Less than 400 bird hunters' tally cards have been returned to the Department of Conservation, and tabulations of information given on the cards is being held up with the hope that other hunters will report their observations so that more detailed and accurate information will be obtained.

The cards, distributed to hunters at the opening of the bird hunting season ask for information as to the number of pheasants, ruffed grouse and prairie chicken seen, how many were bagged and where they were bagged. Hunters were also asked to give their opinions as to birds and bird hunting conditions.

Form cards will be mailed individuals on request or the information may be given to the Department in a letter.

COMEDY TEAM TOGETHER AGAIN IN NEW LAUGH HIT
The bubbling, irrepressible nuts, Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey and Dorothy Lee, are back again—all reunited in one long, grand paroxysm of mirth and laughter, Radio Pictures' "Caught Plastered," at the State Theatre Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

This production opens a new field of comedy. It's different! From the time they roll into a mid-western town via box car pullman, until they foil the bootlegger king and save the beautiful old lady from the poor house and a pauper's grave, it's different.

It is the long awaited combination of slam-bang, knock 'em dead comedy and a real story. Not a dull moment. The dialogue is by Ralph Spence and what the boys say is funny because of the action behind the situations.

Lucy Beaumont, Jason Roberts and DeWitt Jennings complete the cast.

"Caught Plastered" is a worthy vehicle to signalize the re-mobilizing of Radio's comedy trio, for it tops their past successes, even in "The Cuckoos," "Rio Rita," "Half Shot at Sunrise," "Hook, Line and Sinker" and "Cracked Nuts."

The New Congress Goes to Work

A. E. GIDDINGS SEAL SALE DIRECTOR FOR TAWAS CITY

With better health for all Michigan as their goal, millions of their coats, each drawn by a quartet of diminutive horses, will journey across Michigan between Thanksgiving Day and Christmas. The miniature coach and horses are part of the design of the old-time coaching scene shown on the 1931 tuberculosis Christmas seal, whose sale provides funds for continuation of the statewide anti-tuberculosis campaign.

A. E. Giddings has been appointed seal sale director for Tawas City in the 1931 sale, and will arrange for distribution of the health stickers among local residents. 7,500 seals have been received from the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, representing the Tawas City objective in the sale.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Giddings to the management, the following statement was made by T. J. Werle, executive secretary of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association:

"There probably are no busier persons anywhere than those who are associated with the school system. When one of these busy people voluntarily adds to his many other duties the responsibility of directing the sale of Christmas seals, we feel that he is indeed showing an unselfish spirit of community interest."

PARTIAL REPORT OF COUNTY RED CROSS DRIVE RECEIVED
Reports from two divisions of the Isoco County Red Cross drive have been received at the headquarters of the local chapter. The first report to be received was from Whitmore. This report was very satisfactory. Twenty-four members were secured and $17.50 was received in donations from organizations and individuals. The total amount received was $41.50.

The second report was received from Tawas City. A total membership of 124 was secured here. Donations to the amount of $40.00 were received, making a total of $128.00.

Reports from the remaining divisions are expected during the week.

It has to do with the conflict between marriage and a career, effecting both a father and his twenty-year-old son. Robert Milton directed.

1932 QUOTA OF AUTOMOBILE LICENSE PLATES RECEIVED

Register of Deeds F. F. Taylor, who has charge of the local branch office of the secretary of state, said today, "License plates are available now for new cars, and will be on general distribution December 1. Have your application blank all filled out before applying for a license and be sure to bring the title to your car."

Three licenses for new cars have been issued. W. A. Evans, Napoleon Lavoie and Wm. Gurley, all of East Tawas, were the purchasers. No commercial plates have been sold.

The plate numbers this year for Isoco county run from 1-123-251 to 1-130-850. Isoco county's quota of license plates is 1600 passenger, 250 commercial and 100 trailer.

In the new color combination of white letters on a blue background the plates attract considerable attention and favorable comment as much easier to read than the 1931 plates.

The new plates are available only for new automobiles until December 1, when they will become available for used cars as well.

STATE OFFERS SPLENDID FILMS IN DOUBLE BILL

Two very entertaining features, "The Beloved Bachelor" and "Graft," form the splendid double bill offering at the State Theatre next week Wednesday and Thursday.

A tender and intriguing love story is presented in "The Beloved Bachelor," the first picture in which Paul Lukas appears as the feature lead. This talkie places the handsome and highly effective Lukas in a role such as his many admirers would have ordered for him, had they a choice in the matter. He is a thoroughly lovable personage throughout the action of the play.

The story is deftly worked out with as little resorting to the dramatic as possible. In fact, it is almost entirely romantic—with generous dashes of comedy furnished by Charlie Ruggles, Marjorie Gateson and Harold Minnir. The finale is exciting and pleasant. It is all achieved without the firing of a single shot or Ruggles' spontaneous wise-cracks. Dorothy Jordan and Vivienne Osborne play the important feminine parts.

It took a newspaper man to write the story of "Graft," Universal's stirring newspaper drama with a cast headed by Regis Toomey, Sue Carol, Dorothy Revier and Boris Karloff. "Graft" tells an exciting story of a cub reporter who matches wits with the crooked politicians of a great city, in a desperate effort to solve a murder case and "swing" a mayoralty election.

Gives Description of Strange Maladies

Dr. T. H. Johnston, director of District Health Department No. 2, of which Isoco county is a part, described strange maladies, which he had seen in other parts of the world, in the following article which he has submitted to the press of the district:

Thanksgiving day has been observed in this country for over 300 years. The Pilgrim Fathers inaugurated this excellent custom. On September 6th in the year 1620, they set sail from England and landed this side of the Atlantic on Christmas day. In the following year they set aside a day if thanksgiving for benefits received, and since that time the festival has been well celebrated, especially in the New England States.

Despite numerous ills, we have many benefits to be thankful for, and not the least of these is health and strength. Though we have disease enough among us, one might give a thought to the disease we escape and return thanks on that account. For example—I remember once, standing on the street corner in a South American seaport city, watching the crowd go by. They were a mixed company, Portuguese, Negroes, Indians, Caribs and Hindus. Presently an elderly Hindu came past in a meagre costume very like that of Kipling's Gunga Din—

".....Nothing much before, and rather less than half of that behind."

But the curious thing about the old man was, that though skinny as a crow, he had one very fat leg which seemed a burden to him. This man was suffering from a disease fairly common in that part of the world and known in medical text books as Filariasis.

This disease is acquired in the following way: A type of mosquito known in those parts is capable of injecting tiny worms into the blood of those they bite. These worms are so small that they may be seen only through a microscope, but when present in large numbers are capable of producing a swelling, most usually in a leg. Many remedies have been tried for this disease, but with little success. The victims of Filariasis usually struggle along for the balance of their days with a fat leg. Some of them in desperation, go to a surgeon and submit to amputation of the enlarged limb.

The Malays, Indians of Central America are subject to a disease called Leishmaniasis—so named after Leishman, who made a special study of it. This disease usually affects the ears. At first a pimple comes on the ear and later it develops into an open sore that eats away the flesh. I have seen Indians in Central America with their ears completely destroyed in this manner. The ears are attacked because the organisms causing the disease are spread by the insects of the jungle. The Indian hunters in crawling through dense undergrowth frequently get their ears scratched, thus giving the organisms a means of entrance.

ELK IS KILLED IN ALCONA COUNTY

The first prosecution for the killing of an elk in Alcona county, if not in the lower peninsula of Michigan took place last week when Raymond G. Shaw of Charlotte appeared before Justice F. A. Beede and pleaded guilty to killing a bull elk a short distance from Curran in Mitchell township.

BRIDGE CONTRACTS LET TO GRAND RAPIDS FIRM

Contracts have been let on U. S. 26 three and a half miles southwest of Alabaster, bridge crossing Whitney Drain, for two reinforced concrete abutments, to John W. Hertel, Grand Rapids, at $11,454.38.

