, preschool, tuberculosis and orthopedic work.

ARENAC HUNTER IS ACCIDENTALLY KILLED

Melvin Mosher, 40 years old, was accidentally killed about half a mile back of his farm home three miles north and two miles west of Turner Wednesday afternoon when he stumbled while carrying a gun, barrel upwards.

Mosher, accompanied by Willis Clark, a neighbor, and his son, Harvey Clark, were hunting. Mosher had strayed a short distance from the two Clarks when the pair heard a muffled shot. Calling to Mosher, they heard the victim call to them that he had shot himself. He died at Omer hospital two hours later.

EUSTER KEATON BRINGS LAUGH TREAT TO FAMILY

Comical capers in a gymnasium, a screamingly funny adventure with gangsters, and a love affair that results in his trying to reform the small boys of the tenements, land Euster Keaton into hilarious trouble in his newest Metro Goldwyn-Mayer picture, coming Sunday and Monday to the Family Theatre.

This is "Sidewalks of New York," a farcical romance of love and gangsters, small boys and trials and tribulations galore.

Buster plays a millionaire's son who owns blocks of tenements. He falls in love with Anita Page, a girl of the tenement district, and for her sake sets out to reform her small brother.

He starts a gymnasium, and tries to act as instructor in it, but he doesn't know how, and tangles up in everything in the place. Then the gangs get after him and he dodges trouble and bullets until in a comical finale he wins out and true love conquers.

BARNABUS GURLEY

They made their home in Saginaw until 1877, when they moved to East Tawas. Later they moved on a farm near South Branch, where, in 1915, Mrs. Gurley passed away. POLICEMEN GET "BREAK" IN "HOMICIDE SQUAD"

At last the policemen "get a break." Practically every gangster picture brought to the screen in the past two years has depicted the police as a body of more or less "dumb" blunderers, rather than as men of intelligence and keen insight. As a matter of fact, these qualities are an absolute requirement in gaining appointment to a metropolitan police force, and in progressing upward through promotion.

"Homicide Squad," the Universal underworld drama which comes to the State Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, has two of its important characters in a police captain and a sergeant, and they are criminals as worthy foes of the law as the fighting. These roles are played by Noah Beery and Pat O'Malley, and their characterizations present modern police officials as they really are. The story was written by Henry La Cossitt, a newspaperman with a world experience in police work.

Leo Carillo, as a gangster leader, heads the cast of "Homicide Squad," and other important roles are played by Mary Brian, Russell Gleason and J. Carroll Nash. This Henry La Cossitt story of fast action and absorbing drama was directed by George Melford.

"REBOUND" STORY OF DOMESTIC TANGLE

When love begins to show signs of inconstancy is it worth fighting for?

A particularly interesting view of this engrossing question is said to be taken in "Rebound," the Donald Ogden Stewart stage success which has been transferred to the talking screen by RKO Pathe.

As its name applies, the story deals with a girl who catches the man she loves on the rebound of his dismissal by another. The waning and waning of their marital affections, the trials and triumphs, of their life together, are treated in light comedy fashion.

Ina Claire, whose charm and talent contributed to the stage presentation, is again seen in the stellar role, while Robert Ames plays opposite her. Others in the cast include Myrna Loy, Hedda Hopper and Robert Williams.

"Rebound" will play Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 10-11-12, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas. See it sure.

MANCHURIA

Station on the South Manchurian Railway.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

IT IS an unusual year in which Manchuria does not produce an upset in Far Eastern affairs. In 1929 there was friction between Chinese and Russians over the management of the Chinese Eastern railway of northern Manchuria—friction that brought a threat of war. Now Manchuria is the scene of grave difficulties between Japanese and Chinese, and again a railway is at the bottom of the trouble. This time it is the South Manchurian railway, owned and operated by a Japanese corporation. In a struggle centering around the railroad property near Mukden, capital of Manchuria, both Chinese and Japanese lives have been lost.

The world has grown to expect excitement from Manchuria; for in that country, as in Egypt and Mexico, it seems that drama never dies. From hereabouts, before Columbus was born, rode a Mongol horde to conquer Asia and harass Europe.

From here, scaling the Great Wall which timid Chinese had raised against them, came giant Manchus to oust the Mings and found a new dynasty at Peiping (Peking).

Crossing the sea in clumsy junks 1,200 years ago, the same bold Manchus took tiger and leopard skins, ermine, and wild ginseng to trade with Japan for silks and brocades. Later, when the near-world empire of Kublai Khan rolled from the Yalu to the Danube, a Mongol fleet of a thousand ships sailed against the shoguns, only to be smashed by "God's Wind" on the coast of Kyushu.

Here, through turbulent years, three ancient empires met—the Bear, the Dragon, and the Rising Sun. Their struggles shook the earth. Korea succumbed, absorbed by the Rising Sun; the Dragon mothered Manchuria. War mangled the Bear, and to the north rose an evanescent Far Eastern republic.

Two Great Events.

Yet in all its repertoire of high adventure—political, martial, and economic—two events loom largest in the stirring story of Manchuria. They sway not only the destiny of ancient Manchuria itself, but they affect the fortunes and the future of Japan, China, and Russia. These events are the coming of the Russian-built railways, and the immigration of millions of Chinese farmers. In the last three decades these forces, railways, and immigrants, have jumped Manchuria ahead by 1,000 years—moved her from a region of feudal lords, bandits, and nomad herdsmen to a land of huge trade and agriculture, in many aspects strangely like part of the American West.

So swiftly these changes have come that very often old and new still clash in oddly visual violence. Thus now, across South Manchuria, you may ride a crack train, smooth, shiny, and fast as any Broadway limited or Frisco flyer—a solid train it is, of American pullmans, drawn by a big Baldwin locomotive made in Philadelphia—yet from its observation car you may see peasants pushing wheelbarrows with sails on them—a type of vehicle old in China when Confucius was a baby. Steam shovels made in Milwaukee are moving mountains; Yankee tractors, jerking a fleet of plows, scurry across the virgin plains, past walled hamlets where yellow men scratch garden patches with wooden hoes, as in Bible times.

Developed by the Railway.

As early as 1639 Russia, of course, had found her way to the Amur. By 1860 she had acquired the vast Maritime province, a veritable empire, stretching from the Ussuri river to the Sea of Japan and comprising an area as big as Mexico. Across this domain, in the 1890's, she was pushing her great Trans-Siberian railway to strike the sea at Vladivostok. But, as the map shows, the original Siberian road, to reach Vladivostok over Russian territory, had to run a roundabout course along the Amur valley and via Khabarovsk.

Six hundred miles would be saved if the Russians could build directly from Chita, on the Siberian road, straight southeast across Manchuria to rejoin the Trans-Siberian system near Pogradichnya.

On the heels, then, of her friendly gesture in 1895, when Russia aided China to regain the area lost to Japan at Shimonoseki, the Bear asked the Dragon for the right to build a railway across Manchuria; and, by agreement signed September 8, 1896, that concession was granted. From it dates the rise of modern Manchuria. That line and that original branch of it, now called the South Manchurian railway, with the economic rights they carried, were to do for Manchuria what the Union Pacific did for the American West. Like magic, these new railways were to turn a wild, thinly peopled nomad land into a modern Canada, a granary of the East, drawing new settlers at the rate of anywhere from 300,000 to 1,000,000 in a single year.