"PALMY DAYS" JOINS MUSICAL STAGE STARS

Although Eddie Cantor and Charlotte Greenwood were leading stars of the musical comedy stage for several years, it remained for the screen to bring them together.

Cantor is the star and Miss Greenwood the comedienne of Samuel Goldwyn's production "Palmy Days," which comes to the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, November 28-29-30.

More than once Miss Greenwood had the privilege of seeing her name in lights across the street from the theatre in which Eddie Cantor was starring in their Broadway days. Like Eddie, however, she headed the call of Hollywood and is now gaining a newer and wider fame.

Cantor is his old self, his old glory—bouncing, prancing, dancing, ebullient. His beady black eyes still look up at the ever constant menace that threatens to exterminate him. In "Palmy Days," Cantor fulfills his promise in "Whoopee," that he is in pictures to stay, and that the screen has a definite place—a high place, for him in its roster of favorites.

Eddie is aided and abetted by the elongated and lanky Charlotte Greenwood, who has legs like the hands of a clock. Together, they amble and ramble through the blithe nonsense of the story as hosts and leaders to the battalion of Hollywood's most decorative femininity. Barbara Weeks, one of Samuel Goldwyn's newest discoveries, likewise, winsome and sweet, is not inconsiderable attraction in the bevy.

Be sure to see "Palmy Days," one of the greatest and funniest comedies ever produced.

African Diamonds

Abandoned Mine of the Kimberley Group.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.)

DISCOVERY of new diamond deposits in Tanganyika has made the colony the focal point of enthusiastic prospectors in search of the glittering gems.

The African diamond industry is only slightly more than a half century old. Today the continent produces nearly nine-tenths of the world's supply. It was in 1870 that the windy, dust-swept region of Griqualand, South Africa, suddenly changed from No Man's Land to Everyman's Land, when diamonds were discovered there. Later, it was annexed to Cape Colony within such meticulously drawn boundaries that inside one farmer's house the family dined in that colony and went to bed in the Orange Free State.

"Playing jackstones with diamonds!" Somehow that electrifying caption was overlooked by news reporters in 1866, when, at Hopetown, on the Orange river, the presence of diamonds in South Africa was signaled by a child, who was discovered playing with a casually picked-up gem weighing 2 1/4 carats.

At once the South African diamond fever was on. Ships lost their crews, overseas shopkeepers their clerks, police forces their "bobbies," the underworld its crooks; and perhaps the church lost a curate, and certainly Natal lost a budding cotton planter—he had once felt drawn to the ministry—in the case of an invalidish young fellow named Cecil John Rhodes. All raked up the price to get them to Griqualand's "desert of drought and diamonds."

Future Kimberley was soon a scene of canvas tents, of wagons converted into huts, of prospectors sieving the diamondiferous earth, and of "kopje-wallopers"—those who bought other men's finds on speculation—hurrying to and fro among the sorting tables. Also, there appeared the resourceful "I. D. B." (illicit diamond buyer), who, co-operating with what might be described as the diamond-stealing industry, smuggled out stones in contravention to the law. Stowing gems in cigarettes, pipes and hollow shoe-heels by no means exhausted his ingenuity. The hungry-dog trick—that is, feeding a starved animal on meat containing diamonds and subsequently retrieving them by cutting him open—was much in vogue.

Controlling the Output.

Under desert conditions, food was often more precious than diamonds, and baths, if you could afford that luxury, were taken in imported soda water. Despite prophecies of a brief year's life for Kimberley, the first two decades showed a production of six tons of diamonds from the Griqualand country. Indeed, by 1880 the possibility of South African stones swamping the market was so apparent that Rhodes and his group formed the price-and-output-controlling De Beers company.

Modern Kimberley abuts on a three-mile-wide circle which contains, within barbed-wire barriers, mines, housing "compounds," process sheds, company stores, hospitals, public baths, and kitchens—in fact, everything necessary to the industry and its 5,000 Bantu miners.

These Bantu "boys" are voluntary recruits, who mine for six months annually, returning to their kraals with the wherewithal for meeting taxes, for buying wives with lobola (cattle dowry), or for less serious investments, such as concertinas and mouth organs. In "above ground" hours they are seen cooking their food, or purchasing at cost price at the stores, or depositing their wages with the company's savings department. Often these deposits represent such considerable annual aggregates as $230,000 paid in by 12,000 miners.

Each week in the Kimberley mines some 70,000 tons of "blue ground" (hard, diamondiferous earth) are blasted out, crushed, fed into running water, rotated in steel drums, jiggled along in troughs, and washed across tabellike surfaces coated with petroleum jelly. The rotary process, by centrifugal force, separates the ground-up mass into different-sized units. The jiggling process washes away barren elements from the water-borne "concentrate" of gravel-like appearance; and, finally, the diminished residue flows across the petroleum surfaces, to which only the diamonds adhere.

Not at All Exciting.

Yet "diminished residue" is putting it but mildly, since these 70,000 tons of blue ground will produce only about 10 1/4 pounds of diamonds—say, a ratio of 14,000,000 to 1.

We might address the cleanser, who, broad blade in hand, now and then scrapes off the diamondiferous petroleum and throws it into a vat of boiling water.

"Scraping off millions of dollars' worth of diamonds in this way, isn't it rather exciting?"

"Why, no," he will probably answer unemotionally—and everyone knows what familiarity breeds—"it's about like handling mortar with a trowel."

Inside the sorting room, to which visitors are admitted after an eye has scrutinized them from behind a sild-back panel, men were poking diamonds through graduated holes in small screens to ascertain the stones' diameters. On one table alone lay 18,500 carats-weight of gems, worth approximately a million dollars. Feeling as dizzy as Ali Baba in the treasure cave, one asks tremulously of a sorter:

"Putting millions of dollars' worth of diamonds through screen holes, isn't it a bit thrilling?"

"Oh, no," he answers, suppressing a yawn—again that familiarity complex—as he popped a one-inch diamond through the screen, "it's about like shelling peas."

Kimberley town itself is as simple and homelike a place as you'd find in the suburban area of some American city. It has produced nearly $1,300,000,000 worth of diamonds in half a century. It's difficult to see how the city could adequately have expressed its wealth production save by paying its main street with gems; but in truth it has been its fate to have created fortunes that too often flitted from South Africa to the attractions in London and Paris.

Yet there was an exception. At least one Kimberley digger, Cecil Rhodes, could amass a fortune, yet scorn to use it in the common way. Great wealth constitutes a trust, to be administered in the wider interests of humanity—such was his view. And that he did, according to his lights, within South Africa and for the British empire.

You may strike his trail along the twisting street—it follows the route of bygone diggers' footpaths from claim to claim—that leads you to the long-abandoned "New Rush" mine. Here is the vast, extinct crater, almost a mile around and a quarter of a mile deep, that once spewed diamonds into Europe's capitals; and here, too, if you've eyes to see them, swarm old-time miners' ghosts, with avid eyes and avaricious hands, sifting the earth and clawing at fortune. Tomorrow, for them, the fleshpots of Paris and London!

Many Used in Industry.

Not all diamonds are destined to shine forth from jewelry that adorns men and women. More than half the world's production of the stones, in quantity, is used in industry. Some form bearings for watches, chronometers, electric meters, and other accurate instruments and laboratory apparatus. Some, in which tapered holes are drilled, are used for drawing fine wire of platinum, silver, gold, and rare metals.

Other industrial uses for diamonds are as drills for glass, porcelain, and similar hard substances; turning-tools for lathe work; engraving points; and as cutting edges for rock drilling and sawing. For industrial purposes only the less nearly perfect and less valuable stones are used.