Because of its conspicuous importance and its vast influence on migration, industry, and agriculture, it is worth while to review the development of this railway and of its extension, the South Manchurian railway.

All over the civilized world, newspaper readers know this famous line now as the Chinese Eastern railway. By the terms of the original agreement, signed between China and the Russo-Chinese bank (later the Russo-Asiatic bank), it was to be a joint enterprise. The czar's engineers built it and the Russians had charge of its shops, maintenance, and technical operations; but Chinese were supposed to share equally with Russian directors in its general management. When completed, in June, 1903, it had cost in excess of $200,000,000. Of this cost, China supplied about $5,000,000 and shared, proportionately, in its profits.

Towns Became Busy Cities.

When finished, the main line of the Chinese Eastern ran from its terminus at Manchuli, on the northwest border of Manchuria, to Pogradichnya, on the eastern boundary. From Harbin, now a busy, important city and then a mere fishing village on the Sungari river, a branch line was dropped south to Dalny, now Dairen, on the Bay of Korea. Most of this section, or that part from Changchun south to Dairen, is now known as the South Manchurian railway.

Dalny was literally a magic city. Built quickly, by imperial command, it was the talk of the Far East. On this barren, then empty, point of rocks, engineers, architects, and workers of the czar spent millions of rubles to build wharves, streets, business blocks, and houses for a population yet to come. A magnificent vision, that—the vision of a great seaport, terminus of a 5,495-mile railway tying Europe to the Orient.

How observers laughed, at this amazing spectacle—vast trainloads of tools, food, tents, work animals, scrapers, and building material being dumped on a rocky shore of faraway Asia to build a city where there were no people! Yet today Dalny, Dairen, is the second or third most important seaport on all the China coast! In Manchuria something is always happening!

It happened again in 1904, when Japan fought Russia. One saw the holes in the armored sides of escaping Russian battleships—holes big enough to lead cows through, holes made by Togo's guns in Tushima strait. Port Arthur, the impregnable, fell; ancient Mukden echoed and shook under the heaviest gunfire Asia had ever known.

Kuropatkin lost—and President Roosevelt mediated. In the peace conference at Portsmouth, N. H., Russia ceded to Japan her lease on the Liaoting peninsula and possession on the South Manchurian railway as far north as Changchun. China confirmed this and later extended Japan's lease for a period of 99 years.

But in Manchuria drama never dies. Tragedy, stark and terrible, stalked across the East when Imperial Russia collapsed. Refugees by the thousands, fleeing the horrors of postwar political chaos in Siberia, came east to beg, borrow, or starve in neutral Manchurian towns.

After Russia's Collapse.

In this chaos the Allies took over the operation of the Chinese Eastern railway. From their base at Vladivostok they needed it to move men and supplies. An American engineer, famous for his work on the Panama canal, was in charge. Later, the newly formed Soviet government took Imperial Russia's old place as partner with the Chinese. In 1924, by a new treaty, China enjoyed an equal share with the Soviets in the profits of the railway. It was agreed, too, that China should govern the railway zone, inhabited now by many thousands of whites, and that each nation in the compact should refrain from propaganda against the other's social and political systems.

That, stripped of details, is the brief story of the now famous Chinese Eastern railway up to June 11, 1929, when it was seized by the Chinese, its Russian personnel arrested, causing clouds of war once more to loom over this stage of so many historic struggles. This threat of war was later removed when Chinese and Russians again agreed to a joint management of the railway.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Bandit's Nemesis

JAMES CURRY was the most noted of all the stage coach drivers on the old Baraboo-Kilbourn line when Wisconsin was little more than a wilderness and the roads were quagmires and rough, rocky trails through the forests.

Tall and fearless, Curry's word was law along the stage line, and his fearlessness and the respect in which the new inhabitants of the country held him proved the undoing of one of the most desperate bandits and gunmen in the old Northwest.

Curry's stretch of the road was miles of sandy trail north of Baraboo. He drove coaches over this route from 1860 until the Chicago & North Western railroad extended its line from Kilbourn to Baraboo in 1871. During the last nine years of this period he owned the stage coach line, but continued to drive through the "bad" section.

In the late 60's the entire countryside lived in fear of Pat Wildrick, one of the most noted bandits in the history of the American frontier. Pat was leader of a band of lawless men who stooped to any crime to do his bidding.

Baraboo was already a thriving community, and the railroad line ran to Kilbourn. Curry's stage coach line made its chief revenue by carrying money from the railroad at Kilbourn to towns along the route, but principally to the bank at Baraboo. The people trusted Curry so greatly that they never thought of having their packages of money insured, and many a farmer or housewife would turn money over to him after stopping his coach along the road, and have him pay their bills, or buy things for them at Kilbourn or Baraboo.

Curry received 50 cents for each $1,000 cash he transported across the country. One night he was handed $12,000 to be carried to the Terrell Thomas bank at Baraboo. Just as he was leaving two strangers crawled in to the stage coach, sat in the rear seats and conversed in whispers.

As the stage crossed the river and entered a section thick with pine woods, the two strangers continued to talk in low tones.

Curry recalled that Pat Wildrick and his gang some time before had attacked S. S. Gates and his wife near the same spot, and while the authorities were hunting Pat, a pal of the bandit chief had murdered Gates at this same spot on the road.

Curry whipped up his horses, fully convinced that besides the $12,000 in cash he was carrying two of Pat's bandit gang. He expected to be attacked at any moment.

Arriving at Baraboo, Curry breathed a sigh of relief. There he learned that the two strangers were law-abiding persons, who talked low as a matter of habit.

The entire countryside was uneasy when Pat was at large, and Curry was constantly on the lookout for the bandit.

Pat once escaped from the Baraboo jail, and posses searched the woods for miles around for him. As Curry drove his stage coach peacefully along the road near Oschner park, he spied the bandit leader hiding in the woods. He drove along for a short distance as though nothing unusual happened, until he met some of the posse. He called to them, and led them back to Pat's hiding place. The bandit was speedily recaptured. As Pat was hurried back to the Baraboo jail, he shouted to Curry:

"Young man, I'll see you later."

The Irish bandit had a habit of keeping his word, and Curry and all of Baraboo knew what he meant by saying he would "see him later."

Curry was wary thereafter, but the Irish bandit must have realized that it would be dangerous for him to attack the stage coach driver, as Curry was well guarded constantly from the day of the threat by friends who liked the driver. At any rate, Curry was the one man in the whole countryside whom Pat did not dare raise a hand against.

Pat's career ended soon after that, at the end of a rope in the hands of a mob at Portage, Wis.

Married School Teachers

The Office of Education says that there are no state laws prohibiting married women from teaching in the public schools. In a recent survey made by the National Education association, of 1,532 cities having a population of over 2,000, of the number which reported, 39 per cent employ married woman teachers. Twenty-nine per cent of the cities require a woman to stop teaching as soon as she marries, while 25½ per cent require that the woman resign at the end of the year if she marries during the year.

Acts as Living Receipt for an Atlas

Riley Figures in Dramatic Tale of Early Chicago.

Chicago.—For forty-two years Chicago's map department has possessed a living, breathing receipt for the atlas of the Town of Lake, annexed in 1839. The receipt is John D. Riley, who will soon celebrate his silver anniversary as chief of the department. Back of this lies a series of events, dramatic, romantic, humorous, and tragic.

In 1837, Chicago's area was only 36 square miles. In that year the idea of celebrating the anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America became a lively issue among American cities.

Chicago wanted that exposition but lacked the land upon which to stage it. Carter Harrison was mayor. He called together a group of men of courage and vision, and they planned subtly and big.

Immediately began a campaign amidst five great communities surrounding Chicago, which resulted in the annexation in 1839 of part of the Town of Cicero and all of the Town of Lake, Town of Jefferson, Village of Hyde Park and City of Lake View.

With only 36 square miles of territory, Chicago annexed more than 132 square miles. Meanwhile Carter Harrison had been defeated for re-election and De Witt Greiger had become mayor of Chicago.

Lands Great Exposition.

Mayor Greiger assembled a special trainload of "live wires" and they went to Washington, appearing before congress. They offered more land than any other city had to offer; a liberal "bank roll," splendid arguments regarding location and transportation, and they brought the World's Columbian exposition to Chicago.

But in the meantime John D. Riley, engineer and draftsman, chief of the map department of the Town of Lake, had been having his troubles. When the Town of Lake was annexed it became his duty to deliver its atlas to the City of Chicago.

Chief of Chicago's map department at that time was the Baron Roderick von Maenstein of Germany. Baron von Maenstein was a bit cantankerous and extremely stubborn and dignified. When John D. Riley arrived at the city hall with the atlas of the Town of Lake, the baron was in a bad humor. Mr. Riley requested a receipt. The baron said "no," and having said "no," his dignity would not permit him to "back up." Stalemate!!!

Riley would not part with the atlas without a receipt. The baron would not give a receipt. So back went Riley to the Town of Lake. What to do? What to do? Chicago had to have the atlas.

A Living Receipt.

Hah! Idea! Riley had made the atlas. He was the only man who knew what it was all about. He was needed in Chicago's map department. Would the Baron von Maenstein appoint John D. Riley as an aide in Chicago's map department? Certainly he would, with pleasure!

Graciously the baron appointed John

One Fat Man Worth Six Head of Cattle

Rome, Italy.—"In Liberia a fat man is worth at least six head of cattle," Father J. Collins, Irish priest of the Lyons African Missions, told the Catholic missionary news agency. Fides when recounting his adventures as a missionary in the cannibal parts of West Africa. Father Collins has lived among savage and cannibal tribes for many years and said that cannibalism still prevails in parts of Africa, though it is dying out.

D. Riley his special aide. Graciously Riley accepted the appointment, brought along the atlas of the Town of Lake and became its living, breathing and chuckling receipt.

Twenty-five years ago John D. Riley became chief of the department and is still the living receipt for the atlas of the Town of Lake.

Carter Harrison was again elected mayor of Chicago in 1892, serving throughout the world's fair of 1893. And on October 28, 1893, just at the close of the great Columbian exposition, he was assassinated. That's the tragedy.

Chicago's area today is 210 square miles. Preparing for the 1933 world's fair the city needs more land, upon which to stage the exposition. So this time Chicago is making the land, in Lake Michigan. That's more drama.

Ex-King Alfonso Living Quietly in a Hotel

Former King Passes Time Like French "Bourgeois."

Fontainebleau.—Safely tucked away from political troubles, King, or ex-King Alfonso of Spain—he has not yet announced whether he really did abdicate or not—otherwise known as the duke of Toledo, is living quietly in exile in a first-class hotel at Fontainebleau facing the historic chateau where Napoleon took his leave for the inhospitable island of St. Helena.

With a flock of courtiers and a few faithful friends such as the duchess of Victoria, the duke and duchess of Leceara, the duchess of Santonia, and the marquess de Torres, Alfonso is living here peacefully, like an ordinary French "bourgeois," in this quiet suburban town. However, he has kept twenty Spanish domestics who followed him in exile, including six chauffeurs who drive his luxurious automobiles.

The members of the royal family are occupying several de luxe apartments on the first floor of the Hotel Savoy. The queen receives her visitors in a large salon beautifully decorated in pure Louis XVI style. In her spare time she reads the latest books

Russian Timber Regions to Get Improved Food

Fifty new tea houses and forty refreshment stands are part of the new feeding facilities ordered for the timber districts.

Ontario Town Is Taken Over by Army of Skunks

Orilla, Ont.—Orilla has a problem, a smelly and distasteful one. It concerns skunks. Not one skunk, nor two, nor three, but an army of them.

Forgotten HEROES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Perils of Peace

THE end of war does not always mean the coming of peace. That fact was all too strongly impressed upon the mind of Col. Robert E. Withers of the Confederate army in April, 1865. He was commander of the military prison at Danville, Va., where were held more than 6,000 Union prisoners, guarded only by disabled Confederates and men too old and boys too young to serve in the field. The colonel himself had been wounded many times and was still partly disabled from the last injury.

All through the last winter of the Civil war the specter of famine had been ever-present in Danville—famine for the captives, their guards and the townspeople. Then came the news that Richmond had surrendered and a short time later President Davis and his cabinet passed through the city—the days of the Confederacy were numbered. Came next a detachment of Confederate cavalymen who informed the colonel that they had orders to burn the bridges across the river and all the tobacco warehouses in Danville. Withers protested. It would mean a conflagration which would destroy the town, and since the Confederacy had collapsed in Virginia there was no military advantage to such ruin. Finding his protests unavailing, Colonel Withers declared that he would resist such destruction with armed force and his stand saved the bridges and the warehouses.

The next crisis came after the surrender at Appamattox. A large body of paroled soldiers from Lee's army arrived in Danville. Hungry and in rags, they became excited at the rumor that the warehouses contained the very things they needed and they were urged on by people from the surrounding country who hoped to share in the loot. No sooner had he broken up the rapidly-gathering mob than some Federal "bummers" appeared.

Should they enter, it was likely they would release the Federal prisoners who were clamoring for their freedom and whose temper was an uncertain quantity after the privations they had endured. If they got out of hand, Danville would be in the power of a mob whose excesses would know no limits. So when the trains bearing the "bummers" rolled into town it was met by a group of armed men whose determined attitude, even though their number was small, soon overawed these human vultures and sent them on their way.

The next day the advance guard of the Federal troops appeared and Colonel Withers was happy to turn over to the Union commander the responsibility for keeping order after the prisoners were released. So Danville remembers the name of Robert E. Withers, whose determination and courage saved it from the perils of peace which were greater than the perils of war.

Justice After 24 Years

THE second battle of Bull Run in the Civil war had been fought and again the Union forces had been defeated. The news stunned the North, especially since the name "Bull Run" was one which rankled in its mind after the ignominious affair of July 21, 1861. Rumors of disloyalty and of sympathy with the Southern cause among certain officers in the Union army had been frequent before the battle, and after it was all over the public wanted a scapegoat.

Gen. John Pope, commander of the Union forces, who had been "outsourced" by Stonewall Jackson and who had fought a battle of blunders, was ready to furnish such a scapegoat. He had given Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter certain orders which, as the battle developed, were impossible to obey minutely. So in his report Pope shouldered the blame for the defeat off on to Porter.

Up to this time Porter's record had been a brilliant one. But it could not save him from being made the victim of the second defeat at Manassas.

In November, 1862, he was court-martialed at Washington and in a trial the result of which was a foregone conclusion, was found guilty of the charges, disobedience to orders and cowardice in the face of the enemy "cashiered and forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the government."