The United States is the world's greatest diamond consuming country. Normally it absorbs nearly the equivalent of the entire South African output. If all the diamonds produced in the world in 1929 could have been combined into a single cube it would have been five and a half feet across each face—a crystal block as tall as the average man and weighing more than a ton and a half. If the rough stones have been brought together and dumped into bushel baskets they would have filled two dozens of them, heaped up.

In recent years a wealth of the gems has been literally scooped up from the earth in the regions of alluvial diamond deposits. Until this change in mining methods came about, the greater part of the diamonds had been mined for decades by laborious digging to great depths in the "pipes" of extinct volcanoes. Then came the slow work of separating the stones from earth and rock.

WASHING DISHES

WASHING dishes is tiresome enough when you do it alone, but aren't there times when doing all the dishes and silver and pots and pans yourself seems better than having two or three more or less willing assistants in the kitchen at the same time, working at random, bringing dishes from the table before there is any place to put them, stacking up plates that have not been superficially cleaned off, drying the dishes before they have been rinsed and putting them up where they don't belong?

Clearing up after a meal is a complicated matter, and when there are many dishes and a number of workers there should be definite division of labor. Each individual should be given a definite task. If there are five to help, the work may be divided as follows:

A. Carry silver and glassware to the kitchen and pile at the side of the sink. Collect table napkins, crumb table, remove cloth, take out leaves from the table if extra ones have been added, brush dining-room floor, put dining room in between meal order, and quit.

B. Carry all chinaware to the kitchen, scrape and pile. Help dry dishes and finally collect and dispose of refuse. Nothing more.

C. Collect all food left from the meal, put into suitable dishes and put in the refrigerator. Put up bread and other food left in the kitchen. Tidy the stove and wipe off. Put up all kitchen dishes, and be in readiness to brush up kitchen floor when work is done.

D. Get ready dish water and begin washing dishes as soon as glasses and silver begin to arrive. Wash all dishes and pots and pans and then quit with a free conscience.

E. See that tables are cleared for clean dishes and begin drying as soon as things are ready. Dry pots and pans as well as dishes and finally wash out dish towels.

Usually that would be a fair division of labor with responsibilities fairly distributed.

WHEN YOU COME . . .

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

SOMETIME I shall sleep—and you, Will you come, I wonder, In the sunshine, in the dew, In the days of thunder? Will you come with wreaths alone, Come with red, red roses, Where the one that you have known Now at last reposes?

I would have you come, I know, But the thing to bring me Is some dream of long ago, Song you used to sing me, I would have the gift you brought In that moment to me But some unremembered thought From the days you knew me.

Sometime you may come again With some sad reflection, I would have you bring me then But a recollection, Sometime you will come at last

Who braves my strength to him I give

A greater power to work and live." Peter Rabbit listened and shivered just a wee bit in spite of his warm coat. "Now what does he mean by that?" said he.

"I suppose," replied little Mrs. Peter, "that he means that those who are not afraid to face hard times and do their very best are really stronger for doing it. He certainly is rough and strong, but I've noticed that we always feel well when he comes."

"That is quite true," replied Peter thoughtfully. "I never can run so fast in summer as in winter." He drew a long breath. "Isn't this air good? I feel just like a run this very minute. When you get used to it winter isn't so bad. It's all in the getting used to it. Those who sleep all winter or go away where there isn't cold weather, don't know what a lot they miss. I wonder why they do it anyway."

THREE GOOD PIES

HERE is a simple pie that the most inexperienced may make without a failure:

Graham Cracker Pie.

Roll fourteen graham crackers and mix with one-half cupful of butter. Line a pie tin with this mixture and fill with cooked and seasoned apple sauce. Serve with cream, after baking about twenty minutes.

Lemon Fluff Pie.

Take the grated rind and juice of an orange and a lemon, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, the well-beaten yolks of three eggs to which one tablespoonful of cold water has been added gradually. Cook in a double boiler until smooth and pour over the stiffly beaten whites to which one-fourth cupful of sugar has been added. Pour into a baked shell, add a tablespoonful of butter and bake until firm—about ten minutes. For those who dislike a meringue, this is especially attractive, as the texture is like sponge cake or omelet.

Moravian Deep Apple Pie.

Core and pare six even sized apples. Place with a teaspoonful of lemon juice, a little of the grated rind of lemon, a cupful of sugar and enough water to cover the bottom of the saucpan. Cover and cook until the apples are tender but not broken. Line a deep pastry dish with rich pastry, carefully place the apples in the shell, filling the centers with peach marmalade. Cover with strips of pastry and bake just long enough to brown the pastry. Serve with cream.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

Last of the Road Agents RAYMOND HOLZSE—he insisted his name was spelled this way, although it usually was spelled Soltz by the police—was probably the last of the notorious highwaymen or road agents who preyed upon the old stage coaches in the Northwest.

He operated in Wisconsin and Michigan in the 1890's, and was famous as a crack shot. He practiced shooting by firing at a bull's eye while riding swiftly on a horse. Sometimes he would toss up hazel nuts and crack them with revolver shots. He was of the same type of gunman famous through the Southwest a few years earlier.

In the spring of 1890 a stage coach was held up between Pulcifer and Budnel Wis., with small loss. The holdup was laid to Holzse.

One morning soon after that, Herman Rafath was driving his stage coach from the north toward Shawano. He looked around and stared into the muzzle of a revolver pointed at his face. Behind the gun was Holzse.

There were two passengers on the coach, Thomas Ainsworth, known as a wit in that section, and a Menominee Indian.

Rafath at once brought his horses to a stop, and Holzse ordered the mail pouch to be thrown out. Rafath asked Ainsworth what he should do, and Ainsworth advised him to obey the command.

After the mail was surrendered, the bandit ordered the driver to produce all his money. Rafath handed him $11. Holzse demanded more, but Rafath insisted that was all he had. In later years he said he had $45 in a vest pocket and had saved that by lying to the bandit.

Holzse took $9.75 from Ainsworth, all that gentleman had with him.

"I'm sorry it isn't an even $10," Ainsworth told the bandit. "I still owe you a quarter. Come and collect it some time."

Holzse ignored the Menominee Indian, and ordered Rafath, Ainsworth and the Indian down the road. They walked a hundred yards away and turned around to see Holzse ripping open the mail pouch. They could hear him swearing because the pouch contained nothing of value.

After that stage holdup, Holzse's description was broadcast throughout Wisconsin, and a constant watch was kept for him by police and stage coach drivers. The sheriff a short time later took Rafath to look at a suspect he had captured, but it was not Holzse, and the man was released.

Rafath kept a wary eye open for the bandit after that, but never encountered him again. A youth who often substituted for Rafath as driver of the coach, however, did not take any chances. He whipped up his horses whenever he saw a suspicious-looking man standing by the roadside, and many a prospective passenger was left swearing when the stage rattled past him at a fast clip.

Holzse loved the limelight and it proved his undoing. He held up stages in a grand eloquent manner, and apparently tried to put on a special show whenever he was committing his crimes.

Near Marquette, Mich., a short time after his activities had forced him to flee beyond the state line of Wisconsin, Holzse stopped a stage coach, carrying mail and filled with passengers.

He warned all aboard the stage against shooting, but one passenger did not heed the warning, and fired a shot at the bandit.

Holzse opened fire on the coach, then, firing bullet after bullet through the windows and walls of the vehicle. One passenger was killed and another seriously wounded. Two bullets pierced the hat of the driver.

Holzse was captured by possees who were quickly put upon his trail, and later was sentenced to the Michigan state penitentiary for life. He was released in a few years, however. (© 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Freaks of Appendicitis

Two cases of appendicitis on the left side have been reported at Paris by Dr. R. Bloch. In one patient the pain was on the right side where it is normally to be expected in appendicitis, while the organ whose inflamed condition caused the disturbance was on the left. In the other the condition was just reversed. These cases confirm, it is stated, that there is a clinical and an anatomic form of left appendicitis. X-rays should be used to diagnose this condition which usually can be established only after the patient has actually been operated upon.