But Porter had proved himself a fighting man on the battlefield and a fighting man he intended to continue being. For years he made repeated efforts to have his case reopened but his appeals fell upon deaf ears. Grant, while President, refused to intercede and it was not until access was had to the Confederate records of the battle that new light was thrown upon the case.

A military board under President Hayes acquitted Porter of all fault except unwise criticism of his superior. In May, 1882, President Arthur remitted the sentence but vetoed a bill providing for the payment of back salary. Finally in 1880 a bill was passed by congress and signed by President Cleveland making Porter a colonel of infantry in the regular army, to rank from May 14, 1861, and placing him on the retired list. After holding various civil offices in New York, Porter died in May, 1901 and for a brief moment America recalled the hero of a 24-year fight for justice.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BOWSER WONDERS WHAT AILS PETER

Bow wow, wow! Here is where I get you! Thump, thump, thump! I will never let you!

IF UNCLE BILLY POSSUM thought Peter Rabbit crazy when he ran out from the safety of the bramble-tangle in the Green Forest right under the very nose of Bowser the Hound, Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow hurried over to watch the chase.

you may be sure that Bowser thought the same thing. He had tried his very best to frighten Peter, and Peter had merely sat there and laughed at him. Then Peter suddenly hopped out right in front of him and Bowser was so surprised that for a minute he quite lost his voice and simply stared in the most stupid way. Peter hopped along a few steps and then thumped the ground, which was his way of saying "Catch me if you can!"

"Of course I'll catch you!" roared Bowser. He didn't really believe he would, for he had chased Peter often enough to know that Peter was full of smart tricks, but he wanted to scare Peter, and then perhaps he liked to boast a little, too. Pretty soon he began to think that he really might catch Peter this time. You see usually Peter kept so far ahead of him that he only got a glimpse of him now and then and followed him by keeping his wonderful nose in Peter's tracks, but this time Peter kept only a little way ahead and in plain sight all the time, so that Bowser could follow him without depending on his nose at all. Sometimes Peter would let him get so close that it seemed as if he would surely catch him in the next jump, but somehow he never did.

Bowser was puzzled. There was no doubt about that. Peter wasn't doing any of the things he usually did. He didn't run in a single circle. He didn't once try to mix his trail. He didn't take a single long side jump to break his trail and make Bowser waste time in hunting for it. In fact he didn't play the game at all the way he usually did. You see Bowser had become so used to hunting Peter and never catching him that he had come to look at it as a game, and he knew that Peter looked at it the same way. Right down in his heart Bowser didn't want to catch Peter so much as he tried to make himself think he did. You see if he should catch Peter why that would put an end to these games.

But this time it began to look as if he really might catch him. Peter was running as if he were lame. "Something is the matter with him," thought Bowser. "As sure as I can wag my tail something ails Peter Rabbit. He isn't running right. What under the sun made him come out of that bramble-tangle when he knew that he was perfectly safe there? And why didn't he run into that hollow log we just passed? I couldn't have got him there and he knows it. He must have lost his senses. He must be crazy. Well, if he doesn't know enough to take care of himself it is no fault of mine. It is every one for himself in the Green Forest and Peter can't expect me to let him go after the way he has teased me and fooled me and made fun of me in the past."

So Bowser ran harder than ever and the Green Forest rang with his great voice, so that everybody within hearing knew that there was an exciting chase going on. Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow hurried over to watch it, and when they saw how close to Peter Bowser was, and that Peter wasn't trying a single trick, but seemed to be having the hardest work to keep out of Bowser's reach, they, too, were sure that something was the matter with Peter.

"He's trying to reach the Old Briar Patch, and he'll never get there in the world!" cried Sammy Jay. "He's all out of breath now, and he hasn't reached the edge of the Green Forest yet. I never expected to see the day when Bowser the Hound would catch Peter Rabbit, but he's going to do it this time or my name isn't Sammy Jay."

HUGE TASK IN DROUGHT AID MET BY RED CROSS

Relief Given to Distressed Helps in Meeting Serious Situation, Chairman Payne Says.

"The year of the great drought," as these past twelve or more months will be known to future generations, wrought great damage to millions. Not alone did the crops, which were burned in the fields in twenty-three states, in the summer of 1930, deprive several million persons of food, but the drought disaster continued in the summer of 1931 in the northwestern states, and also brought other minor catastrophes in its wake, such as forest fires, and the grasshopper plague.
More than a year has elapsed since the American Red Cross launched, in August, 1930, its first moves for relief of the drought-stricken farmers, and in that time more than 2,750,000 persons were given food, clothing, medical aid, shelter or other type of assistance. At no period during this year were there fewer than 70,000 persons being aided and at the peak of the relief work on March 1, last, more than 2,000,000 persons were being helped.
Today, still as a result of the drought, the Red Cross is giving extended relief in parts of North Dakota, Washington and Montana, where resources of hundreds of families were wiped out this past summer, when a second and more severe spell of dry weather was prolonged in that region.
This drought relief presented the greatest task that has ever been undertaken by the Red Cross as a peacetime activity. The Mississippi Valley flood of 1927, while more spectacular, and calling for relief of a costlier type, because homes and possessions were swept away, affected hardly one-fourth the number of people who suffered because of the drought.
In addition to the broad program of drought relief still being carried on, John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, has given the following suggestion to Chapter chairmen, in regard to unemployment relief: "Where there is suffering and want from any cause and the fundamental local needs are not being met, Chapters may participate in the community plans for meeting the need."
Some type of general family relief, whether for the drought victims, the unemployed or the war veteran and his family, were carried on by more than 3,000 Red Cross Chapters last year, Judge Payne said.
"The drought relief work of 1930-31," he added, "the relief now being extended following last summer's drought, principally in Montana and North Dakota; the assistance which is being given to ex-service men and their families; and the part which several hundred Chapters are taking locally in their communities' relief measures are activities of the Red Cross, national and local, which have met and are meeting some of the serious needs of the present situation."

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES
... THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

That's All
"Joe, does your baby ever say cute things?"
"We don't want her to say cute things. We want her to shut up."

Adults, like Children, often have worms

Only too often full-grown men and women suffer intensely and expose themselves to expensive medical treatment without realizing that worms are the cause of their trouble. Loss of appetite, restlessness, abdominal pains or nervousness are symptoms. Take Dr. Jayne's Vermifuge. It is pleasant, absolutely harmless and the most efficient preparation known to expel round worms and their eggs. Safe, gentle and sure in action. Get a bottle today from your druggist, DR. D. Mothers... Watch Children's COLDS

COMMON head colds often "settle" in throat and chest where they may become dangerous. Don't take a chance—at the first sniffle rub on Children's Mustrale once every hour for five hours.
Children's Mustrale is just good old Mustrale, you have known so long, in milder form.
This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. Mustrale gets action because it is a scientific "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain. Keep full strength Mustrale on hand, for adults and the milder—Children's Mustrale for little tots. All druggists.

JOHN GRESHAM'S GIRL

By CONCORDIA MERREL

(Copyright.)—WNU Service.

THE STORY

By chance James Lee meets Lucy Gresham, daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder. Lee, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, was sent to prison. He blames Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin, and Gresham's manager, and seeks revenge. Lee inherits wealth, and, in compliance with the will, changes his name from Warrington. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party. Lucy is practically engaged to Ames. She meets Lee, who makes love to her. With Gresham's approval, Lucy and Lee are married. Lee stuns the girl by telling her he does not love her, and hates her "whole breed." She hears the story of his wrongs, and his determination to be avenged. She believes in his innocence of the crime for which he was convicted. "Linforth's," rival of Gresham's, shows a determination to crush its competitor. Lee tells Lucy he is "Linforth's," and means to ruin her father. Lucy is hurt by Jocelyn Upton's assertion that Lee loved her before he met Lucy, and the latter believes her. Jocelyn seeks to win Lee, but is repulsed.