Phone Message Recorded

Two Zurich inventors, Egon Zoller and Joseph Villiger, have solved the problem of what to do when there is no response to a telephone call. They have invented a telephone apparatus that permits also of the transmission of a written telegraphic message. The apparatus employed is a dial telephone. When the subscriber does not answer, the caller by means of a plug can transform the dial into a telegraph printer.

A Sure Sign

"So you think the man next door is a magazine writer?" inquired Mr. Pertt. "Yes," replied Mrs. Pertt confidently, "the mailman stops there with large envelopes every day."—Chicago Daily News.

ROSS MERVIN paused a moment before he went up the rickety stairs that led to the room where dumb "Soupy" Sam would rent him a bed for the night for the sum of ten cents.

He caught sight of a slight, girlish figure staggering along the street toward him. She stopped suddenly with groping hands. "Something wrong?" he asked gently.

"I guess—I'm blind! My eyes—" were the whispered words he caught. Her wide eyes did seem sightless to him. He took her arm quickly under his. "Perhaps it is just for the moment. I'll be glad to take you home if you tell me where to go."

She was a slight thing, and pretty under other circumstances, Ross thought. He learned in that brief but eventful walk that she had been studying art in the city, but success had not come her way. The Christmas rush in the stores had given her an opportunity to earn money. The lights had bothered her after the strain her eyes had been under in her studying and that night on her way home darkness deeper than the night had come over them.

He suggested getting in touch with the police, but she begged him not to. "I have my rent paid until Sunday night, and if I rest tomorrow my eyes may be all right. After that—after that—"

A rigid faced landlady came to the door. In a moment Ross glimpsed the situation. The woman heard the explanation with a scowl; and he decided to wait until he had seen the helpless girl to her room. Then he said quietly:

"Look after her well, and I will see that you are paid."

"She has her room paid until Sunday night. After that the city will take care of her—unless she has the cash Sunday night. You look like a bum to me, but if you get the money, all right," the woman said shortly.

Ross smiled. "You have my number; but I'll have the money. Be good to her. She's a mere kid and up against it."

"So am I," she replied sharply.

The next morning early he was at an agency. He stepped to the desk just in time to hear a man say, "That's no job for me!" and go on.

"I'll take it," Ross agreed. The clerk smiled. "This job is driving a truck for the construction company at Millburg. The truck carries explosives for their dynamiting."

For two days Ross drove the truck. Saturday night he received his two days' pay and hurried to 30 East street, paid the grim landlady rent for another week, and talked for one long happy hour with the girl he had vowed to aid. Her eyes had improved a little, and under his quiet determination she agreed to rest during the coming week.

"I—I don't see why you are so good to me," she said hesitatingly at parting.

Her hand sought his. "But—your voice out of the darkness—I know! O, I know!"

The next week, the fates seemed to take a hand in remodeling his life, and one event followed another speedily.

He looked up from his engine to see his father's fur-coated figure and hear him say:

"Lad, one of my engineer friends here spotted you and told me. It's almost Christmas. I feel that I have been unjust to you—but won't you come home?"

Ross' mind lingered on the word "Christmas," and he said simply, "I will—if I can bring some one with me. No, not my wife, but a girl I hope to make my wife."

So it came about that one eventful evening Ross bent over a pale, flower-like face and looked into dark eyes to which a great city physician had brought the blessing of sight; and she said:

"Dear, what a dream it seems! This beautiful home—and you with me! And just a few weeks ago, you and I—down—"

"In the depths, sweetheart. I began to climb out the moment I saw you that night."

"And you took me with you—" the chime of far-away bells broke into her words with distant music—"what are those bells?" she asked wonderingly.

He touched her lips with his. "Christmas bells, little girl, ringing out the old for us—forever!" (© 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.)

Forgotten HEROES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A Peace-Time Hero

IN 1869 there died one of the most famous Americans of his day. He had received more honors during his lifetime than any citizen of the United States ever had before. Congress voted him a special medal and Queen Victoria presented him with a jeweled miniature of herself. He was buried with kingly honors in Westminster abbey. Later his body was carried to his own country and it was borne on Great Britain's finest warship, escorted by an American fleet under Farragut. Queen Victoria sent one of her sons to stand beside his grave. The prince of Wales unveiled his statue; Victor Hugo wrote his eulogy; two American towns, an American college and museums at Harvard, Yale and Baltimore bear his name. His statue stands in the Hall of Fame at New York university. Yet today it is doubtful if one American in a hundred could tell even the principal facts about the life of George Peabody.

A native of Massachusetts, he had been a farmer, a country storekeeper, one of America's first traveling salesman and a soldier in the War of 1812 before he was twenty-one. Then he became a banker and in his thirties and forties established an international banking house which obtained in England the credit which pioneer America needed to develop its vast resources. In financing the American expedition to search for Sir John Franklin, lost in the Arctic, he created a bond between England and America which greatly improved our relations with that nation.

But the United States even more than England has reason to remember him gratefully because of his services as an educator and a philanthropist. And it was because of the fact that there was little of the dramatic and spectacular in these services that he is now almost forgotten. To him probably more than any other man is due the credit of establishing the American system of public school education. He did it by founding the Peabody education fund in what was then one-half of the states of the Union. The college in Nashville, Tenn., which bears his name is a monument to his desire to train teachers for public school work. Also he antedated Andrew Carnegie by almost fifty years in establishing free public libraries.

The inscription under his statue in the Hall of Fame is the best answer to the accusation of "money mad America." It reads "Looking forward beyond my stay on earth I can see our country becoming richer and more powerful. But to make her prosperity more than superficial, her moral and intellectual development should keep pace with her material wealth."

Captured 300 With Empty Gun

SERGEANT ALVIN G. YORK captured 132 Germans and won for himself the title of "outstanding war hero," said Sergeant Harry J. Adams of Rochester, N. Y., a member of Company K, Three Hundred and Fifty-third infantry of the Eighty-ninth division single handedly made prisoners of more than three hundred Teutons. It won for him the Distinguished Service cross which he was awarded in 1919. Then for twelve years his feat was forgotten. When General Pershing's memoirs were published in 1931 he told of the capture by Private Lenoire, a marine, of 75 Germans. "Not bad for the marines," said army officers, "but let's remember Sergeant Adams." So even though they could not see what became of him, whether he was dead or still alive, still in the army or a civilian, through the newspapers they reminded his fellow Americans of this story:

On September 12, 1918, the Three Hundred and Fifty-third infantry took part in the attack on the town of Bouillonville. They captured the town and 80 Germans surrendered to Adams and his lieutenant. Then the lieutenant told Adams to see if there were any more Germans in the town. The sergeant saw one of the Heinies run into a house and he followed. He entered just in time to see the German go through a trapdoor in the wall. At that time he had only two shots left in his automatic pistol. Firing both those shots through the door he shouted "Come out of there!"

And did they come out! The man he had followed was the first through the door and he was followed by one lieutenant colonel, 18 staff officers and 355 soldiers. A few minutes later Capt. Elmer R. Axon called out to Lieut. Van Dyne Howbert of the Three Hundred and Fifty-third that "here comes one man with about half of the German army." Then says Howbert, "Adams was walking along in front and entirely unconcerned; he had picked up a rifle since exhausting his pistol ammunition and was strolling along with his right arm hooked over the small of the stock and the bayonet nearly dragging in the ground behind him, as he was very busily engaged in using both hands in eating something which he had picked up in the town. He had not even bothered to disarm the Germans and some of them were still wearing their pistols. We asked him where he got this gang and he gave us more or less the same story as is covered in the citation and was quite unconcerned about the exploit."

PREDICTIONS of a lower level of health and a higher tuberculosis rate among Michigan young people, caused by present-day living conditions, come true, it will not be because Princess Watassa has not travelled far enough and wide enough over Michigan to teach boys and girls how to be healthy.