CHAPTER VII

Lucy Meets Macklin

Lucy arrived at Newchester shortly after five, and there, Ames came into the train to greet her. He noticed that she looked rather tired, but put that down to the length of the journey. Within five minutes they were in his big car, driving to the Royal hotel. "Did your father suggest the Royal to you?" he asked, as they drew up outside the main entrance. "No, Jim did..." she answered, and caught a quick breath. "Oh, he knows Newchester, then?" "He... stayed here, once... ages ago..." She couldn't say it quite evenly, because it was utterly against her nature to be anything but absolutely frank. "It's a nice, homely place. A bit old-fashioned, but jolly good food of the roast beef and plum pudding type..." And it was able to get you the best suite. I've got to bolt back to Edgestone just to clear up some business I left unfinished. Shall you feel sufficiently rested to dine with me to-night?" "Yes, I'm all right."

"Then that's settled. I'll call for you at seven, and then I'll hear all this pressing reason of yours for this perfectly joyful visit... Au revoir." He left her and she went up to her rooms. Here tea was brought to her, and she drank it gratefully. She had a lot to think about. She must be careful what she said to Oliver tonight. She must tell him how she was planning to help Gresham's, without making him suspicious that she had any inner knowledge of the situation. For her plan to help Gresham's was in reality a plan to save Jim by defeating him. She could not let him be successful in this fight that was not a clean fight; this campaign that all honest men would call a dirty trick; that would make all decent men shun him and eye him askance... If her help should be no good, at least it should not be said that she had not tried. But Oliver must not know that her anxiety to help Gresham's was just a disguise for her passionate desire to save Jim.

She dressed presently, and was ready when Ames called for her. He took her to the best restaurant in Newchester and when dinner was well under way, said: "Now then, Lucy, what was it you so urgently wanted to see me about?" "About Gresham's," she answered, "and Linforth's." He looked at her a little surprised. "Since when has John Gresham's girl taken such an interest in the business?" he asked, with a laugh. She leaned across the table. "No; don't laugh, Oliver. I'm in earnest," she protested. "I know I've never taken much interest in Gresham's. But I do now. You can call it a newly awakened sense of... responsibility, if you like. Anyway, I don't like to hear that we are... threatened. Oliver, we mustn't let Linforth's beat us. We mustn't." She leaned nearer still and her face was extraordinarily earnest. He looked at her a moment. "I'm not going to imagine for a single second that Linforth's will," he said slowly. "And I honestly don't think Linforth's can. The campaign they are running against us is a dead loss to them pretty nearly every time. That can't go on for long."

"It might go on long enough to drag us down into the loss, too," she argued. "Only if they've a mighty big capital." "Perhaps they have," she said quickly. "Perhaps they have heaps of money; and heaps of... of malicious, revengeful feeling..." She drew a breath. He laughed slightly. "They've got that, all right," he said shortly. "Yes," she said slowly. "They've got that all right... I mean," she caught herself up quickly. "They seem to have. But they mustn't win, Oliver. They mustn't be allowed to win. It will be... an awful disaster if... they," she very nearly had said "he," "should be allowed to win." "Well, dear, they shan't win if Gresham's can prevent it. You may be sure of that. But we, no better than they, can afford to lose for ever," he answered. "I've been thinking about it, Oliver, and it seems as if it would be so terribly important to us... So awful if they should win. There's nothing very much I can do, but I can help in one way. Money, Oliver, you can count on every penny, to the very last, of my money, the money that mother left me; to help Gresham's; to beat Linforth's."

He looked at her, smiling. "You warm-hearted, generous dear," he said. "But your father will never allow your money to be used."

"Then he mustn't know. That's why I came to you. I haven't said anything to daddy. But, Oliver, if you were to let Linforth's win this disgraceful victory, because you wouldn't touch my money; when my money would have beaten them, I'll never, never forgive you." Her intensity astonished him.

"Why, Lucy, I'd no notion you felt it like this!" he cried. "But I'm glad of your interest in the old show. I thought you didn't feel it; just took what it yielded without question or... affection." He spoke a little diffidently, as a man will when he speaks of something that means a lot to him. "Then if you're glad of that, Oliver, you'll promise me to use my money, if it should be necessary. Or before it's necessary; if it should ever be useful. I've got a heap, as you know. And it's, every penny of it, Gresham's."

"What does—Jim—say to this?" he asked, and the question came so suddenly that she started, saying: "What!" And, recovering quickly, managed a very good imitation of a laugh and went on quickly: "Oh, Jim isn't interested in what I do with my money. He has such a lot, that mine doesn't count," she went on, conscious that she was speaking very fast, "and since he... does... precisely as he likes with his own... he'd be the very first to admit the justice of my doing as I like with mine..."

She could not prevail upon Oliver to give the definite promise she wanted, but he did say that he'd remember it when he had need. And with that Lucy had to be content, and after that, they talked in a more general way. Next day, he took her over the yards and offices of Gresham's, showing her everything; and explaining things to her, lucidly and well. She was tremendously interested in everything and something tremendously more than interested, too. For, though to Ames this was merely the familiar place where the work of Gresham's went on, to her it was the place where Jim had done his bit of that work. The place where he had put his big energy into his job; his hope and ambition, too. The place where disgrace had fallen upon him, and the doors of the future had suddenly closed against him... She spoke of the Warrington case. Asking questions about it as unconcernedly as she could, while her heart threatened to suffocate her with its violent beating.

"You've got that wretched man on your conscience, Lucy," Ames told her. "Your father said you had been talking about him only a little while ago." "His case," she answered, flushing, "is part of the history of Gresham's. I want to know it all; in every detail."

"Then you shall," he said, easily, and steered the talk along happier channels. As they were passing the entrance to the offices, a man came running briskly downstairs and out through the wide doorway. Ames stopped him. "Oh, Macklin," he said, "will you take Mrs. Lee to have a look at the works? She is here to inspect."

The man turned quickly, a smile on his lips.

"I will indeed, sir," he answered, with an air of very respectful pleasure.

"Go with Mr. Macklin, Lucy," said Ames, "and when you've seen everything you want to see, tell him to bring you up to my office."

Story of Samson Found in Oriental Literature

Discoveries on the site of the ancient city of Beth-Shelesh, in Palestine, by the Haverford college and archeological expedition, confirm the scientific supposition that this gray mound on the border between Dan and Judah was once a part of Egypt's domain, once Philistine, once Hebrew, once Roman, once Byzantine; but it would have been more interesting if the American archeologists had found something like a visiting card of the giant Samson, or a bit of jewelry with the monogram of a lady named Delilah, in the ruins. For it is supposed that it was here, at Beth-Shelesh, that the famous betrayal of Samson—the shearing of the luxuriant locks, which resulted in the loss of his Herculean powers—took place. Modern criticism is inclined to make rather light of the feats of Samson, as recorded in the Scriptures. Similar tales of a gigantic hero—even of his temptation and fall—are found in oriental literatures that go before the Hebrews.