The Michigan Tuberculosis Association, which sends Watassa to Michigan schools, reports that in the three and one-half years she has been at work, more than 275,000 school children have heard her Indian health stories. In that time she has been in all except two of the state's 83 counties.

Grade children as well as high school students delight to hear Watassa's legends, all of them carrying valuable health lessons for the listeners. The programs are given entirely without cost to the schools, being financed by funds secured in the December sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals.

The work of Princess Watassa is but one of the methods used by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association to promote health among children. Posters, bulletins, leaflets, and other health supplies are distributed widely in city, village, and rural schools. During the past twelve months alone, 48,000 copies of a leaflet entitled "Foods for Growing Boys and Girls" have been given to residents of Michigan.

Added health work among children, to offset insofar as possible the effects of depression on child health, is planned by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association for 1932. The extent of this work will be determined entirely by funds realized in the Christmas seal sale, in progress at the present time.

Mohammedan Holy Day

The observance of Friday as the Moslem day of assembly, corresponding in some respects to the Christian Sabbath, originated in the Mohammedan revelations. According to the instructions of the prophet, Friday was the day Adam was created, the day on which he entered Paradise, was expelled therefrom, the day of his repentance, the day of his death, and it is to be the day of his resurrection.

Market Cross in History

Throughout all its history the market cross continued to perform its chief functions as the center of civic life in the burgh. Proclamations of all kinds had been made there throughout local history, public punishments were inflicted there, hanging, decapitation, etc., took place there also, and at one time the "branks" or iron bridle for misdeeds or disorderly women was attached to the cross.—London Answers

John Gresham's Girl

by CONCORDIA MERREL

“Not had breakfast yet?” she asked. “I was waiting for you,” he told her.

Her blue eyes looked, now, very straightly up into his.

“That was . . . friendly . . . of you,” she said. “Do you . . . feel friendly, this morning, Jim?”

He did not answer that; he went, instead to the bell and rang for breakfast.

“That means that you don’t,” she said, with a little sigh.

The girl who brought in the breakfast tray, was the one Lucy had already made friends with, and she was in a talkative mood, if Lee was not. As she arranged the dishes on the table, she asked whether the storm had disturbed their rest?

Lucy glanced quickly at Lee as he colored slightly, before answering, with attempted casualness:

“Well, of course, we heard it, all right.”

“They are saying this morning, that the big elm, down by Brady’s cottage was struck,” the girl went on. “Where you said you were going yesterday, ma’am.”

“Why, Jim, that must have been that terrific crash . . .” cried Lucy.

When the girl had gone, Lee looked across at Lucy.

“I’ll go and have a look at the tree this morning,” he said. “I was going over there in any case.”

“Were you? What for?”

“To investigate this Billy Brady business you told me of.”

“To investigate? Jim, don’t you believe I told you the truth about it?”

He looked at her quickly.

“Yes, it’s just because it was the truth, that I want to find out what it means,” he said.

“Oh, I see, Jim, do you think it has anything to do with your affairs?”

“I don’t know. But it’s a d—n queer happening, and looks to me as if Billy has gone past the point of harness lunacy. He’s about ready for some sort of restraint, I should imagine.”

“May I come with you?”

“All right, if you want to.”

When a little later they were ready to start, a thought occurred to her and looking up at him, she spoke it.

“Isn’t there a danger of your being recognized?”

“It doesn’t matter to me if I am,” he answered abruptly, and then, slowly and deliberately:

“I’ve got Gresham’s just where I want ’em. Anyone can know who is at the back of Linforth for all I care.”

“So even . . . loving me . . . would not make you give up your schemes for revenge?” she asked, eyes and voice challenging him.

He returned her look steadily and answered without a falter:

“Even that would not.”

The words sounded in her ears like a sudden knell. She felt, then, that she knew the nethermost depths of hopelessness. She had hoped everything of love; had believed in its power to vanquish all evils. But even that was powerless against him. What, then, was left to her? What more could she do?

“Then shall we go?” she asked aloud, as steadily as she could.

He agreed with a nod.

“We won’t take the car,” he decided, and so they went on the street car, as she had, yesterday.

As soon as they turned into Brady’s lane, they saw the riven and twisted shape of the stricken elm. It had been struck as it stood; and though some of its branches upon one side were bare and charred, on the other, half-burnt leaves and twigs still remained.

“We heard that happen,” said Lucy, as they stood looking at it. “Shall you ever forget the crash of it?”

“No,” he said, shortly, “I don’t think I shall.”

“But that nice little cottage hadn’t anything to do with the bad luck of poor old Mother Brady,” she went on. “She would have had the same luck anywhere.”

“Would I, too?” he demanded.

“Jim; you don’t think the cottage had anything to do with it, do you?”

“No, I don’t. I think Macklin had a good deal to do with it; and Oliver Ames; and John Gresham,” he answered through grim lips.

“I am quite willing to admit John Gresham’s part in it,” she said quietly. They went on toward the cottage.

“Can we get into it, Jim?” Lucy asked. “I want to see the room you used to live in. The place you knew as home.”

“We can find out,” he answered, as he pushed open the gate and followed her into the weedy garden.

Lucy tried the door, but it was locked.

“Old Mother Brady used to hang the key up here,” said Lee, groping among the ivy above the lintel. “And, by Jove,” he exclaimed, “it’s here still!” He produced the key, fitted it into the lock, and, rather to his surprise, found that it turned comparatively easily.

“I thought it would be rusted solid,” he observed, as he pushed the door open and led the way into the main sitting room. After the fashion of old cottages, there was no hall.

“Where were your rooms?” asked Lucy, looking round her.

“Upstairs,” he told her, and went first to show her the way. The rooms were empty, but she made him tell her how the furniture had been placed, so that she could visualize it as it had been.

“Now,” she said presently. “Let’s go down and see the garden and all around. I want to know just where all that terrible business happened, Jim. Will you show me?”

With his face rather set, he pointed over the wall toward the roots of the giant tree.

“That’s where they found the poor devil of a clerk, but the assault must likely have happened at the corner of the lane. . . . Then here,” he moved further along by the wall, and pointed out some loose bricks. “Here is where my wallet was found stuffed with the stolen notes. Or rather some of them. There was a lot of money that was never found. Probably never will be, now. . . . Believe in me still, Lucy?”

He glanced at her quickly.

“Still,” she assured him. “And, Jim, faith can be so . . . so devilish sweet if you’ll only let it. . . .”

She added that in a low, soft voice. He swung away from her as if he were going to leave her, but halted abruptly; and:

“Hullo,” he said quietly. “Who’s that?”

Lucy turned sharply, struck by his tone, to follow the direction of his look. She found herself looking over the low stone wall, toward the stricken elm. And there, beneath its twisted branches kicking aside the debris of twigs and leaves around its roots, was a man.

Instinctively she put out a hand and drew Jim back, but the man, at the same instant, raised his head sharply and looked toward them.

“Macklin,” she said, in an almost soundless whisper. Lee nodded.

Macklin had recognized Lucy and was coming toward her, smiling suavely. He stopped on the other side of the wall and greeted her.

“Good morning, Mrs. Lee,” he said, in the ingratiating manner that made Lucy judge him insincere. “I just ran out to see the damage, I heard this morning that one of Newchester’s landmarks had suffered in the storm last night. It’s not much of a tree, now, is it?” He smiled again, and turned toward Lee.

“Introduce me,” said Lee in a quiet, rather deadly tone.

Lucy did it; as smoothly as she could.

“My husband. . . . Mr. Macklin is second in command at Gresham’s, Jim. . . .”

Macklin turned to Lee still smiling, and offering his hand. Lee looked down at him, not smiling at all, his hands plunged deep into his pockets, eyes and lips unpromising.

Macklin was startled. He stood a moment staring. Then thrust his head up nearer, the smile vanishing like magic from his lips. Then:

“Warrington!” he said, his voice a low-toned cry.