Lucy went off with her new guide. He was very attentive, very respectful. But Lucy disliked him. She could not have told just why. Perhaps it was the touch, ever so slight, but still a touch of cringing in his deference. He was just a shade too respectful. Lucy found herself jarred and irritated by it, and she was glad when she had seen all she wanted to and could ask him to show her to Oliver's office. He rose as Macklin showed Lucy in, and pushed up a chair for her.

"Since you are so interested in that affair, Lucy," he said, "I've looked out the various papers and notes about it, so that you can see them. Mrs. Lee is anxious to know that Warrington had a square deal, Macklin," he added. Macklin was at the door, just going out. He stopped; stood still a moment; then turned back. "I wish we could think he didn't, sir. He always seemed such a fine young fellow."

Lucy felt an almost irresistible impulse to get up and hit out at something or some one; Macklin perhaps, for the smug patronage of his words and tone. "Such a fine young fellow... Jim! With all his strength and courage; and all he had had to suffer!... To be patronized by this obsequious, insincere, shiftily-looking man..." "Mrs. Lee thinks, very rightly, that, as future owner of Gresham's, she ought to acquaint herself with all the details of Gresham's history. The Warrington case is certainly one of the details." To Lucy he said "Mr. Macklin was very much to that case, Lucy. No one knows more of it, or can judge more impartially than he."

She Had a Lot to Think About.

Lucy raised her eyes suddenly and looked at Macklin. It came flooding in upon her mind that he must be one of the men concerned in the business, of whom Jim had spoken. He had never mentioned Macklin's name, but evidently this rather ratty little man was intimately concerned in it all. She wondered just what his part in it had been.

Just for an instant the rather near-together eyes of Macklin met Lucy's and held; and then turned aside, as with a word or two to Oliver, he excused himself and left them. Once outside the door he walked briskly down the corridor, then turned and tip-toed back to the office door; stooped and laid his ear to the key-hole. What he heard was certainly interesting and eminently informing.

"Who is that man?" Lucy was asking, rather abruptly. "Macklin? Why, he's second in command here. Second to me; and one of the finest servants this show has ever secured," Oliver explained. "I don't like him. He's insincere."

"How? What evidence have you of that?" Evidence! And she had only her woman's answer to give: "I just know it." Oliver laughed again. "You dear," he said, pettingly. She rose suddenly, irritated by his tone. "Don't," she said sharply. "This is serious. That man isn't sincere. You can laugh and scoff as much as you like. But I know I'm right. If I were in your place, Oliver, I wouldn't have him working for me for two seconds."

"Perhaps, then, it's just as well, for the good of Gresham's, apart from the good of poor old Macklin that I am sitting in this chair, and not you. Big businesses aren't to be run on likes and dislikes; on instincts and feelings, but on reason, Lucy. A man has to be proved untrustworthy before, I'll believe him so."

"Proved?" she countered, "just as it was proved against... this man... Warrington?" The words came so difficultly and she pointed to the papers on the desk. "Exactly," he answered. She laughed. It wasn't a very laughing sound, and said: "All right. But I don't agree with you. If you cut out instincts and feelings, you are cutting out the subtlest, swiftest method of summing up a character, there is. I'll borrow these Warrington records, if I may, Oliver. I'd like to go into them carefully."

He gathered them up, snapped a rubber band around them, and handed them to her. She said good-by and went to the door. Macklin turned and sped, fleet and silent-footed, along the corridor, and was out in the main yard when Lucy passed through to the taxi that was waiting for her at the gate.

"She's got some reason, beyond the mere desire to see justice done, for her anxiety over this Warrington business," he thought to himself. "And I'd very much like to know just what the reason is..."

Lucy was deep in those papers all the afternoon and evening. The evidence, as Oliver had said, seemed terribly strong against Jim. But her belief in him was stronger still, and it did not waver, even though she could see no clear support for it.

There was just one thing her mind worried over and couldn't leave, and that was the fact that Macklin's evidence against Jim seemed to have had terrific effect. She could see now, just how Macklin came into the scheme of things, and his narrow face was often before her mind's eye.

It was nearly ten o'clock before the thought came to her. "Supposing Macklin had supported Jim in his contention that he had lost his wallet before the robbery took place?... Supposing that, when Macklin had been asked whether Jim had spoken of the loss of it, he had said yes instead of no?"

At that point, she found her head drumming... Why, of course, it was that point that really had decided the whole case. That one point. Really, that one word: that "no," of Macklin's. Then the thing resolved itself to this: Which was telling the truth; Jim or Macklin? She knew where her faith lay, and was instantly raging with indignation that anyone, given the opportunity for believing either in Jim or in Macklin, should deliberately have chosen the man who, it seemed to her, was so obviously insincere in everything he said.

There was one thing she found in the papers that started a new trail, and that was the name of the cottage where Jim had lived. "Brady's cottage," it was called, and it seemed to be situated somewhere between Newchester and Edgestone. She felt that she wanted to see it; turned the thought over in her mind for a while, and at last went to bed with her mind made up. She would go to Brady's cottage tomorrow morning. When a maid brought up her breakfast next morning, Lucy asked her whether she knew Brady's cottage. "Oh, yes, madam. Quite a landmark the place is," the girl answered at once. "It's supposed to bring bad luck to anyone who lives in it. Old Mrs. Brady—Mother Brady they used to call her, she lived there for years, and her husband died there, and one of her boys was killed in the war, and her girl ran away with a man who wasn't any good... And then there's the tree, you know, a huge elm, and every one said it 'ud fall and smash the cottage some time. And on top of all that, the robbery, well, it's enough to give a place a bad name, isn't it, madam?" "What robbery was that?" asked Lucy, spreading butter on a triangle of thin toast, with great attention. "It was under the elm that the poor clerk was found; all bleeding, they say he was, and unconscious. I never saw him, but I've been to the place often; it's empty now and no one won't have nothing to do with it. Can't blame anyone really, can you? I wouldn't, I know." As she was hurrying away, Lucy said: "How'd you get to the cottage? I think I'll go and have a look at it some time today..." She obtained all the directions she needed, and the girl left her. To Classify Blood Stains
Classification of blood stains is being made by a German expert as an aid in crime detection. He believes that eventually the stains on the clothing of a suspect may be classified so that it quickly will be matched with that of the victim. While courts have recognized blood stains were made by human blood or not, there has been no test which will accurately determine the blood group of stains which have thoroughly dried. The expert believes he will supply this deficiency.

Good Health Is Your Natural State

But you can't expect to enjoy good health if you are allowing disease germs to accumulate and multiply somewhere in your system. Coughs, colds, bronchitis, tonsillitis, rheumatism and often neuritis are the work of disease organisms which must be attacked and destroyed if good health is to be restored. These and many other more serious types of infection may be controlled and good health restored by chemically destroying the germs, using B. & M., The Penetrating Germicide, to stop the bacterial poisoning. The B. & M. treatment is unlike any other—quick and positive in action. Your druggist should have B. & M. in stock. The Midnight Telephone Call

By CORONA REMINGTON

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

MIRIAM OSBORNE entered her little apartment, hung her hat on the rack in the tiny hallway, ran her hand through her soft bobbed hair and breezed into the kitchenette as fresh and happy as if she had just waked up in the morning.

"Well, mother, I gave the boss notice this afternoon. I'm leaving the fifteenth."

Mrs. Osborne stopped in the midst of taking a pan of potatoes off the miniature gas stove and stared at her daughter.

"What'll we do now? What happened?" she asked, dismayed.

"Nothing happened and we'll do very well. Don't you worry about that. I've most got another job promised at $15 a month more. Anyway, you know we could get along if I didn't work at all."

"But what made you quit, Miriam? I'd rather you'd kept a job you were certain of at $15 less than to risk not having a job at all. I believe you got fired. Was that it, honey? Seems like you could tell your mother. You know I wouldn't blame you."

"No, I fired myself, thank you. And the boss has promised me a wonderful letter of recommendation when I leave, so now you know I haven't done anything to make 'em mad. . . . When can we eat?" she asked, suddenly changing the subject. "I'm hungry as a bear."

Occasionally, when Miriam was busy with her plate, Mrs. Osborne would risk an exploring glance in her direction, but the girl's face failed to divulge her secret. She looked happy and decidedly interested in her supper—that was all.

The middle of July she left her position and went to the firm of Ellington and Ellington and three weeks after that Tom Ramond, the head bookkeeper, was bringing her home in his little car every afternoon. Twice he stayed for supper in the baby kitchenette.

"I understand everything now," Mrs. Osborne laughed one day.

"Understand everything about what, mother?" the girl asked puzzled.

"Why you changed positions."

"Why?"

"Because of Tom."

"Wrong, first guess. I never saw Tom until I'd been there two or three days. But he certainly does work fast, doesn't he? I think he's wonderful."

"Well, why did you quit then, Miriam?" persisted Mrs. Osborne, determined to get to the bottom of the thing at last and give her mind a rest.

"I quit because I decided it wasn't any fun to be in love all by myself. When you feel yourself beginning to slip and the man doesn't show any signs of slipping too, it's best to get away. I believe there's many a girl has missed the right one because she was so busy pining after some one she couldn't have. I was getting cuckoo about the boss' secretary and he couldn't see anything less than a bank president's daughter, so I said to myself, 'This is where you'd better take Miriam's man-loving little heart out o' danger.'"

Miriam looked her loveliest when Tom called, but his manner disappointed her from the start. He seemed moody and preoccupied and she sighed a little as she remembered that while she was dressing she had imagined his exclamation of surprise when he saw her in her dainty frock. The exclamation had not been forthcoming. She had hoped that he would suggest a ride, but he did not and they sat dully in the stuffy little parlor, one more uncomfortable than the other.

When he had finally taken leave, she dropped limply into a chair by the reading lamp. If only she hadn't talked so much to her mother, or if only she didn't have to sleep in the same room with her. She would be sure to wake up and ask her whether Tom had proposed.

She sat there until nearly twelve when she was startled by the sudden jangling of the telephone. Irritably she took down the receiver.

"This is Tom. I was afraid you'd be in bed, dear, but I was so miserable I couldn't sleep."

"What's the matter?" she asked in alarm.

"I went over there tonight determined to ask you to—ask you to marry me, and then when I saw you; you looked so pretty and far away, somehow, I was afraid you wouldn't even consider a bookkeeper. A girl like you could marry almost anyone."

"Afraid of me?" she laughed happy once more. "Now you know you're kidding, Tom. But you come over tomorrow night and. . . ."

"Can't I come now?" he broke in eagerly.

"No, silly, it's nearly twelve. You go to bed. Good-night—dear."

She hung up the receiver and with a triumphant little hop and skip hurried into the bedroom to tell her mother the news.

Mind and Body

Some physical conditions that precede mental breakdowns are faulty nutrition, infections of the teeth and tonsils, nervous disorders and defects in the glands of internal secretion.

DADDY TALK DAIRY

SEE THAT MILKING MACHINE IS CLEAN

Simple Method by Which It Can Be Done.

Most of the certified milk produced on this continent is milked with a machine. This one statement should prove conclusively that the machine itself is not at fault when it is known that most of the very worst milk is also machine drawn. If we are to use a milking machine it has to be kept clean. At one time this was regarded as a difficult proposition. To carry out the cleaning instructions that came with most milking machines would require an hour's work after the milking was completed. This is more time than most farmers are prepared to give to cleaning up and the short cuts that have been adopted have resulted in making the machine unpopular with many factory operators and distributors. Prof. E. H. Parfitt, Purdue university, has now come to the aid of the dairymen with a simple cleaning process that takes no more time than the milking of one cow. Parfitt does not take the teat cups apart. He flushes them as soon as milking is over, by drawing cold water through and then hot water at a temperature of 165 degrees. The teat cups and tubes are then hung on a rack in such a way that they can be filled with disinfectant and kept filled till the next milking. The disinfecting solution is made by dissolving a 13-ounce can of lye in a gallon of water. This is the stock solution. Six ounces of the stock solution is added to a gallon of water and this is the solution for the rubber parts of the machine. Several manufacturers of milking machines are now recommending this method.

Finds Economical Source of Dairy Feed in Silo

"A well-constructed silo provides the most economical source of dairy feed available for the man with a herd of ten or more cows," says John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at North Carolina state college. "One acre of good corn preserved in the form of silage has a milk-producing value equivalent to about one and one-half acres when preserved in the form of shocked corn. There is a waste of about 50 per cent in shocked corn when fed as stover. However, when corn is converted into silage, waste at feeding time is practically eliminated and the entire corn plant is consumed with relish by the cows."

Silage is also a valuable supplement to dry feed in winter and helps to keep up the milk flow at a comparatively low cost. It is also economical for feeding dry cows and heifers about six months of age, says Arey.

He does not recommend a silo for a herd of less than ten cows. Succulent feed for smaller herds may be provided by pasture and soiling crops in summer, with the aid of root crops in winter.

Pays to Test Cows

The tester in the Otsego-Montmorency Dairy Herd Improvement association, on looking through the three herd books of Mr. Logan, found that for the first year of testing the average production of butterfat was 257.2 pounds, the second year it was 333.4 pounds and the third year it was 347.2 pounds. With the price of butterfat practically the same for the three years, the average value of product above feed cost the first year was $92.24, and the third year it was $103.04—a net profit of $56.28 more per cow the third year than the first.

Mr. Logan, who feeds a balanced ration according to production, said that he wanted to be in the association as long as he kept dairy cows, as that was the only way to tell which cows were paying.—Michigan Farmer.

Separating Surplus Milk

Reports from all over the country indicate that many farmers who have heretofore been selling whole milk are now separating all or at least part of their surplus and shipping only their base milk. An Illinois producer found that for the first month in which he followed this practice, he received $18.05 more than he did the previous month besides having several thousand pounds of skim milk to feed his pigs and chicks. He was actually paid $9.34 more for 1,673 pounds less milk than he had been given for the previous month when he had shipped whole milk entirely. In addition he received $8.71 for the cream.

DAIRY HINTS

Check up on the freshening dates for cows. They should have at least six weeks' dry period with an abundance of good feed. Cheaper milk production will be the reward.

Production of all Guernsey cows on official test during the last year set a new breed average of 9,975.6 pounds of milk and 493.8 pounds of fat. Cows on herd improvement test averaged 346.4 pounds of fat.

FARM POULTRY

KEEPING TAB ON AGES OF CHICKS

Good Reasons Why Matter Is Important.

The question may arise in the minds of some as to why it is necessary to be able to tell the differences in ages of pullets.