“Yes; Warrington,” agreed Lee, without moving.

“So . . . you’re out?” went on Macklin.

“Yes, Macklin, I’m out,” said Lee, such menace in the words, that Macklin drew back as if he’d been hit, and Lucy found her heart beating more wildly than ever.

“You are scarcely surprised at my being free again, are you, Macklin?” went on Lee in a strangely quiet and steady voice. “Haven’t you been counting the days and weeks and months during these last three years, almost with as much attention as I have counted them myself? Haven’t you, Macklin? Haven’t you said to yourself each morning: ‘One day nearer to the day when he’ll be free again? Haven’t you, Macklin? And haven’t you wondered, sometimes, just what that day was going to mean to you? Just what it was going to bring to you? Haven’t you, Macklin? Haven’t you told yourself that there’s a day of reckoning coming? And haven’t you each day told yourself that the reckoning was one day nearer? Haven’t you, Macklin? And haven’t you wondered just what that reckoning was to be, when it came? Haven’t you, Macklin? Haven’t you?”

That dining question! That cold, furious voice! Those accusing eyes! Macklin suddenly threw up his hands, as if to ward Lee off, although Lee was standing dead still and was separated from him by that stone wall.

“D—n you!” he cried out. . . . “What do you mean by talking to me like that! You dirty thief! I don’t know what you mean. . . . Prison’s turned your grain; sent you mad. . . .” His voice rose hysterically high and broke curiously.

“I might have let prison drive me mad,” answered Lee, still without moving: “If I hadn’t wanted, above everything else, to keep my brain clear for what I had to do when I came out. And it’s clear enough, Macklin, I can assure you. It’s clear enough.” He took a sudden step forward, and Lucy saw that his hands were out of his pockets now, and clenched to threatening fists. She laid a quick, restraining hand upon his arm, saying faintly:

“Oh, I’m not going to hit him—yet,” he said.

Macklin made an effort to recover his composure. He realized that hysteria was a bad mistake.

“Why don’t you?” he taunted, his eyes vicious. “Why don’t you, as you hit that poor devil of a clerk? Probably because, like all bullies, you’re a coward at heart. . . . A rotten, cowardly thief. . . .” Suddenly he seemed to remember that Lucy was there. He broke off, looked quickly and shiftily from one to the other, and then, losing his nerve again, suddenly turned and incontinently fled.

For a time Lee stood without moving; so still that he seemed as if he were a thing carved. Lucy, too, scarcely dared to move, and the beating of her heart sounded so loud to her that she wondered he did not hear it. Only when Macklin’s figure had disappeared from their sight did Lee draw a deep breath, square his shoulders, let his hands relax and step back. Then he turned his face and found Lucy looking up at him. Their eyes met in a holding look; then:

“And they believed that cringing thing against me!” he said, the words breaking from him. “They took his evidence against mine, and condemned me on it.”

She laid a quick hand on his arm.

“I know . . . I know. . . .” she said in a shaken voice. “It’s incredible . . . utterly. . . . And yet it happened. . . . I know how you feel, Jim. . . .” He shook her hand from his arm and suddenly covered his face with his hands. She stood silently by. Some battle of emotions was raging within him. She realized it, and knew that it must rage itself out.

After a while she brought him out of the cruel, revived past into a problem of the present.

“Jim,” she said quietly. “What was he doing here? He was kicking aside the branches and rubbish around the tree, and looked most awfully startled when he saw us here. Was he looking for anything? Has he got anything hidden there, do you think? Shall we go and look around the tree, and see if we can find out what it was he was looking for. . . .?”

Lee stood for a moment, thinking; then looked quickly along the road, hearing the sound of footsteps. A little group of people were straggling idly toward them.

“No,” he said quickly. “If there’s anything there he wants, he’ll be back for it some time. But not during the day, I fancy. We’ll go back to the hotel now and I’ll have this place watched. . . . If Macklin comes back it will be tonight, I think. . . .”

They made their way as quickly as possible back to Newchester.

The first thing they did there was to find out a private inquiry agent, and arrange for a man to be sent to Brady’s cottage to watch for the return of Macklin, or the appearance of Billy Brady. The man was to watch the place and report what he saw: with special reference to anyone who might come there and appear to be searching for anything among the ruins of the shattered tree, or in the garden of the little cottage, or even in the cottage itself.

For, as Lee had observed to Lucy, that lock on the cottage door had certainly turned with surprising ease for a lock that had not been used for more than two years.

CHAPTER IX

Lee and Ames

Meantime, Macklin had had time to reflect, and reflection had brought him to a point of cursing himself for his lamentable show of nerves when he found himself confronted by Warrington. He had, of course, known that Warrington would be free by now. He had, indeed, counted the days exactly as Jim had guessed just now. But as time went on and Warrington did nothing, he had begun to feel himself secure.

After a while he began soothing himself with the reflection that the situation, after all, was not different now from what it had been when Warrington was found guilty. It was still his word against Warrington’s, and his word, so far, had won all along the line. Why shouldn’t it continue to win? It was the argument of a fear-bemused man.

He hurried to Gresham’s, ran upstairs to Ames’ office, and, almost without knocking, flung open the door and stood looking at Ames, breathing so quickly that for a moment he was unable to speak.

“Hullo, Macklin, what’s the matter?” cried Ames.

“Sir,” cried Macklin. “The most awful thing has happened. I’ve made the most appalling discovery. . . . I wondered why Mrs. Lee should be so keen on proving young Warrington innocent. . . . Couldn’t help wondering. . . . It seemed so queer. . . .” The words were stuttering out, unevenly, almost gaspingly.

“Well?” said Ames, impatiently. “Well? What have you discovered?”

Macklin moved nearer, creeping up to the desk very nearly on tip-toe.

“I’ve discovered why she was so keen about the case,” he said. “Her husband is young Warrington. . . .”

“What!”

“Yes; calling himself Lee, but young Warrington all the same. . . .”

“You must be mistaken!”

“I’m not, I charged him with it, and he owned up to it in so many words. . . .”

“Good G—d!” cried Ames, utterly dumfounded. “Tell me exactly what happened.”

Macklin leaned nearer still, talking rapidly, almost in a whisper. When he had finished, Ames arose.

COTTON DISK BEST STRAINER FOR MILK

Farm Journal Correspondent Tells of Its Value.

The most efficient milk strainer, we learn from G. Malcolm Trout, is the dry cotton filter disk. The old wire gauze strainer is no longer in favor with milk inspectors; and some of the cloths used as strainers are little if any better than the wire. Mr. Trout finds that cheesecloth doubled lets sediment through; that muslin is little better than cheesecloth; that flannel, best of the cloths used, is not so efficient as the various cotton disks.

There is a difference, of course, in cotton disks. Some will filter more rapidly and more efficiently than others. The temptation is to hurry up a slow one by jarring. Mr. Trout found, in his Michigan tests, that jarring reduced efficiency; it seemed to make small holes in the disks and let sediment through that had previously collected.

To carry things up, A. C. Dahlberg suggests having the foot of the strainer as large as possible, so that an extra large disk can be used. He points out that milk goes through the disk vertically with very little horizontal movement, and for that reason the capacity is directly related to the area of the holes in the metal supporting the cotton disk. Some of the strainer manufacturers, he states, have redesigned their strainers to increase capacity.—Farm Journal

Lower Feed Costs Big Item in Dairy Farming

We can’t send scrub acres of land to the butcher, as we ought to do with scrub cows, but we can drop some of the unprofitable overhead on some and put others to better use.

What a dairy farmer does in his fields has a mighty important bearing on what his cows will do to or for his bank balance.

Failure to produce large yields per acre of crops best suited for feeding dairy cattle is where many dairy farmers bark their financial shins in their efforts to make money from cows.