The answer is that when it is time to put the pullets in the laying house, there are some are not worth keeping. These should be sorted out, and it is well to keep all of the same age and development by themselves. The earliest maturing pullets are usually the best ones.

If pullets of all ages are allowed to run together on range, it will be impossible to tell the difference between the slow-developing ones of the earlier hatches and the fast-growing ones of the later hatches. Naturally, such birds are not all of the same value and should not be placed in the same pen.

Unless pedigree hatching and breeding are done and all chicks banded, such pullets cannot easily be told apart. They can easily be marked by toe punching or slitting the webs between the toes. By using different combinations it is a very simple matter to know definitely the ages of the various pullets.

Poultry House Litter Carrier Has Advantage

In some of the newer commercial poultry houses a litter carrier and track has been installed to great advantage. The track is supported from the rafters just in front of the dropping boards. The carrier when in position is just right to receive the droppings as they are scraped from the boards.

The track may be extended through the house if the doors between units are arranged properly. At the end, or at both ends the track can be extended to allow the carrier to be dumped into a manure spreader.

This system greatly reduces the labor of cleaning the house. One great advantage of the large flock is the fact that labor-saving equipment can be installed with profit, permitting one man to care for many birds with a minimum of labor.—Exchange.

Care of Ducks

When duck eggs are hatched in an incubator, the temperature should be 102 degrees during the first week. For the remainder of the hatch, it should be held as near as possible to 103 degrees.—The thermometer bulb should be placed level with the top of the duck eggs.

During the last ten days of the hatch the eggs can be sprinkled daily with water which is close to machine temperature. The eggs will usually begin to pip the 26th day and the machine should be closed. But if moisture appears lacking and the ducklings are having trouble in emerging, it may be best to open the machine and add moisture. If possible, you should obtain the incubator instructions for hatching ducklings in the type of machine you are using. The best results can be obtained by following any special instructions advised by the manufacturer.

Poultry Hints

The fact that the poultry industry can expand or contract rapidly with conditions makes it a stable one.

Artificial light for poultry merely makes a normal condition during an abnormal time and is not a forcing process, if used with reasonable judgment.

The careful division of pullets into laying units makes their management and feeding in laying flocks during the pullet year easier, more economical, and more exact.

A poultry man who continuously selects his breeding hens from the late molting group in his flock, may expect a higher egg production during the late summer and early fall.

Thoroughly repair, clean, and disinfect all laying houses before the pullets are confined to winter quarters.

Many poultrymen find that night lighting of baby chicks increases the growth since the chicks eat and drink at night.

Do not scald your squabs before picking for market. Learn to dry-pick they have a much better appearance two or three days later than birds that were scalded before picking.

Bacillary white diarrhea of chicks can be controlled by testing breeding hens and eliminating the germ carriers.

Culling should be a continuous process, starting at the time chicks are received from the hatchery and extending over the entire laying period.

Principal defects of eggs delivered to candling stations which materially affect their sales value are dirt, yellow yolks, murky whites, shrinkage, heat, looseness and poor shells.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

Model's Clothes Stolen

A wax model in a lobby showcase in Washington, D. C., attracted more than usual attention when passersby began to notice she was clad only in stockings. Police were notified by the night watchman and learned that a thief had stripped the model after breaking the catch in the glass door to her showcase. A coat and dress, as well as several other garments, were missing.

BIG RESULTS FROM LITTLE IRON RING

One hundred years ago, on August 29, 1831, the son of an Irish blacksmith, who from youth had been fascinated by the mysteries of magnetism and electricity, took an iron ring, wound around it two coils of wire, attached the end of one coil to an electric battery, that of the other to a galvanometer and watched to see what would happen. On the galvanometer the indicator needle moved.

In that experiment the modern world of the dynamo was born; it evolved from the little iron ring in the hands of Michael Faraday, whose brilliant mind had conceived the theory of induction. In a century an industry worth at least $100,000,000,000 has been built upon the coiled wires and their iron core; a beneficial revolution has been worked in the domain of industry; Niagara and 10,000 other cataracts have been linked to the tasks of civilization; light—for the pressure of a button—has been put at the command of man and the dark corners of the earth have been made luminous. The National Electric Light association recently reported to President Hoover that its members would spend $800,000,000 this year in new construction. Wheels revolve in factories, trolley cars move human masses from homes to work and work to homes, smokeless locomotives haul trains across country; in the household are vacuum cleaners, dish-washers, clothes-washers and what not; on the farm cows are milked and other chores are done with far less of human labor, because a century ago Faraday had an idea.

Probably no more impressive measure may be found of the accelerated progress of civilization than in contemplating what has developed in 100 years from Faraday's iron ring.

Doorstep Diplomacy

"Are you a bill collector?" "Just want a debt parley with your husband, thass all."

Sectionally Speaking

"So you're from the South, eh? What part?" "South Dakota."—Capper's Weekly.

"FATIGUE?"

I just postpone it!"

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others."

"Then I learned to rely on Bayer Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache is rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Bayer Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable, the pain seldom returns!

Keep Bayer Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practice.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying aspirin. Bayer is genuine. Tablets with the Bayer cross are safe.

The Dear Girl
"Could you be happy with love in a cottage?"
"If we have a good car."

The lawyer's best friend is the man who makes his own will.

Pen and ink are the best witnesses.

Civilization will save itself; but it will depend on its intellect, not on its emotions. That, we suppose, is being hardboiled.

When in the mood one can yaw at any kind of a love sonnet.

Who knows most, doubts not.

Miss Ada Bicking, state director of music education, recommends that the children and the family try to gather around the radio and sing during these programs even though the time during noon lunch hour is limited. In the event there is no radio in the schools, it is hoped that some one of the near neighbors will make possible the singing of these beautiful songs by the thousands and thousands of children in rural and small urban schools.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

"Bad Advice at the Cross Roads" During the student life of Aaron Burr at Princeton, a religious revival swept through the university. The young Burr, convinced that he should lead a better life, went to the president of the institution to seek advice. "Mr. President," he said, "I have made up my mind to consider the claims of Christ. What would you do in the situation?" This advice was given: "Burr, if I were you, I would wait until the excitement of the revival is over and then I would think it out carefully." Aaron bowed his head for a moment and said, "Mr. President, that is just what I'll do." And this was Aaron Burr, later the murderer of Hamilton, conspirator against the government and arch criminal of his age. On that crucial moment in Princeton seemed to depend his everlasting destiny. In one of our states there is a court house so situated that rain drops falling on one side of the roof descend into Lake Erie and on through the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic ocean. Drops on the other side trickle down by rivulet and river to the Ohio and Mississippi finally to the Gulf of Mexico. A faint breath of wind determines the destiny of these raindrops for three thousand miles. In like manner, a single act, a word of advice, a right or wrong example at the cross roads of decision, may mean the salvation or loss of a soul. What a lesson and warning to those who should be examples. The thought might be concluded in the words of Paul, "Seeing that we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily besets us and run with patience the race that is set before us, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

For the alleviation of the present distress and for its permanent cure the country does not need "a change in conditions" but she does need "a change in persons." The church and the Bible can help under God to bring about these changes if we will do our part and attend church. Odd Scene in Sky During a rainstorm at Hereford, England, a remarkable spectacle was seen in the sky. Suddenly the heavy clouds seemed to part and a huge moving ball of incandescent light was seen, the black clouds being illuminated as if by a searchlight. For a moment it appeared to be stationary, then it slowly sank until it vanished behind the hills.