The argument is not for more milk than consumers will buy at a fair price but rather for lower feed costs of that necessary to supply our markets.—Hoard’s Dairyman.

Potato-Flavored Milk

Every spring some potato flavored cream appears. It is commonly assumed that this comes from feeding cows on potatoes, but as a matter of fact it is usually not possible to cause potato flavor by feeding potatoes. Investigations indicate that the potato flavor gets into the cream by way of the atmosphere. Milk or cream allowed to stand in a cellar where potatoes are stored take on the potato flavor quite readily. So any cull potatoes or surplus potatoes can be fed to advantage at this time of year, but be careful not to store milk or cream in a potato cellar. See to it that the place where your milk and cream is stored is given a good going over by the time-honored methods so as to make it sweet and clean.—Dakota Farmer.

Buckwheat for Dairy Cows

Ground buckwheat makes a good component in the grain mixture for dairy cows and has about the same feeding value as a low grade of oats, advises C. L. Blackman, state dairy specialist. He suggests that a grain ration to be used with good quality clover hay and corn silage might be equal parts of buckwheat, corn and oats and either cottonseed meal or linseed meal. Buckwheat carries about 8 per cent digestible protein and 63 per cent total digestible nutrients. This year considerable acreage is devoted in Ohio to buckwheat culture, and much of it will be used in feeding dairy cattle and poultry.—Ohio Farmer.

Culling the Herd

If dairymen cull at the normal rate, the animal husbandry department of the New York state college of agriculture says, New York state will have nearly 40,000 more cows in 1932 than there are now in the state. At present there are 7 per cent more cows and 28 per cent more heifers, one to two years old, than there were in the state in 1927. The department estimates that if the poorest of every seven cows is slaughtered it would remove about 193,000 cows from competition. They go further and say it would be better to sell these cows at any price, rather than to take a loss on every pound of milk they give.

Cold Storage Cheese

On June 1 cold storage holdings of all cheese in the United States, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, amounted to 56,600,000 pounds as compared with 68,100,000 pounds on the corresponding date in 1930, and 52,200,000 pounds, the five-year average. Thus it will be seen that from the standpoint of production the cheese industry was in good condition. If consumption had been up to normal there would have been no surplus.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

“Perfect Man,” as Seen by Clothing Designers

Are you a perfect man? The specification is as follows: Height should be 5 feet 8 inches; weight, 140 pounds; waist 30 to 31 inches; hips, 37 inches; length of arm, 18 inches; length of leg, 32 inches. If these are your measurements, then you are a perfect man—according to the American clothing designers. The average Englishman is too short and too heavy to fill the bill. He is 5 feet 7 1/4 inches tall, and weighs 155 pounds. The Irishman comes nearer the ideal. The average height of Irishmen is 5 feet 8 inches—just right! And average weight 153 pounds—only 13 pounds too heavy. Scots, by the way, are on the average, the tallest people in the British isles. Their average height is 5 feet 8 3/4 inches.

Backgammon in 3000 B. C.

The University of Pennsylvania museum has what is regarded as one of the oldest dice in the world. The dice, which is said to date from about 2750 B. C., was found by Dr. E. A. Speiser in excavations at Tepe Gawra, Mesopotamia.

The dice is cubical in shape and is made of baked clay. The numbers are arranged so that five opposes four and two opposes three on the cube. The university museum has also a backgammon board among its collections which dates from about 3000 B. C. It is believed probable the dice found at Tepe Gawra may have been one of a pair used to play backgammon.

Ventriloquism Old

Traces of the art of ventriloquism are found in Egyptian and Hebrew archeology. Eurycles of Athens was the most celebrated of Greek ventriloquists. It is not improbable that the priests of ancient times were masters of this art and that to it may be ascribed such miracles as the speaking statues of the Egyptians, the Greek oracles and the stone in the River Pactolus, the sound of which put robbers to flight.

Bread and Butter Diet for Children

U. S. Nutritionists Prescribe Proper Food.

Washington.—Old-fashioned bread and butter is the backbone of the diet recommended by Uncle Sam's nutritionists with the Department of Agriculture for all growing children, according to an official bulletin just issued.

"Ideas about feeding children have undergone many changes in recent years," the official food experts say.

A typical dinner permitting of variations is given consisting of broiled meat ball, buttered string beans, baked potato, bread and butter, lettuce, milk and baked apple.

A dozen supper menus are also listed such as, to give the first, baked potato and bacon, fresh tomato and lettuce, bread and butter, milk, muskmelon.

"A healthy child," to quote the government experts, "who has an abundance of the right kinds of food grows normally and is contented and well developed."

Milk and bread and butter and potatoes are among the foods recommended for each meal; fruit and other vegetables at least twice a day; egg or meat, and small amounts of sweets.

Variety is advised in the preparation and serving of food in different ways and different combinations. Thus bread is recommended either plain with butter or toasted, toasted rolls, bread pudding or in sandwiches.

The sandwich combinations suggested include grated carrots, lettuce, water cress, or peanut butter with chopped celery. Or bread, they suggest, may be served with jelly or jam in limited quantities either as dessert or immediately after the meal.

Breakfast for the young child may usually consist of fruit, cereal, toast with butter and milk, the report suggests. Variety is offered in the fruits served and a strip or two of bacon cooked until crisp and drained of fat may be served occasionally for variety.

Aged California Woman Tells of Trek in 1853

San Francisco.—Recounting tales of the great trek from Missouri to California in '53, Mrs. Mary E. Harris, who, as a child crossed the plains in a covered wagon, celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday recently.

"I was eleven when we made the trip," she said. "For over six months home was a lumbering Conestoga wagon.

"Not once during the trip were we bothered with Indians. Those whom we saw seemed friendly. It seems a long, long time ago now, when I think of how people are shot across the continent in express trains.

"Over the Sierra we went, past the famous gold diggings. The tales of the goldfields brought my mother and father West."

Mrs. Harris' family finally settled on a ranch near San Jose. It was there that she met her husband, then sheriff of Santa Clara county.

Her four sons are Marshall, Cyrus, James and Nicholas, all San Francisco business men.

Danish Chemist Claims He Has Ideal Gas Mask

Copenhagen.—A filter for gas masks which excludes 99.8 per cent of all poisons from the breathing tubes has been invented by the Danish chemist N. L. Hansen, and with it he has evolved an elaborate plan for the protection of cities against air raids dealing in gas.

Denmark is disarmed. It has no military forces. But experiments with poison gases have been continued by military chemists against the day when Denmark might possibly be the object of such an attack. Heretofore gas masks, the only known protection against this invisible death, have never been really effective in keeping out the poison.

Hansen believes his invention will revolutionize the work of war laboratories the world over. It is expected that the Danish government will place the invention at the disposal of all nations.

Girl Is Given Sight and Sees Wonderland

Skill of the Surgeon Banishes Child's Blindness.

Bellaire, Ohio.—The world is a wonderland to Edna Goddard, nine, who stares rapturously at strange objects which she had conjured differently in a life of blindness.

The skill of a surgeon gave Edna sight which had been blotted out at birth by a double cataract.

"Everything seems so funny," she laughed gleefully, looking at her mother. "Even mamma seems strange. She seemed different before."

The generosity of local civic clubs and the skill of Dr. Leo Covert, neighbor of the Goddards, opened up the wonderland for Edna. She had been born blind. As she learned to walk, she also learned the ways of the blind, how she must grope her way about and depend upon her accentuated senses of hearing and touch to safeguard herself from danger.

The Goddards were poor, unable to take Edna to a specialist. Civic clubs interested themselves in her case. They consulted Doctor Covert, who offered to perform the operation.

When the bandages were removed Edna shrieked in childish joy. "I can see," she said.

But everything seemed different from what she had conjured in her world of darkness. Color was particularly puzzling.

"I didn't know that eyes were of different colors," she said. "Everything is so bright and different. It's wonderful."

She is learning the names of chairs and other objects about her home. Although she had known them by touch, in sight they were strange.

STOP THAT COUGH!

Bronchitis is increasingly prevalent at this season. Alone, it is seldom serious, although the cough may be very annoying. But the serious side of Bronchitis and other mild infections of the lungs and throat is that the inflamed tissues may be invaded by some far more serious organism, particularly Pneumonia.

This is a real danger in most cases. It is the best of reasons why a bronchial cough or an attack of laryngitis should be stopped as quickly as possible.

The quick effective way to check these troubles is to apply B. & M., The Penetrating Germicide, three times a day, spreading it over the entire chest and throat. Usually the first application will bring out a reddish flush showing where the trouble is.

B. & M. is obtainable from most druggists. If yours cannot supply it, send his name and $1.25 for a large-size bottle sent postpaid. Helpful booklet free on request. F. E. ROLLINS COMPANY, 53 Beverly St., Boston, Mass.—Adv.

ORDER RETURNS TO ITS ANCIENT HOME

Knights Hospitallers Back in Jerusalem.

Rising like a stalwart sentinel from one of the hills of the Holy City stands a structure which traces back the flight of time more than 800 years.

It is the shelter which houses the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, founded about the year 1090 for the protection of pilgrims coming to the Holy land to visit the holy sepulchre. Driven from the city by the Saracens in 1187, they have returned after eight centuries of persecution and vicissitudes, and are once again carrying on here the service for which they were organized.

For the Knights Hospitallers, as they were then called, built in the Eleventh century an establishment known as the hospital of St. John, which besides being a shelter for pilgrims, provided accommodations for lodging and caring for the unfortunate and infirm.

Having as their motto, "Pro Fide, pro Utilitate Hominum," the Order of St. John of Jerusalem was one of the first of the various orders of chivalry and was in character partly religious and partly military.

When in 1187, the Saracens, under Saladin, conquered Jerusalem, the knights were turned out and fled to Acre which later, after Richard Coeur de Lion had conquered it, became known as St. Jean d'Acre. Here the knights established themselves and the city became the most important stronghold of Christianity in the East.

The knights remained for 100 years until they again came into conflict with the Saracens, and after suffering heavy losses, were turned out. This time they fled to Cyprus, where the king allowed them to found a convent and hospital—the chief house of the order in Cyprus and the castle of Kolossi which exists to this day.

Seeking a permanent home for the knights in 1310, the grand prior of the order succeeded in expelling the Saracens from the island of Rhodes, which then became their home. They remained in power until 1522, when Suleiman the Magnificent determined to oust the knights from their island, as they were a formidable obstacle to his scheme of conquering the West. There followed a period of seven years homeless wandering along the Mediterranean littoral, until in 1530 the Spanish emperor, Charles V, decreed that they might settle in Malta. Here they built the city of Valetta which became a city of knights.

A branch of the Knights Hospitallers had existed in England from the Eleventh century, having as their headquarters a priory in Clerkenwell, London. From all available accounts, this priory must have been a fine example of Thirteenth century architecture, but unfortunately the only remains of the original building today are to be seen in the crypt of the church of St. John in Clerkenwell.

When Henry VIII dissolved all religious orders, the knights were again disbanded. Queen Mary reassembled them, but only for one year, as on the succession to the throne of her sister Elizabeth the order was again dissolved.

Nothing further is heard of the knights in England until 1878, when Queen Victoria again reinstated the order by granting them a fresh charter.

Tigers Breeding in Mexico

In 1913 a circus was wrecked in Mexico. A Bengal tiger and two tigers escaped in the wreck and never were recaptured. In the 20 years since many little tigers have been born and reared in the mountains of the region where the three were first unintentionally liberated. They are at home in Mexico and display their traits, cunning, cruelty and large appetites for the flesh of other beasts. It is possible that in a century's time tigers will become common in Mexico.

This Mother Had Problem

As a rule, milk is about the best food for children, but there are times when they are much better off without it. It should always be left off when children show by feverish, fretful or cross spells, by bad breath, coated tongue, sallow skin, indigestion, biliousness, etc., that their stomach and bowels are out of order.

In cases like this, California Fig Syrup never fails to work wonders, by the quick and gentle way it removes all the souring waste which is causing the trouble, regulates the stomach and bowels and gives these organs tone and strength so they continue to act normally of their own accord. Children love its rich, fruity flavor and it's purely vegetable and harmless, even for babies.

Millions of mothers have proved its merit and reliability in over 50 years of steadily increasing use. A Western mother, Mrs. May Snavely, Montrose, California, says: "My little girl, Edna's, tendency to constipation was a problem to me until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It helped her right away and soon her stomach and bowels were acting perfectly. Since then I've never had to have any advice about her bowels. I have also used California Fig Syrup with my little boy, with equal success."

To be sure of getting the genuine, which physicians endorse, always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name.

Extra Strength Extra Safety Extra Service Lowest Prices

ONLY Firestone can give you all these extra values. They are the result of patented construction features found in no other tires.

Gum-Dipping penetrates every cord and coats every fiber with liquid rubber. Gives longer flexing life to every cord and longer tire life.

Two Extra Cord Plies Under the Tread give stronger bond between tread and cord body — greater protection against punctures and blowouts.

Tough, thick tread made of non-oxidizing rubber gives better protection against skidding and longer non-skid wear.

Firestone save in buying, manufacturing and distribution to give these extra values at lowest prices.

Firestone Service Stores and Service Dealers invite you to check these statements for yourself. They have sections cut from Firestone and Special Brand Mail Order Tires. Compare them and see how Firestone gives extra strength, safety and service. You be the judge. Drive in today.

A "Special Brand" tire is made by a manufacturer for distributors such as mail order houses, oil companies, and others, under a name that does not identify the tire manufacturer to the public, usually because he builds his "best quality" tires under his own name. Firestone puts his name on EVERY tire he makes.

Double Guarantee—Every tire manufactured by Firestone bears the name "FIRESTONE" and carries Firestone's unlimited guarantee and that of our 25,000 Service Dealers and Service Stores. You are doubly protected.

CONGRESSMAN PROPOSES U. S. OFFENSIVE AGAINST GANGS

A heavier fist for Uncle Sam in crushing the Al Capones of gangsterland is the purpose of legislation planned for the new congress by Representative Woodruff.

Encouraged by the government's success in reaching racketeers through income tax laws, the Michigan Republican would utilize the federal powers under the commerce clause of the constitution to reach interstate organized crime.

Woodruff said he will propose legislation to give the government authority to send to jail gangsters who cross state lines. He said the Mann Act and the Harrison narcotic act were built on the same constitutional power.

Affording shelter to the small animal, the den tree is very important to its life, for when the animal is taken and the den destroyed nothing is left there to protect another animal, says the American Forestry association.

AIMING at the prevention of the hundreds of deaths from tuberculosis suffered each year by Michigan boys and girls, anti-tuberculosis societies of Michigan are inaugurating a statewide testing program, using two significant devices of modern science, the X-ray and tuberculin, to discover early tuberculosis in children. The photograph above illustrates the simple, but all-important first step in the determination of tuberculosis infection, performed in this case on a student of the Howell high school.

As one of the activities of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated local societies, this program of testing Michigan children for evidences of tuberculosis is financed entirely by tuberculosis Christmas seals, on sale from Thanksgiving Day to Christmas in all parts of the state.

The great value of this new program is that it permits the finding of childhood cases of tuberculosis which formerly turned into the serious, adult form of the disease before they were discovered. The test means that a child today does not need to remain in ignorance of the infection which he carries until it develops into active disease. He can avoid the sickness and death suffered in the past by thousands of Michigan boys and girls, young fathers and mothers.

Funds raised in the 1931 sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals in Michigan will be used to bring this life-saving program during 1932 into as many Michigan communities as possible.
